We shall need much more transport investment than the Government are committed to, to enable industry to get to the market—especially the industries of the north of England, Scotland and Wales, which will be denied effective access to the Channel tunnel and east coast ports unless we invest more in transport. The measures are available. The Government have the means at their disposal. They have the means to turn round the balance of payments. If those measures can be combined with the lowering of interest rates we shall have some prospect of improving our economic situation. The Queen's Speech does not live up to that challenge.

On Europe, the Gracious Speech speaks with the voice of a Prime Minister who cannot accept any external discipline on her policies. Was it not striking that, when the former Chancellor revealed in his resignation speech that he had proposed to the Prime Minister that there should be a more independent central bank, the Prime Minister moved swiftly to make it clear that the proposal had been consigned to the wastepaper basket? She is a Prime Minister who can brook no discipline over her conduct and control of power. She demands the freedom to devalue the currency and to print more money—the freedoms that would be restricted if we became full members of the European monetary system and had a more independent central bank, whether British or European. Why does the Prime Minister want the freedom to devalue the currency and to print money? It shows that she rates the retention of power more highly than the achievement of policy objectives that she is supposed to hold.

The Liberal Democrats have tabled an amendment to the Loyal Address. I hope that many hon. Members will find it attractive, because it moves on from the vague phrases of the Gracious Speech and sets out clearly our aims—that we ought to have > "a clear commitment to early entry into the exchange rate mechanism . . . to provide a firm framework for the exchange rate and the battle against inflation, to permit lower interest rates and to ensure that this nation is the leader rather than a spectator in the development of European unity."

I expect the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West (Sir A. Meyer)—the stalking horse—to be first through the

[Mr. Beith]

Lobby in support of the amendment. Perhaps he could conduct his campaign meeting in the Division Lobby if other hon. Members who support him go with him.

I fear, however, that the pressure on some Conservative Members and the letters to their constituency chairmen, may mean that some of them dare not vote in favour, even though it is such an explicit commitment to something of which the Government were once in favour. Therefore, I am prepared to offer a certificate to any right hon. and hon. Member who comes through our Lobby tonight, to say that it will not be taken as a sign that they intend to vote for the Prime Minister in the subsequent secret ballot. The certificate can be sent to their constituency chairmen to protect Conservative hon. Members.

I hope to see many Conservative Members in our Lobby. I expect to see the right hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Lawson) and the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath). The right hon. Member for Blaby has spoken recently in favour of the principles behind the amendment and the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup has been in favour of them for many years.

I do not see why the official Opposition should not vote for the amendment. I welcome their conversion, and particularly that of the Labour Front Bench to the European monetary system.

The right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) did not say whether he was prepared to support the amendment. He did not say anything about the EMS in his speech. Perhaps the conversion process is not complete, and I am asking too much. It is not too much to ask the hon. Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice), but it may be too much to ask the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) to vote in favour of the principle that we should get into the European monetary system quickly.

I hope to see many of those right hon. and hon. Members in the Division Lobby tonight—or are they prepared to sit back and watch Britain miss the boat again, as it has done so many times on European issues?

I think that discussions on this matter may be taking place on the Opposition Front Bench now——

Mr. Ron Brown (Edinburgh, Leith): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Beith: I would rather save any intervention for the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East. Perhaps he is able to clarify the position, but I think that discussions may still be continuing as to whether they are allowed to vote for the amendments tonight——

Mr. Ron Brown: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman who has the Floor has made it clear that he does not intend to give way at this stage.

Mr. Beith: Since the debate on the Gracious Speech began a few days ago, and since the opening speeches, there have been further dramatic changes in eastern Europe. The Prime Minister welcomed those changes, as we all did. Indeed, she goes further—she claims credit for most of them, and that may seem strange to the people in eastern Europe who have fought so hard for many years. What a strange picture that conjures up. We all welcome the changes: multi-party politics; the prospect of coalition Governments; decentralised power; protection for human rights and new constitutions; demonstrations in the streets; strikes; trade union activity in support of political causes; freedom of information, including press conferences given by the security forces; church leaders becoming involved in politics; challenges to the existing party leadership. The Prime Minister welcomes all of them, but only as long as they do not happen here. Those things should also be happening in Britain.

In eastern Europe there is a move away from repression towards liberal democracy. There is a long way to go, but it is an important move. In Britain, under this Prime Minister, we are moving in the opposite direction.

5.12 pm

Mr. Edward Heath (Old Bexley and Sidcup): I offer my warmest congratulations to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on his appointment. He holds one of the three great departmental offices in Britain, and that is an immense responsibility.

I cannot help wondering what the millions of people who will see the Chamber tonight on television will think. People with mortgages, who find that the interest rate has almost doubled since they took out their mortgages—what will they think? All those people who have to give up their houses, or have them seized from them——

Mr. Barry Field: Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Heath: No, I shall not. I propose to carry on my own speech in my own way throughout.

What do those individuals, whom we have encouraged to start their own enterprises, think as the bankruptcy rate goes ever higher? What did the business men from larger enterprises think, when they left the Confederation of British Industry conference, about their future and what the Government are doing about it?

The public will watch a knockabout show once, but they do not usually go back to the same show again. They are not interested in what the Labour Government were doing from 1964 to 1979, or in what the Government were doing 10 years ago, as detailed by Opposition Members. They want to know in detail what their future will be, and how they should respond to it—that is natural. I suggest that it is our responsibility to deal with the problems in that way.

When my right hon. Friend the Chancellor refers to the past, or when Opposition Members intervene on that basis, they should be accurate. It is not accurate to say that the regional development schemes put forward directly after the second world war and carried through until the present Government, were a failure. It is complete nonsense. I see my right hon. Friend the Chancellor shaking his head, but I must tell him that it is indeed nonsense.

One of the most successful parts of British industry at the moment is the high technology industry in new towns in Scotland, and Scotland should have every credit for that. That industry would not be there without the incentives that were offered to business men to go there. The decisions as to which industries went to those places, how they set up firms and how they are run were taken by business men and not by Governments or Departments. We gave them the incentive that made it profitable to carry on a business and to provide jobs. I ask my right hon. Friend the Chancellor not to repeat accusations which can so easily be disproved. I am sorry to see that he still shakes his head—he took no part in those operations and obviously did not see what happened.

The hon. Member for Tyne Bridge (Mr. Clelland) mentioned inflation in 1973. It would have been more accurate to point out that we had to cope with a quadruple increase in oil prices which followed us through the 1970s, and the highest price for imported raw materials that we have ever known in Britain. It is ridiculous to try to learn lessons from that unless we take account of all the circumstances as they occurred.

There are two things which disappoint me in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor. First, he has boxed himself in on two vital aspects of policy. One is interest rates, which are said to be the only way to deal with the economy, and the other is going for lower taxation than we have at present. Most observers analysing the situation agree that the sudden descent to a 25 per cent. tax rate by the previous Chancellor had a considerable amount to do with the position in which we now find ourselves. There is a lesson to be learned from that.

Mr. Neil Hamilton (Tatton): Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The right hon. Member made it clear at the beginning of his speech that he was not prepared to give way.

Mr. Heath: Until my right hon. Friend's predecessor did so, no Chancellor has declared in the House that he would not increase taxation under any circumstance and that he was determined to reduce it. Other Finance Ministers recognise that circumstances may arise when it is necessary to increase taxation so as to influence the economy in the way that they wish. I am sorry that my right hon. Friend has boxed himself in on those two issues, which are important for the handling of the economy.

The other methods of handling the economy which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor dismissed so bluntly are limitation of credit and influence on the amounts of credit available. It is untrue to say that that policy was a failure —at the time, it was immensely effective. My right hon. Friend says that he no longer has the means to do that, but I disagree with him. Perhaps the Governor of the Bank of England no longer exerts influence in the City. That may be why my right hon. Friend's predecessor put forward the argument that there should be an independent Bank of England, similar to the independent Bundesbank, but I do not accept the whole of that argument.

I believe that it is still possible for the Governor of the Bank of England to use his influence in the City. People say that that is no longer possible because of the abolition of exchange control, but that is a simplification of the situation. There are many foreign banks in London now, but if the Governor wishes to exert his influence they have to accept it. They know perfectly well that they are licensed, and if they do not do as the Governor insists their licence will be in danger. [Hon. Members: "Rubbish!"] I ask my hon. Friends to stop their chattering. If they think it is possible to live here and get the credit they want anywhere in the world, let my right hon. Friend the Chancellor try doing it—it just does not work in the way that has been described. If he was determined to deal with the excess of credit through action by the Governor of the Bank of England and allied means, I believe that he could be effective. He has asked for proposals. He should consider that one in detail and not dismiss it out of hand as having failed for the first 40 years, since the war. We should also consider other means of dealing with the problem.

There are two aspects of the emphasis on the repayment of debt that I wish to mention. First, if there is repayment of debt, the money goes back into circulation. It is the repayment of gilts. Unless it is borrowed to the same extent, that puts pressure on the economy as a whole. It is bound to do so. Everyone with whom I have discussed the matter agrees. That is another issue that could be dealt with perfectly well by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor.

The second thing that worries me is that those borrowings were made by our predecessors to insure for our future. The boast now is that we are not doing that. We are not insuring the future for other generations. Anyone who has travelled around Europe and North America knows that Britain has the worst infrastructure in the western world. I welcome my right hon. Friend's contribution through the expansion that he announced in his Autumn Statement, but when we compare that with the rate of inflation—and when we compare what that money can achieve with what is required—we see how much is lacking. I stress the comparison with how much is required. That is why the citizen says, "Yes, I get all these increases, and I am told that there are billions of pounds more, but my needs are not being met."

Yesterday, the Secretary of State for Health mentioned my constituency and said that a consultant had complained. In fact, the management committee of the Bexleyheath health authority complained. For the next three months, until next year, only emergency cases are being taken for operations. My constituents say that that is not good enough. In the summer, my attention was drawn to the case of a lady who has lost the sight of one eye and whose sight in the other is failing. Her doctor told her that he would consult the hospital and get her an appointment. She duly got one—for 16 June 1990.

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): That is unacceptable.

Mr. Heath: I have to point out that that lady is 95 years old. Despite what we are doing, the genuine requirements of the citizen are not being met. We as a party must show that we are following a course which will ensure that they are met.

There is another fundamental fallacy here—that everyone must become more efficient. The usual answer is to pluck someone who knows nothing about the job and put him in, saying that he is now a manager. In the hospital service, the more efficient one becomes—in my constituency, Queen Mary's hospital is immensely efficient and acknowledged to be so—the more money one requires, as more patients are seen and they spend a shorter time in hospital. The result is a need for more money—[Interruption.] I am sorry if my hon. Friends are not interested in Bexley—[Hon. Members: "We are."] I have described a fundamental misunderstanding concerning the NHS.

Another thing that worries me immensely about the attitude towards money concerns privatisation. I imagine that most right hon. and hon. Members were horrified when, after the Deal tragedy when the Royal Marines band was bombed, we heard that the guards had been privatised. To me, that is utterly unacceptable. As a party, we have always believed in effective defence. If someone is in the Army, his job is to defend himself and not to get private citizens to do it, even in peace. I do not believe that the change is justified, and I am even more horrified to learn the extent to which it is going on. This cannot possibly continue if we are to have an effective answer to the terrorism that we face.

[Mr. Heath]

For my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to say, "Don't blame us for not having a proper military guard —blame the IRA for attacking us" is not justified in a war of terrorism against the British people. We cannot say, "They will not go for the soft spots," because we know that they will go for any spot they can find. That is clear from recent experiences in Europe and especially in Germany.

Italy and Germany have dealt with terrorism. We have had it for 20 years, but we have still not dealt with it, and the information that we have for dealing with it is inadequate, as proved by the number of occasions when we have been taken off guard and people have suffered. That is what is happening in Northern Ireland, in mainland Britain and in Europe.

Mr. Ian Bruce: Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Heath: No.

For the past 10 years I have urged that this country should become a full member of the European monetary system. I still urge that course—[Interruption.]

Mr. Giles Radice (Durham, North): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Is it right for Conservative Members who do not like what the former Prime Minister is saying to barrack and heckle when they are sitting directly behind him?

Madam Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member is quite right. I hope that the House will settle down. We need only one debate at a time in the Chamber.

Mr. Heath: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor says that he wants to keep inflation down. He is absolutely right to want that but the policies being pursued at present are increasing inflation. Becoming a full member of the European monetary system even five years ago would have helped to decrease inflation. Looking back five years, on the criteria that have been laid down it would have been perfectly possible for us to join.

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Heath: I have already said that I shall not give way.

Had we been in the European monetary system, the pressure on inflation would have been far greater. When the Prime Minister lists so many conditions that have to be met, she is saying that we are worse than the lowest of the 11 who have accepted the situation—[Interruption.] She is saying that we cannot go in, but that they can go in and be successful. She is saying that Germany can be immensely successful, that France can be successful, that the others can be successful but that we cannot and that we must wait until the last moment.

Then we are told that joining the EMS affects our sovereignty. Christopher Johnson, one of the best commentators on economic affairs, said in an article:

"if sovereignty is nothing more than the right to make one's mistakes in ignominious isolation, then it is hardly a prize worth having."

That is right.

Mr. Ron Brown (Edinburgh, Leith): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Heath: No.

Mr. Brown rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) has made it absolutely clear many times that he will not give way.

Mr. Brown rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Heath: I assure the hon. Member that I am not a stalking horse in any sense.

Now we are told that to be isolated is to be leader. I can say in all modesty in those circumstances that I must be the greatest leader of all time—and it is not a position that appeals to me. It is obvious that the greater part of our organisations and the greater part of the Cabinet believe that we should already be in the EMS, that we are being held out for only one reason and that the quicker we get in, the better.

I was glad to hear the Foreign Secretary say that we would not go back to an EFTA position. He had to say that only because the whole line of the Bruges speech was about going to EFTA. Chancellor Kohl and President Mitterrand saw that clearly, and that was the reason for President Mitterrand's statement. They are determined to go on their own, regardless of us, unless we are prepared to make our contribution to a full Community.

For me, a full Community is a situation in which we do all that we can together for our own advantage. Why should we have turned down help for our old age pensioners merely so that we could say, "No, we are not forced to do it, so we shall insist on doing it or not doing it ourselves"? The result is that we do not do it, and we all suffer. I believe that the great majority of people in Britain want us to be in a Community in which we can share as far as we possibly can.

As the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) said, the developments in eastern Europe have been remarkable, and we cannot judge how it will all finish. Already the question of the unification of Germany has arisen. I use the word "unification" rather than "reunification" because reunification raises the question of going back to pre-1939 boundaries, and that strikes fear into the hearts of the Poles and Czechs. On unification, however, Chancellor Kohl has today set out the three stages on which he believes that it can be achieved. He obviously cannot set a timetable, but he has stated what West Germany will do.

Mr. Skinner: Who follows Kohl?

Mr. Heath: At present, a large part of the German public.

Mr. Skinner: The right hon. Gentleman knows the meaning of my question.

Mr. Heath: We shall see what happens after the next election. If anything, the SDP is more strongly in favour because it does not believe that eastern Germany will be Christian Democrat. It believes that it will be non-Communist but Socialist, and that would greatly increase its influence. So it is a united country wanting to have Germany united.

Mr. Skinner: Why?

Mr. Heath: I shall explain why to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), who always listens to me with great patience. Many people in Europe and in the United States will be intensely worried about such developments and from the defence point of view some will ask whether it is a clever move by Mr. Gorbachev to get eastern Germany into a position from which it can tell western Germany, "Yes, we will join you, if we both become neutral." The impact of that on NATO and on the defence of Europe would be immense, but I do not believe that he is as clever as that. When we look at the other situation, in which western Germany is still in NATO and in the Community, people then worry lest Germany have a dominant economic position in the Community and in Europe.

The only answer to the fears of those in Europe and elsewhere about a united Germany is to have a stronger, more tightly bound Community. That involves all aspect, of the Community. It also involves Britain taking a lead now and playing a constructive part in the formulation of the Community and its policies to ensure that a western Germany, even an enlarged united Germany, cannot be considered a danger to the rest of us. It concerns those of us who lived through the 1930s and who fought through six years of war as much as anybody else that that should not happen. Nor are we prepared to see a situation in which we again split up into a mass of little nation states. There are those who say, "Hold up Community progress, let eastern Europe get its own house sorted out individually, and then we shall be a nice lot of individual countries again." I am not prepared to accept that. Nor do I believe the British people are willing to accept it. The risks are far too great.

I repeat that the answer is a stronger, more united Community, and we must play our part in achieving that. It has proved to be the attraction for eastern Europe and is one reason why they have thrown off Communism. They want to adopt a system closer to that of the Community and they want to get the benefits that they see. The people of East Berlin and East Germany saw that more clearly than anyone else because it was going on next door in West Berlin and West Germany.

For those reasons, I urge the British Government and the Chancellor to play their part in going for full membership of the European monetary system. If we have a common currency, West Germany will be more tightly bound into our system. If we have a central bank—with, as I believe, democratic control—western Germany, or a united Germany, will be more tightly bound into the Community and into our continent. That is the next stage. We have no time to waste if we are to go on to help the people of eastern Europe when they become democractic. We can help them. The Americans will not like giving them a great deal of investment—they never have—but we can help.

We must not, however, allow that to take our minds off the problems of the Third world, which is the other big danger because the problems of the Third world are emerging again. In Ethiopia there are again hundreds of thousands of starving people. The Third world still needs the attention of the Community, but we must become more prosperous so that we can help eastern Europe in its development. Above all, we must have a Community which is tightly bound together so that later we can consider the future membership of what will then be free and democratic countries.

5.36 pm

Mr. Alan Williams (Swansea, West): It is more of a pleasure to speak following the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) as a speaker than as a Minister. When I went to the Department of Prices and Consumer Protection in 1974, I had to pick up the results of the accelerating inflation that the right hon. Gentleman had left us, with his threshold agreements.

Indeed, it amused me to hear the Chancellor trying today—as did the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry last week—to rewrite history, trying to pose horrors of the 1960s as being implicit in the programme that the Labour party is putting forward. The Chancellor referred to the Department of Economic Affairs and to the National Enterprise Board. We heard the same last week from the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, who said:

"Does the Labour party remember the Department of Economic Affairs?"

I remember it. I was in it. He went on:

"Does it remember the National Enterprise Board? They, too, were set up to 'develop strategies and identify priorities for industry'. Where did they leave British industry?"—[Official Report, 22 November 1989; Vol. 162, c. 122.]

I am happy to tell the House where they left British industry. At today's prices, they left British industry with a balance of payments surplus of £5 billion a year, and the Conservatives were the beneficiaries of that. Not only did they leave the advantage of the equivalent at today's prices of a £5 billion a year balance of payments surplus, but they did it having inherited from the Conservatives a deficit of £5 billion. So if the Government want to go back to the days of the Department of Economic Affairs and the National Enterprise Board, we should not run from that but run to the record books and throw the figures back at the Government.

I am today having a fascinating maiden speech experience, in that I am making my first Back-Bench speech after 22 years on the Front Bench, where I served mainly in economic areas. I therefore feel it appropriate to contribute on a narrow aspect of the issues that are dominating our worries today. I want to talk about what I see as the squandering of a unique and unrepeatable opportunity that Britain had during the 1980s.

I want to fit the events about which we are now worried into a longer-term context, as I genuinely believe we are seeing the return to a problem that has beset the United Kingdom since the second world war—the stop-go syndrome. For the Chancellor and other Ministers to describe what is happening now as a blip either reveals that they have been grossly misled or is an attempt by them to grossly mislead.

We are facing a balance of payments crisis of unprecedented proportion. We must remember that we emerged fom the second world war into an era of balance of payments crises for reasons that I do not need to go into, and which most of us understand. So intransigent were the problems that we faced, as far back as the mid-1940s, that for the next 35 years they beset successive

[Mr. Alan Williams]

Governments. Every time there was a bid for growth, the drawing in of raw materials and semi-manufactures led to pressure first on the balance of trade, then on sterling, then on the Bank of England to inervene, next on the Government to raise interest rates and then on the Government to introduce credit squeezes. After the go, the stop would inexorably be applied, and we would be in a period of deflation.

That was bad enough, but the consequences produced what we have all come to know as the British malaise—low investment, bad industrial relations and low growth. They produced low investment because manufacturers were determined that they would not be caught again. They were told by successive Chancellors and Prime Ministers that if they invested, this time the dash for growth would be the real one, and then subsequently, as the brakes were applied, they found that they had surplus capacity and high servicing charges. As a result, they became cautious and in turn created the second problem—poor industrial relations. They began to use labour as a capital substitute. As we went for growth, instead of investing, as our competitors were doing, we took on labour and started overtime. When there was a cut back and deflation, we cut labour and overtime.

Consequently, the era of industrial confrontation was born. Out of that hire and fire economy emerged the British sickness—low investment, bad industrial relations, lack of skills and low growth. While we were trapped in that syndrome, our competitors—the United States, the EEC and Japan—were enjoying continuing growth. Every time we touched the accelerator and our gear slipped—as inevitably happened as the brake had to be applied—the gap between us and our competitors widened.

Nowhere was that gap revealed more clearly than in the car industry. Over a period of 30 years, as was revealed in The Sunday Times this weekend, car production in western Europe increased by 375 per cent., whereas in Britain it increased by 15 per cent. Until the late 1970s, we were always bedevilled by the threat of a balance of payments crisis and of stop-go.

Then came a unique fortuitous but finite opportunity for us. It came in the form of North sea oil which brought the double boom of resources, but more importantly—although this has tended to be ignored or not recognised—a shield for the first time against the very balance of payments pressures which had forced every Chancellor to apply the brake.

For the first time, we had time—we had a decade. During those 10 years, which are just expiring, as a result of the overseas sale of North sea oil and gas and the import substitution that it represents, we have had a balance of payments windfall of £128 billion. It was our only chance to go for growth. In addition, it provided resources for the first time—which the Government could use if they wished—of an extra £70 billion in windfall revenue. That money could have been used to modernise industry and update technology, for innovation, growth and investment.

The Government inherited that possibility in 1980, at a time when manufacturing investment in Britain was already at the highest level it had ever attained in the entire post-war period. They had the platform on which to build. Manufacturing investment was at an unprecedented high and the resources were available to boost that investment further. What more could any British Government have asked for? What an opportunity was presented to them.

How did they use that opportunity? The guilty man is sitting on the Treasury Bench. How did the present Leader of the House use it in what he described as his first "opportunity Budget"? This Government, like so many Governments, made their errors in the first six months and spent the rest of their term trying to undo them.

In his first Budget, the present Leader of the House unleashed policies that cut manufacturing industry by 20 per cent. and manufacturing investment by 41 per cent. We had the resources to sustain output at that time, but he cut it. For the entire life of this Government, while they have had that finite resource, instead of manufacturing investment soaring it has only just got back to where it started. In the process, that manufacturing industry, which, as I said, had already been cut back by 20 per cent. in capacity, lost £18 billion in investment which it would have had if the Government had sustained the level of investment applying when they took office. No Government since the war have ever had such an opportunity.

Now, 10 years on, the Thatcher miracle can be seen for what it is—the miracle that never was. Despite that £128 billion balance of payments windfall—it is important to emphasise that figure—at the end of this year the Government will have a net balance of payments deficit for the decade of £15 billion. The existing £15 billion deficit and the £128 billion balance of payments bonus that they had show that the Government have under-produced goods and services on a monumental scale—£143 billion. That is the cover that they have had from the North sea. It is the price which we have had to pay for the destruction of industry and the cutting of investment. The other day the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry had the cheek to say that there was no supply side problem—there is just a gap of £143 billion.

Now oil is declining. Britain has never known failure on such a scale. Future historians will look with wonder and horror at the Government's failure and at the failure of the right hon. and learned Gentleman the present Leader of the House and the Prime Minister to seize the one and only opportunity we have had since the war to break out of the vicious stop-go cycle. It was not a decade of lost opportunity because "lost" implies that there might have been an element of chance in it. It was a decade of squandered opportunity.

The Prime Minister and the Leader of the House are like a family who won the football pools and two years later were bankrupt. Britain won the pools when we found North sea oil and that £128 billion-worth of resources for the country. However, because of doctrinal bigotry, lack of understanding, refusal to consider alternatives and a neglect of the evidence, the Government in their blindness allowed the North sea oil—all the £128 billion—to run back into the sand from whence it came. Now, £128 billion later, we are back where we started: there is pressure on sterling, a brake on growth and firms are revising investment programmes downwards.

The peak riches of the North sea are behind us. There is no rescue for the Government. I submit that we are seeing not an isolated blip, but a return to that inexorable cycle: thanks to the Government's ineptitude, we are back on to the old stop-go treadmill.

5.50 pm

Mr. Michael Grylls (Surrey, North-West): The right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) was a very distinguished and charming Labour Minister. He has made a very interesting speech, as we would have expected; he has been a friend of mine in the House for some time and I hope that he always will be. Although his historical analysis was right when he referred to the British disease of the 1970s, he was on dangerous ground when he carried his analysis through to the present day.

Some Opposition Front-Bench spokesmen, including the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) today and the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) in the debate on industry last week, have tried to decry what some people, although not I, have described as the British miracle. It was foolish to do that, and inaccurate.

It would be more accurate to refer to the changes that we can contrast today with the scene described by the right hon. Member for Swansea, West. Those changes have occurred not as a result of a miracle, but thanks to sensible and practical policies. Those policies have been followed in many other countries with great success over the years. However, somehow Britain failed to follow them in the decades before the 1980s.

We owe a great debt of gratitude to my right hon. and learned Friend the Leader of the House. When he was Chancellor of the Exchequer, he laid the foundation for the first conquering of inflation and for the many tax changes that he introduced on the supply side. Those have been important factors in strengthening the British economy.

I know that this is a partisan debate; that is normal, and probably right. However, it does not do the debate any good for the Opposition to decry any or all of the Government's achievements. Perhaps people do not want to give the Government credit, because that is not within the partisan mood, but they should at least give credit to British industry, which has changed itself beyond recognition within the past 10 years. That does not mean that everything has been done, because there is plenty more to do. Perhaps there should be almost a bipartisan view about what needs to be done in future.

The right hon. Member for Swansea, West tried to accuse my right hon. and learned Friend the Leader of the House, a former Chancellor of the Exchequer, of squandering an inheritance. That is lunacy. The right hon. Gentleman is normally a very good debater, but such accusations do him no good.

We must consider the fact that British industry has quadrupled its productivity. It has doubled its profits, and 1,500 new firms are starting up every week. Before, we were losing small firms. There was a net loss, but there is now a net gain. That is the sign of a very successful economy.

No doubt Opposition Members would say that that is not enough, and I would agree. I want to see British industry double and treble those figures. However, if we continue the policies that we have pursued over the past 10 years, we are entitled to state that those figures will rise. Those figures have been achieved because the economy has been growing and we have made important supply side changes. There have been changes in taxation and unnecessary regulations have been removed to encourage entrepreneurs to get up and start new businesses.

Ms. Diane Abbott (Hackney, North and Stoke Newington): If the number of new firms is a sign of success, what is the record level of bankruptcies a sign of? Will the hon. Gentleman enlighten us?

Mr. Grylls: The figure that I gave was a net figure. In three or four months, the figure may go up or down. It is a forecast. However, so far that net figure has been increasing.

Interest rates are a great worry to many independent businesses. However, we should not simply decry the great success caused by the supply side changes which have been the basic foundation of growth which is the important success in our economy. It would be wise of us to recognise the huge turn-round.

No doubt the right hon. Member for Swansea, West will remember as I do that, under the Labour Government and in the early years of the Conservative Government, we still faced huge losses in several nationalised industries. British Steel reported losses of £500 million. British Leyland was always in a disastrous state. There was always a crisis around the corner and BL representatives visited Ministers and Back Benchers to explain the latest disaster. Leyland has been successfully returned to the private sector, and we hope that it will thrive and become stronger and achieve the exports that it deserves. Similarly, I hope that British Aerospace is successful.

The transformation of the nationalised industries has been very important. We are all aware of the success story of British Telecom. Mercury, a new telephone company, is gradually expanding and bringing much-needed competition into the telecommunications market. That competition has helped to create new firms in the telecommunications business. When we had one dominant nationalised industry, it was difficult for new firms to enter the marketplace. The market has been opened up and there is a strong regulator in the shape of Oftel to encourage competition. New gadgets are being invented daily in the telecommunications world and British Telecom is one of the world's leading companies in that area.

I do not want to refer to Europe at length today, as other hon. Members have done that already. However, anyone who says that Britain is behind hand in being a good member of the Community must be aware that we were the first to open up our telecommunications to procurement Communitywide. We are entitled to ask other Community countries when they will open up their markets so that British firms can try to win orders to supply their telecommunications companies. In that respect—and I believe in many others—Britain has been a very good European and has been leading the way in deregulating.

In surveying the general scene of industry and commerce, I want to refer to the smaller industrialists. Now that we have had such an improvement in British industry generally, it is time to see whether we can give more encouragement to the typically smaller industrial firm. I want to refer to a firm of a size that is typical in West Germany and which has been the backbone of the German industrial scene and largely responsible for West German industrial success. It is a small industrial firm with a turnover of about £1 million.

Typically, such a firm would spend about 50 per cent. of its turnover on materials and associated costs. When interest rates go up, such a firm faces a double squeeze

[Mr. Grylls]

—a squeeze by customers, who may take up to two extra weeks to pay, and a squeeze by materials suppliers, who will restrict credit by two weeks. That firm's overdraft could then go up from £100,000 to £160,000. The firm is squeezed by the higher borrowing and, sadly, by a lack of understanding on the part of too many of our high street bank managers who inadequately understand the needs of a smaller independent business. Some of them are trying to change, but matters are not as good as they should be. A firm which is faced with such a squeeze must cut back somehow and hope to ride out the substantial extra cost of borrowing or of working capital.

We can look to Germany and Japan for a solution. Although we have rightly removed general subsidies in nationalised industries and our other great industries, which should be and are now standing on their own feet, there is an argument for helping and encouraging a small industrial firm with a turnover of £1 million. That argument has been accepted in Germany and Japan, where such firms are given a differential rate of interest.

No doubt Opposition Members will say that the hon. Member for Surrey, North-West has taken leave of his senses and is asking for some form of subsidy. Of course subsidies have not yet been totally removed from the economic scene. They have not been removed from housing or from pensions—indeed, they are prevalent. There is an argument for seeing how we can help this sector of our industry, because it would be an investment for the future. I hope that hon. Members who do not like general subsidies will not be derisive.

Unlike large firms, a small industrial company cannot borrow on the Eurodollar market, for example, or in some sophisticated way through the City of London. Generally, it can borrow only through its own bank in the way that I have described. When we try to defeat inflation with high interest rates, we must try to help such companies. Therefore, I hope that the Government will look at this matter. We should not rush into it, but we should study what is done in several other countries, such as Germany and Japan, and see how we can help such firms. They comprise part of our still weak industrial life. They were seriously weakened over the 1950s, 1960s and 1970s by too much taxation and regulation, and they are not yet strong enough. I want them to be helped to get on to their feet.

Mr. Benn: I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman is aware that the exact scheme that he proposes was put up by myself as Secretary of State for Industry, but it was turned down as a breach of the treaty of Rome. The right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) had an interest relief scheme which was 1 per cent. below the going rate to help industry in Scotland. The Commissioner in Brussels said that it was illegal, and it was abandoned. As a pro-European, the hon. Gentleman must take account of the fact that everything he has suggested would be deemed illegal.

Mr. Grylls: I do not think that that is right. Any subsidy must be negotiated with the Commission—that is quite correct—but the scheme is in place in West Germany, and it is approved. I am not suggesting what the necessary mechanism is, but the issue must be looked at.

Let the House be clear that independent business is immensely stronger than it was 10 years ago. It is a thousand times better off, largely because of the supply side changes that have been brought about by the Government. My right hon. and learned Friend the Leader of the House has played his own distinguished part by means of reductions in personal and capital taxation. They have made it easier to pass a firm from one generation to the next, which is essential if a firm is to grow from one generation to the next. A firm should not need to be taken over when its proprietor retires or dies. The situation is much better than it was. The Government's initiatives have given great encouragement to independent firms.

The additional venture capital that is around today was scarcely known about 10 years ago. The Government's loan guarantee scheme has helped firms to get on their feet. All that has at last given Britain an opportunity to have a strong, independent firm sector. That will be the central part of our future economy. There is no doubt that 99 per cent. of British industry is wholly behind the Government's efforts to put inflation at the top of the agenda and to conquer it. That must be correct.

Hon. Members will agree that, when inflation goes up again, the Government will succeed in dealing with it. We dealt with it in the early 1980s and in 1985, and we will defeat it in 1989-90. It is not a disease that can be cured once and for all and never reappear. That would be too easy. Every business man knows that no business goes along in a straight line. Of course there are ups and downs. That is exactly what happened throughout most of the industrialised world in the past 10 years. Inflation has ebbed and flowed. Today's inflation could do much more damage than the damage that was done by interest rates. The damage is painful but it is not terminal. However, inflation is terminal for the independent business. There is no doubt that business will support the Government's efforts to bring inflation under control.

I am delighted that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has come back to hear my last words. [Interruption.] I am sure that he will hear them. Business men will support the Government's worthy aim of getting rid of inflation. They can then look forward to expansion and to continuing the growth that has been the hallmark of the decade of the Conservative Government.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I need to remind the House that the Standing Orders now require speeches to be limited to 10 minutes.

6.7 pm

Mr. John Evans (St. Helens, North): The huge strike in Czechoslovakia yesterday and the strikes that have taken place in other eastern European countries over the past few weeks would be illegal in Great Britain. They would be illegal because they were political strikes against the Government. Such strikes were outlawed by the Employment Act 1982. They would be illegal also because they were called without ballots. For British trade unionists, such actions were made illegal by the Trade Union Act 1984. If the Government's new employment Bill is enacted, they will be illegal because they are unofficial.

We welcome the developments in eastern Europe and the movement towards freedom and pluralistic democracies. But it is easier for workers in eastern European countries to take industrial action than it is for workers in Thatcher's Britain to take industrial action. The Opposition do not believe that arguments about freedom stop at the Berlin wall. I will examine one or two issues which are basic to freedoms in this country, and which the Queen's Speech clearly ignored.

The Gracious Speech does not recognise the level of poverty in Great Britain. It does not mention the poverty of millions of our fellow citizens, nor the contribution to that poverty which has been made by the appallingly low social security benefits which the Government have created. Nor is there any recognition of the disastrous under-funding of Britain's local authorities or of the demise of many of their services, which manifests itself in many of our towns and city centres being left unswept and frequently looking like pigsties. Nor is there any commitment to the major improvement in the National Health Service that a massive majority of the British people want to see and for which they are willing to pay.

On a constituency note, I draw the attention of the House to a petition that I have received from the St. Helens and District Society for the Deaf, protesting that there is no provision in the forthcoming broadcasting Bill for improved facilities to enable the deaf to enjoy television programmes. I beg the Home Secretary to correct that omission before presenting the Bill for its Second Reading.

Most significantly, nothing in the Queen's Speech recognises the economic problems that 10 years of Thatcherism have created for towns such as St. Helens. As I have only limited time, I shall concentrate on the one Bill that the Government claim will be beneficial to Britain's economic performance—the new employment or trade union Bill. When the former Chancellor of the Exchequer, the right hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Lawson), downed ledgers a few weeks ago, the Prime Minister got a taste of bad industrial relations. The Chancellor obviously found his working conditions intolerable and walked out.

It is ironic that, just weeks later, the Government have announced a Bill to outlaw unofficial industrial action. They should be well aware that disruptive action, whether the resignation of a Chancellor or a lightning strike in a factory, happens when trust breaks down and when conventions or agreements are unilaterally broken.

The Government's Green Paper "Unofficial Action and the Law" is symptomatic of the inability of the Secretary of State for Employment to grasp that basic fact. In many ways, the Green Paper is misleading, fundamentally misconceived and frequently economical with the truth. Paragraph 1.1 states:

> "The reform of industrial relations law since 1979 has made a vital contribution to the improvement in our country's economic performance."

One wonders to which country it refers. Perhaps no one has told the author that interest rates are at their highest for eight years; that the balance of payments deficit is heading for £20 billion; that inflation is nearly 40 per cent. above the European average; that Britain's training and education programmes are among the worst in the Economic Community; that Britain is teetering on the brink of a recession; and that unemployment is set to rise again. But of course, the Secretary of State for Employment knows that very well. The so-called "economic miracle" is a mirage. So that, as things go from bad to worse, the Government can attack workers' rights as the scapegoat for their own economic mismanagement. The Government make the mistakes, but the workers get the blame.

The new trade union Bill marks a major change in emphasis from previous Employment Bills. Until now, we have always been told that the nation's real enemies were the trade union bosses. Trade union bosses, the Tories claimed, were power-mad barons who conscripted workers into closed shops against their will, bullied reluctant workers into strikes and used the workers as cannon fodder to satisfy their own lust for power.

To rescue the workers from their clutches, the Government have banned the post-entry closed shop. They have given workers "rights" to elect union leaders in the expectation that the workers' well-known moderation would kick the militants from office. Unions have also been prevented from disciplining any worker who defies a lawfully called strike.

However, the Tories have suddenly changed direction. There is now a new enemy within—ordinary trade union members. Despite the compulsory ballots, the alleged decline of the closed shop, and the election of responsible leaders, the workers are still not docile enough for the Tory party. The new bogeyman is unofficial industrial action. Paragraph 1.2 of the Green Paper states that the great majority of strikes in Great Britain have always been unofficial. Paragraph 1.3 states:

> "Most unofficial strikes arise over local issues which have not been taken through the agreed procedure for dealing with disputes".

Of course, the Government are interested only in those bits of the truth that bolster their own arguments. They do not tell us what is behind 95 per cent. of those "local issues". In fact, the cause is almost always unilateral action by employers or managers who arbitrarily breach agreements by riding roughshod over the work force on such things as wages, conditions, safety or union recognition, or by sacking workers unfairly. In other words, it is invariably an employer who ignores the agreed procedures for the avoidance of disputes.

So what do the Government propose to do about their concern for good industrial relations? Again, they attack trade unionists. They are certainly not proposing penalties for guilty employers who provoke industrial action. The Government condemn workers for not abiding by procedures. Employers, however, are not only free to do as they please, but will now be given even greater freedom to attack their employees.

Under a heading "Extending Trade Union Responsibility", in chapter 2, page 4 of the Green Paper, of which the Nazi propaganda Minister Goebbels would have been proud, the Government will force trade unions to repudiate any unofficial action. Trade union bosses will have to coerce their members back to work no matter what their employers' provocation. Secondly, if workers do go on unofficial strike the Government will give the employer the legal right to sack the so-called ringleaders. Thirdly, if any striker is sacked, industrial action, even backed by a secret ballot, in support of his or her reinstatement will be unlawful.

In paragraph 2.10, the Government say that action is unofficial where there has not been a ballot. If these proposals become law, trade unions will be accountable for the actions of every member. The only way to escape large fines would be for the union to repudiate any and every unofficial action. If a union does not repudiate its members in writing, employers and their customers could get injunctions forcing the union to call off the action. If the union could not comply, it would face fines and sequestrations.

[Mr. John Evans]

The Government do not make it clear how a union can force workers to return when they are on unofficial strike. It could mean that, to escape legal action, unions would have to expel striking members or dismiss full-time officials deemed to be supporting strikers or withdraw credentials from shop stewards. Difficulties will arise if a walkout occurs over, for instance, the dismissal of a shop steward, which was later endorsed by a secret ballot.

At paragraph 2.11, the Green Paper states that the union could

"accept liability for industrial action, in which case the union would need to hold a proper secret ballot of all its relevant members."

Although the Green Paper is silent on the matter, it implies that while the ballot is being held the union would be obliged to get its members back to work——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. It really hurts me to have to call an hon. Member to order, but we are now within the 10-minute rule.

Mr. Evans: Yes, I appreciate that, Madam Deputy Speaker.

What is required is co-operation between Government, employers and workers. The Gracious Speech makes no mention of that, but that is what we require——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I call Mr. Terence Higgins.

6.17 pm

Mr. Terence L. Higgins (Worthing): The debate on the Gracious Speech this year is inevitably taking place against the background of the dramatic events in eastern Europe. I was rather struck by a phrase—one might almost say a slogan—that was used in our earlier debates on the Gracious Speech. I refer to the expression, "Today we need borders, not barriers." That is a good way of summing up the present position. Clearly, it is vital that the barriers should come down between the various countries of eastern Europe and those of us in the West. That is particularly important, not least from an economic point of view.

However, while I share the euphoria at recent events, I also share considerable concern about the potential dangers. The argument for maintaining borders at the moment—whatever may come at some time in the future—is important. That point is worth stressing because it is against that background that we need to look at both the European situation and the general economic position.

It is true that this debate on the economy, at the end of the debate on the Queen's Speech, is never satisfactory, not least because the wind-up speech must cover the entire debate. Although my right hon. and learned Friend the Leader of the House can cope with the various economic arguments made, tonight he must cover a broad area.

We have had two recent debates on the economy. An extremely good one on an Opposition Supply day and one when we discussed European harmonisation. We have also had the Chancellor's Autumn Statement. The Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee is still in the course of taking evidence—last week it took evidence from Treasury officials, yesterday it took evidence from the Chief Secretary and next week it will take evidence from the Chancellor. My Committee has not yet reported nor has it had an opportunity to look in depth at the implications of the Autumn Statement, which no doubt will be debated in January. In that sense we are in limbo, so I shall confine my remarks to a couple of specific points.

I believe that the action taken by the Chancellor on the economy has been right, not least with regard to the rate of interest and the fiscal policy. Those actions are having the desired effect. Although I understand the concern expressed about the balance of payments, the figures year on year, three months on three months or month on month are showing an improvement. The year-on-year and three-monthly comparisons, of course, show an improvement because exports have gone up faster than imports. The latest monthly figures show exports up and an actual reduction in imports, and that is a reflection of the success of Government policy. We must all hope that those policies continue to operate in that manner.

From time to time my Committee has produced a crude analogy of the Chancellor—the present and the previous one—on a tightrope between inflation and unemployment. It is apparent that the danger of the Chancellor falling over on to the inflation side was greatly exacerbated by the failure of the official forecast to anticipate just how rapidly the economy was moving, not least when action was taken following the stock exchange crash of 1987. The danger is that, because that forecasting error was due largely to the huge expansion in consumer credit, when interest rates began to bite, the forecasts could be in error in the other direction. If that happens, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor will not realise the extent to which deflationary pressures are operating within the economy. That matter is of considerable concern.

More particularly, however, I am concerned about a rather technical point with regard to the use of interest rates in relation to fiscal policy. We continue to run an enormous budget surplus with no clear precedent. We must ask to what extent that reflects the tightness or looseness of fiscal policy given the Government's approach which involves a policy of so-called fully unfunding that surplus. We must ask whether there is some scope for action on public expenditure and so on that has not yet been undertaken.

One simply cannot get rid of the surplus. That would be grossly irresponsible, but we must take into account the relationship between that surplus and the policy of fully unfunding. I have come to the conclusion that the answer depends on whether one adopts a monetarist or a Keynesian approach. A monetarist may question, given the policy of fully unfunding, whether it makes any difference if one runs a budget surplus of £15 billion or £5 billion. That is a relevant question—whether the size of the public sector debt repayment makes any difference. A monetarist may say that the aim of policy, as defined by the Government, is to leave the size of bank deposits unchanged. Since bank deposits are effectively insulated from changes in the PSBR, a monetarist would say that there is no difference. He would argue that there would be no difference to aggregate demand because the money supply or interest rates do not change. The only change is in the composition of aggregate demand as the contraction of public expenditure is offset by the expansion of the private sector as long-term interest rates fall. That happens because when the Government buy in gilts their price goes up and the rates go down.

A non-monetarist—or, for want of a less pejorative expression, a Keynesian—would argue that the fall in long term rates is unlikely to offset fully the contraction in the public sector. They would argue for example, that the fall in long-term rates is likely to be small because if the public sector is operating a surplus some other sectors—the private or overseas sectors—must be operating a deficit. If those sectors in deficit borrow in the bond market the long-term interest rate will not be so low as expected by monetarists and private expansion will be stifled. Consequently, Keynesians would argue that the fiscal policy does have an overall effect, because pulling the purchasing power out of the economy has the overriding effect and they would argue that the monetary effects are relatively small.

At the moment I do not believe that we are clear, nor is the Chancellor clear, what the true impact of the fiscal policy is when it is backed up by the policy of fully unfunding. We are faced with an unprecedented situation and we have not analysed the situation correctly. Does the size of a fully unfunded surplus matter? We must appraise carefully whether there is some scope for changes in public expenditure or in taxation that have not been recognised previously. The answer turns on which analysis one adopts. I do not expect the Leader of the House to give me that answer tonight, but we should know which of those policies have been adopted.

Although I remain strongly of the view that control of public expenditure is of overriding importance, that raises the question of what the Government's spending priorities should be. My maiden speech was about whether pensions should be given, as of right, to the over-80s left out of the national insurance scheme. I subsequently introduced a private Member's Bill—I was lucky enough to come first in the ballot—but the Labour party, to its eternal disgrace, filibustered all through the Thursday night and stopped the Bill coming to a vote on the Friday. I am happy to say that the first thing that happened when we come to office in 1970 was that we gave pensions, as of right, to that group.

I believe that there is a close analogy between that group and war widow pensioners. All war widow pensioners get the basic pension, but those who claimed after the deadline when the so-called occupational scheme was introduced also get a substantially larger sum on a separate scheme. Because it is an occupational scheme, we are told that it cannot be made retrospective. In many respects that is the same argument as that advanced regarding over-80s pensioners.

The war widow pensioners who are excluded from the occupational scheme should at least be entitled to that part of the pension that is not covered by contributions. I advanced the same argument for over-80s pensioners and so last week I tabled a question to ask what part of the occupational pension scheme for war widows was covered by contributions. The reply stated:

"The armed forces pension scheme is non-contributory" —[Official Report, 13 November 1989; Vol. 160, c. 32.]

The whole lot comes out of the defence vote. The only argument for the other side was that the pay of those who claimed after the 1973 deadline was cut to represent notional contributions. It is ridiculous to suggest that their pay was then lower than that received during the war. I went into the forces after the war and my pay was four shillings per day. That is an absurd argument.

Despite all the restraints on public expenditure, I hope that my right hon. Friends at the Treasury will consider carefully the close analogy between the position of war widows and the over-80-year-olds, as the arguments are almost the same.

6.28 pm

Mr. Tony Benn (Chesterfield): From listening to the debate and especially the right hon. Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins) the implication is that economic policy is a subtle seminar about the management of an unchanged economy.

I am sure that the right hon. Gentleman, in common with me, has had people come to see him at his surgery who have waited a long time for medical treatment or those who have become homeless. The other day, a young girl came to me who had been thrown out of her house by her father on her 16th birthday. He had broken her nose because she was pregnant. She was living on the streets and stealing to live. She was denied a place on the youth training scheme because she was before the probation service.

In common with many hon. Members, I have had people come to me because they are suddenly in huge arrears with which they cannot cope as a result of the new housing benefits regulations. It is no good saying to them, "Are you basically a monetarist or a Keynesian?" Economic policy is about the aims and objectives of society; it is not just a discussion between financiers in the City about who can run the economy best. I acquit the right hon. Member for Worthing of that charge, but there are many people who speak as though we were only discussing whether industry was profitable.

Other objectives in society should be the concern of the Chancellor. One is that everybody should have useful work at a living wage. People should have a home in which to live. The benchmarks by which to judge the success of economic policy should be: is there proper provision for education; are the schools provided with books; is there an adequate health service or do people have to try to jump the queue by opting for private medicine; will people be able to enjoy dignity when they are old? If the only criterion set is the profitability of companies that are still in business, we are missing the whole point of economic policy.

We have been told to look at reality, and I think we should. Although many hon. Members have spoken about the new situation in eastern Europe, the Chancellor never mentioned defence expenditure. Next year, he will have to find £21 billion and his great new reality did not include the possibility that reducing defence expenditure and diverting the money to other matters might not only reduce inflationary pressure, but might pay for some of the needs that I have described.

Another new reality is that, in a democracy, the Government's economic policy must be approved by the people. The shift in public anxiety or the change in feeling among the people about the Government is because they no longer accept the underlying assumptions of Government policy. They do not believe that monetary policy and profitability are the criteria by which our society should be governed.

Mr. Cash rose——

Mr. Benn: No, I shall not give way. We are restricted to 10-minute speeches, I think a bit unfairly.

We must recognise that the debate is not just about the Prime Minister. I have never liked the word "Thatcherism", because it is the values peddled by the Government that people are rejecting. Hon. Members should not think that things are not changing. On Saturday week, I was at Trafalgar square supporting the ambulance drivers. The police buses were waiting in Whitehall, as they always do when there is a big demonstration. The policemen were huddled in the buses and inside there were stickers saying, "We support the ambulance workers". There was a Marine commando at Trafalgar square wearing a steward's armband.

Hon. Members should not think that trade unions are unpopular, because as mortgage rates go up and people in this generation are driven into debt, they learn what others have learned before them—that they need trade unions to protect them. My hon. Friend the Member for St. Helens North (Mr. Evans), who made a powerful speech about the new proposals, gave an idea of what would happen.

The poll tax, the widening gap between rich and poor, and the debt into which people are being driven are unfair. It must be the experience of every hon. Member that many people who had good jobs bought houses on mortgage. Then the interest rates knocked out their company, which meant that they could not keep up the mortgage payments and had to sell the house. However, house prices are falling and there are no council houses because the councils have had to sell them and cannot buy or build any more. That is the reality that must breathe some life into the debate.

The gravity of the situation is far greater than has been admitted. I do not intend to go into debating points about statistics. I was an industrial Minister in 1964 when we came to office. George Brown was at the Department of Economic Affairs and Callaghan was the Chancellor. There was the "Maudling dash for growth" that led to a deficit. We had a national plan, but 18 months later it was dropped because of international financial pressure. In 1974, we inherited an even worse situation.

The reality is that, during all the policies that have been followed—on the exchange rate, interest rates, credit controls, the old stop and go and incomes policy—there has been a steady decline in British manufacturing relative to what we need to survive. That is a continuing problem. Oil gave us a bonus. I was the Minister of Power in 1970 when the Forties field was discovered. My hon. Friend the Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) was with me later in the Department of Energy. I think that I am right in saying that BP put £500 million into the Forties field and amortised it in 18 months, so rich was it. We have thrown the whole thing away. Look at the amount that has been paid out in unemployment benefit or at the imported goods that have destroyed or limited our manufacturing industries.

There will soon be an election. I should like to see the people being given the right to make their choice sooner rather than later, because this House of Commons is in the time warp of 1987 and much has happened since then. I am bound to turn my mind to the questions that will face an incoming Labour Government, because that is the Government we shall have. Compared to 1964 and 1974, the problems that that Government will face will be monumental. I asked the Chancellor when he thought he would get the deficit down, and he could not say. He would not pretend that it would be down to anything like a reasonable level by the time that there is a change of Government.

What will my right hon. and hon. Friends do when they come to office? Will it be enough to deal with the problems in terms of exchange rate policy, the exchange rate mechanism or the European monetary system? The answer is no. We shall have to take a big national decision by deciding that industry is as essential to us as agriculture. We have never allowed agriculture to be destroyed by temporary movements in world food prices. We have sustained it—the Conservative party is best at doing that because it represents the shires. To allow our industry to be destroyed because of short-term changes in the exchange rate or stop-go policies is absurd. Nobody can accuse me or my hon. Friends of not being clear in our amendment about what will have to be done. We shall have to have exchange controls.

We could not have a nation generating profit by its own wealth only to see it move to Korea or South Africa where people can make a bigger profit. We have a deficit of such magnitude that the Chancellor cannot anticipate its end. I cannot anticipate its end by using the old measures in which I was involved. That means that we will have to say to people that we cannot afford to buy from abroad what we now buy from abroad. We must tell them that they will have to wait a bit longer for a Mercedes but that they might get quicker treatment at the local Health Service hospital.

We shall have to cut defence expenditure sharply. Even the Secretary of State for Defence in Washington talked about cutting it by half. At the Labour conference, there was a resolution to cut it to the same level as that of our European partners, and that is outdated by the ending of the Berlin wall. What will Trident and Polaris be used for? Will one be dropped on Walesa and one on Gorbachev? Where is the enemy that justifies enormous military expenditure?

The real priorities are that people should be properly fed and housed, educated and cared for, because those things are in the national interest. Market forces cannot solve any of the problems that are of prime concern to our people. Nor can the Common Market. Who wants to transfer power to Mr. Delors, who is unelected and cannot be removed at an election? We have to do it ourselves.

The British people must be told that the only answer to the problems that confront us lies in our own actions, efforts and policies. Such a suggestion may be a little ahead of its time. I found an article in the TV Times that I wrote in March 1957 calling for the televising of Parliament. Thirty-two years is about par for the course. Perhaps a little later, the House will heed what I am saying now. Without pursuing my Dubcek role any further, I commend our amendment.

6.38 pm

Sir Anthony Grant (Cambridgeshire, South-West): Whether or not one agrees with the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn), the one thing we can say about him is that we know where he stands. The right hon. Gentleman says what he believes in, and that is more than can be said for his colleagues on the Opposition Front Bench. I wish that we had more time to hear more of the policies that he proclaims in the amendment, about the withdrawal of troops from Northern Ireland, the withdrawal from military blocs and, presumably, from NATO and the EEC. We appreciate the fact that the right hon. Gentleman has said quite honestly what he believes in. I hope that he will not share the disillusion of the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer), who has decided to disappear from the House at the next election, because we would miss the right hon. Gentleman very much.

I and the right hon. Member for Chesterfield share one trait. He dislikes spending too much time on personalities and believes in talking about policies and principles. I entirely agree. On personalities, we are exceedingly fortunate to have my right hon. Friend the Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major) in the post of Chancellor. We in Cambridgeshire may have had more opportunity to observe his abilities, but I believe that, in what may well prove a tough economic year, his acumen, sensitivity and plain common sense should give us considerable confidence.

It was, in my view, entirely right for the Gracious Speech to proclaim firm policies to reduce inflation and to foster the conditions necessary for sustained growth. No sane person would deny that that task should be a priority; but how has the present degree of inflation arisen? I do not believe that tax reductions were the main cause, although it might have been better to phase them over a period. I believe in the reduction of taxation, and hope that our Government will never lose sight of that principle. I have also supported the switch from direct to indirect taxation which has proved so necessary over the past decade.

The prime cause of inflation was, I believe, the hysterical panic that spread throughout the world when the stock markets fell on black Monday in 1987. Governments of developed countries panicked and reduced interest rates, and the then Chancellor had to follow suit. There was no alternative; indeed, he was urged by the Opposition to take such action.

No sensible person would deny that interest rates are the most powerful and effective weapon with which to deal with the cancer of inflation. The credit controls used by the Labour Government in the 1970s would be as ludicrous today as they were then. Rather like the Bourbons, however, the Opposition have forgotten nothing and learnt nothing. I understand that the alternative policy of the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) is some kind of chit-chat with bankers in the City: an up-market version of beer and sandwiches—champagne and caviar, perhaps. I do not think that we can accept that as a serious alternative.

Interest rates, however, are also the cruellest weapon, hitting the have-nots and benefiting the haves. Three groups in particular suffer in this regard. No hon. Member has yet pointed out that farmers depend on credit. I am not talking about rich farmers; there are many poor farmers in Cambridgeshire, and they will find the increase in interest rates very burdensome. Secondly, there are the small firms. I was pleased that my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, North-West (Mr. Grylls) mentioned them, as they have always been a cause near to my heart. We need not worry about large firms, which, I am glad to say, have become very profitable under the present Government, and can sustain higher interest rates. Small firms working on tight margins, however, will find them crippling.

When I was responsible for small firms, they were unfashionable, but they have now grown to a record extent. That is one of the most encouraging developments brought about by the present Government. They are the large firms of the future. I was pleased to note that the Queen's Speech promised to promote enterprise, and small firms are the basis of free enterprise.

I was interested in my hon. Friend's suggestion of differential interest rates. I do not think that the EEC or the treaty of Rome would be all that would stop that; attractive though that may seem, I do not believe that there is a practical way of administering such a system. The only answer is to get these wretched interest rates down as soon as possible, and I beg the Government to bear that in mind and not to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs.

The third category of sufferers are home owners with mortgages. Some, of course, have raised money through their mortgages for cars, videos and foreign holidays, but we should spare a thought for those who, in my view, constitute the majority—those who were inspired by the philosophy of the home-owning democracy, and especially those who were urged to buy just before the clampdown a year ago which caused the rise in mortgage interest rates.

Those three groups bear the greatest burden of anti-inflation policy, although it was not their fault that the markets and Governments of the world panicked in 1987. We should remember that they are the bedrock of support for the present Government: they know that Socialism is stupendous folly, and that it has never worked anywhere. They can see through the pretence by the official Opposition—not the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) and his hon. Friends—that their policy is not really Socialist.

I beg my right hon. Friend to give careful thought to the sections of society that I have mentioned. Let me make a suggestion. I do so somewhat hesitantly, as a Treasury Minister is on the Front Bench and I know that what I am going to say is anathema to the Treasury. I feel rather like the fat boy in "The Pickwick Papers" who said to an old lady, "I wants to make your flesh creep." I shall inspire horror in the Treasury mandarins.

I ask the Treasury not to reject out of hand possible changes in mortgage interest relief—and I mean changes in an upward direction. The housing market has taken such a knock that it will be some time before prices spiral again. On many housing estates, properties cannot be sold, but with a degree of balance and common sense I believe that the problem could be solved. I am aware that the Chancellor has poured cold water on the idea in an article in the Sunday Express, but he made it clear in his Autumn Statement that he does not reject the possibility of resolving the matter by fiscal means. I have great faith in my right hon. Friend, and I merely ask him to keep an open mind. The pressure for wage increases to combat the high interest rates from which many large firms are now suffering could be eased by such a measure.

The Government committed themselves in Madrid to the achievement of economic and monetary union as prescribed in the Single European Act, and decided that stage 1 should begin on 1 July, 1990. We shall obviously join the exchange rate mechanism; the only question is when. I hope that my right hon. Friend will study the paper in which his and my MEP, Sir Fred Catherwood, argues that the solution to inflationary problems lies within the exchange rate mechanism, and that we should join sooner rather than later. That conclusion was also reached by the July report of the Select Committee on Trade and Industry, of which I am a member. Whatever we do, we should not miss the bus. If the Government take the view that Sir Fred and the Committee are wrong, and that we do not want to join the ERM, I feel that that will be disastrous for us. If we join, however, I believe that we shall experience considerable benefits, and that many of the problems that we have encountered since black Monday will be overcome.

[Sir Anthony Grant]

My right hon. Friend faces daunting tasks, but I have every faith in is ability to deal with them effectively and courageously. Certainly the least of those problems will be dealing with the Opposition.

6.47 pm

Mr. William Ross (Londonderry, East): Readers of Hansard will see that on 15 November I asked the Chancellor about the effect of increasing public expenditure from £168 billion to £203 billion between the current year and 1992-93. The Chancellor replied carefully that I must have misheard the figures, because the increase for next year was £5·5 billion. The question that I asked mentioned the correct figure of £35 billion—a huge, increase, even if the Chancellor's predictions of a fall in the percentage of gross domestic product is correct.

I appreciate that the Chancellor now has a huge Budget surplus. I am surprised that only two Conservative Members—the right hon. Members for Worthing (Mr. Higgins) and for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath)—have mentioned that so far. If that surplus were allowed to continue until the next general election, it would be the most bountiful gift that any Opposition could ever expect to receive. Imagine the joy of a Labour Opposition and shadow Chancellor who were handed such a treasure house. They could make the most generous promises to the electors, and the Conservatives could not say—as they have been able to say at every election within living memory—"Where is the money to come from?", for the money would be there. It follows, therefore, that the Chancellor must spend the bounty that he has inherited before the next election.

I am sure that that prospect does not make his task of reducing inflation any easier. If inflation is not reduced, the pressure on him to enter the exchange rate mechanism will be increased by those who are in favour of that course of action.

The apparent attractions of taking such an easy way out by taking the first steps to full monetary union are outweighed by the long-term loss of control of our affairs that would flow from that step. I believe that the Prime Minister at least is well aware of the consequences of handing control of the nation's finances to other hands. I have no doubt that the sovereigns from whom the House wrested control knew the importance of control of the money supply; they certainly held on to it as long as they could. One does not hold on to something that is of no use.

If the Government now understand the downstream consequences of the loss of control of our finances, do they understand the consequences of the diminution of sovereignty that has flowed from the Anglo-Irish Agreement? Willingly adulterating one's absolute right to take whatever course of action is necessary, especially with the involvement of others, is not a policy that I should commend, especially if those most affected are opposed to it.

An illustration of the defects of shared responsibility is the Anglo-Irish Agreement, which has created a rigid framework in which the Government must operate. They lost freedom of action, and as a result the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland foolishly said that he found it difficult to envisage the military defeat of the IRA. If that is so, the framework—the policy in which the Secretary of State must operate—is wrong and must be changed.

Despite his later efforts to qualify his words, by his first remarks the right hon. Gentleman did himself fatal political damage. The IRA's perception of itself is that it cannot be defeated, and it will act on that perception. That perception must be changed before victory over that terrorist body can be won. For the good of everyone who wants to live in a western liberal democracy such as we enjoy, that victory must be won.

My hon. Friend the Member for Antrim, East (Mr. Beggs) pointed out last Wednesday that the Unionist party wanted a good neighbour policy with the Irish Republic, and that we should like a lasting relationship based on mutual respect between Ulster and the Republic. I believe that that can follow only from stability in Ulster. My right hon. Friend from Lagan Valley (Mr. Molyneaux), who is the leader of my party, said last Tuesday that such stability could come about only if there were what he called a constitutional offensive—in essence, an end to constitutional ambiguity about Ulster.

I know well that the constitutional measures that my right hon. Friend outlined—which are detailed to some extent in the amendment that we have tabled—were supported, and not for the first time, by a member of the Social Democratic and Labour party. I know that those measures are often referred to as "integrationist", but I do not agree with that description because they are far more accurately described as constitutionally neutral between integration and devolution, and they most certainly would not inhibit moves to a devolved parliamentary structure, when folk in Ulster learn to work together once again or to the creation of a constitutional and administrative position in Northern Ireland that is indistinguishable from the rest of the United Kingdom.

If the measures taken included the return of simple majority elections, the IRA would be even more deeply wounded, and so much the better for us all. Let there be no doubt that moves such as those outlined in our amendment would wound the IRA because they would change its perception, which is of fundamental necessity before it can be defeated.

Those steps would therefore send a clear signal to the IRA that its campaign of thuggery, murder and lies will not succeed in the short or long term. The foolish words of the Secretary of State will not be wiped out by more words. He has been wasting his time in trying to pull back from them since he first uttered them. No matter how wise or firm those words are, they will not suffice; only action will do the trick, and it must be taken as soon as possible.

Democracy means far more to me than blind insistence on every jot and tittle of the desires of a 51 per cent. majority. The word "democracy", if one looks it up in a dictionary, demands sensitivity to all minorities and a willingness by the majority in any elected Chamber to take into account the minority point of view, especially when deciding on a course of action of which they may not wholly be in favour. I know that 51 per cent. majorities seem to work well and brutally in this House, but it is not a wise policy in the long term. It is a pity that the Government so rarely follow the true meaning of democracy.

If we are to have peace and stability in Ulster, we should go down the course outlined by my party. If the Government have any sense they will not surrender control of the nation's finances to any hands, but rather will retain sovereignty and freedom to act as the needs of the nation dictate and not as others would try to dictate to us.

7 pm

Mr. Spencer Batiste (Elmet): The Gracious Speech states:

"My Government will continue to pursue firm financial policies designed to reduce inflation and foster the conditions necessary for sustained economic growth . . . and . . . will continue to work with our European partners to complete the single market; to enhance economic and monetary co-operation."

I should like to examine how we can best achieve those vital and interactive objectives, particularly in the context of our membership of the European Community.

We in Britain have a vigorous and robust political system. Some who have been watching our debates over the past week may say that it is too robust, but it changes only slowly. It follows behind economic and social change, and then only along clearly defined paths that are well enforced. Our partners have quite a different approach. They are comfortable with bold constitutional statements of objectives, some of which can be achieved only in the long term, if at all, and in some cases they live with patchy enforcement provisions. That difference of approach is a cause of frequent conflict and misunderstanding and often leads to important and essential debates on our future being reduced to divisive slogans, when in reality many of the differences are bridgeable.

The creation of the single market and stage 1 of the Delors report on economic and monetary union represent a response to existing needs. They have clearly defined objectives and procedures, and that responsive approach stimulates no symptoms of rejection from the British body politic. The single market and stage 1 of EMU are a "good thing." We press on with the detailed measures needed for implementation and are rightly critical of others who lag behind and impatient of their rhetoric, which we see as empty when it is not being delivered in the shape of firm measures and legislation.

Stages 2 and 3 involve the notoriously hazardous occupation of crystal-ball gazing. They seek to anticipate changes that are a long way off and inherently unpredictable. Because the debate is anticipatory rather than responsive, and because at this stage there can be no timetable attached to it, all our national rejection symptoms are triggered. The debate becomes a "bad thing" and we are hesitant about becoming involved in it or even in the more immediate issue of the exchange rate mechanism. We cannot afford to reduce those important matters to the language of "1066 and All That" and miss the opportunities to advance vital British national interests by a more flexible approach.

Of course the proposals for stages 2 and 3 are controversial; they could hardly be otherwise when we have yet to complete half the measures needed for 1992 or have even begun to address the implications of enlargement and events in eastern Europe. We should aim to separate the debate on economic union from that on monetary union. They do not have to run side by side, and many of the difficult controversies that arise within them can be addressed if they are treated separately. The alternative evolutionary approach for monetary union put forward—albeit rather belatedly—by the Government is a significant first step in this direction.

Good arguments demand good tactics as well. Sometimes we need to be firm even if we stand alone, but not so often that we are perceived as negative and isolated. Why say "no" to initiatives when saying "yes, but" at any early stage can often lead to achieving our objectives more effectively? Better still, why not be the promoters of new initiatives rather than respondents to the initiatives of others?

I and, I believe, many colleagues in the House are concerned that this Parliament is less effective than many others in its European role, but if we as parliamentarians feel that we are peripheral to European affairs, that is our fault and for us to put right. It is not the fault of the Community, and we should not vent our frustration upon it. If we are to be responsible as members of the Government, we must address ourselves to the question of how most effectively to exercise real power now and in the future and how to achieve democratic accountability throughout the system.

I certainly would not wish to encourage corporatist interventionism. Ron Todd may well consider coffee and croissants in Brussels an acceptable alternative now that beer and sandwiches are off the menu at No. 10, but it would be a damaging alternative, not just for Britain but for Europe at large.

All legislative decisions that can best be taken at national level should be. "Subsidiarity" is not just a convenient, if inelegant, label—it is the most effective route forward for many aspects of economic and employment policy, where market pressures will bring rapid convergence once the single market is complete.

Equally, some issues require Community action, and high on the list are those needed in our interest to complete the single market, to make it effective and to ensure that everybody is playing by the same rules. If we want others to support the measures that we regard as important, such as more open financial services, we must be sensitive also to the matters that they regard as important, particularly in the context of developing stable trading relationships and containing inflation within the exchange rate mechanism.

Against that background, we have to address as one of our highest priorities the potentially destabilising deterioration in our balance of trade over the past two years, especially with our Community partners. The statistics have looked very suspect for some time, and I hope that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor will tell us how his investigation of them is proceeding. Undoubtedly, whatever the validity of those statistics, they show a trend which must be reversed. The underlying causes of that trend are quite different from those in the 1970s, when vast chunks of United Kingdom industry were unprofitable and little was being done to put it right.

The director general of the CBI, John Banham, made an impressive opening speech to his conference last week and listed the factors which between them account for the entire deterioration in our trading balance over the past two years. I should like briefly to examine them because they are fundamental to considering the need for flexible tactics in Europe.

[Mr. Spencer Batiste]

The first was the inflationary upsurge in consumer spending. The Government have addressed that problem by their high interest rate policy. Painful though it is, it is the only solution available to us. I hope that no one will flirt with credit controls, which would be a disaster for this country. The imposition or attempt to impose ineffectual credit controls would fatally undermine our banks when they need all the support that they can to face world competition beyond 1992.

In any event, it cannot make sense to seek to solve a trade deficit in manufactured goods by creating a deficit in our invisible trade. Many of our business men look at the Community and at the way in which every other country from one end of the political spectrum to the other has benefited from membership of the exchange rate mechanism and ask, "Could we not benefit also from belonging to that mechanism sooner rather than later?"

The second item highlighted by John Banham was lower North sea oil earnings, as a result of the Piper Alpha disaster and other problems. That is being reversed and revenues will increase again next year, but nobody should take it for granted that oil exploration will continue indefinitely, whatever the tax climate. An Opposition committed to higher taxation would only drive away those who seek to explore the North sea for new oil resources.

The third item was the long-term weakness in our motor car industry. That matter is being addressed by huge inward investment from the world's major motor companies and especially the far-sighted Japanese who, despite the Labour party, recognise that Britain is the best place in Europe to make their products. In the coming decade, it is possible that we shall once again become a net exporter of motor cars. That is of great strategic significance to us. However, it reflects not just our internal domestic industrial environment, important though that is, but the fact that our investors regard our role in Europe as critical to their plans and we must never lose sight of that.

The fourth matter was the surge of imports of world-class machinery to re-equip our manufacturing industry. That is a good sign for the future, provided we can contain unit labour costs. It highlights other important matters as well. First, there is the unique vulnerability in Europe of United Kingdom industries to hostile takeovers as a consequence of the dominance of equity investment by our stock markets and the dominance in those markets of institutional investors obsessed by short-term pressures.

It is easy to blame restrictive practices in markets overseas or competition policy at home. Both are important, particularly as takeover activity will increase, so progress on a coherent European mergers policy is vital to us. The real core of our unique problem lies in the unwillingness of our banks to invest in their customers and in our taxation system, which still discriminates against the continuity of family businesses.

Many other comments could be made in the debate, but time runs out. We must learn from the experience of the past to be flexible in our tactics towards our partners and learn not to be bound by our traditional patterns but to look forward to opportunities in Europe and be willing to grasp them, whatever our philosophical difficulties may be.

7.6 pm

Mr. A. E. P. Duffy (Sheffield, Attercliffe): I welcome the reference by the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) to regional policy. I share his fear that it was neglected by the Chancellor. I should like to describe that concern through the vehicle of my region and that of my hon. Friend the Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Mr. Lofthouse), who is secretary of our Yorkshire group. I want to talk about the current programme of regeneration of our old industrial cities in Yorkshire, and to do so in the light of the Government's economic policy.

I remind the House of the pledges in the Queen's Speech: that the Government will work for "sustained economic growth" and will form a partnership "to regenerate our cities". Those two commitments are of great importance to our region and to the cities of Bradford, Hull, Leeds and Sheffield. Since the recession, there has been a steady and consistent recovery across the broad spectrum of industries in the region. Yorkshire's base is now more high-tech, more diversified and more efficient. Business in the region is in better shape to meet the challenge of the 1990s and beyond than anyone would have dared forecast at the beginning of this decade.

With its closeness to Europe and its excellent ports, Yorkshire is well placed to meet the opportunities from 1992 of the single European market. The Humber is growing more quickly as a trade route than any other United Kingdom estuary, and carries some 55 million tonnes of cargo annually. The Humber ports are backed up by an extensive motorway and road network system as well as rail links to the rest of Britain, and are thus strategically faced towards Europe, with its 320 million single market customers.

Yorkshire's traditional industries of chemicals, wool textiles and coal and steel are also poised to make major contributions to exports. In recent years, significant investment by most of Yorkshire's chemical companies has ensured that Yorkshire chemicals will continue to play a significant role not only regionally but internationally. The United Kingdom's wool textile industry, with its roots firmly in West Yorkshire, is on course to achieve a remarkable £700 million export earnings record this year. This will easily maintain its place as one of our top five exporting industries and the country's largest exporter to Japan. Coal and steel are making all-out efforts to improve productivity and efficiency, in desperate attempts not only to preserve domestic markets but to win new ones overseas.

That is not bad for a region which is still regarded as a struggling relic of our industrial past. That impression is as much a myth as the cloth cap and clogs image of centres such as Leeds and Sheffield. Along with the rest of the Yorkshire economy, those old industrial cities have geared themselves to restructuring in the 1980s, with a view to regeneration.

Let me repeat that Yorkshire is poised to provide that incremental industrial capacity of which the British economy is clearly in such dire need. The last thing with which Yorkshire can afford to be saddled at this crucial stage is a regime of continuing high interest rates, a depleted industrial base and an investment downturn—in other words, current Government economic policy. No region is doing more to try to assist this Government, to pick itself up and to gear its economy to the challenge of the single European market than Yorkshire and Humberside, and no region is doing more to regenerate its cities.

The pace of urban development is being set by Government-created corporations in Leeds and Sheffield. They are charged with the task of breathing new life into districts blighted by years of industrial decline and dereliction. The Sheffield development corporation works closely with the Sheffield city council, which has also promoted regeneration with imaginative skill and vigour. Both have arrived at a unique concordat which amplifies the new partnership. All that has been achieved despite a cut in the regional aid budget of no less than 72 per cent. in real terms since this Government came to power in 1979. Partly as a consequence, economic growth in the south over the same period has been 35·6 per cent., compared with 16·6 per cent. in the north.

The economy faces two years on the brink of recession with investment slumping and profits standing still, according to a gloomy set of forecasts published by the Confederation of British Industry yesterday. In separate forecasts, Lloyds bank said yesterday that the economy will hover on the brink of recession next year as high interest rates take their toll. That raises the question whether the slowdown will turn into outright recession with a sharp drop in output, as occurred in 1979-81. However, the inflation problem is not as severe as then, and the world economy is in better shape.

The balance of payments position, as we have heard almost ad nauseam during this debate, is considerably worse and the British economy is vulnerable at any time to a collapse of confidence among overseas investors. There is a danger that Britain is facing a structural deficit problem such as has plagued the United States in the 1980s. It may take several years of low potential growth in Britain before the deficit disappears.

There are some genuinely encouraging features about the latest trade figures. For the first time since the spring, as the Chancellor confirmed in his opening speech, the volume of exports has been growing faster than the volume of imports, but that more hopeful trend must lose some of its shine because of the continuing deterioration in the terms of trade. Exports, happily, have been rising faster than imports in value terms.

The Chancellor has used the Autumn Statement to play for more time. He has said nothing about the mix of fiscal and monetary policy next year, but he is only too well aware that real interest rates are the highest in recorded western history. Moreover, demand is at its weakest since 1980-81. What is he going to do about that nightmare scenario? Many of us posed that question to him this afternoon, and it is only fair to say that he was most generous in giving way and in his responses. I hope that he will seek the earliest possible relaxation, bearing in mind the lags, which may mean that it will take time to get the economy going again.

I hope that, in his first Budget next April, the Chancellor will further raise public investment, especially in areas that help to expand industrial capacity. Fiscal policy is crucial to the hopes of getting interest rates down. I also hope that the Chancellor will cut taxes, especially those that bear on costs and prices such as employers' national insurance contributions, thereby helping to bring about a fall in inflation.

Recalling the earlier reference by the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup to regional policy, I appeal to the Chancellor above all to restore support for regional policy and thereby to restore confidence in regions such as Yorkshire and Humberside and in their cities, especially Sheffield and Leeds.

7.14 pm

Mr. Tim Smith (Beaconsfield): I was most impressed by the speech of the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Duffy), because he gave a fair picture of the current position and I was encouraged to learn of the progress that has been made in his region of Yorkshire and Humberside, of the restructuring of the past 10 years and of the determination of the people there to try to improve matters. I recognise that 1990 will be a difficult year and that high interest rates will cause problems.

First, I welcome the Queen's Speech on behalf of my constituents, who will especially appreciate the Bill to control pollution and waste. My constituency is attractive and people want to preserve the character of the environment; the Bill will help that cause. Secondly, I welcome more generally the Bills to restructure the coal industry, to sell the Crown Suppliers and other parts of the Property Services Agency, to develop training and enterprise councils and to reform trade union law, because those four measures will contribute to the more efficient working of the economy.

The media concentrate on the short term, but in a debate such as this, we need to recognise that the way in which the Government can help most is to make long-term structural changes to the economy which will improve its efficient running. That has been the whole objective of the Government's economic policy for the past 10 years. We have seen many improvements on the supply side. As a result, the sustainable rate of economic growth in the United Kingdom has increased considerably over the past 10 years and the performance of British industry has been transformed in the process.

Today, British industry can manage without Government restrictions such as those that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor described earlier. The most important achievement is the huge increase in industrial profitability over the past 10 years—we have returned to the levels of the 1960s. That is important, because the principal source of investment is retained profits and most companies now have substantial retained profits with which they can invest. Productivity has also improved as a result of increased investment.

The other day I noticed an article in CBI News in which the director-general of the CBI pointed out that, on CBI figures, productivity increased by 6·5 per cent. in 1987, by 6·2 per cent. in 1988 and by 6·9 per cent. in 1989, and was expected to increase by a further 7 per cent. in 1990. Those productivity gains have come about largely as a result of the huge increase in investment. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor was right to point out that it is the quality of investment that matters. The acid test is whether British industry is more profitable and the answer is yes, considerably more, because investment has been extremely effective. Exports have also increased: by 11 per cent. in the past year and by 40 per cent. since 1985 as a result of that increased investment.

Today, the sustainable rate of economic growth in the economy has reached between 3 and 4 per cent. However, the difficulty is that, over the past couple of years, economic growth has been well in excess of that figure and, as a result, we face the problem of inflation. The reduction of inflation, therefore, must continue to be the No. 1 economic priority. The most effective way to combat inflation is by the use of interest rates, painful though that may be, because they curb demand. Therefore, I hope that my right hon. Friend will keep interest rates at present levels for as long as is necessary to bring inflation down. However, he could emphasise less the aim of keeping interest rates at their present level to defend the value of sterling. It is noticeable that, over the past month, there has been a 4 per cent. fall in the value of sterling. We can afford to cope with that and on balance, it will be an advantage to British industry and to British exports. The inflationary consequences of that devaluation will then be minimal.

[Mr. Tim Smith]

In 1990, the British economy will start to come back on course. The rate of investment will slow down from recent high levels, but the position is different from that of 1980-81. As a result—I base my assumption on many discussions with manufacturers in my constituency and elsewhere—the slowdown will be temporary. Towards the end of 1990, confidence will be restored and in 1991 there will be a sharp recovery.

In the meantime, what sort of Budget should the Chancellor of the Exchequer introduce in March next year? It should be a budget for business. Although I welcome his recent renewed commitment to reduce the rate of income tax to 20 per cent., perhaps next year is not the time to do that.

I am sorry that my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West (Sir A. Grant) is not present. Unlike him, I believe that it would be inappropriate to increase the mortgage tax relief ceiling above £30,000. That would be an inefficient way of helping first-time buyers. Many people have no need of such help, including myself. They have no need of additional relief. If we want to help first-time buyers with cost of buying a house—I understand my hon. Friend's objectives—it would be more effective to raise the ceiling for stamp duty. The Treasury should not increase the £30,000 tax relief limit.

As I said, next year's Budget should be a Budget for business. There are three principal business taxes. The first is national insurance contributions. When the Government Actuary's report is published in a few days, much of the fiscal surplus will be contained within the national insurance fund. As unemployment has fallen substantially during the past two years, the fund must be in substantial surplus. The rate of contribution has not been reduced to the same extent as they were increased when unemployment was rising. Next year's Budget may be an opportunity to reduce the employer's national insurance contribution, and thereby the costs of the payroll.

The second business tax is corporation tax. I would not wish to interfere with the changes which my right hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Lawson) introduced in 1984. Although the reforms were much criticised at the time, there are now far fewer tax distortions in the system and investment decisions are taken for the right reasons, not for tax reasons. In the subsequent five years, we saw a huge increase in the yield from corporation tax, and today it stands at well above £20 billion.

The Treasury should perhaps consider a change in the arrangements for leasing. The leasing industry has been a great success. Today, about 30 per cent. of capital investment is financed on lease. However, there is a penalty for leasing exporters. People who export leasing finance receive only 10 per cent. writing-down allowance on the asset, compared with 25 per cent. available on all other assets. A change in the arrangements might encourage exports by making it easier to finance them by leasing.

The third tax on business is the business rate. At present it is difficult to judge the impact of the uniform business rate, because the valuations list will not be published until January. Until then, it will be difficult for businesses to plan and budget, because they do not know what their position will be. Clearly, there will be large increases for some firms, probably in the commercial and retail sectors. I welcome the transitional protection for small firms. By the time the Chancellor drafts the Budget, the position should be clearer, and I hope that he will not renounce further help if it proves necessary.

As I said, although 1990 will be a difficult year for the British economy, it is unrealistic to compare it with 1980-81. The economy is much stronger now, and its capacity for recovery is much greater. I believe that, towards the end of 1990, confidence in the economy will be restored and in 1991 there will be a sharp upturn in growth.

7.24 pm

Mr. Denzil Davies (Llanelli): This is the 11th Gracious Speech that we have debated since the Prime Minister was elected in 1979. She and her Government were elected principally because they persuaded the British public that they could and would conquer inflation and claimed that they could arrest and reverse Britain's economic decline. Ten years later, after much strife, upheaval and damage, the Government's economic policies have failed and inflation has not been conquered: we have the highest rate of inflation of all our industrial competitors. The relative decline of Britain's industrial economy has accelerated. We have been overtaken by Italy in the European league of national wealth and another five years of Thatcherism could see us overtaken by Spain.

In 1979 we had a surplus on our balance of trade in manufactured goods. This year we have a deficit of £17 billion. We have a surplus with few countries, either inside or outside the EEC. Recently, I read in the Financial Times that we now have a balance of trade deficit even in putty. So much for the Prime Minister's economic miracle. She likes to peddle the rhetoric of thrift, prudence and financial rectitude but she has achieved and created their very antithesis. We are a country of consumers and spenders, of borrowers and importers, a country using borrowed money to live off the fruits of production of the ingenuity and productivity of other nations.

Some of us remember that in 1979 the Prime Minister and her colleagues were certain that they knew the causes of inflation and had all the answers. Inflation was caused by what I might call a triad of elements—high public expenditure, high public borrowing and a failure to control the money supply. In the simplistic jargon so favoured by the ideological Right, all that was compendiously described as printing too much money. So public expenditure was cut, causing great damage to public services. Public borrowing was limited, with devastating consequences for public investment, the infrastructure, roads and railways. Yet, after all that misery, we still have the highest rate of inflation of all our industrial competitors. In many cases it is higher by far than that of countries in western Europe which have better public services, infrastructure, roads and railways and spend more on public investment.

Control of the money supply has been a complete shambles. From 1979 to 1981, the money supply was too tightly controlled. Then, when the right hon. Member for Blaby took over, it became too loose. It has been a shambles because of a contradiction at the heart of Government policy. The Prime Minister believes in a free market, apparently in almost anything and everything, including money.

In the pursuit of that belief and that policy, the Government abruptly abolished exchanged controls and allowed the banks, building societies and financial institutions to compete freely for money in the market place. Britain's financial system, which was one of the most open in the world in 1979, was made far more open by the changes and the free market in money which the Government instigated. A free market in money is often not compatible with tight control of the money supply. Because of that, the only way the Government can seek to control the money supply is by cripplingly high interest rates.

The right hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Lawson) eventually came to realise that. He realised that he did not have many instruments to control the money supply. He looked around for some other lodestar to control growth in the money supply and found it in the exchange rate. That is one reason why he wanted to join the exchange rate mechanism. He tried to shadow the deutschmark, but that ended in disaster. The Prime Minister would not even allow him that benchmark for monetary policy.

The Prime Minister not only believes in a free market in pounds in the domestic market, but apparently in a free market in pounds in foreign exchange markets. With a balance of payments deficit of £20 billion, that means devaluation and nothing else. We have seen devaluation of 4 per cent. in the past few weeks and we shall see much more of it in the coming months. For all her rhetoric about fiscal rectitude, sound money and a strong pound, the Prime Minister is a devaluer. The markets have tumbled to it and the City knows it.

The Government's economic policy is in tatters. All that they can do is to limp—dare I say it—like a lame duck towards the next election, hoping and praying that high interest rates will reduce inflation just a little, that the devaluation abroad and the recession at home will reduce the trade deficit just a little, and that as a consequence interest rates may come down just a little. They also hope that the inflationary consequences of devaluation will not appear in the figures until after the next election.

Perhaps the Prime Minister still believes in her economic policies, but I do not think that most of the Cabinet do. I also do not believe that the City and the financial markets believe in them any more—certainly the British public do not. That is why the Prime Minister has already lost the next election.

7.32 pm

Mr. Matthew Carrington (Fulham): I warmly welcome the commitment in the Gracious Speech to continuing and increasing the battle against inflation. For all the pain caused by high interest rates, inflation is by far the worst scourge that can attack the country, and it must be fought at every opportunity.

Nobody pretends that high interest rates are painless. They do serious damage and hurt home owners, borrowers and, particularly, small businesses which rely on bank debt to finance their activities. Inflation does more damage to the economy and is more painful to old-age pensioners on fixed incomes, those with savings and those whose salaries cannot rise as rapidly as prices. Inflation destroys companies and hurts exports, particularly companies which export. Although inflation eventually affects the exchange rate and will eventually produce a devaluation of the currency, devaluation is erratic, slow and unpredictable. Devaluation rarely manages to ensure that the competitiveness of British manufacturing companies is sustained. In the end, everybody loses with inflation.

There is no alternative to interest rates as a way of controlling inflation. The House has often debated whether there are alternatives and the only suggestion is that somehow we can persuade banks to control credit and stop lending. In practice there are few ways to stop banks lending money. It has been suggested that we should talk nicely to them or remind them that it is not in accordance with the Government's economic policy, so if they wish to remain friendly with the Government, they should stop lending. The vast majority of banks that can operate in our market are not susceptible to those pressures, largely because they make money from lending, so they are not easily persuaded to give up that lucrative method of increasing their profits.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) suggested that we could control banks by threatening to remove their banking licence. Even if we could control them, many banks are outside the control of the Bank of England and the banking licence. We would have to rely on central banks being prepared to exercise similar controls on the banks within their jurisdiction, and it would not be possible to persuade them to do that. Nor would it be a sufficient way of producing the right effects.

It has been suggested that we could stop banks lending money through special deposits. The practice of requiring banks to place special deposits increases interest rates still further. It forces up interest rates to limit the desire to borrow and the demand for lending. That would have little effect on the totality of lending, if demand continues. In other words, it is similar to the Government increasing interest rates in the first place.

Without the reintroduction of exchange controls there can be no effective sanctions against the banks. Some right hon. and hon. Gentlemen suggest in their amendment to the Loyal Address that the reintroduction of exchange controls would cause us considerable problems with the European Community. The other effective sanction would be the imposition of tough withholding taxes on those who borrow. That, too, would cause us considerable problems with the EC and our international treaties.

The only other way of reducing liquidity in the economy is by raising direct taxes. To produce a sharp enough effect, the basic rate of income tax would have to be raised sharply. That would cause far more damage and be far more dangerous as a weapon than the increase in interest rates from which we have all suffered.

[Mr. Matthew Carrington]

All the signs are that the economic medicine is working in the domestic economy and that inflation is on the way down. All the lead indicators point to a pattern of sustained economic growth which will allow a return to sensible economic growth. Our interest rates of 15 per cent. are probably not sufficiently high for the external value of sterling. We are in the classic exchange rate trap. Interest rates are high enough for the domestic economy but arguably not sufficiently high for the external economy.

Short-term attitudes and exchange rate management are misleading since foreign exchange markets tend to be volatile and swing on emotion as much as on the economic realities of the country of the currency being traded. It is misleading to look at the exchange rate at any given point as a measure of how markets are viewing the currency. The inflationary pressures arising from the recent devaluation will undoubtedly be bad, although some commentators have exaggerated the extent of the problem.

Perhaps the present value of sterling against the deutschmark will give us a chance to re-examine the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system. Perhaps we should be considering whether the present ERM and EMS will be suitable, given the new conditions emerging in Europe. Events in eastern Europe have certainly changed the external position of the European Community and will dramatically change Germany's position within it.

Through its intended ties with East Germany, West Germany will gain cheap labour and a large unexploited market with an almost insatiable demand for the goods that it can produce. Moreover, that market will be tied to West Germany's apron strings by strong emotional bonds. I believe that that will strengthen the deutschmark still further, and that will start to blow the exchange rate mechanism further apart if the necessary changes are not made sooner rather than later.

The Italian Government are already making noises to the effect that they are unhappy with the control that the Bundesbank exercises on European monetary policy. The Italians' doubts can only get worse and should be echoed by the rest of Europe. The British Government should seek an opportunity to enter discussions with other members of the European Community to decide whether we cannot dump the Delors plan and substitute better proposals for monetary co-operation more adaptable to the new challenges that we face in Europe.

7.41 pm

Mr. Jim Sillars (Glasgow, Govan): On 16 November 1985, the Prime Minister made a revealing statement when a senior Conservative colleague went to plead the case on behalf of the then Tory devolutionists. She said:

"I am an English nationalist, and never you forget it."

We in Scotland have had cause not to forget it. There is no question but that the Queen's Speech is an English nationalist's speech, which fails to acknowledge in any sensible way the extent of the economic and social crisis that the people of Scotland face.

Because time is limited, I shall take just one example to show the fault that lies with the English Tory Government—the death blow that they have allowed Sir Robert Scholey, chairman of British Steel, to aim at the heart of the Scottish economy. I refer to three plants in particular—Ravenscraig, Dalzell and Clydesdale tubeworks, which employ between 4,000 and 4,500 people. British Steel has pursued a deliberate policy of under-investment in Scotland. Since 1983, it has invested £580 million in steel plants, of which Ravenscraig got £16 million. In the current investment programme, £83 million is earmarked for Lackenby, £40 million for Scunthorpe, £54 million for Llanwern and £106, million for Port Talbot. Scotland is scraping along at the bottom. Schemes currently being considered for approval would cost £350 million, but not one pound of it would be earmarked for Scotland.

Clydesdale's output is mainly for offshore construction. I have listened with amusement to hon. Members lecturing us today about the importance of the cash that has flowed from the North sea and saying that the next decade will be very different from the last. In terms of development and development values, that is bunk. According to the Scottish Development Agency, a pretty reasonable organisation, in the next decade the development work in the North sea will be worth 10 times as much as the development work involved in the Channel tunnel in terms of construction and related engineering orders. In the next five years, £27 billion is earmarked for development. In the next three or four years, 46 platforms are to be built using 740,000 tonnes of steel—and that does not include the pipelines that will be required to service the development when it comes on stream.

Scotland is the only nation ever to discover oil and actually become poorer, at the hands of an English Tory Government. One third of the Scottish people are living in poverty according to the official definition. The Government privatised British Steel and gave Scholey and his anti-Scottish mates open licence with their anti-Scottish bias, to pursue malicious policies against the men at Ravenscraig, Dalzell and Clydesdale. It is not because those men have not worked well—they have broken records in terms of production and freedom from strikes and have done an enormous amount of work at a plant which badly needs investment. It is the men's work that has overcome the technical problems associated with steel production in those areas, but the malicious bias of Scholey and company has been directed to undermining that work.

If Ravenscraig, Dalzell and Clydesdale go, there will be a domino effect down the Clyde and across to the east of Scotland. Reputable economists have predicted that if we lose the Scottish steel industry we shall lose not just the 4,000 to 4,500 jobs in that industry but about 15,000 to 20,000 related jobs.

That is the potentially devastating prospect for the Scottish economy—all because the Government privatised British Steel and gave Scholey a gun to point north to destroy the industry which lies at the heart of our economy. Ironically, if Scholey and his friends have their way, not only will a nation that discovered oil have become poorer but a nation in whose jurisdiction and waters sits one of the largest developments in terms of demand for steel will not have the capacity to meet that demand and its able and skilled steel workers will be on the dole. That is Scotland's indictment of the English Tory Government and why the Queen of England in Downing street is so detested north of the border.

7.47 pm

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): As we move towards 8 December and the summit at which new developments towards a federal Europe will be discussed, we should reflect on the concerted attempts that have been made to undermine the position of this House over the past few months and years. The activities of President Mitterrand and Chancellor Kohl are quite understandable in terms of their countries' economies but they are wholly irrelevant to what is happening in the United Kingdom.

I would not wish to push them too far, but there are some parallels to be drawn between what is happening in Europe in the run-up to 8 December and events in the mid to late 1930s. The context may be very different but in both cases there has been a threat to the future of the United Kingdom. A concerted attempt is being made to undermine the ability of the House to determine its own economic and social priorities, and effectively, that undermines the purpose, objective and efficacy of debates such as this.

I have been given numerous notes and briefings on the state of the British economy. Chancellor Kohl and President Mitterrand seem determined that we should accept the binding rules proposed by Mr. Delors—who I believe is coming here on Friday. If that happens, we shall no longer be able to determine a basis on which our economy can function at all independently or even reasonably flexibly.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): Surely the treaty of Rome and the Single European Act preclude the independent decision making that the hon. Gentleman is talking about?

Mr. Cash: That is a perfect illustration of the need for greater understanding and information about the manner in which the treaty of Rome has operated. Up to and including the Single European Act, there has been adequate opportunity for co-operation. I believe that what we should be doing, and what we are doing on behalf of Britain is to ensure that there is some flexibility, so that we are not bound hand and foot to what a panel of central bankers determines. We should also ensure that we are not bound by the concerted attempts of other countries to make their economic policies prevail at the expense of ours.

In the original treaty of Rome, in the articles that deal with economic and monetary co-operation, the word "co-operation" appears and it is carefully preserved in the Single European Act. However, now they are trying to move the goal posts. As President Mitterrand said on 17 October, they do not merely want economic and monetary union, as opposed to co-operation, but political union. That is the basis upon which the new federalism is being constructed.

That is no joke. After 20 years of automatic progression by stealth, we find that we have blown their cover during the past year. In effect, we are now being threatened that, if we do not go along with something that is not in the treaty—contrary to what the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) has just said—but a new set of rules, and we will be marginalised into one of the outer concentric circles of Europe. That is what is being devised by Delors and others. We will no longer have any control over Britain's economic policy.

Perhaps the Opposition are waiting to see what we do at the summit on 8 December. However, during the debate on economic and monetary union a few weeks ago, hon. Members on both sides of the House agreed that we would not pursue stages two and three of the Delors plan. I expect that we will resist the attempts to take us down the federal route, despite the political difficulties posed by the threat.

However, we still have a major problem. Under the present Government's policy we have effectively reconstructed our economy since 1979. In the early 1970s we threw away a golden chance, when we had the opportunity, to make certain decisions. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has been prepared, during the last few years, to take those decisions which were ducked at the time. However, the challenge to us as a nation, and to our will power, is the need to increase productivity, quality and saving, as they are necessary to put us back into competition with our rivals in Europe. The management and work force of Britain, aided by a structure that can be provided by the Government, are the only people who are able to produce the goods for the benefit of the British people.

Let us consider France and West Germany, where there is massive state aid. We have the recent example of Renault, which is a state-owned company that has had to withdraw from the position it had adopted—presumably with the full knowledge and connivance of the French Government who provided massive state aid.

Italy is doing the same. We know about that from figures recently produced by the Commission. The percentage of state aid in Britain is rapidly declining. However, other countries in the European Community are engaged on a policy to get inside the rules before 1992 bites.

West German companies have increased investment in Britain by as much as 200 per cent. in the past few months. For example, there has just been an agreed merger between Morgan Grenfell and the Deutsche Bank.

There have been massive increases in the amount of money made available to the southern parts of Italy, through the structural fund. The system is being abused and that is combined with massive fraud, yet the system provides an opportunity for a strong, liberalised, deregulated economy.

Britain will do well, but we have to take the opportunities open to us. We must be vigilant and ensure that other member states do not take us for a ride.

7.57 pm

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): I congratulate the right hon. Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major)—who, alas, is not here at the moment—on his appointment as Chancellor of the Exchequer at the Treasury, and as juvenile lead to the Prime Minister in the Cabinet.

As I listened to the right hon. Gentleman today, I was reminded of the assertion of George Jean Nathan;

"politics is the diversion of trivial men who when they succeed at it become important in the eyes of even more trivial men behind them".

That is a little unfair. I shall analyse, in a moment, the view of the Chancellor that he is unfit for the job—and there are others who agree with him.

The recent Whitehall farce at the Treasury has its more serious side. It has forced us to re-examine our understanding of the English language. When the previous Chancellor was driven from office, we had to redefine words such as "brilliant" and "unassailable". Now the closest friends of the new Chancellor and his most fervent admirers describe him as dull, boring, ignorant and grey. Therefore we will have to redefine such words as "loyalty" and "hagiography."

[Mr. Brian Sedgemore]

Quite the most fulsome praise that I have heard about the Chancellor came from a neutral observer on "The Money Programme" last Sunday week. He said:

"The Chancellor has a lot to learn in many policy areas".

I suppose that the alternative view is that the Chancellor has a lot to learn in every policy area.

One thing worries everyone: who is in charge at the Treasury? To judge from the 4 per cent. depreciation in the pound that has occurred in the few weeks since the Chancellor took office, the dealers on the foreign exchanges do not believe that anyone is in charge. Phillips and Drew, the city experts, take a rather different view. In their bulletin, describing the Chancellor's policies as grim and grisly, they argue that the right hon. Gentleman is in the pocket of his civil servants. Bill Martin, their leading economist, puts it rather delphically:

"More than Mr. Lawson, the current Chancellor is likely to be sensitive to the natural fiscal conservatism of his Treasury officials."

If there are Conservative Members present who hope for tax cuts, perhaps I should read them another sentence:

"It is probably right then to think in terms of a mean Budget, incorporating perhaps an implicit tax increase of £1-2 bn".

I do not agree with the foreign exchange dealers or with the City experts. I believe that the power in the Treasury still resides at No. 10. Why did the Chancellor spend last evening at No. 11, which I understand is not customary? I understand that he does not normally sleep there. I am told that he woke up last night in a cold sweat, turned towards No. 10 and, in a whispered cry, was heard to mutter:

"Oh! Why does the wind blow upon me so wild?
Is it because I am nobody's child—Margaret?"

We know that the Chancellor is the son of a trapeze artist. As such, he will know that, when a child falls from dizzy heights, it has a hard landing. The Chancellor's non-oil forecast of three quarters of 1 per cent. for the economy next year means that all the rest of us are in for a hard landing. On television on Sunday, and here at the Dispatch Box today, the Chancellor told us that he is a monetarist with a one-eyed view of the economy. With his one eye, he sees only one problem—inflation. And he has only one weapon to deal with it—interest rates. His sadly misplaced approach reminds me of Mr. Kremlin in Disraeli's "Lothair":

"Mr. Kremlin was distinguished for ignorance for he had only one idea—and that was wrong."

The famous economist John Maynard Keynes was certainly not a monetarist. He has been dead for a long time, yet in his "Essays in Persuasion", written in the inter-war years, he had the prescience to anticipate the recent shambolic hysteria at the Treasury. He said:

"The Economic Problem, as one may call it . . . is nothing but a frightful muddle, a transitory and unnecessary muddle".

Did not the Chancellor's appointment to his new office arise out of a transitory and unnecessary muddle? It was unnecessary because the Prime Minister put her pride before her country; it was transitory because, even if the Chancellor stays in office for two years until the next general election, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) will take over from him.

The Chancellor talks to us on television and in the House today about sound finance and threatens, as though it has some sort of macho symbolism, to raise interest rates to 16 per cent. The Keynesian retort—

"'Sound' finance may be right psychologically—but it is a depressing influence"— is as apposite today as ever it was.

The recession that is inherent in the Autumn Statement is depressing, as indeed are the Chancellor's words. Delving into deep and difficult psychoanalytic theory, not to mention sado-masochism, he tells us that, if the policy is not hurting, it is not working. But the people who will be hurt are not the Chancellor's own class but the working people of Britain.

Behind this ludicrous language and the pain and despair of recession lies a profound and tragic ignorance of economic management on the part of the Chancellor. When he made his Autumn Statement on 15 November, I asked him why the warranted rate of growth in 1989 was less than it was in 1979. As his answer moved from guff to persiflage, it was clear that he did not have a clue what I was talking about. It is a bit like the neurosurgeon, taken before the medical disciplinary tribunal, saying, when asked why he operated on the patient's leg, "Nobody told me that the brain was in the head."

We should have realised what was going on when the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee heard the Chancellor's pathetic outburst on 3 February 1988. You know how it is, Mr. Deputy Speaker when, in this place, we hide our true selves, we bottle it up inside and we pull a mask over our face—until there is a cathartic event and we have to blurt out the truth and a little tear rolls down our cheek. That is what happened to the Chancellor on 3 February. I shall quote him extensively.

I asked him what would happen to public expenditure if we had a disastrous balance of payments crisis. He flipped and refused to answer the question. He answered:

"While undoubtedly you were at university learning to become an academic, I was outside digging roads learning how to earn my living".

I yield to no one in my admiration for those versed in the theory and practice of digging roads. I would even be prepared to accept that, as an economist, the Chancellor makes a first-class navvy but, summoning up all my reserves of logic, I have to say that being good at digging roads is not being good at being Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. James Hill (Southampton, Test): Oh dear!

Mr. Sedgemore: Yes, it will be "Oh dear" as I quote from the Chancellor again. He then made two statements which, on the Richter scale of economic imbecility, have never been exceeded. He said:

"I also know that there is no imminent balance of payments crisis".

To add insult to injury to that estimable Committee, he said:

"I simply observe beyond that that if you think that any projections that anybody has produced of any possible payments deficits in the last few weeks represent remotely a crisis in terms of the percentage of GDP compared with what we saw year after year during the 1970s, then I am extraordinarily surprised that you should make that comment."

History has recorded that I was right and that the Chancellor was wrong.

I have examined the figures in some detail. In the 1970s, there were balance of payments deficits in six years. But not even in 1974, when oil prices trebled, did the balance of payments deficit reach 4 per cent. of GDP, as it will this year. There were deficits in four other years in the 1970s when Labour was in power—in 1975, when the balance of payments deficit was 1·4 per cent. of GDP, in 1976 when it was 0·8 per cent. of GDP, in 1977 and in 1979. When it comes to a balance of payments deficit, this Chancellor, with deficits of 3·2 per cent. of GDP in 1988 and of 4 per cent. in 1989, is in a mega-league of his own.

Every hon. Member knows what the warranted rate of economic growth is, but because the Chancellor does not, I shall define it for him. It is the sustainable rate of economic growth that Britain can have without moving into a balance of payments deficit. From 1950 to 1970, the warranted rate of economic growth varied between 2·5 per cent. and 3 per cent. of GDP. In the mid-1970s, because of the oil crisis, it fell to 1·5 per cent. In the 1980s, because we found North sea oil, it rose to 3 per cent. Recent simulations have shown that the warranted rate of growth is between 0·5 per cent. and 1 per cent. of GDP. That means that there has been a tragic decline in our manufacturing base. The proof of that lies in the Chancellor's forecast that, in 1990, with virtually no growth and a recession, there will be a £15 billion balance of payments deficit.

That will not end in 1990 or in 1991. The Chancellor is hopeless, helpless and hapless. No wonder we shall be voting against him tonight.

8.10 pm

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim (Amber Valley): I shall deal first with what I call the manufacturing myth—the myth that Labour Members are the true friends of manufacturing industry. Some commentators paint a picture in which all the recent economic growth that we have enjoyed has been in the retail and service sectors and that none has been in manufacturing. Some say that the supposedly great manufacturing industries of the 1960s and 1970s are all dead or dying. Opposition Members have consistently claimed that, under Conservative rule, manufacturing output has fallen.

The stark fact is that manufacturing output fell under the last Labour Government. Under the Conservatives, manufacturing output has risen sharply, particularly in the past few years, and last year it rose by 4 per cent. Much of the industry in the 1970s was grossly uncompetitive and almost dead on its feet. Not only do we have more manufacturing industry now than we had under Labour, but it is more competitive and in better shape—[Interruption.] Labour Members laugh, but I will give examples to prove my point.

Who would have given British Steel a chance in 1979? Who would have given a chance to our aerospace industry or even to ICI, which had the reputation of being a sleepy, inefficient giant depending largely on our old colonies for its markets? Yet last year, for the first time ever, Britain's pharmaceutical companies exported more than those of any other country.

Our aerospace producing industry recently overtook France to become the world's largest, after the United States and the Soviet Union. Many people in my constituency, including Labour supporters, tell me frankly that industry in the area in the 1970s depended largely on inefficient and uneconomic pits or on old industries which were on their last legs. My constituency has seen a huge growth in manufacturing industrial output and there is now a widespread competitive manufacturing sector ranging from engineering to carpets and from consumer products to electronics.

Just outside my constituency, another of the industrial near basket cases of the 1970s, Rolls-Royce, now has a record order book for its aero engines. At almost every airport in the world one sees new planes with Rolls-Royce engines. My hon. Friends and I are extremely proud of a record such as that, even if Labour Members are grudging about it.

There is no denying that there has been some mismanagement of the demand side of the economy. That mismanagement has been due not to tax cuts, as is often claimed—such cuts injected only £4 billion extra into the economy last year—but to low interest rates in 1987 and 1988, which injected 10 times as much demand into the economy—£40 billion in all.

Those demand side problems should not blind us to the fact that the supply side of the economy has been producing record levels of wealth and output in recent years. Proof of that lies in the fact that, while the demand explosion has undoubtedly meant that imports and inflation have risen, our domestic output has risen sharply as well. The reasons for that enormous improvement in domestic output are better productivity and more competitive industry which has enjoyed an investment boom.

Investment now going into British industry is far better than that which occurred in the 1970s. At that time, investment was often directed by Government into unviable projects such as the creation of ludicrous and unsustainable levels of capacity in the steel industry.

There are other, more positive, though little noticed, signs which bode well for our prospects in the coming few years. For example, our share of world exports, which fell sharply in the 1970s, has stabilised in the last decade. Exports were up sharply in the last year and, in volume terms, they rose by 10 per cent. over the last quarter.

Our exports are now growing far faster than are our imports—[Interruption.] That may not give Labour Members much pleasure, but I have stated the facts. Our export performance is good now. That shows that our economy is more competitive and is responding well to increased demand. Perhaps that does not amount to the economic miracle that some were unwisely claiming some years ago, but it shows that our industrial problems are not nearly so grim as Opposition Members suggest.

Perhaps there never was a real chance of solving in a decade all our deep-seated and long-term industrial problems, many of which go back many years and are the responsibility of many Governments, as hon. Members in all parts of the House will accept. Even so, we now need, above all, a continuation of our successful supply side policies to consolidate the improvements of the last decade. An area where improvement is vital is the education system, which must supply the skilled, trained and educated people whom industry needs.

Conservative policies have produced more wealth and more manufacturing output than ever before. We should not be blinded to that fact by short-term demand problems. To deny that our policies are working risks a return to old-style, pre-Thatcherite policies. It would be ironic if, at the time when every other country, including many Communist states, are moving to more free market systems, we should return to a more controlled, centralised, regulated economy.

[Mr. Phillip Oppenheim]

We have recently been hearing more a term which, thankfully, we have not heard for a decade. It is "industrial strategy". If we can learn lessons for the future by looking at the past, we can learn much by looking at previous attempts at industrial strategies. Consider, for example, Jaguar, which is topical today. The Government have been accused by the Opposition of allowing Jaguar, supposedly the jewel of the British car industry, to be sold off to foreigners, preventing it from developing into a major independent force in world car markets.

The battle for Jaguar to be a major independent force in world markets was lost not in the last decade but in the two decades before that. When we took office, Jaguar made a paltry 15,000 cars per year. Last year it made more than three times that number. It has been brought back from the brink by Conservative policies. Jaguar was taken to the brink by earlier Labour policies, for it was an industrial strategy of the Wilson Government which decreed that the British car industry should merge.

Industrial strategy and regional policy ordained that the British car industry should build plants in unsuitable places which meant that bodies and engines had to be shunted around the country from the midlands to Bathgate, and to Speke and back again. An industrial policy in the 1970s determined that the volume car business should bleed Jaguar and Land Rover white, so that for years those companies did not have enough investment capital.

That was why the good bits of the old British Leyland empire, such as Jaguar, were virtual industrial write-offs by 1979, making a few thousand cars in out-of-date factories with appalling labour relations and no pride in the job. Opposition Members need not take my word for that. George Simpson, currently the managing director of the Rover group, who worked in that group in the 1960s and 1970s, talking about the late 1960s, observed:

> "It was a radically different company years ago . . . riddled with archaic practices. My greatest initial experience when I joined the company was trying to find out which level of canteen I would be assigned to. There were 14 levels of canteen and eventually I was allocated to one where you could have beer or sherry with your lunch."

That was under a Labour Government. That was when Jaguar's pass was sold. That was the legacy of Labour's industrial strategy. Industrial strategies and interventionist industrial policies do not work. Markets work because they represent the individual choices of millions of people. It is sheer arrogance to believe that politicians and bureaucrats can make those decisions for people and that they know better than business men where to invest money.

The investment decisions of politicians are almost invariably clouded by political judgments which usually lead to commercial failure. Those who hold up Japan as an example of supposedly successful industrial planning have grossly misread the causes of Japan's industrial success. I accept that it is always easy for western politicians and business men to claim that Japan succeeded through something simple and easily understandable such as an industrial policy, which supposedly we have not had in the West. However, virtually all western Governments have tried industrial policies, and almost always they have failed.

To believe that industrial planning lies at the heart of Japanese industrial success is to miss the point. Japan has succeeded for many reasons, among which are its intensely competitive internal market, very low taxation, very low Government spending and a disciplined and vocationally oriented education system. Since the war, Japanese Governments have never pilloried profit or sneered at success in the way that Labour politicians habitually do. Japanese companies have taken care to make their employees feel part of their organisation, and they have been open-minded enough to buy in the best technology from overseas. Japan's Governments have provided a pool of low-cost investment for its industry by keeping taxes very low on savings—something which we would do well to emulate. None of those things has anything to do with industrial strategies.

We should not kid ourselves that the Japanese have succeeded through industrial planning, however alluring an excuse that might be, or that all that Britain needs to solve its industrial problems is a little bit of intervention here and a little bit of administrative guidance there. We should not fool ourselves that the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) and his friends will get together with industrialists, trade unionists and a few civil servants and solve all our industrial problems. Our economy is not like that.

All those policies have been tried, and they have failed. Those policies gave us the economic planning boards of the 1960s, the National Enterprise Board of the 1970s, and British Leyland, British Shipbuilders, and British Steel, all of which were chronic loss-makers. Those policies will fail again if they are tried again. We should not return to the old pre-Thatcherite agenda which is being rejected all over the world. We should continue with the free market policies allied to improvements in our education system which will steadily rescue us from nearly a century of steady decline.

8.23 pm

Mr. Ted Rowlands (Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney): I believe that my remarks will more than answer the complacent speech of the hon. Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim), who managed to describe a successful supply policy which has resulted in a £20 billion balance of trade deficit. Other hon. Members have mentioned—and I recall vividly—the first statement made by the new Chancellor when he said that, if it is not hurting, it is not working.

People in the communities that I represent are asking who else has to be hurt or damaged and how many more have to lose their jobs before that policy apparently works. During the summer, in the weeks before the Chancellor took his new office, communities such as mine were already suffering serious blows as a result of the Budget and of the continuing structural changes imposed upon us. In one month during the summer, two pits in my constituency were closed. Six others have been closed within a 30-mile radius in the past 12 months. On the day of the announcement of the closure of Merthyr Vale pit at Aberfan, Hoover, our other major alternative source of employment, also announced significant large redundancies. It directly attributed those redundancies to the Government's economic policy, particularly on interest rates.

Hoover—the major alternative to the coal industry in my constituency—started the decade 1979-89 with 5,400 jobs and now, at the end of the decade, it probably has no more than 1,500 people at work. Many of the structural changes mentioned by the hon. Member for Amber Valley were accepted many times during the last decade by the trade union movement and management agreeing to change a variety of practices to become more efficient. It is a sad and tragic observation that, after a decade of difficulty, sacrifice and job losses in our communities, we now have the chilling feeling that in the next 12 months we shall have a repeat performance of the experiences of 1980 and 1981.

It is in that context that one has to measure the famous valleys initiative launched by the Secretary of State for Wales, of which my constituency is supposed to be the major beneficiary. I welcomed the initiative from the start. Local authorities, myself and others have co-operated fully in endeavouring to make the initiative successful. The Secretary of State thought that it was so successful that he wanted to show it off to the Prime Minister a week ago. That was the first time that the two have been seen together in public. Nevertheless, he was willing, keen and eager to demonstrate the success story of the valleys initiative.

I doubt whether the Prime Minister heard the whole truth. The truth is that the jobs we have gained from the valleys initiative have been more than matched by the jobs lost. In character and volume, those lost jobs cannot be compared with the jobs created. We have lost well-paid jobs in manufacturing and, with one or two exceptions, we have gained poorly paid part-time jobs in the service sector.

The Queen's Speech offers no solution to the structural problems which led to the supply problem about which the hon. Member for Amber Valley boasted. How can one boast about a successful supply policy which ends up with a £20 billion balance of trade deficit? What has happened in the past two or three years—there was a semi-admission of it in what the hon. Gentleman said—is that consumption has risen totally out of line with production. The only answer that the Government have is to crush consumption to match the decline in production. To achieve that cut in consumption, they will damage the investment necessary to increase production.

I can give a vivid illustration from my constituency. A new young enterprising company came to my constituency to make pistons for diesel engines. It is an amazing story. Do the hon. Member for Amber Valley and the Government know that now in Britain—once a great nation of manufacturing and engineering—there are only two companies which can make pistons for diesel engines? One is a small nascent company set up in Merthyr Tydfil. The company was set up because the gentleman who owns the export company had export orders which would no longer be met by any British company. He could not find the products to sell to the export markets that he has secured, so he was forced to set up a small manufacturing unit.

Having set it up, he has been besieged by telexes from Rolls-Royce, Perkins and Listers asking him to deliver pistons for diesel engines within Britain, in addition to his exports. He therefore needs to expand. However, a small company such as his needs to borrow. He has found that his interest rate bill alone has gone up by £2,000 per month in the past 18 months to two years. He will therefore not be able to expand to meet the supply-side problems that have arisen in the economy as a result of the Government's total and utter neglect of the manufacturing sector of the nation.

Our internal manufacturing supply problems and the Government's interest rate policy will make it more difficult, not less, to produce things in Britain again in communities such as mine. Developments in Europe, particularly in eastern Europe, will also cast economic and industrial shadows over manufacturing in this country.

I read with some interest that large-scale West German and American capital will be crossing into eastern Europe. Parts of eastern Europe are seen as a new south-east Asia or Taiwan within Europe because they offer an opportunity to launch products manufactured with cheaper labour and new investment into western European markets.

Another major employer in my constituency is Thorne Lighting. I recently read a headline stating: "General Electric plans attack from the east." The United States group has moved to buy into Tungsram, a major Hungarian lighting company which a few years ago caused enormous damage by dumping light bulbs on to the British market. That is a sign of other developments that will occur. Such developments may be understandable, but they will add considerable pressure on the manufacturing sector in our economy.

What does the Queen's Speech offer to help the manufacturing sector? We are not being governed by people who are interested in making things. Communities such as mine were founded on making things and there is nothing wrong with wanting to produce things rather than simply servicing things. In the end, the service economy depends on wages in the manufacturing sector.

Much of the service sector is self-consuming—it consumes other people's wages. To stay open, our B and Q stores and Great Mills stores require other people to have incomes, so people must be earning good money in other companies in the manufacturing sector. Communities such as mine with our great ironworks began the British and world industrial revolution in the late 18th century. We want to produce things again, but the Government are more interested in paper money than in meaningful production.

Recently I read the Chancellor of the Exchequer's remarks about taking the Bank of England out of politics. The origins of the Bank of England date back to the 1960s. There were great debates in 1710 when the nascent Bank of England refused to support the Government of the day and almost created a credit strike. Daniel Defoe wrote an essay on credit in which he referred to "men of paper". The Government, too, are men of paper. They are not in the slightest bit interested in the manufacturing sector. If they were, they would not have allowed the decline in the past decade to become as bad as it has.

I have one modest suggestion which can be applied within the existing terms of Government policy. The Government can assist the growth and redevelopment of manufacturing investment in communities such as mine in two ways. First, they can use selective financial assistance to its limits. That is the last bit of regional policy left which can serve communities such as mine. Companies such as the one that I have decribed, which makes pistons, require that assistance to at least offset some of the costs of the high interest rates imposed by Government policy.

[Mr. Ted Rowlands]

Secondly, the Government must take a much more imaginative approach to the EC funds available for regional restructuring and redevelopment. There has been a large increase in the regional development budget. However, in my extended correspondence with the Secretary of State for Wales in the past few weeks, I have found no imaginative thinking about how some of those regional Community funds can be used and adapted to ensure that communities such as mine, which are proud of their tradition of manufacturing things, can be so again.

8.34 pm

Mr. Ian Bruce (Dorset, South): I am pleased to follow the hon. Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands). Like him, I believe passionately that manufacturing industry is extremely important for the United Kingdom. I have always believed that the United Kingdom has been able to show the world how to manufacture and I believe that it can do so again in future.

I want to confine my remarks on the Queen's Speech to a very narrow subject. I want to help by offering some suggestions about our trade balance. Our trade balance can be financed and there is no need to panic. However, we can take measures against it.

When my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer considers his options, he must be worried about how he can steer his way through the problems without raising interest rates even higher. He must be worried about keeping inflation down and move against constant tax increases. He must always keep his eye on the difficult problem of unemployment which we are beginning to control.

The Government already use interest rates in their battle with the trade balance, but I believe that there are other measures available. We could reduce inflation through a tax reduction which would make United Kingdom goods and services more competitive, reverse the trade gap and bring greater employment. I can see the excitement on the faces of my colleagues on the Treasury Front Bench at the thought of that. I am referring to employers' national insurance.

In the Autumn Statement, I was very unhappy to hear that we will continue to keep employers' national insurance at roughly 10·5 per cent. I was involved in costing as a work study engineer in industry. Whenever we carried out a costing, we first considered the labour costs in the particular goods or services. As soon as we had written down the labour rates, we added on what was usually a very high figure for the employers' national insurance.

Earlier, I listened to my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath), who tends to rewrite history. However, I want to praise his excellent efforts with regard to employers' national insurance. In 1970, when my right hon. Friend's Government took office, employers' national insurance, which is really a tax on jobs, was 13·5 per cent. Over four years my right hon. Friend reduced that to 6·5 per cent. However, when the Labour Government took office they did not like that level of the tax because they are so friendly with the workers. They saw it as a tax on employers and one which they would not be hammered for by their supporters. However, we all know that a tax on an employer is passed on in the cost of the product.

The Labour Government raised the employers' national insurance from 7·4 per cent. to 8·5 per cent., then 8·75 per cent., and to 10 per cent. The Labour Government said that they had to increase the employers' national insurance tax because of higher and higher unemployment and benefits. To add insult to injury, they added on the iniquitous national insurance surcharge, first at a rate of 2 per cent. and then at 3·5 per cent.

When this Government came to power, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister understood the difficulty that the surcharge was causing employers and she made a commitment to reduce it. She reduced it from 3·5 per cent., but that took a long time. I believe that it was finally removed on 6 April 1984. That was one of the engines which ensured that inflation was reduced, because it had an effect on the cost price of goods and services in the United Kingdom. Therefore, it helped to boost enterprise and company profitability. That tax has been 10·45 per cent. or 10·5 per cent. for many years, and the employees' national insurance charge, which started at about 5 per cent. or 6 per cent., is now 9 per cent. Both taxes are foolish. We presently appear to have a surplus of taxation receipts. If there is any money to be given back, the best place to put it would be the employers' national insurance charge. That would have the effects that I have outlined.

If the Government wish to be adventurous, by transferring that tax—not a tax on employment but a tax on consumption—and putting it effectively on the VAT rate, at one fell swoop they would ensure that, when goods are imported, which effectively reduces employment in the United Kingdom, somebody buying those goods or services would pay for unemployment benefit, pensions and so on.

A tax on employment is wrong. At the moment, we export goods at 15 per cent. and we remove a 15 per cent. tax, but, in France, we might get a tax rate of 25 per cent. or 33 per cent. We effectively pay a higher tax rate in France. In France, an employer gets 33 per cent. or 25 per cent. taken off his goods as he is going out the door, and only 15 per cent. when he comes in our door. The equalisation of VAT would work to our advantage against most of our competitors. There are some fine judgments to be taken, but we could improve our competitiveness.

It is not de rigueur to do the opposite of what the Labour party suggests or what it has done in the past, but it is often good to do it. The Labour Government put up taxes, and their tax take into the Treasury went down. They looked for more Government involvement, but got less control over the economy. They opted for more nationalisation, supposedly to preserve companies and jobs, but we ended up with fewer companies and jobs. They put up national insurance rates, thereby putting up prices and destroying competition.

By cutting tax rates, we have increased the tax take and created more enterprise. We have removed Government control and privatised many companies, which has created more enterprise and jobs. Let us now reduce the employers' national insurance rate. That would reduce prices, restore competition and start to cut the trade gap which undermines international confidence in our economy. That is the mechanism for getting our economy back on track in the next financial year.

8.42 pm

Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North): I should like to continue my series of great Tory economic myths—an in-service training course for the more gullible Conservative Back-Bench Members. The great Tory myth which I should like to discuss today is the "record levels of investment in the United Kingdom".

This morning, the east midlands CBI announced a programme for the east midlands—it could have been endorsed or even written by myself or the Labour party—calling for transport investment, the availability of more land for new industry, and a serious retraining and reskilling programme. However, the common ground that now exists between the CBI, Opposition Members, trade unions and commerce is not shared by Conservative Members. The Conservative party once proudly boasted that it was the party of business, but it can no longer make that claim. The process has subtly changed.

The Conservative party is now clearly identified not as the party of business but as the party of the City, the money-changer, the moneylender and the money markets. Those interests often run counter to the interests of business, and more and more people in the business community—the real economy—such as the producers and the wealth creators, are beginning to realise that. The Conservative party can no longer claim to be the party of industry. The free market obsession, which, incidentally, is exclusive to Thatcher's Britain, has been the death sentence for the many of our industrial companies.

On investment, it should be enough to quote the Chancellor's own Autumn Statement in which he admitted that total fixed investment will plummet in 1990, increasing by only 1·75 per cent., including a fall in general Government investment of 3·75 per cent. We must look deeper, as Tory propagandists have yet to catch up with the magnitude of the economic crisis.

In his Autumn Statement, the Chancellor stuck up two fingers at industry, and it is about time that the CBI at national level stopped primly believing that that is a gesture of victory and started to scream about alternatives before the recession starts to pick off its membership. The Autumn Statement gave no support to British industry, no new money for industrial research and development, no new money for industry in the regions, and less money for industrial training.

Incarcerated in the prison of Thatcher's Britain, we often get a distorted perspective and need to look abroad to see what other nations do. What do they do in terms of investment and of assisting their industries? The new Chancellor today referred to what happens in the Soviet Union, Romania and other Eastern bloc countries which spend perhaps a quarter of their GDP on public investment—a brilliant intellectual sweep that was meant to indicate that virtually all investment was potentially bad. The Chancellor excluded our major industrial competitors in Japan, Germany, the United States and elsewhere.

Our total public sector investment has fallen by 20 per cent. since 1979. In Germany, two brand-new north-south railway routes are being built. In Spain, every single yard of railway track is being ripped up and restored on a new gauge. In France, just about every last chicken shack along every rural route has been electrified to bring about the benefits of rail electrification. All that costs money. However, the Government will not even allow British Rail to find £95 million to electrify the line from London to the east midlands.

The Chief Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Norman Lamont): I do not understand the hon. Gentleman's reference to £95 million. British Rail's investment in the next three years will increase by £3·7 billion.

Mr. Allen: British Rail's investment is commendable, but much of it is obviously in matters such as environmental improvements. The Conservative Government are quite happy to see £500 million spent on environmental improvements in Kent, but they cannot find £95 million for the economic regeneration of the east midlands.

I sometimes feel sorry for the Chancellor. He has perhaps been dropped into the mire, just as the Prime Minister is treading on the Meyer. He has been left an appalling legacy by his predecessor. He should insist on the resignation of the person who, in the debate on the 1988 Autumn Statement, predicted the levels of trade deficit, inflation and other matters. Sadly for him, the person who made that prediction was the Chief Secretary, and we all know who that was.

The insanity of the Government's policies is that, at the very time when we should encourage investment in manufacturing, the Government are deliberately using high interest rates to choke the demand which would stimulate investment decisions on new plant and machinery. That is why the CBI's latest industrial trends survey shows the gloomiest outlook for investment since 1983.

On top of that, industry now has to carry the burden of new taxes. No, not the heavier burden of personal taxation which, if one adds indirect and direct taxation together, has risen under this Government, and not the taxation of the uniform business rate, but a new tax. Indeed, we might even call it a "Major" new tax in honour of the new Chancellor. This "Major" new tax has been imposed upon the people of this country without the consent of Parliament. It is the rise in interest rates. This "Major" new tax adds £73 per month to a £30,000 mortgage. For a small business man with a 5,000 loan, the "Major" tax adds £75 per month. For industry generally, for every 1 per cent. increase in interest rates, the "Major" tax adds £250 million to costs.

Why invest in such circumstances? Those who have funds to invest may well choose in such circumstances to put their money on deposit or into the money market rather than invest in Britain when returns are so high. That is why six major companies in the United Kingdom now have cash mountains of over £1 billion. They choose not to invest in Britain because they know that they can make larger returns by sticking their cash on the money market, contributing to the hot money economy that has been developed by the Conservative Government.

But if in doubt, one should go back to the old standards and fiddle the figures. That is the way to make the economy look a little better. First, redefine the terms. The term "business investment" now actually includes the investment of public corporations, as well as that of private business. But even with such investment added, "business investment" has not grown since 1979. Within that business investment, the manufacturing element has shrunk from 26·3 per cent. to 19·7 per cent. It is no wonder tht the Japanese put out the red carpet for the Prime Minister because she and her policies have done more for their economy than any other individual in the world.

[Mr. Allen]

The second of the big fiddles is a new one. A new fashion has been developed today on the Conservative Benches—it is to talk, not of the level or the quantity of investment, but of the quality of investment. First search out one's investment and then talk about its quality. It is the truffle theory of investment.

The third is a good old statistical manipulation from the Norman Fowler School of Actuarial Standards. Most Conservative investment statistics start with 1981 to avoid the year zero time for manufacturing, which was between 1979 and 1981 when, with Pol Pot dedication, the Government set about creating a pile of skulls out of one fifth of British industry. One fifth of Britain's manufacturing industry was piled into the economic mass graves dug by the Prime Minister and her Khmer Blues.

From 1979 to 1988 business investment rose by 4 per cent. per year and high investment in services concealed the manufacturing investment element, which was still below 1979 levels. In the interim, an investment hole of some £18 billion had been created—a permanent irrecoverable handicap at a time when our competitors were investing like crazy, the Japanese having just announced £150 billion-worth of planned investment in the future.

Today the Chancellor attacked Labour's policies with all the confidence of a man who is certain that he will soon be replying to a Labour Queen's Speech, and who needs the practice. He asked, "How do we increase investment?", but unfortunately he uncharitably and untypically refused to allow interventions to answer that question from myself and other hon. Members.

However, the lines are clear and they will become ever clearer to Conservative Members. First, we need to work in partnership with industry. We need to work with business to develop our capabilities in training, education and research and development. We need to spread activity around the country and the regions. That makes sense in terms of fairness as well as in terms of economic efficiency. While the south-east overheats, the rest of us freeze. We need to look at instruments that can help industry and business, rather than hinder them. As well as tackling high inflation and high interest rates, we need to consider other specific economic instruments, including perhaps better depreciation allowances on capital investment, to examine the rates of corporation tax and, of course, to review the uniform business rate and the poll tax.

The squalid unclean Thatcher era is now stumbling to an end and for the Opposition that end cannot come too soon.

8.55 pm

Mr. Timothy Kirkhope (Leeds, North-East): For just a few minutes I had a feeling that we were in the Romanian Parliament, hearing the voice of Socialism spouting in its usual inappropriate and undemocratic way. However, I was quickly brought to my senses when I realised that a considerable number of other hon. Members disagreed fundamentally with the sort of nonsense that we have been hearing from Opposition Members.

It is all very well to refer to things that have happened in the past, but we should try to remember a little about the arrival in this country in the mid-1970s of the International Monetary Fund, not to seek our advice as happens now, but then to seek our proposals as to how the country might be bailed out of its bankruptcy under the Labour Administration.

About half an hour ago, an Opposition Member referred to Britain being "great" in Labour's day. Apart from the name, nothing much was great, except perhaps the great debts, the great inflation, the great misery of the British people, and the great trouble that we were in, financially and in every other way, in international terms. That was the "greatness" that the Labour party provided for this country when it last had its opportunity, and that is the sort of greatness that it would like to thrust upon the British people if it were ever to get power again.

Since the Conservative Government came into power in 1979, we have achieved immense results for the British people. Those listening to the debate this evening will realise when they look at their own families that their way of life, their quality of life and their standard of living have improved substantially under the Conservative Government. We are concerned with results. It is all right to have neat Socialist theories, but the people want results and that is what they have had ever since we came to power in 1979.

Our economy has grown faster than any other European economy. It is true that, initially, it needed to do so, because we had fallen so far behind in the 1970s. We have lowered taxes in numerous Budgets, and I hope that we continue to do just that, because the result is an inevitable increase in the resources available to the Exchequer to enable the Government to do things for the benefit of the people. During the past 10 years, investment in our industries and businesses has increased substantially. Some Opposition Members might decry the interests of overseas investors, but it is fair to remind them that our investment overseas is also substantial. Any free trade between countries includes the movement of investment, which is one of the greatest creators of wealth and prosperity for such countries.

Let us consider the alleged north-south divide. I am pleased to say that that historic boundary no longer exists. I am speaking directly from my experience of my constituency in Leeds and of the north-east, where I lived before I was elected. The achievements have been absolutely sensational, and they are a direct result of the Government's economic and other policies. The fortunes of the north-east, Yorkshire, Humberside, the north-west and the east and west midlands have been completely revived.

Previously, those areas lay in a despondent state as a result of the constant Socialism thrust upon them when, unfortunately, local authorities were politicised at the end of the war. We were unlucky enough to have one or two Socialist administrations in power in those regions. One need only look at the resources of those areas to realise that the Conservative Government have been a great help. They have done an enormous amount to help the development of road programmes, regional airports—a great success story—and related infrastructure, as well as providing a concentration of investment in health, education and schools.

Mr. Ted Garrett (Wallsend): Will the hon. Gentleman tell the House what the average rate of unemployment is in Tyne and Wear? Will he also tell the House how much private investment has gone into that area and how much private investment has been lost as a result of changes in work practices and massive redundancies thereafter?

Mr. Kirkhope: The hon. Gentleman knows the figures better than anyone. I do not know whether he has contributed to this debate, but, if so, he had the opportunity to give those figures. From my experience, the north-east is totally transformed. The hon. Gentleman must be as aware of that as his constituents and other people who live in that region. From my experience, everyone knows that my constituency, within the Yorkshire and Humberside region, has grown faster than any other region outside of London. It has experienced that growth as a direct result of Government policy.

Despite the Government's attempts, Socialist views still remain in those regions, and they are not consistent with greater prosperity. I deeply regret that. Earlier today I was fortunate enough to be able to remind my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister of the 2,000 jobs that have been moved by our Government, through the National Health Service executive and the social security directorate, to my city of Leeds. That move proves the commitment of the Conservative Government to the north of England and its people. Some of the local arrangements in my city, however, are not consistent with the enterprise and success which has been experienced in the city and the region. I regret that those local arrangements result from Socialist control of some of that area.

Conservative policies have been responsible for success, but what are the Labour alternatives that, presumably, will be offered to the nation at the next election? I have no doubt that the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) will remind us of them in a moment. Those alternatives include such interesting proposals as credit control, price controls, tight income controls—all proposals which are unworkable and would make the Labour party unelectable. Above all, there would be more and more bureaucracy to run all those controls, and that would make the Labour party unelectable for ever.

Everything is changing in eastern Europe. Such policies have been overthrown in the eastern European countries. Only the British Labour party wishes to have such policies and to force them upon the British people. It will not succeed, because the people know the truth and will not be hoodwinked by such nonsense. The Government have a good economic policy, and we will win through.

9.5 pm

Mr. John Garrett (Norwich, South): It is as well to start my speech in such a debate with an examination of the Government's central forecasts, because if they are good enough for the Government they should be good enough for us. The main indicators of the Government's forecast show that we are already well into a recession. They show 0·75 per cent. non-oil growth in 1990. The Treasury average error in such a forecast is usually about 1 per cent. The indicators show a 250,000 increase in unemployment and 5·75 per cent. inflation in the fourth quarter of 1990. That includes a rise in housing costs of about 11 per cent. That shows that there will not be a reduction in interest rates. That rate of inflation will be much higher than the rate in any other country in western Europe.

There will be a £15 billion deficit on the balance of payments. This year's deficit is no less than 4 per cent. of national income, a percentage that has never been exceeded in peacetime. I can never understand why the Conservatives always say that a balance of payments deficit is due to the import of capital goods for re-equipping our industry. First, that is not true, and secondly, I thought that this country was in the business of producing capital goods. The fact that we have to import them in order to invest strikes me as odd.

Those are indicators of a major recession. They are not a blip any more but show the beginning of a long slide. It is the classic British problem of lack of international competitiveness and a higher rate of inflation than other countries.

Even on their own figures, what the Government require to turn the economy around is a tall order. For example, they forecast a growth in the economy and a 1·25 per cent. decline in the balance of payments. They have not allowed for the substantial destocking by industry that has already started. The most alarming factor to someone who has spent his career in industry is the deficit of £2 billion on information technology equipment. That is especially alarming when one compares it with the position in France, where the French Government have invested heavily to rebuild the communications network based on domestic manufacture of such equipment.

The Government forecast a decline in inflation in general, but there are many rates of inflation, depending on one's circumstances. For example, inflation in the National Health Service is greater than the general rate because of higher increases in the price of drugs and medical innovation. That means that extra Government spending on the Health Service is exaggerated.

The poor suffer more than anybody from the effect of differential inflation. Because of their spending patterns, the low-paid and pensioners have a higher than average rate of inflation. The Low Pay Unit has recently shown that the rate of inflation for the poor is a full percentage point higher than the increase in the retail price index. Food and housing costs account for nearly half the budget of the low-paid, and those costs are rising by well over 10 per cent. a year, while prices of consumer durables bought by the well-off have hardly risen at all. In 1990, the low-paid will face price rises in electricity, water, gas, fares, mortgages and poll tax. Those people are the real victims of inflation and will continue to be.

Pensions and benefits have not increased by anything like the amount required to compensate the low-paid and the poor for inflation. In our advice surgeries, all hon. Members meet people who are massively disadvantaged as a result of the level of inflation. The least well-off bear the cost of the Government's inflationary policies.

According to the CBI, the investment outlook of companies is the worst since 1983. This year, manufacturing investment will still be two thirds of the 1979 level as a share of GDP, and growth investment has come to a halt, as one might expect from the increase in interest rates. That helps to explain why the Treasury's economic progress report shows that our productivity still lags far behind that of the United States, Germany and France. The increase in productivity of which the Government boast was a one-for-all step increase in the early 1980s, and we have lagged behind the rest of western Europe in productivity ever since.

[Mr. John Garrett]

We must invest in capital equipment for transport, communications, education and training: all our constituencies contain schools that have not enough textbooks, and we have all seen the crumbling fabric of school and hospital buildings. Transport systems are wholly inadequate. I sometimes think that my constituency must be cut off from British Rail, given the daily failures in transport equipment.

We must invest in the long-term competitive structure of our economy, which the Government are busy running down. We have higher inflation, a worse balance of payments and more unemployment than other members of the EC, but there is no Government strategy to improve our industrial performance, apart from a hope that the position will correct itself by means of the action of market forces and the blind application of interest rates to choke off demand. Interest rates are due to remain high throughout 1990.

The great Thatcherite experiment has taken our economic performance back to the 1950s and 1960s. In the meantime, however, we have lost one fifth of our manufacturing industry, unemployment has doubled and our share of world exports has fallen by 3 per cent. Yet our economy, suffering as it is from under-investment, is about to be exposed in the single European market to competitors with modern industries which train and educate their people by means of public investment in services and infrastructure. That is investment that private industry will never make, and it is the duty of Governments to make it for them.

The Prime Minister has said that our problems are the problems of success. They are not: they are the problems of incompetent economic management, short-termism and a misguided ideology.

9.10 pm

Dr. John Cunningham (Copeland): When I first read the Gracious Speech, I was convinced that it contained a printing error. I looked again, and still could see no reference to a local government Bill. I was sure then that there was an error—for this is the first Gracious Speech in the 10 years of our present Government that has not contained at least one Bill attacking or dismantling local democratic government. I suppose that that, at any rate, brought a sigh of relief from members of all political parties and from local councils.

The first feature of the debate that I enjoyed was the humour of the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow), who is in his place—the humour, if not the politics. It has been instructive to listen to the debates of the past six days and to read the reports of those debates, for they represent the culmination of a decade of Conservative Government legislative programmes of this kind—a kind described so graphically and emphatically in the excellent speech of my right hon. Friend the Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) earlier this evening.

It has also been revealing to listen again this November to the Prime Minister's claims about the aims, objectives and achievements of her Governments, and to compare her speech of a few days ago with those of earlier years. As the 1980s draw to a close, the industrial and economic scene in Britain has an all-too-familiar appearance. The decade began with a huge recession, brought about directly by the mistaken policies and mismanagement of the Tory Government; it ends with our economy again on the edge of a debilitating recession.

According to the CBI,

"the UK economy is destined for two years of crawling growth, rising unemployment, high interest rates—and an increase in the underlying rate of inflation."

That was confirmed earlier today, when the Chancellor of the Exchequer had to admit that next month's inflation figure will rise—probably by as much as half a percentage point, which means that in December inflation will again be nudging 8 per cent.

The CBI view and the reality of the Chancellor's admission are buttressed by the view of Lloyds bank, which also envisages two years of sluggish growth which will place the economy on the brink of recession. That is what the Chancellor described recently as a "necessary pause". With the Conservatives, we are back to a future that does not work. What a way in which to enter the new decade!

Inevitably, economic and industrial issues have been at the forefront of the debate, although last Friday's debate on foreign affairs was of huge interest and importance, given the dramatic events now unfolding in eastern Europe. I especially enjoyed reading the record of that day and hope that we shall hear many more times from my right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey) before he finally and regrettably leaves the House.

Last year, the Prime Minister made several important claims for Government policy in the debate on the Gracious Speech. I shall list her claims:

"To hold to firm and successful economic policies . . . reflect the new vitality of our economy . . . to bear down on inflation . . . borrowing must be checked . . . the personal sector also needs to save . . . the two Bills"— water and electricity privatisation—

"show our determination to secure the advantages of privatisation for each industry, their consumers and the taxpayer".—[Official Report, 22 November 1988; Vol. 142, c. 21-24.]

That all sounds rather hollow now.

Last week, in a speech of dreadful complacency and smugness, the right hon. Lady ignored the abject failures of her Government on those and other important aspects of policy. Inflation is up, is double that in France and Germany and is the highest of any major industrial nation. Personal borrowing is up, and is likely to remain so. The balance of payments is much worse than a year ago. Mortgage charges have increased by nearly 4 percentage points compared with last year's average and are crushing millions of families.

The privatisation of the water and electricity industries has resulted in a disaster, wrecking the hopes of any sensible national industrial strategy for supply and wrecking any hope of any sensible strategy for the environment or for consumers, who have already experienced massive price increases. As for the taxpayer, £16 billion has simply been written off or presented to large private monopolies as a dowry. Insulting and expensive advertising campaigns have infuriated the British people. The taxpayer has made a huge loss on the water industry alone of almost £2 billion, not to mention the millions of pounds spent on advertising and underwriting fees that we do not yet know about.

The Government have attempted to project the latest programme as one aimed at improving the quality of life in Britain. Let us examine that claim, which is transparently bogus. People know that, for all but the very well-off, tax cuts have long since been swallowed up by rent increases and mortgage payments. To their credit, even some of the tiny minority who benefited recognise, as do more than 60 per cent. of the British people, that the quality of their lives has declined under this Government of debt and division.

I searched in vain for any recognition of that in the speeches of Tory Members, but with one or two notable exceptions, we have heard a litany of obsequious platitudes, showing little sense of concern or criticism.

The next 12 months in the House will feature a programme of largely unwanted legislation, such as proposals on the Health Service, education and broadcasting, which are likely to damage the quality of life of our country. Further destruction of the basic principles of good health care, as embodied in the Health Service, will be met with our vehement opposition, outstripped only by the anger of the British people at the political manipulation of their Health Service, mainly by people who never use it.

I retain a special anger for the continuing failure of the Government to provide our people with the fundamental basis for a decent quality of life—a safe, warm and secure home that they can afford. Earlier this year, the Royal Institute of British Architects said:

"Britain is faced in 1989 with a dramatic housing crisis. There are signs of an acceleration in existing housing problems that are very far from solution. There is a great danger both that too little housing will be provided to meet genuine and often acute need and that the quality of much new housing will be poor."

The problems that the RIBA describes are a direct result of Government policy, as the report from the National Audit Office of July 1989 makes clear. The Comptroller and Auditor General said:

"Over the period 1979-80 and 1989-90 the annual Housing Investment Programme allocations have declined. . .in actual terms and. . .at constant prices"— by 78 per cent.

"This decline has particularly affected those local authorities which have both severe housing problems and disproportionately low capital receipts, and which therefore depend heavily on Housing Investment Programme allocations."

The huge fall in public sector housing starts and completions throughout the 1980s—a continuing feature and a deliberate policy—has not been made up by house building in the private sector. No wonder there has been an inexorable and predictable increase in homelessness—so much for improving the quality of life. In 1983, 78,240 households were accepted as homeless. By 1988, that had risen to 117,500. This year's figure is approaching 135,000—a scandal in any civilised society. In 1983, 2,700 homeless households were placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation. By the end of 1988, that figure had reached the astonishing level of 10,970 families.

The misery and consequent social and financial problems are a huge easily avoidable cost to us as taxpayers, if only the Government would permit local councils to reinvest more of their capital receipts or improve their housing investment programmes. Tory mismanagement of the economy has produced record mortgage rates, coupled with a near-doubling of house prices in the past five years, which are preventing a generation of young people from buying their first home. The average price of a house is now a record four and a quarter times average annual earnings—little wonder that young couples and people on lower incomes find it impossible these days to become home owners. A bigger share of take-home pay now has to go on mortgage repayments than ever before.

We believe that good housing will always be the key to the health and well-being of our society. There must be collective responsibility for such a precious national asset. Labour will help local councils and housing associations to build more homes at prices at which people can afford either to buy or to rent. Against that background of disaster in housing policy, there is not a single word in the Gracious Speech about any of these problems or about any aspect of housing policy. There is no mention of them in the Government's programme for the coming year.

Education and training hold the key to Britain's future economic prosperity. However, during the past decade, the proportion of national income invested in education and science has dropped by £3·25 billion, at today's prices. What kind of commitment to the future of our economy does that demonstrate? None at all, either in the scale or in the quality that our young people and our industry so desperately need. Britain is now in the shameful position where fewer young people stay on in full-time education or high-quality training after 16 than in any of our major competitor countries. We are in the shameful position in which fewer children have nursery education than in most of our competitor countries, although that is not true, I am pleased to say, of some Labour-controlled local authority areas. Even South Korea has more students in higher education than we have, yet employers in industry and commerce are crying out for a better educated and better trained work force.

My next point relates specifically to the duties and responsibilities of the Leader of the House, and I hope that he can give a positive response tonight. The Scottish Office is the only Department of State not to be monitored by a Select Committee. Given the lack of popular support for this Government's policies in Scotland, that is an especially glaring omission in the democratic process, which the Government must act to correct—and which the Leader of the House has a duty to correct.

We accept that the lack of Scottish Conservative Members presents the Leader of the House with a genuine difficulty, but that very lack of Scottish Conservative Members heightens the need for parliamentary scrutiny of ministerial activity. We have been more than willing to be flexible and helpful about membership. Although we should wish to see the highest possible membership of Members with Scottish constituencies, we want to make it clear that we place no preconditions on membership as regards the constituencies of members of the Select Committee. Over the past two and a half years, the Government have claimed consistently that they would like a Select Committee on Scottish Affairs to be established, but they have also claimed that they have been unable to find enough Scottish Members to serve.

If that is the case, it is difficult to explain the enthusiasm of Conservative Members outside Scotland to participate in other aspects of Scottish business. English Conservative Members have been more than happy to play an active role in Scottish Question Time and I am struck by their eagerness to serve on Scottish Standing Committees to get through the Government's business. Conservative Members from outside Scotland were only too keen to play a part in the proceedings on the Self-Governing Schools etc. (Scotland) Bill last Session.

Mr. Bill Walker: The hon. Gentleman has been blaming the Government for the lack of a Select Committee on Scottish Affairs. Let me make it clear that I refused to serve on that Select Committee because I did not want to serve on a Select Committee that tried to rig reports. [HON. MEMBERS: "No."] Yes, it is true and it is all on the record for any to see.

The Scottish National party refused to serve on the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs, describing it in the past two Parliaments as a piffling little Committee. We will not accept any of that humbug and nonsense—[Interruption.]

Dr. Cunningham: I leave the House to judge the hon. Gentleman's statement about the rigging of Select Committee reports, but I must tell him that we are happy for him not to serve on the Select Committee.

The Select Committee on Scottish Affairs has played an important role in the past. It has carried out respected investigations into areas of policy such as housing conditions and the steel industry. It is intolerable that the Government have let the matter drift. The Government's reluctance to act is a remarkable dereliction of duty to the democratic process and to the interests of the Scottish people. On behalf of my right hon. and hon. Friends from Scotland, I urge the Leader of the House to think again and to set up a Select Committee on Scottish Affairs, as required by Standing Order No. 130.

The Government's failures in housing, in education and training, and in policies for the environment belie claims that the new Tory programme can lead to a better quality of life for the majority of the British people. Indeed, people feel increasingly that the Tory Government are taking Britain in the wrong direction and that, as a country, we are being left behind, unprepared for the new and exciting challenges of the 1990s and increasingly isolated. That is hardly surprising. In almost every area of policy there is a complete absence of strategy—no coherent guiding principles, but simply a series of short-term changes, often gimmicks, which fail to tackle the underlying problems of urban and rural areas alike.

The Prime Minister's only strategy seems to be the Prime Minister. While others are sacked or resign, she seems determined to go on and on, unable to see anyone in the Cabinet suitable to be the next Prime Minister—at least she is right on that. When we observe the right hon. Lady's disordered will—one week saying that she will pass on the torch, the next that she will stay for the next election and beyond—is it any surprise that her Cabinet is so rent with divisions and disaffection? It is divided on the economy, on Europe and on the leadership.

In a remarkable speech, the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath), disgracefully barracked and harrassed by the Chief Whip's bully boys, spelled out exactly how isolated the Government and the Prime Minister are becoming—and, as he so disarmingly said, he should know all about isolation. It takes a particular lack of realism and touch to envisage "popular acclaim" at the very time when opinion in Britain shows that two thirds of the electorate believe that the Prime Minister should stand down before the next election.

As the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West (Sir A. Meyer) spreads panic in the Tory party with his disarming frankness, we learn that, while challenges to other political leaders are good news, welcome everywhere and good for all nations, they are not good for Britain. We are told that the Prime Minister's interests are paramount, allegedly synonymous with the national interest. What cant. What a contrast with the Prime Minister's views on events elsewhere, for example in eastern Europe. What a contrast, as the Leader of the House must reflect, with her behaviour and view on the Tory party in 1975.

Last week the Leader of the House, no doubt prodded by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, issued his own clarion call for loyalty and unity. Imagine his surprise over breakfast the next morning, to read in The Times that he was not fit to follow the right hon. Lady but that a new generation was needed. He must reflect darkly on another recent quotation in The Times from the Prime Minister:

"I do not like anyone who has ever worked with me to be unkindly treated."

But, of course, she was speaking about Sir Alan Walters. One by one, those with ambition—the Leader of the House, the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the right hon. Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine)—have backed off. Now we know the real significance of the speech of the chairman of the Tory party in Blackpool, when he said:

"He which hath no stomach to this fight, let him depart."

He was referring not to the general election but to the leadership election.

It is rumoured that even now the so-far-silent right hon. Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Ridley)—a political Don Quixote—is riding to the rescue of the Prime Minister bringing with him a copy—[Interruption.]—of the Housing Act 1988. In the leadership election his ingenious voting system will apply. Those who abstain will be deemed to have voted for the Prime Minister.

As this largely irrelevant Government programme makes clear, it is time for a change. We need a Government who will get Britain back on the right track, moving in the right direction. The policies that we oppose tonight are those already shown to have failed Britain. They will do so again; that is why we reject them.

9.34 pm

The Lord President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Sir Geoffrey Howe): It is appropriate to commence the concluding observations of this debate by paying tribute, as I gladly do, to my hon. Friends the Members for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) and for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg) who moved and seconded the Loyal Address.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South spoke up proudly for his constituency as the home of the Lancashire black pudding. I felt less at home with that than with his claim to have a Welsh grandmother. I can lay claim to a Welsh grandfather as well, so it is no surprise, that my father knew Lloyd George. It is a happy fact that my mother did not have the same experience.

Despite the firm opposition of my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne to the televising of our proceedings I am certain that with his modest pride and his hair style—he is right to be modest about it—he undoubtedly provided the televisual highlight of the debate. He first became my hon. Friend when he was reckless enough to act as my campaign assistant at the 1959 general election——

Mr. Skinner: The hon. Gentleman will not do it now.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I am happy to tell the hon. Gentleman that no campaign is in progress. I am still more than proud to count on the long-standing friendship of my hon. Friend.

At that time we were unsuccessful in checking the arrival in this House of the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris), who is still here. It was for me, as for my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister whom my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne served so faithfully as Parliamentary Private Secretary, an occasion of immense sadness when the Anglo-Irish Agreement was signed. It was an act that required my hon. Friend to resign his position as a member of the Government. Then as now the whole House respected the powerful integrity and sense of duty that prompted his decision.

My hon. Friend will have been struck, as I have been, by the fact that no fewer than 10 hon. Members from Northern Ireland—more than half the total—have been heard in this debate. They have all spoken, more than understandably, of the special grief and suffering of their constituents in the face of what one of their number described as which is still being waged against us all but most brutally of all against the people of Northern Ireland. They should have no doubt that the Government are unyielding in their resolve to resist and conquer those who wage this savage, empty campaign. I assure my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) that no function of Government is more generously and spontaneously provided for than the fight against terrorism. That is how it should be.

"a diabolical and vicious campaign of terror"—[Official Report, 21 November 1989; Vol. 162, c. 76.]

Northern Ireland Members spoke of their wish for reconciliation and peace between the different communities and traditions that they represent. Those were the twin objectives of those of us, among whom I am proud to count myself, who helped to shape the Anglo-Irish Agreement, now just four years old. I know that it is still a cause of controversy, and I respect those who take that view. I am glad, too, to welcome the prospect, referred to by my hon. Friend the Member for Arundel (Mr. Marshall) of a British-Irish parliamentary body, through which there can be a fruitful coming together of representatives of the four nations that share the life of these islands.

I think that the House will have been particularly moved, as I was, by the eloquence of my hon. Friend the Member for North Down (Mr. Kilfedder). I recall that he and I walked together up Ludgate hill and sat beside each other in St. Paul's cathedral for the funeral service of Sir Winston Churchill. My hon. Friend told us last week of his conclusion that his proper place in the House was on these Benches. All my right hon. and hon. Friends say, "Hear, hear" to that. My hon. Friend also urged the leaders of the constitutional parties in Northern Ireland to work together for the future of the Province. The whole House can say "Hear, hear" to that.

Mr. John D. Taylor (Strangford): I find the Minister's opinion on North Down of great interest. Does that mean that he will not support the Conservative candidate who is to oppose the present hon. Member for North Down?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: It is right to point out that no candidate has yet been adopted for that constituency. The right hon. Gentleman will recall the reasons that prompted his colleague, the hon. Member for North Down, to decide as he did.

Together we now go into the television age. Perhaps it is right that the House should be taking a step into the television age after, and not before, the Supreme Soviet in Moscow and in many other less mature and confident Parliaments. I have little doubt that the televising of our proceedings represents the most important change in the presentation of politics since I first entered the House. The experiment has clearly started well. I am sure—at least I hope—that a touch of human fallibility, even on the Front Benches, is likely to elicit a good-natured response from the majority of viewers.

Even at this early stage, I record sincere appreciation and thanks, on behalf of the whole House, first to all those in the House of Commons broadcasting unit and the organisations that convey us to the world outside for their skill and enthusiasm and, secondly, to the Select Committee on the Televising of Proceedings of the House —in particular my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy, the former Leader of the House, who so skilfully steered the Committee and the House to the present stage.

The arrival of television is by no means the only recent change in our procedure, and rightly so. The Select Committee on Procedure is considering the work of departmental Select Committees, 10 years after they were instituted by my colourful predecessor Lord St. John of Fawsley. We look forward with great interest to the reports of their wide-ranging inquiry. In the meantime, I offer particular thanks to my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins) for his sterling work behind the scenes as Chairman of the Liaison Committee. The hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) reminded me of one of the two pieces of on-going business that I have had to consider during the first months of my work as Leader of the House.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Will the right hon. and learned Gentleman give way?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No, I must respond to the point made by the hon. Member for Copeland. On that matter, I have been able to reach a conclusion, albeit a negative one. Despite wide-ranging discussion with those involved, following a debate on the Floor of the House just 11 months ago, I have reluctantly concluded that none of the proposals that have been made will resolve the impasse that has persisted until now. As my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) pointed out, no new solutions have emerged. I have therefore concluded that I can sensibly take no action in that respect during the life of the current Parliament.

Mr. Donald Dewar (Glasgow, Garscadden): No doubt the right hon. and learned Gentleman will accept that Opposition Members hear his remarks with dismay and that his decision is totally unacceptable to us. Does he not understand that it will be seen in Scotland as an abdication of responsibility and a clear indication of the cavalier attitude that the Government take to the good government of that country? We shall continue to press the Leader of the House on this point and we do not accept or believe that it is beyond the ingenuity and power of the Government business managers to set up the Select Committee, given the will to do so. I strongly advise him to reconsider his negative and irresponsible attitude.

[Mr. Donald Dewar]

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The hon. Gentleman's intervention was far from spontaneous. I have considered the matter closely and, after wide consultation, I have reached a conclusion for the reasons that led my predecessor to reach the same conclusion. It seems right that I should put the matter on record before the House at this stage.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing (Moray) rose——

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The second outstanding question——

Mr. William McKelvey (Kilmarnock and Loudoun) rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the House is not giving way.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have to deal with the next matter——

Mr. Sillars: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Given that Standing Orders govern this whole place, is it in order for the right hon. and learned Gentleman to say that he will do nothing further? Is it not the case that, if the official Opposition, on a Supply day, tabled the necessary motion to set up a Select Committee, it would have to be determined by the House? If a minority party such as ours was fortunate enough to get half a Supply day, and tabled the necessary motion, that debate would have to take place and a definitive conclusion would have to be reached.

Mr. Speaker: That is a hypothetical question at the moment.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: It is right for me to state my own view at this stage.

The discussions about the work currently done by the Social Services Select Committee, under the chairmanship of the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), are proceeding and I shall endeavour to bring them to a conclusion as soon as possible.

There is no need for me to stress the importance of European legislation, and the desire of Parliament in general and of this House in particular to play a full and proper part in the scrutiny and management of such matters. The present procedures were designed as long ago as 1973, shortly after enactment of the European Communities Act 1972, by a Committee under the chairmanship of the hon. Member for Northwich, Sir John Foster. Since then, they have been operated by the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing)—sometimes, it seems, almost single-handedly.

However, with the subsequent adoption of the Single European Act and its enactment by Parliament, and the growing role of our legislative partners in the European Parliament, it is plainly time for procedures to be brought up to date. We are grateful to the Procedure Committee for the work that it is doing in that area. Its report will be published on Thursday. I cannot comment on it in advance, but I guarantee that its recommendations will receive careful and positive consideration by the Government.

I pay tribute to the Chairman of the Procedure Committee, my hon. Friend the Member for Honiton (Sir P. Emery), for his careful and considered approach to that and other questions.

The Private Bill procedure is the last procedural matter I shall mention. The more closely I have studied it, the more I have come to realise the importance and complexity of the issues involved. I hope to bring forward, on a consultative basis, proposals that will command the support of the whole House. Meanwhile, I urge right hon. and hon. Members to be patient, and not to allow unjustified impatience to become an excuse to deny or block Bills for reasons other than genuine disagreement.

The whole House understands the difficult job of the Chairman of the Ways and Means when it comes to private legislation. I am sure it joins me in praising the care and attention he brings to that time-consuming role, as well as to his other duties as First Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Campbell-Savours (Workington): The right hon. and learned Gentleman has alluded to the inquiry that the Select Committee on Procedure is to hold into Select Committees. Can we have an assurance that the subject will be debated immediately its report is produced as, in the past, we have had to wait, sometimes for several years, for a report to be debated? Is he aware that my hon. Friend the Member for Rotherham (Mr. Crowther) felt that it was necessary to resign from that Committee, because the House never found time to debate the reports in the way that he felt they should be debated?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Many of those reports have already been debated, and many have been acted upon. I shall endeavour to ensure that that continues to be done.

Mr. Beith: As some of the reports have been acted upon, which of the measures in the Gracious Speech will the right hon. and learned Gentleman submit to the procedure by which witnesses can be called before Committees that consider legislation? Will he, for example, submit the National Health Service and Community Care Bill to that procedure, so that people who work in the Health Service can give evidence to the Committee before it considers the Bill?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I do not at present have any intention of doing that for any Bills. I shall consider the measures in the Queen's Speech in a moment.

The hon. Member for Copeland referred to the speech by my old sparring partner at the Dispatch Box—the right hon. Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey). Like the hon. Member for Copeland, I was sorry to miss his speech. The House may recall that the right hon. Gentleman said that he had read so many obituaries of himself in the past few weeks that even he thought that he was already dead. Rather disconcertingly, the right hon. Gentleman makes increasingly benevolent remarks about me. If I may respond in kind to one of his more memorable phrases, I feel rather as though I am being cherished by a dead savage. [Laughter.] I hope that the House will think that that was worth waiting for.

The whole House will join me in wishing the right hon. Member a happy retirement in the lush pastures of his Sussex farm. We compliment him on his very good sense in having, while he was Chancellor, deferred indefinitely the introduction of a wealth tax.

The Gracious Speech set out the Government's proposals for balanced and effective legislation. It has four main objectives: first, to improve protection of the environment; secondly, to extend choice and to raise the quality of services to consumers in food safety, broadcasting, legal services and national health; thirdly, to combat international crime and to enhance security; fourthly, to increase employment opportunities and scope for enterprise in the economy.

All of those things should come forward and take their place alongside the firm economic policy, designed above all to combat inflation, outlined by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor in his Autumn Statement and again today, and on which my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing commented earlier in the evening. That programme provides clear scope for increased spending on key objectives from the Health Service to homelessness, on which the hon. member for Copeland dwelt—some £250 million is to be devoted to homelessness—and from transport infrastructure to the arts.

Mr. Terry Dicks (Hayes and Harlington): Will my right hon. and learned Friend explain why the Autumn Statement says that inflation next year will be 5·75 per cent., yet the arts are to get an increase in funding of 12 per cent. next year and the year after? What is so special about the arts?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Government's view is that those programmes are of sufficient importance to the quality of life as a whole that they deserve such support.

The key objectives of our legislative programme are therefore to increase the influence and power of consumers over services to which they are entitled, and the environment in which those services are provided. As my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, North-West (Mr. Grylls) said, that will serve to strengthen and increase the availability of resources. It will enable the required improvements to take place by encouraging increased private investment.

Opposition Members, particularly the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams), criticised industry's performance during the past decade. It is important to draw attention to one or two facts about that. I refer him, for example, to an industry that he may know well, to the steel industry in South Wales and to the Abbey works in my home town of Port Talbot. When we came to office it was employing 11,000 to 12,000 people, all of whose jobs were in jeopardy because the industry at that time was losing between £500,000 and £1 billion a year.

About 18 months ago I took to that works in my home town the then Foreign Minister of the People's Republic of China, who was presented with a film showing the rebirth of British steel. Although there are now only half as many people employed in those works—[Interruption.]—the output is profitable and expanded, their jobs are secure, the industry is making a profit and other jobs are burgeoning throughout South Wales. That is the reality of the changes that have taken place as a result of Conservative policies.

Mr. Merlyn Rees (Morley and Leeds, South): The Leader of the House is referring back constantly to 1979. He will be aware of the crime figures for that year. In every year since then, the crime figures—under the stewardship of a party that believes in law and order—have escalated. It is said in the Gracious Speech:

"My Government will vigorously pursue their policies for reducing crime".

What are they?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I hope that the right hon. Gentleman will join us in applauding the fact that the recorded crime figures for the last 12 months are down, and that he will help us to sustain that downward trend.

My personal conviction is that the policies that we have been following for the last 10 years have set a new direction for political debate in this country, have set a remarkable change of direction for Socialism, here and abroad—[Interruption.]—taking as its fundamental starting point the rejection of everything that Socialism has previously stood for.

All that goes a long way to explain the dismal, negative, wholly unconstructive performance of speakers from the Opposition Front Bench throughout the debate. There has been an absence of any kind of positive suggestions for reform—[Interruption.] It has been a dismal political approach from a party which has in the last 12 months purportedly junked more outworn ideas, rubbished more wrong thinking and dumped more dogma than all the Warsaw pact Governments put together. No wonder the right hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) complains.

Yet Labour Members have still not come up with what any thinking man or woman would consider voting for. The Labour Front Bench, under the leadership of the right hon. Member for Islwyn (Mr. Kinnock), are living proof of the maxim that only the mediocre are always at their best—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The House has heard this week no fewer than 11 speeches from the Opposition Front Bench—[Interruption.]—but despite that, every question about Labour party policy remains unanswered. We come to see that Labour's much-vaunted policy review has a gaping black hole at its heart. In this era of designer Socialism—[Interruption.]—shiny new Labour spokesmen pop up on every front. The parliamentary Labour party now has in this House alone no fewer than 80 Front Bench spokespersons, of whom only 13 ever served in Government. Indeed, Labour has eight more departmental spokespersons in the Commons than we have Departmental Ministers in the Government as a whole. It is hardly surprising that Labour sounds less and less like a credible alternative Government—[Interruption.]—and more and more like a political tower of Babel.

The Leader of the Opposition has added a new dimension to his concept of collective irresponsibility. The truth is—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The truth is that meeting the cost of Socialism is the reason why any Labour Government should be, and indeed would be, unthinkable. Every Labour Government in British history has ended in economic disaster, and every one of those Governments were headed by so-called moderates. After every such failure—[Interruption.]—the Conservative party was called in to put things right. The record of the Labour party has been one of their fudging the challenge and of our counting the cost. That should be the title of Labour's much-vaunted policy review.

[Sir Geoffrey Howe]

By contrast, the Conservative party and this Government stand for the political and economic revival of Britain. That is why we confidently present our programme to the House and to the people of Britain. That is why we are confident that we shall win.

Question put, That the amendment be made:—

The House divided: Ayes 229, Noes 328.

Division No. 3] [10 pm

AYES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Adams, Allen (Paisley N)
Allen, Graham
Alton, David
Anderson, Donald
Archer, Rt Hon Peter
Armstrong, Hilary
Ashdown, Rt Hon Paddy
Ashley, Rt Hon Jack
Ashton, Joe
Banks, Tony (Newham NW)
Barnes, Harry (Derbyshire NE)
Barnes, Mrs Rosie (Greenwich)
Barron, Kevin
Battle, John
Beckett, Margaret
Beggs, Roy
Beith, A. J.
Bell, Stuart
Benn, Rt Hon Tony
Bennett, A. F. (D'nt'n & R'dish)
Bermingham, Gerald
Bidwell, Sydney
Blunkett, David
Boateng, Paul
Bradley, Keith
Bray, Dr Jeremy
Brown, Gordon (D'mline E)
Brown, Nicholas (Newcastle E)
Brown, Ron (Edinburgh Leith)
Bruce, Malcolm (Gordon)
Buchan, Norman
Buckley, George J.
Caborn, Richard
Callaghan, Jim
Campbell, Menzies (Fife NE)
Campbell, Ron (Blyth Valley)
Campbell-Savours, D. N.
Cartwright, John
Clark, Dr David (S Shields)
Clarke, Tom (Monklands W)
Clay, Bob
Clelland, David
Clwyd, Mrs Ann
Cohen, Harry
Coleman, Donald
Cook, Robin (Livingston)
Corbett, Robin
Corbyn, Jeremy
Cousins, Jim
Cox, Tom
Crowther, Stan
Cryer, Bob
Cummings, John
Cunliffe, Lawrence
Cunningham, Dr John
Darling, Alistair
Davies, Rt Hon Denzil (Llanelli)
Davies, Ron (Caerphilly)
Davis, Terry (B'ham Hodge H'l)
Dewar, Donald
Dixon, Don
Dobson, Frank
Doran, Frank
Douglas, Dick
Duffy, A. E. P.
Dunnachie, Jimmy
Dunwoody, Hon Mrs Gwyneth
Eadie, Alexander
Eastham, Ken
Evans, John (St Helens N)
Ewing, Harry (Falkirk E)
Ewing, Mrs Margaret (Moray)
Fatchett, Derek
Faulds, Andrew
Field, Frank (Birkenhead)
Fields, Terry (L'pool B G'n)
Flannery, Martin
Flynn, Paul
Forsythe, Clifford (Antrim S)
Foster, Derek
Foulkes, George
Fraser, John
Fyfe, Maria
Galloway, George
Garrett, John (Norwich South)
Garrett, Ted (Wallsend)
George, Bruce
Gilbert, Rt Hon Dr John
Godman, Dr Norman A.
Gordon, Mildred
Gould, Bryan
Grant, Bernie (Tottenham)
Griffiths, Nigel (Edinburgh S)
Griffiths, Win (Bridgend)
Grocott, Bruce
Harman, Ms Harriet
Hattersley, Rt Hon Roy
Healey, Rt Hon Denis
Heffer, Eric S.
Henderson, Doug
Hinchliffe, David
Hoey, Ms Kate (Vauxhall)
Hogg, N. (C'nauld & Kilsyth)
Home Robertson, John
Hood, Jimmy
Howarth, George (Knowsley N)
Howell, Rt Hon D. (S'heath)
Howells, Geraint
Howells, Dr. Kim (Pontypridd)
Hoyle, Doug
Hughes, John (Coventry NE)
Hughes, Robert (Aberdeen N)
Hughes, Roy (Newport E)
Hughes, Simon (Southwark)
Janner, Greville
Johnston, Sir Russell
Jones, Barry (Alyn & Deeside)
Jones, Ieuan (Ynys Môn)
Jones, Martyn (Clwyd S W)
Kennedy, Charles
Kinnock, Rt Hon Neil
Kirkwood, Archy
Lambie, David
Lamond, James
Leighton, Ron
Lestor, Joan (Eccles)
Lewis, Terry
Litherland, Robert
Livingstone, Ken
Livsey, Richard
Lloyd, Tony (Stretford)
Lofthouse, Geoffrey
Loyden, Eddie
McAvoy, Thomas
McCartney, Ian
McFall, John
McGrady, Eddie
McKay, Allen (Barnsley West)
McKelvey, William
McLeish, Henry
Maclennan, Robert
McWilliam, John
Madden, Max
Marek, Dr John
Marshall, David (Shettleston)
Marshall, Jim (Leicester S)
Martlew, Eric
Maxton, John
Meacher, Michael
Meale, Alan
Michael, Alun
Michie, Bill (Sheffield Heeley)
Michie, Mrs Ray (Arg'l & Bute)
Mitchell, Austin (G't Grimsby)
Molyneaux, Rt Hon James
Moonie, Dr Lewis
Morgan, Rhodri
Morley, Elliot
Morris, Rt Hon A. (W'shawe)
Morris, Rt Hon J. (Aberavon)
Mowlam, Marjorie
Mullin, Chris
Murphy, Paul
Nellist, Dave
Oakes, Rt Hon Gordon
O'Brien, William
O'Neill, Martin
Orme, Rt Hon Stanley
Paisley, Rev Ian
Parry, Robert
Patchett, Terry
Pendry, Tom
Pike, Peter L.
Powell, Ray (Ogmore)
Prescott, John
Quin, Ms Joyce
Radice, Giles
Randall, Stuart
Redmond, Martin
Rees, Rt Hon Merlyn
Richardson, Jo
Roberts, Allan (Bootle)
Robinson, Geoffrey
Rogers, Allan
Rooker, Jeff
Ross, Ernie (Dundee W)
Ross, William (Londonderry E)
Rowlands, Ted
Ruddock, Joan
Sedgemore, Brian
Sheerman, Barry
Sheldon, Rt Hon Robert
Short, Clare
Sillars, Jim
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, Andrew (Oxford E)
Smith, C. (Isl'ton & F'bury)
Smith, Rt Hon J. (Monk'ds E)
Smith, J. P. (Vale of Glam)
Smyth, Rev Martin (Belfast S)
Snape, Peter
Soley, Clive
Spearing, Nigel
Steel, Rt Hon David
Steinberg, Gerry
Strang, Gavin
Straw, Jack
Taylor, Mrs Ann (Dewsbury)
Taylor, Rt Hon J. D. (S'ford)
Taylor, Matthew (Truro)
Thomas, Dr Dafydd Elis
Thompson, Jack (Wansbeck)
Turner, Dennis
Vaz, Keith
Wall, Pat
Wallace, James
Walley, Joan
Wardell, Gareth (Gower)
Wareing, Robert N.
Watson, Mike (Glasgow, C)
Welsh, Andrew (Angus E)
Wigley, Dafydd
Williams, Rt Hon Alan
Williams, Alan W. (Carm'then)
Winnick, David
Wise, Mrs Audrey
Worthington, Tony
Wray, Jimmy

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Frank Haynes and
Mrs. Llin Golding.

NOES

Adley, Robert
Aitken, Jonathan
Alexander, Richard
Alison, Rt Hon Michael
Allason, Rupert
Amery, Rt Hon Julian
Amess, David
Amos, Alan
Arbuthnot, James
Arnold, Tom (Hazel Grove)
Ashby, David
Aspinwall, Jack
Atkins, Robert
Atkinson, David
Baker, Rt Hon K. (Mole Valley)
Baldry, Tony
Banks, Robert (Harrogate)
Batiste, Spencer
Beaumont-Dark, Anthony
Bellingham, Henry
Bendall, Vivian
Benyon, W.
Bevan, David Gilroy
Biffen, Rt Hon John
Body, Sir Richard
Bonsor, Sir Nicholas
Boscawen, Hon Robert
Boswell, Tim
Bottomley, Mrs Virginia
Bowden, A (Brighton K'pto'n)
Bowden, Gerald (Dulwich)
Bowis, John
Boyson, Rt Hon Dr Sir Rhodes
Braine, Rt Hon Sir Bernard
Brandon-Bravo, Martin
Brazier, Julian
Bright, Graham
Brown, Michael (Brigg & Cl't's)
Browne, John (Winchester)
Bruce, Ian (Dorset South)
Buck, Sir Antony
Burns, Simon
Burt, Alistair
Butcher, John
Butler, Chris
Butterfill, John
Carlisle, John, (Luton N)
Carlisle, Kenneth (Lincoln)
Carrington, Matthew
Carttiss, Michael
Cash, William
Channon, Rt Hon Paul
Chapman, Sydney
Chope, Christopher

Churchill, Mr
Clark, Hon Alan (Plym'th S'n)
Clark, Sir W. (Croydon S)
Colvin, Michael
Conway, Derek
Coombs, Anthony (Wyre F'rest)
Coombs, Simon (Swindon)
Cormack, Patrick
Couchman, James
Cran, James
Critchley, Julian
Currie, Mrs Edwina
Curry, David
Davies, Q. (Stamf'd & Spald'g)
Davis, David (Boothferry)
Day, Stephen
Devlin, Tim
Dicks, Terry
Dorrell, Stephen
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord James
Dover, Den
Dunn, Bob
Dykes, Hugh
Eggar, Tim
Emery, Sir Peter
Evans, David (Welwyn Hatf'd)
Evennett, David
Fallon, Michael
Favell, Tony
Fenner, Dame Peggy
Field, Barry (Isle of Wight)
Finsberg, Sir Geoffrey
Fishburn, John Dudley
Fookes, Dame Janet
Forman, Nigel
Forsyth, Michael (Stirling)
Forth, Eric
Fowler, Rt Hon Norman
Fox, Sir Marcus
Franks, Cecil
Freeman, Roger
Gale, Roger
Gardiner, George
Garel-Jones, Tristan
Gill, Christopher
Gilmour, Rt Hon Sir Ian
Glyn, Dr Alan
Goodhart, Sir Philip
Goodson-Wickes, Dr Charles
Gorman, Mrs Teresa
Gow, Ian
Grant, Sir Anthony (CambsSW)
Greenway, Harry (Ealing N)
Greenway, John (Ryedale)
Gregory, Conal
Griffiths, Sir Eldon (Bury St E')
Griffiths, Peter (Portsmouth N)
Grist, Ian
Ground, Patrick
Grylls, Michael
Gummer, Rt Hon John Selwyn
Hague, William
Hamilton, Hon Archie (Epsom)
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hampson, Dr Keith
Hanley, Jeremy
Hannam, John
Hargreaves, A. (B'ham H'll Gr')
Hargreaves, Ken (Hyndburn)
Harris, David
Haselhurst, Alan
Hawkins, Christopher
Hayes, Jerry
Hayhoe, Rt Hon Sir Barney
Hayward, Robert
Heath, Rt Hon Edward
Heathcoat-Amory, David
Heddle, John
Hicks, Mrs Maureen (Wolv' NE)
Hicks, Robert (Cornwall SE)
Higgins, Rt Hon Terence L.
Hill, James
Hind, Kenneth
Hogg, Hon Douglas (Gr'th'm)
Holt, Richard
Howard, Michael
Howarth, Alan (Strat'd-on-A)
Howarth, G. (Cannock & B'wd)
Howe, Rt Hon Sir Geoffrey
Howell, Ralph (North Norfolk)
Hughes, Robert G. (Harrow W)
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunt, Sir John (Ravensbourne)
Hunter, Andrew
Hurd, Rt Hon Douglas
Irvine, Michael
Irving, Charles
Jack, Michael
Jackson, Robert
Janman, Tim
Jessel, Toby
Johnson Smith, Sir Geoffrey
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert B (Herts W)
Jopling, Rt Hon Michael
Kellett-Bowman, Dame Elaine
Key, Robert
Kilfedder, James
King, Roger (B'ham N'thfield)
Kirkhope, Timothy
Knapman, Roger
Knight, Greg (Derby North)
Knight, Dame Jill (Edgbaston)
Knowles, Michael
Knox, David
Lamont, Rt Hon Norman
Lang, Ian
Latham, Michael
Lawson, Rt Hon Nigel
Lee, John (Pendle)
Leigh, Edward (Gainsbor'gh)
Lennox-Boyd, Hon Mark
Lightbown, David
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lord, Michael
Luce, Rt Hon Richard
Macfarlane, Sir Neil
MacGregor, Rt Hon John
MacKay, Andrew (E Berkshire)
Maclean, David
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, Sir Michael
McNair-Wilson, Sir Patrick
Madel, David
Major, Rt Hon John
Malins, Humfrey
Mans, Keith
Maples, John
Marland, Paul
Marshall, John (Hendon S)
Marshall, Michael (Arundel)
Martin, David (Portsmouth S)
Mates, Michael
Maude, Hon Francis
Mawhinney, Dr Brian
Maxwell-Hyslop, Robin
Mayhew, Rt Hon Sir Patrick
Mellor, David
Meyer, Sir Anthony
Miller, Sir Hal
Mills, Iain
Mitchell, Andrew (Gedling)
Mitchell, Sir David
Moate, Roger
Monro, Sir Hector
Montgomery, Sir Fergus
Morrison, Sir Charles
Morrison, Rt Hon P (Chester)
Moynihan, Hon Colin
Mudd, David
Neale, Gerrard
Neubert, Michael
Newton, Rt Hon Tony
Nicholls, Patrick
Nicholson, David (Taunton)
Nicholson, Emma (Devon West)
Norris, Steve
Onslow, Rt Hon Cranley
Oppenheim, Phillip
Page, Richard
Paice, James
Parkinson, Rt Hon Cecil
Patnick, Irvine
Patten, John (Oxford W)
Pawsey, James
Peacock, Mrs Elizabeth
Porter, Barry (Wirral S)
Porter, David (Waveney)
Portillo, Michael
Price, Sir David
Raison, Rt Hon Timothy
Rathbone, Tim
Redwood, John
Renton, Rt Hon Tim
Rhodes James, Robert
Ridley, Rt Hon Nicholas
Ridsdale, Sir Julian
Rifkind, Rt Hon Malcolm
Roberts, Wyn (Conwy)
Roe, Mrs Marion
Rossi, Sir Hugh
Rowe, Andrew
Rumbold, Mrs Angela
Ryder, Richard
Sackville, Hon Tom
Sainsbury, Hon Tim
Sayeed, Jonathan
Scott, Rt Hon Nicholas
Shaw, David (Dover)
Shaw, Sir Giles (Pudsey)
Shaw, Sir Michael (Scarb')
Shelton, Sir William
Shephard, Mrs G. (Norfolk SW)
Shepherd, Colin (Hereford)
Shepherd, Richard (Aldridge)
Shersby, Michael
Sims, Roger
Skeet, Sir Trevor
Smith, Sir Dudley (Warwick)
Smith, Tim (Beaconsfield)
Soames, Hon Nicholas
Speed, Keith
Speller, Tony
Spicer, Sir Jim (Dorset W)
Spicer, Michael (S Worcs)
Squire, Robin
Stanbrook, Ivor
Stanley, Rt Hon Sir John
Steen, Anthony
Stevens, Lewis
Stewart, Allan (Eastwood)
Stewart, Andy (Sherwood)
Stewart, Rt Hon Ian (Herts N)
Stokes, Sir John
Stradling Thomas, Sir John
Sumberg, David
Summerson, Hugo
Tapsell, Sir Peter
Taylor, Ian (Esher)
Taylor, John M (Solihull)
Taylor, Teddy (S'end E)
Tebbit, Rt Hon Norman
Temple-Morris, Peter
Thatcher, Rt Hon Margaret
Thompson, D. (Calder Valley)
Thompson, Patrick (Norwich N)
Thorne, Neil
Thornton, Malcolm
Thurnham, Peter
Townend, John (Bridlington)
Townsend, Cyril D. (B'heath)
Tracey, Richard
Tredinnick, David
Trippier, David
Trotter, Neville
Twinn, Dr Ian
Vaughan, Sir Gerard
Viggers, Peter
Waddington, Rt Hon David
Wakeham, Rt Hon John
Waldegrave, Hon William
Walden, George
Walker, Bill (T'side North)
Walker, Rt Hon P. (W'coster)
Waller, Gary
Walters, Sir Dennis
Ward, John
Wardle, Charles (Bexhill)
Warren, Kenneth
Watts, John
Whitney, Ray
Widdecombe, Ann
Wiggin, Jerry
Wilkinson, John
Wilshire, David
Winterton, Mrs Ann
Winterton, Nicholas
Wolfson, Mark
Wood, Timothy
Woodcock, Dr. Mike
Yeo, Tim
Young, Sir George (Acton)
Younger, Rt Hon George

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Alastair Goodlad and
Mr. Tony Durant.

Question accordingly negatived.

Amendment proposed, pursuant to Standing Order No. 32 (Calling of amendments at end of debate), at the end of the Question to add:

But humbly regret the absence from the Gracious Speech of any clear commitment to seek early entry to the exchange rate mechanism of the European Monetary System in order to provide a firm framework for the exchange rate and the battle against inflation, to permit lower interest rates and to ensure that this nation is a leader rather than a spectator in the development of European unity.—[Mr. Ashdown.]

Question put, That the amendment be made:

The House divided: Ayes 23, Noes 334.

Division No. 4] [10.13 pm

AYES

Alton, David
Ashdown, Rt Hon Paddy
Barnes, Mrs Rosie (Greenwich)
Beith, A. J.
Bruce, Malcolm (Gordon)
Campbell, Menzies (Fife NE)

Cartwright, John
Ewing, Mrs Margaret (Moray)
Howells, Geraint
Hughes, Simon (Southwark)
Johnston, Sir Russell
Jones, Ieuan (Ynys Môn)
Kennedy, Charles
Livsey, Richard
McGrady, Eddie
Maclennan, Robert
Michie, Mrs Ray (Arg'l & Bute)
Sillars, Jim
Steel, Rt Hon David
Taylor, Matthew (Truro)
Thomas, Dr Dafydd Elis
Welsh, Andrew (Angus E)
Wigley, Dafydd

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. James Wallace and
Mr. Archy Kirkwood.

NOES

Adley, Robert
Aitken, Jonathan
Alexander, Richard
Alison, Rt Hon Michael
Allason, Rupert
Amery, Rt Hon Julian
Amess, David
Amos, Alan
Arbuthnot, James
Arnold, Tom (Hazel Grove)
Ashby, David
Aspinwall, Jack
Atkins, Robert
Atkinson, David
Baker, Rt Hon K. (Mole Valley)
Baldry, Tony
Banks, Robert (Harrogate)
Batiste, Spencer
Beaumont-Dark, Anthony
Beggs, Roy
Bellingham, Henry
Bendall, Vivian
Benyon, W.
Bevan, David Gilroy
Biffen, Rt Hon John
Body, Sir Richard
Boscawen, Hon Robert
Boswell, Tim
Bottomley, Mrs Virginia
Bowden, A (Brighton K'pto'n)
Bowden, Gerald (Dulwich)
Bowis, John
Boyson, Rt Hon Dr Sir Rhodes
Braine, Rt Hon Sir Bernard
Brandon-Bravo, Martin
Brazier, Julian
Bright, Graham
Brown, Michael (Brigg & Cl't's)
Browne, John (Winchester)
Bruce, Ian (Dorset South)
Buck, Sir Antony
Burns, Simon
Burt, Alistair
Butcher, John
Butler, Chris
Butterfill, John
Carlisle, John, (Luton N)
Carlisle, Kenneth (Lincoln)
Carrington, Matthew
Carttiss, Michael
Cash, William
Channon, Rt Hon Paul
Chapman, Sydney
Chope, Christopher
Churchill, Mr
Clark, Hon Alan (Plym'th S'n)
Clark, Sir W. (Croydon S)
Colvin, Michael
Conway, Derek
Coombs, Anthony (Wyre F'rest)
Coombs, Simon (Swindon)
Cormack, Patrick
Couchman, James
Cran, James
Critchley, Julian
Currie, Mrs Edwina
Curry, David
Davies, Q. (Stamf'd & Spald'g)
Davis, David (Boothferry)
Day, Stephen
Devlin, Tim
Dicks, Terry
Dorrell, Stephen
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord James
Dover, Den
Dunn, Bob
Durant, Tony
Dykes, Hugh
Eggar, Tim
Emery, Sir Peter
Evans, David (Welwyn Hatf'd)
Evennett, David
Fallon, Michael
Favell, Tony
Fenner, Dame Peggy
Finsberg, Sir Geoffrey
Fishburn, John Dudley
Fookes, Dame Janet
Forman, Nigel
Forsyth, Michael (Stirling)
Forsythe, Clifford (Antrim S)
Forth, Eric
Fowler, Rt Hon Norman
Fox, Sir Marcus
Franks, Cecil
Freeman, Roger
Gale, Roger
Gardiner, George
Garel-Jones, Tristan
Gill, Christopher
Gilmour, Rt Hon Sir Ian
Glyn, Dr Alan
Goodhart, Sir Philip
Goodson-Wickes, Dr Charles
Gorman, Mrs Teresa
Gorst, John
Gow, Ian
Grant, Sir Anthony (CambsSW)
Greenway, Harry (Ealing N)
Greenway, John (Ryedale)
Gregory, Conal
Griffiths, Sir Eldon (Bury St E')
Griffiths, Peter (Portsmouth N)
Grist, Ian
Ground, Patrick
Grylls, Michael
Gummer, Rt Hon John Selwyn
Hague, William
Hamilton, Hon Archie (Epsom)
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hampson, Dr Keith
Hanley, Jeremy
Hannam, John
Hargreaves, A. (B'ham H'll Gr')
Hargreaves, Ken (Hyndburn)
Harris, David
Haselhurst, Alan
Hawkins, Christopher
Hayes, Jerry
Hayhoe, Rt Hon Sir Barney
Hayward, Robert
Heath, Rt Hon Edward
Heathcoat-Amory, David
Heddle, John
Hicks, Mrs Maureen (Wolv' NE)
Hicks, Robert (Cornwall SE)
Higgins, Rt Hon Terence L.
Hill, James
Hind, Kenneth
Hogg, Hon Douglas (Gr'th'm)
Holt, Richard
Howard, Michael
Howarth, Alan (Strat'd-on-A)
Howarth, G. (Cannock & B'wd)
Howe, Rt Hon Sir Geoffrey
Howell, Ralph (North Norfolk)
Hughes, Robert G. (Harrow W)
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunt, Sir John (Ravensbourne)
Hunter, Andrew
Hurd, Rt Hon Douglas
Irvine, Michael
Irving, Charles
Jack, Michael
Jackson, Robert
Janman, Tim
Jessel, Toby
Johnson Smith, Sir Geoffrey
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert B (Herts W)
Jopling, Rt Hon Michael
Kellett-Bowman, Dame Elaine
Key, Robert
Kilfedder, James
King, Roger (B'ham N'thfield)
Kirkhope, Timothy
Knapman, Roger
Knight, Greg (Derby North)
Knight, Dame Jill (Edgbaston)
Knowles, Michael
Knox, David
Lamont, Rt Hon Norman
Lang, Ian
Latham, Michael
Lawson, Rt Hon Nigel
Lee, John (Pendle)
Leigh, Edward (Gainsbor'gh)
Lennox-Boyd, Hon Mark
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lord, Michael
Luce, Rt Hon Richard
Macfarlane, Sir Neil
MacGregor, Rt Hon John
MacKay, Andrew (E Berkshire)
Maclean, David
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, Sir Michael
McNair-Wilson, Sir Patrick
Madel, David
Major, Rt Hon John
Malins, Humfrey
Mans, Keith
Maples, John
Marland, Paul
Marshall, John (Hendon S)
Marshall, Michael (Arundel)
Martin, David (Portsmouth S)
Mates, Michael
Maude, Hon Francis
Mawhinney, Dr Brian
Maxwell-Hyslop, Robin
Mayhew, Rt Hon Sir Patrick
Mellor, David
Meyer, Sir Anthony
Miller, Sir Hal
Mills, Iain
Mitchell, Sir David
Moate, Roger
Molyneaux, Rt Hon James
Monro, Sir Hector
Montgomery, Sir Fergus
Morrison, Sir Charles
Morrison, Rt Hon P (Chester)
Moynihan, Hon Colin
Mudd, David
Neale, Gerrard
Nelson, Anthony
Neubert, Michael
Newton, Rt Hon Tony
Nicholls, Patrick
Nicholson, David (Taunton)
Nicholson, Emma (Devon West)
Norris, Steve
Onslow, Rt Hon Cranley
Oppenheim, Phillip
Page, Richard
Paice, James
Paisley, Rev Ian
Parkinson, Rt Hon Cecil
Patnick, Irvine
Patten, John (Oxford W)
Pawsey, James
Peacock, Mrs Elizabeth
Porter, Barry (Wirral S)
Porter, David (Waveney)
Portillo, Michael
Price, Sir David
Raison, Rt Hon Timothy
Rathbone, Tim
Redwood, John
Renton, Rt Hon Tim
Rhodes James, Robert
Ridley, Rt Hon Nicholas
Ridsdale, Sir Julian
Rifkind, Rt Hon Malcolm
Roberts, Wyn (Conwy)
Roe, Mrs Marion
Ross, William (Londonderry E)
Rossi, Sir Hugh
Rowe, Andrew
Rumbold, Mrs Angela
Ryder, Richard
Sackville, Hon Tom
Sainsbury, Hon Tim
Sayeed, Jonathan
Scott, Rt Hon Nicholas
Shaw, David (Dover)
Shaw, Sir Giles (Pudsey)
Shaw, Sir Michael (Scarb')
Shelton, Sir William
Shephard, Mrs G. (Norfolk SW)
Shepherd, Colin (Hereford)
Shepherd, Richard (Aldridge)
Shersby, Michael
Sims, Roger
Skeet, Sir Trevor
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, Sir Dudley (Warwick)
Smith, Tim (Beaconsfield)
Smyth, Rev Martin (Belfast S)
Soames, Hon Nicholas
Speed, Keith
Speller, Tony
Spicer, Sir Jim (Dorset W)
Spicer, Michael (S Worcs)
Squire, Robin
Stanbrook, Ivor
Stanley, Rt Hon Sir John
Steen, Anthony
Stevens, Lewis
Stewart, Allan (Eastwood)
Stewart, Andy (Sherwood)
Stewart, Rt Hon Ian (Herts N)
Stokes, Sir John
Stradling Thomas, Sir John
Sumberg, David
Summerson, Hugo
Tapsell, Sir Peter
Taylor, Ian (Esher)
Taylor, Rt Hon J. D. (S'ford)
Taylor, John M (Solihull)
Taylor, Teddy (S'end E)
Tebbit, Rt Hon Norman

Temple-Morris, Peter
Thatcher, Rt Hon Margaret
Thompson, D. (Calder Valley)
Thompson, Patrick (Norwich N)
Thorne, Neil
Thornton, Malcolm
Thurnham, Peter
Townend, John (Bridlington)
Townsend, Cyril D. (B'heath)
Tracey, Richard
Tredinnick, David
Trippier, David
Trotter, Neville
Twinn, Dr Ian
Vaughan, Sir Gerard
Viggers, Peter
Waddington, Rt Hon David
Wakeham, Rt Hon John
Walden, George
Walker, Bill (T'side North)
Walker, Rt Hon P. (W'cester)
Waller, Gary
Walters, Sir Dennis
Ward, John
Wardle, Charles (Bexhill)
Warren, Kenneth
Watts, John
Whitney, Ray
Widdecombe, Ann
Wiggin, Jerry
Wilkinson, John
Wilshire, David
Winterton, Mrs Ann
Winterton, Nicholas
Wolfson, Mark
Wood, Timothy
Woodcock, Dr. Mike
Yeo, Tim
Young, Sir George (Acton)
Younger, Rt Hon George

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Alistair Goodlad and
Mr. David Lightbown.

Question accordingly negatived.

Main Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, as follows:

Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

To be presented by Privy Councillors or Members of Her Majesty's Household.

PETITIONS

Deaf People (Broadcasting)

10.25 pm

Mr. Roger Sims (Chislehurst): I am pleased to present a petition signed by my constituents and those of my hon. Friends the Members for Ravensbourne (Sir J. Hunt), for Beckenham (Sir P. Goodhart) and for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook), and others on behalf of the deaf and hard of hearing. It bears more than 1,200 signatures, and urges that the 4 million of our fellow citizens who have little or no hearing should be able to enjoy television programmes through a far greater provision of teletext subtitling and sign language accompanying the programmes.

The advent of television in the House emphasises the need for such facilities, and the forthcoming broadcasting Bill will give an opportunity to oblige the BBC and television companies to provide it. I fully support the petitioners' pleas.

To lie upon the Table.

10.26 pm

Mr. John Garrett (Norwich, South): I am pleased to present a petition from the Norfolk and Norwich deaf sports and social club concerning facilities on television for the deaf. The material allegations are that broadcasters are not providing complete access to deaf television viewers —for example, subtitles or sign language. At least 4 million viewers are affected.

Deaf viewers, as equal members of the general public, are entitled to equal access to television programmes. There are 741 signatories to the petition, and the prayer is as follows:

that your Honourable House will ensure that legislation be passed placing an obligation on Television channel operators to make their programmes more accessible to deaf people by using teletext subtitles, sign language or other means, and to reach complete coverage by a fixed date. And your petitioners, as in duty bound will ever pray.

To lie upon the Table.

Victoria Hospital, Accrington

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. John M. Taylor.]

10.27 pm

Mr. Ken Hargreaves (Hyndburn): I am grateful for the opportunity to raise the subject of the future of Victoria hospital, Accrington.

Thousands of people have signed petitions and written to their Members of Parliament and to the Secretary of State. A public meeting has been held. The chief executive of Hyndburn borough council has agreed that the lead in the campaign for Victoria hospital must be taken by the local authority.

Thousands of people have signed petitions and written to their Member of Parliament and to the Secretary of State. A public meeting has been held. The chief executive of Hyndburn borough council has agreed that the lead in the campaign for Victoria hospital must be taken by the local authority.

I have not made a mistake and repeated the first paragraph of my speech. The first paragraph referred to the position described in the Accrington Observer and Times of Saturday 7 October 1978; the second described what has happened since the meeting of the district health authority on 6 September 1989, when it was agreed that the Victoria should be a community hospital.

It is clear from the two passages that we are fighting the same battle now that we fought 11 years ago. It is equally clear that the people of Hyndburn wish to unite and fight. It is not a party political issue. In 1978, when the Victoria hospital's problems first arose, we had a Labour Government, a Labour Member of Parliament and a Conservative council. In 1989, we have a Conservative Government, a Conservative Member of Parliament and a Labour council. Those who try to turn the campaign into a party political battle do no service to Accrington Victoria hospital or to the people of Hyndburn.

Accrington Victoria hospital was founded in 1894 as a cottage hospital. It was paid for by public subscription, not least by people who worked for low wages contributing so much each week from their wages. No doubt that is part of the reason why is it held in such affection and why attempts to reduce services are met with such strong hostility, but that is only part of the reason. Over the years, we have come to recognise the superb care that patients receive from its dedicated staff, its friendly, almost family atmosphere and the special, almost indefinable quality that it has, which I have not experienced in any other hospital in which I have been a patient. For that reason, four years ago when I had major surgery, I chose to go to Accrington Victoria hospital. It was a difficult time, but four years on I am a good advertisement for the skill and dedicated care of the hospital.

Experts now tell us that surgery should be withdrawn and that services should be centralised on one site. They say that that is better for us. Experts once told us that we should demolish terraced houses and build high-rise flats. Ordinary folk said that they were wrong, and ordinary folk have been proved right. The same applies to Accrington Victoria hospital. Ordinary folk do not need experts to tell us what is best for us—we know instinctively. We know that for our benefit we want to retain the widest possible range of services at Accrington Victoria.

Over the years, services have been withdrawn from Accrington Victoria, and often the withdrawal of one service has been the reason for the withdrawal of the next. In 1952, the eye wards were no longer used as such. In 1962, the department of pathology no longer matched blood for transfusions, and shortly afterwards the pathology laboratory was closed.

In the early 1970s, junior doctors from the surgical and medical departments no longer helped by doing evening and weekend sessions in the casualty department. In 1978, it would have been closed on the retirement of its long-serving and distinguished senior casualty officer, Mr. J. H. Armstrong, but for local GPs stepping in and agreeing to staff it.

In 1979, the unit was no longer allowed to accept 999 calls. In 1984, the children's ward was closed temporarily, without notice or consultation, and never reopened. In 1985, the district health authority announced that it was to press for the closure of the maternity unit, which had been opened only eight years earlier, to have a greater chance of succeeding in getting the new high-tech maternity unit at Queen's Park hospital, Blackburn, in the region's capital programme. Many local GPs spoke out against the proposal.

In 1985, it was announced that Accrington Victoria was to be the site of a new renal unit. Ward 4 was closed in preparation and two staff were sent on a training course. It transpired that there had been some misunderstanding and that there was no guarantee that it would get the renal unit. The ward remained padlocked. I had an angry meeting with Sir John Page, the regional chairman, and it was eventually agreed that the unit will open at Accrington next year, ward 4 having been closed for four years.

Last year, the district health authority proposed to reduce the hours of opening of the minor injuries unit and to close GP ward 6. I sent a message to the meeting to inform it that an extra allocation of resources for the Health Service had just been announced and urged that the decision be delayed until we knew by how much our area would benefit. We received £250,000 and the ward and the unit were kept open.

In December 1988, the deputy dean of postgraduate studies at Manchester university informed the authority that trainee surgeons would no longer be sent to Accrington Victoria to train. In September 1989, the district health authority voted to develop Accrington Victoria as a community hospital. Earlier this month, it proposed the closure of wards 5 and 7 and a possible reduction in the hours of the minor injuries unit.

Finally in this saga, I refer to the maternity unit at Accrington Victoria. The Minister will be aware of the situation regarding maternity facilities at Queen's Park hospital because he replied to an Adjournment debate in April in which I urged that the new unit at Queen's Park —promised since 1979—be found a place in the capital programme. I explained at the time that the district health authority felt that, because of the dramatic increase in the birth rate, it would shortly have to turn patients away. The authority had decided that it had no option but to build a temporary unit at a cost of £300,000.

Thanks to the debate and to the Minister's intervention, that much-needed 19-bed temporary unit is to be built at the region's expense. Unfortunately, the district health authority has decided that, to staff it, the maternity units at Accrington Victoria and at Bramley Meade will close. That was not made clear when I made the plea on their behalf. As yet, I have been unable to work out how closing 35 beds to staff a 19-bed unit is necessary or an improvement on what was supposed to be a desperate problem. Given that the district administrator, Mr. Paul Whitfield, had said in 1982

"that the proposals do not mean either the closure or downgrading of Accrington Victoria hospital. Between now and 1995, there will be little change at Accrington Victoria hospital" and bearing in mind the events since 1978, and earlier, which I have outlined, it is not hard to understand the state of morale at the hospital. The staff are to be congratulated on their excellent work in difficult and uncertain times.

The people of Hyndburn now find it difficult to accept the continuing reassurances that Accrington Victoria hospital will not close. Since 1978, they have been actively campaigning for the hospital. At a public meeting held in May 1979, 700 people packed the town hall, with more than 100 people being turned away. They were all objecting to the plan put forward by the Blackburn district hospital management committee to remove surgical facilities and the children's ward and downgrade Accrington Victoria to a geriatric and community hospital. The people of Hyndburn were supported in their opposition by the then Member of Parliament, Arthur Davidson, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Waddington) and my hon. Friend the Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier). As mayor of Hyndburn at the time, I spoke against the plans on behalf of the council.

In 1982, when we were beginning to feel that our campaign was succeeding, we were faced with a consultative paper, issued by the district health authority and entitled "District Strategy". Option 2, which proposed an 1,100-bed district general hospital sited at Queen's Park hospital, Blackburn, with community support throughout the district, was just a restatement of the 1978 proposals. Accrington Victoria was to be developed as a community hospital and in that role would have acute beds, with a substantial long-stay element of geriatric beds and day places. It would have an ESMI—elderly severely mentally ill—unit and retain some beds for routine surgery and support the overall maternity provision at Queen's Park hospital.

Option 3, which had the support of the people of Accrington and many from the surrounding area, would have seen the retention of the three existing acute hospitals in that role, together providing a district general hospital service. Queen's park hospital would have been the major hospital with 630 beds, while Accrington Victoria hospital would have largely retained its present acute and maternity role plus the ESMI unit, with 185 beds and 75 day places. The major attraction of this option was that it apparently reflected governmental thinking since 1979 whereby the 600-bed size for the principal hospital in a district is considered advantageous, with a more flexible role retained for smaller hospitals.

To our regret, the district health authority chose option 2, but part two of the resolution adopted said:

"Accrington Victoria hospital should continue in its present role for at least 10 years, that is until after development at Queen's Park hospital as set out in the region's ten year capital programme."

It is clear that that part of the resolution has not been adhered to. When I met the chairman of the district health authority, Mr. Ian Woolley, on 20 November to discuss the latest proposals, he said:

"The district general manager presented a paper on the 28th July 1989 to members identifying many options. The Members recommended the community hospital option to a full meeting of the health authority which was held on the 6th September 1989. When Accrington Victoria hospital becomes a community hospital, it will have far more acute and rehabilitation beds for local people of all ages, run by the GP's, plus a variety of other services including physiotherapy, radiography, minor injuries, day hospital for the elderly. In addition, there will be clinic facilities e.g. dental facilities, out patient consultant clinics, ESMI unit and the renal unit."

In view of the earlier fears that a community hospital would be nothing more than a geriatric hospital, which would be unacceptable, the present proposals are an improvement, but the people of Hyndburn still believe, as I do, that the hospital has a more important role to play in the life of the community than the one envisaged, given that we have a population of 80,000. The new Zeri theme park that is being built at Hyndburn is likely to attract 40,000 visitors a day when it is opened early in the 1990s, and it will put further pressure on hospital services.

Our worries about the present decision are increased by the fact that the proposals for a community hospital depend on the co-operation of local general practitioners. They have expressed an interest, but they have not agreed to staff it. Mr. Woolley is setting up a working party of GPs and others to work out the details. It seems that, with the best will in the world, we are still a considerable way from having a community hospital in Accrington. In the meantime, existing services continue to be whittled away, and it is possible that worse is still to come.

On 22 December the Royal College of Surgeons makes its quinquennial visit to review all surgical posts at senior house officer and registrar level throughout the district. The temporary recognition of these posts at the Accrington Victoria hospital will be reviewed, and the recognition will be extended or cancelled. Mr. Woolley feels that temporary recognition may be withdrawn. He has assured me that if that happens he will go to the regional health authority to ask for permission to continue advertising posts without recognition. Withdrawal of recognition will make it even more difficult, if not impossible, to recruit junior doctors.

Despite all this, the possible proposals to close two wards and to reduce the hours of the minor injuries unit, with accreditation likely to be withdrawn on 22 December, when I asked Mr. Woolley whether the hospital was to be closed he said:

"We have absolutely no intention to close the hospital on the 22 December or on any other date."

The people of Hyndburn, to a man, want to believe that, but the experience of the past 11 to 20 years has made them sceptical. They will need a great deal of convincing that the intention is not to concentrate services at Queen's Park hospital. The knowledge that in 1982 the district health authority spent 12·4 per cent. of its budget on the AVH and now spends only 11·1 per cent.—a reduction of £400,000 per year—does little to reassure them.

The man in the street is bewildered. After years of campaigning for our maternity unit, we find that after only eight years of operation the DHA proposes to close it. Last year, tens of thousands of pounds were spent upgrading the former children's ward for use as an orthopaedic ward; now it is proposed for possible closure. The minor injuries unit last year dealt with 42,946 cases—27,778 new patients and 15,168 return patients. During the hours when it is proposed in future to close the unit, 15,184 patients were treated. Where will they go? The majority will have to go to Blackburn Royal infirmary.

[Mr. Ken Hargreaves]

Can the Blackburn Royal infirmary cope, given that the community health council reported recently that patients were waiting up to five hours for treatment? I know that Mr. Woolley is concerned about waiting at the BRI, and the problem is the subject of a study. He assures me that waiting times have been reduced. Nevertheless, to add a further 10,000 patients to an existing problem does not seem to make sense.

It would be remiss of me if, on behalf of the people of Hyndburn, I did not pay tribute to the Accrington Observer & Times for the continued support and enormous coverage that it has given this issue since 1978. The material that I have brought with me is a sample of what it has produced over those years. The campaign could so easily have floundered without that support. I pay tribute to the many people who have been involved in the campaign for so many years. They have all worked extremely hard. I pay tribute especially to Councillor Bill Parkinson, whose hard work has earned him the respect of all sections of the community.

The people of Hyndburn have had enough. We want to be certain that the Accrington Victoria hospital will continue to play an important role in health provision in the district, we want to retain the widest possible range of services at the AVH, and we want a plan for the future of the hospital that is acceptable to the people of Hyndburn as well as to the district health authority. Most important of all, once a plan is accepted it should be strictly adhered to so that the staff at the hospital feel secure. Until we get that plan, we seek assurances that no further services will be withdrawn.

10.43 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Roger Freeman): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) on raising this important topic that deserves to be debated fully in the House and the local community. I have replied to many Adjournment debates this year and it gives me great pleasure to reply to my hon. Friend for a second time. I know that he holds dear the best interests of his constituents. He fights for them valiantly, is a great supporter of the health services in his constituency and pays close attention to their needs. The fact that he spoke from the heart about his constituents' needs clearly impressed other hon. Members. My hon Friends the Members for Basildon (Mr. Amess), for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) and for Great Yarmouth (Mr. Carttiss) are present to support him, not for a constituency interest but to pay tribute to his determination, personal courage and diligence in representing his constituents.

Acute services in the district are spread three ways: between Blackburn Royal infirmary, Queen's Park hospital and the Accrington Victoria hospital. My hon. Friend will agree that it would not be wise for central Government to attempt to do detailed planning of local acute services. Whitehall does not have the expertise or the local knowledge to match that available to local managers. That is why the Government have made a priority of developing strong, local management in the Health Service.

Before turning to the important issues affecting the Accrington Victoria hospital, I should like to outline the Government's approach to strengthening Health Service management and increasing resources to the NHS, particularly in the North Western region and the Blackburn health authority.

For many years management in the hospital service was hampered by the concept of collegiate leadership. That appeared to mean that no decision was ever made unless the medical, nursing, administrative and other interests could be reconciled. The system did not encourage careful, deliberate preparation and implementation of realistic plans. Unfortunately, it was a recipe for procrastination. The results are still with us in the shape of unsuitable buildings, poor maintenance and duplicated services. The appointment of general managers to be responsible for the performance of each hospital unit, district and regional authority has done much to focus management effort.

The Government's plans for changes in the NHS, which were presented to Parliament last week, include the appointment of smaller district authorities that should be able to work better with general managers in controlling the use of Health Service resources. Therefore, my first point is that following the first Griffiths's report we shall set up a management structure in the Health Service designed for clear leadership and support for smaller district health authorities, if the Bill is enacted. We shall then delegate responsibility and let local general managers and health authorities make decisions.

In last week's debate, which was initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack), we had a helpful discussion of the Government's intentions on resources for hospital and community health services next year. I pointed to an increase next year of 8·5 per cent. in cash terms, which in real terms, after an assumed 5 per cent. rate of inflation, is an increase of about 3·4 per cent. I assure the House that I am happy to repeat that the North Western regional allocation in 1990-91 will be higher in real terms than this year's figures. There will be real growth in resources.

In a few weeks' time the actual cash allocation will be known and then the North Western regional health authority can calculate each district's specific allocation. We expect those allocations to be made in the early months of next year. In the meantime, the over-pessimistic planning assumption in the north-west has meant that the districts have expected a cut in resources of 0·3 per cent., which has led them to examine the current pattern of service provision in search of efficiency savings. I am happy to be able to reassure my hon. Friend that those pessimistic assumptions are no longer valid. There will be real growth for the north-west and for the districts, consequent upon the specific allocations by the region.

Let me deal with the preoccupations and plans of the Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley health authority. A few weeks ago, it met to consider its short-term programme for 1990-91, which has since been passed to the regional health authority. This is a comprehensive document and contains an impressive record of achievements.

The district authority has pledged to at least maintain the level of general acute services in the district. I hope that it will be able to do very much better than that. The authority is examining the way in which these acute services are provided in three hospitals—the Blackburn royal infirmary, Queen's Park hospital and Accrington Victoria. It should be noted that the district is currently achieving the highest ever levels of acute and other services. Since 1982, in-patient treatments have increased by 10 per cent., out-patient treatments by 15 per cent. and day cases by 20 per cent.

The question remaining is why the role of Accrington Victoria hospital should be reviewed. I am advised by the district general manager that the Accrington Victoria hospital lost its accreditation for the medical training of pre-registration junior doctors in November 1988, among other reasons, because there were not sufficient senior doctors with time available to give supervision to their junior colleagues. That arose in part because their duties were split between the three acute hospitals that I have mentioned.

I am further advised that representatives of the Royal College of Surgeons will be visiting the hospital in December—as my hon. Friend said—to consider whether the number and type of surgery cases dealt with there can any longer justify the hospital's accreditation for the training of senior house officers. The question arises whether the cases dealt with at the hospital include a sufficient number of major trauma cases to provide a broad range of experience for senior house officers. One of the criteria that the Royal College of Surgeons may well use is the existing size and scope of services at the hospital —doubtless a function of past decisions about what should be provided at the hospital. It is the proper job of the royal college to review the present range of services to see whether appropriate experience is being gained.

Against that background of changed requirements, developments elsewhere in the district and the consequences of the loss of accreditation, it was clearly the duty of the district health authority to consider what future services should be provided at the Accrington Victoria. The district health authority held a public meeting in Hyndburn on 16 May 1989 and further discussions on the provision of acute services followed in July and September. The district authority resolved that proposals to develop a community hospital at Accrington Victoria should be pursued.

That option, considered by the authority in September 1989, envisaged the transfer from Accrington Victoria of 25 surgical beds and an equal number of orthopaedic beds and the transfer in of a day hospital for the elderly and, possibly, an associated day centre for the elderly. The renal unit, out-patient clinic, minor injuries unit and existing beds for the elderly would be retained at Accrington Victoria. I have noted the possibility of Accrington Victoria becoming a community hospital and the fact that the district health authority's proposal envisages the future long-term use of the hospital for community services. I think that that will greatly reassure local residents.

The first of two assurances that I want to give my hon. Friend is that in the event of any proposal to reorganise services at Accrington Victoria or to close the hospital completely, the proposal must come to Ministers for final decision if the community health council objects. The process of considering the future deployment of services has only just begun, but if the CHC objects to any proposal concerning the reorganisation of services—I am advised that there is no prospect of the closure of the hospital—that proposal must come to Ministers.

I do not want to go into the merits of the case for centralising the acute services at Blackburn Royal infirmary and maternity and gynaecology services at Queen's Park hospital. That decision is essentially a local matter. The services are for people in the Blackburn area, and their views must be heard. I do not think that the authority can be faulted for its openness in setting out the issues in papers considered by the authority and discussed in public.

I remind my hon. Friend of the three key issues that have emerged in this debate. First, it must be remembered that, since 1978-79, the Government have increased resources for the North Western region by 13 per cent., and the increase next year for the NHS as a whole will be 3·4 per cent. in real terms. The exact amount for the North Western region and the Blackburn authority has yet to be decided.

Secondly, major developments in the region and in Blackburn at the Queen's park hospital are at the highest ever level, and inevitably require the review of existing patterns of service elsewhere in the authority area. Thirdly, the district authority should, as far as possible, be left to arrive at local solutions that meet the financial targets that have been set, but match as closely as possible the needs of the local population.

I come now to my second assurance. Although I have no desire to interfere with the proper local management of the Health Service, I can assure my hon. Friend that I shall come to visit his constituency and the hospital service there before any final decisions are taken. I do that not in a spirit of wanting to interfere with the district or the region but to express, with my hon. Friend, my interest in and dedication to the improvement of services for his constituents, as for the entire population of the country, in an improved quantity and quality of services in the NHS.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at four minutes to Eleven o'clock.

House of Commons

Wednesday 29 November 1989

The House met at half-past Two o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

MESSAGE FROM THE QUEEN

QUEEN'S SPEECH (ANSWER TO ADDRESS)

THE VICE-CHAMBERLAIN OF THE HOUSEHOLD reported Her Majesty's Answer to the Address as follows:

I have received with great satisfaction the loyal and dutiful expression of your thanks for the Speech with which I opened the present Session of Parliament.

PRIVATE BUSINESS

PRIVATE BILLS (PROCEDURE)

Motion made,

That—the Promoters of every Private Bill which originated in this House in the last Session and which is listed in Schedule A to this Order, or which originated in the House of Lords in the last Session and which is listed in Schedule B to this Order may, notwithstanding anything in the Standing Orders or practice of this House, proceed with the Bill in the present Session; and the Petition for the Bill shall be deemed to have been deposited and all Standing Orders applicable thereto shall be deemed to have been complied with;

—every such Bill which originated in this House shall be presented to the House not later than the seventh day after this day;

—there shall be deposited with every Bill so presented a Declaration signed by the Agent for the Bill, stating that the Bill is the same, in every respect, as the Bill at the last stage of its proceedings in this House in the last Session;

—every Bill so presented shall be laid by one of the Clerks in the Private Bill Office upon the Table of the House on the next meeting of the House after the day on which the Bill was presented;

—every Bill listed in Part I of Schedule A shall, after being so laid on the Table, be deemed to have been read the first, second, and third time, and shall pass;

—every Bill listed in Part II of Schedule A shall, after being so laid on the Table, be deemed to have been read the first and second time and reported from Committee and ordered to lie upon the Table;

—when any Bill originating in the Lords, which was brought from the House of Lords in the last Session and to which this Order relates, is brought from the Lords in the present Session, the Agent for the Bill shall deposit in the Private Bill Office a Declaration, signed by him, stating that the Bill is the same, in every respect, as the Bill which was brought from the Lords in the last Session, and, as soon as a certificate by one of the Clerks in the Private Bill Office that such a Declaration has been so deposited has been laid upon the Table of the House, the Bill shall be deemed—

(i) in the case of the Buckinghamshire County Council Bill [Lords], the London Local Authorities Bill [Lords], the South Yorkshire Light Rail Transit Bill [Lords] and the United Medical and Dental Schools Bill [Lords], to have been read the first and second time and committed and shall be committed to the Chairman of Ways and Means, who shall make such amendments thereto as have been made by the Committee in the last Session, and shall report the Bill as amended to the House forthwith, and the Bill, so amended, shall be ordered to lie upon the Table;

(ii) in the case of the Nottingham Park Estate Bill [Lords], to have been read the first and second time and committed;

(iii) in the case of the Medway Tunnel Bill [Lords] and the Vale of Glamorgan (Barry Harbour) Bill [Lords], to have been read the first time and ordered to be read a second time;

(iv) in the case of the Greater Manchester (Light Rapid Transit System) (No. 3) Bill [Lords], to have been read the first time and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills;

—in respect of all the Bills listed in Schedules A and B to this Order, the various stages deemed to have been taken shall be recorded in the Journal of this House as having been taken;

—only such Petitions as were presented against any Bill brought from the Lords in the last Session which stood referred to the Committee on the Bill and which have not been withdrawn shall stand referred to the Committee on the Bill with the same title in the present Session;

—in relation to any Bill to which this Order applies Standing Order 127 relating to Private Business shall have effect as if the words "under Standing Order 126 (Reference to Committee of Petitions against Bill)" were omitted;

—in respect of any Bill originating in the House of Lords to which this Order relates and upon which the Examiners have reported in the last Session that no Standing Order not previously inquired into was applicable thereto, the Examiners shall, if the Bill is brought from the Lords in the present Session, be deemed to have made the same report in the present Session;

—no further Fees shall be charged in respect of any proceedings on any of the Bills to which this Order relates so far as Fees were incurred during the last Session;

—this House doth concur with the Lords in their Resolution contained in their Message [22nd November] relating to the River Tees Barrage and Crossing Bill [Lords], the Happisburgh Lighthouse Bill [Lords], the Great Yarmouth Port Authority Bill [Lords], the Southampton Rapid Transit Bill [Lords], the Heathrow Express Railway Bill [Lords], the London Local Authorities (No. 2) Bill [Lords] and the Greater Manchester (Light Rapid Transit System) Bill [Lords].

Schedule A

Part I

1. City of London (Spitalfields Market) Bill
2. Hythe Marina Village (Southampton) Wavescreen Bill
3. Isle of Wight Bill
4. New Southgate Cemetery and Crematorium Limited Bill
5. St. George's Hill, Weybridge, Estate Bill
6. Penzance Albert Pier Extension Bill

Part II

1. British Film Institute Southbank Bill
2. British Railways Bill
3. City of London (Various Powers) Bill
4. Redbridge London Borough Council Bill

Schedule B

1. Buckinghamshire County Council Bill [Lords]
2. London Local Authorities Bill [Lords]
3. South Yorkshire Light Rail Transit Bill [Lords]
4. United Medical and Dental Schools Bill [Lords]
5. Nottingham Park Estate Bill [Lords]
6. Medway Tunnel Bill [Lords]
7. Vale of Glamorgan (Barry Harbour) Bill [Lords]
8. Greater Manchester (Light Rapid Transit System) (No. 3) Bill [Lords]—[The Chairman of Ways and Means.]

Hon. Members: Object.

To be considered on Thursday 30 November.

SCOTTISH EPISCOPAL CLERGY WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' FUND ORDER CONFIRMATION

Mr. Secretary Rifkind presented a Bill to confirm a Provisional Order under section 7 of the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act 1936, relating to the Scottish Episcopal Clergy Widows' and Orphans' Fund; and the same was read the First time; and ordered to be considered on Tuesday 5 December and to be printed. [Bill 6.]

Oral Answers to Questions

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Romania

1. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new representations he intends to make to the President of Romania on human rights.

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. William Waldegrave): We will continue to protest strongly to the Romanian Government on every appropriate occasion about their appalling human rights performance.

Mr. Flynn: Does the Minister agree that today's news of the escape of Nadia Comaneci proves once again that life in Romania is unbearable, even for its top privileged people? Has he noticed that Ceaucescu has called on the butchers of Tiananmen square to join him in a crusade to make permanent the Stalinist gulags of China and Romania? Will the Minister today announce a counter-crusade by East and West—a panEuropean crusade—using the powerful instruments of broadcasting and international pressure to persuade and to encourage Romania on its long march towards democracy?

Mr. Waldegrave: The hon. Gentleman has already played some part in such a crusade. I know that he has been broadcasting on the BBC, which has helped to keep alive the guttering flame of freedom in Romania. I shall certainly talk to the BBC authorities to see what can be done to help through the Romanian language service of the world service.

Mr. Hunter: In his dealings with President Ceaucescu on human rights, will my hon. Friend bear in mind the fact that the further isolation of Romania will achieve little? Will he seek to explore and improve the existing contact through trade that is to the advantage of the United Kingdom and Romania?

Mr. Waldegrave: I take a rather different view from my hon. Friend on this matter. We do not intend to interfere particularly with trade, but this is a time to bring all pressure to bear on Romania. That Her Majesty's Government have been making some headway on this may be evidenced by the fact that recently, on instructions, the Romanian abassador accused me of menacing revisionist Hungarian plots. That may show that we are making some progress.

Mr. Skinner: Did the Minister see the report the other day that the President of Romania got 67 standing ovations? Is there any truth in the rumour that the British Prime Minister will continue in office until the Tory party conference gives her——

Mr. Speaker: Order. Supplementary questions must be made relevant.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is our privilege to be able to make such jokes. If only such jokes were available to the inhabitants of Romania.

Drugs

2. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his plans for an international conference in London on reducing the demand for cocaine and other illegal drugs.

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Douglas Hurd): Her Majesty's Government are holding a world summit of Ministers in London in April 1990 to look at ways of reducing the demand for drugs, and confronting in particular the growing threat from cocaine and crack. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will open the summit and President Barco of Colombia and the Secretary-General of the United Nations have both agreed to speak.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: My right hon. Friend will agree that if this 20th century evil is to be defeated every individual, family and community must be made aware of the problem and must be prepared to will the means to defeat it. My right hon. Friend, in his previous high office of Home Secretary, took a lead role nationally and internationally in this matter. How many Departments are co-operating at home, and at what level? Apart from the London conference, what plans does my right hon. Friend have to take this matter further internationally?

Mr. Hurd: On the second point, the United Nations general assembly will hold a special session on drugs from 20 to 23 February. I hope very much to attend and to speak on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, as I mean to retain the personal involvement to which my hon. Friend kindly referred.

It now falls to my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary to take the lead in co-ordinating the efforts of all the Departments involved—not just in enforcement, although that is important, but in education and in reducing the demand for drugs, which in my view is even more important.

Mr. Vaz: The Foreign Secretary should be aware that in the past two years the amount of crack seizures in Britain has increased 20 times. Does he agree that the main thrust of conferences such as that to be held in London should not necessarily be international co-operation between Governments, but learning from the experiences and failures of countries such as America? America has established cocaine helplines and the Select Committee on Home Affairs has been urging our Government to do likewise. Does he agree that we should look at the examples of preventive measures that have been introduced by other nations?

Mr. Hurd: Certainly it needs enforcement and prevention. Enforcement is crucial, and we shall press ahead as fast as we can with negotiating agreements with other countries for the confiscation of the assets of drug traffickers. Eleven such agreements are now in place and I shall be looking for more. The hon. Gentleman is right that we must also learn from the experiences, good and bad, of other countries, in particular the United States. In some places effective preventive measures have been introduced, but in others they have not and we need to learn from both experiences.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: In acknowledging the decisions taken by the Government to tackle the drugs problem—demonstrated by initiative after initiative—and welcoming the international conference, may I ask my right hon. Friend whether he is satisfied that our European partners and international friends recognise sufficiently the seriousness of the problem that we face?

Mr. Hurd: Yes, I think so. In my previous job I had occasion to discuss it with all the European Ministers of the Twelve who were involved. Although the approach is somewhat different in some countries, they all realise the danger. That is particularly true of the countries of the southern part of Europe—Italy and Spain—which recognise the danger of becoming motorways for the passage of cocaine from Latin America into the rest of Europe.

Nicaragua

3. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to discuss the situation in Nicaragua with his European counterparts; and if he will make a statement.

10. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance has been offered to the Government of Nicaragua in preparation for February's election.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Tim Sainsbury): We have regular discussions on Nicaragua with our European Community partners. At the invitation of the Nicaraguan Supreme Electoral Council, we have appointed an official British election observer for the elections. The European Community is currently considering providing assistance.

Mr. Wray: Does the Minister agree that the Nicaraguan people are not the Communist menace as stated by the Honduran Government and the United States? Why does Britain act as a Trojan horse to the Nicaraguan people? Does the Minister agree that President Ortega was treated in an appalling manner when he visited this country? He was shown the floorboards, but when President Cristiani of El Salvador visited he got the red-carpet treatment.

Mr. Sainsbury: The hon. Gentleman will agree that we should judge the performance of the Nicaraguan Government carefully and on the facts. We wish to see free and fair elections. When they take place, and are not interfered with by the Government, and when the constitution has been restored to normal and lost its present features—whereby the Sandinistas keep control of the army, police and judiciary, come what may—we shall know that there is democracy in Nicaragua.

Mr. Tony Banks: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am assured that it is normal custom to be notified when questions are linked. These questions should not have been linked in the way that the Minister has done, and he should have had the courtesy to——

Mr. Speaker: Order. They are linked by Government. It is normal courtesy to inform Members. I call on the hon. Gentleman to ask question No. 10.

Mr. Banks: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Nicaraguan authorities require about $25 million to ensure that elections are conducted efficiently and fairly.

So far they have received about $10 million from western European Governments, but not one cent from this country, despite their request. The electoral board wants that money for registration and identity cards and for training electoral returning officers. Will the Government provide resources for the Nicaraguan Government to ensure that the elections are conducted fairly and openly, or does the Minister want the elections to fail, just like his masters in Washington?

Mr. Sainsbury: The best help to ensure free and fair elections in Nicaragua would be for the opposition to have equal access to the media. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will support that. About his question being linked with question No. 3, I apologise to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Bowis: Does my hon. Friend agree that one of the European counterparts to whom he should talk about Nicaragua is the Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union? Will he take time to talk to him about the arms and missiles going into Nicaragua and being used from there to destabilise other countries in Central America? If the Soviet Union is serious about wanting world peace, it should desist from that practice.

Mr. Sainsbury: I assure my hon. Friend that we share the view of the leaders of Central America and our European Community partners that the supply of arms to the region is one of the most destabilising factors and one which most endangers progress to democracy.

Mr. Wilkinson: Further to that point, will Her Majesty's Government, in concert with their European counterparts, produce a joint policy to ensure that every possible pressure is brought to bear upon the Nicaraguan authorities to stop the vile practice of supplying arms and guerrillas equipment to the guerillas in El Salvador who are destroying democracy and seeking to subvert a democratically elected Government?

Mr. Sainsbury: The supply of arms to the FMLN is a flagrant breach of the Esquipulas commitment and even goes against the recent promises made by President Ortega at the Tela summit in August. It must make it more difficult——

Mr. Banks: Yankee lickspittle!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) must not utter such words in the Chamber. Will he withdraw his remarks?

Mr. Banks: Would you, Mr. Speaker, accept "lackey"? Frankly, the Government are a bunch of United States lackeys in relation to——

Mr. Speaker: Order. These are foreign affairs questions and we should behave with decorum.

Mr. Sainsbury: I hope that even the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) would agree that we should seek peaceful solutions to disputes in the area and progress to real democracy. The supply of arms does not assist that process.

Mr. Foulkes: As all sides have agreed that the elections in Nicaragua should not only be fair, but be seen to be fair, will the Government agree to give technical assistance in the registration and voting procedure, as my hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) reasonably and moderately asked—[Interruption.] That was in the early part of his remarks. Will the Government also press the Americans to ensure that the Contra forces are demobilised and allowed to participate in the elections, and the United Nations supervisory force is in place and operating as soon as possible? Before the superpowers summit will the Government remind President Bush of the Americans' part in stoking up this conflict in Central America?

Mr. Sainsbury: The European Community is currently considering giving aid and we would make our usual contribution of 20 per cent. to any aid that is given. As the hon. Gentleman knows, we have also provided an election observer. I reiterate that the important issue in ensuring free and fair elections in Nicaragua is that the Government there should provide equal opportunity, as we would expect in this country, for the Opposition to have access to the media.

Social Charter

4. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Ministers in his Department have participated in European Community discussions on the draft charter of fundamental social rights.

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Francis Maude): My right hon. Friend and I have discussed the charter with colleagues in the Community on several occasions.

Mr. Rooker: Will the Minister be good enough to share with the House exactly what parts of the charter are opposed by him and his colleagues? Do they oppose the right to annual holidays, to decent pay, to arbitration to settle disputes and to improve employee participation and health and safety, or do they oppose the fact that such rights as exist in member states cannot be lessened under the charter?

Mr. Maude: Our concern is straightforward. It is that the European Community should do what only it can do. By and large, the matters dealt with by the social charter are properly dealt with by member states themselves. It is surprising to hear the hon. Gentleman apparently supporting the extension of competence by the European Community to impose on member states matters that can properly be dealt with by those states. That shows that the hon. Gentleman wants a politicians' Europe, not a people's Europe.

Mr. Butler: Will my hon. Friend assure me that we will not accept any social charter which is Socialism by the back door?

Mr. Maude: We would strongly resist any such charter. The present draft has made some movement in our direction as a result of our standing firmly against the original draft. For the reasons that I have set out, it is still not acceptable to us and we shall continue to resist it.

Sir Russell Johnston: Does the Minister accept that if there is free movement of labour throughout the Community individual workers have a right to expect the same standard of treatment in each country?

Mr. Maude: That approach is unacceptable. Every member state in the Community is a democracy and it is for each country to establish for itself those conditions and principles that are appropriate to its history, background, relative prosperity and all other factors. A sort of identikit set of conditions should not be imposed from the centre regardless of whether they are appropriate in every country. Over-regulating in the way that the hon. Gentleman seems to suggest would price people out of jobs. That might lead to our present rate of unemployment, which is well below the Community average, rising to or beyond the average.

Mr. Rowe: Will my hon. Friend assure us that in his discussions he took into account the detailed and hard work of Members of the European Parliament? Does he agree that one of the best ways of controlling the Commission is to pay attention to what the Parliament has to say?

Mr. Maude: I discussed this matter with Members of the European Parliament and those discussions were useful. As the discussions proceeded and as more and more people looked at the fine print of the charter and the action programme that would follow its proposals, we found increasing sympathy for our view.

Mr. Anderson: Will the Minister honestly admit that in his discussions with our partners our negotiating tactics are much in question, and that the absolutist and strident rejection of the social charter by the Prime Minister has lost us much good will in the Community and has harmed British interests? Does he agree that far more constructive than that strident rejection would be a policy of, "Yes, but"? We should not have condemnation and rejection followed by grudging concessions.

Mr. Maude: The hon. Gentleman is wholly misguided. We have set out our specific objections in a reasonable and sensible way. As I said earlier, there has been some movement in our direction, which we welcome, but it is still not enough to enable us to sign the draft social charter. If the hon. Gentleman thinks that a sensible negotiating tactic in the European Community is simply to seek consensus on every occasion, it is lucky that he has never been a member of a Government.

Poland and Hungary

5. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what progress Her Majesty's Government are making in setting up a know-how fund for Poland; and if he will make a statement.

8. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is being given to Poland and Hungary in their efforts to establish parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Hurd: We established a know-how fund for Poland after General Jaruzelski's visit to Britain in June. This will contribute £25 million over the next five years towards projects that will underpin Polish democracy and help economic reform. I am glad to announce that it will now be doubled in size to £50 million. Moreover, we shall be making a contribution of $100 million to a stabilisation fund set up in support of the agreement being discussed between the International Monetary Fund and the Polish Government. Finally, we shall be spending £15 million on a major project to improve the Polish food supply.

A know-how fund will provide British expertise for Hungary, amounting to £25 million over five years, and will operate from next year.

Miss Nicholson: In my work with the Save the Children Fund, I grew to learn of the value of a cash donation and immediate aid. I draw my right hon. Friend's attention to the fact that credits given by other nations, although they may sound large numerically, mean little in terms of cash as they have to be repaid and cannot immediately be used. Will my right hon. Friend pass on this place's warm tribute to Mr. Lech Walesa during his visit to London and say how glad we all are that Her Majesty's Government are helping his country to come out of a long darkness into the light of democracy?

Mr. Hurd: I shall certainly pass on my hon. Friend's message to Mr. Lech Walesa. She is right in her earlier point. Food supplies are crucial, and we contribute to the European Community's supply of free food to Poland. She is also right that this is one of the many occasions when those who give quickly, give twice. This is what we are doing—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is some backchat this afternoon. I hope that hon. Members will listen to these important questions.

Mr. Butterfill: I join my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) in congratulating my right hon. Friend on an imaginative package. I reinforce her view that to give cash at this time is doubly important. When Poland is so heavily burdened with debt, it would be wrong to offer loans, and I congratulate the Government on offering cash. It is especially pleasant that it is being made available when Lech Walesa is starting his visit. In what sectors will cash be available? Will it be available for the financial advice that is so urgently needed?

Mr. Hurd: The know-how fund, which is already being spent, has moved into action quickly. It is designed for projects, which are being examined, to underpin the creation of Polish democracy. That goes fairly wide, and we are willing to consider all suggestions for sensible projects that come under this general heading.

I mentioned the cash, but I should also mention the trade package that has been agreed in two Council meetings in Brussels which will substantially improve the possibility of Poland earning her own living. We have done our best—rather successfully—to make sure that any burden that may fall on the Twelve as a result will be evenly spread across the members of the Community.

Mr. John Evans: Will the Foreign Secretary give an undertaking that, whatever discussions he has with the Polish and Hungarian authorities about democracy in those countries, he will not discuss trade unionism with them because he is liable to be told that in those countries trade unions are freer to take action on industrial affairs than they are in Great Britain?

Mr. Hurd: I should be amazed to be told anything of the kind. In Poland and Hungary, people are looking to the free institutions of the West in respect of social as well as economic legislation.

Mr. John D. Taylor: Will the Foreign Secretary consider giving some financial assistance to encourage younger people in Hungary and Poland to visit the United Kingdom to see how parliamentary institutions work and to make contact with the youth movements of our political parties?

Mr. Hurd: Polish visitors have been coming here already with that aim in mind, and I shall consider any sensible and realistic proposals to that end. That will be part of the underpinning of new democracy in those countries.

Mr. Soames: Will my right hon. Friend pay tribute to the work of the Great Britain/East European Centre under its distinguished chairman, Mr. Alan Brooke Turner? Given the great importance of these matters, will my right hon. Friend see what he can do to increase the grant that the Home Office generously gives to that excellent organisation?

Mr. Hurd: I shall consider my hon. Friend's suggestion without making any promise to him.

Mr. Hardy: The Foreign Secretary will be aware that one of Poland's great problems is environmental pollution. As the Polish economy recovers, as we hope that it will, that problem may get worse before it gets better. Will the right hon. Gentleman consider joining Sweden and certain other member states of the Council of Europe which are giving direct assistance to Poland to try to counter the graver features of these problems?

Mr. Hurd: The new Polish Government are struggling valiantly with a range of problems, and I am sure that environmental pollution is one of them. I am not dismissing the importance of what the hon. Gentleman has said, but there must be priorities and the importance of getting free institutions started and enabling the Poles to get through what may be a rough, hard winter are the two matters to which we are putting our minds, as the package that I have announced shows.

Extradition

6. Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress achieved towards adopting a European Communitywide simplified system of extradition.

Mr. Maude: The recent agreement between EC member states has so far been signed by nine member states. United Kingdom implementation of this measure, which we support, will require some further revision of our extradition laws.

Mr. Stanbrook: In view of the need for harmonisation to meet the threat of international crime, including drug trafficking, does my hon. Friend agree that our extradition arrangements with the member states of the European Community are in a terrible mess? The Extradition Act 1989, which is a consolidation measure, does not include the Republic of Ireland or the Suppression of Terrorism Act 1978. That measure was supposed to provide for us to accede to the European convention on extradition, but progress has been slow. In fact, no real progress has been made. We are still negotiating an old-style treaty of extradition with Italy, and have been doing so for about 15 years. Is it not time that we got down to the problem, instituted a backing-of-warrants system applying to the entire Community, and trusted the judicial systems of our fellow member states to implement it?

Mr. Maude: My hon. Friend is a formidable expert on these matters but I think that useful progress has been made. It would have been unusual for a consolidation measure such as the Extradition Act 1989 to include substantive amendments to extradition law. We shall bring into force when we can the useful but relatively narrow changes that the recent agreement embodies.

Mr. Hood: Does the Minister know that last night five hon. Members were extradited from Downing street as a result of their protest about the visit of the South Korean president? Why are we condoning the presence of such cut-throats in the Chamber and in Downing street?

Mr. Maude: I can take no responsibility for the hon. Gentleman's behaviour last night.

Mr. Gale: Will my hon. Friend pay especial attention to the report of the Select Committee on Home Affairs on drug trafficking, when it is published? Does he recognise that an extradition treaty throughout the countries of the Council of Europe, as well as throughout the European Community, is vital if we are to win the war against drug trafficking?

Mr. Maude: It is essential that there should be good extradition arrangements which work in practical terms in an effective and expeditious way. These are essentially matters for my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary, and I shall ensure that my hon. Friend's useful remarks are brought to his attention.

Mr. Mallon: Will the Minister give an assurance that in the event of a European extradition arrangement being adhered to by all countries, the British Government will not take the first opportunity to derogate from it as they have done on 37 occasions in relation to judgments of the European Court and European regulations?

Mr. Maude: The hon. Gentleman's point is not related to extradition treaties. It is important to make extradition work in a practical and effective way and we shall continue to work towards that end.

Middle East

7. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the peace process in the Palestinian-Israeli dispute.

Mr. Waldegrave: We fully support current efforts to bring about a dialogue between the Israeli Government and a representative team of Palestinians.

Mr. Walker: I thank my hon. Friend for that reply. Does my hon. Friend agree that Israel must have secure borders, that Israel is a democracy which changes its leaders through the ballot box and that attitudes within Israel are influenced by, and still troubled by, the fact that it was the Arab Legion which first occupied the West Bank?

Mr. Waldegrave: I can give an unequivocal yes to the first question; Israel does have a right to secure borders. I can give an unequivocal yes to the second question; Israel is a democracy and has the procedures of a democracy. The third part of the question, however, seems to be contingent on the idea that delving into history is the right approach whereas what is needed now is an act of trust to get talks going face to face.

Mr. Ernie Ross: Does the Minister regret the fact that on Friday no Minister dealt with the Government's attempt to resolve the Palestinian-Israeli question? Will he ensure that the proper concentration now being given by the Foreign Office to the problems of eastern Europe will not divert Ministers' attention from the clear abuse of human rights being perpetrated against the Palestinian people on the West Bank and in Gaza by the Israeli defence forces?

Mr. Waldegrave: I wholly agree with the hon. Gentleman. No one can deny the importance of what is happening in eastern Europe, but that should not mask the fact that in some respects things are going backwards in the occupied territories. The schools are closed again and we are joining our partners to protest about that, and the offices of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency are being harassed again. Those things are not tolerable and are against all the international conventions to which Israel is a party.

Sir Dennis Walters: Bearing in mind that for more than a year the PLO has made all the concessions necessary to make progress towards a peace settlement in the middle east and that the Israeli Prime Minister Mr. Shamir has remained obdurately negative while repression on the West Bank has continued unabated, is it not strange that we continue to talk at top level with Mr. Shamir but not with Mr. Arafat? Should not that situation be changed as soon as possible?

Mr. Waldegrave: What is essential now is to urge both sides to take the brave step of meeting face to face in Cairo, as proposed by Secretary of State Baker. The Israelis, with provisos, have accepted his five points and we are urging the PLO clearly to do the same so that the first, historic meeting between an Israeli Government mission and a Palestinian mission would have a chance to take place.

Mr. Faulds: Will the Minister convey to the Foreign Secretary my warm welcome on his return to his old stamping ground at the Foreign Office, where he will perform with much greater distinction than he did as a somewhat illiberal Home Secretary? Would it not be advisable for him in his new office, which he well merits, to make the strongest continuing representations to the Israeli Government about the appalling conduct of their forces towards the Palestinians in the occupied territories and towards the Lebanese in the continuing illegal Israeli occupation of the south of that country?

Mr. Waldegrave: It is never difficult to hear the hon. Gentleman and I am sure that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State heard him on this occasion. I join him in reminding the House that the Israeli occupation of parts of south Lebanon contributes to the problems of that country from which all foreign forces should withdraw.

Mr. Dykes: Will my hon. Friend confirm that there is a growing majority in Israel in favour of peace talks between the Israeli authorities and the legitimate representatives of the Palestinians, and we all know who they are? Will he confirm that, despite delays, the possibility of such talks is better than ever, and that if the Americans do not lose interest in the peace protest they can best persuade the Israeli Government and Mr. Shamir to show the necessary courage to reach out for peace and peace talks?

Mr. Waldegrave: I agree entirely with my hon. Friend. Yesterday I met the Israeli Minister, Mr. Mordecai Gur and had a very good talk with him. He reminds one that it is naive to think that there are no powerful voices raised in Israel on what he and I would regard as the right side of the argument. With the diplomacy now being exercised by the Americans and by the Egyptians, there is an opportunity to start a dialogue.

Summit Meeting (Malta)

9. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultation has been sought by the United States Secretary of State in preparation for the Malta summit meeting on 2 December between President Bush and Mr. Gorbachev.

Mr. Hurd: There have been frequent consultations, including a recent visit to London by the United States Under-Secretary of State for Political Affairs. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and the President of the United States met at Camp David on 24 November.

Mr. Duffy: That all sounds rather casual. Is not the Secretary of State aware that the North Atlantic Assembly, which includes some of his own right hon. and hon. Friends as well as some of mine, believes that the State Department had a special responsibility to consult all its allies before the Malta summit? Not only have such summits a changing significance as we move from a bipolar to a multipolar world, but there is genuine anxiety on all sides that there should be no more Yaltas or Reykjaviks.

Mr. Hurd: I do not think that the summits in which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister takes part tend to be casual affairs, and that is certainly not the case on this occasion. Nor was there anything casual about the way in which the United States set about notifying and consulting its allies on what is in prospect at Malta. On the contrary, the American Administration have taken great care both in public and in private to stress that the matters to be discussed are of prime interest to their allies, including this country, and that the American president has no intention of concluding agreements with the Societ Union in the absence of those allies at Malta. The president will himself be attending the NATO conference on Monday to report what happened at the summit. That follows the advance assurances and consultations which I mentioned, which could hardly have been more complete.

Mr. Ian Taylor: As it was Sir Winston Churchill, in the later stages of the second world war after talks on the island of Malta, who said:

"From Malta to Yalta, we must not falter", does my right hon. Friend agree that Gennady Gerasimov's use of the phrase "Malta to Yalta" was, given its implications, unfortunate? Does my right hon. Friend welcome President Bush's recent clear statement that he will not seek to make bilateral deals over the heads of the European allies, particularly in respect of arms reductions?

Mr. Hurd: I agree that Mr. Gerasimov's choice of phrase is sometimes a bit odd. I did not care for his phrase, "Sinatra doctrine", to describe an important statement of Mr. Gorbachev's views made in Helsinki. My hon. Friend is perfectly right in his second point; I referred to the statement that he mentioned when answering the original question.

Mr. Grocott: Will the Foreign Secretary take every opportunity to urge upon President Bush that the key reason why the world has welcomed recent events in eastern Europe is that it rejects the concept of superpowers using small powers as instruments of their foreign policy? Will the right hon. Gentleman urge upon President Bush that just as the Soviet Union has stopped treating eastern Europe as its backyard, it is high time that the United States stopped treating central and south America as its backyard?

Mr. Hurd: One starting point of the changes in eastern Europe was the decision by Mr. Gorbachev that Soviet troops will not intervene in the internal pressures for reform in eastern Europe. There is no parallel to that in Central America.

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: Does my right hon. Friend agree that the widespread events in eastern Europe give the British Government no excuse for postponing the further development of the European Community? Rather, we should take the opportunity to strengthen and enhance further the Community—and in particular, West Germany's role within it.

Mr. Hurd: We are all in favour of strengthening and enhancing the Community's role. The first step is to complete in practice that which we have already undertaken to do in principle. On that, we and the European Commission are perhaps the closest allies in pressing for the passing of the legislation required under the Single European Act. We are perfectly prepared to discuss the steps that should follow, but the best impression will be created if we successfully carry through that which has already been undertaken.

Dr. Thomas: Will the Foreign Secretary accept that large sections of public opinion in the United States are keen to use the opportunity created by Mr. Gorbachev to scale down the United States presence in Europe? Will the Prime Minister be an isolationist in NATO and oppose such reductions, as she has already been an isolationist in the Commonwealth and in the European Community?

Mr. Hurd: I do not think that that is the position. This year ambitious negotiations are taking place in Vienna —the conventional forces in Europe negotiations—in which we shall play a full and enthusiastic part. As the hon. Gentleman knows, the talks are designed to bring about a substantial scaling down. We are not opposed to a change—indeed, we have been one of the protagonists of change—but we believe that it should be orderly change so that nobody at any stage believes that legitimate security interests are being put at risk.

Mr. David Shaw: Will my right hon. Friend ensure that President Bush, in preparing for his talks with Mr. Gorbachev, is made fully aware that the problems of eastern Europe are due to the rigid adherence to Socialism in eastern Europe over many years? Will he ensure that President Bush points out to Mr. Gorbachev that as our Prime Minister has had a successful policy of rigid adherence to capitalism there is much that we can teach the eastern bloc in terms of our expertise in defeating Socialism?

Mr. Hurd: What we are seeing in eastern Europe is a series of edifices which looked very impressive and which deceived many Opposition Members, but which turned out to have no foundations because they were not based on the consent of the people. By contrast, in Britain and in western Europe we have institutions about which we argue a great deal, but which have foundations and therefore will endure.

Mr. Kaufman: Since the Prime Minister, when she was in the United States for consultations with President Bush, said that unlike the German Foreign Minister and Lord Carrington she still believes in the modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons, will the Foreign Secretary tell us whom he envisages as the targets of those short-range nuclear weapons? Are they the millions of Poles who elected a Solidarity-led Government, the millions of East Germans who forced their way through the Berlin wall, or the millions of Czechs who have just overthrown the Communist Government in Prague?

Mr. Hurd: There is no difference between President Bush, the Governments of the Alliance, the German Government and our own about the comprehensive concept which lays down that first we complete the CFE negotiations, then we enter into discussions about the short-range nuclear weapons and then, if there is a need to discuss modernisation, we do so. That is the entirely logical and acceptable answer to which the Alliance is agreed.

Mr. Steel: Does the Secretary of State recall that after the meeting between the Prime Minister and President Bush there were several press reports, inspired or otherwise, which suggested that she was urging caution at the forthcoming Malta meeting in relation to progress on conventional force reductions? Will the right hon. Gentleman, in his new non-subservient role, make it quite clear that if the Malta summit results in speeding up conventional force reductions in Europe, the Government will welcome that?

Mr. Hurd: There is already an ambitious programme for conventional force reductions by negotiation with the Soviet Union. The president has made it clear—wisely, I believe—that he does not intend to negotiate aboard a ship in the Mediterranean new arrangements that go beyond that. To do so at that time and in that way would cause a peck of trouble within the Alliance. The president knows that, and it will not happen. What will happen through the usual machinery of the Alliance are, first, discussions on CFE and then the other steps that may be necessary. I have already mentioned the comprehensive concept and the discussions on short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Speaker: Question No. 11—Mr. David Atkinson.

Mr. Ron Brown: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I must hear it. What is the point of order?

Mr. Ron Brown: Was it in order for you to call the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr.

Steel) when he was not even standing? Is it not the case that in this place we are all equal but that some are more equal than others?

Mr. Speaker: We are all equal. The hon. Gentleman was equal yesterday.

Council of Europe

11. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those eastern European states that have expressed an interest in applying for full membership of the Council of Europe.

Mr. Waldegrave: Hungary formally lodged an application to join the Council of Europe on 16 November. On the same day Poland and Yugoslavia expressed their interest in full membership when the time was right, as they put it.

Mr. Atkinson: The qualifications for full membership of the Council of Europe are a pluralist democracy and respect for human rights and the rule of law. Respect for human rights is, as we understand it, under the terms of the European convention on human rights. Will my hon. Friend assure the House that those conditions must be fully satisfied by any applicant, however welcome the application may be?

Mr. Waldegrave: The Council of Europe has potentially a very important role to play as the forum or body that the newly emergent democracies of eastern Europe can join and thereby show that they are genuine democracies. It would be totally paradoxical if we watered down the criteria for membership at this moment. That would be to betray the people in those countries who are seeking to achieve full democracy and full human rights.

Mr. Hardy: Does the Minister accept that the conditions to which he referred will have to be met? Does he also agree that the progress made so far in 1989 has been quite remarkable?

Mr. Waldegrave: I certainly agree with the hon. Gentleman, but I think that he would agree with me that it would be wrong to subvert the basis of an organisation which offers the reality of the common European house to which Mr. Gorbachev sometimes refers.

Mr. Michael Marshall: Does my hon. Friend accept that part of the interests of those countries which are seeking membership of the Council of Europe stems from the wise decision, supported by this House, to give them the opportunity to join the Inter-Parliamentary Union? In the light of the Foreign Secretary's earlier responses, will my hon. Friend confirm that the Government will take a broad view of our support for parliamentary democracy and its know-how funding so as to encourage the process of dialogue between parliamentarians in this House and in eastern Europe as prelude to Council of Europe membership?

Mr. Waldegrave: It is sad that Opposition Members below the Gangway find this all so tedious. Nothing can be more exciting to this House than seeing other countries seeking to achieve the freedoms that we have here. The Inter-Parliamentary Union contacts to which my hon. Friend referred have played a valuable part in the process.

Treaties

12. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications for existing treaties of recent events in the Soviet bloc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We welcome moves towards freedom and democracy in eastern Europe. They do not alter the need for us to maintain a sound defence, based on our NATO and Western European Union commitments.

Mr. Hanley: The whole House must welcome the exciting and hopeful events in the eastern bloc in the past few weeks, but will my hon. Friend please say whether the United Kingdom will be negotiating as an individual country with individual countries or as a member of the European Community and of NATO with a still-existing Warsaw pact?

Mr. Waldegrave: The conventional arms talks in Vienna—the CFE talks—are taking place under the Helsinki aegis. Technically, we do not negotiate alliance to alliance, but the NATO Alliance should concert its efforts. The importance of that Alliance remains.

Mr. Winnick: All Labour Members of Parliament who believe in civil liberties in all countries greatly welcome what has occurred in eastern Europe. Does the Minister agree that the ordinary people of Czechoslovakia and East Germany deserve to be fully congratulated on the way in which they have demonstrated against dictatorships and won? Next week the Czech people will, we hope, end 41 years of dictatorship.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am sure that in reality the House is at one on these matters. I welcome what the hon. Gentleman says. It certainly reflects our views on this side of the House.

Legislation

14. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing the areas of legislative decision making over which the European Economic Community has no competence following the implementing of the Single European Act and the European Court decisions which have clarified its scope of operation.

Mr. Maude: The treaty of Rome, as amended by the Single European Act, lays down the areas of activity for which there is Community competence. All other matters fall to member states.

Mr. Taylor: Would it not help if the Government published a table showing which laws we can still pass in this House in a democratic manner? Does it not worry him that so many laws affecting the people of Britain are made in Brussels, where direct democracy is a sick joke? In view of the rising tide of concern, at least on the Conservative Benches, about some of the recent activities of the EEC, will the Government agree at least not to close the door on the sensible proposal advanced by President Mitterrand and others that Britain should consider rejoining the European Free Trade Association so that we could trade freely without all the Socialist nonsense being applied by Brussels?

Mr. Maude: I do not think that that is really what was being suggested. In any event, I cannot go along with my hon. Friend's suggestion that that would be a suitable way for us to proceed. Our role should be to play a central part in the development of the European Community. We have become increasingly influential in the discussions that have taken place and in shaping the way in which the European Community develops, and our priority should be to work hard to ensure that that happens.

My hon. Friend suggested that we should provide a list of matters which still fall to domestic competence, but surely that is the wrong way round. The Single European Act and the treaty of Rome set out explicitly those matters in which member states agreed that there should be Community competence. Everything else remains for the domestic Governments of member states. We shall watch extremely closely to ensure that Community competence is not extended in a way that is not justified by the treaty. We shall challenge when appropriate in the European Court and argue our case as we have always done successfully in the past.

Dr. Godman: Does the Minister agree that the recent interim injunction issued by the president of the European Court of Justice that led to the Government amending the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 plainly demonstrates the power of the European Court and the Commission over national legislatures and national legislation? What steps are the Government taking to avoid a repetition of such a decision?

Mr. Maude: The hon. Gentleman will know that we argued strongly against that interim judgment—I stress that it is an interim judgment—but we believe in the rule of law and if a court adjudicates so as to require us to follow its direction, we shall do so. It seems slightly at odds with the hon. Gentleman's contention that the party that he supports is concerned that we should sign up to a social charter which would encourage the imposition on us by Brussels of matters which are properly for this Parliament to decide.

Mr. Colvin: I accept that the so-called Sinatra doctrine is the wrong strategy for east-west relations, but does my hon. Friend accept that it would form a very good basis for our attitude towards the social charter?

Mr. Maude: We take rather seriously a proposition espoused by other member states and by the president of the European Commission. I refer to the principle of subsidiarity, which says that member states should do what they can—[Interruption.]

Dr. Godman: We cannot hear a word.

Mr. Maude: I will say it again for the hon. Gentleman's benefit. The European Community should carry out only those functions which cannot properly be carried out by member states. I wish that Opposition Members would follow the same practice.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wish to give notice that, owing to the Minister's unsatisfactory reply, I propose to raise the matter on the Adjournment.

Boat People

15. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people are currently living in camps in Hong Kong.

Mr. Hurd: There are almost 57,000 Vietnamese boat people living in camps in Hong Kong, 12,800 of whom are refugees. The remainder either await screening, or have been determined after screening not to be eligible for refugee status as defined by the 1951 United Nations convention and 1967 protocol.

Mr. Alton: Now that the Vietnamese Government, in another cruel and ironic twist, have said that they will not accept any refugees who are forcibly repatriated, will the Foreign Secretary tell the House where that leaves British policy? Does he accept that in the light of international opposition to forcible repatriation and the payment of blood money we should drop that odious and repugnant policy and put our efforts into finding an internationally acceptable, compassionate and civilised solution?

Mr. Hurd: We are talking about the repatriation of people who, after careful screening, have been found not to be refugees. The international community has accepted that the right place for those people is Vietnam. That was the nature of the agreement last summer. There is nothing unique about such repatriation. It occurs frequently in many places. I have read the press report to which the hon. Gentleman refers. As I told the House on Friday, we are discussing ways and means with the Vietnamese Government and that remains the position.

Standing Order No. 20

3.30 pm

Mr. Speaker: I wish to make a brief statement to the House about Standing Order No. 20 applications. I received today notice from four hon. Members that they wished to apply for emergency debates under Standing Order No. 20, but in no case was the application based on an urgent fact raised at the first opportunity. I have informed the hon. Members concerned—there is nothing new about this—that I regret that I cannot hear their applications.

These are important matters for the House. The right to make a three-minute submission to me on a new and urgent matter at 3.30 pm is a valuable and very important opportunity for Back Bench Members. I am anxious that it should not be devalued or threatened, as might be the case if the procedure were abused. I hope that I will have the support of the whole House in declining to hear applications that do not even get to first base.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will hear Mr. Skinner first.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): On a point of order, Mr Speaker. I would like to know on how many previous occasions before television was introduced in the Chamber you made a statement of this kind after various Back-Bench Members had made applications under Standing Order No. 20. There have been many occasions when one hon. Member or two, three or even four hon. Members have made applications and it was made clear that the applications were turned down or not accepted. However, from memory, I believe that this is the first occasion that you have ruled out such applications in this manner. It looks to me like a television fix. I want to know the reason why.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The whole House might be interested in this. My answer to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) is that I have seen hon. Members on average twice a week about their Standing Order No. 20 applications. I could not see them all today because of my other commitments. Therefore, I thought it wise to take this opportunity to make a general statement. As I said, all the hon. Members concerned have received a letter explaining why I was unable to hear their submissions.

Mr. Tony Baldry (Banbury): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, arising from Question Time. In response to question No. 6 about extradition, the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) sought to refer to the President of South Korea in distinctly derogatory terms. It is clear from "Erskine May" that opprobrious reflections on heads of state are against the orders of this House. As the president is here on a visit at the Government's behest, it seems rather unfortunate that this matter should be on the record. Everyone seeking to export to South Korea——

Mr. Speaker: Order. We all know the rules about that. I must confess that I did not quite hear it in that light. If the hon. Gentleman is right, I regret that it was said in that way. I thank the hon. Gentleman for drawing it to the attention of the House.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. Once again today I have had a great many applications to take part in the subsequent debate, which is limited to three hours. It will be very difficult to call all the hon. Members who want to speak if there are so many points of order, however I will try to deal with them if they are matters for me.

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As one of the four hon. Members whose Standing Order No. 20 applications were refused, I do not challenge your decision or your statement, but I ask you to reflect on two matters. First, Standing Order No. 20 requires that the application should refer to a "specific and important matter that requires urgent consideration".

It is particularly important to Opposition Members that such an opportunity exists. You will confirm that the Government can come forward with any number of statements on any day and you are not required to give permission for statements to be made. For Opposition Members a Standing Order No. 20 application is most important. It is limited and it enables us to draw attention to urgent matters. To offer an alternative by raising matters at business questions is wholly inadequate.

Secondly——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have heard the hon. Gentleman's first point. We must get on. The hon. Gentleman knows why I could not allow his application, but I am sure that he would not wish me to say why at this moment. I urge the House to understand that I am seeking to protect this procedure, which I absolutely agree is a matter of prime importance for Back-Bench Members. The trouble is that if it is abused in any way, new regulations may be introduced, which would perhaps mean that such applications are heard later in the day, which would be to the detriment of Back-Bench Members.

Sir Anthony Grant (Cambridgeshire, South-West): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. Are you aware that your decision on Standing Order No. 20 applications will be widely welcomed? Such applications are in danger of becoming an abuse of the procedures of the House and, what is more, monumental bores.

Mrs. Ann Clwyd (Cynon Valley): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. I understand what you have said. You will know that I am one of the hon. Members who attempted to make a Standing Order No. 20 application today. The matter is so important that I beg to ask leave to move the Adjournment——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot hear the hon. Lady's application, for reasons that I have privately explained to her and which she has also received in the form of a letter.

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. In the last years of the Labour Government, when the Conservatives were in opposition, there were two or three Standing Order No. 9 applications every day. As you well know, at that time it was believed that it was an organised campaign, but it was not regarded as an abuse of the House. It was felt that, to hold the then Government to account, it was a legitimate way of raising issues. But, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. Speaker: Order. Let me underline to the House yet again that I am seeking to protect this important opportunity for Back-Bench Members. I look at every application on its merits and in accordance with the Standing Orders by which I am bound. It is not possible for me as Speaker to go beyond the criteria laid down in the Standing Orders. That is what I am seeking to point out. If the House does not like the Standing Orders, I suggest that the Procedure Committee should look at them again and give different guidelines to the Speaker. At the moment, I can rule only on the basis of the guidelines that have been laid down.

[Mr. Speaker]

Mr. Robert Parry (Liverpool, Riverside): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. As one of the hon. Members who wanted to present a Standing Order No. 20 application, I believe that 500 jobs in my constituency——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman has an early-day motion on the Order Paper on this very matter. If he looks at the criteria he will realise that he cannot raise a matter under Standing Order No. 20 if he already has an early-day motion on the Order Paper. It must be about something that is new and has happened today. His early-day motion appeared two days ago.

Mr. Anthony Beaumont-Dark (Birmingham, Selly Oak): Further to the point of order, Mr. Speaker. No one in the House challenges your judgment, and hon. Members agree with you about the abuse, but because of the television lights it is likely that there will be more applications under Standing Order No. 20. Is it right that the Opposition Front Bench should be allowed to make such applications at any time that might suit them? This House is for all hon. Members of Parliament and the Opposition Front Bench should not abuse the system. The hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) may be new to this game, but she is not new to the House.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope that the House will allow me to deal with one matter at a time.

The House should look carefully at the Select Committee report, which deals with the whole question of Standing Order No. 20 applications. It suggests that the procedure is an opportunity for Back Benchers to raise matters of urgent interest. Quite simply, the reason for that view is that Front-Bench spokesmen have an opportunity, on regular Opposition days, to raise matters of great importance.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am on my feet. I am extremely anxious that the House should preserve the Back-Bench opportunities provided by Standing Order No. 20 applications.

Dr. John Cunningham (Copeland): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. We recognise your difficulties, but some Conservative Members appear to have short memories. In the Session 1978-79, a very short Session, there were no fewer than 66 applications under the Standing Order procedure, and a great many of them were from Conservative Members. Let there be no cant about that.

I wish to support what you have said, Mr. Speaker, in two respects. First, it would not be in the interests of any hon. Member if the Standing Order No. 20 procedure were to be moved from 3.30 pm. My right hon. and hon. Friends and I would not agree to any proposal to move the procedure from its present time. Secondly, although the procedure is attractive to Back-Bench Members for obvious reasons, there is nothing in the Standing Orders that precludes Front-Bench spokesmen from using the procedure if that is legitimate.

In defence of my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd), and notwithstanding your ruling, she has a legitimate case in attempting to seek time in the House to debate the terrible famine in Ethiopia, and I support her in that.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that we should now move on.

The shadow Leader of the House was right to suggest that the Standing Order No. 20 procedure does not preclude Front-Bench Members. I do not in any way disagree with the importance of the matter raised by the hon. Lady, but I am bound to remind the House that we debated foreign affairs on Friday, that there will be business questions tomorrow—when the hon. Lady could ask for a debate, and may possibly get one—and there will be Overseas Development Administration questions on Monday.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. As I mentioned the hon. Lady, I shall call her.

Mrs. Clwyd: Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. The necessity urgently to debate the matter today is because people are dying from famine and hunger today. There has been no opportunity in the House to discuss a matter about which the British public are greatly concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Lady must not seek to raise her application in this way. I know the seriousness of the position in Ethiopia and am sure that it was as serious last Friday and that it will be as serious on Monday. I hope that she will have then an opportunity to raise it—[Interruption.] Order. If the House wants to persist with these matters, we shall never get any business done.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am bound by the Standing Orders as they are. If the House does not like them, I suggest that the Chairman of the Procedure Committee, who is in his place, should look into the matter and provide the Chair with different guidelines——

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am on my feet. I call Mr. Andrew Faulds.

Mr. Andrew Faulds (Warley, East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Would not a simple answer to your quandary about the proliferation of Standing Order No. 20 applications and the possible abuse of them be to remove from the Chamber these ghastly television cameras?

Mr. Robert Adley (Christchurch): This is a House of Commons matter and I agree with the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham), because it is true that, on the whole, Opposition Back Benchers rather than Government Back Benchers find it convenient to use the Standing Order No. 20 procedures—or the Standing Order No. 10 procedures, as they used to be. We are reaching the position in this ghastly television era when your reference, Mr. Speaker, to Standing Orders will prove to be out of date because we shall have completely to rewrite the Standing Orders of the House. May I suggest through you, Mr. Speaker, that those concerned with the ordering of the proceedings of the House should soon drew up a list of our traditional procedures, all of which are threatened by the presence in the House of television cameras?

Mr. Speaker: The House has made a decision about television cameras.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North) rose——

Mr. Dave Nellist (Coventry, South-East) rose——

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow) rose——

Mr. Speaker: No, I am not hearing any further points of order—[Interruption.] No, I am not hearing any further points of order on this matter.

Mr. Dalyell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If it is a different point of order, I shall hear it, but it must be a different point of order.

Mr. Dalyell: Yes, it is.

Mr. Speaker: Than I shall take it.

Mr. Dalyell: You have used the words "preserve" and "protect" several times, Mr. Speaker, so may we ask for some information as to whom you are protecting and preserving us from? Who is the enemy in this situation and what exactly have they suggested? Who has suggested that this should be moved to 10 o'clock? Should we not know——

Mr. Speaker: Order. These suggestions have been made —[Interruption.] Order. If the message has not got through, I suppose that I must tell the House yet again that I am seeking to preserve a very important opportunity for Back Benchers. I thank the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) for what he said in that connection.

Ballot for Notices of Motions for Friday 15 December

Mr. James Lamond (Oldham, Central and Royton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am on my feet.

Members successful in the ballot were:

Mr. Neil Hamilton
Mrs. Alice Mahon
Mr. James Couchman

BILL PRESENTED

Caldey Island

Mr. Secretary Walker, supported by Mr. Secretary Waddington, Mr. Wyn Roberts and Mr. Ian Grist, presented a Bill to provide for the islands of Caldey and St. Margaret's in the county of Dyfed to be included in the district of South Pembrokeshire for the purposes of local, parliamentary and European elections and for the purposes of local taxation; to include those islands in the districts of the Pembrokeshire coroner and the Pembrokeshire Health Authority; and for connected purposes: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time tomorrow and to be printed. [Bill 7.]

Mr. James Lamond: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it a different point of order?

Mr. Lamond: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have had to wait a long time to raise this matter, Mr. Speaker, but I had hoped to catch your eye. My point of order relates to the motion on today's Order Paper in the name of the Chairman of Ways and Means. I am a little anxious because I notice that 18 private Bills have been taken together in that motion and that one single objection at 2.30 pm has meant that they have all been deferred. I admit immediately that I am interested in the Bill relating to Greater Manchester. I wonder whether what seems to be a new procedure is to continue. I do not mind hon. Members objecting to one or other of the Bills, but I do not know why I should have to suffer their objecting to the one in which I am interested so that they can object to the others.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Gentleman is objecting to a procedure. The Chairman of Ways and Means has sought to carry over——

Mr. Skinner: Not carry over.

Mr. Speaker: Revive.

Mr. Skinner: That is the word.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner). As the House knows, the Chairman of Ways and Means has sought to revive the Bills that did not succeed in the last Session.—[Interruption.] Because he has tabled them in that way. I imagine that, in the end, we may have to debate the whole issue.

Mr. James Lamond: Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry to delay the House, but this is important. I know that the Bills must be revived or they will fall, but why are 18 of them grouped together? If anyone objects to one of those 18, they all fall. I do not mind the other 17 falling, but I mind if the one relating to Greater Manchester falls.

Mr. Speaker: Other hon. Gentlemen may feel the same way. I know that the hon. Gentleman is a member of the Chairman's Panel. I suggest that he consults the Chairman of Ways and Means, who will be able to tell him the answer, because I cannot.

Social Charter

3.50 pm

Mr. Speaker: I must announce to the House that I have selected the amendment in the name of the Leader of the Opposition. I remind the House that this is a three-hour debate. I also repeat that a great many hon. Members want to participate and I urge them and Front Bench spokesmen to make brief contributions so that as many hon. Members as possible may be called.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I apologise for taking time out of the debate, but, as you know, I am speaking as the Chairman of the Scrutiny Committee on European legislation about the first business on the Order Paper relating to the draft Commission charter of human rights. The Committee published our report on this matter—our 36th report, HC 15—on 1 November. It related to a draft submitted by the Commission of the European Communities in its document No. 8997/89, dated 1 October. The Government have issued an explanatory memorandum on that document and they also recently published a secondary explanatory memorandum dated 24 November. Attached to that memorandum, which is helpful, is another draft of the Community charter of human rights tabled by the current presidency, the President of the French Republic. That is referred to in the motion before us.

The presidency text is the one which will be referred to by the meeting of the European Council in Strasbourg on 8 and 9 December and not the original document tabled by the Commission, on which we have reported and on which most of the decisions and most of the consultations has taken place in the United Kingdom.

The Scrutiny Committee is meeting at 4 pm today and we intend to issue a report—I hope that it will be available before the end of the debate—on the significant differences between the original Commission proposal and those to be discussed at Strasbourg.

I do not complain, nor does the Committee, of the fact that it is the Strasbourg revision by the French presidency that is referred to in the motion before us. The more up to date the document can be the better. The reason for that, however, does not lie with Her Majesty's Government. Of all the 12 assemblies and parliaments of the European Community, this is the only one I know that debates before decision and consults the House about the way in which we deal with EC matters.

May I also refer to the third item on the Order Paper, relating to the shipping industry? Another presidency document, which we have not yet reported on, will be reported on later today and we shall, I hope, put another amendment in the Vote Office before that debate is reached.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, as a point of macro-order, if the debate tonight shows that there are matters that should be debated as a result of the presidency submission, the Leader of the House should at least give some consideration to holding another debate next week before the meeting in Strasbourg.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. Gentleman for giving the House that information. I am aware that the position relating to the social charter is developing. I do not know whether his Committee will have completed its deliberations before the end of this three-hour debate, but it certainly will have done so before the shipping debate. If he or another member of his Committee wishes to participate I shall certainly give careful consideration to that.

3.54 pm

The Secretary of State for Employment (Mr. Norman Fowler): I beg to move,

That this House takes note of European Community Document No. 8997/89 and the proposals described in the un-numbered Explanatory Memorandum submitted by the Department of Employment on 24th November on a Community Charter of Fundamental Social Rights; and endorses the Government's view that the key to increased prosperity and higher living standards is the adoption of policies which stimulate further economic growth and job creation.

As the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) has just said, the purpose of this debate is to enable the House to consider the European Commission's draft social charter. I shall take up immediately what the hon. Gentleman said and seek to make my remarks short.

There are changes in the presidency revision of the charter when compared with the Commission's final version. The document covers the same 12 areas and its thrust is the same. The presidency version only became available as a public document on Monday 20 November in the form of a press release from the Commission of the European Communities. In submitting the unnumbered explanatory memorandum on 27 November we were concerned that the latest text of the charter should be

I have the greatest sympathy with what the hon. Gentleman said. These things tend to be announced at press conferences and there is sometimes a delay of days or literally weeks before the final document is obtained. We are not the only country to suffer in this way. This issue will be raised at the meeting of Social Affairs Council tomorrow which I shall attend, and I shall ensure that the Commissioner knows about what the hon. Gentleman has said.

For the avoidance of doubt on the scrutiny debate on the social charter, I should say that I approach the debate from the position of someone who campaigned for Britain's entry into Europe, voted for our membership of the Community and remains enthusiastic for Europe and for Britain's membership of the Community.

As I listened to the Opposition spokesman on the radio this morning, I marvelled at his flexibility. The hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) was first elected to the House in 1983. At that time, the Labour manifesto said of Europe:

"Geography and history determine that Britain is part of Europe, and Labour wants to see Europe safe and prosperous. But the European Economic Community, which does not even include the whole of Western Europe, was never devised to suit us, and our experience as a member of it has made it more difficult for us to deal with our economic and industrial problems."

I was glad to hear what the hon. Gentleman had to say. I am sure that he would wish to address himself to the fact that the election manifesto which brought him into the House only five or six years ago was a commitment to withdraw altogether from the European Community. Frankly, Conservative Members are not prepared and are not inclined to take lectures from the Opposition on the European Community.

Mr. Jeff Rooker (Birmingham, Perry Barr): Some of us have long memories. The first legislative act of this Government in 1979 was to remove workers' rights on unfair dismissal. The charter would stop that happening because there could be no regression.

Mr. Fowler: We shall come to that point. I note that the hon. Gentleman does not deny the incontrovertible fact that the Opposition have gone through an entire change and transformation in relation to the social charter and the Community.

This debate is about the kind of Europe that we want to see. It is about the social charter's effects, particularly on the people of the Community, what should be done at Community level and national level.

Mr. Spencer Batiste (Elmet) rose——

Mr. Fowler: I shall continue for the moment.

The debate is about what kind of social charter there should be and what respect there should be for different national traditions.

Our view is quite clear: there is certainly a social dimension to the European Community. There is no question about that and basically that social dimension is about the creation of new jobs and the reduction of unemployment. That is the crucial issue because there are now no fewer than 14 million unemployed people throughout the Community. No social issue is more important and nothing is socially more important than bringing down unemployment. That is not just the British Government's view. At the Madrid summit the Heads of Government unanimously agreed that job creation and development must have the "top priority" in the completion of the single market.

Our acid test for the social charter is whether in practice it will lead to more jobs and a fall in unemployment. On this issue we speak from a position of strength in Europe. There are now more than 26 million people at work in this country—more than ever before in our history. Since 1983, employment in Britain has grown by more than 2,750,000. Between 1983 and 1987, our rate of job growth was more than three times the average for the rest of the European Community and our growth in jobs nearly equalled that of the whole of the rest of the Community.

As a result, unemployment has fallen every month for more than three years; since the last general election, it has fallen by over 1,250,000, and long-term unemployment has fallen by 682,000. We do not say that that is enough, and that makes my point in this debate. We want to see the improvement sustained and to see it spread to every part of the country. Compared with the rest of the Community, we have nothing to apologise for. Our unemployment rate of about 6 per cent. is substantially below the average for the rest of the European Community, where the rate now stands at about 9 per cent. Britain has a lower rate of unemployment than France, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands and Denmark, and it is certainly lower than the rate in Spain, Ireland and Greece. The central point is that that has been achieved not by adding to restrictions, but by a policy of sweeping away unnecessary restrictions and regulations.

One lesson that we have learnt is that businesses create jobs. They cannot be created by regulations, and that has been established over the last few years. There is no doubt that no one in the Commission, least of all Commissioner Papandreou, believes or claims that the policies in the charter will create jobs. When Commissioner Papandreou gave evidence to the Select Committee on Employment on 17 October, she acknowledged that the charter would have "negative effects" which would "increase the cost of production".

She said:

"there is no doubt about that".

Increasing costs inevitably damages employment prospects. The only question that Commissioner Papandreou left unanswered is the number of jobs that the charter will destroy. It is not a question of whether jobs will go but how many.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): The Secretary of State compared our unemployment rate with the rates in other European countries. Will he tell us the basis on which that comparison was made so that we can see whether his comparison is favourable? How many of the countries that he quoted have changed their way of collating unemployment statistics 19 times as we have done, to the extent that we do not know the true rate of unemployment?

Mr. Fowler: There is a recognised European comparison for unemployment. There is no question but that it represents the best comparison that is known of the unemployment rates of the countries in the Community. I have never heard that challenged. It is not a matter of looking at national figures and comparing unlike with unlike. The purpose is to try to bring them together and have a Euro-figure so that a good comparison can be made.

Mr. Batiste rose——

Mr. Fowler: I give way to my hon. Friend, to whom I should have given way earlier.

Mr. Batiste: Can my right hon. Friend confirm at this early stage an important point? Are the Government opposed in principle to the concept of a social charter, or to some of the provisions in the current draft?

Mr. Fowler: I am glad to do that. I am not opposed in principle to a social charter, and I shall make that clear. However, I am opposed, and the Government are opposed, to the social charter as it stands, because the effect and impact of its proposals are likely, even certain, to lead to job losses when the whole purpose of policy should be to try to create employment.

Mr. Tony Blair (Sedgefield): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Fowler: Will the hon. Gentleman allow me to continue, as he has an opportunity to reply directly after me?

Mr. Ron Leighton (Newham, North-East): I am certain that the Secretary of State does not want to mislead the House. Mrs. Papandreou did not say that the social charter would destroy jobs. She said that there was no evidence that it would destroy or create jobs. She admitted that there might be some increase in costs, for example as with health and safety provisions. She referred to the West German economy, which has the highest possible standards and is the most efficient possible. That is a fair summing up of what she said.

Mr. Fowler: If the hon. Gentleman checks what I said, he will see that that is precisely how I described it. I have the benefit of having listened to Commissioner Papandreou set out her case on this not just before the Select Committee but in Council meeting after Council meeting. There is nothing between us when she says that the social charter as it now stands will add to labour costs.

[Mr. Fowler]

Mr. Blair: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Fowler: I should prefer to continue with my speech. You have asked for short speeches, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to give one. However, I shall give way if the hon. Gentleman insists.

Mr. Blair: I must insist. The right hon. Gentleman has repeated the allegation that Mrs. Papandreou has accepted that the social charter will put up costs. Let me correct him, becase I have her evidence here. She said that some of the proposals might put up costs and some might make them more effective. Overall, she said:

"I do not think that the implementation of the Charter is going to have negative effects on job creation."

It is only the Government who think that fair employment practices and job creation are mutually inconsistent.

Mr. Fowler: If that is remotely her view, that represents a substantial change from the position that she has taken before. The hon. Gentleman must understand that not only have I read her evidence, but I have listened to her in many Council meetings which the hon. Gentleman has not attended. If he listens, he might understand what she is saying. She is saying what the proponents of the charter have been saying, which is that it will have a tendency to put up labour costs.

Mr. Blair: I rise because the Secretary of State must not continue to misrepresent Mrs. Papandreou. We are interested not in his interpretation of what she said, but what she actually said, which is down on the record. What she said is that it would not have a negative impact on job creation.

Mr. Fowler: I do not accept that. Neither do I accept —nor does any independent person or newspaper leader writer who has looked at this position—that this will reduce labour costs. It will increase labour costs and the impact and effect of that will be to increase unemployment.

Mr. Teddy Taylor (Southend, East): Irrespective of what Mrs. Papandreou said or did not say, it is not the case that whether we vote for or against the social charter and whether the European Council votes for or against it, the European Commission is fully empowered to present to the Council of Ministers, under a majority vote, the full range of directives outlining the social charter, as it said on 22 October and as the Prime Minister confirmed on 26 July? What is the point of having this debate and vote?

Mr. Fowler: I shall direct myself to the point of the debate, certainly.

If my hon. Friend is saying that, irrespective of what decision is made on the charter, the Commission will have the power to bring forward directives and proposals, that is unanswerably the fact, but that does not invalidate the case for having a debate on the charter. Instead, it puts the entire issue in the context of the charter.

Even if we disagree about Commissioner Papandreou's view, I hope that we shall not disagree about the views of British business organisations such as the CBI, the chambers of commerce and the Institute of Directors. These organisations know substantially more about creating jobs than do Opposition Members. At its conference last week, the CBI came out solidly against the proposals that are set out in the social charter. The CBI is the largest, the best and the most powerful organisation of its sort in Britain.

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow, East): Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Fowler: I shall not give way again. I apologise to my hon. Friend.

There are those who argue that the social charter as it stands is nothing more than a harmless declaration of aims. There are at least three reasons why that is not so. First, the charter is intended as a basis for action. It is accompanied by an action programme, and an ambitious one at that. It consists of 43 Community instruments, including 17 legally binding directives. The Commission's aim is for all these directives to be represented for agreement by the end of 1992. The action programme includes directives on hours of work and night work, holidays and rest periods, and part-time and temporary employment.

Secondly, the issues in the action programme are what the Commission proposes action on immediately. There are other issues on which directives are not proposed this day—I take the point of my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) to some extent—but which are accepted as desirable objectives. These are issues such as minimum wages and compulsory schemes of worker participation. There are aims, therefore, with which we do not agree. We can accept general health and safety regulations and regulations covering other areas to which I shall come. If the aim, however, is to reduce unemployment, it is nonsense to sign up to measures that we all know will add to labour costs and will discourage and not encourage employment.

Thirdly, the effect of our accepting the charter as it stands would be to concede that the Community has competence to deal with these subjects and that it should take action in any event. That runs entirely counter to the principle of subsidiarity to which all Heads of Government subscribed at the Madrid summit. I am delighted that subsidiarity is now in the preamble. My complaint, however, is that that is not followed through. Subjects such as holidays and hours of work should not be regulated from Brussels. They are areas in which domestic decisions are the best way of proceeding.

Mr. Jonathan Aitken (Thanet, South): Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Fowler: I shall not give way.

One of the most positive developments of the 1980s has been the move to more flexible patterns of work. In many instances these are exactly what are needed in the sectors of growing employment. Even more important is the fact that more and more people want to work part time or at home, or for short periods, so that they can both do a job and look after a family. Surveys have shown that the majority of part time workers want to work part time. If employers are to draw more people into the labour market, they must be prepared to offer flexible patterns of work.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman (Lancaster): My right hon. Friend makes the point that I was trying to make. It is extremely important, particularly for women, that hours should be flexible, and that is something which Britain has achieved but which the continent has not achieved so well.

Mr. Fowler: That is exactly the point.

It is ridiculous and patronising for the Commission to describe the 6 million people in Britain who work part time as "atypical". That is the term used to describe part-time workers in the action programme. It is time for the Commission to wake up to the fact that, as my hon. Friend has just said, we are no longer living in a world where everyone works full time in a factory or office or when everyone starts work at the same time and goes home at the same time. When Commissioner Papandreou says that she does not believe that women want to work part time, she is denying the evidence of survey after survey in Britain.

Mr. Blair: The right hon. Gentleman alleges that the Commissioner responsible for people working part time says that people do not want to work part time. Where did she make that statement?

Mr. Fowler: She made it at the last Social Affairs Council. She suggested that that was not the wish of the vast majority of women in Britain. If the hon. Gentleman wishes to check with Commissioner Papandreou on that, I am perfectly happy that he should do so. But irrespective of whether that is the case——

Mr. Dykes: Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Fowler: I will not give way again. [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. We shall make little progress if hon. Members persist in raising points when the Minister is not giving way.

Mr. Fowler: The social charter does not pay attention to the requirements that exist for part-time work and the proper importance that should be placed on part-time work in Britain.

Mr. Dykes: Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Fowler: I will not give way.

What we do not want is a social charter that imposes on the rest of the Community a single blueprint based on arrangements that have been developed in one country.

Let us consider employee involvement. We believe strongly in the principle of employee involvement. Our disagreement with what the charter says on that issue does not mean that we are opposed to making progress on employee involvement—quite the contrary. We have recently set out what is happening in Britain in a document that we have published which I know has been well studied by the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell). We want to see those approaches carried forward and extended. That is why we will continue to resist attempts to impose on Britain forms of worker participation based on models that have been developed in other countries. We have no wish to impose our traditions on other member states, but we see no reason why their traditions should be imposed on Britain.

Above all, we do not want to see a set of regulations that will destroy jobs. If we are to create new jobs and reduce unemployment right across Europe—that, surely, must be the aim—the last thing that Europe needs is more rules and regulations. We remain consistent in wanting to see employment increase; we want to see sustained growth in the economics of Europe, not a damaging flood of new regulations and restrictions.

I support the EC and I have campaigned and consistently voted for it. The emphasis of the charter is not, as it should be, on job creation. The whole philosophy of the charter is static, not dynamic. It is preoccupied with regulating the working lives of people already in employment. It ignores the interests of those who have no job. The social charter, at least in its present form, is a recipe for job stagnation, not for job growth.

Mr. Dykes: Does my right hon. Friend agree that such matters can satisfactorily be negotiated between the member states? We can be guided by the more relaxed attitude of West Germany, say—which is the premier capitalist economy of Europe, having a coalition Government led by the German equivalent of the Conservative party that seems to be more enthusiastic about such matters than we are. How do the West Germans cope when we find it so difficult?

Mr. Fowler: I hope that progress can be made, for I am not seeking to deny that possibility. In a whole range of areas, such as health and safety, cross-qualifications between one country and another and other elements of co-operation that enable the Community to function are sensible. However, it is not sensible to seek to introduce regulations and directives in respect of matters that should be the subject of decisions taken at a domestic level. Areas such as hours of work, minimum pay and minimum holidays should properly be the subject of domestic decision-taking.

My hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) deceives himself if he believes that West Germany is driven simply and solely by a concept of social justice. West Germany is concerned about the concept of social dumping, fearing that people will enter Germany and work there under conditions that do not equate with the high wages and standard of conditions enjoyed by German workers. That is not how Germany created its economic miracle, but it is Germany's intention now to avoid social dumping.

The social charter raises issues for the future direction of the European Community. The most serious of them is whether the Community will seize the opportunity of the single market to strengthen the economies of Europe and to bring down barriers to future growth or will become preoccupied with the detailed regulation of the lives of its citizens and with imposing new restrictions on business. Will the Community look outwards and prepare itself to compete with the new, fast-growing economies of the far east and Pacific, or will it turn in on itself?

It will be a terrible irony if just when eastern Europe is breaking free from decades of bureaucratic regulation, the European Community turns in on itself and stifles the growth of business and jobs under a flood of new controls from Brussels. The single market represents an enormous opportunity for Europe to move forward and to become economically strong enough to play a major part in shaping the world of the 21st century. The greatest and most terrible irony would be if a set of proposals labelled "social charter" succeeded in destroying jobs, not creating them.

[Mr. Fowler]

We believe in a social dimension for the European Community—of that there is no doubt. However, we believe also that that social dimension is about bringing down unemployment and creating jobs. We support all sensible measures to achieve that, and the Government's record shows that they have been successful in achieving that objective. The challenge inside the European Community is undoubted, for 14 million of its people are still unemployed. Nevertheless, I do not believe that the social charter as it stands achieves the great objective of creating jobs and reducing unemployment.

4.24 pm

Mr. Tony Blair (Sedgefield): I beg to move, to leave out from "House" to the end of the Question and to add instead thereof:

'calls upon the Government to accept and endorse the Draft Community Charter of Fundamental Social Rights.'.

Our case is that the Government should endorse the social charter at the Strasbourg summit in December as that would represent an important first step for greater rights for employees within the European Community. The social charter is an indispensable part of securing the consent of the people of the Community to the wide-ranging changes introduced by 1992 and the single European market.

Our case against the Government is epitomised by the speech of the Secretary of State. The Government's refusal to countenance the basic social rights in the charter severely undermines the interests of British employees, and the irrational conduct and bad faith that characterises our isolation in Europe profoundly damage Britain's interests abroad. By their opposition to the social charter, far from assisting job creation, the Government will harm the long-term prospects for British employment.

The essential difference between ourselves and the Government is that they believe that fair employment practice and job creation are inconsistent and we believe that they go together.

As contempt for the Government's position grows in Europe and elsewhere, there has been some attempt to shift tactics. Today, the Secretary of State told us that it is all just a reasoned dispute about detail, and that a different social charter might be agreed to or even welcomed. That is simply so much humbug. The true reaction of the Prime Minister and thus, inevitably, of the Secretary of State, was her first reaction.

The draft social charter was barely in print before the Prime Minister granted an exclusive interview to the Daily Mail in May. She said that "the social charter was a throwback to a Marxist period, a class struggle period".

On the same day, in Prime Minister's Question Time, she went out of her way to condemn the social charter as

"more like a Socialist charter."—[Official Report, 18 May 1989; Vol. 153, c. 474.]

We all know that there is no more profoundly meant insult in the Prime Minister's vocabulary.

The Secretary of State, the Prime Minister's ever-eager echo, said at a press conference on 21 June that the social charter was full of Socialist measures, stating:

"We do not believe then that the so-called social charter is sensible or necessary."

His Minister of State backed him up in a reply on 28 July:

"The Government have made it clear that they see no point in the Commission's proposals for a Communitywide social charter."—[Official Report, 28 July 1989; Vol. 157, c. 1049.]

He was referring not to this social charter but to a "Communitywide social charter".

Finally, the Minister of State said in a press release on 18 October:

"It is no secret that the United Kingdom Government have considerable reservations about the whole concept of a social charter."

Mr. Ian Taylor (Esher): The hon. Gentleman must clarify to the House which version of the social charter he is criticising. He will be well aware that we are now into the third draft. The first draft contained an enormous amount of Socialist nonsense. Given that that has gone, can he reasonably accept the third draft?

Mr. Blair: In that case, we would assume that the Government would be rowing in support of the existing social charter, but they are still opposing it.

Mr. Batiste: Does the Labour party accept the principle of subsidiarity, and if it does, where does he draw the border line between that which should be determined in Britain and that which should be determined in Europe in the context of the current draft of the social charter?

Mr. Blair: With great respect to the hon. Gentleman, the principle of subsidiarity is set out quite clearly in the social charter. It is simple, plain common sense that there will be different spheres of influence between national Governments and European institutions. Only the Conservative party cannot understand that.

All that has happened between the Government's original position and now, when they attempt to present a gentler and kinder face, is that, in view of the growing astonishment and incredulity of the international community towards their hostility to any declaration of basic social rights, the Government have been driven to pretend that a divergence of principle is really only a difference over detail.

What are the rights which they oppose in the social charter? They are: freedom of movement, decent and fair pay for employees, freedom of association, a right to vocational training, equal treatment for men and women, rights for workers to be consulted and informed and to participate in the decisions affecting them, health and safety at work, protecting children against exploitation and proper regard——

Mr. Fowler: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Blair: In a moment—proper regard for the elderly and the disabled——

Mr. Fowler rose——

Mr. Blair: These are the principles——

Mr. Fowler: The hon. Gentleman accused me of having misrepresented the position. He has now knowingly and entirely wilfully misrepresented the position. As he must have heard me say, the Government do not oppose measures relating to health and safety and a whole range of other issues. We are not opposed to the recognition of qualifications, or to the free movement of labour and equal opportunities. We should like many of those rights to be properly observed. Before the hon. Gentleman accuses me of misleading anybody, I hope that at least he will take on board exactly what is the Government's position. This is not the first time that it has been set out.

Mr. Blair: What I find interesting are the rights that the right hon. Gentleman has not endorsed: the rights of the elderly, the right to freedom of association and other rights. No wonder the rest of the European Community is aghast at our attitude. The charter could be adopted almost verbatim not merely by western Europe but by the millions who are struggling for freedom in eastern Europe. If they did, the Prime Minister would be the first to stand up and ask for support for the social charter.

Mr. Roger Gale (Thanet, North): On the right to freedom of association, will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Blair: No.

Let us consider the right to vocational training:

"Every European Community worker must have the opportunity to continue his vocational training throughout his working life. The public authorities, enterprises or, where appropriate, the two sides of industry, each within their own sphere of competence, must set up continuing and permanent training systems enabling every citizen to undergo retraining, more especially through leave for training purposes, to improve his skills or acquire new skills".

That is the type of right that we are denied. Why should our employees be denied a right that is given to our competitors? How foolish to deny, by the Government's obstinacy, the very tools that would allow us to compete more effectively.

The Government say that the social charter will cost jobs. By implication, therefore, they assume that West Germany and all our other European Community partners which support the social charter are feckless enough to support it, even though it will cost jobs.

As for the right to training, is it West Germany, with its £9·2 billion trading surplus with Britain, which needs the right to training? Is it Italy—with its £2 billion trading surplus with Britain—that requires the right to training? Is it France with a £1·6 billion surplus, the Netherlands with a £4 billion surplus, Denmark with almost a £1 billion surplus and Belgium and Luxembourg combined with their £1 billion trading surplus with Britain that are most in need of the right to training? It is Britain, the country that needs the right to training most, that is almost alone in resisting it for its employees.

That is why the Government's position is so irrational. That is why, elsewhere in Europe, the social charter has so much support, from the Conservative Administrations of West Germany and Belgium to the Socialist Administrations of France and Spain. That is why Mr. Kohl, that great Marxist, has welcomed it and has also called for legally binding minimum social standards across the Community. That is why West German employers and trade unions have just issued a joint statement in these terms:

"They urge"—

they do not merely support—

"a Community-wide formulation of minimum social standards and workers' rights on the basis of the treaties founding the European Communities."

That is why Professor Becker, the president of the European Round Table and head of the 50 or so largest European companies, has gone out of his way to welcome the European company statute on staff representation. That is why Mrs. Maij-Weggen, the Dutch leader of the European Christian Democrats, spoke in these terms in the European Parliament on 13 September:

"We must believe that this must not be simply a solemn declaration—and here we agree with the Socialists—but it must go hand in hand with a concrete programme of action."

She went on to say:

"Mr. President, I agree with Mr. Ford"—

the Labour leader—

"when he criticises Mrs. Thatcher so severely. Mrs. Thatcher does not want a social Europe but she has clearly lost the elections and a sensible politician must change policy when elections are lost."

There speaks someone who is clearly not a very perceptive student of the Prime Minister's psychology.

Mr. Timothy Raison (Aylesbury): Will the hon. Gentleman tell us the Labour party's view of one right in the charter—the right concerning professional organisations and trade unions:

"Every employer and every worker shall have the freedom to join or not to join such organisations without any personal or occupational damage being thereby suffered by him"?

That would put an end to the closed shop. Is that the Labour party's position?

Mr. Blair: If it has that meaning, it also has the meaning that one has a right to be a member of a trade union. How the Government would justify their position on GCHQ, I do not know—[HON. MEMBERS: "Answer."] I can tell hon. Members that we shall have every opportunity to debate the matter when the Employment Bill is before the House. That is why the leader of the Christian Democrats said in the European Parliament——

Mr. Fowler: Does that mean that, if we meet the requirements that the hon. Gentleman has outlined, he will support the abolition of the pre-entry closed shop?

Mr. Blair: I will take lessons from the right hon. Gentleman on the pre-entry closed shop when he is prepared to restore rights to trade unionists at GCHQ.

Mr. David Shaw (Dover): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Surely the hon. Gentleman is speaking as an Opposition Front-Bench spokesman, not as a lawyer. We should be entitled——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. Bogus points of order do not help us to make progress.

Mr. Blair: That is why——

Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Blair: No, I shall not.

That is why the programme has been supported by all those people.

Mr. Wallace: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Blair: No, I am not giving way.

That is why such a programme was called for——

Mr. Wallace rose——

Hon. Members: Give way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I need to hear the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair). I hope that hon. Members will allow me to do so.

Mr. Blair: If I may say so, I have given way a darn sight more than the Secretary of State.

Mr. Fowler: Oh!

Mr. Blair: That is why such a programme was called for not only by all the bodies to which I referred but by the economic and social committee of the Community, by a majority of 135 to 22, earlier this year. Which were the main components of the 22 in opposition? They were the United Kingdom and the wing of the French trade union movement dominated by pre-Gorbachev unreconstructed Communists—the ancient relics of Right and Left locked in an embrace of mutual irrelevance.

That, then, is the declaration of rights that we are resisting, and that is the vast body of opinion that we are alienating—not merely by the fact of our opposition to the social charter but by the manner of it. The document has been subject to a campaign by the Department of Employment—I say this advisedly—of such scurrilous misinformation that Orwell's Ministry of Truth, or perhaps even the chairman of the Tory party, whichever may be worse, could have learnt from it. We have been told that the charter would interfere with our rights as a sovereign nation. We were told that it would cost us hundreds of thousands of jobs and would be the ruin of British industry. Hardly a day has gone by without a fresh hue and cry being raised against the charter by the Department of Employment.

The campaign culminated in a briefing by the Department on 3 November, which was given widespread publicity in the newspapers on 4 November. The Daily Telegraph covered the matter in detail and the point was repeated subsequently in ministerial speeches. It was not simply an allegation about the social charter in general terms, it was very specific. Under the headline the article stated:

"Social Charter threatens jobs of under-18s",

"Paper rounds and evening performances of shows involving children will be threatened by a ban on night work for under 18s in the Common Market Social Charter the Employment Department said yesterday. . . . This would rule out jobs for most of Britain's 300,000 paper boys and girls and present serious obstacles to the delivery of newspapers. It would also put an end to Saturday jobs held by thousands of school children."

It would seem that the evil social charter is not simply unkind to young boys and girls, but will stop our morning papers. We can only imagine what "Disgusted of Tunbridge Wells" wrote about that.

Mr. David Shaw: It is very serious.

Mr. Blair: Exactly. That is why I checked the position with the Commission. The Commission said that four meetings were held about the charter before 30 October —before the newspaper articles appeared based on the Department of Employment briefing. United Kingdom officials attended those meetings and the point about newspaper deliveries was raised at one of them. The Commission specifically and in terms told Ministry officials that it is was no part of the Commission's plan to limit such work. The scare had no validity. However, a week later the Department of Employment briefing appeared——

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Blair: I believe that the Government's bad faith should be explored.

Even more extraordinary than the article in the Daily Telegraph was the speech by the Minister of State in the House on 15 November. He made a series of allegations about the social charter, most of which were complete nonsense. However, he made a particular allegation about Mrs. Papandreou which I want to raise with him. I will give way to the Minister of State if he can explain what he said. He said:

"What does the charter mean to British people? Mrs Papandreou said in London that she"— then he purports to quote—

"cannot believe that people would choose part-time work: In other words, she does not think that there is any value in part-time work."—[Official Report, 15 November 1989; Vol. 160, c. 445.]

I do not know where that quote comes from. I cannot find it in any of Mrs. Papandreou's speeches. The very matter was raised in the Select Committee on Employment by a Conservative Member who put it to Mrs. Papandreou that she might be against part-time work and she replied:

"First of all, in principle I am not against part-time work. On the contrary, I think if workers have the luxury—because sometimes it is a luxury—to choose between full-time and part-time and they opt for part-time then it is up to them. What I am against is when part-time work is imposed on workers."

The Minister of State, Department of Employment (Mr. Tim Eggar): Of course, Mrs. Papandreou went on to say:

"I do not know, and I find it very difficult to agree, that nine out of 10 women would like to have part-time work if they had the opportunity to have full-time work."

I must tell the hon. Gentleman, as I told the Commission, that we have conducted a survey into that and the result was absolutely clear: nine out of the 10 part-time workers wanted to work part-time rather than full-time. Six million people in this country want to work part-time. Is the Labour party against those people? Would Labour rather they did not work part-time?

Mr. Blair: That was quite pathetic. The idea that the Minister's quote justifies his saying that Mrs. Papandreou does not believe that there is any value in part-time work is ridiculous.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Blair: Furthermore, the Minister has not told us where Mrs. Papandreou is alleged to have said that she cannot believe that people would choose part-time work. Instead of trying to justify what is plainly an unjustifiable allegation against her, he should apologise for misrepresenting her on the basis of something for which there is no evidence in the Select Committee report.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Lady must not persist when the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) is clearly not giving way.

Mr. Blair rose——

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sure that the hon. Lady heard me the first time. I hope that she will not persist in seeking to intervene when the hon. Gentleman clearly is not giving way.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No point of order can arise on that.

Mr. Blair: This serious——

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I was trying to point out that I was a member of the European committee on social affairs which discussed——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. That is not a point of order. I regret that the hon. Lady seeks to make her intervention under the guise of a bogus point of order. I hope that she will not persist.

Mr. Blair: The series of trumped-up allegations over a period of time by the Department of Employment is important. It shows the rank bad faith that characterises the Government's attitude to our EC partners. It also shows that the Government are forced to put false interpretations on the social charter and what it means.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: Will the hon. Gentleman give way on this point?

Mr. Blair: I appreciate the desire of Conservative Members not to debate this subject properly. However, I believe that people outside this place would like us to debate it properly.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I very much hope that the hon. Lady the Member for Doncaster will not persist.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: Mr. Deputy Speaker, you have given me your constituency.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I said Lancaster.

Mr. Blair: No, you said Doncaster.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I apologise both to the hon. Lady and to myself.

Mr. Blair: The Government are forced to put false interpretations on the social charter because they know that if people realised the truth, they might begin to ask why they cannot have the rights in it. They might ask why there is no right guaranteeing freedom of association and the protection of the low-paid and part-time workers. They might ask why no rights apply to children, the elderly and to training. In reality, the arguments about the detail of the charter are a smokescreen to conceal a rejection of its basic principles.

The Government are not against the present version of the social charter. They are in truth against any version which will lead to practical legislation to enforce basic minimum standards for employees throughout the Community.

Mr. Gale: Will the hon. Gentleman give way on the point about freedom of association?

Mr. Blair: No.

The Government have always opposed legislation that advances employees' rights in Europe or here just as they opposed the directives on consultation of workers in large multinationals and on part-time workers' rights. They oppose it just as they opposed rights for casual or temporary workers, the reorganisation of working times and the directive on parental leave. The Government have also dragged their feet on every item of sex discrimination and equal pay legislation to come from the Community. They oppose those rights just as in June—as ever, alone they opposed a proposal to establish a common poverty line for the Community to allow us to gauge the performance of member states in meeting the needs of our poorest citizens.

Just as they have opposed social progress in Brussels, the Government have opposed and thwarted it here in Westminster by abolishing the wages councils for young workers, restricting rights to claim unfair dismissal, removing safeguards on working hours, cutting the staff of the Health and Safety Executive and having one of the worst records on pensions and parental leave anywhere in the Community. That is the real reason for their opposition to the social charter. It is not merely their hysterical dislike of anything that is the product of co-operation rather than conflict between nations, and not simply because they are against social progress made in Brussels rather than in Westminster. They are against anything, whether here or abroad, that stands up for the rights and interests of people in Europe against the vested interests of wealth and power.

The Opposition believe in the social charter because it is just and fair. We believe in it because a just and fair Community will also be efficient. An internal market that is a free-for-all will lead, as markets that are unchecked and unbalanced by the public interest always have led, to greed, disorder and sometimes even chaos.

What about the arguments that the social charter will put people out of work, drive up industry's costs and mean unnecessary bureaucracy? Those have been the rallying cries of reactionaries against any form of social progress, from the legislation that stopped sending children down the mines to the present day, when a new world, East and West, opens up new challenges and opportunities. It is the ultimate vice of the Government that they are now so consumed by prejudice as to be opaque to reason. They cannot see that prosperity will no be built on injustice, that progress cannot be measured by short-term profit alone and that the rights of those who create the wealth should not be subservient to the market in which they created it. On that basis, the Opposition will divide the House tonight, confident of the support not merely of our colleagues in Europe but, increasingly, of the British people.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before I call the first Back-Bench Member, I remind the House that this is a short debate and that short speeches will reduce the number of disappointments.

4.52 pm

Mr. Ian Taylor (Esher): The problems that the Labour party has got itself into on this issue were admirably encapsulated in the speech by the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair). He has clearly insufficiently read the latest and earlier drafts of the social charter. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has pointed out, there are bits in it that the hon. Gentleman would not like. Clause 11 of the latest draft states:

> "Every employer and every worker shall have the freedom to join or not to join such organisations (trade unions) without any personal or occupational damage being thereby suffered by him."

[Mr. Ian Taylor]

On some interpretations, that would not only prevent a closed shop but would go much further than the legislation which has been envisaged by the Government. By way of intervention, my right hon. Friend said that, in effect, that means that the hon. Member will have to lead the Labour party into the Aye Lobby when the legislation to prevent the pre-entry closed shop comes before the House.

We cannot take lectures from Opposition Members, who were recently against the European Community concept of what should be the rights of people within the Community. It is self-evident nonsense that the Labour party, which is not certain even now of its conversion to the European cause, should hypocritically try to use some piece of legislation emanating from Brussels to cover the holes in its own policy as a result of attempting for years to fudge what it is trying to put forward, which is a regulation which would throttle British industry and deny British people jobs. The Labour party has a policy for unemployment, and that fact was laid bare this afternoon.

I shall make a few positive remarks about progress in the social dimension of the Community. About 90 per cent. of the 280 measures that the White Paper set forth as necessary to achieve the internal market have either reached the stage of negotiation or are already implemented. Therefore, the development of the internal market is already at an advanced stage. It is not surprising that many people in the Community believe that now the other part of the Single European Act—that is, that relating to the social dimension—should be looked at and fleshed out. It is interesting that much of the pressure for a social dimension to be given detail has come not just from the Commission but from member Governments and Ministers in Council.

My only mild criticism of the British Government in this context is that, knowing that we have such a good record in the social dimension, knowing that we have created more jobs than others in the Community have, and knowing that we have done it through deregulation, we should have taken the initiative earlier and put forward our own social charter rather than be forced now to nitpick about some of the measures in the draft social charter which came from a Greek Commissioner. That is unfortunate because we are effectively playing on someone else's playing field. We should learn a lesson from that weakness and not repeat it in future.

Labour Members were anxious to accept the first draft which contained many restrictive measures which would have created unemployment. They had an almost overwhelming desire to see institutionalised in Brussels the beer-and-sandwiches brigade upon which they fondly look back. I wish the nation to realise that the Labour party is attempting to support the social charter for reasons that are not in the best interests of employment in this country.

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): Does my hon. Friend agree that, in respect of technical change, there is now a movement against the less skilled worker? Therefore, the iniquity of the Opposition's position is that they are condemning people in the less developed parts of the Community to a lower wage structure and, at the same time, condemning those in our country who are in a similar position as a result of the Labour Government's failure to do anything.

Mr. Taylor: My hon. Friend makes an interesting point. There should never be an agreement to any element of the social charter which would allow the high social costs in certain northern European countries to be spread throughout the Community, because that would have a damaging effect on employment and on certain regions of this country. No support that I give to the social charter would justify that aspect of it.

Mr. Austin Mitchell (Great Grimsby): Is it a fact that the Government are opposed to the social charter because they see the destiny of this country as a cheapjack, low-wage, low-tax, deregulated Trojan horse for entry into the EEC?

Mr. Taylor: The hon. Gentleman has only to talk to one or two German business men about that. They are particularly concerned about their own protection. They realise that their social costs are high.

Inward investment in British industry has been dramatic under this Government, and that shows the strength of British manufacturing.

The importance of the advance of the internal market is that it is perfectly proper that workers' rights to circulate freely in the Community should lead to the expectation of similar treatment for themselves and their families as that of the people of the country in which they choose to work. That is an admirable objective for the single market and the freedom of movement which this country has strongly supported.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Taylor: Hon. Members have been urged by Mr. Deputy Speaker to keep their speeches as short as possible. Given that my hon. Friend is my namesake, of course I will give way.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: As the decent wage directive will not be an equal European decent wage or minimum wage, but will take account of the varying costs in each member state, who will decide what is a decent wage in each member state? Will the European Court or the Commission decide, or will the matter be left to each country?

Mr. Taylor: My hon. Friend is less than his usual accurate self, which shows that he has not looked at the latest draft of the social charter, or at the Commission's statement on the action programme. That statement clearly shows that member states will decide the definitions, with the Community merely setting a framework——

Mr. Teddy Taylor: Utter rubbish.

Mr. Taylor: It is not utter rubbish. My hon. Friend should read the document, where he will find that plainly stated.

Because of the Government's successful efforts, the third draft makes significant advances and due credit should be given to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The draft is close to being acceptable to the Conservative party. It contains a clear statement on subsidiarity—the fact that the Community should operate at the lowest appropriate level. The draft and the statement on the action programme show respect for the plurality of cultures. The Commission will be bound by existing powers and there will be no extension of those powers. The draft stresses job creation, a point that came out of the Madrid summit. It leaves member Governments to define the minima that the Commission believes to be desirable.

There is no imposition of any rigid worker participation formula, which is especially welcome given the Government's efforts to encourage employee share ownership. Indeed, the statement on the action programme clearly states:

"Worker participation in company profits and share acquisition will also be the subject of a proposal for a Community instrument."

That is a major move forward, which will gain further recognition as the discussions continue. There is now no question that British companies will need to adopt the form of worker participation at board level that is the case with German companies. When the European company statute draft is adjusted, they will not need to adopt that policy even if they opt for European company status.

Many aspects of the draft are acceptable to the Conservative party. Contrary to the suggestion of the hon. Member for Sedgefield, certain elements of the draft social charter have always been acceptable to Conservatives. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said:

"In support of the single market programme, we do need some general principles for the labour market: the free movement of labour; health and safety at work; equal treatment in employment for men and women, and avoidance of discrimination; improvements in training, and a system of qualifications which permits recognition of competence; freedom for nationals of member states to set up and manage undertakings anywhere in the Community."

That is a long list of measures, to which the Government have always put their name. There is no opposition to the concept of a social charter in that context.

I hope that we can make further progress before the Strasbourg summit. The Conservative party has a proud record of social reform. During the past 150 years we have initiated changes and improvements in the working conditions of British people. Sometimes we have done that, because of the circumstances of the day, by introducing regulations; sometimes we have done it by freeing the market to create jobs, as has been evidenced during the past decade. No one, and certainly not the Opposition, could point a finger at the Conservative party and say that it does not have a social conscience.

We are not prepared to prostitute ourselves for the sake of some form of social charter, regardless of what is contains. That is why the Government have forcefully objected to certain aspects of it and why they have argued that aspects that would destroy jobs should be removed. Despite what the media have suggested, there is no doubt that our European colleagues have listened to us, and the third draft recognises many of our points.

I hope that there will be some change during the coming weeks so that, at the Strasbourg summit, the Government can willingly sign a social charter that symbolises the fact that there is a social element within the internal market. I hope that that will be only the beginning. There are many areas within the Community where there could be further declarations.

We must never forget that even the current draft refers to the two sides of industry. That is an antiquated view. If we include young children, more than 50 per cent. of the people in the Community do not work, let alone belong to a trade union. The membership of trade unions is declining. We need to adapt and embrace ideas that understand new technology, new working practices and the changing demography of Europe during the next 10 years. We need to adapt social criteria to environmental considerations. We need closely to consider effects on the family. We need to understand the social dimension for consumers. Those matters are justifiably discussed at Community level because they affect the working of the internal market throughout the Community. We strongly believe in and have been the prime force behind the creation of that internal market.

If we can do all those things, we can be positive about the meaning of a social charter and understand that it is not just about job creation but is intended to enable people in many countries within the Community to have something to which they can aspire, to give them confidence, to improve their performance at work, to improve their productivity and to improve the way that society itself creates stability. Those criteria are important at the Community level. The transmission of those broad objectives into legislation should, as the latest draft shows, be on the principle of subsidiarity and carried out in accordance with the traditions and cultures of the nation states so that all are acting to a common programme, but interpreting it each in his own way. That is a noble objective.

I hope that the Government will continue the fight and that their success at Strasbourg will be signalled by their signing of an acceptable further revised draft of the social charter.

5.7 pm

Mr. Ron Leighton (Newham, North-East): Why should there be a social charter, and what is its origin and purpose? It was thought necessary to offer it as an accompaniment to the single market. The single internal market is the business man's Europe, removing all restrictions on the movement of capital and goods. That will not be a benign development which will benefit all; it will be an area of fierce competition in which there will be winners and losers. Industry will be rationalised and restructured; there will be mergers, closures and redundancies. It is freedom for capital, tailormade for the multinationals.

We all recognise what is in that for big business, but what about the working people? To prevent the trade unions from opposing that development and to keep them on board, it was felt necessary to offer them a social dimension that would, allegedly, accompany the economic dimension. It was claimed that the two would go hand in hand. The charter was intended to reassure workers that their employment rights and conditions would not be undermined—at least, that is the story and the propaganda. However, once we examine it more closely the social charter appears less substantial and becomes something of a mirage.

The actual document is, of course, replete with grandiloquent declarations and high-flown aspirations. There is much talk of social consensus, of social rights, of employment being fairly remunerated, of improved working and living conditions, of adequate levels of social security, of the elderly having adequate means of subsistence, and of a minimum income. It talks of the right to belong to a union and the right to collective bargaining. It mentions the equality of men and women and refers to the right of workers to information, consultation and participation. There is much else, and the only thing missing is that which is of the essence—any mechanism or machinery to implement it. Instead, in every case there are get-outs and escape clauses. While the business man's Europe is being realised, I fear that the so-called people's Europe, the social Europe and the charter are no more than a smokescreen of verbiage.

[Mr. Ron Leighton]

As has been said, on 17 October—the day Parliament re-assembled—the Select Committee on Employment took evidence from Mrs. Vasso Papandreou, the European Commissioner responsible for the charter, to examine these matters in detail and establish the facts. It transpired that the social charter is based very largely on that of the Council of Europe. Asked how many of the member states had ratified it, she replied:

"not one of the member states has ratified all the conventions".

So that was not a very hopeful start.

The EC social charter is full of phrases like social rights "must be assured at appropriate levels", without saying what they are, and

"according to the circumstances within the member states or their constituent parts".

Mrs. Papandreou told us:

"In the particular articles in the Charter there are always references to national law, collective agreements, even to practices which exist or are in force in the Member States, so we are not intending to impose a unified system in the Community".

So the charter is pretty anodyne and toothless. She also told us:

"We are not going to propose directives, regulations or recommendations for all the issues in the Charter".

So what is going to happen? We looked at some of the detail. First, we looked at the concept of a minimum wage, minimum income, and a "decent wage", because the charter refers to these. Indeed, because it refers to them, some people naively think that the charter will assure them throughout the Community. Unfortunately, that is not so.

Pressed on this, Mrs. Papandreou said:

"What is decent? It is different in Member States, it is even different within a Member State from region to region. We are not going to propose or decide what is not decent. It is up to Member States, up to the social partners either at national or local level, regional or industrial level, to decide what is a decent wage . . . in no way are we going to say in quantitative terms what is a decent wage."

She even went on to say:

"So it is not up to us, even in qualitative terms, to say what is decent for the Member States."

So much then for the minimum or decent wage. We will not get it from the social charter, that is clear.

What is the truth about the right to join a trade union? Some weeks ago I heard Glyn Ford, leader of the Labour Members of the European Parliament, say on the radio that the social charter would guarantee workers at Government communications headquarters the right to join a trade union. Again, unfortunately, that is not so.

Mrs. Papandreou made it clear that workers could join only unions that were what are called, "legally constituted" and that where member states disallowed or banned unions, they were not "legally constituted" and the charter would not affect that. She was asked:

"So legally constituted basically means depending on what the law of that particular Member State is?"

She replied:

"Yes. This applies to the Armed Forces and the police. Not only that, in some Member States others are not allowed to form unions."

And of course, in this member state, among the "others" are the workers at GCHQ. The charter would give them no rights whatsoever.

The section on rights of workers to information, consultation and participation has now been watered down so much as to be meaningless. It talks of this being done in "due time", and

"in such a way as to take into account the laws, collective agreements and practices in force in the member states."

In other words, it would leave things as they are.

Finally, the all-important thing is how any of this is to be implemented. Recently, the vice-president of the Commission, our former colleague Sir Leon Brittan, gave a lecture to the Institute of Personnel Management in which he said:

"If the Social Charter is to be worthy of support by all the heads of government of the European Community, it must be clear it is a statement of objectives and not a shorthand version of legislative programmes. It should be expressly agreed even though the objectives are shared, it does not follow that it is necessary and appropriate to seek to achieve them all by European Community legislation."

So, as far as the vice-president of the European Commission is concerned, it is to be a mere statement of objectives.

At the Heads of Government meeting in December, they will be asked to accept the social charter as a "solemn declaration". What will that mean? What legal effect will that have? The answer is, none at all. Mrs. Papandreou explained:

"Of course legally it is not binding. This means if these rights are not implemented in the Member States the workers may not go to the Court of Justice".

The House will notice the difference between the single internal market and the economic dimension on the one hand, and the social dimension on the other—between the business man's Europe, and the workers' Europe. The internal market, had first a White Paper, outlining 300 steps, then a treaty—the Single European Act—which gave it a legal basis and majority voting. The social dimension has no White Paper, no treaty, no legal basis and no majority voting—only plenty of vested interests capable of standing in its way, and nullifying it.

If the solemn declaration were adopted—although according to what the Secretary of State has said, it sounds as though Britain will veto it—the Commission would then have to go away and work out a whole number of draft regulations and directives, and that would take a long time. The draft regulations and directives would then have to go to the Council of Ministers where, on past experience, they would get stuck for years and be dealt with by unanimity. In other words, everyone would have a veto.

We have had the Vredeling proposals on worker participation and the Commission already has a draft directive on part-time work. However, they have been delayed in the Council of Ministers for almost 10 years, with little evidence of any change of heart. Mrs. Papandreou admitted all this, saying:

"You are right that most of this comes under unanimity, not majority, which means it is very difficult, and in some cases nearly impossible to get some proposals adopted by the Council."

I notice that the Secretary of State does not mind doing things on health and safety, which is the one area that has a qualified majority, which therefore means that he has no choice. He has to make such moves whether he likes it or not. However, Mrs. Papandreou told us:

"On other issues—social security, equal opportunities, mobility of people—we need unanimity . . . most of the important issues come under unanimity, and this is a problem."

She also said:

"There is no way to oblige the Council to take a decision; if they do not want to take a decision, it is very difficult to oblige them."

Although Mrs. Papandreou said that she would take the proposals to the Council by the end of 1992, she also said:

"then it is up to the Council to decide and there is the problem, because we cannot impose a timetable on the Council and if there is unanimity, then some of these proposals may be delayed for years, as has happened already."

In conclusion, the social charter is, alas, something of a non-event. It is an empty gesture, a slogan, a figleaf to cover the competitive free-for-all of 1992. So while the Labour party should support the social charter, it would be a self-delusion for us to expect too much from it. One thing is obvious—while the present Government remain in office, they can block the charter. When this Government are ejected from office, we will not need it, for we shall be able to legislate for workers' rights, here in Westminster. We need not waste too much time on the will-o'-the-wisp of Socialism through the back door; rather, let us work for a new Labour Government to legislate for Socialism through the front door.

Mr. Spearing: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Earlier, I raised a point of order relating to documents to be deposited in the Vote Office arising from the presidency text that will be dealt with in Strasbourg. This afternoon, the Select Committee on European Legislation has considered that text and its report is now available in the Vote Office.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure that the House is grateful to the hon. Gentleman, who has been very helpful.

5.19 pm

Mr. Jonathan Aitken (Thanet, South): As a result of listening to the past two speeches from the Labour Benches, I am a little confused about exactly what the Labour party's policy is on the social charter. The hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Leighton) described the social charter as "anodyne" and a "non-event". However, the authentic voice of the yuppie tendency in the new model Labour party, the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) seemed to think that the social charter was the greatest thing since sliced bread. I was amazed by the sound of his barking up the wrong tree until we reached that magical moment when there was an intervention from my right hon. Friend the Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Raison). As a result of that intervention it dawned on the hon. Member for Sedgefield that he might be championing a cause that would be unlawful under the social charter that he warmly endorsed. His incomprehension was visible. Suddenly he realised that the closed shop might be outlawed under the social charter that he was so enthusiastically endorsing. That thought had not dawned on him before.

A degree of incomprehension exists not only in the Labour party, but inside the Brussels Commission. I visited the Commission a few days ago and discovered some of the reasons why it completely fails to understand the depth of dislike for the social charter which exists on the Conservative Benches and which, once it is well understood, will exist in the country at large. That incomprehension stems not from an argument about what should or should not be part of the possible social dimension of the single European market, but from something far greater and far deeper. The divide is far wider.

The civil servants of Brussels are now so thrilled by the pace of their own momentum towards their chosen goal of a federalist united states of Europe that they simply no longer accept the legitimacy of the legislature, the sovereign parliament, of a member state. That is the great divide. We are discussing a series of issues that, a few years ago or even a few months ago, no one ever considered would be anything other than the sovereign preserve of the domestic legislature. Employment and industrial policies are the very gut issues upon which parliaments have always had, and still have, the sovereign right to decide. If we start handing over that part of our domestic agenda to the Commission we must take that step slowly and carefully.

The great divide is not whether we are good Europeans, but whether we should be bad parliamentarians. The question is whether we should hand to Brussels control over a vast swathe of our domestic policy or fight to keep it under the control of the House of Commons, whichever party is in power. Opposition Members who have so enthusiastically, but thoughtlessly, endorsed the social charter today may come to regret it when the boot is on the other foot, as it will be one day. When they want to introduce legislation to improve social rights or trade union rights they will find they are unable to do so because of the social charter.

After 10 years of hard work to try to unshackle British industry from a whole lot of restrictions and to get rid of trade union abuse of power it is understandable that Conservatives should be reluctant to see all that good work suddenly destroyed by a social charter that imposes a whole lot of new restrictions and new trade union powers over the head of our domestic legislation.

Mr. Eddie Loyden (Liverpool, Garston): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that minimum social policies are laid out in the social charter and that it would be the responsibility of an individual Government, a sovereign state, to build on those policies if it so desired? The Conservative Government are more concerned about any restrictions on the free market economy and that is why they are resisting the idea of a social charter for Europe.

Mr. Aitken: The hon. Gentleman will find that what he calls the "minimum" will be an expensive and much more far-reaching minimum than the mere terms of the social charter declaration. The hon. Member for Newham, North-East was right to say that the social charter has no legal status and, on the face of it, it is a fairly anodyne series of declarations. Those declarations, however, are declarations of principle which will open the floodgates to a mass of European legislation and EC directives that will completely change the face of British social and industrial policy.

One need only follow up some of the words of Mrs. Papandreou, who has been quite articulate on this matter, to appreciate the scope of the social charter. On 20 November she gave a press conference at which she outlined, in fairly menacing detail, the European

[Mr. Aitken]

Commission's programme of legislation that would follow the acceptance of the social charter and which would put it into practice. That programme of action consists of no fewer than 47 separate measures, some of them more than 100 pages long. That blueprint—in view of Mrs. Papandreou's well-known political affiliations, perhaps we should call it a redprint—was recently described by the New Statesman as

"The Holy Grail of the Left".

That shows that that magazine knows what it is saying when it endorses a policy so popular with the Labour party.

Those 47 legislative measures and directives can be imposed on the House of Commons and on the British people by the majority voting mechanism in Europe, even though we may wish to object. They cover a wide range of issues, including working hours, health and safety at work, conditions for pregnant women, worker share ownership, equality of men and women and workers' participation. It is appropriate that those measures should be introduced by a Greek Socialist, as the social charter will be a Trojan horse of expenses for British industry. Mrs. Papandreou will go down in history as the face that launched a thousand British bankruptcies—if we get away with a thousand we will be lucky.

What will the directives mean to a small British business? Let us take the least controversial item on Mrs. Papandreou's shopping list, that relating to health and safety at work. It sounds admirable and we are all in favour of good health and safety at work measures—[HON. MEMBERS: "No, you are not."] Opposition Members may shout that, but the Government have a proud record of supporting health and safety at work legislation.

Mr. Bernie Grant (Tottenham): Can the hon. Gentleman tell us how many young people have been killed or injured on youth training schemes introduced by the Government?

Mr Aitken: I am absolutely certain that the health and safety inspectorate has repeatedly endorsed our legislation as the best available health and safety at work legislation. Often, it was approved in this House with the support of both parties. All industrial accidents and injuries are tragic—there is no getting away from that—but the notion that Britain has a woefully inadequate set of health and safety laws is rubbish. Opposition Members know that that is rubbish as they often endorsed that very legislation.

Mr. Tony Lloyd (Stretford): Does the hon. Gentleman accept there are two parts to health and safety legislation? The first relates to the legal framework and the second relates to the ability to enforce that framework. The number of factory inspectors has been cut by the Government and the number of deaths and injuries at work has increased. Does the hon. Gentleman accept or refute that?

Mr. Aitken: I simply do not accept that. Let us go a step further, as we are debating the social charter and not the minutiae of how many inspectors we have. The important question is to what extent the social charter will enhance health and safety at work legislation. I took the trouble to look up the EC draft legislation on health and safety at work, to be introduced once the social charter is implemented. It makes fascinating reading. First I was struck by the sheer scope of it—a 175-page document, which contains an absolutely amazing list of items. Paragraph 2:18:1 of the draft legislation states:

"Outdoor workers shall be protected against inclement weather conditions"

Tell that to the shepherds of the north of Scotland or the trawlermen on the North sea as the Euro-inspectors are called in to see that all outdoor workers are protected satisfactorily against all inclement weather conditions.

Paragraph 2:14:3 states:

"Appropriate measures for the protection of non smokers shall be taken in staff rest rooms."

[HON. MEMBERS: "Hear, hear."] What has that to do with the single market? Hon. Gentlemen who say, "Hear, hear" should think of small businesses and employers who have to pay the bills for this social engineering, because they will have to bear heavy costs.

Many other hon. Members wish to speak, so I shall truncate this part of my speech. Time and again in the back-up documents to the social charter we find many items that are to do with social engineering and will cost employers a great deal of money. If Mrs. Papandreou or any of her successors supplements Britain's excellent existing health and safety at work legislation with these items, it will prove mighty expensive.

The social charter will do nothing for small businesses except make them more expensive and legalistic to run them. It will do nothing for Europe's 14 million unemployed except make it harder for them to find jobs. It will do nothing for young people except restrict under 18-year-olds from certain types of employment. If we check the text of the charter we can see that such restrictions exist. It will definitely hurt, for example, the paper boy and those young people under 18 who want to get jobs as kitchen hands in McDonalds restaurants serving Big Macs and so on. The social charter contains savage restrictions.

Who will it help if it does not help small businesses, the unemployed and young people? It will help the fat cats of Brussels; it will be a bonanza for the lawyers and bureaucrats who will be assisted by the social charter. It will not strengthen Britain's legislation for such social engineering to be brought in. However, if it is to be brought in, let it be done by the will of a sovereign Parliament and Members who have been elected by the public on a manifesto for that purpose. If that is what the Opposition achieve, good luck to them. That is British democracy, but to see it done through the back door——

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Single European Act.

Mr. Aitken: The hon. Gentleman shouts, "Single European Act," but he should return to the question that was asked of his hon. Friend the Member for Sedgefield who could not answer: what happens when, under the Single European Act and the social charter, the Labour party's cherished views on increasing trade unions' powers are made illegal even though Labour Members have been elected on a ticket saying that they will increase the rights of trade unions to run closed shops? Conservative Members may give three cheers that the social charter is doing a great job, but the Opposition who abdicated the rights of a sovereign Parliament will learn the hard way that, by endorsing the social charter, they are throwing away an important part of Britain's parliamentary history and tradition.

5.33 pm

Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): Hon. Members who have heard the previous two speeches might be confused. The Select Committee's distinguished chairman, the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Leighton) said that what we are debating today does not add up to much. The hon. Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) said that it is about to herald a social revolution. People would have cause to be confused but for the fact that this debate, like so many of our European debates, contains some familiar landmarks.

The hon. Member for Thanet, South and some of his hon. Friends tabled an amendment which shows how much they cling to a disappearing mirage of national parliamentary sovereignty. Ministers have beaten their breasts about how pro-European they are and excused themselves by saying that everyone is out of step except them. The slight difference this time is that Labour Front-Bench spokesmen have given an almost warm embrace to the European proposals before us. We would not have seen that in the previous Parliament, and did not even see it last night when right hon. and hon. Members of the Labour party could not bring themselves to support the amendment of my right hon. and hon. Friends which called for an early commitment to enter the exchange rate mechanism of the EMS.

There is a familiarity about European debates. This one on the social charter is significant. The majority of our fellow citizens have by now heard of 1992 and the single market. While these developments are to our considerable advantage and to be welcomed, I suspect that most people are hazy about what will happen. No matter how much effort is made, there is still a feeling that the single market and 1992 are all about big businesses and financial institutions—a sphere of our community life to which many people do not relate. However, the social charter is widely seen as relevant to the lives of ordinary men and women.

Although the hon. Member for Newham, North-East said that the social charter was a figleaf, it is seen as symbolic. It is neither an abstract measure nor one of those European regulations that attracts headlines because of an excess of bureaucratic zeal which makes it ridiculous. It is seen as something with the potential, in the long term, of improving the lot of many ordinary people in a relevant and meaningful way.

Not surprisingly, the Government's response has been bitterly disappointing. Perhaps if they, like us, were more confident of their commitment to the European Community and the cause of greater European unity, they would be more willing to approach these matters in a constructive rather than destructive mode. To be pro-European does not imply a willingness to accept everything that the Commission proposes. If the social charter proposed, as it did originally, a European minimum wage, I would have opposed that aspect. However, its commitment is solely that those in employment should be remunerated at a level on which they can afford to live. That is—or at least should be—unexceptional.

Mr. Cash: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that, with so much of this transnational acquisition taking place, it is by no means improbable that some companies will acquire factories in other low-wage countries, and find that, to achieve rationalisation within the multinational which they then have, they have to close the factories in the low-wage country? That will have a devastating effect on jobs, including those over here.

Mr. Wallace: I think that the hon. Gentleman meant it the other way round and was proposing closures in factories in high-wage countries.

Mr. John Marshall (Hendon, South) rose——

Mr. Wallace: I shall answer the previous question.

Several factors influence investment decisions, of which wage costs are one. There are many others, including industrial relations. Is shall return to the argument that the social charter will lead to a loss of jobs. It seems to be at the core of the Government's opposition to the social charter; the Secretary of State said that it was the acid test.

The Secretary of State did not do the House a service when he tried to give the impression that Mrs. Papandreou said that the social charter would lead to job losses. The hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) quoted her statement on page 3 of her evidence to the Select Committee, when she said:

"I do not think that the implementation of the Charter is going to have negative effects on job creation."

The Secretary of State countered that by saying that he had been at meetings with Mrs. Papandreou more often than had the hon. Member for Sedgefield. I have never been at a meeting with the lady. However, I noted that on page 7 of her evidence she repeated the point in different words but to the same effect. She said:

"There is nothing clear that this is going to decrease employment."

It is a fallacy to say that jobs will automatically be lost and unemployment increased as a result of the social charter.

I accept that job creation is a major priority for the Community. It was agreed at Madrid that it was one of the Community's central objectives. Unemployment in the Community of almost 9 per cent. is far too high. There are other means open to the Community to promote employment and the generation of jobs. There are the regional and social funds. If the Government are so concerned about the generation of jobs, they might start applying the additionality principle in relation to spending from these funds. It is wrong to criticise these proposals by comparing them against a test which the proposals and those promoting them do not seek to put forward.

I do not accept that there is a contradiction between high employment, good health and safety practices and high wages. Often the opposite is true and where there are high wages there is also high employment. That is the case in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce). Scottish Members will know that the Aberdeen area has some of the highest wages in Scotland, yet Gordon has the lowest unemployment in Scotland—2·9 per cent. Other factors, such as the introduction of technology and a recognition of the importance of training, can help to promote productivity and competitiveness. In many cases employment is restricted by the shortage of adequate skills.

The social charter sets out the rights to vocational training throughout one's working life, especially by means of study leave. It gives people under the age of 18 a guarantee of training during working hours which in many ways can promote employment. Employment can be curtailed too, by things such as high interest rates. It is wholly bogus to say that the establishment of better working conditions and the right to training will lead to a diminution of employment opportunities.

[Mr. Wallace]

The Government seem to have considerable reservations about the right of workers to information, consultation and participation in industry. It will be no surprise to the House to know that we consider such rights to be important. They have been at the core of Liberal policy since the yellow book of 1928 and are at the heart of the policies of the Liberal Democrats. [Laughter.] Conservative Members laugh, but in his speech the Secretary of State placed great emphasis on what the Government have done to promote profit-sharing and employee share ownership. If he had had the time he would have acknowledged the fact that it was during the Lib-Lab pact of 1978 that the initial measures for profit-sharing were introduced. To their credit, the Government have built upon those measures, but they have not gone far enough.

In a speech at a CBI seminar in November, the Secretary of State, speaking about the traditions of other European countries, said:

"Take employee involvement . . . their traditions are not ours. Ours is a voluntary system and, for us, successful employee involvement is best developed on the basis of voluntary agreement. This does not rule out the three models in the Commission list; but it does mean that list is not exclusive."

I accept that there must be flexibility in working out the detail of employee councils at the place of work. We must provide opportunities for participation by employees at the top level. But there is a tremendous complacency which says that because our system is different it is by definition better. There would be some justification for saying that if our system of industrial relations was seen to work. However, over the past 10 years the Government have secured industrial peace through high unemployment. It is only now, when in some parts of the country unemployment has fallen, or where there is almost full employment, that industrial disruption is again beginning to raise its head. The Government have failed to address themselves to any proper system of industrial relations.

We should not dismiss what we can learn from our European partners. It was the British who gave the Germans a good system of industrial relations after the second world war. We should be looking to the successful West German economy.

Mr. Rooker: We also gave the Germans their electoral system.

Mr. Wallace: We gave them a federal system too, which we would do well to copy. West Germany has shown that the development of trade unionism and proper industrial relations can go hand in hand in a successful economy.

The Secretary of State talked about the opening up of eastern Europe. I suspect that, when the countries of eastern Europe look west to try to improve their economies, they will look not at the British model but at the West German model. We should do that too. The charter gives the Community an opportunity for a much-needed social dimension. If insularity and complacency again stop us playing our part in that, it will be a sad mistake. It is because the charter offers a social dimension that we shall support the Opposition amendment.

5.43 pm

Mr. Roger Gale (Thanet, North): I welcome the opportunity to place on record a concern that has been expressed to me by my constituents and for which I have considerable sympathy. It is that nowhere in the social charter does the Community recognise its responsibility under God. Under charters such as the Magna Carta, the German charter and the charter of the Irish Republic, that fact is recognised.

In recent years, Parliament has enshrined in law provision to recognise conscience, especially in trade union law. I sought to raise that matter during the speech by the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair), but he did not see fit to give way to me. The hon. Gentleman made it abundantly plain after an intervention by one of my hon. Friends that the Opposition are still wedded to the idea of a closed shop and the compulsion which that entails.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) said in his excellent speech, 47 measures are designed to spring as directives from the social charter. It is not an anodyne document or simply the basis for a talking shop, because it will lead to at least 47 separate action measures. Each of those can and may impinge upon the consciences of some of my constituents and the consciences of many people throughout the Community.

Mr. Allen McKay (Barnsley, West and Penistone): There is a conscience clause in closed-shop agreements that allows a person not to be a member of a trade union but to pay contributions to a charity.

Mr. Gale: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman. I said that that principle was enshrined in the law of the United Kingdom. This debate is not about the law of the United Kingdom but about the law of Europe as it may be changed by European directives. That fact is of tremendous significance to many people throughout the Community who hold religious beliefs that the hon. Gentleman and I may not hold, and that is simply not recognised.

As has been suggested, the social charter as it stands will destroy jobs. It is not a social charter but worse, because it is a Socialist charter that may well lead to the denial throughout the European Community of religious freedoms that are passionately and deeply held by many people. There is no monopoly in the House on deeply held belief and we all know that beliefs are held as deeply on the Opposition side as they are on the Government side. It is important that any charter that the European Community might adopt should reflect the religious views of people throughout the Community. I hope that all hon. Members will insist upon that.

5.46 pm

Mr. Ken Eastham (Manchester, Blackley): The fact that Ministers are in a state of panic is obvious from the distortion and hysteria that they are directing to the House. I assure the Government that some of us met Mrs. Papandreou when she appeared before the Select Committee. I can verify that the Secretary of State engaged in a great deal of distortion in his speech. The record is there to be read.

The more that I hear the Prime Minister, other Ministers, the CBI and big business ranting and raving about the social charter, the more I am in tune with those who say that there is something good in it for ordinary working people. The details of the charter have not been made clear to the mass of the people, and the more that those details are explained to them the more the ordinary people like the prospects held out by the social charter.

I used to think that there was not very much in the EC for the British people, and I remember some of the high costs that were incurred in agriculture and other matters. On those occasions there were no protests from the Government or from big business, because they thought that there were big profits to be made. [HON. MEMBERS: "Nonsense."] Conservative Members say, "Nonsense." I accept that there are some exceptions, but the number is small. Big business used all its efforts and its finance to make sure that we joined the EC. Suddenly it is dawning on big business and the Government that sometimes one or two good things can come from the EC. Consequently, they seem to be backing off and saying that we must be independent and see which way we are going. They say that we must be careful about all the dangers that arise from the social charter. If this happens, it will be one of the rare pluses of membership.

Whenever the Government start quoting the CBI and big business, we know that they are interested only in profit. The Government do not claim that the trade unions are opposed to the social charter, and I assure the House that the TUC and any trade union members to whom I explain the social charter are fully behind it and look forward to the day when it can be introduced to Britain.

Mr. Quentin Davies (Stamford and Spalding): What about the closed shop?

Mr. Eastham: Tory Members keep talking about the closed shop. Usually they are people who have never worked in a factory and do not even know what the closed shop is about.

Mr. Davies: I am looking forward to hearing from the hon. Gentleman his explanation of his party's attitude towards the closed shop. We have been waiting all afternoon for an answer on this important point.

Mr. Eastham: I shall explain it again to the hon. Gentleman. Please watch my mouth. There is a conscience clause for people who find themselves in difficulties with the closed shop. Is that in plain enough English? It has been explained once before, although it is possible that the hon. Gentleman was not here.

Mr. Davies: Does the hon. Gentleman accept, on behalf of the Labour party, that if the social charter were accepted, it would make pre-entry closed shops illegal? Is he, on behalf of the Labour party, accepting that as a consequence of his support for the social charter?

Mr. Eastham: The document is not legally binding, but it would be encouraging if we were to honour and recognise some of the codes in it. I am sure that working people would overwhelmingly approve that. It is strange that of the 12 nations of the EC, 11 agree with the social charter and support it. Surprise, surprise, only Britain does not support it. Why is it that the economies of these countries are better than ours? They have lower interest rates, lower unemployment rates and better balances of payments than we do. However, they are all prepared to accept the social charter. That makes some of the empty arguments that we have heard today even more unconvincing.

On several occasions, the Government have said that if we have the social charter, we shall lose jobs. However, even without a social charter, over the past 10 years we have lost millions of jobs. At one time, 3 million people were unemployed and we had the worst unemployment figure in Europe. The Conservative Government are not bad at creating unemployment, with or without the social charter.

What is the charter all about? It is about rights of employment, training, discrimination, the right to withdraw labour, part-time working, low pay, health and safety. One or two hon. Members have spoken about health and safety and I assure the House that there is great concern about the growing number of industrial injuries. I am an engineer and yesterday I went with a deputation to meet the Secretary of State for Energy. We were concerned about the safety standards on offshore oil rigs. We told the Secretary of State that fatality rates on our oil rigs are one and a half times those of the world average. Furthermore, there has been no improvement in 25 years and these figures are twice those for the oil rigs in the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. Loyden: Earlier on, a Conservative Member referred to safety standards in Britain, but did not mention that 156 building workers died through accidents in the construction industry. Does that show that there are adequate safety measures in that industry?

Mr. Eastham: I am sure that many of my hon. Friends could give illustrations of this problem. However, as health and safety standards in the United Kingdom were spoken of as if everything were all right, I felt that this matter should be underlined.

Some of the engineers working on the oil rigs are on two-week contracts. If any of them dare to complain about safety risks and possible fatalities, not only are their contracts not renewed, but they are put on a blacklist. Some Conservative Members get emotional about the closed shop, but workers should have rights in relation to these blacklists. What about the activities of the Economic League? This secret service organisation is compiling lists of workers, is not answerable to anybody and is not even a Government body. It is a private organisation run by big business. It blacklists workers and denies them the right to work for the rest of their lives. We feel that some of these things should be put right.

Why do we have such a terrible strike record? For instance, in 1988, 3,702,000 days were lost through strikes.

Dame Elaine Kellet-Bowman: What about 1978?

Mr. Eastham: It is laying eggs. Now and again it happens. It was over there before, and it is over there now. She has just woken up.

I have some statistics that may be interesting when we consider labour relations and our appalling record on strikes. Workers in other European countries also have the right to strike, but the figures for these countries are much better. Per 1,000 workers, the United Kingdom lost 400 days, Denmark 250, France and Germany 50, and the Netherlands 10. It is no use the Prime Minister pontificating about other trade unions and other working groups in other countries, as she did when she went to Poland, when she demanded rights for the trade union workers, and then coming back here and, year after year, eroding the standards of working conditions for British workers. We now have the lowest paid worker groups in Europe—far worse than Germany, France or Italy.

[Mr. Eastham]

These are some of the reasons why we believe that the social charter is a useful vehicle. It is not perfect, but at least it is a beginning. Regardless of the attitudes of a reactionary Government, we know that if the social charter is placed before the workers—[Interruption.] The Minister seems to think that this is a great joke. There is a smile all over his face. It is not a big joke to me. The Minister sneers and sniggers, but he will not do that when we enter the next general election. My right hon. and hon. Friends and I will draw attention to his behaviour when in office.

I believe that there is progress to be made. The Government cannot get away with everything for ever. The more that the people know about the social charter, the more they will support the Opposition.

6 pm

Mr. Peter Griffiths (Portsmouth, North): It would be a great pity if the impression were given that we are debating a specific series of proposals rather like the constitution of the United States or a Bill of Rights—something clearly established which reflects the desire of people that it should be set down firmly and in writing.

We are not discussing inalienable rights that are seen as self-evident. Rather, we are talking about a moving target. The Opposition's amendment refers to "the" social charter. Even our annunciators refer to "the" social charter. We have, however, had at least three versions of it. When final decisions are made on the principle at Strasbourg, we shall be dealing with what is, in effect, the fourth version. It is important for us to recognise that we are trying to decide whether the House believes that there should be a social dimension to the political and economic changes that are being brought about in western Europe, which will reach a significant peak in 1992.

I disagree with my hon. Friends who say that there is little role for a social charter; I believe that there is. There must be a social dimension if we are to carry the people along with the concept of ever closer economic and political union. If we are to do that, there will have to be a social dimension.

I am worried because the debate has reflected the extreme views of those who say we should accept and endorse a social charter. It is surprising that the Opposition suggest in their amendment that they are prepared to take it lock, stock and barrel. Presumably, they are endorsing what has been said, what will be said and what will emerge from the action programme. The directives and recommendations that flow from that may not contain the wording that we wish.

The social charter as we see it now is very much a charter for social organisations. Perhaps that is why it is attractive to the Opposition. A social dimension should emphasise the right of labour as a social organisation and the rights of individuals and the family, on which our societies are founded. One of the tragedies is that Britain has not pressed the view that the foundation of society in western Europe should be the family rather than any social organisation that has arisen from the industrial revolution and later.

I hope that the Minister who replies will deal with the point that whether or not we decide to support the social charter, there will be a social charter in Europe. The real question is to what extent we shall have control. Shall we be able to make real decisions on the directives and recommendations that have been listed? We know already that some of them will be subject to unanimity while some will be subject to majority voting. What will happen if there is a majority vote carrying a proposal that we regard as profoundly unacceptable? I do not wish to take up the argument about the closed shop, but proposals could be contained in directives and recommendations which eventually would be just as objectionable to Opposition Members as to my right hon. and hon. Friends.

Mr. Martin Flannery (Sheffield, Hillsborough): The hon. Gentleman said that the social charter does not embrace anything more than organisations. We would not dream of supporting something that was restricted to organisations. The social charter is concerned with equality of men and women and rights of individuals. It could concentrate on issues that would give the maximum benefit to the individual, who is often in organisations. The hon. Gentleman is wrong to say that the social charter relates only to organisations.

Mr. Griffiths: I profoundly disagree with the hon. Gentleman. The charter is concerned basically with social organisations that arise as a result of economic activity. It seems to regard people as factors of production, while I wish to see them as individuals and families. I trust that we shall make it clear tonight that we are embracing the concept of a social foundation for any movement towards greater harmonisation in Europe. I hope that we shall make it clear that we wish changes that are brought about following the acceptance of a social charter to emphasise the traditional social values—the individual and the family—which in this country predate the development of industrial society.

6.7 pm

Mr. John D. Taylor (Strangford): Anyone listening to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) might think that the House was debating conditions in the workplace, which would involve issues such as health provision, safety conditions, equality of opportunity, training, consultation, collective rights of workers and unemployment benefit. Instead, we are debating who will make the law that reflects social changes in the work place, and with what authority that responsibility shall be exercised. That is the key issue.

Mr. Seamus Mallon (Newry and Armagh): We are also discussing who will obey this law. The Government's record of derogation from European law is unequalled within Europe. The right hon. Gentleman lives in the north of Ireland, and he knows that there is another Government who infringe the right of individuals to shop where they want to shop.

Mr. Taylor: For the first time in this place, to my memory, I welcome the hon. Gentleman's intervention and the strong admonition that he has directed to the Fianna Fail Government in the Republic of Ireland, who deny their citizens the right to shop in Northern Ireland. Yet they say that they are good Europeans.

The real issue is whether we want diversity of national practice to be accepted within the European Community or whether we want harmonisation in Europe—known as social integration. There must be consistency because we now have the Single European Act, which directs that in time there will be social integration throughout the European Community. I was a Member of the European Parliament for 10 years and the movement towards a federal Europe is almost unstoppable. There will be an integrated Europe. As the hon. Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) said, there will be a United States of Europe.

The hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) was consistent with the European Single Act tonight. The Opposition are suggesting that the British people should surrender their right through elections to decide their social policy; and that the British people should abandon their right through their sovereign Parliament to enact social policy. That is consistent with the Single European Act. The Labour party has done a somersault. It has surrendered the right of the British people to pass legislation for workers on the shop floor. It is handing over power to a bureaucracy in Brussels, consistent with the European Act.

At least the Labour party is consistent. There is no consistency from the Government or Conservative Back Benchers. They are in disarray, fudging the issue and running away from what the Single European Act means to the United Kingdom. The Conservative party is about to have a leadership election—for a change—and one reason for that is the diversity of views on European issues on the Conservative Benches.

The time has come when the Conservative party must be consistent. Having supported the Single European Act, either they now implement it fully and abandon power to Brussels, or they think again and stand up for the rights of British workers in British industry.

6.11 pm

Mr. Teddy Taylor (Southend, East): The right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) has been rather unfair to the Labour party. The Single European Act was debated late at night when, sadly, only one of his colleagues was present, and 20 Labour Members voted against it. Opposition Members have changed their minds dramatically, but it is unfair to describe them as changelings, because one or two of them voted against that shameful Act.

However, the right hon. Gentleman was right to say that the real issue that we are debating is not the social charter. The social charter may bring joy to the faces of some Socialists because it is written in such general terms that it can mean anything to anybody. It may say that it will bring freedom to workers and decent wages, that it will guarantee social rights, give a maximum duration of working hours, guarantee weekly rest periods, even for part-time workers, and encourage an appropriate degree of participation. But those are simply slogans.

If I were an elderly member of the Labour party or somebody who has battled in the trade union movement, that is the kind of thing that I would want. If a public opinion poll asked people whether they agreed with those slogans, the vast majority of people would say, "Yes, that's a grand idea." But the real issue is whether we as a Parliament are prepared to surrender a huge area of our sovereignty to a non-elected, non-democratic institution. We cannot deny that the Commission is unelected. It is not answerable to the people in any way. Acting by majority rule, the Council of Ministers is in no way democratic. Whether the words in the social charter are good or bad, whether we like the slogans or not, it means that we must surrender a massive degree of our sovereignty to make laws on trade unions, labour relations and health and safety.

Earlier today I asked my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary what we can still do ourselves without being subject to European control. He said that I would have to work that out for myself by looking at what powers we have already given to the European Parliament. It was encouraging to hear my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment, who has always been an enthusiast for the Common Market, say that the Government are opposed to some aspects of the social charter and will battle against them.

I enjoyed my right hon. Friend's speech. He talked wonderful common sense. But what on earth can the Government do? The social charter is a collection of slogans. It means nothing. It directs the Commission to produce directives. But my right hon. Friend is well aware that even if the social charter is not approved, even if we and the European Council tear it up, the Commission can, under the Single European Act, present all the directives and institute a massive amount by a majority vote. The Commission has already said that. The Socialists in the European Parliament say that, if no progress is made, they will work to rule whether that is lawful or not. I asked the Prime Minister, who is one of the most honest Prime Ministers that Britain has ever had,

"if the EEC Commission is now empowered to issue the social charter directives to the various Councils of Ministers in light of the majority vote".—[Official Report, 18 July 1989; Vol.157, c.141.]

She said that, under the Single European Act, the Commission could go ahead with them.

I hope that when my hon. Friend the Minister replies he will tell the British people what we shall do if the directives go through by a majority vote and we find them unacceptable and wrong. That is the big issue that we must face up to tonight and in future. What shall we do if the EC insists on passing laws which we find utterly unacceptable?

Mr. Tony Banks: The hon. Gentleman is speaking as though the directives that might come from the EEC based on the social charter will be unacceptable to the great majority of people in Britain. Given the low level of protection in the workplace and in social matters, the great majority of people in Great Britain will be very much in favour of such directives.

Mr. Taylor: Yes, I am sure they will. On the other hand, if the directive is passed that makes the closed shop illegal, some members of the Labour party could object. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman, as a good parliamentarian—he is always here when the others are out there—will ask what a Labour Government would do if laws passed under the Single European Act were utterly unacceptable. The Government are facing a crisis. What are they to do, bearing in mind that the Common Market is going much further than we thought it would under the Single European Act?

There are several things that we can do. We can simply say that we will not apply the regulations. In a splendid article in The Sunday Telegraph, Professor Minford said that that was what the Government should do; that if laws were passed that we did not like, we should tell the Commission to get lost. That is a rather unusual proposal for a Conservative Government who believe that law and order should apply. It is the kind of thing that Ian Smith did and which we thought was wrong.

[Mr. Taylor]

But we must stop kidding ourselves. Only a few weeks ago the Prime Minister said that we should forget about the previous budgetary restraints. We now have legally binding budgetary restraints. If cereal production went beyond 160 million tonnes, under the stabiliser farmers would see a cut in their prices. That figure has been exceeded this year, and last week, even though our Minister voted against it, the Commission agreed to disregard the extra above 160 million tonnes because it said that it would not be appropriate to do otherwise. Therefore, we can forget about that.

In the same way, we were told that the budgetary controls would work, but we found that because expenditure was going through the roof the Commission and the Councils decided to have a metric year of 10 months with 10 years' income and 12 months' expenditure. The same has happened time and again. Ministers say that all the refunds that we have had are wonderful, but they know that this year our net contribution is the highest that it has ever been, at more than £2 billion.

I hope that, following the excellent speech of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment in which he said that if regulations are unacceptable we will oppose them, he will tell us how we will oppose them. What powers do we have to oppose them? At the end of the day, we must make up our minds. I hope that the Government will soon realise that in a democracy in Britain, whether we have a Conservative or a Labour Government, a Liberal or a nationalist Government, the people want certain things to be done. They do not want them done by bureaucrats in Brussels, nor do they want them done without a democratic vote. In the same way, the people of Greece may want a different form of government and different trade union laws. That is what democracy is all about.

I hope that the time will soon come when the Government realise that it is a question not of a concept that attacks Toryism or Socialism but of one that attacks the basic democracy of our country. Power-hungry bureaucrats in Brussels are taking more and more power. At the end of the day, whether the social charter contains words that appeal to Socialists or to Tories, the real issue is whether democracy can continue and whether our Government are prepared to do anything to ensure that it does.

6.19 pm

Mr. Jeff Rooker (Birmingham, Perry Barr): Tonight we are debating the idea that the economic and social cohesion of the single European market is crucial and that there cannot be one without the other. We are in danger of short-changing our citizens by not securing for them the full social and economic advantages that the single market offers. I do not see how the United Kingdom can opt out of ensuring decent pay and the right to an annual holiday —and no such right exists in our country—as well as rights for Britain's 6 million part-time workers.

As I said during business questions last week, I make no apology for changing my mind about the Common Market as I have witnessed the development of the European Community. I freely admit that, with many others, I voted no in the referendum on Britain's entry into the Common Market. However, tonight I am here with my right hon. and hon. Friends on a three-line Whip, because Labour is prepared to embrace the reality of the modern European Community. We are not debating now the same things that were on offer 10 or 15 years ago. The address given by Jacques Delors to the 1988 Trades Union Congress and the standing ovation given to the Socialist leader in the European Parliament at this year's Labour party conference would not have happened there a few years ago.

We take for granted the Prime Minister's abuse and her writing off of the charter when it was first published. The fact remains that, however the Government dress up their opposition—be it in the form of a choice line in abuse or preposterous claims about the social charter outlawing school pupils from delivering newspapers—what they really cannot stomach is that over a whole range of workers' rights, from fair play and social security to health and safety and training, the social charter will not allow any retrogression in respect of the status quo, so there can be no more backward steps. That is in itself a step forward and one that we should grab for our fellow citizens.

As I reminded the Secretary of State in an intervention early in his speech, the Conservative Government's first legislative action on taking power in 1979 was to remove workers' rights in respect of unfair dismissal. A charter of fundamental rights, let alone one of social rights, is long overdue. After the experience of the past 10 years it is hardly surprising that the British Labour and trade union movements at last recognise that acting in concert with other progressive democratic forces in Europe is to the overwhelming advantage of British workers as well as of our neighbours on the mainland of Europe.

We have only to look at the events that are occurring throughout eastern Europe to see that those who oppose the establishment of basic rights are living in a bygone age but where others move forward the Government become even more entrenched. The social charter is crucial at a time when capital is ignoring international frontiers. It is vital that social rights for workers, pensioners, the disabled and others covered by the social charter should become more entrenched. The social charter that emerges from future discussions must serve as the cornerstone of the plans to remove barriers between member states in 1992.

Anyone who examines the way that we organise ourselves in this country—particularly non-British nationals—can clearly see that the few individual rights that trickle down from those who rule under our system can easily dry up. Part of the idea behind the charter is to stop that happening. That is not to say that we knock democracy or Parliament. There is nothing wrong in adjusting one's view according to one's experience, and I believe now that in a democracy nothing should be irreversible. However—and this is the rub—major decisions that go against the grain of fundamental rights should not solely be the gift of a single body, be it one elected parliament, the judiciary, or a single Government. There must be a bedrock upon which we can test the laws that are brought before individual parliaments to ensure that they are fair.

I say without apology that I see the social charter, be it the first, second, third or fourth version, as the thin end of an extremely thick wedge and something upon which we can build up the rights of citizens in this country. We should not have to apologise for that.

6.25 pm

Mr. Tony Lloyd (Stretford): The Opposition's view on developments in central Europe is that the concept of the level playing field of economics in Europe without a social charter to complement it is so unacceptable that we shall do all that we can to prevent it. The social charter is a minimum condition upon which future European developments must be based.

Under 10 years of Conservative Government there has been an annual erosion of workers' rights. As my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) said, the very first action of the Conservative Government in 1979 was to undermine the rights of workers in respect of unfair dismissal. It is hardly surprising that the Government should today, as on every other occasion, make clear their opposition to the social charter and that they will use every mechanism and means, however devious or dishonest, to undermine progress towards a social Europe.

The Government are worried about developments in Europe, and we should recognise the dishonesty that their campaign against the charter has already embodied. The Secretary of State for Employment and his Minister of State do not even seem able to get their act together. The Secretary of State has been quoted as saying that he would support a social charter, "but not this one", whereas only a few days earlier the Minister of State commented:

"It is no secret that the United Kingdom Government have reservations about the whole concept of a social charter. Indeed, our approach, our traditions, lead us to believe that one is not needed."

When the Minister of State winds up the debate, perhaps he will say what the reality is. Is the Secretary of State correct in saying that there should be some form of social charter, albeit not the one proposed—as was said yesterday by the Foreign Secretary? Or is the Minister of State right when he says that there should be no social charter—which is also the view of the Prime Minister?

The result of that confusion has been a campaign of unparalleled dishonesty from the Department of Employment and its Ministers in recent months. Even the European Commissioner, Sir Leon Brittan, who was a former Conservative Member, has said that British attacks on the Commission's proposed social charter of workers' rights have misrepresented its contents. He went on even-handedly to denounce Europhiles and Europhobes as "superannuated Sumo wrestlers" and accused Downing street of being out of date in respect of worker participation and the social charter.

Earlier, my hon. Friend the Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) pointed out how dishonest the Minister of State was in his remarks to the House two weeks ago, when he sought to misrepresent the comments of the European Commissioner, Mrs. Papandreou, and said that, in respect of worker involvement, the charter offered

"a choice between the German, the French or the Dutch models"—[Official Report, 15 November 1989; Vol. 160, c. 446.]

That night I challenged the Minister to say where in the charter that was made explicit, but he did not respond to my challenge. I am sure that when I challenge him again tonight to say where in the charter or in the action programme his claims are substantiated, once again he will refuse.

We heard earlier, and those who listened to the "Today" programme this morning will have heard, the Secretary of State claiming that managers in Britain show no support for the social charter. I quote from a press release from the British Institute of Management—[Interruption.] I hope that the Secretary of State, who is grimacing, accepts that the British Institute of Management says:

"Managers are prepared to accept some form of legislation in this area. 76 per cent., responding to a recent British Institute of Management survey said that they would accept some legislation in the controversial area of employee participation."

That means that three out of four managers agree with the Opposition and are a long way from the Government's stance.

Let us examine the Government's claims about the social charter. Their major claim is that we have had 10 years of employment growth under this Government, and the social charter will put all that at risk. Let us establish the reality of the Government's claims on employment by going back to 1979. In July this year, the former Under-Secretary of State for Employment revealed the interesting fact that over the 10 years the growth rate of civilian employment in the EC was 0·6 per cent., but in the United Kingdom we witnessed a decline in employment of 0·1 per cent. When the Secretary of State produces his selective statistics for when employment growth began, he should realise that the Opposition will accept no lectures from him on employment growth or what destroys employment. Government action has done more than any other factor to damage employment in Britain.

Mr. Iain Mills (Meriden): Is the hon. Gentleman really saying that he believes that the social charter will increase employment opportunities? Mrs. Papandreou gave no such evidence to the Select Committee.

Mr. Lloyd: If the hon. Gentleman had been listening, he would have realised that that argument has run through the entire debate. When the Secretary of State sought to misrepresent Mrs. Papandreou's words and to claim that she had put forward an argument about job loss, his words were exposed as totally bogus. As he has now had the opportunity to study the verbatim report of her comments, I hope that the Secretary of State will accept that he was wrong. We shall continue to say that the Secretary of State misrepresented Mrs. Papandreou until he is prepared at least to do her the courtesy of reading what she said before the Select Committee.

Some years ago, when the Labour Government introduced the Equal Pay Acts, they were challenged by the Conservative Opposition who claimed that equal pay legislation would destroy jobs for women. Those Equal Pay Acts were implemented, and in the following years there was an increase of about 17 per cent. in women's employment. When we hear the bogus claims that the activities covered by the social charter will destroy jobs, we dismiss them with the same contempt as we dismissed Conservative claims about equal pay.

I have in front of me the explanatory memorandum in which the Minister of State states the Government's position:

[Mr. Lloyd]

"Some of the measures proposed in the Charter would put at risk the progress made in the United Kingdom in the last ten years to set the economy on the right track."

The Minister of State knows how bogus those words are, as does every Conservative Member. He went on:

"The Government welcomes continuing progress by the Community in those areas currently within its competence. These include measures to promote freedom of movement, health and safety at work, equality of treatment between women and men and measures to assist the integration into society and working life of people with disabilities."

Let me ask the Minister of State a simple question. Will he outline those parts of the Commission's proposals which will enhance the rights of employees in those specific areas? Will he outline those which the Government will seek to impose? We know very well that, although the Government pay lip service to the enhancement of people's rights at work, their record over 10 years has shown it to be an absolute lie.

On health and safety, this afternoon the Secretary of State claimed that the Government had a great interest in and great support for what the Commission was trying to achieve. The Government have an awful record on the health and safety of people at work, which led last year to 505 deaths and nearly 200,000 injuries in British industry. Yet under the present Government the numbers of people on the Health and Safety Executive and the number of factory inspectors have been cut consistently. We know that the factory inspectorate is not capable of properly monitoring safety in the workplace

When the British Government have been asked to consider proposals on health and safety at work from the European Community, they have managed to water them down. I refer specifically to the EC draft directive on noise at work which sought at first to adopt the West German limit of 85 dB. The British Government, prompted by the CBI, which the Secretary of State prayed in aid again today, successfully lobbied to have that limit increased to 90 dB. The implications are very serious. The recorded medical facts in the Health and Safety Commission report make it clear that workers who are exposed to noise levels of 90 dB consistently throughout their working lives stand a four in 10 chance of becoming deaf. That is what the British Government forced on the rest of the European Community.

Let us consider equal opportunities, where again the Secretary of State has told us that the Government are in the forefront of development. The Government have a disastrous record. They have been blocking the proposed directive on the burden of proof in equal opportunities employment disputes. The British Government have also been blocking the parental leave directive within the European Community.

Perhaps the Minister of State can say which parts of the action programme the Government are prepared to accept. If the Secretary of State is right that in Britain we are all in favour of equal opportunities, will he accept, for example, the directive on pregnant women at work? I hope that the Minister of State will pay attention and give me an answer. Will he accept the recommendations on child care which make provision for maternity and paternity leave to which the British Government have been firmly opposed in the past? Will the Government accept the recommendation for a code of conduct on the protection of pregnancy and maternity—again, issues which they have opposed in the past? Despite what the Secretary of State says, the Government's record has been highly damaging to the role of women at work. The women of this country recognise that and will judge the Government on their attitude to the social charter.

Mr. Fowler: Just to complete the hon. Gentleman's questions and answers, will the Opposition accept the abolition of the pre-entry closed shop?

Mr. Lloyd: The right hon. Gentleman has already been involved in that discussion. He and I know that it will come before the House very shortly. The real issue is whether the Government will accept under the social charter the rights of the people at GCHQ to join a trade union of their choice and to be represented at the work place in accordance with civilised opinion throughout Europe. Will the Minister of State answer that question about the social charter? I am sure that he will not.

We are aware of the splits in the Conservative party. We are aware of the leadership election and the division between the Europhiles and the Europhobes. By rejecting the charter the Government are not simply rejecting a vision of Europe; they are rejecting the right of the British people to be provided with minimum protection at work. A Labour Government will ensure that that protection is made available to the British people.

6.39 pm

The Minister of State, Department of Employment (Mr. Tim Eggar): We have had a good debate. Let no hon. Member doubt that the Government are fully committed to the United Kingdom being an active member of the European Community. It is because of that commitment that we want agreements and arrangements that will work. The House and the country rightly expect us to look at new proposals from Brussels both critically and constructively. We have a duty to ask whether the social charter is good for Europe and for this country. If action needs to be taken over social issues, ought that action to be taken at Community level or should it be taken by this House?

The hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) asked my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and me about our attitude to the social charter. We do not believe that a social charter is essential, but we fully support the social dimension to the completion of the single market and believe that the key element of the social dimension must be to continue our efforts to bring down unemployment throughout the European Community.

We have never said that we shall never sign a social charter. If, however, we were to sign such a charter, it would have to be a short declaratory statement that set out broad objectives and took clear account of the Madrid conclusions, particularly the conclusion that gives priority to job creation. It would respect subsidiarity and would leave local agreements to be dealt with by national Governments. It would also take account of the diversity of national practices. It could, of course, easily include commitments to freedom of movement, to mutual recognition of qualifications throughout the Community, to freedom to engage in an occupation, to the equal treatment of men and women in employment and in training and to health and safety at work.

We are not prepared to commit ourselves in advance, but I do not think that we should have difficulty in agreeing to a number of the directives on health and safety.

Only two days ago I said in public that we should welcome the establishment in this country of a European institute to monitor health and safety. Let nobody be in any doubt about our commitment to a place for health and safety in European Community directives. The hon. Member for Sedgefield must not continue to perpetuate a canard in that respect. Our view is that the social charter does not at present meet the criteria that I have outlined. Our concerns are confirmed by the new European directives that have been set out in the Commission's action programme.

The charter raises expectations. Conservative Members know that all the implied promises of longer holidays, shorter hours and minimum wages have to be paid for, but we can find no evidence of the Commission having established how those costs will be met. In reality, they can be absorbed only through job losses. Neither the Commission nor the commissioner argues that the social charter will create jobs. Those job losses will bear most heavily on the most vulnerable in our society: the young, the low paid, the unemployed who will not get jobs, the women who want to return to work but who will be forced to stay at home and the small businesses that will be unable to expand.

That is not just the Government's view. It is also the view of Professor Layard. In a recent article in the Financial Times, Professor Layard commented on article 5 of the charter, which implies that all member states will have to establish a minimum wage. He stressed that such a change could have a devastating effect on the employment of less skilled people. He pointed to the high levels of unemployment, especially of women and young people, in European Community countries such as Belgium, Holland, France and Spain that all have legally binding minimum wages.

It is no accident that the United Kingdom's unemployment rate among young people and women is less than half the Community average. I note that neither the hon. Member for Sedgefield nor the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) has sought to deny for one moment the fully researched Government estimate of the cost of establishing a minimum wage, set at 50 per cent. of the national average wage. It would result in the loss of 750,000 jobs in this country. Do the hon. Members for Sedgefield and for Stretford want to be responsible for driving 750,000 people out of gainful employment?

The hon. Members for Sedgefield and for Stretford have been asked time and again whether they are in favour of the closed shop. If they are against it, I understand why they are prepared to sign article 11 of the social charter, but if they are sticking to their age-old policy of support for the closed shop, I hope that they will explain why they are in favour of both the closed shop and the social charter. The two policies are mutually contradictory. I am willing to give way to the hon. Member for Sedgefield. Come on.

The Opposition say that the social charter will have no impact on the employment of young people. In particular, they try to make a mockery of the fact that many newspaper boys run the risk of losing their jobs.

Mr. Tony Lloyd rose——

Mr. Eggar: The hon. Member for Stretford should look at the proposals in the action programme and then consider a press report on 20 November. The hon. Gentleman should keep his feet on the ground.

Mr. Lloyd: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Eggar: I shall give way in a moment. I suggest that the hon. Gentleman should go to Wyatt's Newsagents, King's road, Stretford and talk to the four newspaper boys whom Mr. Wyatt employs. Perhaps he will explain to them why the European Commission is looking into the future of their jobs. When he has finished explaining that to the newspaper boys, perhaps he will go down the road, knock on people's doors and explain to his constituents why they will probably find, after the European Commission's investigation, that they have to pick up their newspapers instead of having them delivered. That is the policy to which the hon. Gentleman is committed.

Mr. Lloyd: Perhaps I should tell the Minister that I went to school with Mr. Wyatt's son, and I know the shop well. The Commission has denied absolutely that there is any truth in the nonsensical story to which the Minister referred. Moreover, the Minister's press release hit the papers on 4 November, three days after the latest draft version of the charter was published. Significantly, the following words had been added to the charter:

"and subject to derogations limited to certain light work."

Those derogations apply specifically to newspaper boys and to people working at McDonalds. That is the position of the Commission and of the Opposition; only the Minister does not understand what is in the charter.

Mr. Eggar: The hon. Member for Stretford is quite simply out of date. He should look at the press release in which the Commissioner described the action programme. Two derogations are referred to specifically: one is for family businesses and the other is for acting on the stage. Is the hon. Member for Stretford saying that according to the Commission Mr. Wyatt's son can work as a paper boy but others who are not related to Mr. Wyatt cannot? He may be right, but the important question is why the Commission should be involving itself in such details anyway. Such decisions are for this House and this country. If the Government want a minimum wage, and if the Opposition want a minimum wage, we decide. We decide working conditions and so on. There is no role for Brussels in that activity.

The Opposition made a number of observations about training. The Government have made it clear that we are committed to improve training during the 1990s. We have also made it clear that we shall achieve that aim flexibly, through local training and enterprise councils. [Interruption.] I wish the hon. Member for Sedgefield would pay attention. Our approach is the very opposite of that proposed by the Commission. Article 15 of the charter says that every EC worker must have access to vocational training and to undergo such training throughout his working life. That is not acceptable to us, and it is not acceptable to the Labour party.

Mr. Blair indicated dissent.

Mr. Eggar: It is no good the hon. Member for Sedgefield shaking his head. He may not have had time to brief himself fully since his appointment, but he should at least have read the Labour party's policy review document.

Mr. Banks: Who has read that?

Mr. Eggar: The hon. Gentleman asks who has read the policy review; it is obvious that the Opposition

[Mr. Eggar]

Front-Bench spokesman has not read it. The policy review accepts that "excessive legalism" should be avoided, and that is a step in the right direction. The review also suggests that enterprises should be encouraged—I stress "encouraged"—to set a minimum number of training hours for each employee annually. In other words, the review says that there should not be a statutory right to training.

How can that be squared with the Commission's proposals? Does a statutory right to training suddenly become acceptable to the Labour party because it is imposed from Brussels, even though the Labour party rejected such a right in its own policy review? Is the Labour party prepared to study for years to produce a training policy, only to throw it out of the window because of a charter that comes down from Brussels? The hon. Member for Sedgefield cannot go on shaking his head. He should do his research and read his own policy review.

The Government have always said that we are fully committed to the social dimension of the single market, but that commitment does not debar us in some unique way from arguing our approach within Europe——

It being three hours after the motion was entered upon, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER put the Question, pursuant to Order [24 November], That the amendment be made:-

The House divided: Ayes 203, Noes 273.

Division No. 5] [8.54 pm

AYES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Adams, Allen (Paisley N)
Allen, Graham
Alton, David
Anderson, Donald
Armstrong, Hilary
Ashdown, Rt Hon Paddy
Ashley, Rt Hon Jack
Banks, Tony (Newham NW)
Barnes, Harry (Derbyshire NE)
Barron, Kevin
Battle, John
Beckett, Margaret
Bell, Stuart
Bermingham, Gerald
Bidwell, Sydney
Blair, Tony
Blunkett, David
Boateng, Paul
Bradley, Keith
Bray, Dr Jeremy
Brown, Nicholas (Newcastle E)
Brown, Ron (Edinburgh Leith)
Bruce, Malcolm (Gordon)
Buchan, Norman
Buckley, George J.
Caborn, Richard
Callaghan, Jim
Campbell, Menzies (Fife NE)
Campbell, Ron (Blyth Valley)
Campbell-Savours, D. N.
Clark, Dr David (S Shields)
Clarke, Tom (Monklands W)
Clay, Bob
Clelland, David
Clwyd, Mrs Ann
Cohen, Harry
Coleman, Donald
Cook, Robin (Livingston)
Corbett, Robin
Corbyn, Jeremy
Cousins, Jim
Cox, Tom
Crowther, Stan
Cryer, Bob
Cummings, John
Cunliffe, Lawrence
Cunningham, Dr John
Dalyell, Tam
Darling, Alistair
Davies, Ron (Caerphilly)
Davis, Terry (B'ham Hodge H'l)
Dewar, Donald
Dixon, Don
Dobson, Frank
Douglas, Dick
Duffy, A. E. P.
Dunnachie, Jimmy
Dunwoody, Hon Mrs Gwyneth
Eadie, Alexander
Eastham, Ken
Evans, John (St Helens N)
Ewing, Harry (Falkirk E)
Ewing, Mrs Margaret (Moray)
Fatchett, Derek
Faulds, Andrew
Fearn, Ronald
Field, Frank (Birkenhead)
Fields, Terry (L'pool B G'n)
Fisher, Mark
Flannery, Martin
Flynn, Paul
Foot, Rt Hon Michael
Foulkes, George
Fraser, John
Fyfe, Maria
Galloway, George
Garrett, John (Norwich South)
Garrett, Ted (Wallsend)
George, Bruce
Godman, Dr Norman A.
Golding, Mrs Llin
Gordon, Mildred
Gould, Bryan
Grant, Bernie (Tottenham)
Griffiths, Win (Bridgend)
Grocott, Bruce
Hardy, Peter
Harman, Ms Harriet
Hattersley, Rt Hon Roy
Heffer, Eric S.
Henderson, Doug
Hinchliffe, David
Hoey, Ms Kate (Vauxhall)
Hogg, N. (C'nauld & Kilsyth)
Home Robertson, John
Hood, Jimmy
Howarth, George (Knowsley N)
Howell, Rt Hon D. (S'heath)
Howells, Geraint
Howells, Dr. Kim (Pontypridd)
Hoyle, Doug
Hughes, John (Coventry NE)
Hughes, Robert (Aberdeen N)
Hughes, Roy (Newport E)
Hughes, Simon (Southwark)
Ingram, Adam
Jones, Barry (Alyn & Deeside)
Jones, Ieuan (Ynys Môn)
Jones, Martyn (Clwyd S W)
Kaufman, Rt Hon Gerald
Kennedy, Charles
Kinnock, Rt Hon Neil
Kirkwood, Archy
Lambie, David
Lamond, James
Leighton, Ron
Lestor, Joan (Eccles)
Lewis, Terry
Litherland, Robert
Livsey, Richard
Lloyd, Tony (Stretford)
Lofthouse, Geoffrey
Loyden, Eddie
McAvoy, Thomas
McKay, Allen (Barnsley West)
McKelvey, William
McLeish, Henry
Maclennan, Robert
McNamara, Kevin
McWilliam, John
Madden, Max
Marek, Dr John
Marshall, David (Shettleston)
Marshall, Jim (Leicester S)
Martin, Michael J. (Springburn)
Martlew, Eric
Maxton, John
Meacher, Michael
Meale, Alan
Michael, Alun
Michie, Bill (Sheffield Heeley)
Michie, Mrs Ray (Arg'l & Bute)
Mitchell, Austin (G't Grimsby)
Moonie, Dr Lewis
Morgan, Rhodri
Morley, Elliot
Morris, Rt Hon A. (W'shawe)
Morris, Rt Hon J. (Aberavon)
Mowlam, Marjorie
Mullin, Chris
Murphy, Paul
Nellist, Dave
Oakes, Rt Hon Gordon
O'Brien, William
O'Neill, Martin
Orme, Rt Hon Stanley
Owen, Rt Hon Dr David
Patchett, Terry
Pendry, Tom
Pike, Peter L.
Powell, Ray (Ogmore)
Prescott, John
Quin, Ms Joyce
Radice, Giles
Randall, Stuart
Redmond, Martin
Rees, Rt Hon Merlyn
Richardson, Jo
Rooker, Jeff
Rowlands, Ted
Ruddock, Joan
Sedgemore, Brian
Sheerman, Barry
Sheldon, Rt Hon Robert
Short, Clare
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, C. (Isl'ton & F'bury)
Smith, J. P. (Vale of Glam)
Snape, Peter
Soley, Clive
Spearing, Nigel
Steel, Rt Hon David
Steinberg, Gerry
Stott, Roger
Strang, Gavin
Straw, Jack
Taylor, Mrs Ann (Dewsbury)
Taylor, Matthew (Truro)
Thomas, Dr Dafydd Elis
Thompson, Jack (Wansbeck)
Turner, Dennis
Vaz, Keith
Wall, Pat
Wallace, James
Walley, Joan
Wardell, Gareth (Gower)
Watson, Mike (Glasgow C)
Welsh, Andrew (Angus E)
Williams, Alan W. (Carmarthen)
Winnick, David
Worthington, Tony
Wray, Jimmy

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Frank Haynes and
Mr. John McFall.

NOES

Aitken, Jonathan
Alexander, Richard
Alison, Rt Hon Michael
Allason, Rupert
Amess, David
Amos, Alan
Arbuthnot, James
Arnold, Tom (Hazel Grove)
Ashby, David
Aspinwall, Jack
Atkins, Robert
Atkinson, David
Baldry, Tony
Batiste, Spencer
Beaumont-Dark, Anthony
Beggs, Roy
Bellingham, Henry
Bendall, Vivian
Benyon, W.
Bevan, David Gilroy
Bonsor, Sir Nicholas
Boswell, Tim
Bowden, A (Brighton K'pto'n)
Bowden, Gerald (Dulwich)
Bowis, John
Boyson, Rt Hon Dr Sir Rhodes
Braine, Rt Hon Sir Bernard
Brandon-Bravo, Martin
Brazier, Julian
Bright, Graham
Brooke, Rt Hon Peter
Brown, Michael (Brigg & Cl't's)
Browne, John (Winchester)
Bruce, Ian (Dorset South)
Buck, Sir Antony
Burns, Simon

Butler, Chris
Carlisle, Kenneth (Lincoln)
Carrington, Matthew
Chapman, Sydney
Clark, Sir W. (Croydon S)
Clarke, Rt Hon K. (Rushcliffe)
Colvin, Michael
Coombs, Anthony (Wyre F'rest)
Coombs, Simon (Swindon)
Critchley, Julian
Davies, Q. (Stamf'd & Spald'g)
Davis, David (Boothferry)
Day, Stephen
Devlin, Tim
Dicks, Terry
Dorrell, Stephen
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord James
Dunn, Bob
Durant, Tony
Eggar, Tim
Emery, Sir Peter
Evennett, David
Fallon, Michael
Favell, Tony
Fenner, Dame Peggy
Field, Barry (Isle of Wight)
Finsberg, Sir Geoffrey
Fishburn, John Dudley
Fookes, Dame Janet
Forman, Nigel
Forsyth, Michael (Stirling)
Forsythe, Clifford (Antrim S)
Fowler, Rt Hon Norman
Fox, Sir Marcus
Franks, Cecil
Gale, Roger
Gardiner, George
Garel-Jones, Tristan
Gill, Christopher
Goodlad, Alastair
Goodson-Wickes, Dr Charles
Gow, Ian
Grant, Sir Anthony (CambsSW)
Greenway, John (Ryedale)
Gregory, Conal
Griffiths, Peter (Portsmouth N)
Ground, Patrick
Grylls, Michael
Hague, William
Hamilton, Hon Archie (Epsom)
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hampson, Dr Keith
Hanley, Jeremy
Hannam, John
Hargreaves, A. (B'ham H'll Gr')
Hargreaves, Ken (Hyndburn)
Harris, David
Haselhurst, Alan
Hawkins, Christopher
Hayhoe, Rt Hon Sir Barney
Hayward, Robert
Heathcoat-Amory, David
Heddle, John
Heseltine, Rt Hon Michael
Hicks, Mrs Maureen (Wolv' NE)
Hicks, Robert (Cornwall SE)
Hill, James
Hind, Kenneth
Holt, Richard
Hordern, Sir Peter
Howard, Michael
Howarth, Alan (Strat'd-on-A)
Howarth, G. (Cannock & B'wd)
Howell, Ralph (North Norfolk)
Hughes, Robert G. (Harrow W)
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunt, Sir John (Ravensbourne)
Hunter, Andrew
Hurd, Rt Hon Douglas
Irvine, Michael
Jack, Michael
Jackson, Robert
Janman, Tim
Jessel, Toby
Johnson Smith, Sir Geoffrey
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert B (Herts W)
Jopling, Rt Hon Michael
Kellett-Bowman, Dame Elaine
Key, Robert
Kilfedder, James
King, Roger (B'ham N'thfield)
Kirkhope, Timothy
Knapman, Roger
Knight, Dame Jill (Edgbaston)
Knowles, Michael
Knox, David
Lang, Ian
Latham, Michael
Lee, John (Pendle)
Lennox-Boyd, Hon Mark
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lord, Michael
Luce, Rt Hon Richard
Lyell, Sir Nicholas
Macfarlane, Sir Neil
MacKay, Andrew (E Berkshire)
Maclean, David
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, Sir Michael
Madel, David
Malins, Humfrey
Mans, Keith
Maples, John
Marshall, John (Hendon S)
Marshall, Michael (Arundel)
Martin, David (Portsmouth S)
Mates, Michael
Maude, Hon Francis
Maxwell-Hyslop, Robin
Mills, Iain
Mitchell, Andrew (Gedling)
Mitchell, Sir David
Moate, Roger
Molyneaux, Rt Hon James
Monro, Sir Hector
Montgomery, Sir Fergus
Morrison, Sir Charles
Morrison, Rt Hon P (Chester)
Neale, Gerrard
Nelson, Anthony
Neubert, Michael
Newton, Rt Hon Tony
Nicholls, Patrick
Nicholson, David (Taunton)
Nicholson, Emma (Devon West)
Norris, Steve
Onslow, Rt Hon Cranley
Oppenheim, Phillip
Page, Richard
Paice, James
Patnick, Irvine
Patten, Rt Hon Chris (Bath)
Patten, John (Oxford W)
Pawsey, James
Peacock, Mrs Elizabeth
Porter, Barry (Wirral S)
Porter, David (Wavaney)
Portillo, Michael
Powell, William (Corby)
Price, Sir David
Raffan, Keith
Raison, Rt Hon Timothy
Redwood, John
Renton, Rt Hon Tim
Rhodes James, Robert
Ridley, Rt Hon Nicholas
Ridsdale, Sir Julian
Roberts, Wyn (Conwy)
Roe, Mrs Marion
Ross, William (Londonderry E)
Rossi, Sir Hugh
Rowe, Andrew
Rumbold, Mrs Angela
Ryder, Richard
Sackville, Hon Tom
Sainsbury, Hon Tim
Sayeed, Jonathan
Scott, Rt Hon Nicholas
Shaw, David (Dover)
Shaw, Sir Giles (Pudsey)
Shaw, Sir Michael (Scarb')
Shelton, Sir William
Shephard, Mrs G. (Norfolk SW)
Shepherd, Colin (Hereford)
Shepherd, Richard (Aldridge)
Sims, Roger
Skeet, Sir Trevor
Smith, Sir Dudley (Warwick)
Smith, Tim (Beaconsfield)
Smyth, Rev Martin (Belfast S)
Soames, Hon Nicholas
Speed, Keith
Speller, Tony
Spicer, Sir Jim (Dorset W)
Spicer, Michael (S Worcs)
Squire, Robin
Stanbrook, Ivor
Stanley, Rt Hon Sir John
Steen, Anthony
Stevens, Lewis
Stewart, Allan (Eastwood)
Stewart, Andy (Sherwood)
Stewart, Rt Hon Ian (Herts N)
Stokes, Sir John
Stradling Thomas, Sir John
Sumberg, David
Summerson, Hugo
Tapsell, Sir Peter
Taylor, Ian (Esher)
Taylor, Rt Hon J. D. (S'ford)
Taylor, John M (Solihull)
Taylor, Teddy (S'end E)
Tebbit, Rt Hon Norman
Temple-Morris, Peter
Thatcher, Rt Hon Margaret
Thompson, Patrick (Norwich N)
Thorne, Neil
Thornton, Malcolm
Thurnham, Peter
Townend, John (Bridlington)
Tracey, Richard
Tredinnick, David
Trippier, David
Twinn, Dr Ian
Vaughan, Sir Gerard
Waldegrave, Hon William
Walden, George
Walker, A. Cecil (Belfast N)
Walker, Bill (T'side North)
Waller, Gary
Ward, John
Wardle, Charles (Bexhill)
Warren, Kenneth
Watts, John
Widdecombe, Ann
Wiggin, Jerry
Wilkinson, John
Wilshire, David
Winterton, Mrs Ann
Winterton, Nicholas
Wood, Timothy
Woodcock, Dr. Mike
Yeo, Tim
Young, Sir George (Acton)
Younger, Rt Hon George

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. David Lightbown and
Mr. Greg Knight.

Question accordingly negatived.
Main Question put and agreed to.
Resolved,

That this House takes note of European Community Document No. 8997/89 and the proposals described in the un-numbered Explanatory Memorandum submitted by the Department of Employment on 24th November on a Community Charter of Fundamental Social Rights; and endorses the Government's view that the key to increased prosperity and higher living standards is the adoption of policies which stimulate further economic growth and job creation.

Mr. Frank Haynes (Ashfield): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. After hon. Members have been through the Division Lobby, they are hanging around outside. I have had enough of it. People who want to get into the Lobby cannot do so, because there are too many bodies outside. Tonight one hon. Member failed to get through the door because of the crowd outside the No Lobby. That is not good enough. I want the Chair to do something about the problem because it happens far too often. Tonight in particular one of my colleagues could not get into the Lobby because of the crowd.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for pointing out that difficulty, which clearly is not seen from the Chair. I will see that the point is followed up.

European Community-Japan (Trade)

Mr. Roger King (Birmingham, Northfield): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. For this debate, on the Community's trading relationship with Japan, hon. Members require papers from the Vote Office to get some background to our present relationship. I went to the Vote Office and obtained copies of the papers, but I felt that there must be some mistake. On looking at the papers, I found that, on the sale, manufacture and trade of semiconductors, we will discuss a report dated 13 May 1987, which of course was before the last general election. Another report, which is on the motor industry and which is of particular interest to me, is dated 22 March 1988 and refers to Japanese relations with the Community in 1987.

Are there not more up-to-date documents? Many things have changed in the meantime, particularly in regard to car requirements. Many of the points have been resolved. I wonder how we can base our debate on such evidence when so much has changed in the intervening period. It is like debating a 1987 edition of The Daily Telegraph—it is hardly relevant.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): I understand the hon. Gentleman's difficulty, but the documents to which he refers are the documents in the motion that we are to debate.

7.11 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs (Mr. John Redwood): I beg to move,

That this House takes note of European Community Documents Nos. 6552/87 relating to certain imports from Japan and 5395/88 relating to trade relations with Japan; and agrees with the Government's support of Community policy towards Japan.

I share the fears of my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) that the documents are rather outdated. I will deal with the first one rather quickly and then suggest that we debate fairly widely EC-Japan trade relations, extending them beyond 1987. I hope that, with your leave, Mr. Deputy Speaker, hon. Members will agree that that is the most sensible way to proceed.

The first document, which is about the prevention of deflections of trade as a result of the measures taken by the United States against Japan in regard to semi-conductors, was the result of American illegal actions under the general agreement on tariffs and trade. It was a retaliatory action which, I am glad to say, never had to be implemented. The EC took powers to impose high duties on certain products which Ministers at the time thought could be deflected from the United States market into the European market as a result of that trade dispute between the United States and Japan. I am pleased to say that those items were not deflected under the surveillance which the Community adopted, and those duties were therefore not imposed.

The total market involved was never very great—only $300 million—and the surveillance methods which the Community put in place did not reveal any major changes in the European Community market as a result. I now propose to go back to our European Colleagues and see whether we can reach agreement on removing those suspended duties from the Community legislation, and also whether we can get rid of the remaining surveillance procedures, as they are long past their sell-by date and of no particular use.

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim (Amber Valley): I am sorry to interrupt my hon. Friend's speech so early. He said that the Government are to go back to the Commission or the Council of Ministers and say that the duties are not necessary. One of the documents available in the Vote Office states:

"the Government supports the proposed Community measures, which are solely intended to ensure that potential diversion of trade by Japan".

If the issue is irrelevant, why did the Government issue a document in support of it?

Mr. Redwood: At the time the threat was real, the British Government went along with the proposals in the European Community. My hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim) may find it helpful to know that we think that life has moved on considerably since 1987. The British Government's present view is that the measures were not necessary. We do not wish to be in the business of building fortress Europe and we would therefore like to carry our Community partners with us in getting rid of the suspended duties and the remaining surveillance that is still in place. My hon. Friend will be pleased to know that surveillance of the measures has already been reduced, and I hope that he will agree that it would be a good idea to carry on the process and to return to free trade in specified goods.

I agree with hon. Members who think that the delay in the debate on the other document is a pity. I am firmly of the view that the House has a vital role to play in scrutinising EC proposals. Where I have ministerial responsibilities for negotiating items in Europe on behalf of the United Kingdom, I will always endeavour to see that the Scrutiny Committee is advised in good time. I find it much easier to go to Brussels to negotiate with other Ministers from other member countries in the full knowledge of the views of the House. We do not wish to encourage the idea that a large number of important decisions about trade and other economic matters should take place behind closed doors in Brussels without this House first being able to peer behind those closed doors and express its views on the subjects coming up for debate in the European Community Council of Ministers.

I want scrutiny, and I value this evening's opportunity to hear hon. Members' views on trade matters relating to Japan. The Community has an important role to play in conducting many of the negotiations on our joint behalf with the Japanese.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): Does the Minister agree that, through economic measures, he and the EEC could put greater pressure on the Japanese in view of their appalling slaughter of whales, which is being done under the guise of scientific whaling, and their slaughter of many other potentially endangered small whale species such as Dall's porpoises? The Japanese have an appalling venal record. Would the Minister be prepared to put his weight behind the campaign to try to get the Japanese to change their ways of treating animals that are much loved and much needed among the world's resources?

Mr. Redwood: I have much personal sympathy with what the hon. Gentleman is saying, but I would need to check with my right hon. and hon. Friends in other Departments. As the hon. Gentleman will appreciate, other interests are involved. I will write to the hon. Gentleman when I have checked out the various views on that important subject.

The topical issues that arise as a result of the review of EC-Japanese trade can be addressed by looking at two important themes in the way in which Japan's relations with the rest of the world are evolving. First, as Japan becomes a much bigger and more important economic power, it is becoming an increasingly important investor overseas. I and many other Ministers from Community countries welcome that. Japan is taking money, management skill, technology and innovation overseas and creating jobs and new activities in countries in which it chooses to invest.

We and other member states of the Community have been beneficiaries from investment in important leading sectors in which Japan specialises, such as cars, televisions, semiconductors, machine tools and office equipment. In sectors in which Japan has a particularly strong export performance, there are things from which the Community can benefit by enjoying some of the skills and product designs which the Japanese have at their fingertips.

The second theme is that, again as Japan has grown and developed as a major economic power, it has started to expand its domestic demand and it has opened its markets to a greater extent to imports. Again, that is a most welcome development which in no small measure is due to negotiations conducted through the GATT framework and also in no small measure is due to the bilateral negotiations between the United States and Japan and between the European Community and Japan.

In each of the past three years Japan's domestic demand has expanded more than its total national product. That means that there are opportunities for countries and companies wishing to export into the Japanese market as they expand their domestic demand in response to international pressures for some degree of reflation in the Japanese economy. I am not suggesting that we have solved all the problems. However, in bilateral discussions and through the OECD, the United Kingdom has drawn Japanese attention to the continuing structural problems within the Japanese economy that affect trade patterns between Japan and the remainder of the world. Japan is recognising the force of the argument and is beginning to take action to tackle the problem. For example, how easy is it to get access to retail distribution in Japan if a company has a good product to sell? There is also a large number of subsidies and protections within the Japanese agricultural system—although, of course, the European Community also has problems with the common agricultural policy.

There are problems with the land market in Japan, but the Japanese are showing signs of wishing to make progress. There are other specific problems, which hon. Members may wish to mention, relating to constituency and other interests in, for example, leather, leather footwear, biscuits and confectionery, which attract high tariffs that we would like to negotiate down or to abolish. However, in general we have made great progress on tariffs. They have been reduced quite substantially and, in some areas, Japanese tariffs are below EC tariffs. For example, there is no tariff on cars exported from the EC to Japan, but there is a 10 per cent. tariff on cars imported into the EC. There are many other examples and the barrriers have been coming down.

As a result, the state of United Kingdom-Japanese trade is improving from a fairly poor base. During the past 10 months exports have risen by 30 per cent. while imports have risen by only 10 per cent. There are opportunities to reverse——

Mr. Win Griffiths (Bridgend): The Minister has given an impressive demonstration of the relative movement of imports and exports, but can he give us the gross figures for both of them?

Mr. Redwood: I have the gross figures, and I shall give that information to the House when I reply to the debate and when I have checked them with the figures in my kit bag.

The overall figures show a substantial deficit against the United Kingdom, but it can be reduced if two conditions are met. The first is if we continue the good progress in encouraging major Japanese inward investment into Britain. One of the largest items in our deficit with Japan is the trade in motor vehicles. Plans have been agreed by three Japanese motor manufacturers to construct plant that will produce 500,000 cars every year by the mid-1990s. That is two and a half times the number of cars that we imported from Japan in the last full year. There are other examples, although slightly less startling, in leading sectors where there will be more production in the United Kingdom by Japanese manufacturers that may either substitute for imports or be exported into the European Community and more widely. That will improve the trade balance.

The second way to improve our trading position is by our businesses responding to the great opportunities that have resulted from the market opening measures in Japan and the expansion of Japanese domestic demand. I cannot pretend that that is easy because the Japanese expect high quality, good design, perseverance by salesman and companies, a commitment to their market, the development of language skills so that we can talk in their own language to those to whom we hope to sell, and the highest standards of service to back the products sold. I believe that British industry is up to that challenge and that the heartening increase in exports during recent months and years is a sign that we are making progress.

Mr. Austin Mitchell (Great Grimsby): I do not wish to anticipate the Minister's speech, but can he tell us how our deficit with Japan, especially in manufactured trade, compares with our deficit with West Germany, and how Japan's efforts to expand its domestic economy, to raise its exchange rate and to invest in this country compare with the efforts made by West Germany in those three areas?

Mr. Redwood: That is a very good point. The trading balance with West Germany is much larger than the trading balance with Japan. It accounts for about half of the total trading balance, so there are problems. In some ways the position is analogous with the Japanese position as there are problems with protection in agriculture and services in the German economy. In other areas there are no protection problems because we have opened the markets in manufactured trade through the EEC programme. Of course, Germany is a much more important export market than Japan because the total volumes of trade are that much bigger on both sides of the account. We value Germany as an important market for our exports, but there are achievements to be made within the single market programme to open further the German market. There are important ways in which we can deal with the German deficit, just as we are trying to deal with the Japanese deficit.

[Mr. Redwood]

There has been significant progress in certification and quality control for cars and medical equipment. I know that the Scotch whisky industry is pleased with the progress that has been made in bringing into balance the liquor tax on Scotch whisky and those on other whiskies. As a result, there has been a large increase in whisky exports, which are running at almost twice their level before the changes were made. I hope that there will be more good Japanese Scotch drinkers as the full effects of the measures are felt. I am sure that they will appreciate the benefits of true Scotch. They have made encouraging noises to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister about how they intend to tackle the problem of look-alikes which pose as the real thing.

I hope that following the strong representations about stock exchange seats there will be some progress in due course, as there was previously when we made strong representations through the Prime Minister and Ministers. I have every confidence that there will be good news to announce, and I regret that I cannot announce it tonight.

It is sometimes argued that the secret of Japanese industrial success lies in its planning system and the special relationship between the Government agencies and the very large companies. We should view that in the context of the true genius and excellence of the Japanese economy —which is that three quarters of all those in Japanese manufacturing work in enterprises that employ 300 or fewer people. One of the keys to Japanese success in manufacturing has been the very large number of small and medium-sized enterprises which are fiercely competitive one with another and which supply the main assembly companies and trading houses that then go round the world to supply the goods that we and many of our fellow countrymen buy.

The cardinal lesson to learn from Japan is that a competitive enterprise economy, which places emphasis on quality, design and flexible manufacturing—all of which the Japanese are so good at—is at the core of export success. It is one reason why this Government are so keen on a strong competition policy. We want to emulate the success of the Japanese competitive-driven industrial performance.

The Department of Trade and Industry has played its role in encouraging business to export to Japan and in trying to help it to do so by assisting in the provision of language courses, by offering the opportunity of seminars and programmes and through trade fairs and other methods to allow British business to present its wares and itself to the Japanese buying public. We shall continue with that programme because we are keen to ensure that British business succeeds in that large and important market place.

When I look at the people coming to the West from eastern Europe, I ask myself why they are coming. I am sure that it is because they are responding to the twin magnetic attractions of democracy and the enterprise open trading system. I do not think that they are coming to take advantage of the directive on lawnmower noise. It is a misconception to think that it is simply the EC directives and the EC programme that act as a magnet. I see in their faces and in their aspirations the wish for open democracy and free debate and the wish to be part of the broader, open trading system that has characterised the West and has built the West's success.

Mr. Win Griffiths: I am pleased that the Minister is enthusiastic about the democratic principle, but will he extend it to meetings of the Council of Ministers and support opening those meetings to public scrutiny so that its debates and discussions can take place publicly?

Mr. Redwood: I do what I can within my limited powers. I write to the Scrutiny Committee and invite its views on any issues due to go before the Council of Ministers. I always make sure that the press know the British position and the British view of how those debates are conducted because it is important that the public can participate indirectly in the process of legislation, especially now, when some important items are coming before the Council of Ministers and are being decided by qualified majority, behind the closed doors of Council of Ministers' meetings.

My conclusion is simple. The open trading system is vital to the prosperity of the West. Progress is being made and recorded in EC-Japanese relations and in building on that system and opening the Japanese market further. I shall listen to the comments of hon. Members and to any problems that they feel exist in EC-Japan trade and I shall make the necessary representations if they have a good case. We must reinforce the open trading system and ensure that the Community acts as our voice in speaking up for the virtues and values on which the prosperity of the West is based.

7.30 pm

Ms. Joyce Quin (Gateshead, East): I welcome the opportunity to debate trade between the European Community and Japan. It is undoubtedly an important issue and of particular relevance to Britain because of our current large trade deficit, which includes a sizeable trade deficit with Japan. Of the trade deficit that the EEC as a whole has with that country, our deficit accounts for £4·8 billion, or almost one third of the EEC total.

The history of the trading relationship between Japan and the countries of the European Community is depressing. For many years there has been a large and increasing deficit, rising from 6 billion ecu in 1979 to 24 billion ecu last year, and for many years the European countries have been complaining bitterly, without conspicuous success, about the difficulties encountered by European exporters in gaining access to the Japanese market. Motor cars have been a particular difficulty. Between 1977 and 1987, Japan took 560,000 cars from the European Community, whereas 8 million of the 12 million cars imported into the European Community were Japanese.

Over the years, there have been many complaints about Japan's dumping of goods on the European Community market which has had serious effects on national economies and on particular regions within the European market. Recent examples of allegations of dumping, where proceedings have been instituted by the European Commission, have included compact discs, video tape recorders, roller and ball bearings, halogen lamps and hydraulic excavators. That list shows the variety of products that have caused considerable concern to the European economies.

The British market has proved a particularly soft target for Japanese exporters. We have not had some of the stringent quantitative restrictions that have been imposed in some other European countries——

Mr. Oppenheim: Does the hon. Lady accept—we must face this fact in the West—that a major reason why the Japanese have been able to sell so many goods in Britain, Europe and the United States is that they have produced the goods that the consumer wants to buy, at the cost that the consumer wants to pay and of the quality that the consumer wants. Does she also accept that we have instigated a whole series of protectionist barriers against the Japanese, not least the so-called "gentlemen's agreement", which limits their car exports to this country to 11 per cent. of the market? It was introduced by the Labour Government and is maintained by this Government. Does she further accept that such protectionist devices have done our major industry no good at all?

Ms. Quin: The trouble is that, without adopting some kind of industrial strategy of our own, we shall make our position worse by simply opening up our markets still further——

Mr. Tony Banks: They do not open up their markets, do they?

Mr. Oppenheim: Has the hon. Gentleman ever been there?

Mr. Banks: Of course I have—three times.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): Order.

Ms. Quin: I am grateful for your intervention, Madam Deputy Speaker. I shall come to the protectionism of the Japanese market a little later, if I may.

Little seems to have been achieved for many years despite the threatening sounds coming from the European Commission and individual national Governments, but action certainly needs to be taken because manufactured goods constitute virtually all our imports from Japan, and within that area consumer electronic goods and cars are particularly significant.

Mr. Roger Knapman (Stroud): If that is the case and the dangers that the hon. Lady has pointed out prove correct, does she think that the social contract will make things better or worse?

Ms. Quin: Overall, the social charter—I think that that is what the hon. Gentleman means—will make things better, but if he will allow me, I shall refer to that later, too.

There has recently been a change in the relationship between Japan and the European Community, which is the welcome increase in Japanese investment in Britain and in other EC countries. One of the main causes for that investment is the fear in Japan that, unless the Japanese invest in the EEC and have access to the enlarged market in 1992, they might be faced with a fortress Europe with which they would find it difficult to contend. Nevertheless, that investment is welcome.

In my region of the north-east, Japanese investment has given us one of our few rays of economic hope. Unfortunately, it is a tragedy that such investment has not been matched by British investment in the regions of the United Kingdom that most need it. Although we welcome that investment, we have always said that such plants should not be mere assembly plants but should involve a high degree of local manufacture and, we hope, create a good many spin-off jobs in the local communities, supply industries and related economic activities.

Mr. Roger King: I am grateful to the hon. Lady, who will doubtless welcome today's wonderful announcement by Nissan of a £31 million investment in this country, creating 350 jobs and establishing technology centres in Sunderland and at Cranfield college in Bedfordshire. This is the next phase of Japanese involvement, when they establish not only a manufacturing base in the United Kingdom, but a design centre too. Does she agree that this is welcome?

Ms. Quin: Yes, I certainly welcome that news, to which I was about to refer because it is of significance to my part of the country. It is an important move forward, because one of our worries has been that a research and development presence has not been attached to many of the Japanese economic activities that have come into the country. We have always supported the presence of research and development in addition to Japanese plant investment. That is important if we are not to see Britain and its regions become economic outposts of an economic colonial power far from our shores, whether that power be Japan, the United States or any other.

It is said that one reason for Japanese investment in Britain is simply our lower wage costs compared with other European countries. One reason why the Labour Party favours the European Community social charter is that we do not want Britain to become a low-wage economy where workers have few or no rights or benefits compared with their European counterparts. A large European market cannot be an end in itself. It is supposed to benefit all our citizens. We do not want that market to be achieved through the exploitation of our work force.

The Government should look closely at our trade with Japan sector by sector, product by product, and should study the problem areas where we seem to have become over-dependent on Japanese and other imports. Then the Government, in partnership with industry, should seek through investment, training, export support or whatever, to remedy the trade imbalance especially in those sectors where we used to be skilled, but where we have lost out in recent years. Unfortunately such an approach is diametrically at odds with the Government's economic philosophy.

When the Prime Minister was in Japan in September, she lectured the Japanese on how to run a successful economy and advised them to follow Britain's example. I wonder which aspect of the British economy the Japanese would like to copy. Would they like to copy our inflation rate, our interest rates, our unemployment or our trade deficit? I think not. Furthermore, the Japanese have enjoyed nothing like the substantial natural assets of coal, oil and gas that have been available to us during the past decade.

Mr. Redwood: Does the hon. Lady acknowledge that the Japanese have been extremely keen to follow our successful privatisation policies, and that they are well advanced with such policies?

Ms. Quin: The Japanese have not been keen to adopt our general attitude towards industry. The Japanese Government have worked in close partnership with industry to ensure Japan's economic predominance. Unfortunately, we have not done the same.

It is clear that the Japanese do not consider what is happening in Britain today as some sort of economic miracle. Mr. Terry Yamazaki, president of the world's largest machine tool company, talked in the Financial Times today about our trade deficit. He said:

"I think it is a big problem for the UK. A country's wealth stands on its manufacturing . . . There should be a national movement in the UK involving politicians, economists and industrialists to look at the whole issue and create a strategy to produce more, particularly more value-added goods".

Unfortunately, the Government have simply rejected out of hand similar calls for an industrial strategy made repeatedly by my hon. Friends.

Sadly, a more accurate reflection of the Japanese view of our economy is the fact that, recently, they offered us aid from their Third-world budget to save one of our food research institutes that the Government wanted to close in order to save £1 million.

The shipbuilding industry is one to which the Community and the United Kingdom should have paid a great deal more attention in the past 10 years. That industry has been given a low priority in commercial relations and negotiations between the Community and Japan. The Government and the EC have taken the view that shipbuilding is an out-of-date smoke-stack industry. Tell that to the Japanese. The world order books, now healthy, show that Japanese domination in shipbuilding continues. The Japanese order book accounts for some 30·4 per cent. of the world total and Japan's share of the world market rose by 1·2 million tonnes in the third quarter of this year alone.

Contrast that expansion with the savage cuts in British shipbuilding. It is an absolute disgrace that the Government decided to close the excellent modern shipyard of North-East Shipbuilders on the River Wear. That yard was capable of winning large orders, it had interested buyers and it could have made a valuable contribution to reducing our massive trade deficit. The people of Sunderland will not forgive the Government nor lightly forget. But it is not just the shipyard workers or the people of Sunderland and the north-east who have lost out; it is our country as a whole.

Mr. Win Griffiths: Am I right in recalling that the Government were told that there would be an upturn in the shipbuilding market, but they rejected that advice and went ahead with the closure?

Ms. Quin: That was the case. The Government were told that many times, and not just by hon. Members representing shipbuilding constituencies. It is crazy to throw away and to destroy such shipbuilding facilities and it is crazy to lose the shipbuilding skills of those workers who are now redundant.

We share and support many of the criticisms that have been made of Japan—for example, the protectionist nature of its economy and the difficulty encountered by our manufacturers in participating in its large infrastructure projects. The protectionist nature of Japanese agriculture has also been mentioned, but I agree with the Minister that in the EC that is like the pot calling the kettle black.

It is still difficult for manufacturers to make their way through the retail and distribution system in Japan, and much more progress must be made. There is a clear contrast between the difficulties of penetrating the Japanese distribution and retail system and the way in which our shops are stacked with Japanese goods. Negotiations must continue and they need to be tough.

Britain and the Community must adopt different industrial policies if the trading balance with Japan is not to deteriorate even further.

Mr. Tony Banks: I apologise as I must leave the House shortly for a public meeting, but so that I do not leave the Chamber totally depressed by everything that I have heard so far, can my hon. Friend tell me of one area of economic activity or production where we have a success story in terms of trade with Japan? Other than Scotch whisky, where are we showing a balance of payments surplus in our trade with Japan? I want to know, as I want to go out cheerful from the House.

Ms. Quin: It will be difficult to cheer up my hon. Friend. I accept that there have been minor successes with whisky and linen, but when one considers the overall trade deficit that we are running with Japan, as well as our enormous trade deficit with the rest of the EC, the position is bleak. It does not augur well for the future, nor does it reflect well on the Government who have been in power for 10 years.

Mr. Alan Amos (Hexham): Is the hon. Lady aware that so far this year the trade deficit between the United Kingdom and Japan is about £4 billion and that last year's trade deficit between the EC and Japan was about $30 billion? What does she propose to do about that?

Ms. Quin: I am not sure that the hon. Gentleman has listened to everything I said. I have repeatedly referred to the need to look at the problems sector by sector and to work out, in partnership with industry, how best those problems can be tackled. We need to spend more on training, investment and research and development. There are no instant answers to reduce the trade balance tomorrow. For 10 years, however, the Government have pursued entirely the wrong course and have created a tremendous problem for Britain and the EC.

If they have the necessary political will, Britain and the Community can start to tackle the problem of our enormous trade deficit with Japan. Before that happens, however, a different economic approach must be adopted, especially in Britain.

7.48 pm

Sir Julian Ridsdale (Harwich): I shall speak for five minutes only, as I know that a number of my hon. Friends want to participate.

I could spend a long time discussing our relationship with Japan, but first I should like to draw a far more optimistic picture than the pessimistic scene described by the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin). One of our problems is that we do not have a large enough industrial manufacturing base. I say that as leader of the all-party group on engineering development.

I listened to yesterday's debate and I know what a terrific challenge it is to expand. Our industry today is in a different and much better technical state than it was in 1979, but the base is too small. How are we to tackle this problem? If we do so as the hon. Lady said, by saying that we do not want technical investment from Japan——

Mr. Win Griffiths: She said that we did.

Sir Julian Ridsdale: I found it difficult to know whether the hon. Lady was a protectionist or a free trader.

Ms. Quin: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving way, but he cannot have listened carefully to what I said. I specifically welcomed investment from Japan, and referred to the investment that had taken place in my own region and the welcome news about the research and development facility proposed by Nissan today.

Sir Julian Ridsdale: I listened to the hon. Lady's speech, which throughout was an effort to be all things to all people. There was nothing definite about it and no clear policy came through—[Interruption.] If I am interrupted any more, it will be difficult to stick to my five minutes.

How shall we make our industrial base bigger so that we can deal with the problems that face us in the European Community? We have a deficit with the European Community, particularly Germany, for the first nine months of this year of £9 billion, mainly in transport equipment. Transport equipment from Germany accounts for the same figure as that given by the hon. Lady for our deficit with Japan. Therefore, if we can, we must continue with the investment which we are getting. I welcome that new investment just announced by Nissan. Nomura has written an excellent paper called "In Depth" which deals with the problem of expanding our industrial base. It states that, between the years 1995 and 2000, we shall be able, if the present rate of investment from Japan continues, to balance our manufacturing exports and imports. That has great opportunities for our country and I wish to underline that.

Secondly, I wish to underline why the Japanese have been successful in industry. One reason is that they have bigger companies backed up, as my hon. Friend the Minister said, by smaller and medium-sized companies. However, the Mitsubishis and Matsushitas of this world are so big that the amount of money going into research and development from their profits enables the Japanese to have a far bigger research and development programme than any other country.

As a country, we must aim to make our industrial companies big enough because in 1992, with the hypermarket ahead, that will enable us to compete worldwide too. The first test must be to compete in the world markets and the second is to back up that competition with medium and smaller companies. I welcome the fact that the Government are spending more on skill and training, because it is the skill and training of our engineers which matter, and this is where the Japanese have an advantage.

I could talk for a lot longer, but I promised that I would speak for only a few moments because I wanted to underline on an optimistic note how to meet the challenge before us. If we are to deal with the sort of imports that we receive from Germany and other EC countries we must have the investment in this country to enable us to widen our industrial base. That is being done; the opportunity is there. We must encourage it.

7.54 pm

Mr. Matthew Taylor (Truro): I listened with interest to the comments of all the hon. Members who have spoken, but there are serious gaps in the approaches to the problems of both the Minister and the Labour spokesman, the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin). I shall return later to the comments of the hon. Member for Harwich (Sir. J. Ridsdale) and talk a little about the problems we have in long-term investment, research and development and training.

Before doing so, I shall address the issue of protectionism—for two reasons. First, it is raised in one of the documents that we are debating—out of date as that is, as was pointed out earlier. It seems extraordinary that the House should debate a document two years and one general election after it was published, at a time when the system is being dismantled rather than set up as the document states.

Second, it is appropriate that we should be looking at such a protectionist document when we consider what is happening in the United States. We have considerable reason to be concerned about the pressures for protectionism in that country. Unlike the hon. Member for Gateshead, East, I wish to make it absolutely clear that the Liberal Democrats fundamentally oppose them. The document refers to the Government's work to oppose what the US Government in 1987 were attempting to do. We welcome the Government's stance on that matter, although we would urge action to be taken through international bodies rather than through threatening counter protectionism. We fear the escalation of protectionist measures around the globe.

The debate currently taking place in the United States among politicians, the media and many people who are influential in that country who constantly press for greater protectionist measures against what they see as the Japanese threat is precisely the sort of development against which we should argue as we move towards the developments in Europe in 1992 and beyond.

When we look at the developments in the Pacific basin, we see that in many ways Japan will be the least of our worries. I disagree with the hon. Lady's claim that the only reason the Japanese are coming to this country is low wages. There are a considerable number of reasons, many of them associated with Japanese fears about protectionism. However, a realistic analysis shows that Japan has a high-wage, high-cost economy, and has difficulty competing with its near neighbours in many spheres in which it has traditionally excelled. We are in a rapidly changing and developing system in which we should not push for protectionism but pursue policies that address some of the weaknesses clearly inherent in this country.

Ms. Quin: I do not think that I said that the only reason why the Japanese were investing in this country was low wages. I said that it was a factor, and I did not want to see us become a low-wage economy compared to our European counterparts. I do not think I gave that as the only reason, but if I did, I did not intend to do so.

Mr. Taylor: I accept the hon. Lady's comment. I doubt whether that factor is a high priority for the Japanese. The overall competitiveness which they believe they can get from this country is significant, but significant too are the links between Japan and this country, particularly the language links—not that we speak Japanese. As we are probably well aware, they speak good English and commonly do so. Therefore, for many reasons it is easier for them to trade from this nation.

[Mr. Taylor]

I said that I would give some ways to tackle this problem. I shall mention two: the first relates to investment and Japan's investment structure. We cannot look at what happens in Japanese industry unless we recognise that the Japanese invest long-term and are prepared to make long-term losses, particularly when investing in overseas production plants.

I do not have an insight into the economics of the various car investment programmes in this country, but I doubt that those Japanese companies expect a payback on those investments in car manufacturing bases in much less than five or six years. British industry looks for a payback of overseas investment or other investment in two or perhaps three years. Even such time scales as those are pushing matters. We need to find the reason for that and start to address some of the ways in which we can overcome it.

I do not intend in this debate to provide all the solutions to a problem that hon. Members are just starting to recognise. However, the pension trusts and investment trusts that exist in Britain do not exist in Japan. Most shareholdings in Japanese companies are small scale and that gives the management of the companies much greater freedom to invest long-term than is possible in an equivalent situation in Britain where the six-monthly report presents a great problem. It is even more of a problem in America, where companies have to account for themselves about every three months. It is worth looking at the success of West Germany, which is probably the one European country that does not operate under the short-term pressures that exist here.

I do not claim to know how we should tackle the problem, but we should certainly address it. It is not simply a question of work practices or of Japanese work attitudes. It is the willingness of the Japanese to invest long-term in their industries. It is not simply due to the work of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry.

I said that I would deal secondly with research, development, training and education. The Minister did not address the input to industry in terms of research and development and training and, going back even further, in terms of the education of young people. It is not simply that we need to do something to rectify the trade imbalance. The problem is more basic because we are doing insufficent at grassroots level to enable ourselves to compete. As I have said, there are short-term attitudes to investment and research and development. Companies that make large-scale investments in research and development are often penalised by being taken over or broken up. The efforts to take over and break up Pilkingtons were a good example of that.

There is massive under-investment at all stages in the training of our young people. I hope that the Government are beginning to recognise the problems that that creates. Almost any industrialist that one speaks to talks about our young people coming forward without encouragement or training. They have nothing like the education of young people in the sunrise countries.

Trade figures and the economy are worrying, but perhaps the most worrying thing that has happened in the last few weeks was the clear indication from the Secretary of State for Education and Science that he had abandoned the plans by his predecessor to double the number of people going into higher education. It is in that area above all others that we are selling ourselves short, and that means that industry is finding it difficult to attract candidates of the right calibre. I differ strongly from the Minister about student loans and other matters, but perhaps we should agree on the need to tackle the fundamental weakness that is caused because we are not investing in our future in the most important sense by developing the abilities of our young people.

The decision by the Secretary of State for Education and Science to abandon the target of doubling the number going into higher education is a tragedy and will be seen as such by future generations. The Government are removing from young people opportunities that they will never be able to accept again. Per head of population, Taiwan is now turning out more graduates than Britain. That situation will escalate and Britain will rapidly become an under-educated and under-privileged country, while nations that until recently have been considered Third-world countries will be turning out the best-educated and, ultimately, the best-paid people in the world.

8.4 pm

Mr. Roger Sims (Chislehurst): In speaking to the motion, I must declare an interest on two counts. Prior to my election I was employed full-time by Dodwell and Company, probably the largest non-Japanese trading company in Japan, and I retain a connection with that company and its parent company, Inchcape plc. I am also parliamentary adviser to the Scotch Whisky Association. My hon. Friend the Minister has spoken about the importance of Scotch whisky in our trade with Japan.

Japan is a unique market, which presents problems. There are certainly non-tariff barriers, some of which perhaps exist by design, while others came about simply by accident. However, they are slowly coming down. It is certainly a large and potentially profitable market, but it needs special attention.

Business men in the United Kingdom or elsewhere in the European Community cannot assume that, just because their products sell elsewhere in the world, they will sell in Japan. Japanese trading structures are different, and so are their business methods and their consumer demands. Anyone visiting Japan will probably find it a very foreign place. Not only the language and culture but even the thought processes of the Japanese people differ from those of Europeans. I say that not in a disparaging sense but simply as a fact that we must understand.

Business men must study Japan, and I urge them to go for that market. They should visit it often and be patient and careful in negotiations and in dealings. There is no need for any business man unfamiliar with the market to work on his own. Help and advice are readily available from the admirable and well-equipped exports to Japan unit in the Department of Trade and Industry. Any business man with a saleable product or service could approach one of the trading companies. They are old established and have offices in the United Kingdom. They have Japanese staff who are experienced in selling imported goods. They also have Japanese-speaking expatriates who know the market, speak the language and can advise on presentation, packing and can also carry out the marketing and distribution of the product. Dozens of companies have successfully taken that course.

One of the more frustrating aspects of the work in which I was engaged was that, when we succeeded in establishing a product in the Japanese market, the manufacturer would say, "Thank you very much for all you have done. We shall now set up our own company in Japan." However, that is life.

One of my many responsibilities in the company was handling exports of Scotch whisky to Japan, which is the largest whisky drinking market in the world—although, alas, most of it is the domestic product. As the Minister said, sales of Scotch whisky to Japan have increased over the years. In 1988, exports of Scotch whisky to Japan were worth £88 million. The value to the end of September this year was £66 million, and there is every prospect of a substantial increase in the end-of-year figure.

As the Minister said, undoubtedly one of the reasons for that is that at last the Japanese have bowed to pressure from many quarters, including the Government and the European Community, and have complied with a GATT judgment to remove discrepancies in liquor tax on imported as distinct from domestic whiskies. In some cases the discrepancy was to a factor of seven. There remains a differential between the tax on whisky and that on gin, vodka and shochu, a local spirit.

In Japan, certain people are producing liquors that can be, and are being, passed off as whisky but are other spirits and therefore attract a tax one third of that to which true whisky is liable. It is obvious that these deceptive and misleading products are producing unfair competition to genuine Scotch whisky, for which there is no substitute. I know that representations on this issue have been made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in recent visits and by the EEC. I urge continuing pressure on the Japanese Government to comply with the GATT judgment in full and, if the House will pardon the pun, persuade them to carry out the agreement in the spirit as well as the letter.

I have been referring to liquor taxation, which applies to all products, domestic and imported. However, there is discrimination against whisky itself and, in particular, a high import duty. I accept that all nations are entitled to apply duties on imported products, but the duty on a bottle of Scotch whisky entering Japan is six times as high as that on Japanese whisky entering the European market. Scotch attracts a higher rate than other imported whisky. I hope that in his reply my hon. Friend will assure us that the Government are seeking a reduction in the import duty on Scotch whisky in the current GATT negotiations.

8.11 pm

Mr. Austin Mitchell (Great Grimsby): It is a peculiar pleasure to rise from these packed Benches of eager Members coming in to hear me. I regret that the rather arcane rules of television coverage prohibit the cameras panning along to see the serried ranks of the anti-doughnut tendency, here to hang on my every word, because this debate concerns one of the nubs of British industrial problems, which is important to viewers.

I detect in attitudes towards Japan, and particularly the obsession with the deficit in trade with it, a peculiar double standard on the part not only of the Government but of the Community. Our deficit in manufactured trade and trade generally with the EEC is running at the same scale as the deficit of the entire EEC with Japan. That is a sign of the attitudes to the problem. Why are the Government and the EEC obsessed with that deficit with Japan but unconcerned about the scale of our deficit with the Common Market? If the EEC deficit with Japan is damaging to the European economy, how much more damaging is the deficit of one single nation with the EEC? The Minister told us, quite rightly, that our deficit with Japan is half our deficit with West Germany. That is the nature of the problem, and it is unrealistic that the EEC concentrates its attention on the deficit with Japan and ignores the far more damaging effects on this country of the deficit with the EEC.

In 1970, just before we entered the Common Market, we had a manufactured trade surplus with the EEC that, in today's prices, would be worth about £4 billion, but now we have a deficit of £18 billion. That turnround of £22 billion with the EEC must mean the export of 1·5 million jobs, probably even 2 million if we take into account the jobs lost in trade with other markets. That is the scale of the damage that we have done to our industrial economy. Compared to that, concern about trade with Japan is unrealistic.

The papers that we are debating just tinker with the problem. They whinge about the widening deficit but suggest little to solve it. That deficit is just a Nippon clip-on to our deficit with the EEC. Our real problem is what to do about it. My hon. Friend the Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) has rightly suggested that both Britain and the EEC need an industrial policy if we are to have the industrial renaissance about which we have heard and if we are to rebuild our industrial base in competition with countries that have an industrial policy in which Government and industry work in a close conspiracy, as they do in Japan. The dominance of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry is lessening as time goes by and it may be that its achievements are overrated, but still the co-operation between it and the banks, and between the banks and industry, to channel long-term investments so that they can ride out the unprofitable years and build up market share, is an example that we could well emulate. Instead, our obsession is short-term, and is produced by a concern about balance sheets.

As I listened to earlier speeches, I was thinking that there should be a Mitchell's law about how a country's economic success is in inverse ratio to the number of accountants that it has in top positions in industry. The Japanese have hardly any, but we are overwhelmed and dominated by them. Long-term considerations are unimportant in a world dominated by accountants, who are obsessed by balance sheets. That is one reason for our problems. My hon. Friend the Member for Gateshead, East was right to say that another problem needs to be addressed. We should concentrate much more than the Government are doing on the human capital, on training and building up skills.

The third argument that must be made and the third factor to be taken into account is the exchange rate. Throughout the world there is a trading imbalance between the Anglo-Saxon countries, and particularly the United States and the United Kingdom, and West Germany and Japan. The United States and the United Kingdom are in horrendous deficits and ours is now between 4 and 5 per cent. of GDP, which is bigger than the American deficit. West Germany and Japan, the countries that have made a success out of losing the war, are running enormous surpluses.

[Mr. Austin Mitchell]

The problem for the world, not just for the EEC, is how to redress that imbalance. The exchange rate must be the only available method to do it. In other words, there is a pressing requirement that Japan and West Germany revalue their currency upwards or, failing that, that the dollar and the pound come down. On the present figures, the pound would need to come down by about 25 per cent. and the dollar by as much as 20 per cent., because both are overvalued. Unless there is a revaluation of the dominant currencies, the deficit currencies have to come down. That is the only way to do it.

When it comes to redressing those terms of trade, Japan has done more than West Germany to right its balance sheets with the world. It has done more to get its exchange rate up and to expand domestic demand and by way of overseas investment in other economies—in other words, exporting some of its surplus through investment in the countries that are buying its goods. Contrary to what the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) said, with respect to that investment—beggars cannot be choosers, and under this Government we have to be beggars—much of it is because of the Government's deliberate strategy of turning ours into a Trojan horse economy. We have lower pay, lower taxes, more deregulation and weaker unions than European economies. That makes us the entry point for Japanese firms into the EEC. That is the inducement that the Government are holding out. They are not holding out the prospects of a high-pay, high-skill economy. The investment is not a compliment to this country. I am not saying that we should not have it—I welcome it because it is essential and the mutual co-operation is beneficial—but it is coming to an economy negotiating from weakness, thanks to the Government's policies.

As I have said, we need an industrial strategy and not a hands-off policy. Under its present administration, the Department of Trade and Industry is more hands off than a Saudi cure for kleptomania. Secondly, we need training. Thirdly, we need a readjustment of the exchange rate if we are to have a more equal trading relationship. Only that will allow us to build up what we need. We need national champions to fight for the United Kingdom in all spheres of industry. We need them to take on the dominant firms that are so successful in Japan, and to a less extent in Germany. Our problem is that, in car manufacturing and engineering, we do not have the national champions that once existed. Unless the Government compensate for that by co-operating with industry and working with it, we are doomed to failure. If that happens, another nail will be driven into the coffin of industrial Britain.

We must expand our industrial base. It is too small for national viability and too small to survive. We cannot continue to buy from the world unless we produce and sell in return. The policies that are now being pursued, especially on the exchange rate, are harmful and damaging. We are talking about a national strategy that I and no one else want to see, because it will result in the strange death of industrial Britain.

8.21 pm

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim (Amber Valley): I have considerable sympathy for my hon. Friend the Minister, who must defend EEC policies which many people, including independent observers, see as blatant protectionism aimed at the Japanese. It is worth emphasising that there has been no diversion of the products mentioned in the papers before us from the American market to the British or European markets. It is worth remembering, too, that European tariffs of 100 per cent. on televisions, power tools and computers were meant to counter the tariffs that the Americans ended almost three years ago. It is extraordinary that, because the Americans did something three years ago, we must introduce countermeasures.

It is common for western politicians and journalists to accuse the Japanese of being devious in their trade policies. Bearing in mind the fact that the duties to which I have referred are not justified and that the Americans dropped theirs almost three years ago, is it not the height of deviousness on the part of the EEC to use out-of-date, finished and dropped American tariffs as an excuse for imposing a series of tariffs to catch Japanese products?

A related issue is dumping. I do not think that semiconductors have been mentioned so far in the debate. The European anti-dumping regulations are drafted so that it is almost inevitable that they will find dumping where, in fact, none exists. They have been used by the EEC as an unfair tool. Recently the Commission threatened Japanese semiconductor manufacturers with anti-dumping duties. Those threats forced the Japanese producers to come to an agreement with the Commission that they would not sell below a certain price.

That is undoubtedly a restraint on trade and an interference with the free market. It has been inflicted on the basis of anti-dumping regulations which have been commented upon by a completely independent observer, Michael Davenport. He should know a thing or two about these matters because he worked for the European Commission. In a recent report of the Royal Institute of International Affairs, he wrote:

> "Not only do the EEC anti-dumping duties and regulations overtly discriminate against foreign companies, but in common with other import restraining measures they ignore the damage inflicted by anti-dumping duties on the users of imported products. Anti-dumping policies should be recast before they become like the mythical whirlpool Charybdis, which insatiably sucked in every passing ship."

The European Community has been using anti-dumping duties increasingly in recent years. Between 1980 and 1987 it carried out 367 anti-dumping investigations against only 217 in the United States and 147 in Canada. These investigations are being targeted increasingly at the Japanese and other east Asian nations. Increasingly, the investigations are moving away from the bulk commodity products which were the subject of most investigations in the 1960s and 1970s. They are being targeted now at high-tech Japanese and other east Asian products such as televisions, excavators, video recorders and, recently, semiconductors.

One reason why the EEC has been targeting Japan with grossly unfair anti-dumping duties in recent years is special pleading by the industrial lobby. In the case of semiconductors, the main culprits have been Siemens of West Germany, SGS Thompson, a Franco-Italian joint venture, and Philips of Holland. It is worth noting that all these companies have been substantially supported and subsidised by their national Governments and by the EEC. They have the cheek to go to the Commission and say, "Is it not awful that the Japanese have been undercutting us?" They do not mention that the real reason for the success of the Japanese semiconductor manufacturers is that, in the late 1970s and the 1980s, they were prepared to take risks. As the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) said, they were prepared to make the massive investment that was needed in research and development and in plant. They have taken western semiconductor manufacturers to the cleaners.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: I tried to explain that it is institutionally difficult for our companies to invest in the long term. Had our companies taken such gambles, many investors—giant investors, who can wield considerable influence on what companies do—would have said, "This is mad investment and it should not be undertaken." That is the fundamental difference between British and Japanese companies.

Mr. Oppenheim: The hon. Gentleman makes a valid point, but too much stress is placed on so-called short-termism in the West and long-termism in Japan. I agree that it is an important factor, but some people, as with the Ministry of International Trade and Industry—MITI—and the other easy excuses that are advanced for Japanese success, exaggerate its importance. I accept, however, that the Japanese have a large pool of investment available to them. That has been a significant factor in their success.

Apart from the special pleading by the industrial lobby, the other reason for the EEC's targeting of Japan by protectionist measures is that increasingly the EEC is running its own industrial strategy and policy. It is a two-pronged policy. On the one hand, the Commission is beginning heavily to subsidise certain industries. On the other, it is erecting protectionist barriers to keep out products that originate from outside the EEC.

Underlying this strategy is a feeling which is common in the West—that the Japanese have succeeded unfairly. It is considered that they have succeeded through some subsidised industry plot to undermine the west and attack western markets. It is felt that the basic policies of the Japanese have been protectionist. It is argued that an industrial strategy has been implemented by MITI to ensure that Japanese companies receive a lot of money from the Government and special considerations.

I ask the proponents of the MITI myth, as I call it, to answer the following question: if these industrial strategy policies of protectionism and subsidies work so well, why are not the industries of Communist countries—perhaps the most protected and subsidised—equally successful? If we do not want to take the example of the Communist bloc, why are not the economies of India or Brazil successful? After all, those Governments have been hugely protectionist. They have heavily controlled their economies and subsidised their industries.

I would go further and point out that hardly a nation in the west has not at some time tried industrial strategies and protectionism. I include in that list the United States, which puts itself forward as the great friend of free trade, the great liberal market and all the rest, but it is in fact among the most protectionist nations in all sorts of ways that I do not have time to go into now. It has also indirectly subsidised many of its industries, particularly aerospace and computers.

There is a tendency in the West to exaggerate the extent to which Japan has been subject to an industrial strategy and at the same time to forget the extent to which western economies have been subject to industrial strategies. But if the Japanese industrial strategy, if we can call it that, has worked better than those in the West—or should I say if the industrial strategies and policies of the MITI bureaucrats have done less damage than the industrial strategies of western Governments—perhaps it is because MITI's policies have been more in line with the workings of the market.

Whereas in the West we have often used huge sums of Government money to subsidise and prop up unviable, failing industries that are riven with all sorts of deep structural problems, the Japanese have encouraged those industries slowly to fade away and have put the rest of their money into encouraging newer, more highly value-added, sophisticated industries. That may be why MITI's policies have done less damage in Japan than similar industrial strategies have in the West.

Ms. Quin: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Oppenheim: I hope that the hon. Lady will excuse me if I do not give way. I have been asked to finish shortly.

It is also worth remembering that the Japanese now subsidise their industry far less than we do in the West. For example, spending on research and development by the Japanese Government has for a long time been far lower than Government spending on research and development in the West. It may come as a surprise to many hon. Members that most research and development in Japan is carried out by private companies.

Furthermore, the Japanese are now far less protectionist than we are in the West. People do not realise the extent to which the West is protectionist. The suit that my hon. Friend the Minister is wearing was probably made by a British or a European company protected by something called the multi-fibre arrangement, which restricts imports of textiles from developing countries. The ministerial car that my hon. Friend will be driven home in tonight was built by a British company protected by the gentleman's agreement which restricts the Japanese to 11 per cent. of the market. The Japanese do not restrict us in that way. Moreover, the company that built the car, Rover Group, has had huge subsidies from successive Governments. If when he gets home he watches part of tonight's debate on his video recorder and his television, he may not be aware that the European video recorder and television industries have been heavily subsidised by national Governments and at the same time subjected to protectionist barriers in the form of quotas against Japanese and Korean producers.

Far from us accusing Japan of trading unfairly, the Japanese should be a little more vociferous in complaining about the unfair trade barriers that we maintain against them. Western companies can and do sell in Japan if they have good-quality products and are prepared to make a long-term commitment to the Japanese market and sell properly in Japan. There is a long list of Western companies that have done well in Japan.

The real reasons for Japanese success lie not so much in industrial planning by MITI as in the Japanese industrial system. They lie in the open-mindedness of Japanese industry in being prepared to buy in technology from abroad, compared with the attitude of many western companies that if technology is not made here they do not want to be bothered with it.

[Mr. Oppenheim]

The Japanese have low Government spending, and low tax. Japan lacks complacency and feels that it must compete in order to survive. It has had high levels of savings which are taxed at a low level and so have allowed industry to invest more money. Japanese companies have been able to invest and, above all, they have treated their employees well, making them feel part of the organisation. That lesson should be learnt by management in the West.

There are great dangers in present EEC and American policy towards Japan. By erecting more trade barriers against the Japanese, and by unfairly accusing them of trading unfairly, we risk increasing tensions and splitting the world into competing trading blocks, just as happened in the 1920s and 1930s, which led to such disaster. If we want the Japanese to do some of the things that we think they should do, such as changing their policy on whales, it is about time we gave them their due for their achievements and stopped pretending that protectionism within the EEC is in any way competing against the Japanese.

8.35 pm

Mr. Redwood: I am grateful for a few minutes to reply to this well-informed, good debate, even if it did not attract too many doughnutters into the Chamber to get on to the television screen. That may be a good thing.

My hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) gave good advice to United Kingdom firms to get involved in the Japanese market as exporters. I agree with his comments on Scotch whisky. As I said earlier, progress has been made through the equalisation of liquor taxes and there have been good results in Scotch whisky exports into Japan as a result.

I can assure my hon. Friend that the Government are pressing for further action on import duty and are concerned about the differentials in the liquor tax with other kinds of spirits. We have already made strong representations on the question of look-alikes and have received certain assurances on marketing rules and the style of the product. The Government will continue to ensure that the Scotch whisky industry's views are strongly represented in Japan.

My hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim) made some good points about dumping and the problems that arise from that. My hon. Friend is right to say that we must be careful about anti-dumping procedures and Britain always sets out two points to our fellow member states in the Community. The first is that users, as well as producers, have needs and we have to balance those needs when looking at anti-dumping cases. Secondly, anti-dumping procedures must take place within the framework of the general agreement on tariffs and trade where there are clearly laid down rules. One reason for the strong Community objections to the United States action that triggered the document that we are debating was that the United States action was outside the GATT rules which the EC condemns.

The hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) gave a good dissertation on why Labour remains the party of devaluation. Labour Governments have always devalued, and I am glad to see that he would recommend that to the Government. However, he should note that the Japanese have always abided by the Plaza and Louvre accords, and there was a period of revaluation of the yen as a result of those pledges.

As to the hon. Gentleman's industrial policy, it would be easier to take lectures from him if, for example, he bought a British car, but I believe that he does not. As my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley said, I drive a British car and I am wearing a British suit. Anyone who believes in British industry should back that belief by purchasing British goods. That is the true support that it needs. That is its best reward.

My hon. Friend the Member for Harwich (Sir J. Ridsdale) made some wise observations on the need to encourage Japanese investment here. I am delighted that the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) agreed that Japanese investors are welcome in Britain and that they are investing not just in assembly but in a range of other activities including componentry, research and development and technology centres. I am sure that the House welcomes that development.

There are a number of success stories. British companies in pharmaceuticals, aerospace, high-quality textiles and a number of other areas have made the long-term commitment to the Japanese market. They have shown that they can sell into Japan by concentrating on giving good service and reliable quality, and they are examples to those British companies that have not yet taken that plunge.

The hon. Member for Gateshead, East was critical of the Government's stance, but she may be unaware of the extent of the success of Opportunity Japan. She might like to know that the Japanese have praised that programme as an example of how other countries could, through their Governments, introduce industry to the Japanese market.

It being one and a half hours after the motion was entered upon, MADAM DEPUTY SPEAKER put the Question, pursuant to Order [24 November]:—

Question agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House takes note of European Community Documents Nos. 6552/87 relating to certain imports from Japan and 5395/88 relating to trade relations with Japan; and agrees with the Government's support of Community policy towards Japan.

EC Shipping Industry

8.39 pm

The Minister for Aviation and Shipping (Mr. Patrick McLoughlin): I beg to move,

That this House takes note of European Community Documents Nos. 8367/89, 8368/89; and the proposals described in the un-numbered Explanatory Memorandum submitted by the Department of Transport on 22nd November 1989 relating to the Community shipping industry; further notes that Community-owned shipping represents some 25 per cent. of the world fleet; endorses the Government's commitment to liberal shipping policies and to the opening of the coastal and offshore markets (cabotage) of France, Greece, Italy, Spain and Portugal and its opposition to subsidies for shipping; and supports policies which will promote vigorous competitive United Kingdom and Community shipping fleets.

Tonight we are debating stage 2 of the European Community's common shipping policy, which has become known as the positive measures package. I remind the House of how we reached this stage. In December 1986, the United Kingdom presidency negotiated agreement to a package of important shipping regulations. They are designed to break down barriers that restrict the free movement of intra-EC shipping, to prevent new restrictions being erected, and to safeguard and promote competition in all sectors of the shipping market. They are important measures and provide a firm base for a common shipping policy.

When the first package was adopted at the end of 1986, the Council of Ministers asked the Commission to make proposals for the second stage aimed at the harmonisation of operating conditions for further strengthening the competitiveness of the Community's fleets. The proposals made by the Commission that are now before the House are designed to fulfil that mandate.

Proposals are described in detail in the document "A Future for the Community Shipping Industry: Measures to improve the Operating Conditions of Community Shipping". The Commission also produced a related information paper on financial and fiscal measures. Both documents have been made available to the House. The proposals are wide-ranging and complex, and it may help if I describe their main features.

The document "A Future for the Community Shipping Industry" consists of a lengthy Commission communication covering three draft Community instruments and one Commission recommendation. The first draft instrument would establish a Community ship register named EUROS. To be registered on EUROS would carry certain obligations. First, a vessel would have to be on an EC country's register already. Secondly, the owner of the vessel would have to prove a genuine economic link with the Community. Thirdly, the vessel would have to meet a number of employment requirements. In particular, half the ratings and all the officers would have to be EC nationals and their employment would have to be subject to specific provisions on collective wage agreements.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): I have a question for the Minister relating to annexe 3 of the Department's explanatory memorandum 8367/89 and to section 3(1)(a), (b), (c) and (d) of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988. That Act refers to the owners of British ships as "British citizens". Are problems likely to be encountered similar to those provoked by the interim injunction of the European Court of Justice with respect to section 14 of the Act?

Mr. McLoughlin: I shall certainly know what to expect when I give way to the hon. Gentleman in future. If he will contain himself for a little longer, he will see that there is no way that the Government want to accept the EUROS proposals. Therefore, I hope to allay his fears. Perhaps he will allow me to develop my speech so that he can learn why we intend taking the action that we do, which follows in a way upon the requests made to the Department by the National Union of Seamen.

The fourth requirement of EUROS is that every ship registered would have to fly the European flag in addition to her national flag, and every Euros-registered ship would also need to have additional identification marked on her stern.

Those are the obligations attached to EUROS. The main benefit proposed by the Commission is that EUROS vessels would be entitled to operate in the cabotage trades.

Mr. John Prescott (Kingston upon Hull, East): What is cabotage?

Mr. McLoughlin: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman does not wish me to explain cabotage, but if he does, I shall be happy to do so.

Mr. Barry Field (Isle of Wight): If the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) does not know what cabotage is, he has no right to be an Opposition Front-Bench spokesman.

Mr. McLoughlin: I believe that the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East is having a little fun.

Mr. Prescott: The Minister still has not explained the meaning of cabotage.

Mr. McLoughlin: Cabotage is the allowance of free trade between member states and between the coastal lines of those free states, as the hon. Gentleman knows very well. I am surprised at the Opposition treating this debate so lightheartedly and that they do not regard these matters as being serious. My Government take these matters very seriously, even if the Opposition do not.

Dr. Godman: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I asked a serious question, and I hope to receive a serious answer.

Mr. McLoughlin: I was referring to the interventions of the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East.

The second main benefit is a proposed link between the right to carry food aid with those ships registered on EUROS. It is claimed also that the EUROS concept would help shipowners to transfer their vessels between EC registers and ease recognition of seafarers' qualifications.

The second draft regulation seeks to define a Community shipowner. It accordingly sets up certain tests that would seek to establish a significant economic link between a shipowner and a member state. The key point is that it would draw a distinction between EC nationals and those companies from third countries that establish themselves in the Community.

The third draft regulation makes provision for the liberalisation of cabotage, but that is subject to a number of conditions. First, vessels would have to be on EUROS and to meet the crewing conditions that I have described.

[Mr. McLoughlin]

Secondly, there is a weight limit of 6,000 tonnes, above which a vessel would have no entitlement to freedom of cabotage. Thirdly, there is an age limit for vessels of 20 years. Fourthly, there is a derogation that allows a member state to require the other EC vessels operating in its own cabotage trades to mirror its own manning requirements. Further restrictions would protect island services.

The Commission also makes recommendations on port state control, in which the United Kingdom has always exceeded the target of 25 per cent. on inspection rates.

We have studied all the Commission's proposals carefully and have consulted widely. Our broad conclusion is that the proposals would not improve the competitiveness of the European shipping industry. As to the basis of the proposals—EUROS—my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport was one of a majority of Ministers who criticised that proposal at a recent meeting of the Transport Council. Clearly, the case for creating a new Community institution would have to be very strong, but the majority view of our ministerial EC colleagues so far is that EUROS would serve no useful purpose.

The proposed manning and employment conditions would increase the cost of running ships and reduce operational flexibility. We believe that it is objectionable to seek to keep non-EC nationals out of an international industry that operates worldwide. Historically, European shipowners have employed seafarers from Scandinavia, eastern Europe, Africa, the Indian sub-continent and south-east Asia. It may be the Commission's wish to impose protectionist and inefficient employment conditions, but that is not Government policy, and we will continue to fight such forms of fortress Europe.

As to the important issue of shipping cabotage, while the United Kingdom's coasts have traditionally been open to all comers, those of France, Greece, Italy, Portugal and Spain are reserved for their own flagged fleets. As to the Commission's proposal, it is only fair to give it some credit for producing a draft regulation, but it contains totally unacceptable conditions, introduced to protect inefficient operations in some member states. We are prepared to recognise legitimate concerns, such as the need to guarantee regular mainland to island and island to island services, but coastal trades along mainland coasts in Europe must be opened up to all Community vessels, providing of course that they meet the recognised international standards—for example, IMO safety standards. So long as they do that, there is no justification for additional conditions on, for example, the numbers of crew or the age or weight of the vessel.

Our long-standing concern at the obstructionist tactics of some other member states has led us to contemplate retaliatory action. The Merchant Shipping Act 1988 gives the Secretary of State powers to require that any operator trading in United Kingdom coastal waters or the offshore trades would have to be established in the United Kingdom. We would consider using this power only if we were forced to the conclusion that other member states were determined to prevent progress being made in agreeing a sensible Community regulation. The Government do not like the idea of retreating into defensive measures which would deny our shippers the benefit of the present very wide choice of shipping service on our coasts, but we may be forced to take the necessary steps. We are prepared to wait to see how the Irish presidency will tackle the situation, but our patience is wearing very thin and we will not wait for ever.

The Commission sets out its approach to state aids policy in the information document on financial and fiscal measures. The treaty lays down in article 92 stiff tests for state aids to be compatible with the Common Market. It is for the Commission to police that. The information paper sets out the framework within which the Commission proposes to do that in shipping. For example, aid should not be out of proportion to the size of the problem. Aid must be transparent, temporary and on a declining scale. It must not result in creating over-capacity in the industry.

So far, so good. But the Commission seems to accept that one aim of state aids in the shipping sector would be to equalise the difference between the operating costs of employing Third-world crews as compared with European crews. That is a misguided approach.

It is as true for shipping as for other industries that subsidies often lead to a misallocation of resources, and can be a form of protectionism. It is wrong in this great international industry to use public money to preserve jobs for higher paid Europeans which could be done equally well by Third-world nationals. That is a wrong approach in principle and provides an excuse for poorer countries to introduce direct forms of discrimination against European shipping; and the potential costs to the taxpayer are very large. The USA provides an example of the counter-productive effect of subsidies. It pays a subsidy of some £150 million annually to US carriers. Despite this, only 4 per cent. of US international trade is carried in US flagged vessels; 96 per cent. is carried by foreign flagged vessels. For those reasons, we are keen to see the Commission take a rigorous view of state aids in the shipping sector. Existing state aids should be challenged, and no new ones permitted.

I think it will help if I comment briefly on the draft Council resolution described in an unnumbered explanatory memorandum submitted by the Department of Transport on 22 November 1989. It concerns a proposal by the French presidency to pick up priorities from the Commission's proposals and identify an agreed work programme.

Since that document was produced a number of discussions have taken place and a fresh text has just been produced. The substance is much the same as the earlier draft. However, the emphasis has changed. The presidency now seeks to order the issues into two sections. The first section lists those on which there is much common ground. The second section identifies the issues which are said to need further consideration. We are generally content with the references in the first section to port state control, food aid, consortia, research, transfer of vessels between EC registers, the 1986 package and to the recognition of seafarers' qualifications. Those are practical matters which need to be progressed.

Dr. Godman: Can the Minister give definitions of "seafarer" and "seafarers' qualifications"? Would those definitions include fishermen and the qualifications that a fisherman needs to go to sea on a United Kingdom registered fishing vessel?

Mr. McLoughlin: I shall come back to the hon. Gentleman on that question. I am sure that hon. Members would wish me to give a proper reply rather than a rushed answer from the Dispatch Box. I shall certainly check it out.

The issues on which more work is said to be needed are Euros, cabotage and state aids. We do not believe that there is any real political will behind EUROS and expect that the idea will wither away, but the idea that cabotage should require more investigation is wholly unacceptable to us. This is a treaty obligation and it is high time decisions were taken. On state aids, we will continue to argue against the Council seeking to usurp the Commission's competence in this field, and we will continue to oppose the provision of subsidies particularly to intra-EC shipping.

With the support of the House, we will continue to argue accordingly in Brussels and particularly at the Transport Council of Ministers meeting on 4 December. I shall reply later to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman).

8.56 pm

Mr. John Prescott (Kingston upon Hull, East): The Minister, who comes from a mining background and not a shipping background, deserves, some sympathy. One appreciates the complexities and difficulties in the shipping industry, which were illustrated by my hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman). He asked legitimate questions, which were difficult to respond to immediately without being conversant with the problems.

The greatest concern was caused by the Minister's speech and the motion before us. Britain continues to pursue the least-cost, maximum-profit approach without taking into account factors that are absolutely critical to the maintenance of the British merchant fleet.

We have to take into account what has happened to our merchant marine and to the European merchant marine which led the Commission to intervene, not relying on market forces but reacting to the market forces that have led to the sorry situation in which Europe does not have sufficient maritime capacity to meet its own economic needs or its strategic requirements.

In examining that question in regard to the British merchant marine, let us take into account what has happened since the Government took office in 1979 and began pursuing the policy of commercial cost at any cost. Britain, as an island nation, has witnessed a massive decline in its Merchant Navy fleet, which has reduced from 1,200 ships to between 400 and 500 ships. The number of seamen is down from about 80,000 to 25,000.

The shipping industry used to be a net contributor to the balance of payments. It now costs us £1 billion a year to maintain and pay for shipping services, contributing to the present massive balance of payments deficit. Britain, as an island nation, is not carrying more than 20 to 30 per cent. of its exports and imports in its own ships. That is the economic reality at the moment. But the greatest concern is caused by the strategic requirement. Britain has a strategic responsibility to maintain the safety and the defence of these islands. For that it needs both a military and a civil Merchant Navy. If anyone doubts that, one only has to consider the recent tragic events in the Falkland Islands. A fleet of a certain size and of a certain mixture of vessels is needed to maintain both this country's military requirements and our maritime contribution to NATO.

The Minister does not have to heed my warnings. The House is being warned constantly by the Defence Select Committee. In its 1988 report, it said:

> "The British Merchant Fleet continues to decline in size, as do those of our allies. We believe that the implications for our national and collective security are alarming."

To a certain extent, the Government responded to those criticisms. They thought that they had better do something about the decline of the merchant fleet; therefore, they introduced legislation to tidy up our overseas register. Dependencies such as Hong Kong, the Bahamas, the Cayman Islands and the Isle of Man offer their flags of convenience to the shipowner so that he does not have to observe the social conditions and pay the wages that are expected to be paid on a British or a European-registered ship.

The Government established what they called the Merchant Navy reserve. They said that it was a kind of Dad's Army: "We want you if there's a war, but we have no job for you in peacetime." The seamen that they so loudly praised during the Falklands conflict were essential, they recognised, to Britain's defence requirements, but in peacetime they sacked them and registered the ships abroad.

The Select Committee is concerned about this country's strategic requirements, but what has happened since its 1988 report? We have lost a further 100 ships and 5,000 seafarers. In its 1989 report the Select Committee said:

> "The availability of merchant shipping for defence purposes is governed by three key factors—the number of UK flagged ships, their accessibility when they are needed and the availability of a pool of British seafarers to man them. There are grounds for concern on all three counts."

The Government profess great patriotic fervour. They claim that they are defending the nation's interests and that they are the strongest on defence. However, they cannot provide an adequate Merchant Navy to meet this country's strategic requirements.

The Minister refers to pounds and pence, but he has not taken into account the strategic and defence requirements of the nation. The industry believes that we are short of 400 to 500 ships. The Minister should decide what the minimum size of the British merchant fleet ought to be. If it is greater that the present strength of the British merchant fleet, he ought to ponder how it can be increased by the provision of subsidies that will enable trade to return to the British flag, or even the European flag. The Opposition have always demanded that there should be a genuine link between the flag and the conditions on board ship. That question has been discussed at a number of international conferences.

Mr. Barry Field: If the hon. Gentleman reads the document, he will see that in a high-salaried European Community country the difference between its manning costs and those of a Third-world country is 44 per cent. and that, even in the case of a low-wage European Community country, the difference between its manning costs and those of a Third-world country is 15 per cent. How does he expect that gap to be closed when COMECON crews are now available?

Mr. Prescott: The hon. Gentleman raises an important point, but before I turn to that aspect I want to emphasise that factors other than cost have to be taken into account if we are to maintain a British merchant fleet. My figures are similar to those mentioned by the hon. Gentleman. They come from the Commission's document on fiscal requirements.

[Mr. Prescott]

Mr. Barry Field: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Prescott: No. The point has been well made that the cost of manning the ships varies greatly.

Another interesting fact is that 35 of the 38 vessels that were needed for the last Royal Navy exercise were manned by Polish seafarers. According to the NATO-Warsaw pact strategy, the Poles are supposed to be on the other side, yet they are manning our ships to fight Warsaw pact ships. That might cause some concern even to the hon. Gentleman. Even he may wonder whether that is acceptable.

The hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) put his finger on an important point: if the countries of eastern Europe join the Third world in offering low wages, the Community will have to react. I shall be interested in how it will react.

If western capital is invested in eastern Europe, if everything is manufactured in Poland and other eastern European countries and if those goods then flood western European markets, shall we stand aside and say that that has to be accepted in the name of democracy? I have a horrible feeling that the hon. Member for Isle of Wight and his hon. Friendds will be clamouring, along with many others, for an end to what they regard as unfair competition. As soon as capital is affected, there are cries from the Conservative Benches, but when labour costs and differentials are at stake, they are prepared to send the work force to the wall. That is what the debate is about; Conservative Members always argue for the protection of capital.

In the EEC generally, the decline has not been as great as in Britain. It has varied from nation to nation—ironically, depending upon the fiscal policies that have been pursued. Nations that have sought to limit the decline by offering financial incentives have been more successful in retaining their fleet. I do not have time now to go into the differences in detail, but my point is that Government intervention of one kind or another can affect the size of the fleet. That is the message: we are not helpless in this matter, and intervention can have an effect.

The documents reject the idea of flags of convenience —the idea that nations should be allowed to take the cheapest possible course. The Commission is concerned to harmonise its transport policy, especially in regard to shipping, because it takes the view that it needs a fleet. This policy is not so different from the common agricultural policy. We pay more for a Common Market tomato, potato or apple than the world market price because we take the strategic view that we should retain an agriculture policy and that we should not pay a French farm worker what a peasant in the Third world is paid. The argument should be the same for shipping, yet the Government treat it differently. We must ask ourselves why. The Community has set out its objectives, and I see no reason why the House should disagree with them.

The Economic and Social Committee of the Community is made up of business men and union representatives from all the member states. In its statement, that committee pointed out that the objective of the policy is to "provide a sufficient incentive for Community shipowners to register their ships within the Community and to man those ships, to the highest possible proportion, with Community seafarers."

That is quite clear and it is the view of business men and trade union representatives throughout the Community.

The Economic and Social Committee is not entirely sure about the means of achieving that objective, and it is not completely convinced that the Commission's proposals are the answer. As with the social charter, on which we have just voted, the difference between Britain and the rest of the Community is that other member states do not believe that social conditions should suffer in the pursuit of a policy. They believe that there is an obligation to maintain civilised standards and employment conditions. That view is at the heart of the Community's policy of sustaining its shipping.

The Minister rightly explained some of the matters that were under discussion. He mentioned the Community shipping register and the need to show a genuine link between the Community flag and the ship's registration. I only wish that the British Government had the guts to do something similar. All that they seem able to do is to provide opportunities for our shipowners to flag out to the Bahamas, Hong Kong, and the Cayman Islands and thus gain all the advantages arising from cheap labour and less safe conditions. I have heard all the nonsense about inspectors being sent out to inspect the ships, but the evidence relating to flags of convenience is overwhelming. The shipowners lose three or four times as many ships and the ships are not properly insured. Their conditions are the modern equivalent of the conditions that prevailed in the slave trade.

We welcome the proposal to tighten restrictions and the common definition of a Community shipowner. The Community suggests that we should intervene to secure a certain amount of trade for Community shipowners who get their trade from the Community and live in the Community. The Community says, "Why should we not do that? Why should we not sustain a certain amount of trade and traffic for our people?" The process of achieving that is called cabotage. It can be done on a Community basis or on a national basis, by reserving a certain amount of trade, as the Minister honestly said. But because we have pursued with a vengeance a policy of competition, the proportion of British traffic around our coast has fallen from 60 per cent. at the beginning of the decade to about 20 per cent. No doubt the Minister would hail that as a triumph of competitive forces, but many of the countries that will not allow foreign shipping around their coasts are now taking the lion's share of the traffic and laughing at us. They talk about competition as they pinch our trade and take our jobs.

I am quite prepared to consider cargo sharing. What is so strange about that? It was the Government who talked about the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development proposals, which allow countries to retain 40 per cent. of traffic in their own imports and 40 per cent. in their own exports. We said that we would not implement those proposals. We must appear the most stupid people in the world because we are not prepared to take 40 per cent. of our cargoes which could be used to build up a fleet to meet the strategic requirements to which I have referred. Other countries accept such a percentage of their cargoes to meet those requirements and economic aims.

There are two parts to the proposals before us. The first relates to technical matters and research and I was glad to hear the Minister say that he is prepared to discuss those issues in the early stages. With regard to the fiscal measures, the Minister makes it clear that we do not want any subsidies. That is what Mrs. Thatcher said about conditions of our entry to the European monetary system——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. The hon. Gentleman means the Prime Minister.

Mr. Prescott: Of course, the Prime Minister; that woman at No. 10.

Dr. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): Just call her the Queen.

Mr. Prescott: Is there any advance on that?

The Prime Minister has made it clear that she does not want any subsidies and we have seen the consequences of that for our merchant fleet. With regard to the range of fiscal measures on offer, the British industry wants the subsidy. British shipowners want the subsidy of interest rates and for buying ships. They do not want to pay a reasonable cost for labour; they want to get their labour from the cheapest possible source. That is the heart of the argument.

If we consider the international nature of the operating costs of vessels, it is clear that the insurance, building costs, interest rates and fuel costs are pretty much the same for all operators. The major difference is the social cost. Labour is much cheaper if it comes from the Philippines, Bangladesh or India. The United Kingdom wage rate is very low at $800 a month, especially when we bear in mind the International Labour Organisation convention which states that we should be paying at least $660 a month. However, Bangladesh pays $45 a month, India pays $90 a month, Pakistan $220 a month and the Poles $600 a month. There is no way we can compete against that unless, as some countries do, we consider taxation and national insurance arrangements and then make up the differential between the two.

That is the choice for Europe. We can have an international fleet of a certain size which we can determine. However, it cannot be operated cheaper than a fleet with labour taken from elsewhere in the world in which the seamen do not have to be sent back to their families every few months, they are paid low monthly wages and there are no overtime payments or high national insurance payments. All those factors lead to cheaper labour. The same argument applies to agriculture, as I said earlier.

According to the documents, there may be differences as high as 20 per cent. in the operating costs in Community shipping, and the documents refer to Germany and Cyprus. The Commission's evidence is that the difference can be as high as 20 per cent. although it may be as low as 5 per cent. That is the differential. Are we prepared to pay that price? The Opposition believe that we must answer that question. The issue can be considered in terms of tax, national insurance and interest payments and several countries have done that.

The Opposition reject the view put forward by the Freight Transport Association, which stated:

"The question of ownership of a particular vessel, or the flag which it is flying, are of little or no significance compared to the freight rate offered and the standard of service provided. Commercial patriotism is simply not a relevant factor in the decision-making process."

No doubt FTA officials were on the docks when our ships returned from the Falklands and they were waving their little papers welcoming the British seafarers back. Those seafarers had done a damned difficult job in the Falklands and the House rightly praised them. However, they cost a bit more in terms of insurance and they deliver a higher standard than seamen from Hong Kong, Singapore or Bangladesh.

We must decide whether we want a merchant fleet to meet our economic requirements for the balance of payments or for our strategic requirements. We must decide whether we are prepared to pay a little more for it. The motion states that one choice is opposition to subsidies for shipping to support policies which promote vigorous competitive United Kingdom and Community shipping. However, the evidence is clear in Britain. I refer to the loss of 1,000 ships and the loss of 60,000 seafarers —an inadequate fleet to meet our strategic requirements. That is the price that we have already paid for the incompetent ideological bullies of the Government. Britain needs a merchant navy, as does Europe. It is about time the Government were a bit more patriotic about the British Merchant Navy fleet. That is why Opposition Members oppose the motion.

9.14 pm

Mr. Barry Field (Isle of Wight): The hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) had much to say about civilised behaviour, but he did not have the courtesy to observe the usual custom in the House of welcoming my hon. Friend the Minister to his first debate on EEC shipping matters. The hon. Gentleman has earned an unenviable reputation for hijacking every transport disaster around the country and trying to use them for political purposes. He made the remarkable statement that the Government have taken a strategic view of the common agricultural policy, and said that we supported higher-priced EEC potatoes and other vegetables because we thought that there was something strategic about the CAP. It was exactly the reverse. The Government have striven hard to break down the protectionist CAP. We have worked extremely hard and have spoken loudly in Europe about that point. But that is not the point of the debate.

I received a letter from my Euro Member of Parliament in reply to a letter that I wrote to him on 13 November, asking him why snails had been re-categorised as fish in the EEC. I gather that snails were originally categorised by the EEC as vermin, but as they are increasingly popular as food and as snail farming has expanded, they had to be categorised as fish or meat. The reason for choosing the fish category is that, as a mollusc, a snail is more akin to shellfish than to a vertebrate animal such as a cow or sheep. Hon. Members may wonder what on earth that has to do with a shipping debate—[HON. MEMBERS: "Hear, hear."] I can see you nodding in agreement, Madam Deputy Speaker.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): I was just looking at the motion on the Order Paper.

Mr. Field: The speed of a convoy is only as good as its slowest vessel. As my hon. Friend the Minister said, we have met obstructive tactic after obstructive tactic in the EEC in trying to break down the cabotage about which the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East appeared to know so little.

If Eros is the statue of love, EUROS is definitely the Marie Celeste of bureaucracy in the EEC. The hon. Gentleman had much to say about the fact that the Government favour the protection of capital and not of employees. The reverse is true. Let us examine the ethos behind EUROS. There are about 320 million citizens in the EEC. Between 1980 and 1986, 138,000—45 per cent.—of the seafaring jobs were lost in the EEC. The point of EUROS is to try to support EEC national seafaring jobs in a Community of 320 million people. It is out of all proportion to the size of the problem.

As I said earlier, the difference between Third-world manning costs and costs in a high-salary EEC member state is about 44 per cent. Even against a low-salary EEC member state, such as Portugal or Greece, there is still a 15 per cent. differential—and, as the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East admitted, that is before COMECON really gets going in providing crews to obtain hard currency. There is no way that this Government or the EEC as a whole can chase the ever-decreasing manning costs in Third world countries. It is like a dog trying to catch its tail.

The hon. Gentleman criticised the protection of capital. If he had read the documents he would have seen an illustration of a Dutch bulk carrier built in 1986. The breakdown of figures is 21 per cent. for crew costs, 19·6 per cent. for fuel and 41·3 per cent. for capital. The capital is the most expensive item in the shipowner's overheads. It is no longer manning, although we have a long way to go in dealing with that.

There is a small shipping company in my constituency one of whose directors is Dutch. It continually reminds me, and I continually write to remind Ministers, that if that company were to re-flag for a variety of reasons, under the Dutch flag, it would mean one less deck officer, because the Dutch manning requirements for the bridge are less then ours. One concern of the Ship Repairers and Ship Builders Independent Association is the level of the intervention fund and the way that it will be fixed next year. There will be an EEC meeting on 20 or 21 December to consider the shipbuilding intervention fund for next year. There is every reason to believe that the American shipbuilders association will lobby the EEC to try to persuade us to reduce that intervention. The capital costs and the level regime for capital subsidy is one of the aims of the EUROS programme.

I am pleased that the shipyards in my constituency have done very well out of the shipbuilding intervention fund. We have succeeded in selling ships in difficult areas where previously that was not possible. We have taken two ships to Naples and we have just obtained an order for replacement vessels—they were originally Italian-built—to service the Isle of Wight ferry route. Associated British Ports has awarded the contract to an island yard now that it is in the Red Funnel group. I am delighted that we are building ships on the island for our own use.

There are a number of objectives in Euros, and one mentioned by the hon. Member for Kingston-upon-Hull, East was that of strategic importance. I have always believed that that argument has long since been lost. I have said that to the General Council of British Shipping and I peddled it around before I came to this House. I was a member of the Territorial Army and one of my last jobs was in the US-UK lock. I have run the shipping plans for the reinforcement of Europe [Interruption.] I have run them in an exercise. I know the amount of shipping required and the way that it jigsaws together. With the Berlin wall coming down and the different regime in eastern bloc countries, the hon. Gentleman will not win his argument. Indeed, the European Parliament and the European Community cannot win that argument for much longer.

Euros contains a perceptive and pertinent point that we should address, but which the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East did not pick up. I refer to the balance of payments—

Mr. Prescott: I did pick it up.

Mr. Field: Not really, when one bears in mind what the hon. Gentleman said about the protection of capital, not of labour. I should like to focus on the balance of payments. Although I am, of course, open to the accusation of being an opportunist, I stress that I put this point to my right hon. Friend the Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton) when he was at the Department of Trade and Industry and to my right hon. Friend the Member for Southend, West (Mr. Channon) when he was Secretary of State for Transport.

If one added together the shipbuilding intervention fund, the business expansion scheme for shipbuilding and all the other fiscal measures that are available, it would be possible to produce a reasonable package to encourage shipowning in this country. The cost of being on the British register and the diverse assistance that we give at the moment are not brought together sufficiently to give a focus to and encourage British shipowning.

The Norwegian register has grown, mainly from the purchase of second-hand ships as a result of the fiscal regime that has recently been adopted there. That is an example of what could be done if an altogether different regime were adopted here. The Treasury is often used as the excuse for not altering policy, just as we use the Whips Office as an excuse for not attending the mother-in-law's birthday party. I advise my hon. Friend the Minister that this matter must be resolved. I notice that when my right hon. Friend responded to the EEC, he said in several instances that the Secretary of State for Transport was responsible, but that is not entirely true. Some responsibility rests with the Department of Trade and Industry and some with the Treasury. I do not want a great new Ministry to be created for this, but we must draw together all our fiscal facilities. If that happened, I believe that British shipowning could be encouraged.

If one listens to the General Council of British Shipping and to the litany of assistance that other EEC countries give their shipbuilders, one begins to realise why we need to pool all our resources. Accelerated depreciation is an option available in Belgium and the Federal Republic of Germany. Greece operates only fixed tonnage taxes, with no corporation tax. Tax-free reserves are available in the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands. Soft loans are available in Belgium and direct investment subsidies are available in France, West Germany and the Netherlands.

I was interested to hear my hon. Friend mention port state control. Our enforcement of port state control embodies some of the highest standards among the EEC member states. Although the old arguments about flagging and rust-bucket ships are now slightly hackneyed—some of the flagged-out fleets have recently had some investment—if our EEC partners were to adopt the same level of port state control inspection, with the same degree of professionalism that is found here, I have no doubt that it would remove several ships from EEC trade.

The construction of technical ships is also important to shipbuilding and shipowning. No previous specifications are available for such ships, but our yards have successfully specialised in their manufacture in recent years. My hon. Friend's officials are responsible for supervising the building and specifications of those ships. Recently I was aboard a highly technical Dutch ship, where all the steel and many of the fittings were British manufactured. We did not win the order for building that ship in this country, however, because when the owners discussed it with the yard they found onerous requirements set down by the Department—down to the choice of the linoleum floor tiles. They decided that they could not afford to build that ship in this country given that each Department inspector could lay down the specifications required. My hon. Friend should address that point.

I have already mentioned the business expansion scheme operated by the Treasury; I understand that between £1 million and £1·5 million is available. These days one cannot buy a yacht for the Whitbread round-the-world race for that money, so the scheme does not represent effective fiscal management.

I am delighted that my hon. Friend has said that he will not put up with the obstruction of cabotage. The intended function of EUROS could be put to one side if cabotage was removed. It is nonsense that British passenger liners cannot collect passengers from Greece, yet we allow Greek liners to call in at British ports to collect holidaymakers and those who have transferred by flight. We must get to grips with that problem.

I listened with considerable attention to what the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East said about Government policy. On 11 September I was amazed to see this remarkable statement from him in the Financial Times:

"A Labour Government would probably set up a state-owned merchant shipping company as part of a programme to reverse the decline of the UK fleet".

I congratulate the Minister on his perception in holding this debate today when we have had an announcement from Sea Containers, a Bermuda-registered company, that it plans to sell its British ferry interests on the Isle of Wight routes to a British-based company, Radiant Shipping. That shows that the sun is still shining on the red ensign.

It obviously escaped the attention of the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East that we had a state-owned shipping company, Sealink. That company's cross-Channel routes were so awful that travelling on a French state-owned cross-Channel ferry was like travelling on the QE2 luxury liner. The Sealink ferries were awful, but the hon. Gentleman wants us to return to state subsidisation, poor-quality service, grubby ships and awful catering. Those ships, now in private enterprise, are clean and well turned out, so much so that British passengers complain when they travel on the SNCF ships. The other day, Sea Containers obtained 49 per cent. ownership of those SNCF ferries so that they can be relivered and redesigned for better service. Unfortunately, the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East would have us return to a policy of state subsidisation and all that that entails.

9.34 pm

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): I shall put the record straight regarding the graceless comments made by the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) about the usual courtesies extended to a new Minister. When the Minister made his maiden speech as Minister for Aviation and Shipping on 25 October he was welcomed from the Dispatch Box. Incidentally, he said:

"The order gives effect to an interim order of the president of the European Court of Justice . . . The interim order by the court requires the United Kingdom to suspend, until judgment in the main proceedings, the application of the British nationality requirements for registration of certain fishing vessels set out in section 14(1), (2) and (7) of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988."—[Official Report, 25 October 1989, Vol. 158, c. 993.]

My earlier question to the Minister was whether it was likely that section 3 of that Act, referring to the British ownership of merchant ships, would come up against the European Commission's hostility and finish up in the European Court of Justice. I am sure that the Minister, given his courtesy, will respond to that question. I am delighted that I have his attention.

Paragraph 5 on page 2 of the explanatory memorandum refers to maritime research, and one matter which is to be subjected to research includes the improvement of safety and work conditions of seafarers. Will the research include the working conditions and safety of fishermen? From 1984 to 1988, 135 United Kingdom registered fishing vessels were lost as they went about their extremely hazardous business. When will the Minister introduce a regulation on the carriage of immersion suits on all shipping vessels more than 10 m in length? All French fishing vessels are bound by that regulation. Why does it not apply to British ones?

The Government's dilatoriness over the review of the fishing vessels safety provisions rules 1975 deeply disturbs me. My criticism is directed not against this Minister, who has not been long in the job, but against his predecessors. When will the procrastination and prevarication end and the review be completed? I have been asking questions since Mr., now Sir Albert, McQuarrie introduced his Safety at Sea Bill in 1985.

Referring to the document 8368/89, I repeat the question about the definition of a seafarer. Will fishermen's qualifications be part of the European Community-wide recognition of seafarers' qualifications? If not, why not? In some ports in Scotland, if vessels are decommissioned or tied up for good because of the Government's obligations under the multi-annual guidance programme set out by the European Commission, some fishermen could find work on coastal and other such vessels if we were to achieve a fair and equitable system of cabotage. That is an important question, and I hope that the Minister will give it the serious attention which it requires.

The Minister knows that, under the multi-annual guidance programme, the United Kingdom has to shed more than 20 per cent. of its registered fishing fleet. What will happen to the fishermen who are ditched along with their vessels? The term "seafarer" should include registered fishermen. If they have the qualifications to crew fishing vessels as they go about their dangerous work, they surely have the qualifications to man a coastal vessel as it darts around the islands and mainland coastal areas of the United Kingdom.

[Dr. Norman A. Godman]

Annex 4, paragraph 2, of the same document deals with the derogation that seeks to maintain public services, that is to say, island to island public ferry and cargo services and mainland to island traffic. As I am sure the Minister will readily acknowledge, such services are extremely important to Scotland because its island communities could not survive without the services provided by the famous Caledonian MacBrayne Ferries and other ferry services. That is readily acknowledged by the Scottish Office.

Mr. Barry Field: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Dr. Godman: No, I am dealing with too important a matter to give way. The hon. Gentleman should sit down. The hon. Gentleman would not give way to me, and I am returning the courtesy.

Those services are very important to Scotland's island communities and no doubt they are important elsewhere in mainland Britain and even in the Isle of Wight. The Minister must fight to maintain the derogation. It is important that we do not allow other companies to enter and offer cut-price services and. hence destroy a fine Scottish ferry service.

I look forward to the day when we can have a liberal system of cabotage. Such a reasonable and equitable system would provide work not only for seafarers but for others. It would lead to perhaps two or three score more coastal vessels darting around our coastline and that would lead to more jobs.

I direct the Minister's attention not only to our seafarers but to our shipyards, especially those which specialise in the building of small cargo vessels. One of the finest such yards is in my constituency. I refer to Ferguson's shipyard in Port Glasgow, which must surely be one of the finest specialist small yards in the United Kingdom. I should be delighted if the Minister could help to direct work to that yard.

I have not driven the Minister too hard by a long chalk, and my last question is about the European Community's shipbuilding intervention fund, the sixth directive. How do the Government view that fund? It is a system of aid that is of major significance to the United Kingdom's shipbuilding yards. They cannot hope to compete against the yards in south-east Asia and elsewhere without the assistance of that fund. I should like to hear the Minister's opinion about where the Government stand on the need to continue the shipbuilding intervention fund. If it is to continue, will it stay at the same level, will it be reduced, or will it be increased?

Does it not make good sense, if European Community funds and domestic funds are used in the building of ships, that the services and materials purchased by way of that fund should be purchased from within and not outside the European Community? I can give a concrete example. Harland and Wolff is building shops for the Fred Olsen line. The engines for the ships should be purchased from a United Kingdom marine engine builder. One that could do it without any problem is Clark Kincaid of Greenock.

9.45 pm

Mr. Ronnie Fearn (Southport): I shall be brief because we wan to hear the important winding-up speech. I should have thought that more hon. Members would be present, because shipping is an important subject. Hon. Members do not turn up for what they consider to be a low-key debate but I think that this is a high-key matter. The hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) takes a specific interest in the topic and is sponsored by the National Union of Seamen. I asked my staff to phone the NUS offices and we were told that the hon. Gentleman had been briefed this morning, and he was the only Member whom the union briefed. It may respect the hon. Member, but I am a union member as well and I should have thought that the NUS would give me some information.

Mr. Prescott: If that is true, it was wrong. Our union usually briefs everyone; a number of Conservative Members have said that, and the Minister referred to it. I shall see that this does not happen again, and I am sorry that it happened on this occasion.

Mr. Fearn: I thank the hon. Gentleman. I am new to the topic and I wanted to find out what the union felt. Perhaps in future it will let me have that information. However, we are both speaking on the same lines.

My interest in, and knowledge of, shipping arises from the fact that my constituency borders the Mersey. Shipping in the Mersey is very important, although there is much less of it now. My local authority of Sefton includes the freeport of Liverpool, which is doing very well. Will the Minister make clear whether what we are discussing will have any bearing on the operation of free ports? Perhaps he will enlighten me, because I am not sure whether this matter has a bearing on free ports and the one in Liverpool would be interested to know.

I note that the Government have chosen to use their own statistics to put a positive light on the shape of the shipping industry. Although there may have been some improvement in the past year, the statistics provided by the EC working group should not be ignored. They highlight a dramatic decline in the shipping industry in Community countries over the past eight years. The tonnage of Community merchant fleets of ships registered with member states halved between 1981 and 1988. When taking into account vessels registered outside the Community but controlled by Community-based companies, the European fleet is down by 28·3 per cent. in 1987, in comparison to 1981. This cannot be blamed on a general decline, as, in the same priod, the world fleet declined by only about 8 per cent.

Competition from countries outside the Community, including Third-world and developing countries where costs tend to be much lower, has led to measures aimed at reducing operation costs being taken by member states. Because of their uneven application, these have heightened the competition between member states. This probably works to the disadvantage of the Community as a whole. Another aspect of this competition is the expansion in offshore or international registers by shipowners wishing to take advantage of lower registration costs and little or no taxation or using non-Community seafarers to reduce wage costs under poorer conditions.

I was most interested to see that by the end of 1987 there was more tanker tonnage registered in the Isle of Man than in the United Kingdom. The expansion in the use of crews made up of those other than member state nationals, or even Community nationals, raises another issue of concern, which is defence. Market forces may provide adequate merchant shipping to meet consumer demand, but who owns, operates and controls merchant ships at a time of national crisis?

Present world events may be welcomed and may lead to the conclusion that the danger of war between the super-powers has receded, but there is no guarantee that that is so. There is certainly no guarantee that another Falklands war will not arise. I sincerely hope, however, that that is not the position and that another war of that sort can be avoided, as I believe the Falklands war could have been. It is important that there are adequate numbers of merchant ships and trained national seafarers at the Government's disposal to meet a national crisis and to meet NATO commitments.

The proposals in the documents, especially the proposals to have a Community register, may go some way to meeting our concern. I am aware that the strict manning conditions attached to a European register of shipping —EUROS—raise concerns that it will act as an impediment to the objective of greater competitiveness of the Community fleets. We should not lost sight of the many social and economic advantages that the Community gains from the employment of Community nationals.

Perhaps more importantly, I support the aim to acquire European standards that embody high technical and safety requirements. I believe that we should be arguing for a high and uniform set of standards to apply to all ships sailing in European waters and into European ports. I should like to see the Commission's work devoted much more to these aims. I welcome the opening of the coastal and offshore markets, and hope that Britain will find that they work to its advantage.

The Government could do more to help our industry. I have no doubt that the British shipping industry does not compete on equal terms with the industries of the rest of the world. In many instances, it works at a disadvantage to most of the countries within the Community, especially in terms of taxation and manning costs. Countries that have focused on these matters in recent years include Denmark, Germany and Norway, and they have all seen a revival of their national fleets. Perhaps it is time that the Government considered ways of reducing manning costs through the remission of taxes and national insurance costs in a way that benefits the employer as well as the seafarer.

I welcome moves to harmonise conditions and practices in the interests of safety and of European unity and strength. I recognise, however, that proposals in the documents before us raise certain pointed questions. There is concern about whether the proposals meet the objectives that are set out. In the meantime, I hope that the Government will consider introducing their own measures to make the British shipping industry more able to compete on an equal footing with the industries of the rest of the world. My right hon. and hon. Friend and I will not be supporting the motion.

9.53 pm

Mr. Eddie Loyden (Liverpool, Garston): I shall be brief, as I know that the House wants to hear the Minister's response.

I was disappointed by the Minister's opening speech, which suggested that he is presiding over the raping of the merchant fleet. The hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) talked about the decline of British shipbuilding. That decline began in the post-war period, and the cause of it was the lack of investment in the shipyards. Investment came far too late and on too small a scale from the investors to secure a future for the yards. For example, Cammell Laird, on Merseyside, was still working with gear that dated back to the 1930s, in the post-war period. British capital was not prepared to invest in them. When there are no ships, there are no jobs for seamen. Those were the twin responsibilities of the Government.

The industry appears to have been dismissed. I was a seaman at sea in the SS Crispin when the war started and I know the importance of a strategy for the merchant fleet. At that time, the world and his wife knew that Germany's strategy was not about the Army or the Air Force but to blockade Britain so that ships could not get through and Britain's economy would be strangled and her war efforts defeated.

Like the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn), I do not want to see a return to those days, but there are other reasons why strategies should be looked at. Britain could be affected by wars that have nothing to do with Britain. If ships in the Suez canal or the Panama canal or in other parts of the world are affected by war, that will have a direct effect on Britain and we would need our own fleet, manned by our own people, to sustain Britain in such circumstances.

British seafarers and the British merchant fleet have had a glorious history. British ships were once the pride of the world. Britain has built ships for almost every country. It is a sad day when we see it dismissed, as we have done tonight, with such lethargy from the Conservative Benches. I hope that the next Labour Government will ensure a revival of ship repair and shipbuilding so that our seafarers can be employed once again and regain the stature that they had in days gone by.

9.56 pm

Mr. McLoughlin: This has been an interesting debate for a number of reasons. First and foremost, we have heard from the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) a number of criticisms of the way in which the merchant fleet has declined. But he consistently fails to tell us what he would do about it.

Mr. Prescott: Read our document.

Mr. McLoughlin: I should have thought that that document would be disowned. According to the Financial Times on 11 September, it says that the scale of the problem is so great that only a state-owned shipping company could ensure that the United Kingdom could maintain a big enough fleet for the economic and defence requirements. There we have it. The Labour party would offer us a state-owned shipping industry.

Mr. Prescott: I sent the hon. Gentleman's Department a copy of "Moving into the Nineties", so the hon. Gentleman need not rely on press cuttings. He can see what it says. Many of the proposals that it contains are the same as those coming from the Commission. The Commission recognises that we shall need to reverse the decline in shipping. We recognise that, and that is why our policy is identical to the Commission's.

Mr. McLoughlin: As I said earlier, we are concerned that some of the Commission's proposals will create a fortress Europe. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman would not want that. When most of eastern Europe is removing barriers, it seems rather strange for western Europe to be erecting them, and we would not want that.

There was general acceptance of the Government's line on cabotage and the Government need to go forward on that. The hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) seemed to be under a misapprehension that the freedom of cabotage already exists. Unfortunately, it does not. Much work remains to be done, but the Government are determined to see progress on that important measure.

To put the matter into perspective, it is right to say that we have the second largest fleet in the Community and overall the Community fleet represents some 25 per cent. of the world fleet. It is no good constantly complaining about the size of the merchant fleet and then expecting it to be able to recruit members. We must be positive about the advantages and opportunities of joining the merchant fleet. It is no good continually complaining about the lack of recruitment and then decrying the industry at every opportunity.

The hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East referred to the comments of the Defence Select Committee and argued that the number of merchant ships currently available to support the Royal Navy and to meet our NATO commitments is inadequate. The Government do not agree with the Select Committee's view. Although the size of the British fleet has declined from its glorious period in the 1970s, British-owned tonnage today still stands at 15·5 million deadweight tonnes. The problem is less of hardware than of ensuring that there is a supply of trained officers and crew. I am glad that the training measures we introduced in 1988 have contributed to a significant improvement in the number of cadets entering the Merchant Navy. The latest figures show an intake so far in 1989 of 460 compared with 110 in 1987. However, I remain concerned that new blood should enter the service, and the Government will continue to monitor the situation.

My hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) made a constructive and useful contribution, for which I thank him. Not least among the points he raised was that relating to the intervention fund. That matter is one for the Department of Trade and Industry but I shall certainly draw my hon. Friend's comments to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

The hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) also referred to the intervention fund, and raised the question of fishing vessels. Although the debate is not concerned solely with fishing vessels, the hon. Gentleman made a number of important points. He referred to an old friend of mine, Sir Albert McQuarrie, whom I sat next to when he was a Member of this House. I shall take on board the hon. Gentleman's points and will respond by letter.

I welcome to debates on this subject which he joins at almost the same time that I do, the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn). I am sorry that he experienced problems in obtaining some of the information that he required. I am not sure from his speech whether or not he supports EUROS. It has met with very little support, if any. It certainly does not have the support of the National Union of Seamen, and the Government have several misgivings about it. I do not believe that it holds any answers or that it is a serious option which will make any progress. Certainly a number of bodies have refused to give it their backing.

Although the debate has been short, it has been wide-ranging, and it will certainly help to send some messages and to support my hon. Friend the Minister of State who is to attend the Transport Council meeting next week.

We must make some progress on cabotage. I shall not add to my earlier remarks, but if we do not make progress with that aspect sooner or later, the Government will have to consider what action they should take to try to force the issue and make the Commission address it properly. I look forward to future debates. It is certainly an interesting learning curve. I invite the House to support the motion.

Question put:—

The House divided: Ayes 128, Noes 79.

Division No. 6] [10 03 pm

AYES

Allason, Rupert
Amess, David
Amos, Alan
Arbuthnot, James
Arnold, Tom (Hazel Grove)
Atkins, Robert
Baldry, Tony
Benyon, W.
Bevan, David Gilroy
Biffen, Rt Hon John
Boswell, Tim
Bowis, John
Brazier, Julian
Bright, Graham
Brown, Michael (Brigg & Cl't's)
Buck, Sir Antony
Burns, Simon
Burt, Alistair
Butcher, John
Carlisle, Kenneth (Lincoln)
Chapman, Sydney
Davies, Q. (Stamf'd & Spald'g)
Davis, David (Boothferry)
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord James
Durant, Tony
Emery, Sir Peter
Favell, Tony
Field, Barry (Isle of Wight)
Fookes, Dame Janet
Forman, Nigel
Forsyth, Michael (Stirling)
Forth, Eric
Fox, Sir Marcus
Garel-Jones, Tristan
Gill, Christopher
Gow, Ian
Griffiths, Peter (Portsmouth N)
Ground, Patrick
Hague, William
Hamilton, Hon Archie (Epsom)
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hargreaves, A. (B'ham H'll Gr')
Hargreaves, Ken (Hyndburn)
Harris, David
Haselhurst, Alan
Hawkins, Christopher
Hayhoe, Rt Hon Sir Barney
Heathcoat-Amory, David
Hicks, Robert (Cornwall SE)
Howarth, G. (Cannock & B'wd)
Howell, Ralph (North Norfolk)
Hunter, Andrew
Irvine, Michael
Jack, Michael
Janman, Tim
Johnson Smith, Sir Geoffrey
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert B (Herts W)
Jopling, Rt Hon Michael
Kilfedder, James
Knapman, Roger
Knight, Greg (Derby North)
Knight, Dame Jill (Edgbaston)
Knox, David
Lee, John (Pendle)
Lennox-Boyd, Hon Mark
Lightbown, David
Lilley, Peter
Lord, Michael
Lyell, Sir Nicholas
Maclean, David
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, Sir Michael
Mans, Keith
Meyer, Sir Anthony
Mills, Iain
Mitchell, Andrew (Gedling)
Moate, Roger
Monro, Sir Hector
Morrison, Sir Charles
Neale, Gerrard
Nicholson, David (Taunton)
Norris, Steve
Page, Richard
Paice, James
Parkinson, Rt Hon Cecil
Patnick, Irvine
Peacock, Mrs Elizabeth
Porter, David (Waveney)
Raison, Rt Hon Timothy
Renton, Rt Hon Tim
Rhodes James, Robert
Rowe, Andrew
Ryder, Richard
Sackville, Hon Tom
Sayeed, Jonathan
Shaw, David (Dover)
Shelton, Sir William
Shephard, Mrs G. (Norfolk SW)
Shepherd, Colin (Hereford)
Skeet, Sir Trevor
Smith, Tim (Beaconsfield)
Speed, Keith
Squire, Robin
Stevens, Lewis
Stewart, Andy (Sherwood)
Stradling Thomas, Sir John
Summerson, Hugo
Taylor, Ian (Esher)
Taylor, John M (Solihull)
Taylor, Teddy (S'end E)
Thompson, D. (Calder Valley)

Thompson, Patrick (Norwich N)
Thorne, Neil
Thornton, Malcolm
Thurnham, Peter
Wakeham, Rt Hon John
Waldegrave, Hon William
Walden, George
Waller, Gary
Wardle, Charles (Bexhill)
Watts, John
Widdecombe, Ann
Wilshire, David
Winterton, Mrs Ann
Winterton, Nicholas
Wood, Timothy
Younger, Rt Hon George

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Stephen Dorrell and
Mr. Michael Fallon.

NOES

Allen, Graham
Anderson, Donald
Armstrong, Hilary
Ashdown, Rt Hon Paddy
Barnes, Harry (Derbyshire NE)
Beggs, Roy
Brown, Nicholas (Newcastle E)
Bruce, Malcolm (Gordon)
Buchan, Norman
Buckley, George J.
Caborn, Richard
Callaghan, Jim
Campbell, Menzies (Fife NE)
Campbell-Savours, D. N.
Clwyd, Mrs Ann
Cousins, Jim
Cox, Tom
Cryer, Bob
Dalyell, Tam
Dixon, Don
Duffy, A. E. P.
Eadie, Alexander
Eastham, Ken
Ewing, Harry (Falkirk E)
Fearn, Ronald
Fisher, Mark
Flynn, Paul
Forsythe, Clifford (Antrim S)
Galloway, George
Godman, Dr Norman A.
Griffiths, Win (Bridgend)
Hinchliffe, David
Home Robertson, John
Howarth, George (Knowsley N)
Howells, Geraint
Hughes, John (Coventry NE)
Jones, Barry (Alyn & Deeside)
Jones, Martyn (Clwyd S W)
Kirkwood, Archy
Lambie, David
Lamond, James
Litherland, Robert
Livsey, Richard
Lofthouse, Geoffrey
Loyden, Eddie
McFall, John
McKay, Allen (Barnsley West)
McKelvey, William
McLeish, Henry
McNamara, Kevin
McWilliam, John
Martlew, Eric
Maxton, John
Meale, Alan
Michael, Alun
Michie, Bill (Sheffield Heeley)
Michie, Mrs Ray (Arg'l & Bute)
Morley, Elliot
Murphy, Paul
Nellist, Dave
Oakes, Rt Hon Gordon
Parry, Robert
Patchett, Terry
Pike, Peter L.
Powell, Ray (Ogmore)
Prescott, John
Quin, Ms Joyce
Redmond, Martin
Ruddock, Joan
Skinner, Dennis
Snape, Peter
Spearing, Nigel
Taylor, Rt Hon J. D. (S'ford)
Taylor, Matthew (Truro)
Walker, A. Cecil (Belfast N)
Wall, Pat
Wallace, James
Williams, Alan W. (Carm'then)
Worthington, Tony

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Frank Haynes and
Mrs. Llin Golding.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House takes note of European Community Documents Nos. 8367/89, 8368/89; and the proposals described in the un-numbered Explanatory Memorandum submitted by the Department of Transport on 22nd November 1989 relating to the Community shipping industry; further notes that Community-owned shipping represents some 25 per cent. of the world fleet; endorses the Government's commitment to liberal shipping policies and to the opening of the coastal and offshore markets (cabotage) of France, Greece, Italy, Spain and Portugal and its opposition to subsidies for shipping; and support policies which will promote vigorous competitive United Kingdom and Community shipping fleets.

Mr. Keith Vaz (Leicester, East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Among the business that we were to have discussed this evening was the draft Local Government Act (Competition in Sports and Leisure Facilities) Order 1989, but the motion relating to that order has not been moved. My local authority, Leicester city council, was concerned that I should raise a number of points because the order deals with competitive tendering and the privatisation of recreational facilities. Have you, Mr. Speaker, been made aware by the relevant Minister of why the motion relating to the order has not been moved? Do you know whether the matter is to go back to the local authorities for consultation?

Mr. Speaker: I am not aware of that. The fact that the motion has not been moved is not a matter for me, but the hon. Gentleman could ask the Leader of the House that question at business questions tomorrow.

PETITION

Broadcasting (Deaf People)

10.16 pm

Ms. Joan Walley (Stoke-on-Trent, North): I wish to present a petition on behalf of deaf people in Stoke-on-Trent, North and to bring to the attention of the House the great importance that we attach to ensuring that the broadcasting authorities use proper visual aids. Many people—some 400 in all—have signed the petition, including people from Kidsgrove, Newchapel, Milton and various other parts of my constituency. They pray that the House will ensure that legislation will be passed placing an obligation on television channel operators to make their programmes more accessible to deaf people by using Teletext subtitles, sign language or other means and to reach complete coverage by a fixed date.

It is important that we should have a policy of equal opportunities, and that deaf people should not be left out of the political and broadcasting life of our country.

To lie upon the Table.

Captain Fred Holroyd

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Greg Knight.]

10.17 pm

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): In 27½ years in this House, a man develops an instinct that enables him to discriminate between occasions when he is being sold a pup and occasions when one is being told a basic truth. Unlike my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) and Neil Grant—all credit to them—I have done virtually nothing for Fred Holroyd since he and Colin Wallace came to see me for three and a half hours, five years ago. But because I thought that he was telling the truth, I advised him to put it down in book form or at any rate to set out his case in great detail. With help from Nick Burbridge, Colin Challon, Robin Ramsay and Colin Wallace, Captain Fred Holroyd—Major Fred Holroyd in the Rhodesian forces—has done just that.

Early on Friday afternoon, discovering that I had been lucky in your ballot, Mr. Speaker, I telephoned the private secretary to the Secretary of State for Defence to alert him to the book's existence and to ask him, as a matter of courtesy, to let Sir Michael Quinlan know exactly what was happening.

As I have been scrupulously proper, I hope that the Minister may be able to address himself to the questions that I telephoned through to the office of the Secretary of State for Defence on Monday in the same spirit as I conduct this debate—somewhat in contrast, perhaps, to the way in which the Minister of State, Home Office, answered a previous brief debate initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, East.

If what Captain Holroyd writes is true, it raises the gravest questions about the conduct of the British state in Ireland and in this country.

This is the first book which may challenge the spirit of the Official Secrets Act 1989 head on. Do Ministers condone the book or do they believe that it does not break the spirit of the new Act as it will be when it comes into effect? Will it be passed to the leak inquiry which, as those hon. Members from Ulster who have courteously come to the Chamber tonight and whom if I may I will call my hon. Friends, are aware, is being carried out in Belfast at the moment? The issues that arise are nothing less than allegations about the commissioning of crime by the state.

I will now ask my questions and for the sake of coherence I will put them in the seriatim form that they arise in the book.

From the preface, was Captain Holroyd offered £150,000 compensation by the MOD for his lost Army career? Did he turn down that offer on account of the string attached by the MOD that he had to stop campaigning for Colin Wallace?

On page 47 Holroyd states:

"I have my own memories of Captain Robert Nairac and they are mixed. I liked him and saw him as a younger version of myself. He was keen and brave, if a little rash, but totally committed to the war against the terrorists. However there was another side to Robert that I was to learn about. The unit he was involved with, with the cover title '4 Field Survey Troop, Royal Engineers', was involved with the murdering of suspected and known key members of the IRA."

If that is true, who authorised the murdering of suspected IRA members?

Again from page 47, was the SAS operating from Castle Dillon long before the Government of the day were aware of it?

This debate is about accountability. The MOD has admitted that a sub-unit called 4 Field Survey Troop, Royal Engineers was based at Castle Dillon in County Armargh in the 1970s. However, it claims that no records are available today to identify its role. In his book, Captain Holroyd identifies the unit as an undercover SAS troop. Sir Michael Quinlan's office has been given notice of my question, as has the office of the Secretary of State for Defence. Will the Minister check the personal records of Captains Robert Nairac and Julian Ball held by the officers record department of the Grenadier Guards and the King's Own Scottish Borderers to ascertain whether those two officers served as OC and 2IC of that unit between 1973 and 1976?

Mr. Roy Beggs (Antrim, East): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Dalyell: Forgive me, I would rather not at the moment.

At the beginning of chapter 5, on page 70, Captain Holroyd states:

"The label 'dirty tricks' has been used so widely over recent years that it has lost much of its original impact. But to me it remains the best description of what I discovered happening in Ireland during the time I served there."

What is the MOD's reaction to that? After all, that comes from someone who was supposedly serving the MOD. Will it take any action?

Page 73 refers to the 3rd Infantry Brigade. Did it have a kidnapping policy, as Captain Holroyd claims? On page 77, what does the MOD say about Captain Holroyd's account of Robert Nairac's role in the killing John Francis Green? Who authorised such action? My hon. Friend the Member for Brent, East has tried as hard as any person can through parliamentary questions to ascertain the truth, but it just shows that parliamentary questioning is very difficult in such a situation. On pages 78 and 79, what does the MOD say about Captain Holroyd's account of the Miami Showband killings?

On page 83, did and does Army intelligence manufacture bogus press cards for undercover work which directly puts journalists' lives at risk? That is a very serious allegation. On page 110, did the RUC nominate Captain Holroyd for an MBE for gallantry?

On page 111, did General McGhie, head of Army psychiatry, visit Captain Holroyd at Netley? Was he justified in telling Captain Holroyd that he was a "political hot potato"?

On page 113, is Captain Holroyd's police notebook, which was returned by the Devon police, still in the possession of the RUC? Page 123 states:

"The Rhodesians were still having trouble with the sanctions that had first been imposed in the sixties when Ian Smith had made the Unilateral Declaration of Independence. The Rhodesian regime was being helped to circumvent sanctions by powerful friends in England, among them MI5."

I was a Member of the House, as you were, Mr. Speaker, during those years. I care about what happened and what did not happen then. Frankly, I want to know whether MI5 circumvented the policy of the then duly elected Government.

On page 126, can the Minister assure the House that no assurance was given to Bishop Muzorewa or any of his representatives that, if necessary, the election would be rigged to ensure victory? Again, in print, that is a very serious charge indeed.

On page 127, can the Minister assure the House that members of the British Army special forces or any special units of the British Army were in no way involved in the bomb plot targeting Mr. Mugabe during the Rhodesian elections arranged during the Lancaster house talks?

On page 131, was there a meeting in the MOD or in Whitehall, attended by Clive Ponting, at which it was generally conceded that Holroyd's allegations were true and steps to prevent the press taking up the case were discussed?

On page 136, was Kincora used by British Intelligence to blackmail certain key figures in Ulster politics?

Again on page 136, was there a campaign against Harold Wilson of the Labour party which included the dissemination of bogus literature and, if so, who authorised it?

Again on page 136, why was Holroyd, as security manager for Marks and Spencer, told not to turn up during a Prime Minister's visit? Was it anything to do with anybody other than the management of Marks and Spencer?

On page 139, did the British Army, as is suggested, arrange to have Seamus Grew kidnapped in 1974?

With reference to page 142, was the hon. Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) authorised to offer a deal to Major Holroyd? I have discussed the matter with the hon. Gentleman, who is aware——

Mr. Teddy Taylor (Southend, East): I appreciate the hon. Gentleman's courtesy in advising me that he intended to raise this matter tonight. As I have explained the situation in a letter to him, does he accept that that unfortunate person, who came to see me regularly at my surgery, eventually advised me that I had to stop my inquiries because I could be at risk? Some months later, a story appeared in a Sunday newspaper alleging that I had offered him £150,000 from some secret slush fund to keep him quiet. I immediately took up the matter with the Press Council, which found totally in my favour. The Sunday Times had to publish that. When it was referred to later in a television programme called "Channel 4 News", I initiated legal proceedings and had a full and total apology, which was then published in a later edition of "Channel 4 News".

As I have been to court and to the Press Council, and as all the correspondence over that long period is available to anyone who wishes to see it, including the Minister, will the hon. Gentleman at least accept that the story is utter nonsense? On the basis of his long experience in politics, does he accept that the last person that MI5 would use to offer a great deal of money from a slush fund would be the hon. Member for Southend, East?

Mr. Dalyell: I had considerable experience of the hon. Gentleman when he represented Glasgow, Cathcart and I always found him a truthful and honourable political opponent. I have a high personal regard for him. I am prepared to accept that anything that he says in this House is sincerely believed.

On page 152, I must ask whether the chronology is accepted as accurate.

One relevant question that does not originate from "War Without Honour", but which I have asked previously, is what event or events have prompted so careful a permanent secretary as Sir Michael Quinlan to ask Sir Robin Butler for a public inquiry into Kincora?

If what Captain Holroyd says is remotely true, what was the ministerial control? More important, what ministerial control is there now?

I care about the so-called Wilson-Callaghan years and what happened in Ireland at that time. I care about accountability—past, present and future. I think that the answer to the debate is of consequence to the future of British policy in Ireland.

I hope that the Minister replies in the spirit in which I have raised the matter.

10.32 pm

The Minister of State for the Armed Forces (Mr. Archie Hamilton): I congratulate the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on securing this debate. He is assiduous in championing causes and in seeking justice for the individual. Although I do not share his readiness to believe in all the issues he chooses to pursue, I am impressed by his tenacity and honesty in pursuing them.

On this occasion, the hon. Gentleman has chosen to interest himself in the acount which Mr. Holroyd gives in his recently published book of his life, particularly his Army career, his service in Northern Ireland, and the circumstances of his resignation from the Army. Many of the facts about Mr. Holroyd's Army career are contained in a letter of 21 June last year from the former Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces to the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) following a debate in the House the previous day. A copy of that letter is in the Library.

The important phase of Mr. Holroyd's Army career, so far as this debate is concerned, began when he was posted to Northern Ireland to take up an appointment in January 1974 as a military intelligence officer. He arrived in the Province at an early stage in the Army's involvement in the campaign against terrorism there and at a time when there continued to be a very high level of terrorist outrages. Bombings and murder were daily events. There were over 5,000 shooting incidents alone and nearly 1,000 explosions in 1973, and over 3,000 shooting incidents and nearly 700 explosions the following year. Over 500 bombs were neutralised in 1973 and over 400 in 1974. In the same period, ammunition finds exceeded 150,000 rounds a year. Nearly 80 members of the security forces were killed in 1973 and 50 in 1974. The lessons of these experiences were being learned the hard way.

I am proud to say that Army support of the Royal Ulster Constabulary in the maintenance of law and order in the Province is a duty undertaken in the highest tradition. We owe a debt of thanks to all those who serve there in the most dangerous of circumstances. I know that the hon. Gentleman shares these sentiments.

Mr. Holroyd's job was a demanding one which required long hours of work, often in potentially dangerous situations. Mr Holroyd was a dedicated and competent officer but in addition to the inevitable stress of working in such an environment, he also experienced a number of personal problems. His mother died of cancer and his father, who was diagnosed as being terminally ill, also with cancer, spent his last few months with his family in Northern Ireland being nursed by Mr. Holroyd's wife until his death in February 1975. She was also looking after four children, and Mr. Holroyd himself says that the marriage was already under strain for a number of reasons, including the dangers and long hours associated with his responsibilities in Northern Ireland.

[Mr. Archie Hamilton]

I feel great sympathy for the dilemma in which Mr. Holroyd appears to have found himself. It is evident from his book that he was devoted to the Army and single-mindedly dedicated himself to achieving the most effective results from his work in Northern Ireland. His work meant putting himself at great personal risk. At the same time, he had to cope with an unusual combination of distressing domestic difficulties. The sensitive nature of his duties can only have added to the personal stress involved. It is not for me to judge, almost 15 years after the event, Mr. Holroyd's state of mind at that time. What is clear is that his commanding officer was concerned that the strain on Mr. Holroyd was such that it could affect the judgment and reliability which is essential in such a post. Therefore, his commanding officer raised a non-adverse report on Mr. Holroyd mentioning these worries.

Mr. Holroyd was seen by a psychiatrist, who advised that he should be referred to the Queen Victoria hospital at Netley. Mr. Holroyd attended Netley but was unhappy about the reasons for referring him there and appealed to the Army Board against the potential limitations which his attendance might cause to be placed on his career in the Army. He was assured by the Army Board that these events did not reflect adversely on his character or ability. Mr. Holroyd remained unhappy and sought to have all reference to his mental condition at the time expunged from the record. The Army Board agreed that such references should be deleted except from the medical records which expressed the professional views of the doctors who had seen him.

Mr. Holroyd was dissatisfied with that decision and resigned his commission in September 1976. He seems to have concluded by this time that everyone was against him and, since then, he has sought to express his sense of frustration by turning against those with whom he had served, alleging that his removal from Northern Ireland was the result of a conspiracy. It seems to me that, if anyone had wanted to move him from the Province, there would have been much simpler administrative ways to do so than by organising a wide-ranging conspiracy. Hon. Members will clearly wish to form their own opinions as to which is the more likely course of events.

Given his personal commitment to an Army career, Mr. Holroyd's resignation was an irrevocable act, which I suspect must have caused him much subsequent regret. He has sought to pursue his grievance through other channels. Initially, these included seeking assistance from his Member of Parliament, my hon. Friend the Member for Harrogate (Mr. Banks). It was also during this period that he first made his allegations that the security forces in Northern Ireland had engaged in illegal activities. These allegations were made to both the police and to journalists. His attempts to interest others in pursuing his grievances or his allegations were largely unsuccessful and appear to have ceased when in 1978 Mr. Holroyd joined the Rhodesian army for three years. But, on his return to the United Kingdom, Mr. Holroyd resumed what he apparently sees as a campaign to clear his name.

In July 1982 Mr. Holroyd made a formal statement to Essex police about illegal activities which he alleged had taken place in Northern Ireland. The matter was passed to the Royal Ulster Constabulary to investigate, and it, assisted by the Royal Military Police, conducted a detailed inquiry. The results of that inquiry were reported by the RUC to the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland in December 1984 and he concluded that the evidence did not warrant criminal proceedings against any person or any further investigation.

In 1984, Mr. Holroyd persuaded a journalist to take up his case and three articles appeared in the New Statesman in May that year, as well as an item in a television programme on Channel 4. The issues raised were essentially the same as those which Mr. Holroyd records in his book, and which were investigated by the RUC.

Before tonight's debate, the hon. Gentleman paid me the courtesy of giving me advance notice of the more than 20 detailed questions which he has asked. Those questions have been culled from throughout the text of Mr. Holroyd's book. I shall do my best to deal with each of them and I only hope that there will be sufficient time left to address all the questions that he has raised.

The hon. Gentleman mentioned Mr. Holroyd's claim that he was offered a settlement of £150,000. I believe that my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) has dealt with that in a satisfactory way. The Ministry of Defence never offered such a payment and would not have been able to do so, since Mr. Holroyd had resigned his commission. Therefore, no such settlement would have been appropriate.

The hon. Gentleman has asked about a series of aspersions and allegations in Mr. Holroyd's book relating to the late Captain Robert Nairac. Captain Nairac was a dedicated officer who met his death at the hands of terrorists. Such allegations can only cause distress to Captain Nairac's family and it is irresponsible of Mr. Holroyd to impugn Captain Nairac's character and actions without full justification. I can confirm that the RUC has investigated the allegations that Captain Nairac was involved in the killing of John Francis Green and the results were considered by the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland, who found no grounds for further action. I understand that there has also been an investigation by the Garda which produced a similar result. In the case of the Miami Showband killings, two people were convicted—following an RUC investigation—of involvement in that revolting murder. The question of Captain Nairac's involvement was investigated by the RUC and no grounds were found to justify further proceedings.

The hon. Gentleman has asked me yet again to comment on claims that SAS units were present in Northern Ireland in the early 1970s. The Government of the day first announced in January 1976 that the SAS Regiment was being sent to Northern Ireland. In making that statement they departed from the more normal practice of making no comment on the activities of the SAS, and I do not intend to follow them down that path by commenting further.

The hon. Gentleman also asked me to say something about a number of other allegations made by Mr. Holroyd concerning dirty tricks and illegal activity by the security forces in Northern Ireland. Those allegations range from kidnapping to assassination. The Government's position on all allegations of illegal activity in Northern Ireland is that, if anyone has any evidence, they should present it to the proper authorities—the police. Mr. Holroyd's allegations appear to be based largely on hearsay and rumour and do not seem to arise from any direct knowledge of the alleged events.

No doubt Mr. Holroyd is disappointed with the responses of the various police forces which he has approached on these matters, but if he continues to believe that he has direct evidence of any significance relating to illegal activities he should present it to the police. I feel sure that they will investigate any substantive evidence that he can provide.

I should make it clear that no such action is needed in the case of the alleged use of bogus press cards by members of the security forces. That did happen and came to light in 1976. The issue was fully aired at the time and, in answer to a parliamentary question from Mrs. Lena Jeger in February that year, the then Secretary of State for Defence gave an assurance that the practice had been discontinued.

The hon. Gentleman has asked me whether the RUC recommended Mr. Holroyd for an MBE. I am afraid that I can only say that it is not the practice to comment on awards which have not been made. He has also asked me whether Major-General McGhie, the then director of army psychiatry, visited Mr. Holroyd at Netley and told him that he was a political "hot potato". I can confirm that the Major-General did visit Mr. Holroyd at Netley but I cannot say what may have passed in conversation between them and I can think of no reason why such a remark would have been made.

Mr. Holroyd records in his book that he left in a telephone booth some notebooks relating to his duties in Northern Ireland, which he had retained after leaving the Army. He says that those notebooks came into the possession of the Devon police, who passed them to the RUC. I understand that the RUC has retained a number of items provided by Mr. Holroyd either because they were official property or because they contained references to security matters or in case they proved relevant to future inquiries. Among this material is a document containing names and other information about individuals which would put them at risk if the material came into the hands of terrorists. I have no doubt in these circumstances that the House will consider it entirely proper that the document should have been retained.

I have also been asked to comment on three allegations which Mr. Holroyd made concerning his time in Rhodesia. These appear to be rather wild assertions and lack any kind of credibility. The position of the Government of the day on the subject of sanctions is well known. There is no foundation for the suggestion that Her Majesty's Government tried to rig the elections in Rhodesia in favour of Bishop Muzorewa. As my right hon. Friend the then Lord Privy Seal said on 13 February 1980, it is quite outrageous to suggest that the Government were partisan. They went to very great lengths to ensure that those elections were free and fair. I am afraid that I cannot treat seriously Mr. Holroyd's speculation about British involvement in an alleged plot to blow up Mr. Robert Mugabe.

The hon. Gentleman has also drawn my attention to a suggestion that, at a meeting attended by Mr. Clive Ponting, it was conceded that Mr. Holroyd's allegations were true. It has never been accepted that Mr. Holroyd has justified his allegations of unjust treatment by the Army or of illegal activities by the security forces.

Turning to Kincora, as I am sure the hon. Gentleman knows, Sir George Terry was appointed to take charge of an investigation into allegations relating to homosexual practices there. He reported in 1983 that he found no evidence of a homosexual "ring" at Kincora, or of any cover-up or concealment of evidence by the RUC.

In his book Mr. Holroyd relates that he was interviewed by the Royal Military Police to establish whether he had any knowledge of the affair. He says that he was surprised by those questions since he had known little about the matter at the time and it was not one which he had sought to raise. He was able only to show the police notes in his notebooks recording rumours of homosexual abuse at Kincora. He does not appear to have viewed such rumours as worthy of any action by him when he was in Northern Ireland. Thus his links with the Kincora affair appear pretty tenuous.

In the same context I do not intend to be drawn into comment on speculative press stories about the content of interdepartmental business among officials. But I will say, flatly, that there is no truth in the suggestion of any Ministry of Defence proposals that Kincora—which is not its business—needed to be specially investigated yet again.

I cannot offer much constructive comment on the chronology of the diverse events recorded on page 152——

The motion having been made after Ten o'clock, and the debate having continued for half an hour, MR. SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order.

Adjourned at thirteen minutes to Eleven o'clock.

House of Commons

Thursday 30 November 1989

The House met at half-past Two o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

PRIVATE BUSINESS

PRIVATE BILLS (PROCEDURE)

Motion made,

That—the Promoters of every Private Bill which originated in this House in the last Session and which is listed in Schedule A to this Order, or which originated in the House of Lords in the last Session and which is listed in Schedule B to this Order may, notwithstanding anything in the Standing Orders or practice of this House, proceed with the Bill in the present Session; and the Petition for the Bill shall be deemed to have been deposited and all Standing Orders applicable thereto shall be deemed to have been complied with;

—every such Bill which originated in this House shall be presented to the House not later than the seventh day after this day;

—there shall be deposited with every Bill so presented a Declaration signed by the Agent for the Bill, stating that the Bill is the same, in every respect, as the Bill at the last stage of its proceedings in this House in the last Session;

—every Bill so presented shall be laid by one of the Clerks in the Private Bill Office upon the Table of the House on the next meeting of the House after the day on which the Bill was presented;

—every Bill listed in Part I of Schedule A shall, after being so laid on the Table, be deemed to have been read the first, second, and third time, and shall pass;

—every Bill listed in Part II of Schedule A shall, after being so laid on the Table, be deemed to have been read the first and second time and reported from Committee and ordered to lie upon the Table;

—when any Bill originating in the Lords, which was brought from the House of Lords in the last Session and to which this Order relates, is brought from the Lords in the present Session, the Agent for the Bill shall deposit in the Private Bill Office a Declaration, signed by him, stating that the Bill is the same, in every respect, as the Bill which was brought from the Lords in the last Session, and, as soon as a certificate by one of the Clerks in the Private Bill Office that such a Declaration has been so deposited has been laid upon the Table of the House, the Bill shall be deemed—

(i) in the case of the Buckinghamshire County Council Bill [Lords], the London Local Authorities Bill [Lords], the South Yorkshire Light Rail Transit Bill [Lords] and the United Medical and Dental Schools Bill [Lords], to have been read the first and second time and committed and shall be committed to the Chairman of Ways and Means, who shall make such amendments thereto as have been made by the Committee in the last Session, and shall report the Bill as amended to the House forthwith, and the Bill, so amended, shall be ordered to lie upon the Table;

(ii) in the case of the Nottingham Park Estate Bill [Lords], to have been read the first and second time and committed;

(iii) in the case of the Medway Tunnel Bill [Lords] and the Vale of Glamorgan (Barry Harbour) Bill [Lords], to have been read the first time and ordered to be read a second time;

(iv) in the case of the Greater Manchester (Light Rapid Transit System) (No. 3) Bill [Lords], to have been read the first time and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills;

—in respect of all the Bills listed in Schedules A and B to this Order, the various stages deemed to have been taken shall be recorded in the Journal of this House as having been taken;

—only such Petitions as were presented against any Bill brought from the Lords in the last Session which stood referred to the Committee on the Bill and which have not been withdrawn shall stand referred to the Committee on the Bill with the same title in the present Session;

—in relation to any Bill to which this Order applies Standing Order 127 relating to Private Business shall have effect as if the words "under Standing Order 126 (Reference to Committee of Petitions against Bill)" were omitted;

—in respect of any Bill originating in the House of Lords to which this Order relates and upon which the Examiners have reported in the last Session that no Standing Order not previously inquired into was applicable thereto, the Examiners shall, if the Bill is brought from the Lords in the present Session, be deemed to have made the same report in the present Session;

—no further Fees shall be charged in respect of any proceedings on any of the Bills to which this Order relates so far as Fees were incurred during the last Session;

—this House doth concur with the Lords in their Resolution contained in their Message [22nd November] relating to the River Tees Barrage and Crossing Bill [Lords], the Happisburgh Lighthouse Bill [Lords], the Great Yarmouth Port Authority Bill [Lords], the Southampton Rapid Transit Bill [Lords], the Heathrow Express Railway Bill [Lords], the London Local Authorities (No. 2) Bill [Lords] and the Greater Manchester (Light Rapid Transit System) Bill [Lords].

Schedule A

Part I

1. City of London (Spitalfields Market) Bill
2. Hythe Marina Village (Southampton) Wavescreen Bill
3. Isle of Wight Bill
4. New Southgate Cemetery and Crematorium Limited Bill
5. St. George's Hill, Weybridge, Estate Bill
6. Penzance Albert Pier Extension Bill

Part II

1. British Film Institute Southbank Bill
2. British Railways Bill
3. City of London (Various Powers) Bill
4. Redbridge London Borough Council Bill

Schedule B

1. Buckinghamshire County Council Bill [Lords]
2. London Local Authorities Bill [Lords]
3. South Yorkshire Light Rail Transit Bill [Lords]
4. United Medical and Dental Schools Bill [Lords]
5. Nottingham Park Estate Bill [Lords]
6. Medway Tunnel Bill [Lords]
7. Vale of Glamorgan (Barry Harbour) Bill [Lords]
8. Greater Manchester (Light Rapid Transit System) (No. 3) Bill [Lords]—[The Chairman of Ways and Means.]

Hon. Members: Object.

To be considered on Thursday 7 December.

Oral Answers to Questions

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC Meetings

1. Mr. Adley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next intends to meet his European Economic Community counterparts; and what he expects to discuss.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. John Major): The next meeting of the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers will be held in Brussels on 18 December 1989. Its agenda has not yet been determined.

Mr. Adley: Is my right hon. Friend aware that everyone in the House will wish to congratulate him on this, his first appearance at the Dispatch Box at Question Time? All Conservative Members wish him 100 per cent. success in what he sets out to achieve.

Will my right hon. Friend confirm that within the Finance Ministries of the EEC countries different criteria are used to assess rail investment proposals in their state railway systems? Is he aware that our Treasury demands a higher rate of return yet pays lower regard to environmental and congestion factors than any other Finance Ministry in Europe? Is he aware, for example, that France spends twice as much as us on its railways and West Germany three times as much? Will he therefore, in concert with his colleagues, prepare a report so that we can factually assess railway investment decisions?

Mr. Major: I am grateful for my hon. Friend's opening remarks. Our rail investment programme is large, as he knows. The required rate of return is 8 per cent. in the United Kingdom, and it certainly varies in different parts of Europe, but the precise details of EEC countries' rates of requirement are unknown to me. I should need to check them and write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Allen: The Chancellor will be aware that Members on all sides of the House, and the public, are concerned about war widows' pensions. When he meets his counterparts in Europe, will he take time to discuss with them their arrangements for war widows' pensions? Without committing himself today, will he listen to them with an open mind and bring before this House proposals for fair pensions for all war widows?

Mr. Major: I admire the hon. Gentleman's ingenuity in raising that important matter on this question. I discuss a large number of matters with my Finance Minister colleagues in Europe, but the issue to which he referred is more a matter for discussion within the Government.

Mr. Tim Smith: Is my right hon. Friend aware that the CBI favours early membership of the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system because it believes that that will lead to more stable exchange rates and lower interest rates? Does my right hon. Friend share my hope that the two conditions that the Government have laid down—lower inflation and the abolition of exchange controls within the Community—will have been met in a year's time?

Mr. Major: Quite apart from the two conditions that my hon. Friend mentioned, other important matters need to be determined before we think it right for sterling to enter the exchange rate mechanism. I certainly hope to see lower inflation in this country and throughout Europe in a year's time.

Mrs. Beckett: When the Chancellor next meets his counterparts in Europe I suppose that he may discuss with them what his exchange rate policy is. Will he therefore tell the House what it is today?

Mr. Major: First, I welcome the hon. Lady to her first Question Time in her new position.

I shall continue to take account of the exchange rate, along with other monetary indicators, when setting interest rates. That has been and remains our policy.

Imports

2. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the percentage rise in imports of (a) manufactured consumer goods excluding passenger cars and (b) manufactured capital goods.

The Chief Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Norman Lamont): In the six months to October, the volume of imports of consumer goods less cars was 3½ per cent. higher and the volume of imports of capital goods was 8 per cent. higher than in the previous six months.

Mr. Caborn: I thank the Chief Secretary for that answer and I was interested in the reference period. Can he confirm that in the years 1988 and 1989 imports of consumer goods have risen in value to a greater extent than those of capital goods? Does that not blow the Government myth that the trade deficit is due to an investment-led boom allegedly taking place in this country?

Mr. Lamont: I will certainly have to check the hon. Gentleman's figures. If he tables a written question, I shall be happy to answer it. Looking at the issue over a long period, for the first 10 months of 1989 capital goods imports were up 19 per cent. and consumer imports up 15 per cent. There has been a trend for some time for the growth of capital goods imports to be higher, which is a reflection of the strong investment in this country. It cannot be denied that we have had an investment boom; investment as a proportion of GDP is at its highest level ever. It is not surprising that this also shows up in the import figures.

Mr. Beaumont-Dark: Does my right hon. Friend agree that a balance of payments deficit of £15 billion or more matters to the long-term well-being of this country? Does he also agree that if tax concessions are available in the next Budget they should be to encourage manufacturing industry, not to lower the highest taxation rates, which would be inflationary?

Mr. Lamont: I note my hon. Friend's early Budget representation and we shall take it into account. We have made it clear that it would be prudent for the current account deficit to be reduced, and the Government's policies are designed to do that. It is not right to say that a country cannot finance a current account deficit for some time. My hon. Friend will know that the United States has run a current account deficit for seven years, Australia has run one for 15 years and Sweden ran one for 10 years. It is prudent to get the deficit down, but in a world in which there has been extensive capital liberalisation, there are bound to be imbalances between different countries. In itself, that is not wrong.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Is not the truth of the matter that the Chief Secretary's reference to an investment boom conceals the fact that the Government are desperately looking for an intellectually respectable argument as to why the balance of payment deficit does not matter but have failed to find one? It is certainly implausible for the Chief Secretary to come to the Dispatch Box and to present as good news the fact that our country now imports capital goods such as machine tools which we could make for ourselves if the Government had put their weight behind British domestic manufacturing.

Mr. Lamont: The current account deficit is a reflection of the excess growth of demand in this country, not a reflection of a lack of competitiveness. If it were, there would not have been the strong growth in British exports and we should not have seen British industry holding on to its share of world trade in the way that it has.

Mr. Forman: Does my right hon. Friend agree that the Labour party tends to exaggerate this problem, partly because it is coming right as a result of Government policies and partly because in the modern world there is a trend towards international specialisation and we are bound to see greater dependence on external factors?

Mr. Lamont: My hon. Friend is right and it is clear that Government policies are beginning to have an effect; export volumes are rising faster than imports. In the three months to October, export volumes were 3 per cent. higher than in the previous three months and 10 per cent. higher than a year earlier. The same figures for imports, less oil and erratics, were 1½ per cent. and 8 per cent., so exports are obviously doing well.

VAT

3. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the average household expenditure is accounted for by value added tax; and what was the equivalent figure in 1978.

19. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the average household expenditure is accounted for by value added tax; and what was the equivalent figure in 1978.

The Economic Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Richard Ryder): A married man on average earnings with two children, who will have seen his real take-home pay increase by nearly 32 per cent. since 1978-79, would have paid approximately 2·7 per cent. of his earnings in VAT in 1978-79 and will pay about 5 per cent. in 1989-90.

Mr. Michie: The Economic Secretary is apparently admitting that a married man with two children and average earnings will pay double the VAT that he paid 10 years ago. Does that not show that the Government give tax cuts with one hand but with their other, invisible hand take more away through VAT and mortgage rate hikes?

Mr. Ryder: The hon. Gentleman conveniently forgets that when we came to office in 1979 we faced a large budget deficit, bequeathed to us by the Labour Government. As a result, we raised some taxes during the first two years to get into surplus. We are now in surplus again. In recent years, the take has been diminishing. The crucial figure for the hon. Gentleman to recall is the 32 per cent. to which I referred in my main answer.

Mr. Harry Barnes: Value added tax is a regressive form of taxation as it takes more from the poor than from the wealthy. Will the Government ensure that they do not go further down that road by putting VAT on essentials, including medicines, newspapers, books and children's clothes? What will be the position if the Government go down that road given that the public will also face the extra burden of the poll tax?

Mr. Ryder: The hon. Gentleman asked two supplementary questions. First, VAT is not regressive because VAT payments as a proportion of expenditure rise with income. Secondly, I do not wish to anticipate next year's Budget statement to be made by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor.

Mr. Burns: In the light of my hon. Friend's previous answer, does he agree that it is voodoo economics for the Liberal Democrats in Chelmsford to call for an increase in VAT to 18 per cent. to curb inflation when that would put 1½ per cent. on the rate of inflation, cost £75 billion to industry and commerce, and increase the expenditure of the average household through increased VAT payments?

Mr. Ryder: It is never difficult to find a loony Liberal, but if there were to be any difficulty I know from my own experience that it is easy to find one in Chelmsford.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: Are not the Government to be congratulated on resisting the European Commission's proposals to extend VAT to children's clothes and food? Will my hon. Friend confirm that as a result of the enormous changes in national insurance and taxation which have taken place in the past 10 years, the average household pays—on a tax basis alone—£10 less per week now than it would have paid in 1979, and that 2 million people have been taken out of tax altogether?

Mr. Ryder: That is correct.

Mr. Jack Thompson: Will the Minister consider commenting on the effect of VAT on unemployed households, and will the Treasury consider issuing a leaflet explaining the VAT implications for households in which the parents are unemployed so that they can identify the things that they cannot buy?

Mr. Ryder: If the hon. Gentleman cares to write to me, I will consider his suggestion. I remind him that the benefit system in this country already takes care of the sort of people to whom he has referred.

Corporation Tax

4. Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the corporation tax rate in the United Kingdom and other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

The Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Peter Lilley): The United Kingdom corporation tax rate is one of the lowest in any major industrial country in the OECD. With permission, I will circulate the complete list of rates in the Official Report.

Mr. Gill: I congratulate the Government on having one of the lowest rates of corporation tax in the EEC. That could have been achieved only under a Conservative Government. I urge my hon. Friend to give further consideration to the impact of corporation tax on the many small and medium-sized companies which depend on ploughed-back profits for their investment and expansion.

Mr. Lilley: I thank my hon. Friend for his remarks. He will know that we have a special low rate of tax for small companies. In his last Budget, my right hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Lawson), the former Chancellor of the Exchequer, raised the threshold above which the higher rates come in. We have taken account of that already, but I shall consider further what my hon. Friend has said.

Mr. Duffy: Is the Minister aware that the master cutlers told the Sheffield chamber of commerce at its annual dinner last week that despite the reduction in corporation tax, investment capital project decisions have become more difficult since 1983 because of the reduction in offset allowances, at a time when business men find themselves locked ever more severely into competition with European and other overseas competitors?

Mr. Lilley: Since we introduced the reforms in corporation tax, the quantity of investment has reached record levels and the quality of investment has improved considerably. That is evidenced by the profitability of industry, which is at its highest level since the 1960s. Despite the fact that we have the lowest rate in the OECD, the revenues from corporation tax have doubled in cash terms.

Mrs. Currie: Is it not true that our favourable corporation tax rates are a major factor in encouraging foreign investment in this country? Is my hon. Friend aware that yesterday we heard that the compulsory purchase order had been granted for the land in my constituency required by Toyota, which will shortly be investing more than £700 million in our country? Is not the fact that that business is coming to Britain a tribute to our good work force and our favourable business environment? No other sweeteners are needed.

Mr. Lilley: My hon. Friend is correct. Foreign businesses, like British businesses, prefer a low-tax low-subsidy regime rather than the high-tax and, inevitably, high-subsidy regime that Labour offered. The success of my hon. Friend's constituents and others in Derbyshire in attracting Toyota is a tribute to them, as is the success of the tax regime that we have provided in attracting it to Britain.

Following is the information:

	Main national rate per cent.	Total national and local tax
Australia	39·0	—
Austria	30·0	40·1
Belgium	43·0	—
Canada	28·0	[1]43·5
Denmark	50·0	—
Finland	33·0	46·5-51·5
France	42·0	—
Germany	56·0	[2]64·8
Greece	46·0	—
Iceland	51·0	—
Ireland	43·0	—
Italy	36·0	46·4
Japan	40·0	[3]56·0
Luxembourg	34·0	41·2
Netherlands	35·0	—
New Zealand	33·0	—
Norway	50·8	—
Portugal	36·5	—
Spain	35·0	35·7
Sweden	52·0	—
Switzerland	9·8	[4]29·2
Turkey	46·0	47·84
United Kingdom	35·0	—
United States of America	34·0	40·13

[1] Ontario.
[2] Average.
[3] Approximate average.
[4] Zurich.

Notes:

1. The rates of company tax shown are those at present in force.
2. There are lower rates for smaller companies in Belgium, Canada, Finland, Germany, Japan, Luxembourg, United Kingdom and United States of America.

Interest Rates

5. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters he has received from small businesses about the level of interest rates.

Mr. Ryder: A small number each month.

Mr. Hoyle: Is the Minister not aware that high interest rates are crippling small businesses? What assumption has he made for the level of interest rates in 1990, based on the very optimistic forecast in the Autumn Statement of 5·75 per cent. inflation?

Mr. Ryder: If the hon. Gentleman looked a little more closely at the Autumn Statement, he would have his reply. Obviously he has not read it carefully enough.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Is my hon. Friend aware that small business men in Calder Valley are worried about interest rates, concerned about inflation and absolutely terrified of any prospect of a Labour Government?

Mr. Ryder: My hon. Friend, as usual, is correct in most of his assumptions. I concede that high interest rates are causing a great deal of concern among small business men and mortgage payers. I am interested in my hon. Friend's question because a Gallup poll on Tuesday showed that the vast majority of people in this country.

Hon. Members: Reading.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Ministers have discretion in what they read from the Dispatch Box.

Mr. Ryder: The poll showed that the vast majority of people in this country are content with the Government's economic policy and frightened of a Labour party coming to office with rising inflation, economic chaos, high taxation and undoing all that this Government have put right. That is what the people of this country said categorically in the poll published by The Daily Telegraph.

Mr. Boateng: We appreciate the Economic Secretary's difficulties, but why is he so singularly unforthcoming—even coy—about the assumptions as to interest rates which underlie the Autumn Statement? Does he agree with his officials who, only this morning, are reported as saying that concern about the upward pressure on interest rates and concern about sterling was "so much political froth"? What comfort is that to the small business man suffering an investment nightmare or to the home owner suffering a mortgage hell? Is not the political froth that we should be concerned about the froth that has been washed up on the Treasure Bench? The Government should come clean or get out.

Mr. Ryder: I welcome the hon. Gentleman to the Labour Front Bench, but his three years of rehearsal have done him no good at all. If the hon. Gentleman were to read the Autumn Statement and previous Autumn Statements, as I advised his hon. Friend to do, he would find that interest rate figures are never given and were not given by the Labour Government either.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: Will the Minister show that he is aware how especially vulnerable small businesses are to high interest rates? What specific steps is he taking to help small businesses during what will obviously be a prolonged period of high interest rates?

Mr. Ryder: I fully concede that many small business men and people paying mortgages are suffering from high rates, but a far worse enemy to small business men and to mortgage payers is high inflation. The hon. Gentleman asked what we were doing to help small business men and I will tell him. The loan guarantee scheme has helped more than 20,000 small businesses. Increased corporation tax bands have helped small businesses. The 150 deregulatory measures introduced by the Department of Trade and Industry and detailed in a White Paper are helping small businesses. Improved inheritance tax provisions have also helped small businesses, particularly small family businesses.

Sir Anthony Grant: Is not my hon. Friend astounded at the sheer cheek of the Opposition when, instead of a record number of small firms starting up, as has happened under this Government, in the days when the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) was the Minister responsible for small firms a record number were closing every week?

Mr. Ryder: Despite what the Labour party may wish in its heart of hearts, new small businesses are starting at the rate of 1,300 per week. In the last full year of the Labour Government in which the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) was a Minister, the number was diminishing at a rate of 100 per week.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. In fairness I should call the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer).

Mr. Cryer: I am grateful for your sense of fairness, Mr. Speaker.

Is not the reality that this year bankruptcies among small firms have risen by 40 per cent.—a Tory Government record which was never equalled by the Labour Government, who gave a huge range of incentives to small firms, which appreciated and understood the concern that we felt for that sector?

Mr. Ryder: The hon. Gentleman does not seem to be aware of the full facts. Each and every week 1,300 small businesses are starting up. They are being registered for VAT, and that is a net figure, not a gross figure. When the hon. Gentleman was responsible for these matters in the 1970s the net figure was a loss of 100 per week.

Balance of Payments

6. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give his latest estimate for the United Kingdom visible balance for 1989.

7. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the current account of the balance of payments for 1989.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Members to the Autumn Statement forecast, table 2.3.

Mr. Hardy: Do not those figures illustrate our deplorable trading condition, and is not that condition the worst of all the world's industrial nations, at least those within the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development? Does the Minister deny that that is an illustration of the most appalling economic mismanagement throughout the past, oil-rich decade?

Mr. Lamont: It is not correct to say that our current account deficit is the largest as a proportion of GDP. There are countries with a larger deficit as a proportion of their GDP. I do not accept that the current account deficit is an accurate reflection of the competitiveness or health of a country's economy. The hon. Gentleman seems to be unaware that of the major industrial countries, only two are running a surplus. If he wishes to consider the health of Britain's balance sheet, let him look at our net overseas assets, which are the third largest of any country. That will be an enormous strength to us while we have a current account deficit.

Mr. Andrew Smith: Will the Chief Secretary give his view on whether the devaluation of the pound that has taken place since the Chancellor took office will help or harm our balance of payments? Given the Chancellor's wholly inadequate reply to the question asked by my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) will the Chief Secretary take this opportunity to make clear to the House precisely what is Government policy on exchange rates in relation to our balance of payments and inflation?

Mr. Lamont: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor made the Government's position in respect of exchange rates crystal clear. It is absurd and a little irresponsible of the hon. Member to press my right hon. Friend further on that subject. My right hon. Friend has gone as far as possible on a very sensitive subject, and the hon. Gentleman should not press him.

As to the balance of trade deficit and the effect of the movement of the pound on the volume of our exports, I have already said that our exports will perform better than imports over the next year. Recent import and export patterns indicate that the trend is good.

Mr. Higgins: In praising our balance of payments position, is it not important to note that last month imports fell, showing clearly that the measures by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor to curtail demand and to beat inflation are not only working at a domestic level but are improving our balance of payments? As to Britain's assets, perhaps my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary will commend an article by Samuel Brittan, in the Financial Times on 23 November, which brought out this country's very strong asset position—which compares favourably not only with the United States and Germany but with Japan.

Mr. Lamont: My right hon. Friend's remarks in respect of the current account are absolutely correct, for exports are rising faster than imports. As to the asset position of our overseas investments, we are far ahead of the United States. The two countries ahead of us are Germany and Japan. As a proportion of gross domestic product, our net overseas assets are the largest in the world.

Mr. Budgen: Will my right hon. Friend accept my congratulations on the Government's decision not to raise interest rates recently to counter the 4 per cent. devaluation that has occurred in the past month? Will he revert to the policy pursued during the Government's most successful economic period between 1979 and 1983, when they followed not an exchange rate target but a money supply target?

Mr. Lamont: I note my hon. Friend's comments. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor favours a firm exchange rate, and he continues to take account of the exchange rate alongside other monetary indicators when setting interest rates.

Mrs. Beckett: Does the Chief Secretary realise that these are the last Treasury questions of the decade? It has been an oil-rich decade during which the Government enjoyed the biggest oil revenues in history and took the credit for everything that has gone right. Now that Britain has the biggest balance of payments deficit in its history, can the Chief Secretary predict whether the Government will ever take the blame for anything that has gone wrong?

Mr. Lamont: As to the past oil-rich decade, we have allowed this country to accrue overseas assets, whereas the Labour party want to see oil revenues invested in an industrial strategy—which would mean supporting a lot of lame ducks and unprofitable investments for the taxpayer. Our policy has resulted in a stream of income and a stream of dividends that will benefit this country for years to come.

Employment

8. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth in employment over the last five years.

Mr. Lilley: Total employment has increased by 2¼ million since 1983.

Mr. Hayward: I welcome that excellent news. Does not my hon. Friend find it amazing that whereas the Labour party complains about small numbers of job losses, when it comes to the creation of 2,500 jobs at Grangemouth or the announcement of new research and development jobs with Nissan, it fails to welcome that news—especially when the hon. Members for Dagenham (Mr. Gould), for Norwich, South (Mr. Garrett) and for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) have previously complained that most of the jobs available in Japanese car manufacturing plants are screwdriver jobs?

Mr. Lilley: My hon. Friend is absolutely correct. One of the Opposition's most distasteful characteristics was the ghoulish pleasure that they used to derive from rising unemployment. Now that it is falling, they are totally silent. Of all the questions on the Order Paper put down by the Opposition, there is not one that deals with the excellent fall in unemployment in this country.

Mr. Win Griffiths: Can the Financial Secretary confirm that—despite the sudden rise in employment that has occurred in the past couple of years—Wales, the west midlands, the north-west, Yorkshire and Humberside, the north and Northern Ireland still have fewer people in employment than they did in 1979, and that almost 1 million men are unemployed?

Mr. Lilley: Unemployment is falling in almost every region, and last year it fell fastest in the north. That is good news, and it should be welcomed by every hon. Member.

Sir Peter Tapsell: In view of the Government's great success in guiding the British people back towards conditions approaching full employment over the past two years, may I express the hope that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor will resist the continuing requests from teenage City scribblers for ever higher interest rates, which would provide the country with only a short-term currency advantage and would put the real economy and employment prospects at risk?

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has made very clear which factors he will take into account in determining interest rates. I am happy to say that they do not include teenage scribblers—although I was once one myself.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

9. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made as regards the conditions that must be met before the United Kingdom enters the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my speech to the House on 2 November.

Mr. Howells: Does the Chancellor agree that British farmers have no opportunity to compete on equal terms with their European counterparts because we are not full members of the European monetary system? What plans has he to help small farmers to overcome the problem of the high interest rates that now prevail?

Mr. Major: Small farmers face the same difficulties with interest rates as other business men. I entirely understand the hon. Gentleman's point, but I am bound to say that I think that the principal competitive problem that affects small farmers is caused by the unfair subsidies often received by their counterparts elsewhere in the Community.

Miss Emma Nicholson: May I support the plea by the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke North (Mr. Howells) for help for farmers, and draw my right hon. Friend's attention particularly to the extensification part of the common agricultural policy? The CAP is badly in need of modernisation, but surely extensification is the true new social way of helping farmers to retain their rural economy.

Mr. Major: Whether or not that is correct—and I suspect that it is—it is probably only tangential to the exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Chris Smith: The Chancellor said on 2 November, and has said subsequently, that inflation must come down before Britain can join the exchange rate mechanism. He has also forecast that, at the end of next year, inflation will be running at 5¾ per cent. Will that figure be low enough, or is the inflation criterion simply another way of saying that he has no intention of taking Britain into the ERM in the foreseeable future?

Mr. Major: As the hon. Gentleman's hon. Friend the Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) pointed out in a recent debate, I indicated my support for the exchange rate mechanism as long ago as 1981. The Government have set out four conditions that must be met before we can join the ERM; they were made entirely clear at Madrid, and they remain the same today.

Mr. Butterfill: Does my right hon. Friend agree that we cannot make progress on an exchange rate mechanism while restrictions on capital movement between member countries remain? Those restrictions include not only exchange rate control, but restrictions on the activities of banks in various countries in raising foreign currency debt.

Mr. Major: My hon. Friend is entirely right. He has touched on the other conditions that need to be met. We certainly need to see capital liberalisation, freedom of financial services and, of course, strengthened competition quality. Those matters are well understood by our European partners, who must deliver accordingly before we are in a position to join the ERM.

Monetary Policy

11. Mr. John Townend: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account he takes of each of the monetary indicators in setting monetary policy.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend sets a target for M0 and also monitors broad money and other financial indicators, in particular the exchange rate.

Mr. Townend: Does my hon. Friend agree that over the past 18 months the increase in the rate of inflation was due principally to the increase in broad money? Can he assure the House that in future the Chancellor will take more notice of broad money than his predecessor did?

Mr. Lilley: It would probably be more accurate to retrace the resurgence of inflation to the relaxation of monetary policy at the time of the collapse of world stock markets in October 1987. It is significant that we rarely relax monetary policy in response to non-inflationary matters to keep growth going. That is always the intention of the Opposition. They would have continuously rising inflation but we are determined to get inflation down.

Mr. Rowlands: If the Minister monitors exchange rates, will he tell us the exchange rate between the pound and the deutschmark on the day of the speech by the right hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Lawson) at the Conservative party conference when he said that his was not a party for devaluation, and what the figure is now?

Mr. Lilley: The current exchange rate is much where it was at the beginning of 1987, let alone then. The policy consistently advocated by the Opposition would destroy the value of the pound internally and externally.

Output

12. Mr. Marland: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth in output over the last five years for which figures are available in the United Kingdom and other EEC countries.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The United Kingdom, together with Spain, has grown faster than any other EC country except Luxembourg.

Mr. Marland: While thanking my right hon. Friend for that encouraging answer, does he remember the late 1970s when Britain was branded the poor man of Europe? Does his answer not underline the vigour of our economy and give the lie to so much that Opposition Members say about the economy?

Mr. Lamont: My hon. Friend draws attention to the fact that during the 1960s and 1970s Britain was bottom of the growth league, but during the 1980s our growth rate has out-performed that of all other EC countries. That is certainly something of which we should be proud.

Mr. Heffer: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that the last Labour Government inherited the economy from the Conservative Government and that private industry was collapsing on a massive scale? The Tory Government had to take over Rolls-Royce and we had to take over British Leyland and British Steel because they had collapsed. In addition, we had to take over the shipbuilding industry because it had collapsed. There would have been no industry had it not been for the Labour Government—[Interruption.] Oh yes. We have now had a Tory Government for 10 years and industry is collapsing on a bigger scale than ever before.

Mr. Lamont: The trouble with the hon. Gentleman's argument is that the failures of the Labour party in Government did not apply just to the last Labour Government but to the Labour Government before that, the one before that and to all Labour Governments.

Interest Rates

13. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will estimate the annual cost to British industry of (a) a rise of 1 per cent. in interest rates and (b) a rise of 1 per cent. in payroll costs.

Mr. Lilley: A 1 per cent. rise in payroll costs would cost companies £1½ billion, roughly three times as much as a 1 per cent. rise in interest rates.

Mr. Jones: I thank my hon. Friend for that interesting answer. Since rising interest rates are a phenomenon of most industrialised countries, why does the CBI bleat about them? Higher wage rates are not a phenomenon of many industrialised countries, but the CBI leaves them entirely alone instead of concentrating on trying to keep wage costs under control.

Mr. Lilley: My hon. Friend makes a very important point. Interest rates in Britain have gone up by the same amount as interest rates in Germany over the past 12 months. Obviously, it is in the power of industrialists to keep their total costs down if they keep firm control of their payroll costs.

Social Charter

15. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his assessment of the effect on the United Kingdom's long-term economic performance of the proposed European social charter.

20. Mr. Gale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his assessment of the effect on the United Kingdom's long-term economic performance of the proposed European social charter.

Mr. Major: Implementation of the proposed social charter in its present form would have a harmful effect on economic performance. It would raise costs and cost jobs.

Mr. Stewart: Does my right hon. Friend agree that it is ludicrous for the EEC to try to introduce laws to govern a wide variety of our small business sector?

Mr. Major: I entirely agree with my hon. Friend. I suggest to our colleagues in Europe that the principle of subsidiarity would serve us much better than the proposed social charter.

Mr. Gale: Further to that answer, what would be the effect on the United Kingdom's economy of a 35-hour working week?

Mr. Major: I scarcely think that an immediate 35-hour week would be helpful for the economy.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Q1. Mr. Orme: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 30 November.

The Prime Minister (Mrs. Margaret Thatcher): This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening, I shall be attending a dinner given by the 4th Battalion of the Royal Green Jackets to mark the retirement of my right hon. Friend the noble Lord Holderness as its honorary colonel.

Mr. Orme: Does the Prime Minister agree that in the weeks coming up to Christmas the ambulance service will be under increasing pressure, and that the walkout in London yesterday only underlines the seriousness of the situation? Will she now instruct the Secretary of State for Health to refer the matter immediately to arbitration?

The Prime Minister: I understand that the accident and emergency service is being provided by National Health Service ambulance crews over most of the country. They are answering 999 calls, and dealing with urgent admissions, transfers of very sick patients and journeys for patients who need various treatments. In London, Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire, Derbyshire and Lincolnshire, the emergency service is being supplemented by vehicles and crews provided by the armed forces and the police. With regard to the last part of the right hon. Gentleman's question, he is aware that these negotiations are conducted in the Whitley councils, which make no provision for arbitration.

Q2. Sir William Clark: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 30 November.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I just gave.

Sir William Clark: Has my right hon. Friend noted that Toyota, Nissan and the German firm Reinshagen have announced substantial investment in the British car industry? Is this not proof positive that the overseas investor has complete confidence in the British economy? It is a far cry from the days when the British taxpayer had to pay £3,500 million of taxpayers' money to British Leyland.

The Prime Minister: I agree with my hon. Friend. We welcome this manifestation of confidence in British industry today. It will enable us to bring the car industry back to its former glories. When all that investment is on stream, we shall be producing some 2 million cars a year in this country, whereas we were producing only 1·1 million in 1979. It is also a tribute to the change in trade union law in this country, which eliminated some of the previous difficulties, restrictive practices and continuous strikes that nearly destroyed the car industry 10 years ago.

Mr. Kinnock: When the Prime Minister responded to my question on Tuesday, did she know that the sale of Rover had been assisted by £38 million worth of under-the-counter handouts, and that on the best estimates available Rover was looking forward to three years of significant profitability?

The Prime Minister: I answered the right hon. Gentleman as I shall answer him again today—the Government struck the best deal that they believed they could in all the circumstances of the sale. The circumstances of the sale were that the extra cash injection at the time of final privatisation brought the total funds injected by the taxpayer into British Leyland up to £3,457 million since 1975. I understand that the forward forecasts of profits were before interest had been paid on capital. That is hardly a profit.

Mr. Kinnock: I rather felt on Tuesday that we had not had the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth and I feel that now. Is it not clear from what we now know in detail, that the Government were less than honest with the European Community, deceived Parliament, and sold the British taxpayers short, and that the whole affair has been a rip-off? What will the Prime Minister do to get the British people's money back? Is not this the time for her to give the public apology for which I asked on Tuesday?

The Prime Minister: No, Mr. Speaker. If there was a rip-off, it was the almost £3 billion which the British taxpayer had paid since 1975 to keep British Leyland-Rover going. The amount was growing because of the Varley-Marshall assurances and already in March 1988 it had reached £1·6 billion. Perhaps the right hon. Gentleman remembers that when we attempted to sell British Leyland-Rover in 1986, our efforts were frustrated by the hysteria with which the sale was greeted by the Opposition. The right hon. and learned Member for

Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) called our efforts "anti-British in effect" and did infinite damage to the prospect of a successful sale to other buyers who may have been interested. He went on:

"Can we now be assured . . . that there will be no question, during the lifetime of the Government, of Land Rover or any other part of the British Leyland Group passing out of British control?"—[Official Report, 25 March 1986; Vol. 94, c. 787-88.]

That prevented many other prospective buyers from coming forward, so much damage had been done by the Opposition's strictures on overseas car companies.

Mr. Kinnock: Truly me thinks that the Lady doth protest too much. Did she or did she not know on Tuesday that the sale had been sweetened with £38 million worth of handouts from taxpayers' money?

Hon. Members: Answer.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will make a full statement later this afternoon. The Leader of the Opposition should be perturbed that the car industry could not succeed without enormous cash injections from the British taxpayer—[HON. MEMBERS: "Answer the question."] That company constantly put its hands into the taxpayers' pocket—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Prime Minister must be given the chance to reply.

The Prime Minister: We had the irony that among companies producing cars in Britain some, such as Ford, paid money into the British Treasury while others, such as British Leyland, took rather larger sums out of it. [Interruption.]

Mr. Faulds: Come clean.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Let us calm down.

Mr. Tebbit: Will my right hon. Friend reconsider her reply to the Leader of the Opposition? Does she agree that there has been a rip-off—the rip-off of the billions of pounds that were swallowed up by Leyland over many years?

Mr. Skinner: The right hon. Gentleman should declare his interest.

Mr. Tebbit: I have no interest to declare. Does my right hon. Friend further agree that the Leader of the Opposition would benefit from some instruction about the cost of a contingent liability of £1·6 billion and the value to the taxpayer of getting rid of it?

The Prime Minister: I entirely agree with my right hon. Friend. Had British Leyland-Rover not been privatised, it would have continued putting its hands in the pockets of the British taxpayer indefinitely. Then we should soon have been in difficulties with the Commission because of heavy subsidies to British industry.

Mr. Mallon: I am sure that the Prime Minister and the House will join me in condemning the horrific, sectarian murders last night in Northern Ireland. In view of the continuing loss of life, hope and quality of life in the north of Ireland, will the Prime Minister please take the Northern Ireland problem off the backburner and, along with the Northern Irish political parties and the Irish Government, as specified in the Anglo-Irish Agreement and again in the Queen's Speech, set about taking the problem by the scruff of the neck and solve it once and for all?

The Prime Minister: First, I gladly join the hon. Gentleman in expressing our horror at the murders and our sympathy for the victims' relatives. Although the hon. Gentleman cannot respond immediately, I ask him to bear in mind that it is easier to say what he said towards the end of his question than to put it into practice. I pay tribute to the work of the security forces, whether the police or armed forces. We shall never be able to solve the problem entirely until we have the full co-operation of all people in providing evidence to bring the criminals to justice from whatever side of the sectarian boundary they come.

Q3. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 30 November.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Shepherd: Does my right hon. Friend agree that those who favour the European social charter must also favour her Government's abolition of the closed shop? Is there not a lesson in that for the Leader of the Opposition?

The Prime Minister: Yes, Mr. Speaker. One of the good aspects of the social charter—we disagree with many; most in fact—is that it would require the abolition of the closed shop—a measure which this Government will introduce in the trade union Bill which will be presented to the House later. If the Opposition are in favour of the social charter, I hope that they will support fully our trade union measures.

Mr. James Lamond: Is the Prime Minister aware that in answering my right hon. Friend the Member for Salford, East (Mr. Orme) everything she said showed how conscientious ambulance men and women were in answering emergency calls? Is she aware that at the end of her answer when she sought refuge by saying that the matter was for the Whitley councils, she showed that she was not prepared to treat the dispute as the emergency that it is? Is it not high time that she stepped in to ensure that the dispute goes to arbitration?

The Prime Minister: I described where the ambulance service was honouring its undertaking as an accident and emergency service and carrying out its duties in that respect. As the hon. Gentleman knows, nine tenths of the work of the ambulance service in the miles of calls it answers do not involve accidents or emergencies, but bringing in-patients and out-patients to hospitals. Naturally, we wish that service to be restored. The hon. Gentleman already knows that a fresh offer which will last for 18 months has been made to ambulance crews. We hope that they will accept it.

Q4. Mr. Bendall: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 30 November.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Bendall: In view of the historic events taking place in eastern Europe, will my right hon. Friend confirm that Britain will maintain her military commitment to NATO and encourage other member states to do likewise?

The Prime Minister: Yes. I think that the members of the European Community, and I am sure the Heads of Government when they meet at NATO next Monday, will reaffirm that it is vital to continue NATO which has given us peace for the past 40 years. Both the concept and practice are good. It is vital to retain NATO and the Warsaw pact which provide the machinery through which we are negotiating conventional and chemical arms reductions. We are fortunate to enjoy peace. We must always have the means to keep the peace and NATO is that means.

Mr. Ashdown: How is it that the Prime Minister trusts the Vietnamese Government so little that she is prepared to risk aiding the Khmer Rouge in order to be able to kick that Government out of Cambodia, and yet trusts them so much that she is prepared to use force to repatriate the Vietnamese boat people into their hands? When will the Government get rid of one or other, but preferably both, of those shameful policies?

The Prime Minister: As the right hon. Gentleman is aware, we do not support the Khmer Rouge. We have supported the non-Communist resistance. If the right hon. Gentleman is referring to the representation in the United Nations, he will know that that is determined by the United Nations credentials committee which presently supports the Democratic Alliance of which Khmer Rouge is a part. Is he suggesting as some people are that one should support the Hun Sen Government? Hun Sen and some of his people were members of Khmer Rouge and as a puppet Government were previously kept in power by the Vietnamese.

The right hon. Gentleman asked about the Vietnamese boat people. Those who are genuine refugees—and that again is determined by the United Nations—will not be returned. Those who are illegal immigrants will be returned and it is customary under international law for countries to receive their own immigrants back into their country. If the right hon. Gentleman is suggesting that we should ever get to a position where we cannot return illegal immigrants to their country of origin, he is proposing international chaos.

Dame Janet Fookes: Will my right hon. Friend take a little time today to reflect on two outstanding achievements? First, will she reflect on the 70th anniversary of Lady Astor the Member for Plymouth, Sutton, taking her seat in this place as the first woman Member of Parliament? Secondly, will she reflect on her own outstanding achievement as Britain's first woman Prime Minister?

The Prime Minister: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. We would all do well to remember that this is the 70th anniversary of the day on which Lady Astor took her seat in the House. It was a momentous day for women and a great tribute to all the suffragettes who had worked so hard to see that day. We must also be grateful to Lady Astor for the magnificent way in which she discharged her duties so that many of us could follow after. I thank my hon. Friend for mentioning my "first" and hope that it will continue.

Business of the House

3.31 pm

Dr. John Cunningham (Copeland): Will the Leader of the House tell us the business for next week?

The Lord President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Sir Geoffrey Howe): The business for next week will be as follows:

MONDAY 4 DECEMBER—Second Reading of the Coal Industry Bill.

Motion on the Appropriation (No. 4) Northern Ireland Order.

TUESDAY 5 DECEMBER—Second Reading of the Education (Student Loans) Bill.

Motion on the Teachers Pay and Conditions (Continuation) Order.

WEDNESDAY 6 DECEMBER—Second Reading of the Property Services Agency and Crown Suppliers Bill.

Motion on the Local Government Act (Competition in Sports and Leisure Facilities) Order.

THURSDAY 7 DECEMBER—Second Reading of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill (First Day).

FRIDAY 8 DECEMBER—There will be a debate on action to tackle the misuse of drugs on a motion for the Adjournment of the House.

MONDAY 11 DECEMBER—Second Reading of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill (Second Day).

Debate on a motion to take note of EC documents relating to the 1990 EC budget. Details will be given in the Official Report.

[Monday 11 December

Relevant European Community Documents

(a) COM(89)175	Preliminary Draft Budget of the European Communities for 1990.
(b) 8271/89	The Draft Budget of the European Communities for 1990.
(c) 9704/89	The European Parliament's proposed amendments and modifications to the Draft Budget.
(d) 8848/89	Letter of Amendment No. 1 to the Preliminary Draft Budget of the European Communities for 1990.
(e) 9627/89	Letter of Amendment No. 2 to the Preliminary Draft Budget of the European Communities for 1990.

Relevant Reports of European Legislation Committee

(a) HC 15-xxxii (1988-89), para 3.
(b) HC 15-xxxvii (1988-89), para 3.
(c) No Report yet made.
(d) HC 15-xxxvi (1988-89), para 8.
(e) HC 15-xxxviii (1988-89), para 8].

Dr. Cunningham: I thank the Leader of the House for responding so positively to our request for a two-day debate on the National Health Service and Community Care Bill. In view of the Government's difficulties and their well-known desire to have a break, has he been able to reach any decision about the dates of the Christmas recess? I suspect that it would also be convenient for the House if he could tell us something about the likely dates of the Easter recess as well.

Has the Leader of the House seen the graphic reports by Michael Buerk, the BBC correspondent, about the impending catastrophic famine in Ethiopia, a matter which my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) has sought to raise in the House several times this week? Given the huge amount of public interest in Britain in that impending tragedy, will the right hon. and learned Gentleman provide time next week for either a statement by the Minister or, better still, a debate on that important issue and the British Government's response to it?

We look forward to receiving an apology from the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in a few moments, to the House and to the British taxpayer, for the Government's appalling squandering of more than £200 million of taxpayers' money over the Rover fiasco. A brief statement is no substitute for proper public debate about the fiasco—in fact, a scandal. Will the Leader of the House provide time next week for such a debate?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I shall deal first with the last point raised by the hon. Gentleman. When I became Chancellor of the Exchequer the most formidable burden that passed across my desk was the unending series of bills—billions of pounds, not hundreds of millions—for losses in nationalised industries. That included the continued outpouring of billions of pounds to the British motor industry. One of the Government's most formidable achievements has been to staunch that flow by the privatisation of about half of the nationalised industries. We have successfully achieved that result with the Rover Group and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will defend that later this afternoon. The hon. Gentleman talked about billions of pounds being lost to the British taxpayer, but he should remember that it was Opposition Members who squandered those resources without any limit. We have brought an end to that.

I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for his comments on the arrangements for the two-day debate on the National Health Service and Community Care Bill. That was also arranged in response to a question from the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on behalf of Plaid Cymru and the Scottish National party.

I hope that it will be possible to make an announcement about the proposed date for the Christmas recess in my business statement next week. In the light of what the hon. Gentleman said about the subsequent recess, and the fact that Easter is likely to be later than usual next year, I shall see whether it is possible to take account of that in the arrangements I make and I will tell the House as soon as possible.

As I have said before during business questions, the whole House is very concerned about the continuing threat of famine in Ethiopia. We have provided some 17,000 tonnes of food aid this year and, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development announced a further £2 million of emergency aid on 27 November. The only long-term answer is to end the civil war as quickly as possible. Meanwhile, we have been trying to persuade all the parties to the conflict to permit free access across the lines for relief supplies.

I shall bear in mind the wish expressed by right hon. and hon. Members on both sides of the House to be kept informed. The hon. Gentleman is right to remind us of the gravity of the situation there. I assure the House that the Government are mindful of it, and are responding on a continuous basis.

[Sir Geoffrey Howe]

Mr. Michael Jopling (Westmorland and Lonsdale): Is my right hon. and learned Friend aware that the way that the rules of the House which allow us to discharge our duties with regard to private Bills is conducted has become a total disgrace? Will he make a statement next week to demonstrate that the Government will use the first possible opportunity to change the rules so that those who wish to introduce such Bills will have them dealt with expeditiously?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: As my right hon. Friend knows, in the first instance the supervision of private Bills is a matter for the Chairman of Ways and Means. He will have seen that a revival motion which includes all the Bills that the Chairman of Ways and Means had set down for debate on Thursday 9 November, is on the Order Paper. We hope that that will receive a favourable response in the House. My right hon. Friend is right to draw attention to the need to ensure that the private Bill procedure is not used to obstruct the legitimate aspirations of those people who have taken a great deal of trouble to bring a Bill before the House. I am considering that, and I recognise the importance of the issue.

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): I note that there is no mention of the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 in the business for next week. Can the Lord President give us an assurance that, when he brings it before the House, the time for it will be extensive to allow us to debate it adequately as it may be the last one to appear before the House?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have already received notice of the importance attached to providing sufficient time for discussion of that subject. We shall see whether we can respond to that request.

Mr. Robin Maxwell-Hyslop (Tiverton): Will my right hon. and learned Friend, recognising that, with our adverse balance of payments, the future of the services provided by the Export Credits Guarantee Department is of crucial rather than marginal importance, ensure that Her Majesty's Government issue a Green Paper which is debated in this House before they arrive at any decisions about the future of these functions and how they are carried out? Is he aware that many right hon. and hon. Members on both sides of the House are united in their appreciation that this subject must be debated properly in the House before a decision is taken?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: As someone who was at one time responsible as a Minister for those important provisions, I understand the significance of my hon. Friend's point. I shall bring it to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, but I cannot give any undertaking about how the matter may be brought forward.

Mr. Jack Ashley (Stoke-on-Trent, South): With regard to haemophiliacs infected by AIDS, does not the Leader of the House find it remarkable that, after many parliamentary questions, early-day motions and deputations to Ministers, including the Prime Minister, most haemophiliacs and most hon. Members are distressed at the inadequacy of the money that is offered? May we please debate this matter urgently next week?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The right hon. Gentleman returns to a matter to which he has drawn my attention previously. He knows that discussions are taking place with the Macfarlane Trust and the Charity Commissioners to determine the best way in which to meet the Government's objective of making lump sum payments of £20,000 and continuing help on a more generous scale to those in special need. I have nothing to add to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 23 November.

Mr. Michael Marshall (Arundel): Will my right hon. and learned Friend reflect on the difficulties experienced by hon. Members when foreign affairs debates are held on successive Fridays? He will appreciate the problem of constituency work clashes. Can he assure the House that he will use his heart and head in an effort to provide a two-day debate on foreign affairs before the House rises —at least before Christmas?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I do not think that, even if I used my heart and head to their utmost, I could achieve that objective. Neither of those organs needs to be reminded of the legitimate importance of foreign affairs. That is why we have an additional debate tomorrow. I also understand the misgivings that arise from successive Fridays being devoted to the subject. I hope, however, that my hon. Friend will be grateful for the modest advance that we have been able to make.

Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): On a day when hon. Members will have noticed the flag of St. Andrew flying over Westminster abbey, may I ask the Leader of the House to direct his mind to Scottish affairs? does he think it satisfactory that, with our completely different Health Service structure, provisions to reform the Health Service in Scotland should be tacked on to the end of an English Bill?

With regard to the right hon. and learned Gentleman's announcement on Tuesday night about the future, or lack of one, of the Scottish Affairs Select Committee, has he looked recently at Standing Order No. 130, which provides:

"Select committees shall be appointed to examine expenditure, administration and policy of the principal government departments", including the Scottish Office? As a distinguished lawyer, the Leader of the House must know that the word "shall" is mandatory. What right does he have to abrogate the Standing Orders of the House? Does he intend to introduce an amendment to them?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The hon. Gentleman will recall that the latter matter was discussed fully in the debate on my birthday last year—20 December. I cannot add anything to the analysis then undertaken.

The hon. Gentleman will recognise that there is at least a separate part of the Bill on the Health Service which deals with matters in this country, whereas those for the Principality of Wales are subsumed in the provisions for England. So he has some blessing.

Sir John Stokes (Halesowen and Stourbridge): Does my right hon. and learned Friend agree that, since the televising of our proceedings, our conduct has become worse and the noise much greater, especially in the past few days and when the cameras are still on? When the cameras are off, quiet descends almost at once. Are we to have this for a further five and a half months, or is there some means by which we can modify our original decision to have this experiment?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I know that my hon. Friend has been a consistent advocate of that point. Another equally consistent advocate is the hon. Gentleman who is sitting bearded on the Opposition Benches.

Mr. Andrew Faulds (Warley, East): I am most obliged.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: He is not notorious for the quietude with which he conducts himself, so noise emanates from some quarters whether we are on television or not. It must be said that one of the more striking features is that much of the noise that blocks out discussion in this Chamber does not come through on the television screen outside. It may behove hon. Members who are disposed to be noisy to recollect that they are doing themselves no good by straining their lungs to such an extent.

Mr. Faulds: I am most grateful for that commercial from the Leader of the House. Is the right hon. and learned Gentleman aware that in Tuesday's debate on the economy the Chancellor of the Exchequer spoke from 4.13 pm to 4.59 pm? Does he realise that that operation was carried out to prevent any other hon. Member getting in on television transmission time, which terminated at 5 pm on that day? Is he aware that that can only give substance to the suspicion that the Government have established a little, secret body to try to find ways of abusing television transmission time in the House? Will he accept from his nearest and dearest that, were he Prime Minister, we should not have to suffer such deceit and deviousness, and there would be a great deal——

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. Gentleman, who is an experienced and responsible hon. Member, please withdraw that remark about the Prime Minister?

Mr. Faulds: Of course, Sir. To oblige you, Mr. Speaker, and because I should not have said them, I withdraw those two words. However, I maintain the principle that the Leader of the House would have been an admirable Prime Minister.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I am not sure that I am fully qualified to compete with the hon. Gentleman in offering commercials as it is a matter to which he has devoted his professional life. It is not right to conclude that the speech of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer was directed to the objectives that the hon. Gentleman has in mind. The House will recollect that my right hon. Friend was interrupted frequently and that he gave way frequently, thereby adding to the already interesting quality of his speech. One should not look for conspiracies among Conservative Members, but rather among Opposition Members.

Sir Fergus Montgomery (Altrincham and Sale): Does my right hon. and learned Friend recollect that when I asked last Thursday whether we could have a debate on the plight of war widows he told me to await the Adjournment debate later that evening? As nothing of importance came out of that debate, and in view of the strong feeling among hon. Members of all parties about the plight of war widows, will he tell us when we shall have a debate on that important issue?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I am afraid that I cannot add further to what my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces said in response to the debate last week.

Mr. Donald Coleman (Neath): The right hon. and learned Gentleman will be aware that the exciting events in eastern Europe are of great interest to hon. Members and to the public outside. In his previous incarnation, he will also have been aware of the considerable efforts made by the Council of Europe to bring about those changes. Does he think that it is now possible for the Government to consider giving a little more attention to the matters of the Council of Europe and to initiate a debate in the House on the work of the Council of Europe at regular intervals?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The range of matters relevant to eastern Europe can be discussed during tomorrow's debate. I do not think that many hon. Members would challenge the importance in that context of the work being done by the Council of Europe and others. The hon. Gentleman may remember that it has been one of the central places in which the agreement on transfrontier broadcasting has been hammered out to the benefit of countries beyond the Community and throughout those represented at the Council of Europe.

Mr. William Hague (Richmond, Yorks): Will my right hon. and learned Friend find time for a debate on the future of rural England? Does he agree that the problems of particular parts of the country and of urban areas are often discussed but that the problems facing rural areas such as housing and health, shifting populations and farm incomes are interconnected and merit being debated as a whole?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My hon. Friend represents a substantial part of rural England and he is entitled to make that point. I shall try to bear it in mind.

Mr. Andrew Welsh (Angus, East): Surely the price of having no Select Committee on Scottish Affairs is that Parliament does not have an adequate means of scrutiny over the Scottish Office or of dealing with important Scottish matters, such as the National Health Service, the steel and fishing industries, nuclear dumping and other issues which would be sent to that Committee. Since the official Opposition have an automatic right to call a debate on that issue but are apparently scared to do so, would the Leader of the House consider providing Government time for a debate? Has the right hon. and learned Gentleman referred to columns 715-16 of Hansard for yesterday and seen Mr. Speaker's ruling that he is bound by the Standing Orders as they are and that he can

"rule only on the basis of the guidelines that have been laid down"?—[Official Report, 29 November 1989; Vol. 162, c715.]

The Leader of the House has duties with regard to that. Will he now implement Standing Order No. 130 which makes it mandatory to create a Select Committee on Scottish Affairs? Will he also obey the ruling by Mr. Speaker and create that Select Committee now?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have immense respect for any ruling by Mr. Speaker. The one referred to by the hon.

[Sir Geoffrey Howe]

Member was given in a different context. That point was discussed in the debate on 20 December last year. I cannot add anything to the conclusions then arrived at.

Mr. Kenneth Warren (Hastings and Rye): Further to the question by my hon. Friend the Member for Tiverton (Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop), may I press my right hon. and learned Friend harder on the subject of the ECGD policy which the Government are to announce? Bearing in mind the correspondence that I have had with him and with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, will he give an assurance that, at the minimum, there will be a statement on the Floor of the House?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The impression that I have already formed of the importance of that subject is fortified by my hon. Friend's support. I shall represent the importance of the point all the more vigorously to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Mr. Robert Parry (Liverpool, Riverside): The Leader of the House will have seen early-day motion 81 concerning the proposed closure of the British American Tobacco company factory in Liverpool with the loss of 500 jobs. It has been signed by 134 hon. Members.

[That this House deplores the announcement by the British American Tobacco Company of the closure of their Liverpool factory, four weeks before Christmas, with the loss of 500 jobs; notes that British American Tobacco company's latest annual report shows a projected profit of £2 billion; and calls upon Her Majesty's Government to have urgent talks with the British American Tobacco Company in an attempt to put together a regional investment package which will avert the closure in the Liverpool, Riverside constituency which has the highest unemployment level in England, Scotland and Wales.]

Will he ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to meet me and other Labour Members next week to discuss the matter, bearing in mind the horrendous economic effect that it will have on the community?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I am familiar with the terms of the early-day motion. As the hon. Gentleman points out, it is certainly a matter for regret, but, at heart, it is a commercial decision by the company. I understand that officials from the Department of Trade and Industry have been in touch with the company about its plans for the future of the factory. The company intends to offer the factory free of charge to the Merseyside development corporation, which will arrange for counselling and other assistance to minimise the effects of the closure. I shall bring the hon. Gentleman's intervention to the attention of my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Steve Norris (Epping Forest): As my right hon. and learned Friend will be aware, there have been disturbing reports recently about the failure of the licensing system established under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, particularly with regard to the Huntingdon research centre. In view of the considerable disquiet expressed on both sides of the House when the Bill was debated about the efficacy of the licensing system, will my right hon. and learned Friend find time in the near future for a debate on that urgent subject which concerns many people on an all-party basis?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I understand the importance that many hon. Members attach to this subject. I have to confess that my imputed omniscience does not extend to a detailed knowledge of the point that my hon. Friend raised, but I shall see that it is taken into account by my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Michael J. Martin (Glasgow, Springburn): May we have a debate next week on the poll tax in Scotland, particularly as it affects local authorities? The Leader of the House may not know that Strathclyde has been forced to send out 300,000 warnings to people in the region saying that if the poll tax is not paid sheriffs' officers could be calling at their doors. Surely we do not want that to happen at Christmas or thereafter.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Certainly local authorities in Scotland are proposing to make use of the available powers to collect arrears from those who persist in not paying the community charge, but the great majority of people are paying it, even in the areas that the hon. Gentleman talks about. The most effective answer would be for those affected to respond by paying promptly the tax for which they are liable. It is important not to get reports of supposedly high non-payment levels out of perspective.

Mr. Michael Latham (Rutland and Melton): Regarding early-day motion 2 on war widows' pensions—

[That this House recognises the unfair treatment of the war widows of the servicemen who retired before 31st March 1973 and those widows who married their husbands after their retirement from the armed forces both prior and subsequent to the 6th April 1978; and urges Her Majesty's Government to remove these artificial time bars in order that all war widows and widows of servicemen may receive the current rate for those pensions irrespective of the date of their husbands' retirement or the date of their marriage.]

—will my right hon. and learned Friend reflect on the old saying that "If you are in a hole, you should stop digging"? Since the Government's position on this matter cannot be defended, will my right hon. and learned Friend arrange to change it next week?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My hon. Friend has repeated a well-known proposition that formed the text of a newspaper leading article earlier this week. I shall certainly —because I cannot do otherwise—remind my right hon. Friend of the importance that my hon. Friend and others attach to this subject. I cannot say more than that.

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton): Will the right hon. and learned Gentleman reconsider the reply that he gave my hon. Friend the Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham)? Is it not time we had a debate on British manufacturing industry? The right hon. and learned Gentleman has argued that the last Labour Government were responsible for job losses. He must have a short memory. Is he not aware that had the Labour Government at the time not taken over those industries there would have been no industries left in this country, because private enterprise was collapsing? Had that Government not underpinned those industries there would have been massive redundancies on a scale never seen before. Now that the Government——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman's question must be about the business for next week.

Mr. Heffer: I am aware of that, Mr. Speaker, but the right hon. and learned Gentleman argued a case. I am just making the point——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman knows that he cannot make points of that kind at business questions. He must ask a question about next week's business.

Mr. Heffer: I am getting to the point: if the right hon. and learned Gentleman makes out that case, we had better have a full-scale debate in the House so that we can discuss the matter seriously and clearly state that the Labour Government were responsible for saving industries but that this Government have been responsible for destroying them.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The hon. Gentleman may have forgotten that the topic to which he refers was extensively debated on at least two days during the debate on the Loyal Address. It has been debated in the House with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister today.

There is a powerful case to be made to the contrary of that put by the hon. Gentleman, and the Government are only too willing to make it. It is the recovery of private enterprise, not dependent on state aid on the scale of that offered by the last Labour Government, that has been at the heart of the recovery taking place in our manufacturing capability.

Mr. Patrick Cormack (Staffordshire, South): Will my right hon. and learned Friend arrange to have a debate soon, preferably next week, on the monstrous proposals by London Underground to create one of the largest underground stations in the world within yards of this Palace and to turn the whole of Parliament square into a building site for about four years? That would be wholly unacceptable to most hon. Members. May we have an early statement to the effect that the Government will not back the Bill in question?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My hon. Friend is adopting an unusually straightforward and over-simplified approach to the issue. Important works related to the structure of the Palace of Westminister are taking place which, as he knows, have to be carried forward. There are also important projects for the improvement of transport in the city of London which must be seriously considered. We should not conclude too dismissively that it is impossible to reconcile those objectives in a sensible fashion. My hon. Friend is right to underline the hazards which must be addressed, but I hope that he will not conclude that nothing can be done to reconcile the two objectives.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The reason for business questions is to ask about the business next week, not to make general points. There are two statements and an important debate to follow business questions today.

Mr. Ron Brown (Edinburgh, Leith): Since the Government claim to support human rights, does the Leader of the House agree that there should be a special debate next week about the case involving Tarek Sharief, a Libyan who is being held hostage in this country due to the misconduct of the Sussex police—a force which I do not particularly like, but that is another matter? Will that case be properly investigated in a debate and will the Leader of the House reply? The Libyan leadership have made it clear that they are willing to intervene to help Terry Waite, John McCarthy, Roger Cooper and others, provided the Government allow Tarek Sharief to go free and obtain his passport as he has every right to do.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I cannot comment on the particular case raised by the hon. Gentleman or his relative degrees of affection for different police forces. I leave that to him. I shall bring the case to the attention of my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

Mr. Bob Dunn (Dartford): Is my right hon. and learned Friend aware that many Conservative Members are concerned about the events taking place in Romania? Will he arrange for an early debate on eastern Europe during prime time so that we can put forward our views?

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): There is one tomorrow.

Mr. Dunn: I want one other than tomorrow's debate in prime time.

Mr. Banks: Why?

Mr. Dunn: Because I said so. Will the Leader of the House also consider making a strong recommendation to the Government that every honour and award given to the Romanian Government and the Ceausescu family—which is the same thing—should be immediately cancelled and withdrawn?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My hon. Friend's latter point has been made before in the House and no doubt he can develop it during tomorrow's debate. To have a full day available for debate on eastern Europe tomorrow seems close to making time available in prime time.

Mr. Robert N. Wareing (Liverpool, West Derby): Will the Secretary of State for Health make a statement to the House about why speech therapists have to subsist on such appallingly low pay? This group of professional people, who are highly qualified after four years studying for a degree at university, are expected to accept a pay rise well below the inflation rate caused by the Government's policies. May we have a statement so that we can question the Secretary of State on why justice cannot be obtained for these people?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I understand the hon. Gentleman drawing attention to the importance of work done by speech therapists, but he should recollect that in the past 10 years, since 1979, speech therapists have benefited from a real terms pay increase of 19 per cent. and the number of speech therapists, including men, employed in the National Health Service has increased steadily and continues to do so. He knows as well as I that pay negotiations for 1989-90 are continuing.

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow, East): Since the Select Committee's report on EC scrutiny procedures for the House and its recommendations have been published, will the Leader of the House reassure us that the usual fate of such reports will not befall this one, bearing in mind that even those Members who are enthusiastic about our membership of the Community, such as me, want to see effective scrutiny in this House? In view of the urgency of this matter and the need for proper EC scrutiny and surveillance, will my right hon. and learned Friend assure the House that the report's recommendations will not be put off for weeks, months or even years?

[Mr. Hugh Dykes]

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I issued a statement today explaining that I cannot respond immediately to the individual recommendations of the report. I am pleased that the report has taken account of a number of recommendations put forward by my predecessor. I shall discuss the report with my colleagues because it involves a matter which touches on many Departments. I shall come to the House with the Government's response to the Committee's recommendations so that we can proceed with the implementation of such changes as the House regards as appropriate.

Mr. Tom Cox (Tooting): Now that the proceedings of the House are televised, when will consideration be given to those of our constituents who, sadly, are confined to wheelchairs as a result of various disabilities so that they can benefit from having access to the House? Is the Leader of the House aware that if meetings are held in the Committee Rooms in Westminster hall, it is virtually impossible for such people to attend them? When are we to see the Government giving priority to disabled people who want to come to this place to see their Members of Parliament or to attend Committee meetings, which they are entitled to attend?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I understand the importance of the issue that has been raised by the hon. Gentleman. I shall apply myself to consideration of it as I should.

Mr. James Cran (Beverley): Will my right hon. and learned Friend consider seriously the requests which have been made already by my hon. Friends the Members for Tiverton (Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop) and for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Warren) for an early statement and a debate on the future of the ECGD, especially against the background of the rumours that now abound that short-term cover and, perhaps more importantly, long-term project cover, will be withdrawn, with the adverse effect that this would have on the northern economy?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My hon. Friend is the third of my hon. Friends to draw attention to this important matter. There is a matching number of Ministers from the responsible Department sitting on the Government Front Bench. I have no doubt that they have heard what my hon. Friend has said.

Mr. Allen Adams (Paisley, North): As today is St. Andrew's day, it might be appropriate to ask the Leader of the House whether next week he will initiate a debate on the Scottish economy. It might be appropriate also to ask the right hon. and learned Gentleman, more specifically, to intervene in the debate on the future of Scotland's lowland airports, an issue which has been causing concern for the past four or five months without any resolution being achieved. Will he give the House the opportunity to discuss in detail and in depth the future of Glasgow airport?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I cannot promise to respond promptly to the requirements of every saint's day in the House, especially as I think that I am right in saying that today is All Saints Day—[HON. MEMBERS: "No."] I am sorry, tomorrow.

I think that I shall be on rather more certain ground if I deal with the hon. Gentleman's question about Glasgow airport. As he knows, the time has expired for the completion of consideration of the representations that have been received on the matter. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will be announcing his conclusions as soon as that announcement is compatible with the proper assessment of the arguments.

Mr. Rupert Allason (Torbay): Is my right hon. and learned Friend aware that tomorrow morning I shall have the honour of presenting a petition to the House on behalf of the constituents of Torbay and visitors to the constituency, which has been signed by about 10,500 people, on the subject of the outfall of raw, untreated sewage into the sea of south Devon? Will my right hon. and learned Friend find time during next week, or beyond, for an urgent debate on this appalling and continuing pollution?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I can understand that my hon. Friend regards it is an honour to present a petition on that subject. I cannot guarantee a debate on it immediately, but I shall bring the matter to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Mr. Eddie Loyden (Liverpool, Garston): May I press the Leader of the House on the issue raised by my hon. Friends the Members for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) and for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer)? Is he aware of the effect that the closure of the BAT factory will have on a community that has already suffered as a result of the decimation of community industries? One of our main concerns—this is why a debate should take place—is that many of the jobs will go to Brussels. Is this a foretaste of what will happen when the Single European Act 1992 takes effect? Instead of jobs being created in Britain, will we see an exodus of jobs to the rest of Europe in the interests of international cartels that hold monopoly power over our industries?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I understand the concern of hon. Members and the community about the factory. That is why we have taken the steps that I have already mentioned. It is wrong to conclude that the prospect of opening competition in the European Community will represent a threat to job opportunities in this country. Britain has been creating jobs at a faster rate than our Community partners and investment is being attracted to this country on a considerable scale, and there is no reason why that should not continue.

Mr. David Tredinnick (Bosworth): Given the problems facing the British shoe industry, will my right hon. and learned Friend provide time next week for an urgent debate? Is he aware that since 1987 in Hinckley, Barwell and Earl Shilton in my constituency, the industry has been halved from 30 to 15 factories? Is he further aware that there is widespread disquiet about the enforcement of existing regulations for imported products? There is now the prospect of the whole of eastern Europe opening up to trade with Britain, which will create new problems, especially if Poland is included in any trading agreement. We must consider those problems urgently.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My hon. Friend is right to draw attention to a number of factors affecting the outlook for the boot and shoe industry. I cannot promise an early debate, but I am sure that it is a topic to which the House will wish to return.

Mr. Dave Nellist (Coventry, South-East): Why are the Government frightened of allowing the Secretary of State for Health to make a statement later today and why are they frightened of having a debate in Government time next week on the 11-week-old ambulance dispute? Could it be the 6 million-strong petition or the tens of thousands of pounds collected every day, which demonstrate universal public sympathy? Are the Government trying to sweep under the carpet individual incidents such as that of the Army sergeant in Hertfordshire who earlier this week was returned to his barracks at Chichester because of his sympathy with the ambulance crews and his recognition of the Army's inability to provide a 999 service? After 11 weeks of dispute, is the right hon. and learned Gentleman prepared to head into Christmas with the lockout of ambulance crews putting lives at risk? Where is the Secretary of State for Health?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No topic has been more regularly considered by this House, both before and after the recent parliamentary break, than the ambulance dispute. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health spoke to the House at length during a debate on the National Health Service only a few days ago. There will be a further opportunity to return to the issue when the House debates the National Health Service again next week. I assure the hon. Gentleman that my right hon. and learned Friend will continue to keep the House informed of developments, as he has done to date.

Mr. John Browne (Winchester): Is my right hon. and learned Friend aware that last year there were some 8,000 serious accidents in schools, yet the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, which requires first aid cover for companies and even for banks, does not require such cover in schools?

Is my right hon. and learned Friend aware that during the last Session early-day motion No. 174 was signed by 336 hon. Members, which is more than 50 per cent. of the entire House of Commons?

[That this House applauds the Approved Code of Practice which followed the Health and Safety (First Aid) Regulations 1981 (Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974) and which requires that, even in low hazard industries, every employer of more than 150 people should ensure the on site availability of a qualified first aider; believes the same requirement should apply to children in schools; further recognises the value of teaching first or emergency aid in schools; and applauds the initiative of the St. John Ambulance in issuing its publication Emergency Aid in Schools, which, accompanied by a video, shows how children can be taught a basic course between the ages of six and twelve years so that they are competent in assessing emergency situations, restarting breathing and circulation, dealing with bleeding, shock and unconsciousness especially resulting from drug or solvent abuse and burns and scalds and so qualifying for the St. John Ambulance Three Cross Emergency Aid Award.]

Will he please make time for a debate on that matter in this Session of Parliament?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I know that that topic was raised during the last Session, as well as in this Session. I shall draw the attention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science to the points made by my hon. Friend.

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson (Coventry, North-West): Is the Leader of the House aware that since the suspension of the serious crime squad in the west midlands—a step almost unprecedented in such circumstances—there have come to light an increasing number of possible serious miscarriages of justice? Several of those arise in my constituency, and I know that there are others in constituencies of hon. Members on both sides of the House. In those circumstances, does not the matter require urgent and serious debate by the House, and can the right hon. and learned Gentleman find time for a debate?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I am not sure that I can provide time for such a debate in the near future, but if and in so far as those points fall within the terms of reference of the inquiry already taking place, I shall bring them to the attention of my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

Mr. Tony Baldry (Banbury): Further to the comments of the shadow Leader of the House and his requests about business next week, will my right hon. and learned Friend take on board the fact that many Conservative Members would welcome a statement on Ethiopia because it would give us an opportunity to compliment the Government on their prompt action in these tragic circumstances by allocating £54 million in relief aid to Ethiopia this year and some 17,000 tonnes of food aid in response to the position as and when the need arises?

My right hon. and learned Friend will know that the situation is not new; it has existed for some time. Conservative Members have been asking intelligent questions for some time and my right hon. and learned Friend gave a full answer to a question on 19 October. Is it not sickening that the only time that the Opposition take an interest in the issue is when they see television coverage of it, in the hope that they may pick up a little credit by international ambulance chasing?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I had better not follow my hon. Friend too far down that path or I shall precipitate a debate myself. My hon. Friend is right to remind the House that that topic has been constantly in the mind of, and has received effective action from, Her Majesty's Government during the many tragic years that it has persisted. It is right that it should be discussed by the House from time to time, and I shall bear that in mind.

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): Will the Leader of the House withdraw Tuesday's business, the Education (Student Loans) Bill, which many of us find extremely odious, and let us have a general debate on education so that we can describe how Tory-controlled Bradford Council is falling short on the repair and adequate maintenance of schools in a local authority which has 600 temporary classrooms and rising school rolls? We could then press the case for more expenditure on permanent extensions to schools to prevent, for example, the closure of three temporary classrooms and young children being bussed a round journey of eight miles at Buttershaw first school in my constituency.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I do not propose to withdraw the business that has already been announced for Tuesday, but I am always ready to find an opportunity for the House to commend examples of Conservative success in Bradford.

[Sir Geoffrey Howe]

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): Will the Leader of the House arrange for the Secretary of State for the Environment to make a statement next week on the plans of several water companies, including Yorkshire Water, to introduce a flat-rate charge for water and sewerage—in effect, a water poll tax? How can it be right that a pensioner living in a small house with an outside toilet should pay the same for water and sewerage as a millionaire living in a mansion with 10 bathrooms and an indoor swimming pool? Will the Leader of the House force water companies to reveal to the public and to their consumers their plans in relation to the introduction of a water poll tax?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The hon. Gentleman will know that one of the objectives of the privatisation of the water industry is to diversify the methods by which charges are imposed for water consumption, including the possible use of meters as one method of apportioning charges fairly. I cannot respond more fully than that.

Mr. Keith Vaz (Leicester, East): May we have a statement early next week on the issue of compensation for the Christmas Island veterans? I am sure that the Leader of the House will have had an opportunity to study early-day motion 37 which concerns my constituent Mr. John Hall, who is suffering from leukaemia.

[That this House condemns the Government's policy towards compensation for ex-servicemen, like Mr. John Hall of Belgrave, Leicester, who served on Christmas Island during the nuclear tests in the 1950s and who as a result of this are suffering from the effects of exposure to radiation; and calls upon the Government to seize this opportunity to show compassion and justice by awarding substantial compensation to our Christmas Island veterans without further delay.]

The Leader of the House will also have heard the statement by the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement this week. There is confusion about the circumstances in which compensation will be payable. Therefore, will he arrange for a statement next week so that the relevant Minister can be questioned on that important issue?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I cannot comment on the case raised by the hon. Gentleman. The Government are ready to pay appropriate compensation whenever the Crown's legal liability is established, but we see no reason to make special compensation arrangements for test veterans.

Mr. George Howarth (Knowsley, North): Has the Leader of the House had an opportunity to read motion 12 on the Order Paper, which refers to the shipping of dangerous goods? Is he aware that in a recent Adjournment debate on that subject the Minister for Aviation and Shipping assured me that time would be given to debate that subject in the House. Will he find time as soon as possible for us to debate that serious subject?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I cannot answer that question forthwith, but I shall study the implications of the undertaking that was given.

Mr. Harry Barnes (Derbyshire, North-East): Has the Leader of the House seen early-day motion 98 on safety in the Channel tunnel?

[That this House notes with deep concern the professional anxieties of the Fire Brigades Union regarding safety in the Channel Tunnel and accepts that hundreds, if not thousands, of lives would be at risk in the event of a deliberate or accidental fire or explosion in the tunnel; therefore calls on the Eurotunnel Group to accept the principle of the segregation of vehicles and their passengers as a means of improving safety arrangements; and calls upon the Government to initiate an urgent inquiry into the whole issue of safety in the Channel Tunnel with a view to preventing a major catastrophe.]

It has been signed spontaneously by 14 Members and no doubt, when we get organised, it will be signed by many more hon. Members on both sides of the House. It asks that there should be a division in the Channel tunnel between vehicles and their passengers. The Fire Brigades Union and many others find the present arrangements dangerous and want the Government to take a strong line on the matter. May we have a debate on the subject?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I am not sure that a debate would be a useful way of ventilating that topic, whether or not the signatures to the early-day motion were spontaneous or organised. The proposed designs for the Channel tunnel must be approved by the intergovernmental commission, which itself is advised by the safety authority, which is an independent body. That should reassure the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Tony Banks: I draw the attention of the Leader of the House to early-day motion 112.

[That this House notes with concern the growing levels of inefficiency, unreliability and unpleasantness experienced by travellers on the London Underground; agrees with the general condemnation of the Underground Service expressed by London honourable Members of all parties who responded in the recent opinion poll commissioned by London Transport; and calls upon the Government to halt the descent into transport chaos in London by producing an integrated public transport strategy backed up with the necessary capital investment which will provide Londoners with the service they deserve and require.]

It sets out the extreme concern felt by my hon. Friends about the state of London's Underground system today. May we have an early debate on that subject, which concerns Londoners both inside and outside the House? When did the Leader of the House last travel on the Underground during the rush hour? Will he use what good offices he has left to entice the Prime Minister out of her bunker so that she can travel on the Underground once during the rush hour? If she did so, something would then be done.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I confess that I travel on the Underground during the rush hour or out of it less frequently than I used to do. I appreciate the view expressed by the hon. Gentleman and by my hon. Friends. The Government have taken a great deal of firm action to assist London Underground, and efforts are being made to improve its services. Investment is already at a record level. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced recently substantial increases in financial support for London

Regional Transport. In addition, the Jubilee line is to be extended at a cost of about £1 billion, which will bring additional benefits to those using the Underground.

Mr. Alun Michael (Cardiff, South and Penarth): Will the Leader of the House explain in his own words why the matter of the Health Service in Wales has been subsumed in the main body of the National Health Serice and Community Care Bill? Are the Government trying to bury it, especially in the light of the admission by the Secretary of State for Wales that special considerations must be taken into account in respect of the Welsh Health Service?

Will the right hon. and learned Gentleman consider the terms of early-day motion 95?

[That this House notes the considerable time that has elapsed since the Barlow Clowes collapse brought misery and worry for thousands of people, many of whom were elderly individuals who had placed their money in what they believed to be a safe Government-approved investment, and who were shocked to discover its true nature; hopes that early publication of the Ombudsman's report will clearly illuminate the events leading up to the collapse; but notes that apportionment of blame and eventual repayment will come too late for people who should have been able to enjoy security and freedom from worry in their twilight years—some of whom, sadly, have already died—unless the Government now belatedly adopts the pro-active role urged by the Opposition by launching a lifeboat scheme and drawing together all those with a legitimate interest in the compensation of investors to achieve an early payout without further delay or unproductive litigation.]

Will he ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to make an early statement on the Barlow Clowes scandal, and may we have a positive, proactive stance by the Government, which would give some hope to the many elderly people who, through no fault of their own, are suffering the effects of that company's collapse long after it was first brought to the attention of this House?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: It is difficult to respond to several substantive points together when dealing with the business of the House. As to the hon. Gentleman's second point, all right hon. and hon. Members share his concern about the implications of the collapse of Barlow Clowes. The draft report of the Parliamentary Commissioner is now being considered and will receive a response as soon as possible. It would not be appropriate for the House to debate that matter until the report has been finalised. However, clearly it is an important matter.

As to the Health Service in Wales, neither I nor anyone else can alter the Principality's constitutional status as it was established by Henry VIII. However, we can be assured that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will continue to take the energetic care that he always does of the Welsh Health Service.

Mr. Richard Holt (Langbaurgh) rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. Was the hon. Member present in the Chamber when next week's business was announced?

Mr. Holt: I have been in my place since 2.30 pm, Mr. Speaker, but I have twice been unsuccessful in trying to catch your eye.

Mr. Speaker: In that case, I call the hon. Member.

Mr. Holt: Will my right hon. and learned Friend reflect on the request made by the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) for an education debate so that the House may discuss the Cleveland city technology college, which has been a great success despite the pernicious and vicious attitude of the local education authority, which even seeks to ban other schools from playing soccer against 10-year-olds?

Sir Geoffrey Howe: If the House has another opportunity to debate education, my hon. Friend will be well placed to repeat the important point that he has just made.

Rover Group plc

4.24 pm

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (Mr. Nicholas Ridley): The report of the Comptroller and Auditor General into the sale of Rover Group to British Aerospace is to be the subject of a hearing by the Public Accounts Committee on 4 December. It would not therefore be normal practice for a statement on the subject to be made in the House in advance of that hearing. However, in the light of today's regrettable disclosure of a confidential memorandum submitted to the Committee, I feel under no such constraint.

The report focuses on three broad aspects of the sale. The first is the exclusivity of negotiation granted to BAe. I need not remind the House of the public controversy and uncertainty created by the 1986 discussions with the Ford Motor Company about its interest in acquiring Austin Rover. It had a serious, detrimental effect on the business, and the Rover board and the Government were determined that the handling of any future privatisation talks should take full account of that experience. Both were convinced that a public auction for the company would be commercially very damaging, and for that reason, following the approach by BAe, it was decided to grant exclusivity for a limited period to see whether a satisfactory agreement could be reached.

Secondly, the report questions the adequacy of the £150 million consideration eventually agreed. I should remind hon. Members of the historical background of Rover Group prior to privatisation. It had already cost the taxpayer £2·9 billion of public funds; that money had been swallowed up in repeated losses while in public ownership. Moreover, the company was dependent on the assurances given by successive Governments in respect of its obligations to banks and trade creditors. That contingent liability on the taxpayer stood at £1·6 billion in March 1988 and was projected to rise over the corporate plan period, because the group's heavy capital expenditure programme outstripped cash generated by forecast trading profits.

Thirdly, the report examines the way in which the negotiations with BAe should have been conducted. Conventional techniques of valuation were clearly inappropriate; it was necessary to approach this as the sale of a going concern, and to strike a reasonable balance between the risks and opportunities confronting BAe as the potential new owners. In that context, I believe that the terms that were eventually agreed represented the best that could be achieved.

Having dealt with the main issues in the NAO's published report, I shall now turn to the confidential memorandum. It is necessary here to recall the fundamental terms of the deal, and the process of their approval. For the business to be privatised successfully, the inheritance of its dismal trading record under public ownership had to be eliminated. In accordance with the state-aid procedures of the European Community, that necessitated exhaustive negotiations with the Commission of an appropriate package.

In July 1988, the Commission agreed a cash injection comprising £469 million in recognition of RG's historic debt, and £78 million in support of its future investment programme in the assisted areas. The Commission was prepared to sanction that aid because Rover Group would henceforth be exposed to the full financial discipline of the market, and because its plans envisaged the elimination of surplus capacity.

When my noble Friend Lord Young disclosed those terms to British Aerospace, the company made it clear that a deal could not be struck on that basis. Four further items were therefore agreed with BAe. First, as BAe wanted to acquire 100 per cent. of the company, the Government agreed a grant of up to £9·5 million towards BAe's costs in buying out the small private shareholding. BAe subsequently bought out those shareholders on terms agreed by itself, Rover Group and their respective advisers to be fair and reasonable.

The second item was a payment of £1·5 million for Rover's privatisation costs. As it was, in effect, Her Majesty's Government who were causing RG to incur those costs, it was only right that Her Majesty's Government should pay them. The third was the waiver of an earlier £5 million contribution that BAe had volunteered towards the Columbus polar platform programme. In the event, that programme is now undergoing thorough revision, so the whole issue of an industrial contribution is being re-examined.

Finally, the Government agreed with BAe that the precise timing of the payment of the £150 million consideration would follow the clarification of certain tax matters. This delay was time-limited to 31 March 1990.

Those items were addressed where relevant in estimates and reports to Parliament. The Government fully recognised that these additional arrangements were material to the Public Accounts Committee investigation, and from the outset full details were volunteered to the National Audit Office.

The Government took the view that these concessions were essentially separate matters consistent with the terms of the Commission's approval. If the EC Commission now wishes to examine them, the Government will be happy to co-operate.

I believe that these arrangements were the least that were necessary to secure the successful transfer of the Rover Group to the private sector, which was essential for the future welfare of the Rover Group and those who work in it, as well as being the best deal available for the taxpayer.

Mr. Gordon Brown (Dunfermline, East): Why were we not told until now about the additional subsidies of £38 million that were given to British Aerospace? Why did the Secretary of State have to be dragged to the House to make those admissions? How does he justify concealing the subsidies on the ground of commercial confidence when the commercial arrangement was not between British Aerospace and a private company but between British Aerospace and the British taxpayer? As it was £38 million of our money, did we not have a right to know?

As for the additional concealed subsidies, will the Secretary of State now confirm that they include offering to buy up to £9 million worth of shares in Rover only to give them back to British Aerospace for nothing; £5 million for British Aerospace's subscription to the European Space Agency which has nothing to do with the Rover Group; potentially £250 million as a reduction in the compensation payable if Rover were sold on in five years and even deferring the final date for payment for up to 18 months, knowing that a deferred price is a lower price?

Is not the real reason why the Government asked for details of the sale to be kept confidential not a commercial one, because the Minister has not made a commercial case, but the party political embarrassment that would be caused by the revelation of those subsidies?

In those circumstances, given the additional level of subsidy—£38 million—how could his Department have thought that there was no necessity even to inform the European Commission that those subsidies were paid? How can the Prime Minister tell other countries in good faith that they should abolish hidden subsidies before she joins the exchange rate mechanism when she has allowed exactly those hidden subsidies?

Now that the Comptroller has named four other companies that were interested in the Rover Group, and, according to the lunchtime news, one has said that it put its interest in writing, how can the Secretary of State defend the statement of the former Minister, Lord Young, that

"British Aerospace was the only company to approach me to buy Rover", especially when we now know that Ministers were advised by their own advisers, Baring Brothers, that they should create a competitive market?

As we now know that most of Rover's debts were written off by the Government, that assets in shares in other companies were known by the Government to be worth more than £100 million, that surplus sites that were thrown in are are now worth more than £33 million and that Rover's forecasts were not for losses but for profits totalling £400 million over the next five years—money that could have gone to the taxpayer—how can the Secretary of State now justify selling Rover for only £150 million?

I want a direct answer to this question: is it right that, so far, little or nothing has yet been paid by British Aerospace despite the fact that British Aerospace has made substantial profits from Rover and has already sold assets worth £126 million? Is the issue not the past investment to make Rover profitable, but what the taxpayer and the public could have gained in future as a result of that public investment?

Finally, in those circumstances, how can the Minister possibly deny the serious charges of mismanagement, incompetence and a serious waste of national resources by the Government? Is it not the case that they were interested in privatising Rover at any price and at any cost rather than securing what is in the national interest? Is it not time for open government in this matter and is it not the case that our only hope for open government is a Labour Government?

Mr. Ridley: The items that I mentioned in my statement today were addressed, wherever relevant, in the estimates and reports to Parliament. Full details were made available to the Comptroller and Auditor General when he started his inquiries, as was completely correct. The House is not being told now; the Public Accounts Committee was told before. Nor have I been dragged to the House. I volunteered to make the statement for the convenience of the House. I have made an open statement, so I reject any suggestion that I have sought to conceal anything.

British Aerospace wished to acquire 100 per cent. of the company. We were not in a position to sell it 100 per cent. of the company because there were minority shareholders. It was prefectly right and proper that we should have enabled it to buy out those minority shareholders, because it was much more simple procedurally for it to do so than for the Government to do so directly.

The £5 million for the space project was nothing to do with the motor industry and therefore, in our opinion, nothing to do with the deal reached with the Commission.

The hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) seems to be unaware that the reduction in the writing-off of debt, which the Commission insisted be made during negotiations with it, reflected itself in a reduction of what the company would have had to pay back in the event of a sale within five years of the assets and trademarks of the Rover Group. It was right that that figure should have been reduced commensurate with the reduction in the injection of cash made by the Government.

As I have told the House, we had reached agreement with the Commission when these additional items became necessary. The late payment was mentioned in the statement by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke), the then Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, on 14 July last year. We took the view that the other items to which I have referred were consistent with the Commission's terms, and that as they did not affect the competitiveness of the Rover Group's production disclosure was not necessary. Any question of reopening the procedure would have jeopardised the deal.

As to the last point made by the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East, far from being a rip-off, let me quote what the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) said when the deal was announced by my right hon. and learned Friend. He said:

"How is it that British Aerospace has now accepted £250 million less than Ministers initially offered?"

The hon. Gentleman continued:

"Is it true that institutional shareholders have already been telephoning to express their objections?"—[Official Report, 14 July 1988; Vol. 137, c. 613.]

The allegation then was that we had screwed British Aerospace too hard. Now the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East is saying that the deal was far too soft. The only conclusion that we can draw from that is that it is easy to be wise after the event and that the hon. Gentleman is suffering from an overdose of hindsight.

I should add that no payment has been received. British Aerospace has until the end of March next year.

Mr. Michael Grylls (Surrey, North-West): Will my right hon. Friend accept that it is obvious from the rather synthetic annoyance of the Opposition that they cannot bear the fact that, because of the Government's successful policies, Rover is now a successful company in the private sector? When they were in office, all they did was pour more and more taxpayers' money into it, and it lost more and more year after year. We have been successful with it.

Is it not true that the financial terms agreed between Rover and British Aerospace were hugely advantageous for the taxpayer, who has been relieved of an enormous contingent liability of £1·8 billion? That must be to the advantage of the taxpayer.

Mr. Ridley: I agree entirely with my hon. Friend. The deal was of great advantage to the taxpayer in staunching the losses that the Rover Group had incurred. The deal was struck in July 1988, but the only deal that could have been done was one agreed by the buyer and seller. In this case, the buyer had grave doubts about whether it wished to proceed, and it almost aborted the sale at the last minute. It did not show any signs whatever that it was not taking great risks in taking on the Rover Group.

[Mr. Ridley]

Mr. Peter Snape (West Bromwich, East): Is there no limit to the Secretary of State's arrogance on these matters? Is he aware that the only reason why he is at the Dispatch Box is to pre-empt the inevitable row that would follow this morning's publication of the memorandum in The Guardian? His whole approach typifies the Government's unethical approach to the disposal of public assets. A more fitting place for his talents would be in a used car lot where, as the usual sweetener, he would throw in the whole car factory.

Mr. Ridley: The hon. Gentleman's style is not appropriate on this occasion. It was correct for the Public Accounts Committee to consider the memorandum confidentially. If the memorandum had not been leaked, the Committee could have considered the matter and concluded whether publication was in the national interest. That would have been far the better way to handle the matter. I regret that the PAC has been pre-empted because that has made the matter more difficult to handle. However, as soon as it happened I took the correct action of coming to the House to make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Warren (Hastings and Rye): Does my right hon. Friend accept that the openness of his declaration is welcome? Will he further accept that as Chairman of the Select Committee on Trade and Industry, which last year conducted extensive inquiries into the purchase of Rover by British Aerospace, I would have found it helpful if the memorandum had been submitted to the Committee in confidence. With regret, I find unacceptable his statement that the conventional valuations were not appropriate. When my right hon. and noble Friend was asked by the Select Committee whether he had put a valuation on the machinery and assets of Rover, it was to our surprise that he replied no. The negotiations could have been handled by the Department much more professionally and I hope that in future that will be the case.

Mr. Ridley: The Committee may wish to follow up the question of what memorandum was put before it, but I was not aware of the point that my hon. Friend raised. The sale was not and could not have been normal. The House will remember when the possibility arose that Rover would be sold to the Ford Motor Company. As a result, there was virtually a public auction. We debated the matter many times in the House but it was impossible to resolve it because of the political temperature. Rover informed everyone involved that the position was extremely damaging to its business and at the time it lost market share. My right hon. and noble Friend had no alternative but to conduct exclusive negotiations with an acceptable British company and only one had expressed interest at that time. [HON. MEMBERS: "Not true."] At that time. After it had been announced that the deal would be negotiated exclusively, other companies expressed interest. It would have been wrong for my right hon. and noble Friend to go back on the undertaking that the negotiations would be exclusive.

Mr. Terry Davis (Birmingham, Hodge Hill): If the financial arrangements were as straightforward as the Secretary of State suggests and were already available in the estimates presented to the House, why did his Department ask the National Audit Office to leave them out of the report published two days ago?

Mr. Ridley: As I said, we did not wish to draw attention to the arrangements in the July statement because it was important that the Commission should not reopen the whole matter. The matters that I reported were not relevant to the agreement that we made with the Commission. In view of the sensitivity of those facts, I thought it right that the PAC should decide for itself whether it was in the national interest to publish them. I regret that the PAC's right to decide has been pre-empted.

Sir Hal Miller (Bromsgrove): Does my right hon. Friend recollect that about a month ago he was criticised for not keeping Jaguar British? Today he is criticised for keeping Rover British and for its success. Does he agree that the Opposition have no interest in the success of any British industrial company? Did we hear any request for a statement yesterday about the additional investment in the British motor industry? Will he reconsider his description of the Opposition as being wise after the event? It is clear that they are unable to appreciate the difficulty of valuing what was a bankrupt company trading insolvently under Government guarantees.

Mr. Ridley: The transformation in the health of the Rover Group after many years of decline and massive losses is justification for its sale to the private sector, if ever one were wanted. I agree that the Opposition are now to be described as unwise after the event.

Mr. Dave Nellist (Coventry, South-East): Is the Secretary of State aware that tonight in Coventry many thousands of Rover workers will wonder whether we are witnessing the Government's incompetence or their corruption? Is it not clear that, with £600 million of cancelled debt, £60 million of underselling and the £38 million of back-handers revealed today, the privatisation of Rover was legalised theft? Is he aware that British Aerospace knew in advance of the land values, the value of subsidiary companies such as the Spanish company and Daf and of stocks and shares and is laughing all the way to the bank? The right hon. Member for Chingford (Mr. Tebbit) stayed in the Chamber long enough to make sure that the Prime Minister held her line at Question Time. Why is he not here now to make a statement about his previous role as Secretary of State for Trade and Industry from which he went directly to be chief adviser to the board of directors of British Aerospace? More than any other privatisation deal, this deal stinks to high heaven.

Mr. Ridley: Thousands of Rover workers wandering about Coventry will be grateful that their company is beginning to move ahead, investment is being put into it and the days of its failures and loss-making under public ownership have come to an end. The fulfilment of that goal makes worthwhile the deal that was done to achieve it. For the hon. Gentleman's benefit, to my knowledge no Land Rover assets have been sold.

Mr. Steve Norris (Epping Forest): Does my right hon. Friend agree that with hindsight we are all millionaires? Does he further agree that any business man who was prepared to pay asset value for a company haemorrhaging hundreds of millions of pounds without the slightest realistic prospect of ceasing to do so would be considered insane? Is he aware that those of us who were anxious that the deal should go through were disturbed that at the last minute the board of British Aerospace was so unsure whether the sale should proceed that it delayed the final announcements to be made by the then Secretary of State? Is it not true that when the details of the events are examined it will be clear that according to commercial logic the Government did an exemplary deal in selling Rover to British Aerospace?

Mr. Ridley: I wish to disagree with my hon. Friend in one respect: many hon. Gentlemen, even with the advantage of hindsight, would succeed in losing millions. [HON. MEMBERS: "What did the right hon. Gentleman do?"]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ridley: My hon. Friend's other point, that British Aerospace hesitated on the eve of signing the deal, is absolutely true. I can confirm that it nearly decided to abort the takeover because it did not feel that it could live with the risks. It decided to go ahead, which is infinitely to the benefit of the workers and customers of the Rover Group.

Mr. Andrew Smith (Oxford, East): Is it not the case that the Secretary of State cannot begin to understand the anger and anxiety of Cowley workers and their families during the whole period of the shameful conduct of the sale? Is it not evident that Conservative party political determination to sell Rover at any price and in any way has counted for everything and that the interests of the country, taxpayers and the work force have counted for nothing? Is it not essential that, in addition to seeing proper accountability to the taxpayer for taxpayers' money, any surplus arising to British Aerospace in this sorry affair should be invested in production and jobs at Cowley, not asset stripped?

Mr. Ridley: The deal has been done and cannot be reopened. I understand that British Aerospace intends to make massive investments in the Rover Group—more than £1 billion—to develop its capacity and model range for the future. That is precisely what the hon. Gentleman asks for.

Mr. Roger King (Birmingham, Northfield): Is my right hon. Friend aware that the people of the west midlands will contrast this Government's support for the British motor industry and the glittering future that Rover Group now has in the private ownership of BAe with the glittering, wonderful future that the Labour Government gave the Meriden motor cycle co-operative?

Mr. Ridley: Yes. Because of the many changes that have taken place under this Government, the British motor industry is beginning to move ahead and to increase its market share in Britain and throughout the world. We shall see a large increase in motor car production in the years ahead.

Mr. Doug Hoyle (Warrington, North): Does the Secretary of State realise that only one Conservative Member, the hon. Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Warren), seems concerned about taxpayers having a fair deal? [HON. MEMBERS: "We are all concerned about that."] Will the Secretary of State please answer his hon. Friend's questions? Why was the memorandum not put before the Select Committee on Trade and Industry? Is he aware that it is inadequate to answer that the Committee can now inquire into the matter? Does he agree that the memorandum should have been made available at the time? Was the Commission aware that if Rover were resold in the following five years, the group would not have to repay the £650 million, but only £400 million? In view of the disclosures, will the Secretary of State tell BAe that it cannot have until March before paying the £150 million, but must pay without delay because it has benefited from the swindle?

Mr. Ridley: If hon. Gentlemen have taxpayers' interests at heart, they should recognise that the £3·5 billion which was expended on the Rover Group while it was in the public sector was the biggest drain that could ever been placed on taxpayers' shoulders and that from now on the Rover Group is beginning to pay tax which is to the taxpayers' benefit. My right hon. and noble Friend who handled the matter appeared before the Select Committee on Trade and Industry, and he must be allowed to give the evidence and produce the papers that he thought appropriate at the time. The hon. Gentleman is not right when he says that that £450 million will have to be repaid. The £650 million was the sum before the Commission reduced the amount which the British Government could give to assuage Rover's debts. As the Commission reduced the sum, it was right that the amount to be repaid should also be reduced.

Sir Giles Shaw (Pudsey): Does my right hon. Friend agree, as one who had a part to play in the developments at Rover at a certain time, that the problem with the company, apart from wholly inherited debt and the fact that it was trading insolvently in all but name, was the fact that the Varley-Marshall agreement entered into by the Labour Government provided never-ending commitment to the Government of the day to stand behind every bill that the company happened to offer? Will he further consider that, while enormous efforts were made to maintain productive investment, this incredibly bankrupt company would have been closed long ago had it not been for the arrangements with BAe? Does my right hon. Friend agree that that was the real alternative offered?

Mr. Ridley: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. He talks of what came to be known as the Varley-Marshall-Joseph undertakings and they totalled £1·6 billion by March last year. I am extremely glad that they will never be known as the Varley-Marshall-Joseph-Ridley undertakings.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): Can the Secretary of State answer the questions that he has still not answered? How does he reconcile the uncorrected public announcement that if BAe sold Rover within five years the payback would be £650 million when it would be £400 million? How does he reconcile the Prime Minister's statement about the valuation in a letter to my right hon. Friend the Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) on 21 November 1988 that

"the value to be attached to assets . . . is at present purely speculative"

with his statement this afternoon that the price was reached by striking a reasonable balance between risks and objectives? How does he reconcile his declaration that he is in favour of no support, a strong competition policy within the EC and upholding the law with his subsidisation without telling the EC, thereby breaking the law and his own declared policy?

[Mr. Simon Hughes]

Mr. Ridley: The hon. Gentleman is wrong. The adjustment to the ceiling of any penalty for a sale within five years was indeed communicated to the Commission. It was twice reduced because the Commission reduced the original consideration. The conclusion of a valuation between a seller and a buyer must be the price at which the buyer is prepared to buy and the seller to sell. That is the price that was finally agreed last July.

Mr. Simon Coombs (Swindon): Is my right hon. Friend aware that while Austin Rover was in the public sector the plant at Stratton near Swindon was a frequently mentioned candidate for closure and that since Rover has been in the private sector that plant has been the recipient of £17 million of new investment from BAe? Does my right hon. Friend draw any conclusion from that? Can he tell the Opposition how many new hospitals and schools could have been built with the money that for many years haemorrhaged into Austin Rover while it was in the public sector? Can he tell us what efforts he is making to find the person who leaked the document?

Mr. Ridley: On the latter point, it is not for me but for the PAC to re-establish its reputation for looking after the financial and confidentially financial interests of this House. I am glad to hear that the privatisation of the Rover Group has led to increased investment in my hon. Friend's constituency. It will lead to increased investment in many other constituencies as the momentum increases.

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson (Coventry, North-West): In the light of the Secretary of State's answers this afternoon, the only thing for which the House can be grateful is that it was not he who negotiated the deal. If he had, it would have been an even bigger rip-off than it was. [Interruption.] We have yet to receive a successful answer to two shocking revelations, first, that not one penny has yet been paid by BAe and, secondly, that the British Government surreptitiously paid £38 million. [Interruption.] Finally—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must have a chance to put his questions.

Mr. Robinson: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that, in the light of those revelations and the inadequacy of his answers about them, the Government have forfeited any remaining claim that they ever had to be from the party of financial responsibility and managerial competence?

Mr. Ridley: It is a rare and well deserved tribute to my noble Friend Lord Young that the hon. Gentleman believes that he negotiated an even better deal than I would have done. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman. I have dealt with the rest of his questions because I gave full, open and satisfactory answers to all the points that were raised.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I remind the House that there is another statement today and a debate on a Public Accounts Committee report. I understand that the Public Accounts Committee is to discuss this matter tomorrow and no doubt we shall return to it later. I will allow three more questions from each side and then we must move on.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks (Wolverhampton, North-East): As a west midlands Member and the proud owner of a British Rover car, I feel duty bound to pay tribute to the success of Rover in private hands. Thanks to the vision of the Government, Rover has gone from strength to strength and has secured the jobs of many midlands workers. Will my right hon. Friend confirm that the Government dealt exclusively with British Aerospace because of pressure from the House not to sell to an overseas company?

Mr. Ridley: My hon. Friend is quite right. I remember, although at the time I was not in the Department, the extraordinary political clamour surrounding the possibility of selling the company to Ford. Therefore, my noble Friend had no alternative, when he finally got a serious offer from British Aerospace, but to undertake to negotiate exclusively lest a situation such as that which had developed previously arose again.

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): Is it not clear that the noble Lord Young must have set out deliberately to mislead the European Commission by failing to indicate——

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is a reflection on a Member of the Upper House. The hon. Gentleman must withdraw that comment.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: If I have used a word that you wish me to withdraw, then I do so.

The Department misled the European Commission by failing to tell it that concessions were being made and that subsidies were being paid. What credibility do we now have with people in the European Community who have been complaining about the stiff position of the Government on the whole question of regional subsidies and sectoral support?

Mr. Ridley: That is not the case. My noble Friend considered that the agreements that he had made beyond the main deal in relation to the sale of the Rover Group did not come within the competence of the Commission in relation to state aid. I have explained why I think that that was right. If the Commission does not agree, it can comment in the future. We wait to see what it says.

Mr. James Cran (Beverley): Does my right hon. Friend agree that in evidence to the Select Committee on Trade and Industry the chairman of Rover, speaking on behalf of his whole board, gave absolute backing to the Government on their action? The board gave as the precise reason for that the fact that it did not want a public auction and the consequential adverse effects that that would have on the dealer network, the work force and the customer.

Mr. Ridley: So far I have not heard any hon. Member question the fact that it was correct to engage in exclusive negotiations, and that is because of the reason that my hon. Friend has given. If that be so, no one could question the deal that was finally agreed with British Aerospace, especially as it was regarded at the time as extremely risky and unfair to British Aerospace to undertake such large risks for the consideration that they offered.

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): Can the Secretary of State tell us whether his permanent secretary as accounting officer for the Department has put in an accounting officer's minute complaining about what went on? Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that if the directors of a public company acted in the way in which he has acted, the fraud squad would long since have had them in the dock at the Old Bailey for corruptly defrauding their shareholders?

Mr. Ridley: My permanent secretary as accounting officer has made a complete disclosure to the Comptroller and Auditor General on all these matters. That is the confidential memorandum that the Public Accounts Committee is receiving. He has made no comment other than to make sure, as I have said, that the PAC was aware of all these matters.

Mr. Neil Hamilton (Tatton): Does my right hon. Friend agree that it is rather quaint to hear Opposition Members complaining about an illusory loss of £38 million when we did not hear a peep from them about the loss of 100 times that amount—£3·5 billion—which can be laid at Rover's door over recent years? We wholly endorse the Government's position on the sale. The difference between my right hon. Friend and the Opposition is like the difference between a Rover Sterling and a Trabant.

Mr. Ridley: I entirely agree with my hon. Friend whose comments are borne out by what I have said. I enjoyed his description of the Opposition as a Trabant.

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton): Those of us who were in the Department of Trade and Industry when British Leyland and Rover were partners remember that the company had to be taken into public ownership because it was on the point of collapse. The Government of the day had no choice because they had to save the jobs of the people in the industry. If we had not taken the company into public ownership there would have been mass unemployment. Perhaps the right hon. Gentleman would have liked to see those workers being put out of work. Obviously, Conservative Members have a short memory about what actually happened. Because of the attitude of the right hon. Gentleman and the Government, money has been lost, although I am not saying that they had their fingers in the till. If they were councillors they would have been disqualified and surcharged. It is high time that the right hon. Gentleman resigned.

Mr. Ridley: If I were the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) I would sit this one out and not admit to having played such a prominent role in the waste of the £3·5 billion to which I have referred.

Straw and Stubble Burning

5.7 pm

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Mr. John Gummer): With permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement.

Hon. Members will be well aware of the considerable problems this year on straw and stubble burning, and will recall a similar situation in 1983 when there were many complaints from the public. [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. Members who do not wish to remain for the statement should leave quietly.

Mr. Gummer: In 1984 the Royal Commission on environmental pollution recommended a ban on straw burning to come into force within five years. By then, the Government had already drawn up model byelaws providing for greatly enhanced controls, and the National Farmers Union had issued a toughened code of practice in 1986. A ban on burning was therefore not judged to be necessary.

However, in 1989 the problems have returned with a vengeance. There have been many cases of smoke drifting across roads, in some cases with disastrous results, smoke-filled homes, dirty smuts, and genuine fears for the safety of property. In addition, there have been considerable losses of hedges and trees and, of course, wildlife. I have received more than 600 letters, many of which have been from hon. Members in all parts of the House and my Department has received notification of more than 2,500 complaints.

I have, therefore, ordered a thorough review of the policy and the effectiveness of existing controls. I have considered the alternatives carefully so that I can respond first to the public's concern, secondly to farmers' concerns that prohibiting straw burning completely will add to their costs, and thirdly to the fact that the reputation of the farming community suffers inevitably from the consequences of this practice on others who live in the countryside.

I note that the NFU has not come out in favour of a ban, but has instead proposed a licensing scheme, charging for the issue of licences and withholding them from farmers with a poor track record. There are, of course, legal difficulties with the scheme, in terms of withholding of licences on a discretionary basis, but in my view the strongest argument against the licensing proposal is that it would be unlikely to result in any significant reduction in burning.

The Government have therefore decided that straw and stubble burning should be banned. If Parliament agrees to the ban, it will come into force in England and Wales in the late autumn of 1992. That will give farmers three seasons to adjust to the new situation and to develop alternative methods of cultivation. That seems to be a proper balance between the demands of people who live in the countryside and the consideration that we would give to any section of the community to enable them to meet the needs of the whole community.

Accordingly, during the passage of the Bill which will be introduced to give new powers to control pollution and waste, the Government will be seeking the necessary powers to ban straw and stubble burning. The powers will also enable me to grant exemptions, but I should like to make it clear that, although I intend to consult the industry on their scope, any exemptions will be limited —for example, to a specific crop such as linseed. I do not propose to introduce a system of licences for farmers permitted to burn under those exemptions.

[Mr. Gummer]

I shall also discuss with the NFU how the existing code of practice should be strengthened and applied during the period leading up to the proposed ban.

Dr. David Clark (South Shields): I congratulate the Minister on his decision to ban the anti-social and anti-environmental practice of straw burning. This year straw burning has become an unacceptable public nuisance in many parts of Britain. The NFU code of practice and local authority byelaws plainly have not worked, and the Minister is right to announce his intentions today. It has long been the policy of the Labour party to ban straw burning. We therefore support the Minister and welcome his conversion.

The Minister referred in his statement to seeking powers in the course of the anti-pollution Bill. Will he give the House an assurance that there will be a representative of his Ministry on the Committee of that Bill to ensure that that aspect of agriculture and land use will be fully aired because it is an important matter and there are difficulties involved?

As the Minister knows, it is not enough simply to ban straw burning. We need to turn our attention to the problem of what to do with the surplus straw. Obviously, there are occasions when straw can be incorporated and it can be fed to animals, but there are times when those means are not appropriate. With a little ingenuity and innovation, surplus straw can be used to positive environmental effect.

Have the Government any plans to encourage that? Will the Government be providing financial assistance for research and development into other uses of straw? For example, it could be used in the construction industry, as a timber substitute—in contiboard and plywood panels. Are the Government prepared to assist companies such as British Sugar which, I understand, is contemplating a straw-powered paper-making plant in East Anglia? It is vital that those aspects of straw burning should be seriously considered. Otherwise the sound environmental benefits of banning straw burning may be lost.

Mr. Gummer: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his support. I assure him that the Parliamentary Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), who has responsibility for farming, will sit on the Committee of the Bill to represent the interests that the hon. Gentleman mentioned and to ensure that the proposal is carried to fruition.

The Government are already spending some £700,000 on the research to which the hon. Gentleman referred. I am interested in the use of straw to make boards. Stramit is a major organisation in Suffolk which has done a great deal of work to develop that, and I pay tribute to the important exports of machinery developed by that company.

There is a plan by British Sugar to develop a large factory, using straw not as a fuel but in the paper industry. That has a real chance of success, and I have no doubt that various plans will be announced as they come to fruition. I am sure that they will receive the support that they deserve.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I remind the House that there is an important debate after this on the Public Accounts Committee report. I know that this subject is of great interest to right hon. and hon. Members but the proposal will come into effect in 1992 and there is to be a Bill, so there will be other opportunities to discuss the matter. I should like to get on to the debate on the PAC report by 5.30 pm, so I hope that hon. Members will keep their questions brief.

Sir Hector Monro (Dumfries): Although my right hon. Friend is right about what he is doing for the environment, has he given sufficient thought to the problems of farmers, bearing in mind that their incomes are substantially lower than they were some years ago, and how they can find ways to dispose of the straw within three years? From a husbandry point of view, it is difficult to find an alternative.

Will the Minister also give an assurance that muirburn in the hills will not be affected because it is an essential part of the regeneration of grass and heather in the uplands?

Mr. Gummer: I can certainly give that assurance to my hon. Friend and I shall consider the effect of the ban on the farming industry. However, if we do not have such a ban, the price paid by farmers every year in terms of the effect upon public confidence and attitudes will be higher than any loss that may arise from the ban. Many farmers who used to think that straw burning was essential have already found alternatives. I believe that the industry will find ways of complying with the ban in the three years to come. I suspect that if the ban had not been announced now alternatives would be unlikely to be found within three years.

Mr. Geraint Howells (Ceredigion and Pembroke, North): I am delighted that the Minister has accepted the views of my colleagues on the Liberal Benches and those of many right hon. and hon. Members on both sides of the House. I congratulate him because on this occasion he has made the right decision. It is long overdue, but all hon. Members should co-operate and work with the Minister.

The Minister has given farmers two or three years to put their house in order. We have learnt from the mistakes of 1983-84 when milk quotas were delivered overnight. We should all back the Minister and the Government during the proceedings on the Bill.

Mr. Gummer: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his support. There is always a likelihood that a policy will be successful when it has many parents.

Mr. Jerry Wiggin (Weston-super-Mare): Is my right hon. Friend aware that the planned British Sugar plant will consume some 750,000 tonnes of straw per year—10 per cent. of annual production—but that the innovative nature of the technology required and the high risks involved mean that it may need substantial contributions from the Government? Will the Minister make representation to the Department of Trade and Industry in favour of that excellent British enterprise?

Mr. Gummer: We are not at that stage yet, but the proposals, albeit in their early stages, certainly look attractive. There is also the European dimension, which I shall consider with care and thought.

Mr. Andrew Hunter (Basingstoke): I accept what my right hon. Friend has said as both inevitable and necessary, but I have one reservation. Will a ban on burning involve greater use of incorporation, which in turn will involve greater use of nitrates? Is the Minister sure that we are not replacing one environmental problem with another?

Mr. Gummer: My hon. Friend would no doubt subscribe to the concept that "You don't get owt for nowt". There is no way that we can make those changes without some deleterious effects. It is true that a small amount of extra diesel fuel will be used and that some farmers wil need to use or release more nitrates than they would otherwise have done. However, on balance the extra damage done is far outweighed by the advantages of banning the practice, and I am sure that many other countries in Europe will soon find it necessary to do the same.

Mr. Tim Boswell (Daventry): Will my right hon. Friend accept from a farmer who has burnt many thousands of acres of straw that I believe that the balance has shifted as he described and that it is right to bring forward the ban? There are acceptable alternatives and three years should allow plenty of time to introduce them.

Mr. Gummer: I thank my hon. Friend for that. We should recognise that there is an added difficulty for the farming community in this. None of us should think it wrong to give the farming community time to find answers to a problem which is not easy, especially in areas of heavy land. Nevertheless, I do not think that farming can continue to pay the price in terms of public esteem which straw burning such as we had this year was always bound to cost.

Mr. Roger Gale (Thanet, North): My right hon. Friend will be aware that his decision will be welcomed by people in north-east Kent—urban dwellers in Margate and Herne Bay who have suffered from the practice every year, and responsible farmers whose reputations have been damaged year upon year. Nevertheless, his statement means that, for a time in the autumn, straw will lie in the fields before it is incorporated. Will the Ministry embark on some form of publicity campaign to ensure that the public are aware of their responsibility in this matter as well?

Mr. Gummer: I am sure that my hon. Friend is right. We shall have to divert the funds that we have until now used to encourage safer straw burning to remind the public of the need for them not to fire straw, although we hope that it will be incorporated as quickly as possible and will lie in the fields for only a short time. There is no point in ignoring the fact that there will still be dangers and difficulties. One does not solve any problem without running into others.

Sir Jim Spicer (Dorset, West): My right hon. Friend rightly said that an exemption would be granted in some cases, but he linked it only to cost. Will he consider some types of land where the ban will be a major problem?

Mr. Gummer: I think that I shall have to disappoint my hon. Friend on that score. I do not envisage there being exemptions in those circumstances. There may be a few circumstances in which it would not be proper or safe not to allow some kind of burning, but we would raise hopes that we could not meet if we suggested that certain types of land were suitable for straw burning and others were not. One of the problems has been that some farmers, who have burnt straw precisely in line with the best practice and the NFU code, have found that a change in the wind has rendered their straw burning dangerous.

Mr. Michael Lord (Suffolk, Central): My right hon. Friend will be aware that, although many people will welcome his announcement, many responsible cereal farmers in East Anglia will be rather anxious about it. There is no doubt that, since 1983, there have been great improvements in agricultural practice such as incorporation and the alternative use of straw. We welcome those, but my right hon. Friend will be aware that there are circumstances in which the only answer for farmers who want to get on to the land to get the next crop in is to burn. They will be saddened to hear that no loophole is to be left which enables them to burn straw in those circumstances. As only a selfish minority brought all this about, will my right hon. Friend consider making some provision for unusual circumstances in which burning is the only option?

Mr. Gummer: I am tempted to take the route that my hon. Friend suggests as his constituency and mine are immediately adjacent and my constituents are among those who will be most hard hit by the ban, but although I recognise that fact, I have concluded that it is not possible to operate a licensing system in a narrow way. I do not see how it is possible to have a system in which bureaucrats say, "You can burn here, but not there" without their being responsible for the damage and danger that burning entails.

As a reasonable period of time has been allowed for our constituents to come to terms with the ban, I think that we should not have straw burning except in circumstances which will be very narrowly defined and which probably relate only to certain crops, of which I gave an example, for which alternative methods are simply not available.

Mr. James Paice (Cambridgeshire, South-East): Will my right hon. Friend confirm that this action has been taken because a minority of farmers have flouted the regulations year after year? That is where the blame must be attached if people wish to attach blame.

Does my right hon. Friend recognise that considerations with regard to nitrates are important, especially for farmers in areas which have been designated as potential nitrate-sensitive zones? When he draws up regulations for such zones, will he ensure that the fact that straw incorporation requires extra nitrogen is recognised so that farmers in my constituency and similar areas are not jeopardised?

Mr. Gummer: I shall certainly consider carefully the effect of the ban on nitrate-sensitive areas. I assure my hon. Friend of that. He is right to say that the activities of a small minority have let down the vast majority, who have been very anxious to keep the practice within bounds.

Once again, we must observe that the trouble for farmers is often that they are judged not by the average, nor by the best, but by the few who get into the newspapers and are not fair examples. Nevertheless, this year, a number of the serious accidents which appear to have occurred were the result of perfectly proper straw burning which was affected by a change in the weather.

Mr. Andy Stewart (Sherwood): My right hon. Friend's statement will be widely welcomed, but it will not be terribly popular down on the farm because bale carting is a lousy job. We recognise that 2 per cent. of the population cannot dictate to the majority and I welcome what my right hon. Friend has said, but there will be a danger from accidental, uncontrolled fires. Moreover, the accusation that his protection of the environment from straw burning is cosmetic may be levelled at my right hon. Friend because the use of nitrates and chemicals could be much worse.

Mr. Gummer: I might be accused of that, but it would not be true. One need not worry too much if one is accused only of things that are untrue. I am not too worried about such an accusation because it will not stick.

I hope that my hon. Friend agrees that the farming community has a major role to play, looking after 80 per cent. of the land surface of Britain. We owe a great deal to farmers for what they have done. They have protected the countryside and continue to do so. One of the reasons why the ban is necessary is that straw burning sometimes makes the public so angry that what they owe to farmers is obscured.

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough and Horncastle): I welcome my right hon. Friend's statement because the action of a minority of farmers is giving a bad name to all. My right hon. Friend mentioned British Sugar. Is he aware of a company in my constituency which is researching how to make board out of straw and has received considerable support from the Government? Can he confirm that Government research grants will continue to be made available to such companies?

Mr. Gummer: Most research grants are provided by the Department of Trade and Industry and I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State that they will continue. My Ministry will continue to do what we have already done to make it possible to use straw more effectively in other ways.

Mr. Anthony Nelson (Chichester): I, too, welcome the ban. It will bring widespread relief to constituents in cereal-growing areas such as that which I represent and it will once and for all stop the atmosphere being used as an airborne dustbin for agricultural waste. As the ban will not come into effect for two or three years, will my right hon. Friend confirm that in the meantime every effort will be made to encourage local authorities to pass model byelaws and enforce them, and to ensure that the voluntary code of practice is strictly observed?

Mr. Gummer: I thank my hon. Friend for those observations. I hope that the code of practice will be considerably tightened and widely implemented, and that prosecutions will continue to be brought where necessary. Above all, I want the farming community to recognise that it can do a great deal for its image if only it is prepared to show the public how concerned it is about the problem.

Mr. Quentin Davies (Stamford and Spalding): I congratulate my right hon. Friend on facing, with characteristic decisiveness, a problem which undoubtedly needed to be tackled, but may I ask him for a detailed economic assessment of the costs that the measure will impose on the British farming community? Even in Lincolnshire, part of which I represent, where we have highly efficient farming and some of the best land in the country, the farming community cannot bear increased economic burdens at present. May we have the benefit of such an economic assessment before the House considers the Bill?

Mr. Gummer: I thank my hon. Friend for his first comment. It may sound a little churlish to say that what he asks for is not possible. Over the next three years, alternatives will emerge, even in areas where alternatives are currently thought to be impossible. That has happened in my own constituency. Over the past two or three years, farmers who swore to me that it was impossible not to burn straw have found alternative methods which are less expensive than straw burning. If those cases are not atypical, I suspect that there will be many more in the next three years. Any economic assessment which did not take that into account would be unrealistic.

Mr. Henry Bellingham (Norfolk, North-West): Is my right hon. Friend aware that, the vast majority of parish councils in west Norfolk will welcome today's statement? I am sure that many insects and species of birds, especially the English partridge, will also welcome it. Is my right hon. Friend aware that, although the vast majority of farmers will be able to alter their techniques, some small marshland farmers in the fenland area of my constituency will have problems? Will he consider their particular difficulties?

Mr. Gummer: Under the terms of what I have said, I am happy to look at any particular problems that my hon. Friend raises. I am also glad that he has taken it upon himself to become the spokesman for the insects and birds of his constituency and elsewhere. Among other problems, straw burning has deprived us of much wildlife which should be retained. Like my hon. Friend, I am especially pleased that this measure will help in the retention and expansion of the English partridge.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry that I have been unable to call the three hon. Members who are rising. I shall bear their claims in mind when we come to agriculture questions.

Points of Order

5.32 pm

Mr. Barry Jones (Alyn and Deeside): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I draw to your attention questions for written answer Nos. 343 and 344 on today's Order Paper, which concern the important matter of the poll tax in Wales? They appear to be a device to bypass an accepted convention of the House—for a Cabinet Minister to explain his actions and to answer questions orally in the House. I seek your guidance. The people of Wales hate the poll tax, as the Secretary of State for Wales knows. That is why we think that he is running away and that his subterfuge is a disgrace. We seek your help and assistance.

Mr. Ted Rowlands (Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it on the same matter?

Mr. Rowlands: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: As it is on the same matter, I shall take it, so that I can answer all the points raised at once. However, if it is an unrelated matter, I would rather not take it now.

Mr. Rowlands: Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. This House is founded on the fundamental principle of the financial accountability of the Executive to the House, especially when there are new fiscal impositions on our communities and people. The poll tax is a new tax, which will be double the cost of the current rates for many in my constituency. Surely there must be some remedy through you, Mr. Speaker, or perhaps you have a remedy to ensure that the question of fiscal accountablility of Ministers is considered on such a fundamental issue. You should be able to help us to make the Minister give a statement.

Mr. Win Griffiths (Bridgend): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. As I recall, my hon. Friend the Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) made a protest when the Secretary of State for the Environment made a statement on the poll tax for England and we were promised that there would be a statement by the Welsh Office on this matter. However, we are now being bypassed and experiencing government by press release. I hope that we have a positive——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I shall deal with this, as there is pressure on the subsequent debate. The hon. Gentleman and the whole House know that I am not responsible for whether statements are made. There has to be some balance in these matters. We have had two statements today and if we had more, very little time would be left for debate. I am not responsible; it is a matter for the Government.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan (Cardiff, West): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. Are you saying that the Secretary of State for Wales asked whether he could make a statement and that you told him——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman knows that if the Secretary of State for Wales asks to make a statement —and it is a courtesy for him to ask permission—he makes it. I cannot stop that.

Mr. Morgan rose——

Mr. Speaker: No, I have dealt with the matter.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I can help. The Secretary of State for Wales has many duties to perform. I do not know why he has not turned up to provide the necessary information on the poll tax, but I know that he spent a lot of time yesterday in the Tea Room with a lot of Tory wets organising voting——

Mr. Speaker: Order. That has nothing to do with this matter.

Mr. Ray Powell (Ogmore): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that it may not be within your domain to decide on this matter because we are raising the question of the Secretary of State for Wales making a statement. However, you will recall the times that we have sat in this Chamber when the Scottish poll tax has been debated and the number of times that questions were asked of the Secretary of State for Scotland. Surely you should ensure that on the issue of the poll tax in Wales the Secretary of State enables Back Bench Members in particular to question him on his deliberations and decisions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must repeat to the hon. Member and to other hon. Members who may be thinking of questioning me on this that it is not a matter for me. It is a matter for the Leader of the House and I am surprised that it was not raised with him earlier. There was plenty of opportunity then and he is the man responsible.

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Have you invited the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon), who is a Whip, to stand near you during Prime Minister's Question Time? I noticed today that he seemed to be muttering names to you——

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is not the sort of question I expect and I am surprised that the hon. Gentleman should even mention such a matter. I take no notice of anyone standing at my elbow, although it is true that my secretary stands here to note whether a member of the Front Bench gets up. But I take no notice of anyone else who may stand by the Chair and I certainly do not appreciate hon. Members whispering to me at Question Time, or at any other time.

Mr. Andrew Welsh (Angus, East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I genuinely seek your guidance on a point of order regarding Standing Order No. 130 on the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs and a situation that I fear is heading towards plain unfairness. The Leader of the House said today that your ruling yesterday was in a different context from the matter that I raised regarding Standing Order No. 130. I presume that he meant the debate on 20 December 1988 in which the House decided that it

"recognises the inability of the Committee of Selection to nominate Members to serve on the Scottish Affairs Committee."—[Official Report, 20 December 1988; Vol. 144, c. 393.]

The Committee is not unable to select hon. Members to serve; there are plenty who are willing to serve. It is, rather, unwilling to nominate hon. Members to serve, which is a very different matter. How can one be bound by Standing Orders and yet not have the power to implement them? Surely all Standing Orders have equal validity and are equally binding. In that context, I ask for a further ruling not only on Standing Order No. 20, but on Standing Order No. 130.

[Mr. Andrew Welsh]

Mr. Speaker: I was dealing with a different matter yesterday, but I can answer the hon. Gentleman. Standing Order No. 130 states that there shall be a Select Committee, but Standing Order No. 104 states how it should be set up. The House passed a resolution on 20 December 1988 saying that the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs should not be set up.

Mr. Rowlands: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. You chided us gently for not taking our other parliamentary opportunity with the Leader of the House. However, the answer about which we are complaining is a written answer this afternoon. As you know, no Back-Bench Member would know the reply to a parliamentary question until after 3.30 pm. We did not have the chance to take the opportunity you have mentioned.

Mr. Speaker: I received notice from a number of hon. Members before I came into the Chair at 2.30 pm that this point might be raised. The answer probably was available and should have been raised in the way I suggested.

Mr. Barry Jones: Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker, and, I hope, in assistance to you. What has been released this afternoon by the Secretary of State for Wales is a detailed statement involving several billion pounds as it affects every adult on the poll tax in Wales and every borough, district, and county authority in Wales. Can you help in any way, Mr. Speaker, by bringing to the House now a Minister from the Welsh Office so that that Minister can answer for the serious matters mentioned in the Secretary of State's statement?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Gentleman knows that that is not within my power. However, he has virtually done it himself by making that request. I am sure that those on the Government Front Bench will have heard what he said.

Statutory Instruments, &c.

Mr. Speaker: With the leave of the House, I shall put together the Questions on the four motions relating to statutory instruments.

Ordered,

That the draft Education Support Grants (Amendment) Regulations 1989 be referred to a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c.

That the draft National Savings Bank (Investment Deposits) (Limits) (Amendment) Order 1989 be referred to a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c.

That the Bovine Offal (Prohibition) Regulations 1989 (S.I., 1989, No. 2061) be referred to a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c.

That the Social Security (Unemployment, Sickness and Invalidity Benefit) Amendment No. 3 Regulations 1989 (S.I., 1989, No. 2122) be referred to a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c.—[Mr. Sackville.]

Public Accounts

5.40 pm

Mr. Robert Sheldon (Ashton-under-Lyne): I beg to move,

That this House takes note of the 37th to 40th and 42nd to 52nd Reports of the Committee of Public Accounts of Session 1987-88, of the 1st to 33rd Reports of Session 1988-89 and of the Treasury Minutes and Northern Ireland Department of Finance and Personnel Memorandum on those Reports (Cm. 533, 563, 624, 648, 697, 717, 747, 831 and 850), with particular reference to the following Reports:—

1987-88:

Forty-fourth, Quality of service to the public at DHSS local offices;

Forty-eighth, Sale of Royal Ordnance plc.

1988-89:

First, Management of the collections of the English national museums and galleries;

Twenty-sixth, Coronary heart disease;

Twenty-eighth, Backlog of maintenance of motorways and trunk roads;

Thirty-first, Reliability and maintainability of defence equipment.

The last such debate was on 3 November 1988 when 30 reports were covered by the motion. Now we are dealing with 48 reports and nine Government replies. The motion is in my name and that of the hon. Member for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw), who is such an assiduous and valuable member of the Committee. As on recent occasions, we have chosen a few reports to highlight, although reference to many of the others will be acceptable in the debate.

I should like to thank the Committee, which is hard-working and meets twice a week. There are many papers to read. The civil servants involved naturally present their case with a great volume of paper. Consequently, the weekends of many of my colleagues on the Committee are taken up with reading them. There is no doubt that in the distant past the Chairman on many occasions did all the work. He read all the papers and the amount of work done by other Committee members varied greatly. However, now we have a hard-working Committee which has provided great advantages to the reports that we produce.

During the time covered by the reports, we have lost four Labour Members from the Committee—my hon. Friends the Members for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien), for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers), for Redcar (Ms. Mowlam) and for Fife, Central (Mr. McLeish), who have all joined the Opposition Front Bench. It looks as if the Opposition Front Bench is looking to the Public Accounts Committee for recruits. It is a measure of the type of ability that we have been able to acquire that, although the Committee has lost the advantage of having those people and their experience on the Committee, the advantage which they bring to the Opposition Front Bench is an understanding of many economic and financial matters.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): It is like a Government training scheme.

Mr. Sheldon: It is a little more than a Government training scheme. It copies the way in which the Government use their Whips Office. The method that we use is preferable to that.

Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North): It is a valuable experience. There is a vacancy on the Committee and if my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) wishes to join us, he would be most welcome.

Mr. Sheldon: I shall deal with the issue raised during the statement made by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. I regret—as does the Committee—the leaking of confidential memoranda. The Committee receives many confidential memoranda dealing with sensitive matters concerning defence, security and others. If it were felt that those were now in jeopardy, the work of the Committee would be seriously affected. After it receives those confidential memoranda, the Committee decides which of them shall be published and what parts should be available to public scrutiny. With the exception of only a few—and only parts of those—all our investigative sessions are in public since we believe that there is great advantage in letting the public in on our work so as to give them knowledge and understanding of what we do.

The new Financial Secretary to the Treasury is now a member of the Committee. In line with tradition, he does not attend very often but when he does—whenever time and interest allow—we welcome him. We both proceed on similar lines as the Treasury wants to obtain value for money and so does the Committee. Naturally, there are differences between members of the Committee and the Financial Secretary, but on value for money we are at one and we hope that that will long remain. The previous Financial Secretary, the right hon. Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont), understood that well. We have an enormous advantage in that we have unanimity within the Committee. Without exception, all our reports are unanimous.

Mr. Skinner: That is the problem;.

Mr. Sheldon: It is not a problem; it is an advantage. If we were divided, the Government need not take any notice of our reports. Unlike any other Committee, we are there to provide value for money whether it concerns Royal Ordnance factories or the sale of Rover. Many other Committees can decide on questions of policy. We are concerned not with policy but with the taxpayers' interests.

Mr. Skinner: Is my right hon. Friend saying that we come to the House to take part in the sloppy consensus which he describes in producing unanimous reports? Is he saying that, after a decade of swindles both by the Government and by private entrepreneurs, Tory Members will connive with Labour Members searching for the truth in order to embarrass the Government? There was a £200 million swindle at Ferranti over defence contracts and now there is another swindle at Rover. Despite those giant swindles, this happy consensus never arrives at a conclusion—because of the lack of conflict—until it is all over.

Mr. Sheldon: I do not think that my hon. Friend has read the reports. If he had, he would see that we have made serious criticisms——

Mr. Skinner: It is too late.

Mr. Sheldon: Of course it is late but we operate only after the full investigation. We cannot proceed until we obtain full information as to what happened. We then produce the report. As I have said, we have made serious criticisms of the Administration. If my hon. Friend reads the reports he will see those criticisms. Every one of my hon. Friend's points as to the failure to obtain value for money is dealt with in those reports.

Mr. Michael Shersby (Uxbridge): In considering the point made by the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), does the right hon. Gentleman agree that often the Committee's deliberations are extremely effective? Does he recall the investigation into corruption in the Property Services Agency and the results of that investigation which led to the virtual instant dismissal of the head of that agency? Surely that is action.

Mr. Sheldon: That is true and the same applies to defence contracts. When the chairmanship of the Committee was held by Harold Wilson, he understood the importance of the Public Accounts Committee in exposing some of the Ferranti and other defence matters of the time. I pay tribute to him. He was the Chairman who initiated those investigations. There are no fewer investigations today; if anything, there are rather more of them because the National Audit Office finds out about these matters more effectively.

The Committee has an important task in exposing occasions when there has been a failure to obtain value for money for the taxpayer. It is its dislike of the taxpayer being rooked that is the cause of the Committee's unanimity. When we leave the Committee we return to our usual political affiliations. Many of our members are vocal in this House on political matters, but when it comes to value for money we are united in our determination to achieve it.

Mr. Allen: My hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) has made a strong and genuine argument about the role of this House and its Committees, but if this House and its Committees are to hold the Government to account, which is our role, almost by definition we can account only for what has already happened—and the Public Accounts Committee is foremost in that role. It is a retrospective role, but I hope that all hon. Members will agree that it is a valuable one.

Mr. Sheldon: I am grateful for that remark. I wish that my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover would pay a visit to hear some of our deliberations—attendance at the Committee is certainly open to him. I should dearly like him to see the questioning of those who are responsible for spending the money by members of the Committee. He would hear vigorous questioning by members on both sides of the Committee.

Mr. Skinner: I have to tell my right hon. Friend that there is a question of hypocrisy here. I did not agree with the setting up of Select Committees. I do not believe that the combination of Tories and Labour Members in this sort of consensus is valuable——

Mr. Allen: We do it every day.

Mr. Skinner: This is a place where conflict between arguments takes place. Having opposed the setting up of Select Committees, I have no intention of being hypocritical and joining them. If my right hon. Friend wants to continue the work that he says is so valuable, that is for him to decide, but I have no wish to be involved. If he wants to connive with the Tories and any other rag, tag and bobtails that is his business. I have not come here to do that: I am here to attack the Tory Government and their supporters day in and day out.

[Mr. Skinner]

Mr. Sheldon: I understand my hon. Friend's position on Select Committees—he does not like them. Most hon. Members disagree with him about that——

Mr. Skinner: That does not matter to me.

Mr. Sheldon: Select Committees have produced investigations of enormous value to everyone. Questions may be asked across the Floor of the House, and they are valuable, but they do not pursue the detail. Again and again the truth has been found by such pursuit, and only repeated questioning brings out what happened. If my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover doubts that, I suggest that he comes along on Monday, when we begin examining the sale of Rover and when we shall discover information which he, despite his great talents for parliamentary procedure, would be unable to obtain for himself.

I turn now to the work that the National Audit Office does. We work closely with it because it provides the information, and we deal with how that information came about. Why was the money spent? How could it have been spent better? How could it have been spent more efficiently and effectively? We and the NAO are a partnership. The Committee depends on the NAO's investigations, which are based on an examination of Government papers. We discuss with the NAO the lines of inquiry that it is pursuing.

I want first briefly to mention the fourth report of the Session 1988-89 which deals with the National Audit Office's estimates and corporate plan. The NAO, using fewer staff, is producing more reports and undertaking more investigations of value for money. That is a tribute to the efficiency with which the NAO, under John Bourn, is progressing. I am pleased that John Bourn's first full year as Comptroller and Auditor General has gone so well. He has complete discretion over which investigations to choose, but we also feed in our views.

John Bourn has slightly fewer than 1,000 staff, whom he needs to keep Government value for money under review. I want to mention David Wyland, who has retired as Deputy Comptroller and Auditor General after 40 years in the NAO. There is now a new head of the Northern Ireland Audit Office—Dr. Bill Jack—and he and his staff play an important role. They were rather poor relations of the NAO in Great Britain, but following Denis Calvert's work on the De Lorean affair the Northern Ireland Office became rather more important; we discovered it had a hidden strength that we had not appreciated and the work it has done has given it a higher profile among members of our Committee.

The accounting officers—the permanent secretaries who are responsible for spending public money and who appear before us—take their responsibility seriously and spend a great deal of time preparing for meetings with the Committee so that they can answer the questions that we put to them. In the previous Session about 220 recommendations were made by the Public Accounts Committee, about 200 of which the Government accepted. The numbers are about the same for this Session.

We have the great advantage of hindsight. It is up to the Committee to ensure that we are not overwhelmed by it so that we fail to take into account how the situation appeared at the time to the permanent secretary making his or her decision. Within the bounds of what is humanly possible, we do not do too badly.

Fraud and corruption are the most important matters that we examine. I urge my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover to acknowledge that that was one of the main reasons why the Committee was set up in the last century. However important value for money is, it must always come second to ensuring that fraud and corruption are kept to a minimum. Our most important task is to come down strongly on cases of fraud and corruption. It is not enough to reflect what happens in the country at large; when dealing with public money we have a much greater responsibility than when dealing with private money. The Committee has always held that to be so and will continue so to do.

The first report with which I shall deal is about the health services. The great advantage now is that we are taking them more seriously than we used to. We used not to examine them in detail, but now we look into them closely and we have produced a number of reports on them. Generally, our task is not difficult—we look at what the Government intend to spend their money on and ask what their objective is. How do they come to decide that they will launch a certain programme? We ask that their objectives be closely defined—it is no good coming up with a general proposition. We want clear objectives, monitoring during the implementation of the programme and an assessment of the ultimate results. We want to be able to compare objective and achievement. That is not difficult, but in practice it fails miserably on a number of occasions.

One case involved administrators in the National Health Service. The laudable aim of reducing the number of top administrators was held to be a matter of Government policy. We do not question Government policy, which is up to the Government. We want to ensure that, once the Government have decided on a policy, they carry it out in the most effective, efficient and economical manner. We found that the Government had no clear plan about how many administrators expected to go or how much it would cost. At the end of the scheme, they did not seem to know how many had actually gone. We suspected that a number of them had been re-employed in other parts of the National Health Service. Those are important matters.

I shall briefly mention the third book of Sir Leo Pliatzky who was a distinguished civil servant, a second permanent secretary to the Treasury and the permanent secretary to the Department of Trade. In the third of his splendid books, which are well worth reading and deal with public expenditure, he mentioned that the National Audit Office advocated the spending of money. With a true Treasury background, he did not agree with that. However, the National Audit Office does not really advocate that.

In a number of our reports, we say that it is worth spending money if, as a result, much more money is saved. An obvious example is the repair of the fabric of buildings. Clearly, we could let a building deteriorate and save money or have a proper system of maintaining the building's fabric which would not be spending money, but an economical use of the building and the way in which it is dealt with. It was that sort of spending that the National Audit Office had in mind.

The auditor's role today is not what it used to be; there has been a fundamental change. Years ago, auditors were civil servants who added up figures to ensure that the money went to the right people for the right purposes. That was splendid and crucial. However, in addition to that, the auditor's role today is to ask whether what is being done is sensible. When a company or finance director has a meeting with the auditors of the company, they tell him or her why they are proposing certain actions. They do not just add up and say that the director has to pay a certain amount of tax, but go into the matter with care. They say, "You can save money if you do it another way" or, "You can make much more effective use of your resources if you handle them in a different way." That is the role of today's auditors. The trouble is that a number of people do not realise the change that has taken place.

In the National Audit Office today, there are auditors with qualifications. One of our problems is that they are tempted away by a number of accountancy firms which want them because they have a level of expertise which will be valuable to them. With rates of pay as they are in Government or associated services, of which we are one, that is one of our problems. However, it shows that those people not only have the advantage of being auditors but, by seeing the other Government Departments, can spread information and understanding between one Department and another and between Government and the private sector about the best practices to be adopted. The relationship between the National Audit Office and the private sector is considerable, and the two are able to have a great deal of cross-fertilisation.

The first point I shall deal with in relation to the National Health Service is coronary heart disease. The twenty-sixth report of the Session 1988-89 showed that 180,000 people of working age died each year from coronary heart disease within their working lives—which is the important aspect. That cost the National Health Service £500 million a year. That is bad. What are the Government and the National Health Service doing about it? They are spending about £10 million. Therefore, the problem is costing £500 million and £10 million is being used to try to reduce the incidence of coronary heart disease.

We could look at the figures and say that they are wrong because there may be other factors involved. There are, but they are all on the same side. Ten years ago, the incidence of coronary heart disease in this country was roughly the same as in many other comparable industrial countries. During those 10 years, a number of those countries have experienced rapidly declining levels of heart disease. Our level has come down a little, but hardly at all, and in Scotland the level is still high. We can forget the money, although that obviously concerns us. Apart from the money, such disease causes misery, anxiety, worry and other problems which arise when the breadwinner, or often another member of the family, fails to make a proper recovery in hospital.

Paragraph 42 of our report states:

"We acknowledge that the medical profession have a major role to play in the development and introduction of new treatments. However, we are surprised that the Department consider that they do not have a more positive contribution to make in this area. The wider use of cost-effective treatments has major value for money implications and we would expect the Department to keep very closely in touch with possible developments and to take positive action to encourage the introduction of new treatments once these have been shown to be both medically acceptable and cost-effective."

We hope that the Department will take a different approach to those problems.

We go on to say that there is a serious mismatch between the resources and the demand for cardiac treatment. We deal with bypass graft operations and the fact that they are in short supply. In the Treasury minute, which is the response of the Government and the National Health Service, the Government accept that many deaths and disabilities caused by the disease can be prevented or reduced. With regard to the value of preventive campaigns, we understand from the minute that the Government accept that they will be given more impetus. The development of quantified targets is also being considered.

We like quantification. We know that there are limitations, and that in some cases quantification is difficult or almost impossible. However, we like the attempt to be made to quantify if only because we can check what is being done. We realise the reasons, difficulties and limitations. We understand the way that the Government are able to work. We strongly emphasise the quantification of achievements and, particularly, targets. The Government accept that there should be more emphasis on prevention rather than treatment, and we look forward to seeing that.

The fiftieth report of the Session 1987-88 deals with the issue of operating theatres and their use in the National Health Service. We looked at this because we knew, as does every hon. Member, that serious problems exist involving bottlenecks when certain surgery is undertaken. We asked where the bottlenecks mainly occurred. The National Audit Office found that they arose essentially in operating theatres in the National Health Service. To our surprise, we found that not much more than half of the operating theatres' available use was utilised. I am talking about not weekends or evenings, but the working day and week.

Some of the reasons why the operating theatres were not available were understandable and due to patients getting better or worse. However, we found that even when this led to cancellations, a system should have been devised so that those lower down the queue could be brought forward. The failure of consultants to turn up to carry out operations was a contributory factor in the failure to make the best possible use of operating theatres.

These were serious matters and accordingly the Committee produced a number of recommendations and submitted them in the report. One recommendation was that a record should be kept of areas in which there had been some improvement as a result of carrying out checks. I was pleased to receive this morning a copy of "Efficiency of Theatre Services", which has been published by the Association of Anaesthetists of Great Britain and Ireland and the Association of Surgeons of Great Britain and Ireland.

I should explain that after the Committee's report was published we ran into much opposition. It was alleged that we were criticising the consultants. I find the summary of their recommendations extremely valuable. They say that there should be close collaboration between surgical teams and admitting officers and a regular revision of waiting lists. They support many recommendations which were opposed initially. I am grateful for their assistance.

[Mr. Sheldon]

We are always concerned about defence expenditure because it involves extremely large sums. I shall begin with the forty-eighth report on the royal ordnance factories. The turnover in 1986 was £550 million. We may differ on privatisations and the value of those operations, but the members of the Committee do not differ—I hope that there is not too much difference among hon. Members in the Chamber—on the need to get value for money for taxpayers.

The royal ordnance factories were sold off to British Aerospace for £190 million. That sum was effectively set off by various expenses amounting to about £50 million. We expressed concern that the Ministry did not explore possible redevelopment at Waltham Abbey or Enfield, and did not obtain a valuation based on redevelopment. The Committee noted that the taxpayer will not benefit from any redevelopment that is carried out by British Aerospace.

Valuation concerns us greatly. It can be taken for granted that it is important in any privatisation operation to obtain value for money. There must, however, be proper valuation. It is said that some privatisations can proceed on the basis that we look for the best price that we can get and accept that as the only price and the only way that the undertakings can be sold off. Another approach is to secure a proper and realistic valuation that is based upon all possible different uses of the undertaking that the Government wish to sell. That is the proper approach. I do not think that any individual would sell anything valuable without obtaining a proper valuation. That applies to a house or an object of great rarity, whatever it may be. Once a proper valuation has been secured, it is possible to compare that with what it is possible to obtain on a sale. If the sale price falls very much below the realistic valuation, it is open to the vendor to delay the sale.

I am worried that there have been few delays of sales while an examination is made of the way in which a sale will go ahead. The Committee has come down again and again in favour of tranches of sales. So often we sell a company or industry in one go, but gilts are sold in bits. They are sold over a period after a study of the market. Sales take place when it is assessed that the market is right, and it is a sophisticated exercise, but that has not been done in the privatisation of public undertakings. If an undertaking is sold in tranches and those who are concerned get it wrong in one instance, only a limited sum is involved. If that is done, it is possible to get a better price or a different price when a reassessment has taken place of the value of that which is being sold.

The Government acknowledged that those who were in control of the royal ordnance factories had been exploring the redevelopment of the Waltham Abbey and Enfield sites. They knew also that they had reached no definite conclusions. There was no proper alternative-use valuation because it was considered that that would produce a lesser figure than the existing use valuation. We have not completed our investigations into the royal ordnance factories, but the factories have been sold. We have had the benefit of an investigative session with the consultants, who told us something about the methods of valuation that were available. It was a most valuable session, and it will form part of our subsequent report.

The forty-seventh report deals with major defence projects for the Session 1987-88. Each year we examine the major projects to ascertain whether we are getting value for money and to compare the actual expenditure with that which was anticipated. We studied a useful production of information entitled "Learning from Experience". We found that, within an equipment budget of £8·5 billion to £9 billion, £3 billion to £4 billion of expenditure was not foreseen when the projects were started. About half of the costs were incurred when the project entered full development, when we would have expected the sums involved to be more clearly understood and confirmed. This dismayed us greatly.

We look forward to considerable improvements in the Ministry of Defence. Sir Peter Levene has impressed the Committee in two respects in particular. The first involves competition. Sir Peter has stated again and again that he is trying to get more competition and that he has obtained it in several areas of production. There are, however, areas where it is not possible to obtain competition when dealing with large-scale projects, although it is possible to get it for some of the subcontracts. Sir Peter has asked for all subcontracts to be available for competition. We hope that in due course this will improve matters considerably. We look forward to evaluating the progress in due course.

A smaller but important matter is that we are paying rather more for some of the articles that are held in stores than we probably should. The Committee had much in mind the experience of the United States. Mr. Bowsher, who is the opposite number of the Comptroller and Auditor General in the United States, will be visiting us next week to give us the benefit of his advice, especially on defence projects and expenditure upon them.

It was found in the United States that they were paying about $1,300 for what appeared to be an ordinary ashtray that could be bought anywhere. The horrifying thought that occurred to me and many of my colleagues was, "How can we be sure that the same sort of thing is not happening here?"

Sir Peter said that the price of each article that is held in store should be made known so that when someone goes to the store and asks for an ashtray, or whatever, there will be an explosion when he finds that it will cost $1,300. That seems to be a simple and effective approach. The difficulty that Sir Peter experienced was in convincing those who supply articles to the Government that it would be in the interests of the Government, and possibly in their own interests, to adopt that approach. The suppliers said that they would not like others to know their prices.

It is easy to become a cynic. The Committee is not cynical—and I hope that it never will be—but it is somewhat sceptical about some of the claims. It is right to enter the discussions with that in mind. I understand that a number of companies have now accepted that idea, and we look forward to the results in due course.

The thirty-first report in the Session 1988-89 deals with the reliability and maintainability of defence equipment. Paragraph 3 states:

"The Department have for many years been concerned about the reliability and maintainability of equipment purchased from Defence contractors. The Royal Air Force have estimated that unreliability currently costs it £500 million, or 20 per cent. of its annual operating budget. Based on this, the Services have estimated that unreliability adds over £1 billion a year to support costs."

I understand that the Department believes that half of that amount is available for saving. That is important because half of the RAF fast jet fleet is not available at any particular time because of maintainability and reliability problems. We must ensure that safeguards are built in when the equipment is ordered. There must be an agreement so that the problems are dealt with then. We were surprised to hear that only 30 specialists are dealing with that matter in a Department with a procurement budget of £9 billion. If reliability cannot be assured at a critical time, there could be serious consequences. We are concerned about the rundown of the planned reliability and maintainability activities by contractors, and we want that to be improved.

In the Government's response, the Department agreed that the annual costs of unreliability at more than £1 billion were too high. It accepted that a sustained programme was needed to produce savings. It undertook to take positive and effective action to implement the recommendations of its management consultants who had investigated the problem. We look forward to an improvement. I am sorry that my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover is not with us. One of the great advantages is that the Committee does not take anything for granted. It will return again and again to these and other problems, and the Department knows that. It is aware of our interest and that we shall continue to look for improvements and changes.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): When the Committee returns to an examination of the royal ordnance factories, will it examine the circumstances surrounding ROF Bishopton, in Renfrewshire?

Mr. Sheldon: We are examining the whole sale again, with the advantage of the further report from the Comptroller and Auditor General.

The twentieth report of the Session 1988-89 deals with urban development corporations. A number of problems made the Committee feel rather uneasy. On the subject of controls over the disposals of land for development, paragraph 19 states:

"The Corporation had generally sold land for commercial development by private negotiation rather than by inviting tenders from prospective developers. In 15 of the 16 cases examined, the NAO found that valuers' certificates had been obtained after sale negotiations had been completed, and were therefore less useful and provided less assurance on bids than independent pre-tender valuations."

The House will note that the language used in the report was restrained, which is typical of the Public Accounts Committee. We do not like to shout too loudly because there are always some horrors lurking that might demand a louder voice.

The London Docklands development corporation told the Committee that it had revised its valuation procedures and that in future the valuation of its properties for annual accounting purposes would be supplemented by valuation of individual sites before negotiations began and again at their conclusion. One example cited was that of a leaseholder who had sold his lease for about 10 times the amount that he had paid to the corporation two years previously. Although the transaction entailed a greatly increased scale of development, the LDDC was unable to secure any additional premium.

We need to be very careful when dealing with public money because it is much more sacrosanct than private money. Inefficiencies are sometimes associated with that —not too many, I hope—but it is important to remember that when people pay their taxes they must feel that they are paying them to incorruptible, sensible people who will be accountable for that money. People can take a flier in private industry, but we cannot do that when we are safeguarding other people's money. It is important that we conduct our affairs accordingly.

Paragraph 28 states:

"We are concerned that the Department and the Corporation did not pursue the question of profit participation more forcefully with the original consortium; and we believe they should have taken much more positive steps to review the position as part of the negotiations in mid-1987."

Paragraph 29 states:

"we recommend that the Department should require all Urban Development Corporations to take a tough stance in land negotiations, and in particular to seek an equitable return to the taxpayer in any future schemes where developers have the prospects of exceptionally high profits."

It is one of the safeguards that, if there are to be some unforeseen advantages, the taxpayer should have the confidence that part of them will come back to him. It is an essential part of the process.

I wish now to deal with another report, in which our language becomes a little more extreme. It is the first report in the Session 1988-89 on the management of the collections of the English national museums and galleries. We are dealing with the nation's historical, cultural and artistic heritage. In the last century we were fortunate to have great wealth, much greater than any other country, with resources available throughout the world to acquire enormously important and valuable collections of works of art and of cultural interest. They were collected at a time when there were a number of wealthy collectors. As we shall never again achieve the sort of world dominance that we achieved in the last century, we must carry out the wishes of those who gave those collections to our national museums and art galleries. The problem is that we are selling them.

I wish to make a personal observation which has nothing to do with the Committee. I apologise for intruding into the debate personal observations. Italy does not allow the export of much of its works of art—and, heaven knows, it has by far the largest proportion of works of art. It does not allow export, but unfortunately we do. It is our duty and responsibility sensibly to look after and cherish our works of art.

Paragraph 4 says:

"The British Museum and the Victoria and Albert Museum, in common with other national museums, face major concerns in the management of their collections. Over significant areas of the collections the position is deteriorating steadily, and in others it is at best being contained or only very slowly improved."

We looked at three institutions, but there are many others where we do not know what is happening, although we have our suspicions. It behoves anyone who has any responsibility in this area to take note of what we say about the three collections that we examined and the importance that we attach to them.

In paragraph 18 on the British museum and the Victoria and Albert museum we said:

[Mr. Sheldon]

"The National Audit Office . . . examination identified many examples of objects stored in cramped, chaotic and overcrowded conditions, including a lack of temperature or humidity controls or air filtration systems."

Paragraph 20 goes on to say:

"The backlog of conservation work was a particularly disturbing part of the C&AG's Report. There were serious conservation problems in a number of areas and in some respects the position was worsening all the time."

It goes on to point out that

"for example, 128 years had elapsed before a comprehensive survey of the National Art Library was carried out in 1985 which revealed serious and extensive problems with damage and deterioration, with major and minor repairs needed to thousands of valuable books and manuscripts. The Victoria and Albert Museum accepted frankly that this 'was a national disaster' and agreed that it"— these are damning words, some of the most serious in our report—

"'represented lasting and irreparable damage to some of the national heritage.'"

In paragraph 21 on paper conservation at the Victoria and Albert museum we say:

"On present staffing levels backlog conservation in this area alone was estimated at 200 years."

That is unacceptable. We are talking about priceless objects. We shall never have the opportunity to have such objects again. I hear of water pouring through the roof, irreparably damaging part of our national heritage, and of someone knocking over an expensive vase. These things belong to all of us, and it is shameful that we allow them to deteriorate. I was pleased to see that the Minister for the Arts received a substantial increase in funding, but I will be surprised if it is enough.

It must be understood that the PAC is not a spending body. We are urging spending for the purpose of conservation and the conservation or maintenance of what we own as a sensible way to proceed. Anyone who does not look to the roof of his house because he is trying to save money would be rightly condemned, not least by the PAC. If we do not look after our heritage, it will deteriorate. That is a foolish way to proceed and we draw attention to that whenever we see it.

The maintenance of roads is another area where, by failing to carry out repairs, we shall incur more expenditure in the end. The Committee expressed concern about the backlog in 1985-86, and we understood then that the Department's intention was to clear the backlog of maintaining motorways and trunk roads as quickly as possible. The Committee looked at the position again in 1989 and was concerned to find that progress had not continued. In 1988 we found that substantial funds, earmarked for maintenance, had been diverted to sustain new construction. The Committee estimated that the decision to transfer money from maintenance to new construction would lead to extra costs over the next three to four years and we doubted whether the benefits of new construction would outweigh the disadvantages of lost maintenance, but the Government did not agree.

It is much more attractive to open a new road or motorway than it is to start coning off and spending money on repairing the surface of a road. The sad thing is that the original decisions were so awful. Everyone knows that the state of our motorways is a scandal. They have far too short a life, and when they were built we did not even know which was the best method of construction. There were gaps in our knowledge and the main objective seemed to be to cut a new ribbon. However, the Department of Transport says that the elimination of backlogs remains a key objective. Of course it must remain so. But to what extent is the deterioration continuing, and how soon will it be before we have relatively cone-free roads able to take the traffic? That is the argument that we put forward to which we shall return on a number of other occasions.

Allied to that was the fifteenth report on road planning in the 1988-89 Session. That dealt with the way in which roads were being planned. The Department of Transport estimated the benefit to cost ratio as 1·9:1. Traffic flows are central to the appraisal, and the PAC examined those. We felt that back checking had been insufficient. Whenever estimates are made, they should be checked with the end result. That is the real source of knowledge. That is the way in which we can find out what went wrong so that we can learn for the future. We said that back checking is a vital ingredient of planning and control.

The National Audit Office looked at 41 schemes and found that 22 per cent. were within 20 per cent. of traffic forecasts. I will come in a moment to the way in which those figures were calculated. The rest, nearly half, varied from minus 50 per cent.—50 per cent. less traffic on the road than had been expected—to 105 per cent., and that was called reassuring.

In paragraph 14, the Committee did not accept

"that the Department's traffic flow forecasting is as reliable as it could and should be. We find their explanations of the variations that have occurred to be unconvincing; and we are concerned at the Department's reluctance to accept that there is a serious problem, which we feel verges on complacency."

We felt that to be a serious matter and regretted the method to calculate the figures. They were calculated on the increased level rather than the reduced one, so that the figures appeared to be almost double what they were. The figures were presented in far too favourable a light, and the Committee wanted to examine that further in due course.

Only one or two sessions a year of the PAC deal with Northern Ireland, but we cover a number of important matters each year. Let me take one to give the flavour of some of the criticisms that we have to make on the way in which public money is being applied. I refer to the twelfth report of the 1988-89 Session.

Up to 1980 the Northern Ireland Housing Executive had private insurance. It found that that was a relatively sensible way to proceed. Then it became a little worried at the size of the premiums, and it made changes. In the eight years from 1972-73 to 1979-80 it paid £1·69 million in insurance premiums. It then decided to terminate its insurance cover, and from April 1980 the executive carried its own risk for public liability claims. The claims increased from £1·6 million to £13·5 million over the next eight years, and there are claims for a further £19·8 million outstanding.

The Committee suspected that there were a number of fraudulent claims. The Department stated that

"although a number of fraudulent claims had been identified, it was impossible to quantify the size of the problem."

The Department also stated that it would contest more than one claim from a household, and that the computer enabled such occurrences to be identified. The Committee commented:

"We take a most serious view of fraud and we urge the Department and the Executive to do more to quantify the extent of this malpractice and to take all necessary steps to eradicate it."

In one instance, we found that claims for injury resulting from inadequate road repairs had been made by every householder on the estate in question. Clearly that suggests the possibility of fraud, and similar examples should be closely examined. We look forward to that being done. The Committee also recommended

"a system of inspection . . . which enables defects to be identified and repaired"

so that the possibility of claims can be reduced. Certain legal requirements make it more difficult to pursue such claims in England and Wales, and we asked that that aspect be examined with a view to conforming with the practices observed in England and Wales.

The next report to which I refer concerns the quality of service given to the public by Department of Social Security local offices, which is a problem of which members of the Committee have personal knowledge. We know that the 500 local offices deal with about 23 million callers each year. The Committee was told that callers wait for a much shorter time than it found to be the case. I put to Mr. France, the then permanent secretary to the Department, this matter:

"We have your assessment that waiting times"— that is, the time that elapses before a caller is seen by a counter clerk—

"averaged 24 minutes for supplementary benefit claimants and 7 minutes for contributory benefit claimants. We know from the Gallup survey"— which the National Audit Office commissioned—

"that their average waiting time is 70 minutes."

Naturally, the Committee was rather more impressed by the Gallup figures than by those of the Department.

We were provided with a fascinating insight into what happens in social security offices. Right hon. and hon. Members will have visited such offices on many occasions and seen the queues there for themselves. So when the members of the Committee were told that the average waiting time is only seven minutes, they knew that the Department's figure could not be right. We know what goes on in this world, and we were subsequently able to give advice on desirable improvements to the system.

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): Does my right hon. Friend accept that there is a disturbing consistency in the inaccuracy of the Department's statistics? I shall be alluding to that aspect in my contribution, if I am fortunate enough to catch your eye, Madam Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Sheldon: I am grateful for my hon. Friend's intervention.

Not only were the Department's statistics wrong, but problems arose in understanding the needs of claimants. There was wide variation between the requests made and the responses. A number of callers at DSS offices require only a little advice, but we found that some offices were very chary about divulging information on the benefits that are available, even though people have a right to ask Government Departments where they stand and how much they are entitled to receive.

Many offices provide a poor service. Piercy recommended four important improvements to help bring about an enhanced performance in offices whose standards fell below those required. It was found that claimants were not being provided with enough help and advice and that offices should play a more positive advisory role. When a person is in real trouble, that is the time when he needs the best possible advice. It is clearly wrong that people should be turned away with a curt dismissal.

The Committee suggested that surveys such as that which it had commissioned should be undertaken by all Departments having contact with the public to evaluate the effectiveness of their service. The Public Accounts Committee followed up the original Treasury minute with the third report of 1988-89. As a result of those two reports bearing on the same area of examination, the Department of Social Security implemented most of the recommendations. It accepts that desirable standards of service and delivery should be defined and monitored, is paying particular attention to offices performing below tolerable standards, and is promoting a more positive and consumer-friendly image. Customer opinion surveys will also be used to validate claimants' reactions to the service.

Dr. Godman: Did the then permanent secretary to the Department explain why results of test cases by social security commissioners are not conveyed to claimants who may be directly affected by them?

Mr. Sheldon: No, we did not examine that aspect—but my hon. Friend makes an important point. The result of test cases is the kind of information that is not being made available to claimants. Government Departments must realise that the people who come to them should be treated as customers. I tell any new agent that, whenever a person comes through the door of my constituency surgery, I am on that person's side—no matter what he says. That is an extreme example of a Member of Parliament having a rather different reaction from someone working in a social security office. Nevertheless, I want that approach to be adopted more widely. I want help to be given and surveys undertaken so that the right help is available to people at a time when they are often in great distress. I appreciate that it will take time for that to happen.

Many people compare the public service with the private sector, but that is not a fair comparison. In the private sector, anyone who comes through the door is treated as a customer from whom profit can be made, so he or she is usually very welcome. But anyone coming through the door of an office wanting help from a public service is viewed as someone who is bringing extra problems. Nevertheless, the approach should be brought more in line one with the other, despite the obvious problems that arise.

That is the final report to which I allude, but I am sure that right hon. and hon. Members will deal with a number of others. I hope that I have illustrated the work of the Committee, which continues at the expense of its members' time and effort but to the advantage of both the House and the country.

6.48 pm

Sir Michael Shaw (Scarborough): My first duty—not for the first time, I am glad to say, but I regard it as by no means a routine privilege—is to thank the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon). He does a tremendous job, bringing a team together, cutting out partisanship and keeping us all to the point, and he does it in a way that allows us all to make a fair contribution. The right hon. Gentleman so organises affairs that the Committee's members take a real interest in their work, and that—as I shall demonstrate later in my speech—has not always been the case in Public Accounts Committees.

[Sir Michael Shaw]

Not long ago we benefited from the attention of the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner). I must confess that that was the first occasion on which I have known the hon. Gentleman to adopt an entirely "establishment" attitude to Select Committees. Be that as it may, however, I found myself wondering what would happen to Parliament if we merely sat here in the Chamber, with no committees of any kind working outside it. In my view, the power of the Government and the Front Bench would become intolerable—cynics might say, "even more intolerable", but I would not go as far as that.

Dr. Godman: May I point out that not all Opposition Members agree with their hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner)? As a Scots Member of Parliament, I deeply deplore the continuing failure to appoint a Select Committee to monitor and oversee the Scottish Office in the way that the PAC performs its important role.

Sir Michael Shaw: The hon. Gentleman has made a fair point, but I will not pursue it now.

I agree wholeheartedly with what the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne said about the Comptroller and Auditor General. His office has taken on great new responsibilities, and is, I think, performing its task very well, making important progress in relation to value for money and benefiting hon. Members generally and PAC members in particular.

Let me take up the right hon. Gentleman's comment about museums. The Committee discovered that a serious problem had arisen: incredibly valuable antiques and works of art, collected from all over the world, had been stored very inadequately here, there and everywhere. Moreover, no one seemed to know much about what was in stock, or—if that was known—where it was stored. That is a sad indictment.

I feel that two factors were responsible for much of the problem. The people who had to draw up demands for money each year, and explain why they wanted it, may have been punch-drunk; I certainly do not think that they spelt out a proper, hard-hitting, detailed demand every year. In a sense, I blame the Treasury: the habit had grown up—or perhaps had been there from the beginning—of simply allocating a bulk sum to the Department, and then leaving the Department to sort it out on the basis of a bit here and a bit there.

Our inquiry revealed a special need for conservation, stock-taking and general presentation of the tremendous fund of museum articles. Surely the needs of famous institutions such as the Victoria and Albert museum should be considered separately by the Treasury. I gained the impression from the Treasury representative, however, that it stuck pretty firmly to its original attitude: "We have heard these 'special case' arguments before; we will simply allocate a sum to the Department, and it can get on with sorting everything out". In such circumstances, the case for special need must be spelt out clearly—as I do not think that it has been in the past—and the Treasury must then respond.

So much for the particular; now let me deal with more general aspects. We have a mass of reports and Treasury replies to discuss. I feel that we must accept that the purpose of this debate should change, for how can we examine so many reports in any worthwhile detail in such a short discussion? Furthermore—and this is the real question—do we need to? In general, I think not.

There have been changes at Westminster. The Select Committees have come into being, and, since the National Audit Act 1983, the status of the Comptroller and Auditor General and the National Audit Office have also changed and developed. The procedure of the PAC has changed, too. When I first joined the Committee—I hope that the House will forgive me for going back such a long time—we all sat around all afternoon and were lucky if we got a question in, as the Chairman seemed to do all the questioning. The reports were tiny, and very insignificant; they were not a patch on those of today.

Our hearings are now public, and both press and radio have access to them. Next will come the intrusion—if that is the right word—of television, which will allow the public to see something of our work. All that means that the effects of our deliberations are felt much earlier than they used to be.

Let us examine the history of a typical report. First, the Comptroller and Auditor General produces his report, along with a press statement. If the contents are newsworthy, they will receive considerable coverage—we need only observe the coverage currently given to the Rover report. Then the PAC meets—not secretly, as it used to, but publicly—and examines the witnesses. If that proves newsworthy there is more press coverage, as the press and the BBC attend if they wish. Then we produce our report. Again, there will probably be a press statement, and the Chairman may consider it appropriate to hold a press conference.

That is the time at which the effect of what we have been doing is felt. It is not felt a year later, when we meet here—and let us be blunt: only PAC members turn up on these occasions, apart from one honourable exception, who is a volunteer, and the Front Benchers, who are pressed men.

The old purpose of the debate is no longer relevant. Its objective was to create discussion. We are not creating discussion today, but I hope that we have shifted and influenced people's opinions because the press and other media have been watching us; therefore, we can have maximum effect. Of course we receive a reply from the Treasury, and if that is not satisfactory we can call back the witnesses and have another go, with the same press coverage. None the less, it is right that we should meet periodically here in the Chamber to discuss the way in which the Public Accounts Committee is working, the effect that it is having, and the various changes that it may seek.

We should also consider how our work affects other Select Committees. We are very careful to act only within our remit, as a form of audit but looking for value for money, without becoming involved in policies. If it is felt that wider discussion in the House is needed on any report, it can be achieved either by moving a motion or by using a supply day. The old title of the debate has gone and we must now look ahead and debate the Public Accounts Committee reports in a different way.

We might consider the conditions under which we work in Committee Room 16. As our proceedings attract greater public interest as television will be coming in from time to time, that room is quite inadequate for our purposes. I suggest, as I have suggested many times before, that the adequacy or otherwise of Select Committee rooms should be considered by the appropriate Committee of the House.

I turn to another general topic arising out of two of the reports—the public sector borrowing requirement. I shall refer first to the report on the Commonwealth Development Corporation and then to the report on British Nuclear Fuels.

I believe that the definition of the public sector borrowing requirement needs to be reviewed as it is sometimes a definition of convenience. That does not necessarily mean that it is a bad thing, but it is certainly suspect. People may be using the terms of the PSBR to put something in balk that should not really be in balk. I draw two examples of that from two of the Committee's reports.

Pages 4 and 5 of the evidence in the twenty-ninth report on the Commonwealth Development Corporation refer to a subsidiary company in the Cayman Islands. Its purpose is to borrow and lend money abroad. I asked:

"Will any borrowings that are made under this system be backed by the Treasury?"

and I received the reply that effectively they would. I was told:

"They will effectively be under Government guarantee. That will of course ensure that they are obtained at the keenest interest rate. These borrowings have to be approved by us."

—that is the Government. So I asked;

"Are they included in the PSBR or anything of that nature?"

I was told:

"They are not included in the PSBR."

I said:

"Perhaps we might turn straightaway to Mr. Beastall"

—of the Treasury—

"and ask him why it should not come under the PSBR."

He said:

"The reason for the classification, as has already been implied, is in the case of money which is borrowed abroad for lending abroad. That transaction, unless the debt becomes bad—and I accept that is a different situation but in the normal situation—would have no impact on the United Kingdom economy", to which I replied:

"That is very interesting."

On pages 4 and 5 of the thirty-third report on monitoring and control of British Nuclear Fuels my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow), who I am sorry cannot be with us this afternoon, asked:

"Since all the shares save one are owned by a Government Department, since the whole of the borrowing of the Company is guaranteed by the Government, why is it that it is treated as if it were not a nationalised industry so far as the treatment of being a public sector company is concerned?"

I shall skip the long answer and read out the short answer:

"There is a difference between guaranteeing the indebtedness and providing all the finance from Government departments."

Apparently, the difference is between guaranteeing indebtedness and providing the money.

Frankly, that shows that if the Government want a Government or local government institution to be outside the PSBR, they can arrange that, but if they do not want such an institution to be outside the PSBR they block it by saying, "I am sorry, but that is within the public sector borrowing requirement and therefore it cannot be done." That is basically wrong. Although it may be convenient, it may be helpful to allow Government bodies or local government bodies to be placed outside the PSBR. Where finance could be arranged by Government or local government bodies, making it clear that capital money is required on commercial grounds rather than on PSBR grounds, that should be allowed. That may not always be the case, but if exceptions can be made in the cases that I have quoted, other exceptions should be made.

I am thinking particularly of housing. The alternative arrangements that we are making for new housing are being blocked by the PSBR. If capital expenditure is limited by the PSBR, it is impossible to achieve any continuity in capital expenditure as one year things may be looking good and the next year they may be looking bad. The PSBR is altered year by year by political needs which are often entirely different from commercial needs. For those reasons, the evidence in various reports shows that the PSBR is not always used in the best possible way.

I do not want to hog the whole evening, but I believe that it is a privilege, although sometimes an onerous privilege, to be on the Public Accounts Committee. We work as a team and, despite what the hon. Member for Bolsover says, manage to work without party strife. If we did not succeed in doing so, we should not be doing our duty by the House or by the country.

7.9 pm

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): I was interested by the speech of the hon. Member for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw), which I discussed with my right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon) as he was making his points.

I wish to refer to the eighteenth report on financial reporting to Parliament, 1988-89, and the twenty-fourth report of the same year on the Department of Social Security's operational strategy.

The report on financial reporting to Parliament deals with the arrangements for the financial reporting to Parliament of public expenditure. The main financial documents are the supply estimates, which are derived from the public expenditure survey and the public expenditure White Paper. They represent the Government's formal request to Parliament for cash to finance the major part of Government expenditure.

The objectives of financial reporting were set out by a previous Public Accounts Committee. They were to provide Parliament systematically with information on performance which is reliable as an assurance of the economy, efficiency and effectiveness with which Departments are operating services, and as the basis for selective inquiries.

The supply estimates, which are published annually, cover almost all Government expenditure, such as on the Foreign Office, the Home Office and defence. They cover all the Departments, but they do not cover two other sectors, about which I should like to say a few words. The first is GCHQ, and the second is Government expenditure on the security services, which comes under the heading of the secret vote.

The supply estimates index lists all the expenditure headings of Departments, but there is no reference to GCHQ. Yet it consumes almost £1,000 million worth of public money, which is a substantial sum. Parliament cannot question the use of those moneys, and there is no reporting to Parliament of how they are used. The money that is needed by that Department is, in effect, laundered through a number of votes for various Departments in such a way that Members of Parliament cannot follow or question the allocation of resources.

[Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours]

The second sector is the secret vote. The public should be aware that in the current year the Government propose to spend £125 million on the security services under that classification. Under present arrangements, the service is required only to submit to the Cabinet Office what is in effect an invoice for its expenditure for the following year —the document that I have here and which is published in the supply estimates—and it is awarded that amount. Parliament cannot ask questions about the use of those moneys. It is not that hon. Members might want to interfere or even queston the operational use of those moneys but that they do not know how many people are employed, where they work, what generally they are responsible for doing or what their regional obligations might be. We are unable to question that considerable amount of expenditure, which represents £2·50p for every man, woman and child in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Tim Smith (Beaconsfield): Will the hon. Gentleman say what advantage there would be to Parliament in having that information? By definition, all the operations and details of the secret services' activities must be secret. Can the hon. Gentleman cite any western country where such details are available?

Mr. Campbell-Savours: In the United States of America, such material is available to a Congressional committee, which meets in private and is staffed by senior members of Congress. It never leaks and it investigates the facts which are of interest to its members in establishling whether resources are being used effectively. That is all that we need in the United Kingdom. I have never suggested that the security services should report to the Public Accounts Committee. I believe that a Scrutiny Committee of the House should be set up to deal with the financial accountability of the security services. Such a development is inevitable—it is merely a question of when the necessary Government commitment will be made.

The problem is that when the Public Accounts Committee has raised these matters on previous occasions, Departments under successive Governments have felt loth or constrained about whether such information, if given to Parliament, would be properly used. They have questioned the ability of Select Committees to retain that information as private, which is why I wholeheartedly condemn the fact that a document given to the Public Accounts Committee under conditions of confidentiality has been leaked in the past few days to The Guardian. I understand that the press may have found it exciting copy, but in so far as newspapers know that it is inevitable that that information will surface in another form, probably as part of one of our reports at a later stage, they should be far more circumspect about the information that they provide. I am sure that newspapers will always find hon. Members willing to provide such information, but by publishing it they compromise our Committees and make it even more difficult for us to convince Departments that we are reliable and capable of maintaining the confidentiality of documents until there is a need to publish them, and they serve the arguments of those who argue against the accountability for which I am pressing, certainly in relation to GCHQ and the security services generally.

The second report is the twenty-fourth report on the Department of Social Security's operational strategy. The background to the report is that since 1982 the Department has had under development a substantial £1·8 billion programme for the computerisation of the Department, replacing many of the current manual procedures. The aim of the strategy is to provide, through a series of interconnected projects, access to area computer centres by 450 local social security offices and 840 unemployment offices, which entails the use of 33,000 visual units.

The Public Accounts Committee has always been assured, certainly by the Department's accounting officer, that the system will work. The hon. Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) asked the Under-Secretary of State for Social Security about the progress of the computerisation programme. In reply, the Minister said:

> "The Department's highly complex £1·7 billion strategy for the computerisation of the payment of social security benefits is proceeding as planned. The pilot exercise in 23 local offices has been completed and the systems are being introduced nationally office by office."—[Official Report, 27 November 1989; Vol. 162, c. 430.]

That reply suggested that everything was going fairly well. When we were discussing such matters earlier this year, in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen), we were given an assurance by Mr. Partridge of the Department. Speaking about the programme of computerisation and the local office projects, he said:

> "The LOP ones will be very fully tested indeed. They go through about six states of testing and they will be tested to death and will work, I am quite confident of that".

That was on 1 February this year. His reply was nonsense and I believe that the accounting officer knew that when he gave it.

Several statistics have been produced to substantiate claims about the operational efficiency of the system. I understand that the statistics are available nationwide, but I shall deal with the statistics from the Workington office in my constituency. To measure efficiency, one must take into account the availability of systems to departmental officials. The Department's statistics show that the system was working for 89 per cent. of the time in the week ending 5 November and 87 per cent. of the time in the week ending 12 November. Those are the Department's figures. I suggest that they alone indicate a loss of a great deal of time.

The statistics are also highly inaccurate, as they are based on averages. The programme and the local office projects cover three different areas of calculations—retirement pensions, departmental central index and income support. If we ignore the averages, and consider each area separately, we find different statistics. In the week ending 5 November, the system for retirement pensions in Workington was available for only 74·4 per cent. of the time, the departmental central index was operational 100 per cent. of the time, and the income support system for 91·6 per cent. of the time. In the week ending 12 November, the retirement pension system was available 89·7 per cent. of the time, the departmental central index 93·7 per cent. of the time and the crucial income support system, which represents the main body of the office's work, only 76·3 per cent. of the time. For nearly a quarter of the time in that week, the income support computerised programme was not operational in Workington.

Such figures have major implications for the level of service. By averaging all the statistics, the departmental central index—which is the least used and to which there is least access—drags up the average level of availablity, particularly for income support, and completely distorts the statistics.

I understand that in October there were 14 interruptions to the Livingstone mainframe computer service to local offices. For income support, most of the errors in software arise in priority areas such as arrears payments—a highly sensitive area for customers. There are allegedly more than 80 errors in the current software and the mainframe computer on pensions is overloaded. Breakdowns in the system, which when complete will have cost the taxpayer in effect almost £2 billion, are leading to a great reduction in morale among staff in the Department. In Bolton, the position is very bad and morale has almost been destroyed.

It is intended that the programme will be fully operational by October next year on what I call big bang day but the Department refers to as national roll-out. From what I am told, the system will not be working by that date. The Department has many questions to answer on that.

What are the implications of the £1·8 billion investment programme for employment? The Department's figures are a complete fabrication. The Department says, and the National Audit Office report states, that by spending £1·8 billion 20,186 jobs will be cut. The Department states that job reductions are crucial to the viability of operational strategy. When the Department's officials came before the Committee we were told that staff would indeed be lost. In my view, the projected savings will not arise. Managers in various parts of the country say that it is unlikely that any more than half the savings in staff will be made. However, senior managers say that if savings are not made on staff, cuts will have to be made in other areas of the service to ensure that the Government fulfil their expenditure commitments. That is unrealistic and impracticable because it will lead to a major reduction in service across the country, particularly in offices where there is a heavy workload.

I have looked at the figures for the office in Workington in detail. Like every hon. Member, I occasionally visit my local office and ask questions, but on the most recent occasion, as I asked questions I carefully noted what staff told me as I walked around the office. I was told that in Workington 84 jobs were cut in 1987-88, 79 in 1988-89 and 74 in 1989-90. There has been a steady reduction as computers have come on line and a further 11 are to be cut, leaving a complement of 62 by June next year. I put it to Ministers that that complement will not be sufficient in Workington. The reductions in staff will jeopardise the service and lead to a major reduction in the quality of service to the customer.

I do not question the need for computerisation. I am thoroughly in favour of it if it leads to the faster provision of service, if it works, if it means that people are in and out of the office more quickly, and if it makes access to material data on particular people easier. However, I object to misrepresentation of the facts to Parliament to substantiate the expenditure.

We are told that the computer system is to be fully operational by October 1990. Yet the staff cuts in Workington—I assume that it will be the same in every other part of the country—are to be made by July next year before the computer is fully operational. The same will apply in every hon. Member's constituency. Every office will face the same difficulty. The cuts are based on what I can only describe as doctored statistics to substantiate the repeated claim of Ministers and civil servants that everything is on line.

The system is not working as it should. Departmental officials know the truth and they are telling Members of Parliament because many of us are talking about what is happening in that Department. Action needs to be taken now.

Why have all the problems arisen? My conclusion is that the computer was bought from the wrong firm. I understand that by waving the Union Jack one can invariably land major public-sector contracts. The contract was won by Imperial Chemicals, which I am told produced the equally disastrous Camelot computer 10 years ago. If we are to introduce computerisation affecting many Departments and tens of thousands of people across the country, Departments have a responsibility to buy what is right although it may not necessarily appear to be in the best interests of the country at the time. It has major implications for the operational effectiveness of a Department.

Departmental officials sometimes provide inaccurate information. In February, I questioned the answers given to me on the operations of the social fund microcomputer. I was told that my data from a research project carried out in several offices in the north of England were inaccurate. I checked with my sources, talked to departments and was told that the information was correct. Officials should not treat members of the PAC as though we were idiots. We know what is going on because we can ask questions. Responsibility for answers should be more direct, even if the Government find the answers uncomfortable. For example, Mr. Nichol recently gave evidence about the NHS. He is involved in a great deal of controversy about the ambulance dispute. He gave the Committee good, solid evidence based on what I believe to be the most objective assessment of what was happening. He did not hide the truth, but simply put it to the Committee. I pay tribute to him for that, and that is the approach that I shall expect from all departmental officials in the future.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) is unfortunately no longer present, but I am sure that he is busy elsewhere in the House. He must understand that the House has to have a mechanism which enables Members to probe deeply into a matter and test details, especially when the truth comes out. Hon. Members must have access to officials to question them in detail on matters of great interest. The Floor of the House does not offer us that opportunity. It is good for backchat across the Dispatch Box—once in a while a Minister slips up and we score a point but at the end of the day it is the Select Committees which offer us the only opportunity to inquire in depth into a particular matter.

Mr. Michael Shersby (Uxbridge): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that it is a great pity that the invisible hon. Member for Bolsover is not in his place? If he were to participate in the debate, he would have before him more than 40 reports from the PAC going into great detail which our Chairman, the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon), has described so vividly tonight. That would have provided the hon. Gentleman with an admirable opportunity to question Government expenditure in many areas, basing his comments on facts, which would be a nice change for him.

[Mr. Michael Shersby]

Mr. Campbell-Savours: The hon. Gentleman may be surprised to learn that my hon. Friend deals in facts and does his homework on the many issues in which he is involved.

I have had private discussions with my hon. Friend. He does not recognise Select Committees as a forum for such inquiries. He is inclined to go directly to organisations to secure the details which we can obtain in our proceedings. I do not condemn him for his strongly held view that a consensual relationship develops across such Committees, and it is true in this instance. I can defend that because by the nature of our reports inquiring minds are gathered together. We are all dedicated to securing value for money and the most cost-effective use of public resources.

Unfortunately, I shall not be present to hear the replies as I have to return to my constituency on the 8.45 plane from Heathrow. I apologise to the hon. Member who is to speak next. I shall read the hon. Member's speech and also the replies. I ask the House to forgive me for leaving early.

7.35 pm

Mr. Richard Page (Hertfordshire, South-West): I have had the privilege to serve on the Public Accounts Committee for two years. If ever I had any doubts about whether our work was worthwhile, they were dispelled by the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner). When in my political life I do anything diametrically opposed to what he recommends, it is a good weather vane, showing that I am making the correct political decisions.

I have a mild confession to make. In Committee yesterday I said that when I started to serve on it I worried about whether the flood of reports, with their varying degrees of horror, would continue indefinitely. There were wry smiles from my colleagues and stifled guffaws from one or two who are battle hardened. The flood of reports has continued unabated. That more than anything else justifies strengthening, supporting and providing more assets to the Committee in its work so that we can produce value for money for taxpayers.

I pay tribute to the National Audit Office for the high quality of its reports. In a debate such as this we are spoilt for choice. If, heaven forbid, I ever wanted to filibuster, PAC reports would give me ample ammunition and would ensure that I did not retrace covered ground.

This evening I have chosen to talk about road planning and coronary heart disease. I am well aware that in choosing coronary heart disease I am following in the footsteps of our worthy Chairman, the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon). I join my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw) in expressing my appreciation of our Chairman's leadership and the way in which he keeps us away from the pitfalls of policy. I understand that at the weekend he will be given the freedom of Tameside, and I congratulate him on that worthwhile honour.

I have chosen those two subjects because the Treasury and departmental responses to them are different in nature from the response to my chosen subject last year—the Charity Commission. My hon. Friends on the Committee called it a disaster looking for an opportunity. The Treasury response was immediate. It put extra officers on the job to ensure that the Charity Commission was not abused and that the millions of pounds a year given to charities were correctly applied. The responses this year have been described as less than urgent.

The twenty-sixth report reminds us that coronary heart disease kills 180,000 people a year. I am not happy with the speed of introducing and spreading best practice. The Department of Health's response to the number of lives lost is not co-ordinated as it is for the treatment of AIDS and alcohol abuse, for which ministerial committees have been established. An analysis of the 34 health districts in England has shown that a quarter of them did not even mention the prevention of heart disease in their programmes for 1988-89. In international terms, the United Kingdom has one of the highest death rates from this terrible disease. It is 298 per 100,000 in Northern Ireland and Scotland and 243 per 100,000 in England and Wales compared with 230 in the United States, 79 in Spain and 45 in Japan.

As a further example of our laid back approach, I should like to bring in the question of the targets for coronary artery bypass grafts as a case in point. The Welsh Office has decided to adopt a higher figure of 400 to 500 operations per million of population. The response from the Department of Health is that the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons are preparing a report on the topic. When that advice is available, the Department will no doubt leap into action and consider whether a new target should be set. I suggest that the colleges and the Department of Health should have a view in place at the moment. They have international comparisons to hand, and attention to the spread of best practice could be a little quicker.

Putting aside the present ambulance dispute, another worrying aspect is the wide range and variety of policies adopted by ambulance crews. We must remember that 30,000 people die of heart attacks within the first two hours. Scotland has a policy of fitting its ambulances with defibrillators and of training crews in their use. That is positive thinking. The British Heart Foundation is working to achieve that. It will cost about £2 million, and the foundation is working with the Heart Start Scotland campaign.

Seven of the nine districts in Wales are seeking to introduce extended training for ambulance crews in heart disease. What is the position in England? The accounting officer was not too certain about how many ambulances had defibrillating equipment or about the number of crews trained in its use. The National Audit Office said that it is about 30 per cent. However, we find that some districts ask their ambulance crews to use defibrillators while others positively discourage their use. One of our ex-colleagues died of a heart attack in his 40s. There is a strong view that if a defibrillator and a crew trained in heart resuscitation had been available, he could still be in the House representing his constituency.

I asked Sir Christopher France whether whether there were any regions or districts that did not train ambulance staff in the use of defibrillators, and his answer was yes. Like every other member of the Committee, sometimes when I left the Committee Room I said to myself, "I wish that I had asked another question. I wish that I had asked Sir Christopher whether, if he had a heart attack, he would like the ambulance staff who were picking him up to have a defibrillator and a trained crew or whether he would have been prepared to hang on and wait until the door of the hospital appeared."

Dr. Godman: Or whether he would like to suffer the heart attack in Scotland.

Mr. Page: The hon. Gentleman is right, because the programme in Scotland will provide a far better service. Scotland is to be congratulated on that.

Mr. Tim Smith: Does my hon. Friend agree that one of the most striking aspects of coronary heart disease is the vast imbalance between the amount that the Department spends on treatment, which is £500 million, and the amount that it spends on prevention, which is £10 million? Does he agree that prevention is better than cure and that there should be a reordering of priorities? Does he also agree that the most effective way to stop smoking is to increase the price of cigarettes? To put it mildly, it is unfortunate that in two of the last three Budgets the duty on cigarettes was not increased at all, which means that the real price has fallen. Would not that be the most effective way to discourage people from smoking?

Mr. Page: I agree with my hon. Friend, but I know that at least one of our hon. Friends will speak about that. I ought not to pick the bones completely clean but should leave one or two topics. My hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) has swept up some of the other topics that should be acted upon.

As I have said, there is a laid-back approach to introducing the spread of best practice. Each year 180,000 people die from heart disease and, as my hon. Friend says, prevention is better than cure. The Department of Health and the Treasury should allocate funds to saving lives rather than trying to treat people after the disaster has occurred.

The fifteenth report deals with road planning. That is a euphemism for what sometimes happens because I freely admit to the House, as I admitted to the Committee, that I and my constituents are scarred by the experiences of the M25, part of which passes through my constituency. I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield feels equal pain over the large number of holdups and congestion.

My first objection relates to the misleading way in which the figures about the relative success or failure of the forecasts are presented. We see from the report that about 18 of the 58 schemes are 20 to 40 per cent. above or below the forecast level and that in seven of the schemes the error exceeded 40 per cent. Anybody hearing that would say that, while it is not too good, it is not too bad either. The forecast is for 100 cars a day, and with an error of 40 per cent. there will be 140 cars.

Of course, that is not the way that the Department works. Its forecasting error is expressed as a percentage of the outturn. In my constituency it is not 50,000 cars that use the road but more than 100,000. That means that for every one car that was forecast to use the road there are more than two, and somehow the Department thinks that the increase represents 0·4 of a car. It is certainly more than double. The Department says that it will make clear the method that it uses. Its forecast should be used as the base line and not as a percentage of the outturn.

I hope that forecasting will be improved, as is suggested in the Treasury response. However, that response is an amalgam of reasons and excuses about why the forecasts have turned out in the way that they have. They are a history of underestimates. It says that in future things will be better and that the sun will shine. I remember the M1 when it had just two lanes, but then it had to be extended. There is an explanation offered about the M25, especially where it passes through my constituency. The response says:

> "For example, for the Micklefield Green-South Mimms section, objectors argued that traffic could be accommodated for some years ahead by minor improvements to the existing road network."

The response said that the forecasts had to be vigorously defended at the inquiry against the constant criticism that they were too high. Of course the objectors said, "Do we need the motorway? Do we need all this disruption?", and thought that the existing road network could possibly accommodate the traffic. They would say that, because they based their objections on Department of Transport figures that were at least 100 per cent. out. Of course there will be chaos and confusion. While reading the reasons, excuses and promises for the future, I wonder whether there has been any real change in the nature of the beast.

The other thing that riles me about that section of the M25 is that during the inquiry we had already had the experience of the Chertsey to Staines section, which was open, and within months was oversubscribed and had exceeded the forecast figures. Some 100,000 vehicles were travelling through that section per day, and as it is only 10 or 11 miles from my constituency, surely it would have been realised that those cars had to go somewhere. They would not all flood on to roads in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield or to Heathrow airport but would continue to the beginning of the M1. It is peculiar that no one recognised that.

I take some comfort from the remarks in the Treasury's response, particularly the comment that it is more optimistic about future economic growth. I also take comfort from the response in the White Paper entitled "Roads for Prosperity". I hope that those responses will allow for a more realistic roads provision for the future. Good communications, whether through information technology, or physically through roads or rail services, are necessary if Britain is to be a successful industrial country.

I hope that my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary will make sure that forecasts err on the side of growth and prosperity rather than on the negative side of reduction. I also hope that my constituents will have a better level of environmental protection, and that the traffic will keep moving when the motorway is widened.

7.52 pm

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): Earlier this evening the hon. Member for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw) described me as a volunteer attendant at this debate. I am pleased to take part in what has been, and I hope will continue to be, a civilised debate. The only unfortunate thing about the debate has been its attendance, which is on a parallel with attendance levels late at night when we debate European Community affairs. That is a matter for regret.

The forty-fourth report from the PAC—an estimable Committee—is entitled "Quality of Service to the Public at

[Dr. Norman A. Godman]

DHSS Local Offices". I wish to focus on the importance of test case decisions to the public, to the DSS and to the Treasury and the Government's response to the report.

Earlier today I asked my right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon) whether the senior official from the DSS, during cross-examination by the Committee, had offered an explanation of why the DSS had failed to publicise decisions taken by social security commissioners, which might have profound consequences for the Department and their clients—or claimants as they are traditionally known—and for the Treasury. The Treasury may be delighted by the apparent failure or unwillingness to publicise test case decisions. However, I am concerned for the claimants.

In paragraph 3 of the report, the Committee talks about the poor standard of service obtaining in some local offices. I shall defend the two offices in Greenock and Port Glasgow, as the two managers there—Mr. Derek Andrews and Mr. Brian Bryceland—run tight ships. I have always told them that I will not tolerate any of my constituents being treated in a discourteous or ill-mannered way by officials, who are also my constituents. I am pleased to say that complaints about discourteous or ill-mannered behaviour can be counted on the fingers of one hand over a period of some six years. I am sure that hon. Members of the Committee were not criticising the officers in my constituency.

I disagree with the Committee when it states, in paragraph 3(e), that it accepts that the staff levels in local offices are at a level appropriate for the work that they have to undertake. I do not believe that that is so. In some local offices the problem is exacerbated by a high level of staff turnover. Some new companies are beginning to come to Greenock and Port Glasgow, and one of those new companies recruited nine members of staff from the local DSS office. They were among the first 14 people employed by that company.

I agree entirely with the Committee when the Chairman and his colleagues say in paragraph 3(i) of the report:

"We accept that in providing information and advice local offices must respond to the circumstances in which they operate. But we are not satisfied that all offices are adequately fulfilling the Department's role".

That is true of test case decisions.

I am pleased to see, in paragraph 28 on page ix, that the Committee members have taken note of the effects of the Department's efforts in Scotland to influence the content and timing of take-up campaigns. In the Strathclyde region there is a high level of co-operation between local DSS offices and the social work departments of the regional council. However, it is precisely at such moments that DSS officers do not have the facilities or staff to deal with the effects of take-up campaigns.

The Government seem to be somewhat complacent and I am less than satisfied with their response to a fine report.

Paragraph 14 on page 4 of the Government's response, entitled "Complementing Local Offices", claims that there is a new complementing system for local officers, based upon performance as well as work measurements, and it says:

"It will seek to deploy staff to meet agreed standards of service".

That is not always the case. There is much more to be done in regard to the quality of the service provided by officials.

The example that I want to pursue follows a test case in August this year involving a commissioner and a Mr. Potts from Sunderland, who suffers from a common industrial disease called vibration white finger which is well known to my constituents and to those of my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown). It is brought on by the constant use of vibratory percussive tools. In the shipyards, the man most susceptible to this peculiarly painful industrial disease would be the caulker burner, but it affects many thousands of former employees in shipbuilding, mining, forestry and construction.

On appeal, the commissioner decided that Mr. Potts was in a state of justifiable ignorance of his right to claim backdated disablement benefit in respect of his illness. If other claims based on that test case are made, payments may in some cases exceed £6,000. Hence, perhaps, the Treasury's response to the DSS's failure to publicise the test case, especially in shipbuilding constituencies. I believe that there are thousands of men who have suffered from this disabling industrial disease.

Following the test case, several take-up campaigns have been conducted—on Merseyside, the north-east, Northern Ireland and the west of Scotland. As I represent a shipbuilding constituency, hon. Members will not be surprised to hear that I am deeply involved in the latter.

In response to the campaign, the Government, advised by DSS officials, introduced a deadline of 1 November 1989 for claims. A group of Labour Members, including my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East, went to see the Minister of State at the DSS on 30 October and secured a significant concession from him and his officials. The Minister agreed to re-examine the decision to revoke regulation 13 of the Social Security (Industrial Injuries and Diseases) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1986, which enables sufferers of industrial diseases to submit back-dated claims for benefit.

The Minister displayed his usual civility and courtesy. He also behaved with compassion. I just wish that his officials would show the same compassion when publicising the test case. We had to look for it ourselves. The Minister reinforced his decision by tabling a statutory instrument which enables late claims for industrial injuries and diseases to be determined in certain circumstances as though they had been made on 30 September 1986.

I am very happy to say that the Minister behaved with compassion. We offer our compliments to him. This is a victory for natural justice and common sense. The campaign is being conducted with expediency. The trade unions are playing an important role in it. The General, Municipal, Boilermakers and Allied Trades Union was instrumental in taking the test case to appeal. I am delighted to work with Robert Thompson, the Scottish secretary of that union, Duncan McNeil and other trade unionists in the local campaign.

The two DSS offices in Sunderland—Phoenix house and Dunn house—have received more than 20,000 applications for back-dated disablement benefit. Not all of them will be successful, and for some of those that are payments will be quite small, but they still impose something of a financial burden on the DSS, which is recognised honourably by the Minister, and on the Treasury.

By and large, applications in Sunderland are for white finger, although I understand that they call it dead finger in the north-east. I am told that a fellow went to see my hon. Friend the Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) claiming that he had vibration white bum because he had sat on machinery which vibrated. He claimed that that had given him the disease in his posterior.

The two DSS offices in Sunderland have co-operated with the local take-up campaign. I have been assured by my hon. Friends the Members for Sunderland, North (Mr. Clay) and for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin), and by David Towler, Brenda Fulton and Brian Chapman of the Sunderland Trades Union Congress unemployment centre, that local DSS officials have been extremely helpful and co-operative in the take-up campaign. They, and officials in Greenock and Port Glasgow, Belfast, Newcastle, Liverpool and elsewhere, confront considerable difficulties when dealing with such a torrent of claims. The two offices in my constituency have received more than 800 back-dated claims in the past three or four weeks.

My hon. Friend the Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) talked about delays that people experience when they go to DSS offices. My worry, when there are take-up campaigns such as these that involve disablement claims, is that the procedure is so long-winded. A clerical assessment is made of the claim. That involves contacting the applicant's former employer, who may have disappeared or gone out of business, to assess the nature of the claimant's work. When a response is obtained, the adjudication officer makes a decision, yea or nay. If his decision goes against the claimant, the claimant has a right of appeal to a local appeals tribunal. That may lead to the claimant having to undergo a medical examination. A second adjudication officer assesses the medical opinion delivered by the medical practitioner. That may lead to the claimant having to appeal to a medical appeals tribunal, which may take several months. That appeals tribunal decision is given to the adjudication officer. That is a tiresome, cumbersome and time-consuming procedure.

There are few hon. Members here tonight, and few other than my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East represent shipbuilding constituencies. Many of the men with whom we are concerned are unemployed and some of them will never work again because of the extent of their disabilities. Some of them are pensioners who have been denied their legitimate rights as a result of the failure of the Department of Social Security to alert them to this test case.

The Government must seek to eliminate or at least to reduce those delays. Even at this late date, I want Ministers at the Department of Social Security to instruct local officers at Lady Lawson street in Edinburgh, on Tyneside, on Merseyside and in Ulster to initiate comprehensive local advertising campaigns which will reach out to such people.

I held a public meeting the other day. I paid for a fairly large advertisement in my local paper the Greenock Telegraph, and as it was a legitimate parliamentary expense, I shall ask the Fees Office to pay for the advertisement. Over 200 men turned up at the public meeting in Port Glasgow last Friday. My hon. Friends from the north-east of England and from Merseyside will confirm that in their areas too the advertising and publicity is being carried out by voluntary organisations such as unemployment centres which are, to put it bluntly, strapped for cash. It is the responsibility of the Department of Social Security to give some much needed assistance to men in those unpleasant circumstances.

In a constituency such as mine—and you have heard me say this before, Mr. Deputy Speaker—there has been a decline in the shipbuilding industry. Unemployment, according to the Government's statistics, is still at 14·8 per cent., which is way over the United Kingdom average. Thousands of my constituents are in receipt, directly or indirectly, of social welfare incomes, so they have a direct interest in the quality of service that is provided by the two local Department of Social Security offices. In the main, they receive a good service from hard-pressed officials. Senior officials at the Department of Social Security should not be cutting the number of employees at the Greenock and Port Glasgow local offices; they should be recruiting staff rather than running down staff numbers. Ministers and senior officials at the Department of Social Security must also treat claimants as clients.

I am deeply grateful to all the members of the Public Accounts Committee for examining the quality of performance of staff at local Department of Social Security offices and for enabling me to respond to their excellent forty-fourth report.

8.13 pm

Mr. Michael Shersby (Uxbridge): I am glad to follow the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman). It is a refreshing change for an hon. Member who is not also a member of the Public Accounts Committee to speak in this debate. I listened to him with great interest and I hope that he will contribute to future debates. It is also good to hear a Scottish voice in these debates.

Our debate this Session, like all previous debates, is concerned with the endless task of the Public Accounts Committee in searching for value for money, ensuring that the taxpayer receives value for money and, if not, discovering the reasons why and reporting them to Parliament. On Monday morning, when I was considering how I might contribute to this debate, my eye lighted on an article in The Times. The headline read:

"Former Whitehall chief's criticism. Police 'do not give value for money' ".

As the House knows, I am parliamentary adviser to the Police Federation. I put down my cup of tea to see who had written the article and who was being quoted. I was especially interested to see that the report concerned an article in the Municipal Journal of 24 November, commenting on the views of that endless searcher after value for money, Sir Brian Cubbon, the former permanent secretary at the Home Office, who before his recent retirement was a frequent witness at sessions of the Public Accounts Committee.

I shall quote from this important article by Sir Brian. The headline read:

"Treat 'em mean: keep 'em keen!"

I thought that the article would be worth reading because I remembered so many occasions on which we had had such helpful discussions with Sir Brian on the importance of value for money at the Department of which he had the distinction of being the head for so many years I hope that the House will forgive me if I quote briefly one or two interesting passages in the article.

Sir Brian wrote:

"Lack of money is a powerful incentive for officials to prioritise and get the same results with less money. 'Treat 'em mean and keep 'em keen'. The Home Office's local services have been largely immune from this top-down pressure. Expenditure on law, order and protective services in the

[Mr. Michael Shersby]

United Kingdom has risen in real terms from £5 billion in 1978/79 to £8·4 billion in 1989-90. . . .A further factor has been the split in financial control, between the Home Office and local authorities. In the case of the police, probation and magistrates' court services, the specific grant from Central Government (51 per cent., 80 per cent., and 80 per cent., respectively) increased the onus on the Home Office to secure value for money in these services, but the main effort had still to come from local control and initiatives. . . .In the case of the police, the Audit Commission paper Administrative Support to Operational Police Officers records the good progress made by the police, with Home Office and HM Inspectorate support, in streamlining procedures, reducing paperwork and using civilian support units. The scrutiny technique has been introduced. HM Inspectorate use statistical data, which records police activities in a uniform way, enabling trends to be monitored from year to year and amoung groups of forces. Financial information is being added.

It remains difficult to find measures, and recording systems, which reliably link increased police manpower with increased effectiveness and efficiency. It remains an open question whether we are getting value for money for all the extra inputs of recent years. . . . Police civilians have increased by 11 per cent. or more than 5,000 since 1985. Why is it that the number of police officers on patrol or operational duties has increased more slowly?"

That was an interesting question for Sir Brian to ask. The Times expressed some surprise in reporting the article. It said:

"The former Permanent Secretary at the Home Office has publicly criticized his former colleagues for failing to secure adequate value for the billions they spend on the police."

I thought that it was very interesting to have Sir Brian's views and we so much enjoyed listening to him when he came before the Public Accounts Committee that I thought that it might be helpful for the House tonight if I commented briefly on the forty-second report on financial control and accountability of the Metropolitan police and the courts and prison building programmes for which Sir Brian, while at the Home Office, was responsible.

I should first like to deal with the financial control and accountability of the Metropolitan police, that gallant body of men who keep our capital free of crime to such an extent and who serve us selflessly day and night. In our report we said:

"Following our Forty-fifth Report, the Government accepted that the arrangements for securing the accountability of the Metropolitan Police needed 'further development' and said that 'a substantial programme of work to that end is in train.' We have not received the outcome of the work, and would welcome details as soon as possible, so that we can consider the matter further as necessary.

Some time has elapsed since that was said.

Paragraph 62 of the Treasury minute to the 42nd report —Home Office, Lord Chancellor's Department and Property Services Agency—responds to the Committee's comments and observations on that topic. It was published one year ago and says:

"The Home Office will submit shortly to the Committee a memorandum giving a detailed report of the programme of work, mentioned in the Treasury Minute of October 1986 . . . which has been undertaken to improve the accountability and financial control of the Metropolitan Police and to review the information provided to Parliament."

We are still waiting. We are now in November 1989 and we still have not had from the Home Office the memorandum that we require on that important subject. I hope that Sir Brian's successor, Sir Clive Whitmore, will give some thought to that matter at an early date.

The court building programme is another splendid example of the need for value for money, efficiency and control of which Sir Brian Cubbon talks. The Committee said of the court building programme:

"At the end of 1986, there still remained a backlog of 21,600 cases awaiting trial in England and Wales with waits between committal and trial as high as 25 weeks. These are matters of considerable concern to us, demonstrating how much more the departments need to do."

That is not a good example of value for money, efficiency or economy, and those are the things about which we need to be concerned. It is unacceptable to me—and, I am sure, to all hon. Members—that there are such long waits between trial and committal.

The report also covered the prison building programme, a matter to which I attach considerable importance. I am sure that I speak for most hon. Members when I say that none of us is proud of our prisons. I pay tribute to my right hon. and noble Friend Viscount Whitelaw who as Home Secretary took urgent steps to put that terrible problem right. [Interruption.] As my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw) said, progress has been slow.

The report went on to say:

"We are surprised that the Home Office no longer have a target date for matching total available places with the average prison population and we consider it important that a new target is set.

We are concerned that the recurring and apparently unforeseen surges cast serious doubt on the Home Office's ability to project accurately future prison populations."

That is a pretty tough comment on the efficiency of the Home Office. The report also said:

"By 1999 some 14,500 prison places, about one quarter of the total, will still be without access to night sanitation. We consider this to be unacceptable and urge the Home Office to find ways of bringing about a faster improvement in conditions."

In paragraph 26 of the report the Home Office makes the point that progress is being made towards dealing with the difficult problem of night sanitation. It is totally unacceptable in 1989 for men and women to be confined to prisons and for a large percentage of them still to be required to slop out, which means having no access to night sanitation and being obliged to use a bucket.

I hope that when my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary replies he will have something to say about what is being done to improve the efficiency of the prison service and to bring about the much-needed improvements in our Victorian prisons.

Another aspect of Home Office responsibility referred to in the report is a matter on which we had the privilege of listening to evidence from Sir Brian Cubbon while he was still in office. Paragraph 8 refers to "serious over-loading of the courts, 'intolerable' delays in bringing cases to trial."

We went on to say that

"the Committee concluded that insufficient progress had been made towards meeting the objectives of the programme."

We also said:

"Measures taken by the Lord Chancellor's Department to reduce the backlog of cases and waiting times in the Crown Court—especially in London and the South East—had produced no more than a marginal . . . improvement . . .Bearing in mind also the consequent deleterious effects of the huge backlog on overcrowding in local prisons and remand centres . . . recommended that the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Property Services Agency—bringing in the Home Office, as necessary—should take stock at the highest level of the programme's objectives, achievements and problems."

I am sure that when Sir Brian wrote the splendid article under the heading

"Treat 'em mean: keep 'em keen"

he was not referring to people slopping out in prisons or to those who have to wait for an intolerable time before their cases are heard. He may, however, have been referring to something that was mentioned in The Times —the efficiency of his colleagues in the Home Office in dealing with those important matters which have caused us such great concern. We know that a crash programme has been initiated to provide a minimum of 12 temporary court rooms in London, but they will have a limited life expectancy and there is still a serious backlog.

I hope that when Home Office officials look at the report of today's debate and think about what we have said in the light of the comments of that distinguished public servant, Sir Brian Cubbon, there will be rapid progress towards dealing with those serious problems. They are not problems that can be left. They need to be dealt with now. It is unsatisfactory to have the system operating as it is with so many delays and so many people confined in appalling conditions.

In the article in the Municipal Journal Sir Brian was quoted as saying:

"Police civilians have increased by 11 per cent. or more than 5,000 since 1985. Why is it that the number of police officers on patrol or operational duties has increased more slowly?"

One of the reasons is that many police officers are today employed in investigating each other. One force is investigating another to find out what went wrong in a particular set of circumstances. As we all know, the West Midlands police force is being investigated by west Yorkshire and the Surrey force is being investigated by Somerset and Avon. I could go on but hon. Members on both sides of the House know about the problem. Many officers are deployed in dealing with investigations into complaints, some of which will turn out to be trivial. A great deal of public money is being spent. Some of these cases, of course, will turn out to be serious—I am not trying to cover that up—but it is important, when considering Sir Brian's strictures, to consider the alternative.

The Police Federation of England and Wales takes the view that there should be an independent police complaints authority with its own investigative branch, which could spend its time carrying out necessary investigations and leaving police officers in forces throughout the country to get on with the important job of policing. I hope that the PAC will turn to that matter when the time is right.

The forty-fourth report is on the quality of service to the public at DSS local offices. It is a particularly good report and it was welcomed by staff at social security offices throughout the country, who felt that a Committee of Parliament was at last taking an interest in the appalling conditions in which many of them have to work. Those conditions are especially acute not just in inner London but in parts of outer London.

I have discussed these matters with the staff at my local DSS office in Uxbridge and I know of their anxiety. Happily, the increased expenditure on improving offices in London and other parts of the country has greatly improved them and working conditions in them—but there is another problem.

In the borough of Hillingdon, in which my constituency lies, there is great competition for competent staff to do the jobs that officers in the DSS offices have to do. During the course of the evidence that the Committee took from the permanent secretary, Mr. France, I asked what consideration the Department was giving to the introduction of geographically related pay, and whether consideration had been given to the precedent set by the nurses' pay award, under which a supplement is payable over and above London weighting. Mr. France told the Committee that his Department, in common with other Departments, was introducing local pay additions for areas around London, amounting to £600. That is a welcome step in the right direction, but it is not a very large sum.

I asked Mr. France whether consideration could be given to geographically related pay throughout the country. He replied:

"Geographical pay is gradually beginning to appear."

That is welcome and I hope that further progress will be made.

There is another problem. There is great competition in Uxbridge between the Department of Social Security and the London borough of Hillingdon for exactly the same sort of staff. Local authorities such as Hillingdon borough council can pay whatever they judge the appropriate rate for the job. Consequently, the DSS is battling to retain staff who are frequently siphoned off by local authorities. That also applies in many other parts of London and, for all I know, in other parts of the country.

Thus there are differing rates of pay in the DSS, which is an agency of national Government, and a London borough council, which is an agency of local government. That is making it difficult for DSS offices to retain local staff who have worked there for many years and who are experts in their field. They are tempted to go and work for the borough council. As £600 per year, welcome though it is, is not much these days, I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will give some thought to this.

Before I took part in this session of the PAC I made a number of inquiries among my friends in the Department of the Environment to discover whether overall strategic consideration was being given to the problem of the pull by local government away from the offices of a Department of State. No such consideration is being given, so the problem will persist unless something is done about it. I mention this matter on the Floor of the House because I hope that some thought will be given to it. It is not an easy matter to solve, but perhaps the PAC could deal with it at an appropriate time.

It is a privilege to take part in this debate and to have served on the PAC under our distinguished Chairman. I look forward to many more good reports. Like the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon), no doubt, I firmly believe that they are one of our best protections for ensuring value for money for the taxpayer.

8.34 pm

Mr. Tim Smith (Beaconsfield): I start by endorsing what my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) has just said. I, too, regard it as a privilege to serve as a member of the Public Accounts Committee. It is one of the most effective Select Committees because it can draw on the services of 900 staff. Most Select Committees have perhaps two or three special advisers. We are fortunate because we rely so heavily on the staff of the

[Mr. Tim Smith]

National Audit Office, who produce the reports on which our inquiries are based. Of course, those reports are not being investigated today, but they form the basis of our inquiries.

We are also fortunate to have the calibre of staff that the NAO employs. I know that it has plans not only to maintain but to improve the quality of its staff and to increase the number of value-for-money reports that it makes.

Although I have said that we are effective, perhaps we should have some independent assessment of our effectiveness; perhaps we could do a little more to blow our own trumpet. The Audit Commission is good at making regular pronouncements about the total value of the savings that it has recommended could be made if local government adopted its proposals. We could do more to quantify the savings that have been recommended by the PAC.

In this respect the Treasury should regard the Committee as an ally. We have a common objective; I am sure that my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary would agree that it is to improve value for money. I should like to make a proposal: my hon. Friend should try to see what can be done to improve the quality of Treasury minutes. Although I am sure that there is no deliberate attempt to obfuscate the issues, the way in which Treasury minutes are set out could be greatly improved. If the PAC first clearly tabulated what its recommendations were, the Treasury could then follow the practice of other Departments when replying to Select Committee reports. For instance, I have just read the Trade and Industry Select Committee report on financial services in the European market. Each recommendation is set out, followed by the Government response to it. That would be a useful way of proceeding. Will my hon. Friend consider that proposal?

I want to refer to four reports which form a representative sample that well illustrates the value of the different aspects of the Committee's work. The first is one to which hon. Members have already referred—the twenty-sixth report on coronary disease. It was an interesting report because it was the first time that the NAO had examined the output of the National Health Service, rather than the input. It had previously examined estate management and the way in which operating theatres are used, for example, but this report inquires into the objectives of the NHS. What is it in business for? The obvious answer is: to ensure that we all enjoy better health. What is one of the main killers in Britain? The answer is: coronary disease. How effective is Government policy in tackling it? Compared with some other countries it is not very good, and there is much room for improvement.

I referred earlier to the strikingly disproportionate amount spent on treating the problem as opposed to trying to prevent it. I shall not repeat the figures that I gave, but this needs examination. Curing heart disease is an expensive business, so we should devote more resources to trying to prevent it in the first place.

There is also a case for better ministerial co-ordination. When we asked questions about it in the Committee we were told that it was a matter for Ministers, so it seems right to mention it to my hon. Friend now. There are ministerial committees that deal with drugs and AIDS, so there seems to be a strong case for a ministerial committee to deal with coronary disease, because trying to prevent it is clearly the responsibility of more than one Department —although the Department of Health has a major responsibility.

The example of tobacco taxation immediately demonstrates that the Treasury has a major responsibility. I know that when Treasury Ministers consider the Budget, many other considerations are regarded as more important than the nation's health. However, Treasury Ministers would surely agree that the price mechanism is the most efficient way of influencing people's behaviour. All the evidence shows that if we increase the price of cigarettes, we curb demand.

Mr. Roy Beggs (Antrim, East): I thank the hon. Gentleman for giving way. Does he agree that, as the price of tobacco products has increased in the past, we have disadvantaged our own people because jobs have been lost in production in the United Kingdom and laid open the opportunity for cheap imports to this country without achieving a reduction in the use of tobacco products?

Mr. Smith: The hon. Gentleman puts the argument which has been put to me many times by the tobacco industry and of which I am well aware. There are always different considerations, but I have no doubt that price is an extremely effective way of influencing people's behaviour. The report shows that three principal factors determine whether people suffer coronary heart disease, and smoking is one of them. That is an important consideration.

The thirty-second report on the financial management of the Welsh Office is interesting. It is the first time that the National Audit Office has examined a whole Department. It looked at the financial management of the entire Department. The Welsh Office is a relatively small Department and spends only—perhaps I should not say only—£3,500 million and therefore it was possible to subject it to such scrutiny.

When the permanent secretary attended, I asked him whether he had a job description. He told me that he had not. I asked him how much of his time he spent on policy advice rather than managing the Department. He estimated that he spent more time managing the Department than on policy advice, which I thought was interesting. I asked him whether he regarded senior officials in the Department as a management board. There has been a change in Civil Service culture during the past few years as a result of financial management initiatives and other initiatives taken by the Government. There are more officials in Government who see themselves as managers. I am still clear that giving good quality advice to Ministers is probably seen as the priority.

Another factor in this context is the lack of accountants working in line management positions in Government. One might think that financial controllers in Government would be accountants; they are not. Such is the generalist philosophy and culture of the Civil Service that accountants are thought of as people to be put at the end of the corridor and consulted on financial matters. They are not placed in positions with a degree of financial responsibility. There are very few accountants working in line management positions. The other day I was talking to an internal auditor from the DTI who told me that there were as few as 300 throughout central Government.

Dr. Godman: Given the Committee's practice of comparing different Departments, does the hon. Gentleman agree that, in the absence of a Scottish Affairs Select Committee, this Committee could perform a useful, nay, a valuable, function in examining some aspects of the financial management of the Scottish Office?

Mr. Smith: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman appreciates that we regularly look at matters relating to Scotland. We recently looked at the operation of the procurators fiscal and aspects of the Health Service in Scotland. If the hon. Gentleman is saying that we should look at the overall financial management of the Scottish Office, that is an interesting idea that we might well put to the National Audit Office.

The third report to which I shall refer is the ninth report on the Overseas Development Administration and multilateral aid. I do so because the Committee has not always criticised every Government Department. In this case, we gave the ODA good marks for what it was doing. Our general conclusion in paragraph 18 was:

"we saw the C & AG's Report as providing Parliament with assurance that the Overseas Development Administration have adopted a generally sound approach to monitoring and controlling the Multilateral Aid Programme."

We had some reservations, as we always have. It is our job to criticise and we always look for the weak points. But when a Department is well run, and managing itself in a satisfactory way, it is important to say so and in that case we did.

The forty-sixth report in the last Session, 1987-88, on the management of the family practitioner services is one of many reports on the National Health Service produced by the Committee. Obviously, we made detailed proposals for improving the management of family practitioner committees and have made many other detailed proposals in other reports on the NHS. Many of our recommendations have found their way into the Government's White Paper, the NHS review. That may come as a surprise to some people who apparently think that the White Paper is designed to undermine the National Health Service. However, its simple objective is to improve the efficiency and effectiveness with which the taxpayer's money is spent in the Health Service.

In the Public Accounts Committee, we see examples almost every month of where savings could be made and more money devoted to improved patient care. I am pleased that many of the Committee's proposals have found their way into the White Paper and are being, or will be, implemented when the National Health Service and Community Care Bill is enacted. That is an important point.

I congratulate the Committee's Chairman, the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon), on his work. His is a most onerous task which he has carried out with great distinction.

8.47 pm

Mr. Nicholas Brown (Newcastle upon Tyne, East): I identify myself and the Opposition with the remarks of the hon. Member for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw), who congratulated my right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon) on the way in which he chaired the Public Accounts Committee during the past year. My right hon. Friend does an enormous amount of hard work, and I know that he commands the respect of the rest of the Committee and the House. I thank him and the other members of the Public Accounts Committee for the work that they do and for the bipartisan spirit in which they do it. It is important to the authority which the reports carry when they come before the House that they are produced in a bipartisan spirit and reflect a consensus among the Committee members. That unanimity gives them enormous authority. The House takes the Committee's views seriously.

Therefore, it is all the more damning that the substantial losses to the Exchequer which have been identified in some of the reports relate not to failures in public administration, but to losses sustained as a direct result of the Government's ideological commitment. The bill for dogma is now being presented to the nation. In some of the reports the Public Accounts Committee has identified a separate matter: where public expenditure has been foolishly forgone, resulting in long-term inefficiencies and losses to the Exchequer. I shall deal first with this issue before referring to the reports which identify losses to the Exchequer due to political decision making rather than administrative inefficiencies.

When the House debated public expenditure in February, we found a new word for public expenditure foolishly forgone. We introduced to the English language "Lamontable" and the concept of Lamontable spending decisions. Of the Lamontables now under consideration, the twenty-sixth PAC report on coronary heart disease makes important reading, and it has been referred to by several hon. Members. It is not the first time that the PAC has considered the issue, but it still feels that it is necessary to express its concern at the failure of the Department of Health to evaluate the full potential of spending on prevention to save on treatment costs.

As the hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) said,, factors such as heredity and age are unavoidable. None the less, the Committee draws attention to the three principal risk factors, which are smoking, blood pressure and cholesterol levels. These factors are all avoidable, and the Department must do more than admit that more needs to be done in heart disease prevention. The Committee highlights the obvious point that more resources devoted to prevention would result in long-term savings for the Department and to better lifestyles for many of our citizens.

Several hon. Members have referred to the administration of national museums, galleries and collections. The Committee noted that the Treasury expressed the view that there was scope within the arts budget to meet urgent priorities, but the museum service claims that it is seriously under-funded to meet its needs. The result is an inability of the service properly to account for the care and maintenance of, in some instances, priceless collections that are in its charge. The Committee noted the lack of reliable quantified information on the extent of the problems faced by the service and the resource consequences of that. It is an issue to which the Committee will no doubt have to return when better information is available.

It is right that the House should assert now that it is in the national interest that these matters are brought to a satisfactory conclusion before the poor storage conditions and the backlog of conservation to which the Committee refers in the case of some national collections reach their logical conclusion and important collections are irretrievably damaged or lost to the nation for ever. I was as horrified as the Chairman of the PAC, my right hon.

[Mr. Nicholas Brown]

Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne, when the Victoria and Albert museum stated that it was running the risk of irreparable damage to some parts of the national heritage. I am sure that the House considers that to be unacceptable. If it is the consequence of public expenditure foolishly forgone, it is Lamontable that we must pay the price for it.

Exactly the same point is made by the PAC, although in a different context, in its twenty-eighth report on road maintenance. Several hon. Members, especially those with constituency interests, spoke on the issue with considerable feeling. The Department of Transport is criticised for continuing uncertainty, for failing to budget, for having an irregular maintenance programme and for taking money from that programme to be used in the new-build programme instead. The report highlights the long-term public expenditure consequences of neglecting maintenance and refers to the Department's estimates of the long-term cost of a decision to defer the spending of about £28 million in 1988-89. It is estimated that this decision could lead to on-costs of about £60 million to £120 million over the next three to four years.

The Committee rightly doubts whether the benefits lost by postponing part of the maintenance programme will ever be recovered by spending the money on new build instead. It considers this to be a striking example of short-sightedness in saving now but spending later. This is an example of public expenditure foolishly forgone, and the decision will cost the taxpayer more in the long run. It is another Lamontable decision. The report was published at the end of June and the Committee was able to take note of the new spending commitments which were announced in April-May for the Department of Transport.

The announcement was heralded by a speech delivered by the then Chief Secretary to the Treasury. There were those who suggested cynically that that was because the Chief Secretary expected to be moved to the Department of Transport in the forthcoming Government reshuffle. I consider that to be an unworthy and cynical view. It was always my opinion that the then Chief Secretary was destined for higher things. Now that he has moved up a rung, as it were, the previous Financial Secretary has moved to fill his job and the previous Economic Secretary is now the Financial Secretary. It is surely an appropriate moment for me to welcome the Financial Secretary to his new job and to say that I look forward to winding up these debates with him for the rest of the Parliament, and in the same spirit that I did with his Lamontable predecessor.

The Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Peter Lilley): The hon. Gentleman will have to find a new pun now.

Mr. Brown: My other pun, as fans of our consideration of Finance Bills will know, is to refer to brief gaps in our consideration of them as lacunas. He who was the Economic Secretary is now the Lilley of lacuna. Perhaps that will not fit into the spirit of the debate, and that may explain why the Opposition seem unable to retain Members to serve on Finance Bill Committees.

It would not be a PAC debate without mention of the Ministry of Defence. The three recurring themes in these debates are the misdeeds of the Northern Ireland Office, the misdeeds of the Ministry of Defence, and the Government's lack of enthusiasm to clamp down on a wide range of serious fraud. This year the Ministry of Defence, even by its own standards, has managed to secure a substantial amount of the Committee's fully justified attention. No fewer than 10 of its reports refer to matters that concern the Ministry.

The thirty-first report deals with the reliability and maintenance of defence equipment. It builds on the consideration that the Committee gave to the issue way back in 1979. In that year, it was noted that an improvement in the reliability and maintenance of defence equipment was potentially the most cost-effective measure directly open to the Ministry in that sector. The PAC was therefore right—it was a reasonable thing for it to do—to return to the matter about 10 years on to ascertain what progress had been made. According to the Committee, there had not been very much progress.

The Ministry accepts that unreliability probably costs as much as £1 billion a year. It considers 50 per cent. to be a fair goal for justifiable savings. As Sir Peter Levene rightly said, reliability costs money but that the more we spend on it the more we shall save. It is fair to observe, as the Committee does, that not much of a start seems to have been made 10 years on. The PAC drily observes that it looks to the Ministry to make early progress. This is another example of public expenditure forgone leading to greater cost to the taxpayer in the long term.

If the Ministry ever begins to take notice of the PAC's reports or of these debates, I hope that it will consider these matters and make a start to improve the quality of the type 23 frigate programme. My right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne has said that there are only 30 reliability and maintenance specialists in the Ministry. As the report states, however, the Ministry has a procurement budget of about £9 billion.

The Ministry of Defence provides a good example of the Committee's work in the second of the two areas to which I referred at the beginning of my speech, and that is the loss of moneys to the Exchequer as a result of Government dogma, not maladministration.

It would be amazing if this debate were to reach a conclusion without reference to the Committee's forty-eighth report on the sale of Royal Ordnance plc. The Committee rightly makes the point that, prior to the sale of Royal Ordnance, the MOD did not explore the possibility of redevelopment at Waltham Abbey or Enfield and nor did it obtain alternative valuations of those sites on the assumption that redevelopment might be approved in future. The Government sold Royal Ordnance, including all its sites, in April 1987. It was bought by British Aerospace for £190 million. The Waltham Abbey and Enfield sites were bought for £3·5 million, but a subsequent valuation by the City firm of Warburg suggested that the sites could be worth up to £462 million when they had been redeveloped for industry and housing.

The PAC said:

"We note that BAe could make a substantial gain on their sale or development without benefits accruing to the taxpayer beyond the sale price paid by BAe."

Of course, British Aerospace has also purchased the Rover Group. It is not the first PAC report to bring privatisation issues to our attention. Hon. Members who recall last year's debate will remember the unhappy report on the Rolls-Royce privatisation. They will also remember the last-minute debt write-offs and the pressure from the management of Rolls-Royce just before it was due to go into the private sector. There is no doubt that next year we shall again consider a PAC report on the Rover Group, which will inevitably make similar points.

Substantial sums of public money have been unnecessarily given away to pursue the Government's ideological commitment to privatisation and with no consideration of the public purse or even of issues of common sense. If it had happened just once, it could be understood, but to have a debate on this matter last year, this year and probably again next year shows substantial Government contempt for the public purse.

Mr. Shersby: I do not wish to be controversial, but surely it is necessary to balance the decision on the Rover Group with the substantial sums of taxpayers' money that have been used to shore up the Rover Group for many years. I think that the figure is about £3·5 billion. Without being controversial, I wish to point out that that is also a substantial sum of money and that many taxpayers were heartily sick of it.

Mr. Brown: I am content to await the eventual PAC report on these matters. No doubt we will return to them next year. My understanding is that those taxpayers were about to realise a return on their investment in Rover. Perhaps the PAC will say that, perhaps it will not, but one thing is certain—that the PAC cannot avoid the issue of the potential speculative gain on the land owned by Rover and by Royal Ordnance. That point was emphasised in the report on Royal Ordnance, and I expect that it will be emphasised again in the report on Rover. I may be wrong, and I do not wish to prejudge the issue, but that is what I expect. Whatever one's political view of privatisation, and I am opposed to it, it is possible to carry out a privatisation programme and preserve the legitimate interests of the taxpayer on land sales—land set at a certain value, but which also has a substantially increased and enhanced speculative value. I wish that the Government had taken that point on board before transferring substantial assets to the private sector.

Again, it would not be a PAC debate without some mention of unacceptable levels of fraud and the Government's failure to deal with them. Their reluctance to take firm action across a whole range of areas was a major feature of last year's debate. This year, the Committee is concerned at the level of fraud on the second regional development grants scheme. It regards it as a unacceptable that the majority of cases to date have not been detected by officers of the Department of Trade and Industry. The Committee makes the important recommendation that there should be independent accountants' reports on the number of jobs created as a simple, effective and straightforward safeguard against fraud.

It seems appropriate to move on from independent accountants' reports and independent monitoring to the report on the urban development corporations. Systematic monitoring of performance is recommended for the urban development corporations, and the implementation of that recommendation is long overdue. The Committee has so far looked only at the London Docklands and the Merseyside development corporations, but it will at some stage have to turn its attention to other more recent urban development corporations. There is no evidence that the Department of the Environment is making any serious effort to control or restrain those undemocratic and unaccountable institutions which are spending significant sums of public money.

In its twentieth report on the London Docklands and Merseyside development corporations the Committee identified four issues—first, again, the lack of control over land valuations and sales; secondly, the misuse of consultants, a matter that my hon. Friend the Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) raised in last year's debate; thirdly, the failure to protect the public purse in profit-sharing arrangements; and, fourthly, and most significantly, poor management. I strongly suspect that variations on those four items would be discovered if scrutiny were extended to the other urban development corporations. I hope that at an appropriate time the Public Accounts Committee will undertake that task.

In trying to do justice to the Committee's reports I have drawn two themes from them—public expenditure foolishly forgone, the failure to spend 1p now costing £1 later; and the losses that have been suffered by the Exchequer as a result of political decision making rather than maladministration, most noticeably through the Government's privatisation programme. I hope that at some stage the Public Accounts Committee will be able to take an overview of the cost-effectiveness of the Government's privatisation programme. Then the point made by the hon. Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) could be weighed against the fears, some of them confirmed, some yet to be confirmed, of Opposition Members.

The Public Accounts Committee published two reports on the services offered by the Department of Social Security. In its forty-fourth report the Committee considers the quality of service to the public in what were then local Department of Health and Social Security offices. After making a number of points about the organisation of local offices, manpower levels, high staff turnover and the direct relationship between dissatisfaction with facilities and expenditure on local offices, the Committee expressed its concern about the image of the social security system and the narrow interpretation of the DSS of its responsibility for advising and encouraging claimants. The Committee returned to some of those matters in its thirtieth report, noting an estimated level of incorrect payments of between £34 million and £89 million, stating that that was clearly unacceptable. The Committee expressed concern at the number of errors in the social fund account and the frank admission that what was disclosed was unsatisfactory and unacceptable.

My hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) was right to raise the question of claimants suffering from the industrial disease vibration white finger. That does not affect all areas equally; it is confined to constituencies where heavy industry dominates, particularly heavy engineering and shipbuilding, but that industrial illness and the way in which the Department of Social Security is dealing with it deeply concern those communities that are affected.

My hon. Friend referred to a figure of 20,000 claims submitted in Sunderland alone. They will not all be substantial but a great number of them will be. I am reminded of the deluge of industrial deafness claims that occurred when I was an official of the General Municipal Boilmakers and Allied Trades Union before I was elected to this House. At the peak of those submissions, the union's solicitors had an office with filing cabinets all around the walls labelled from A to Z, and each file was visited once every three months. Ultimately there were about 4,000 successful claims in the Newcastle area alone. That is a prime example of people suffering industrial injury as a consequence of the community in which they live and of a traditional form of employment in that community. Vibration white finger is a similar issue, and my hon. Friend was right to raise it in the context of the report.

[Mr. Brown]

The Public Accounts Committee made the point that the Department is taking steps to improve the service provided by local offices and intends to increase its targets year by year. However, the PAC comments also that the Department's services are provided to 23 million callers each year and that, in the main, they are citizens who are least able to turn to any other form of advice and who rely on the state to treat them fairly. It is important that the state treats those citizens fairly and does not send them somewhere else for the information that should be provided by a Government Department. The reports also present some stark contrasts in providing an overview of what is happening in this country. They tell of the transfer of public assets from public control to wealthy, private companies and of the generous arrangements made to facilitate such transfers. Other PAC reports tell of the neglect of public services, inadequate funding of the arts, lack of road maintenance, and failure to spend money also on preventive medicine. Two of the reports reveal the mean and squalid treatment received by the least well off in our society in respect of services delivered by the DSS. The Public Accounts Committee presents a snapshot and an indictment of Tory Britain.

9.12 pm

The Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Peter Lilley): This is the first occasion that I have had the privilege to reply to a debate on the work of the Public Accounts Committee. In preparing for it, I came to realise what a daunting responsibility it is—not only because of the enormous volume of reports involved but because of their scope, range, quality and value. I join with other hon. Members in paying tribute to the Committee's Chairman, the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon), who brings to it both his personal authority and considerable experience, which enhances the work of what probably has always been the most powerful and important Committee in this House.

It is not just officers in the public service but Ministers who take seriously the views of the Committee and of its Chairman—and not just what it says but what it might say. The hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) made a valid point when he remarked that the Committee could refer only to things that had happened, but it also casts its shadow ahead of it and makes everyone very aware of, and more cautious about, their own actions. I pay tribute also to the Comptroller and Auditor General, as well as to the staff of the National Audit Office, for their excellent work in preparing the reports.

The hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), with whom I am often in agreement on constitutional matters, was wrong to suggest that the Committee's practice of reaching unanimous agreement is detrimental and open to criticism. Whatever our views on the precise role and scope of the public sector, we can surely all agree that it should carry out that role by providing value for money and maintaining the highest standards of integrity in the way in which that money is spent. Through its reports, the Committee does a great deal to achieve that aim.

Inevitably, I cannot respond to all the many points that have been made—which themselves are but the tip of an iceberg whose bulk, in the form of the reports themselves, lies below the Dispatch Box. Let me deal first with the report on the quality of service provided in DSS offices.

It is, I agree, very important for clients of the social services, who are often among the most needy and vulnerable members of society, to receive the best, most rapid and most courteous service that we can reasonably provide. The social security reforms that we introduced some years ago have made the system easier for clients to understand and simpler for the authorities to administer, and that is already showing in the improved clearance times for—among others—income support claimants. In 1987-88, they had to wait for an average of 6·3 days for their claims to be cleared; last year, they had to wait for an average of 4·9 days. The time that they spend in the office —including waiting time—has been reduced in that period from 26 minutes to just under 20.

Hon. Members have expressed doubts about the DSS's survey figures as compared with those provided by Gallup's survey. Let me point out, particularly to the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne, that the Gallup report was retrospective—it asked people to think back to their visits—whereas the DSS figures are collected at the time of the visits. Early in the new year, however, the DSS is to carry out the first external and independent poll of customers' opinions, which will be made available to the House and which will, I believe, be of value.

I may respond in more detail to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) in writing, although his contribution was most welcome. Let me tell him now, however, that the new complementing system will take effect in April 1990. It will be performance-based —that is, it will make staffing levels fit agreed performance levels in each office. The Government do not accept that staffing levels are wrong, but we hope in time to improve the precise allocation and complement of staff.

Dr. Godman: I am obliged to the Minister. May I point out, however, that considerable anxiety is felt by many of my constituents who have made claims in respect of white finger disease? Their fear centres on the likelihood of the Treasury forcing the DSS to close down the take-up campaign by bringing forward a closure date for such claims. Will the Minister give me an assurance that that anxiety is misplaced, and that the Treasury would do no such dreadful thing?

Mr. Lilley: The Treasury never does dreadful things. I will, however, give the hon. Gentleman an assurance that I will look into the matter and write to him—and, if he wishes, that response can be made public. I am grateful to him for raising an issue that is plainly important both to many of his constituents and, more widely, to the industries affected.

The next report refers to the sale of the royal ordnance factories. We are satisfied that the arrangements for the sale of Royal Ordnance were designed to ensure that the competition was as wide-ranging as possible and open to bidders. Care was taken to ensure that the pressure on the bidders was maintained until the final decision. We are confident that the price received for Royal Ordnance—£190 million—was a true reflection of its market value. It was twice the value that we were advised could have been obtained the previous year.

The media claims about the site values of the two main sites that have been mentioned in the debate have been demonstrated to be enormously exaggerated. The professional valuations were in the range of £25 million to £37·5 million—only 8 per cent. of the figure extensively quoted in the media. Quite clearly it was a mistaken report.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: It was produced by independent analysts.

Mr. Lilley: It was produced by an analyst and as I used to be one I know how unreliable analysts' reports can be. The valuation report was reasonably reliable.

The right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne mentioned the importance of valuing sites on an alternative-use basis. Valuations of the two sites were made on an alternative-use basis, but they were found to be lower than those made on a current-use basis and for that reason they were not made public. However, they demonstrated that the current-use valuations were the highest and the most relevant.

The right hon. Gentleman also mentioned the possibility of selling off in tranches. That is obviously much easier to do in respect of a public company than in the case of a private treaty sale, but occasionally we have sold off public companies in tranches as in the case of Cable and Wireless.

The right hon. Gentleman and a number of others, including my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw), expressed concern about the report on museums and galleries. I am not sure whether the report fully recognised that the Committee's concerns are already being addressed.

Improved corporate planning is being required of all the main museums and galleries. In 1987 we introduced three-year planning which makes it easier for them to plan ahead. In 1988 we announced a major increase in grant-in-aid for building and maintenance work, and the funding emphasis on conservation, storage and documentation has been enhanced. The total provision for museums and galleries has risen from £158 million in 1988-89 to £182 million in 1990-91—a 15 per cent. increase—and will reach £200 million in 1992-93—a 27 per cent. increase. That will provide a considerable increase in resources available to museums and galleries to carry out the work which the Committee rightly recognised is so important.

I must tell my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough that record-keeping will be an important aspect of corporate planning required of museums and galleries and I understand that many museums are using computerised records which will give them a much better ability to identify what they have in their collections.

The report mentioned by the greatest number of right hon. and hon. Members was that dealing with coronary heart disease. The right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne and my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page) were disappointed in the fall in the United Kingdom rate of coronary heart disease. I understand that the fall has been greatest in countries where the level of disease initially was the highest. It is not as high in the United Kingdom as in a number of other countries. It has declined here, particularly among younger groups, among which it fell 30 per cent. between 1970 and 1985. Those younger groups seem to be maintaining a more healthy lifestyle as they move into the older age groups, along with me.

My hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) and other hon. Members emphasised what they saw as the disproportion between expenditure on prevention and on treatment. It would not be sensible to expect the numbers to bear any mechanical or arithmetical relationship. We recognise the importance of prevention, and in England we are introducing the "Look After Your Heart" campaign, which I understand is the first multifaceted campaign in the world directed at coronary heart disease. It recognises the many aspects that render people liable to the disease. Quite considerable sums are being spent, not only from the public purse but by private companies, which are being encouraged to participate in the campaign.

My hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield mentioned the importance of tobacco taxes. They are a crucial way of discouraging smoking, which is a major cause of heart disease. In my previous capacity—Lilley of lacuna—I was the guilty man responsible for not raising tobacco taxes as much as my hon. Friend and other hon. Members would wish. I assure the House that the Treasury discusses this issue closely with the Department of Health and takes health considerations into account. It is in part because of that, and apart from our insatiable desire for money, that we have such a high tax on tobacco. As I recall, it has increased in real terms by about 40 per cent. since 1979. The main decline in the use of tobacco over the years resulted from cultural changes, undoubtedly helped by the rise in tobacco tax.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West mentioned the importance of defibrillators and training for ambulance personnel. The voluntary extended training of ambulance staff is new; 1988-89 was the first full year of the National Health Service training authority's package. It is not therefore surprising that some doctors and consultants find it difficult to accept that a sea change is taking place and that ambulance staff are now capable of being trained for, and able to supply, advanced resuscitation and life-saving skills. The Department of Health is convinced that paramedic training and practice will form an increasingly important element within the accident and emergency ambulance service, which is why the proposal for increased salary to paramedics was made. We are taking action on that front.

Mr. Page: I appreciate the advances that are being made, but does not my hon. Friend find it frightening that only last year we began to get our act together on this vital matter? The spread of best practice and the introduction of defibrillators should have been done by the National Health Service through the Department of Health years ago, not last year. Does my hon. Friend share my concern?

Mr. Lilley: I understand my hon. Friend's concern, but many of those better qualified than he or I believed until quite recently that it was not desirable for treatment to be carried out by ambulance personnel. Who are we to ignore medical advice? My hon. Friend's attitude is much more in tune with the majority of the medical profession than it was in the past.

[Mr. Lilley]

The other medical report that we debated was on the use of operating theatres in the National Health Service. I agree with the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne that it is a matter of concern that such important pieces of plant and equipment are not fully utilised. He said that only half the available theatre time was fully employed. That is significant. The report gives a figure of 20 per cent. spare capacity. That demonstrates that there is scope for improving value for money in the Health Service. I noted a comment in the report that:

"Traditional practices and habits, framed for the convenience of consultants and staff, must be revised as necessary".

That is in line with the Government's attitude and probably with the attitude of the whole House. Indeed, it is part of the philosophy of our planned National Health Service reforms, although they will not necessarily have universal support.

The NHS reforms wil help make better use of operating theatres within the NHS by making two changes. First, contractual arrangements for health care will become more widespread. Hospitals will have a direct incentive to use their facilities efficiently, attract patients and use theatres more fully because cash will follow the patient. That is a vital and important reform of the NHS which will encourage greater efficiency. The other change will be in capital accounting. Until now, there has been no proper capital accounting in the NHS so it is not surprising that proper use is not always made of the large amount of capital resources in the NHS.

I now come to the report on the highway maintenance backlogs, which was mentioned by several right hon. and hon. Members. The right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne who is Chairman of the PAC said that roads were not built to last long enough and that the Department of Transport would prefer to press on with building roads rather than fill gaps in knowledge about road design. The United Kingdom is a leader in road design backed by major research programmes. Over the years, national roads have usually performed better than expected by carrying more traffic than they were designed for before having to be rebuilt. Designs were substantially upgraded in 1985 and roads are now being built to last 40 years before they need to be rebuilt.

Over £670 million was spent on the capital maintenance of national roads and bridges over the past three years. That is a 220 per cent. increase in real terms over the 1978-79 budget.

The Autumn Statement prepared by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury showed that we would spend £1·3 billion on capital maintenance on roads over the next three years which is a further real increase of 40 per cent. Planned spending over the next three years should be enough to eliminate backlogs of road maintenance as currently estimated. That will be welcomed by members of the Committee, both in their capacity as guardians of the public purse and as frequent users of the motorways.

The next report is on the reliability and maintainability of defence equipment. The Ministry of Defence is in full accord with the Public Accounts Committee's recommendations about improved procurement procedures. A director of reliability was appointed in July 1989. The Ministry is reviewing the future requirement for reliability and maintenance specialists both within the directorate of reliability and in the service departments and other parts of the procurement executive to support that increased emphasis. The services defect reporting systems are being reviewed to see how they can be adapted to provide information for statistical analysis to support the plans for improvement. Greater attention will be paid to life cycle costs at all stages of projects and the new emphasis has been widely publicised within the services. The Ministry of Defence and the industry are being made aware of it by meetings, seminars and video presentations, all of which have attracted considerable interest.

The right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne commented on the report on urban development corporations. The report was a little out of date when it was published because it was overtaken by other developments. Many of the suggestions for tighter control and monitoring have been implemented since the Comptroller and Auditor General's report was published. The new urban development corporations have been set up, taking into account his criticisms of earlier guidance, and a comprehensive guidebook has been issued to all UDCs together with a revised financial memorandum.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West made several points about the road planning report. The Department of Transport has studied the PAC report carefully. It is not complacent about traffic forecasting methods and there is no evidence that the methods are fundamentally flawed. It has a system of checking forecasts against actual traffic, as the Committee recommended. Of the 41 road schemes cited, 60 per cent. had forecasts with an accuracy within plus or minus 20 per cent.—that is within the level of accuracy determined by the technique. Those checks show that there is no systematic bias. Forecasting errors at the extreme of minus 50 per cent. up to 105 per cent. were quoted. They were largely due to planned changes in land use not taking place. Traffic forecasting is inherently uncertain. The methods have been and will continue to be improved. The new national road traffic forecast provides a more up-to-date basis for appraising road schemes. I am pleased to note that my hon. Friend was encouraged by the Treasury response to the report and by the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity".

My hon. Friend mentioned his anxiety about the environment associated with the future widening of the M25. The consultants' report has been published and the standing advisory committee on trunk road assessment has been expanded and asked to examine the evaluation of environmental effects.

The hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) apologised to the House for leaving early and we are grateful for that apology. We welcome his speech. He is an hon. Member for whom I have great respect when he is not muck-raking. He commented on information in reports to Parliament, particularly about the secret services and GCHQ. The House has long accepted that it is not in the public interest to reveal details of the security and intelligence services, but the NAO has full access to expenditure on GCHQ. Given the nature of the expenditure on the secret vote, there are long-standing conventions that Parliament has accepted that there should not be detailed external examination of that expenditure, but obviously the PAC can examine it in private session.

My hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough raised an important point about the public sector borrowing requirement and its arcane definition. I can well understand that he may be puzzled by it. It has perplexed me in the past. It is a complicated matter, but there is logic behind the definition. As he said, if a subsidiary of the Commonwealth development corporation borrows abroad to lend abroad, it does not count against the PSBR for the good reason that it has no impact on the British economy. Borrowing by British Nuclear Fuels plc does not count against the PSBR because it is a Companies Act company borrowing on the ordinary markets. The Government's guarantee of that borrowing does not involve any expenditure unless the guarantee is called, in which case any Government payment would count as public expenditure.

Sir Michael Shaw: Government agencies or local government could often adopt the same policies as those of British Nuclear Fuels. The arguments are more or less the same. That would allow it to compete in the open market for genuine, commercial objectives that are necessary. I cannot help but feel that from time to time the Government use the PSBR definition to stop developments. Certainly the variations due to Government changes in policy on PSBR make continuous planning in some areas uncertain.

Mr. Lilley: I understand what my hon. Friend says. What is surely not in doubt is that the Government must exercise control over public sector borrowing. I can understand the difficulties of comprehension to which companies such as BNFL give rise. Plainly, the solution to all our problems of definition is to privatise as much as possible and have a much smaller public sector to which the definition will apply.

My hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) spoke in telling terms of his concern about prisons and law and order and I recognise the importance of the matters that he raised. The Treasury minute responds to some of them, notably on prison building where the programme is on target to yield an additional 7,000 places at new establishments by March 1993 and a further 2,500 new places at existing establishments somewhat earlier, in March 1991. In addition, there is a new programme of integral sanitation which should provide 6,500 cells with access to it within the next seven years. Ways of expanding that programme are being considered. However, I will draw to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary the matters that my hon. Friend has raised and I am sure that he will be influenced by them. If my hon. Friend permits, I shall write to him about some of the more detailed aspects that he drew to the attention of the House.

My hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield appealed for a change in the format of the Treasury minutes. The Treasury is happy to redraft the form of those minutes in order to meet the wishes of the Committee and I hope that the next minute, which will be presented to the House early in the new year, will be in a form that better meets my hon. Friend's wishes and those of the Committee as a whole.

On that happy note I shall end my contribution to the debate. I renew the debt of gratitude that the whole House owes to the members of the Committee and to hon. Members who have taken part in this interesting debate.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House takes note of the 37th to 40th and 42nd to 52nd Reports of the Committee of Public Accounts of Session 1987-88, of the 1st to 33rd Reports of Session 1988-89 and of the Treasury Minutes and Northern Ireland Department of Finance and Personnel Memorandum on those Reports (Cm. 533, 563, 624, 648, 697, 717, 747, 831 and 850), with particular reference to the following Reports:—

1987-88:

Forty-fourth, Quality of service to the public at DHSS local offices;

Forty-eighth, Sale of Royal Ordnance plc.

1988-89:

First, Management of the collections of the English national museums and galleries;

Twenty-sixth, Coronary heart disease;

Twenty-eighth, Backlog of maintenance of motorways and trunk roads;

Thirty-first, Reliability and maintainability of defence equipment.

PETITIONS

Deaf Television Viewers

9.42 pm

Mr. Greville Janner (Leicester, West): I am pleased to present a petition to the House signed by more than 1,200 of my constituents and other citizens of the city of Leicester on behalf of deaf television viewers. The petition draws attention to the fact that broadcasters are not providing complete access for deaf television viewers, for example, with subtitles or sign language. It states that at least 4 million viewers are affected and that deaf viewers, as equal members of the general public, are entitled to equal access to television programmes.

The prayer calls upon the Government and the House to ensure that legislation is passed placing an obligation on television channel operators to make their programmes more accessible to deaf people by using Teletext subtitles, sign language or other means, and to reach complete coverage by a fixed date.

May we please help deaf people to understand the debates in this House when they are shown on television?

It is a pleasure to present the petition.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce (Gordon): Like the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner), I have pleasure in presenting a petition on behalf of deaf people in and around my constituency, including my daughter, who is profoundly deaf.

The petitioners are strongly of the view that the arrangements for televising the House do not provide complete access for deaf television viewers, specifically by the use of sign language and the provision of subtitles. They point out that some 4 million people in the United Kingdom are affected by deafness, and that they are as entitled to equal access to television broadcasting of Parliament as other members of the community. If they are to participate in the democratic and political process, it is essential that they are provided with that support.

The petitioners therefore pray

that your Honourable House will ensure that legislation be passed placing an obligation on television channel operators to make their programmes more accessible to deaf people by using Teletext subtitles, sign language or other means, and to reach complete coverage by a fixed date.

I have pleasure in presenting this petition, which I wholly support.

To lie upon the Table.

Rural Schools (Humberside)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Chapman.]

9.45 pm

Mr. David Davis (Boothferry): I am grateful to Mr. Speaker for selecting my subject for the Adjournment debate. Rural schools in Humberside face specific problems. I will come to the details in a moment, but I suspect that those problems are replicated in many counties with large rural areas and a majority urban population.

In recent years, much of Government policy has focused on the problems of the inner cities, recognising the specific problems there and attempting to do something about them. On the obverse side, there is a general belief that life is healthier in rural areas and that people in small towns and villages have a better quality of life than people in cities. They have less unemployment, less crime and fewer social problems. In my view, rural life is better than urban life, and I think that it should be made available to as many people as possible.

The quality of rural life is reflected in the schools, which have fewer behavioural problems, more parental involvement and a more positive attitude among the children. Accordingly educational attainment levels in rural schools are as good as—and sometimes better than—those in big urban schools. All those are virtues to be cherished. The thrust of my argument is that in Humberside all those virtues are at risk due to a policy of neglect.

Humberside has a large rural area, dominated by three major cities—Hull, Grimsby and Scunthorpe. My constituency of Boothferry is a predominantly rural area in the west of the county, furthest from Hull and Grimsby.

We all know how the mechanism for county councils obtaining money from central Government works—in practice if not in theory. On an annual basis, a typical county council makes a bid, which is almost always for more than the amount that it could reasonably expect to spend, because of the way the system works. It justifies the bid in the best way that it can and the Government agree to meet a proportion of the bid. In the past 50 years the average proportion nationwide has hovered at around 40 per cent. In other words, the Government have paid a typical council an average of 40 per cent. of its bid. Humberside has done much better than that. Although the bids have been large, the Government have allowed more than 60 per cent. of the bid submitted—almost half as much again as the national average. The Government have been generous to Humberside, and that generosity has allowed Humberside to spend £44 million to £45 million in capital on educational establishments.

More than £22 million of that money, however, has been spent on the Hull reorganisation alone. When it is finished, that reorganisation will have cost £23·6 million—50 per cent. more than the original bid. That massive overrun must be put down either to poor planning or to poor control—in other words, to poor management. There is considerable evidence that Humberside is not well blessed with good management in that respect. For example, the Audit Commission study of the provision of school meals in Humberside led to a number of salient criticisms about the way it was managed and identified management weaknesses accounting for some £2 million per year in excess costs.

In the reorganisation, the local authority did not send teachers to the schools that they ought to have attended, but left them for a considerable time in places where they were no longer needed. The local authority then offered an early retirement package so generous and so loosely managed that, instead of the 178 people that it needed to retire, 372 left. The county thus had to pay out for all those extra ones and then employ 200 new ones. That cost at least £4 million, which does not take account of the effect of the loss of a great number of experienced staff.

Such sloppy management is bad news for the ratepayer and the taxpayer, but the capital overrun is even worse news for my constituents in rural areas. For one school after another completion has been deferred, expansion has been put back and replacement has been denied. Many schools in my constituency are now overdue for capital expenditure. The most outstanding—there are many more—are the schools at Howden, Walkington and Rawcliffe. So as not to take too much time, I shall take just one as an illustration—the Howden infants school.

Plans for a completely new infants' school were drawn up in the 1960s, and it was opened in 1971. At that time, the school operated on a split site—the new site, called Hailgate, and the old site, called Pinfold. As a temporary measure, in 1981, the children were moved from the Pinfold site to the Hailgate site and the Pinfold site was sold. The money from the sale went back to the county council. The children were put in temporary buildings on the new site. The county council got the money, but provided only half the school.

I will read an extract from a letter from a constituent, who takes up the story and describes better than I can what has happened since. She writes:

"For the past 8 and a half years, more children have been housed in temporary classrooms than in permanent accommodation. Continuous housing developments in Howden during the past 10 years have led to increased numbers of children at the school. In the summer term of 1986 there were 199 pupils on the roll. It does not take a mathematician to work out 3 × 30 in each mobile classroom plus 80 in a permanent building adds up to 170. That is a theoretical accommodation level at 29 less than the actual pupil numbers. In the summer of 1987 pupil numbers stood at 189. Having experienced severe difficulties the previous summer, pressure was brought to bear and the authorities agreed to the school's use of a vacant classroom in the adjoining junior school. Such a measure would not be possible in the future as the junior school is now at full capacity. The numbers for summer 1989 were 164, within the school's present capacity, but it is predicted that pupil numbers will rise again in the next few years. Numbers at the moment are expected to be 165 in 1990, 178 in 1991 and 180 in 1992."

I think that those are very optimistic and low estimates. The letter continues:

"In December 1988, Humberside County Council stated that late January 1990 start and completion of the building was expected and there was no intention of delay, unless the current budget review dictated otherwise. Following a visit by the assistant education officer (sites and buildings) it is now understood that the completion is unlikely to take place for at least two years. The proposed completion (or extension as the authority mistakenly call it) has been in the building estimates for several years. Each year the authority has deferred the building programme.

The reason given this time is that the County Council has discovered that it needs to build a new school in Hull's dockside area. Why should Howden have to suffer for the County's poor planning and lack of foresight? It is not even known how large a school will be needed. Children from the new Dock side area could be bussed to one of Hull's half empty schools as a temporary measure. The children of Howden are here now; they are not a projected figure for the future and they should have their school completed now. It always seems to be the case that money is available for building in the cities but not in the rural areas."

That view is widely held by my constituents. Indeed, it is a commonplace belief. The letter continues:

"This year 77 year 1 and year 2 children aged 5 to 7 years are starting the new year in mobile classrooms; they have to trek across the yard to the toilets, to the hall for Physical Education, movement, dance and drama and collective worship. It is time wasting, and on a wet day they are soaked, and on very cold days it is just miserable and unnecessary. Please can something be done now?"

That letter is calm, collected and factual, but for all that, it is a plea from the heart from someone who has children in a school that is more than half temporary and has been so for a long time.

It is not the only case. From my own visit there, Walkington seems to be a similar problem. Rawcliffe school is so old and bedraggled that it needs complete replacement. The reasons for the delays and deferrals given by various representatives of the county council vary enormously—so much so that they smack of excuses rather than reasons. Sometimes they say that the school will be completed, and sometimes that it will not be, either because there are plans for a new school in Howden or because the money is to be used for something else.

I illustrate that with a response from the director of education explaining why Howden is to be deferred again, just one more time. He blames the Government first, of course, for not meeting his bid in full. He then says that there is only enough money for four new schemes. He writes:

"One element of the new scheme is a new primary school to serve the new housing development in the Victoria Dock area of Hull. This is a development which has been planned since we planned the Hull Schools reorganisation."

That would be in about 1986. The letter continues:

"There are no schools that are within reasonable distance of the new houses which could provide relief."

"Reasonable distance" is, of course, a rather subjective measure. Many of my constituents' children travel much further than the whole diameter of Hull to get to school, and they have no alternative. The letter continues:

"The size of the school is 240 places and facility to expand to 360. You will understand that forecasting the size of a school in this housing development is difficult until the mix of housing types is known. We are now confident we know the balance and can forecast accurately. I am sure that you will appreciate that substantial developments such as this constantly bring new factors into our planning process."

In other words, the Hull school has been planned since about 1986. Howden has been planned, nominally, since 1981. The Hull school is for predicted numbers, whereas the Howden completion is for current numbers of pupils and Howden is already overcrowded. The county council's priorities will prevent pupils in Hull having to travel perhaps a mile to another school by frequent bus services. Many of the children at Howden school have to travel quite considerable distances and there is no alternative.

There is a saying in my constituency that Humberside is longhand for Hull. Such political favouritism towards Labour-voting urban areas is, I suppose to be expected, but it is unacceptable that it should continue year after year to the penalty of my constituents' children.

I should like to ask my hon. Friend the Minister to allocate the money for this year's budget for Humberside to specific projects so that my constituents could be guaranteed fair treatment, but I know that that is no longer an option under current rules. The law expects and assumes that the county council will behave in a responsible manner. However, I ask my hon. Friend to make a generous allocation to Humberside again. Humberside has particular needs and I have no dispute with the county council about the fact that those needs —not least the reorganisation of schools in Goole which is also in my constituency—will prove expensive.

[Mr. David Davis]

I want my hon. Friend the Minister to make it clear to Humberside, however, that in giving it a generous allocation, he expects it to behave fairly towards the rural schools, especially those in my constituency. The other parts of Humberside have the same right to a good education and proper facilities for their children as are enjoyed by children in the Labour areas of Hull. When my hon. Friend reviews the bid in subsequent years, he should take into consideration just how the money given this year is used and whether the rural population has had a fair deal, because I want a fair deal for rural children in Humberside—no more and no less.

9.58 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science (Mr. Alan Howarth): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Boothferry (Mr. Davis) on securing this Adjournment debate, and I am grateful to him for providing the House with an opportunity to discuss the important issues that he raised tonight. I have noted, of course, what he has said about the way in which Humberside local education authority has proceeded in implementing the reorganisation proposals and his belief that, as a consequence, rural schools have been neglected. I can well understand his feelings of frustration and those of his constituents as they see much needed work on their schools deferred. I know that projects have been planned but not yet implemented for work at the schools to which he has referred—Howden, Hook, Airmyn, Rawcliffe and Walkington.

I appreciate the difficulties that pupils, teachers and parents have experienced at Howden. My hon. Friend has been in contact with the authority and with us about Howden. Howden infant school is a named school for a 120 basic need extension in the authority's bid for the coming year. It has, however, as my hon. Friend suggested, featured in the authority's bids in previous years, along with other basic need projects—

It being Ten o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

Sitting suspended—

10.2 pm

On resuming——

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Chapman.]

Mr. Howarth: As I was saying, Howden featured in the authority's bids in previous years. As basic need was allowed for in the allocation made to the authority in the past it would seem that it has decided not to give priority to this project and presumably has channelled its allocation into the reorganisations. I do not need to remind my hon. Friend that my Department cannot direct a local education authority on how it should spend its money. The authority is responsible to its electorate for its spending policies, capital and recurrent. In the case of recurrent expenditure, the community charge will make all authorities more directly accountable to their electorates. It is my hon. Friend's constituents who must make their voices heard if there is to be criticism of the way in which Humberside local education authority has spent the money provided for it.

Humberside LEA, in common with every other, has received allocations from us over and above those calculated as necessary to implement proposals for school reorganisation for spending on improvements to other schools, including those in rural areas. If my hon. Friend does not consider that the resources available to the authority have been properly distributed, these are matters for him to continue to take up with the authority, as he has done already on behalf of his constituents.

My hon. Friend has referred to the reorganisation in his constituency—the Goole area—and in particular to the significant increase in the costs of the project. I understand that that has arisen as a result of the authority bowing to local pressure. It has developed, or is in the course of developing, a modern sixth form centre for pupils at the local comprehensive school in the premises of Bartholomew school, a former middle school. This was originally intended to house a primary school. It is now proposed to establish the primary school instead in the premises of the former Boothferry road first school, again in deference to local wishes. I am glad to be able to announce to the House that approval of the new proposal has just been given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science, and the authority notified accordingly.

I hope that my hon. Friend's constituents will be glad that their pleas in respect of the proposed new primary school have not been in vain.

I note my hon. Friend's view that not enough money has been allocated for the Goole reorganisation, and that the authority has spent disproportionately large sums on the establishment of the new sixth form centre. I can only say that the estimated cost of the original proposals, as indicated by the local education authority, was fully taken into account in Humberside's allocations. Where an authority chooses to increase expenditure, or where cost increases occur, these have to be absorbed within its existing capital programme. It is up to local education authorities to get their costings as accurate as possible.

On the more general question of capital resources for schools, the Humberside LEA has submitted ambitious plans for capital spending to my Department. So have all the other local education authorities in England. I am glad to be able to remind the House that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State secured an increase for local authority capital, and for grants to voluntary aided and grant-maintained schools, in this year's public expenditure round. This extra provision will allow continued progress on improvement programmes in schools. Allocations to individual authorities of what are now to be called annual capital guidelines under the new capital control system will be announced by Christmas. We shall be looking at Humberside's needs, including the needs of some of the schools he has described which feature in the authority's plans, against that background. But I would not seek to give the House the impression that what we can distribute will meet all the spending needs identified by all local education authorities.

Hon. Members will have seen the Labour party's report published on Monday on the state of our schools. It is an opportunist and emotive document. Many of the figures are wrong, and some of the conclusions drawn are fanciful. But we would be the first to recognise that a great deal needs to be done to the fabric of schools all over the country to bring them up to scratch and to fit them for delivery of the high standards of education to which parents and teachers alike aspire, not least in the rural areas, and which our children should have. Local education authorities, and governors of voluntary aided schools, spend substantial sums of money each year in tackling the problem. They do this by means of borrowing power which we distribute, of receipts generated by sales of education assets—typically school sites sold as part of a reorganisation —by the use of revenue funds, and grant from the Department in the case of voluntary aided schools. Of course there is never enough to satisfy. The same is true of all public spending programmes.

Capital spending per pupil has nevertheless increased by 10 per cent. in real terms since we came into office. But more needs to be done, and it is against that background that there is to be an increase in local authority capital guidelines and in the money available for grant to governors of voluntary aided schools to which I referred earlier.

As in recent years, priority will be given first to meeting committed expenditure on projects outstanding from previous years. This stands Humberside in good stead because of the large-scale reorganisations approved in Grimsby and Goole which are still being implemented. Priority is next given to meeting the cost of new school places in areas of population growth, and then to removing surplus places. I know that new places for schools in my hon. Friend's constituency figure in Humberside's plans submitted to us. Any remaining funds are distributed to LEAs through an objective formula for spending on school improvements. I must stress that this is the basis for our calculations of entitlement at the Department of Education and Science. How local education authorities choose to spend the money generated by the borrowing power we distribute is up to them. They will be free to supplement this from proceeds of receipts, and from revenue—including the proceeds of the community charge—if they wish.

My hon. Friend suggests that not enough has been allocated to Humberside in recent years. I have yet to meet an hon. Member who tells me that his authority has had a sufficient allocation of capital for schools. What is available within public expenditure constraints has to be shared out as equitably as possible. But, as my hon. Friend generously acknowledged, Humberside has done better than most authorities in recent years in terms of the percentage of its plans covered—72 per cent. in 1987, 53 per cent. in 1988, and 55 per cent. in 1989, against averages for all LEAs of 38 per cent., 39 per cent. and 34 per cent. I am pleased that we were able to offer Humberside an extra allocation this autumn of £213,000 to meet the need for new school places in place of a crumbling school—an example in Humberside of how bogus the Labour party is to claim that we do not care.

My hon. Friend has mentioned the difficulties under which rural schools labour, and the need to safeguard rural life. I entirely agree. It is immensely important that authorities ensure that rural communities have a fair share of the services that they deserve. As for education, we are well seized of the difficulties that rural primary schools face. Humberside is one of the local education authorities that has benefited from the education support grant programme launched by my Department four years ago to help broaden and enrich the curriculum in rural primary schools. The Department recognised, long before the Education Reform Act and the national curriculum, that small rural primary schools can have real difficulties in ensuring a rich curriculum experience for their children, and that such schools can only too often suffer from isolation, lack of opportunity for contact between pupils and their peer groups, and little chance for teachers, and even head teachers, to compare notes. That is why we have paid grant—at 70 per cent.—on expenditure of some £1·5 million per annum by the 14 local education authorities concerned, all of which had a substantial number of small rural primary schools, as pump-priming funding for a series of projects, developed according to the way in which each authority thinks that the funding should best be used.

We have commissioned an evaluation study from Leicester university of the effects of the education support grant programme so that other authorities, which are not participants in the present programme, can benefit from the lessons learnt. But it is already possible to assert that the programme in general has been successful in meeting its prime objectives in reducing the isolation of small primary schools in our countryside, and enabling pupils to benefit from a richer variety of experience. As it happens, the programme could not have been better timed. Schools which have benefited from the programme, in Humberside and elsewhere, have told us that experience gained from projects funded by the programme has been invaluable in coming to terms with the introduction of the national curriculum.

In Humberside, for example, the local education authority has used education support grant money to fund the costs of five advisory teachers to offer a range of specialist curriculum expertise to schools where otherwise it would not be available. The teaching areas that they have chosen to cover are craft, design and technology, art, expressive arts, and environmental studies. One of their particular briefs is to explore ways of maintaining a degree of specialist teaching in these areas after the withdrawal of teacher consultants. This will enable schools to be more confident about curriculum development in these areas, which are important parts of the national curriculum, and which many small rural schools might not be able otherwise easily to deliver.

I should like to end by thanking my hon. Friend for drawing to my attention the consequences of decisions by his local education authority of changes in priorities for capital spending—consequences which impact directly on the quality of life in the rural areas that he represents. I am as concerned as he to see the quality of rural life safeguarded and enhanced. Rural areas must share in the increase in prosperity which the Government have helped to bring about since we have held office. This applies as much to the fabric of schools as it does to roads and other services.

My hon. Friend asked me to be generous to Humberside, and I assure him that I shall do my best to ensure that resources are made available to the Humberside local education authority at a level which reflects its needs and the needs of rural areas as far as is compatible with the need that we have to be fair to all authorities within the funds at our disposal.

Education (Industrial Links)

10.14 pm

Mr. Richard Page (Hertfordshire, South-West): I apologise to my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for keeping him at the crease at this late hour, but I promise to be brief. I welcome this opportunity to talk about the important subject of the requirement and the necessity for industrial links with education. I want to speed on the cultural change taking place between education and industry and to help our school leavers to understand the importance of industry.

Going back a few years, I remember a story that did the rounds about a school teacher who took a number of her charges to a factory. As she loaded them into the coach to return to school, she said, "There you are, children, that's where you'll end up if you don't pass your exams." Unfortunately, that was part of the cultural thinking within the education system at that time. It is a silly story, but it has a grain of truth. That approach must be changed.

I know that over the years attempts have been made to change attitudes. A few years ago it was industrial year and many hon. Members spoke to schools and to industry. I was grateful to the Eastern Electricity board—one might regard it as an unlikely vehicle—which ran a vigorous campaign to bring schools and industry closer. I could not help thinking at the time, "I bet that in Japan every year is industrial year." The industrial links between education and the factories that produce Japanese products are well known. The French education system tries to avoid any form of selection, but for fifth and sixth formers it is the Baccalaureate "C" that has the social cachet connected with maths and science. French parents are proud to say that their sons or daughters have the "C".

On another tack, which I regularly raise in the House, it is a sad fact that of the G7 industrial countries Britain is lowest of the pile in manufacturing investment. In research and development, as a percentage of gross national product, we are lowest in the pile, and the amount we spend on training makes us lowest of the pile. However, the efforts being made by my hon. Friend's Department to give to industry the responsibility for training is beginning to bear fruit and there is a great realism within industry.

It is clear that industry must work a great deal harder to establish links with the classroom and to inspire the young to the view that industry is the future of this country. Teachers must overcome any previous taint that industry is somehow second class. The future economy of our country rests with industry, and I look forward to what my hon. Friend has to say on this matter.

10.18 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science (Mr. Alan Howarth): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page) on securing this Adjournment debate, and I very much welcome his choice of subject.

Since the industrial revolution we have seen what might be called the acceleration of history. The rate of change has grown faster, and it grows faster still, and we have to be able to adapt successfully to these rapidly changing technological and economic conditions. My hon. Friend is absolutely right: the 1990s will present us with problems and opportunities different from those we have experienced in the 1970s and 1980s. We cannot hope to predict all of these, but some of them are clear now and it is by no means too early to be planning our strategies to deal with them.

The quality of life for all of us depends on the extent to which our business community—the people who generate the wealth—can cope with the kind of changes of which I speak, and the education system has, as my hon. Friend said, a vital part to play in helping business to succeed.

Our young school leavers will have open to them opportunities that our predecessors would have envied, and a good many of them are getting ready to seize those chances. However, as Louis Pasteur put it,

"chance favours only the prepared mind."

The corollary is, of course, that mischance visits the unprepared.

There are now only three short years until the single European market comes into effect in 1992. But beyond the EC lies wider international competition and, of course, the pressure of accelerated scientific and technological innovation.

We must also remember another factor—the demographic time bomb. By the mid-1990s there will be 1 million fewer 16 to 19-year-olds than in the mid-1980s. Therefore, school leavers will be in a stronger bargaining position than ever before, and that is important. The firms that will be able to attract and retain young people in an increasingly competitive future will be those which offer worthwhile training, the firms that are positively regarded in the local community, the firms that go into schools and the firms that are known to pupils and teachers.

The last decade has seen a tremendous growth in links between schools and the business world. I am glad to be able to tell my hon. Friend that about 90 per cent. of secondary schools now have links with local firms, and more than half of primary schools as well. In the mid-1970s, under 15 per cent. of final-year pupils had been placed in industry for full work experience. By last year this had risen to more than 70 per cent. of all eligible pupils.

However, as my hon. Friend said, there is still more to be done, in terms of both quantity and quality, and much of the onus lies with industry. The CBI business education task force report of last autumn found that more than half the respondents to the business questionnaire had no regular links with secondary schools in 1987, and that very many more small and medium sized companies will need to be recruited to the links effort if we are to meet our targets for work experience. It was schools rather than businesses that were taking the lead in establishing links.

The best way for business to influence the future and to improve its own productive and creative capacity is to become involved now in the schools and colleges. Education-industry links are not a fringe activity. They are not a luxury. It is those firms that are working with schools now who will be best placed to continue to recruit school leavers. In addition, crucially, they will also be best placed to influence the education those young people have received, to ensure that the knowledge, skills and attitudes they gain from their time in school are those that will best fit them for adult life.

To compete successfully as a nation we will need to exploit all our resources to the full, and a major resource is a properly educated and well-motivated work force. Therefore, it is a major thrust of Government policy that the school experience of young people should prepare them for the responsibilities of adult and working life. Economic awareness should run through many aspects of a child's education. It will be a cross-curricular requirement and an important influence.

The appreciation of economic realities is a necessary complement to the broad scientific and humane education that we regard as necessary for all our children.

The responsibility for giving young people the skills they need rests with both schools and employers. I have mentioned what the CBI task force had to say about the level of business involvement. Its report also made clear that what business wants from education is not specific vocational training but a broad and flexible base of knowledge, skills and attitudes upon which pupils can develop their own talents. Young people should be able to communicate effectively, both orally and in writing; be numerate; have basic screen and keyboard skills, and have a developed sense of responsibility. Business also puts considerable stress on positive attitudes to work, to change, to self-development and to team work—without which knowledge and skills cannot be applied effectively in the workplace.

That willingness on behalf of businesses to help in our schools is becoming more common. The new relationship between schools and business is one of partnership. As we labour to make our schools better attuned to the realities and challenges of economic life, so we are entitled to expect employers to take advantage of the invitation to become involved in education.

The Government's changes to the constitution of school governing bodies should make it easier for schools to draw on advice from people with business experience. One could put it like this: the changes mean, and are intended to mean, that schools and teachers are now in a relationship with business partners. I do not exaggerate the case. A National Foundation for Educational Research survey commissioned by my Department this summer found that 42 per cent. of the membership of reconstituted governing bodies came from business, the professions, retail and technical occupations and engineering; and of course we are working to help teachers expand their own knowledge of the business world. Contrary to many people's belief, many schools have teachers with experience of work other than teaching. But this is an area where more is better, and the teacher placement service, funded through the DTI's enterprise and education initiative, aims to offer 10 per cent. of teachers each year the opportunity of a placement in business.

The Government are convinced of the virtues of close links between education and business. We have launched a number of major initiatives to bring schools into closer contact with the world of work—such as TVEI, which requires work experience and is currently being extended nationwide at a cost of £900 million; the provision in every LEA of a work experience adviser; and the teacher placement service. We provide support to a wide range of bodies that promote and arrange school-industry links. And, by no means least, the national curriculum will ensure that the education that our children receive is more relevant to the world of work—and thus to their needs throughout their lives—than ever before.

I must not finish without paying tribute to the work of the teachers in schools, without whose efforts the position would not be so dramatically improved. The Government have brought about the climate in which the improvements of the last decade have occurred. But the actual formation of worthwhile links between a school and local firms requires energy and commitment at local level. Those teachers who have worked so hard in the last decade to bring about such links—and who, aided by the framework of the national curriculum, will, I know, continue that development—deserve our praise and gratitude.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-six minutes past Ten o'clock.

House of Commons

Friday 1 December 1989

The House met at half-past Nine o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITIONS

Untreated Sewage (Discharge)

9.35 am

Mr. Rupert Allason (Torbay): I have the honour to present to the House a petition that has been drawn up by the Torbay branch of Friends of the Earth. It has been signed by 10,374 constituents and visitors to my constituency. It is on the subject of the discharge of untreated sewage into the Channel. That is not to say that the beaches of Torbay are any less attractive than those anywhere else on the south coast. Indeed they have awards from Europe. Torbay has unrivalled mackerel. Nevertheless, there is growing anxiety about untreated sewage and there will be grave problems for the future development of the south-west if we continue to pump out untreated sewage. The petition states:

Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your Honourable House will acknowledge that we the undersigned wish to express our anxiety over the unacceptable levels of untreated sewage being deposited by tidal action onto many beaches in the Torbay area of South Devon. We are concerned that such poliution could pose a threat to the health of not only the residents of—and visitors to—Torbay but also to fish stocks and other marine life off South Devon's shores. We therefore call on the Secretary of State for the Environment to press for immediate remedial action, including the setting-up of a permanent sewage treatment facility to serve the Torbay area.

To lie upon the Table.

Deaf Television Viewers

Mr. David Tredinnick (Bosworth): I have the honour to present a petition of 1,900 signatures on behalf of the deaf and disabled and their supporters in my Bosworth constituency, from the county of Leicestershire and elsewhere. One thousand nine hundred people signed the petition because on television there is insufficient use of subtitles. That means that several million deaf and partially deaf people in Britain cannot understand fully or appreciate the programmes that the rest of the United Kingdom takes for granted. The petition reads:

Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your Honourable House will ensure that legislation be passed placing an obligation on television channel operators to make their programmes more accessible to deaf people by using Teletext subtitles, sign language or other means and to reach complete coverage by a fixed date.

And your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray etc.

To lie upon the Table.

BILL PRESENTED

LANDLORD AND TENANT (LICENSED PREMISES)

Mr. Secretary Ridley, supported by Mr. Secretary Waddington, Mr. Secretary Patten, Mr. Gummer and Mr. Redwood, presented a Bill to repeal section 43(1)(d) of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954; and for connected purposes: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time on 4 December and to be printed. [Bill 8.]

Eastern Europe

[Relevant documents: the First Report from the Foreign Affairs Committee (House of Commons Paper No. 16 of Session 1988-89) on Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, the Observations by the Government on the Report (Cm. 708), the Minutes of Evidence taken by the Foreign Affairs Committee on 19th July 1989 (House of Commons Paper No. 523-i of Session 1988-89), the Second Report from the Trade and Industry Committee (House of Commons Paper No. 51 of Session 1988-89) on Trade with Eastern Europe, and the Government Reply contained in House of Commons Paper No. 51-i and -ii, Session 1988-89.]

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now Adjourn—[Mr. Goodlad.]

Mr. Speaker: Before I call the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, may I say that once again there is a great demand to take part in this debate? I propose therefore to put a limit of 10 minutes on speeches between 11.30 am and 1 pm. I hope that right hon. and hon. Members who are called to speak before then, or even afterwards, will bear the limit broadly in mind so that their colleagues may have an opportunity of participating.

9.40 am

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. William Waldegrave): The fact that you, Mr. Speaker, must begin our proceedings with that warning surely is welcome, because many hon. Members, particularly Conservative Members, are present to debate the extraordinary, fascinating and encouraging events in eastern Europe.

This is the end of an extraordinary period in the history of Europe. It has been an artificial period, unprecedented in our continent's history. For year after year and decade after decade there has been confrontation. The traditional cultures of what used to be called Christendom were split down the middle, and connections that had been close and intimate for centuries were forced into an artificial confrontation that was not of our seeking in the West.

I always remember the moving passage in that great book, which will be familiar to many hon. Members, of Primo Levi's account of his return from Auschwitz. On his peregrinations ultimately to Italy, whence he came, he travels through the Balkans and parts of Russia in a strange and wandering journey. He arrives at a tank park of Soviet tanks. He had been liberated by the Red Army, for which he felt affection, as many must have done. He sees, with despair, the following phenomenon taking place: great posters, one of which is illustrated in one of our national newspapers today of the war-time leaders —Churchill, Roosevelt and Stalin—being taken down by the soldiers and replaced by a new poster which read "Onwards to the West". Primo Levi felt his heart sinking as he saw the whole thing starting again.

Confrontation was imposed on us in the West by Stalin and by a ruthless policy about which the truth is now most movingly beginning to be told in the Soviet Union. The famous article in the "Literary Gazette" by Dashichev, which a year ago for the first time in the Soviet Union set out the truth of the myth that had been fed to the Soviets that they were under threat from the West. How moving it is to see the truth being told in the Soviet Union and in eastern Europe. The artificial confrontation from which we are emerging was not necessary for the security of the Soviet Union. The huge overhang of forces that faced us in western Europe was started and directed by the dreadful policy of Stalin.

We are privileged to be living at the end of that pathological period in European history, and we must express our joy and look to the future. It is not possible to design the policies that we need for the future unless we analyse carefully why changes are occurring and what caused the end of that confrontation. It is impossible to ignore the moral bankruptcy of that system. Great writers such as Solzhenitsyn, Milan Kundera, Havel and Markov, have written works that will become, or have already become, classics of literature which lay out that moral bankruptcy. There are great pillars of literature if one doubts that that system was morally bankrupt.

The two things that brought down the system—it had artificial strengths that kept it going long after allegiance to it was withdrawn, if ever there was any allegiance—were the interaction of its economic failure and a completely different perception of the world in the Soviet Union.

We saw the economic collapse throughout the 1970s, such as the mounting debt, which sometimes was rather foolishly pushed at eastern countries by the West and which did not solve problems but in some ways exacerbated them. We saw problems developing in Poland and Hungary—two countries that have the highest per capita debt in the world. We saw Khrushchev's vain boast to bury capitalism become not only unlikely but laughable in economic terms. We saw the widening gap in technology and, now, as the veils are drawn, even in countries that were said to be relatively strong such as the German Democratic Republic, we see the full extent of the system's economic weakness.

Economies that have been so weak for so long produce dire results. Let us consider the health statistics, which perhaps are the saddest, in Silesia where a combination of environmental health standards, which would make anyone in Britain weep, and environmental pollution worse than anything that we have seen for 100 years or more, have produced a catastrophe in that proud province.

The conditions for change were clear—there was no moral force left in the system, if ever there was any, and the economic collapse left citizens saying, "Our leaders have done nothing for us, even at the pragmatic and practical level of supplying goods in the shops, decent health care or looking after the environment."

But that alone would not have been enough. On three or four occasions since the war the people of eastern Europe have tried to shake off the imposed system. We saw, but could do nothing about, the suppression of those desperate attempts for freedom, because the Soviet Union —the great super-power of the East—took the view that its interests were served by ruthless maintenance of an imperial provincial system manned by hundreds of thousands of soldiers and satellite puppet Governments.

But then came Gorbachev, who seems almost the best disproof of Marxism. According to it, individuals should make no difference, but I cannot believe that things would have been quite the same in Europe over the past five years if Gorbachev had not come to power.

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton): The hon. Gentleman is quite wrong. Plekhanov, who was one of the founders of Marxism in Russia, wrote a book in which he argued strongly about the role of the individual. If the Minister would care to read the book that I wrote about the future of the Labour party, he would see that I mentioned the fact that the individual plays an important part. It should never be overestimated, but, my goodness, it should never be underestimated.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am willing to believe that the hon. Gentleman, for whom I have much affection, is a revisionist of the best sort, but Marx was not, and in "Das Kapital" the individual is portrayed as the epiphenomenon only of underlying forces.

I do not believe that Mr. Gorbachev is the epiphenomenon of anything. He is a man of courage and vision with whom we shall have many arguments about the future shape of society. He has made a difference, and if he had not come to power events would have been different. He asked three questions—I paraphrase and simplify the positions that have been put forward in many speeches—that shook the world. First, he asked why is the Soviet Union threatening the West? What is the point of this huge overhang of forces? What is it doing for the interests of the Soviet Union?

Secondly, what have the Soviets got from 70 years of attempted confrontation and destabilisation around the world, summarised under the old slogan "The export of the revolution"? Where has that got the interests of the Russian people, or the people of the Soviet republics? They have some allies around the world—Cuba, North Korea and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, which I am visiting the day after tomorrow. I am not sure that Mr. Gorbachev thought that the score was enough after 70 years of work——

Mr. Donald Anderson (Swansea, East): And Ethiopia.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes, and some parts of Ethiopia, although revisionists, as they are called by the Tigreans, are under attack there, too.

Thirdly, the question to which we are directing our attention today is, why should a free Hungary, Poland or Czechoslovakia threaten the security of the Soviet Union any more than a free Finland?

Those are the three questions, and President Gorbachev's answers have transformed the world. He gave the same answers to those questions as, roughly speaking, we would have given in this House—that there was no point in the overhang of military forces for the security of the Soviet Union, that the Soviet Union and her people have lost nothing and the world has lost much from the export of the revolution for 70 years, and that free countries in central Europe would not threaten the Soviet Union. Those answers have transformed the background to our debate.

Mr. David Nicholson (Taunton): In the interests of realism, should not my hon. Friend add to that analysis of Soviet policy the myth, which the Soviets have propagated and which is based on an element of reality, about the shock and horror inflicted on the Soviet Union from May 1941 and the Soviets resolve never to allow that to happen again?

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes, I agree with my hon. Friend and I shall return to the genuine security needs of the Soviet Union in a moment. However, we should not underestimate the fact that the Soviet Union is now telling the truth about the events which led to the Barbarossa invasion, because it is laid out in the article by Dashichev to which I referred earlier. He asks why the British and French should have trusted the Soviet Union. How could they, when they had watched the purges and the internal slaughter in the Soviet Union in the 1930s? The West needs to consider and respect the true security needs of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Robert N. Wareing (Liverpool, West Derby): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Waldegrave: I must be careful or I shall be in trouble with Mr. Speaker for taking too long.

Mr. Wareing: Does the hon. Gentleman think that, likewise, we should be candid about the role of the British Government before the second world war, particularly at the time of the Munich crisis, when we gave sustenance to Hitlerism in Germany?

Mr. Waldegrave: I do not agree. Every publication we get from the Soviet Union makes it more difficult to maintain the old thesis, with which all right hon. and hon. Members were brought up, that it was the West's failure which caused the war. The Soviet Union's cynical alliance with Hitler opened the way, and the Soviets are saying that themselves. It is not wise to be left behind the Soviets' own analysis.

Our response should be extremely joyful, but we do not have the luxury of being able to put aside our policies for the future. One may ask why we need a response. The countries are becoming free. Why do we not continue to mind our own business? We do not have that luxury. My hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) put his finger on one reason, and there is another.

The first reason is that the conditions which have allowed the Soviets to change their analysis are based on the view that their security is not threatened by the development of free countries in eastern and central Europe.

Therefore, it is incumbent upon us to respond and to answer President Gorbachev's question in the same way that he did. We must make it clear that there is no threat. We must respond generously, quickly and sensibly to the offered negotiations in Vienna on armaments. We must say that NATO will work with the Warsaw pact to bring about a contractual peace in Europe, whereby the security needs of both sides are respected at the lowest sensible levels that can be achieved. Treaties must be verifiable and detailed and must not be easy to break without detection. Therefore, they must be carefully drawn up, and experts must ensure that we do not rush into any euphonic, slapdash work. We must respond properly and generously to the needs. That is what is now being done. We should recognise the historical background that linked European countries for hundreds of years, and that both sides have legitimate security needs.

The second reason is that the key to the change has been not only the moral bankruptcy and economy incompetence of the collapsing system but a change in perception in the Soviet Union. It is incumbent upon us to remember that it is not inevitable that that change in perception came about. There is no inevitability in history. That kind of historicism may have been a principle in Marxism and Hegelism, but nobody believes in that nowadays. The trend could be reversed—it has been once before and it could be again—but I do not believe that that is likely and none of us hopes that that will happen.

[Mr. Waldegrave]

As I said to my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton, the Soviet Union has a right to a minimal insurance and we must maintain the structures of the Alliance. One does not have to look at the map to recognise that western Europe is not defensible without its allies across the Atlantic. We must remember and clearly understand that. The maintenance of the North Atlantic Alliance is long term, for as far ahead as we can see, and will be essential as our part of the insurance. Doubtless a lower level of forces will be deployed, and we will have a different relationship with the Warsaw pact as we begin to discuss how to build confidence and to work together to maintain the structure of peace, but we need the insurance as much as the other side.

In terms of security, our response has to be welcoming but careful, and that is the path which the western Alliance has gone down, and to our great joy the eastern alliance has followed us. That is the most marvellous change that any of us could hope to see.

What about our economic and moral response? Nature abhors a vacuum. Into the vacuum left by the disappearance of artificially imposed doctrines new ideas will flow. What is most extraordinary about the values that are emerging in the freedom movements in eastern Europe, which all right hon. and hon. Members understand in spite of argument across the Chamber, is that they are the values of liberal democracy. That need not have been so. Who were the last people to rule Poland or Hungary before the war? Pilsudski and the regent Horthy.

Old-fashioned nationalisms could have re-emerged from the darker corners of European history and posed a different kind of threat to the values which are so dear to this House. However, it is an achievement for what we impertinently call western values—although I do not know how they can be called western when they are shared by Japan, the Pacific rim countries and Botswana—that the crowds in Wenceslas square and the Solidarity trade unionists think that their national freedoms are intimately bound up with the establishment of free democracies, market economies and plural societies. That is a marvellous moral achievement. Already, the only real alternative is flowing into the vacuum. It is the only alternative which works economically all round the world and, politically, it provides the only safe way to maintain allegiance to political institutions. We do not need to worry too much on that score.

Mr. Harry Barnes (Derbyshire, North-East): Is the Minister suggesting that we have something to offer as a liberal democracy to help the developments that are taking place? If so, should we not take the high ground rather than actions such as have been taken during the past 10 years which undermine the democratic rights, civil liberties and freedoms that have operated in Britain?

Mr. Waldegrave: I do not want to stop the hon. Member from having our local argument about where, within the structures of a free society, we should put the rights of the collective against the rights of the individual. It is his privilege to be elected to come here and to seek a Government which would put those provisions in some slightly different place, but it is intensely provincial to think that the arguments that he and I have, passionate though they may be, are on the same scale as those in central and eastern Europe.

I do not think that we need fear the continuance of any vacuum on the moral or on the economic side. Many of the ideas on those subjects were written by people who come from those countries. They know the books just as well as we do. Many eastern European countries have traditions that go back at least as far as ours, although they have sometimes been interrupted. The first genuinely free Parliament in Europe, it may be argued, was in Poland. The Polish Sejm in the 1780s and 1790s had rights rather further advanced than we had at that time. It was suppressed, but the ideas and traditions exist, now to be resuscitated with the full weight of popular movements behind them.

On the immediate economic side, there are things that we must do. The Communists have left these countries —Poland and Hungary are the worst—in varying degrees of debt and desuetude. They have left them in a pretty miserable shape. Even the German Democratic Republic, which used to be put forward as a good example, is discovering that the debt is far greater than was admitted. The anxiety which we can now see developing in the GDR, as it begins to understand the weakness of its economy compared with the Federal Republic of Germany, will be one of the interesting phenomena of the next few years and may lead it into a little caution in terms of its relationship with the FRG.

We who have resources must take some steps to help. We are. I believe that the principles that we and other countries have argued are right. There is nothing to be gained by piling further debt on these countries. Rushing at them with credit is not the answer. They have had that in the past, and look at the debt that they now have. They need help with what Mr. Gorbachev calls perestroika—restructuring. They need help with the fundamental restructuring of their economies. We must help with debt rescheduling, and will do so.

I am happy that the International Monetary Fund is getting relatively near agreement with Poland and is in discussion with Hungary, but debt relief must be made contingent on the type of changes in the economy which will help those countries to generate their own wealth. That sounded hard-faced in the early days when it was first formulated, but it is increasingly receiving support from all directions. We in Britain have been right to say that, where possible, we shall make grants rather than loans. It is not very kind to lend to somebody who is already in deep debt, claiming that one is helping him.

We took advantage of one of the welcome visits of one of the great heroes of these changes—Lech Walesa—this week. The hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson), who is with me on the board that deals with these matters, will welcome the fact that we have doubled our fund for Poland and subscribed $100 million to the fund for stabilisation of the currency, which is a key part of the brave financial plan that the new Solidarity-led Government in Poland have produced.

The other countries which will meet soon in the group of 24 at Brussels are putting together substantial quantities of financial and economic help, but aimed all the time at restructuring the economies, and watching all the time to see that the restructuring is marching in step with the political reforms. That is not a luxury. It is essential. The assent, allegiance and solidarity, in the ordinary sense of the word, to carry through the difficult reforms that will be necessary in some of these countries will not be achieved unless the political institutions are there to carry the people with them.

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): Does my hon. Friend agree that, as Mr. Delors is here today speaking to our right hon. Friend the Prime Minister about the prospect of a federal united states of Europe, it would not be in the interests of the people of western Europe to move in exactly the opposite direction to that which they are taking over there?

Mr. Waldegrave: I am coming to the institutional response from western Europe. My hon. Friend makes a valid point. We know that a debate on these issues is raging in Britain and in Europe, including some of the central and eastern European countries. If my hon. Friend will allow me to build it slightly more into the structure of my speech, I shall come to that matter.

For the future, we have to have a security structure. I like the phrase used by Edward Mortimer, who is one of our best journalists on these matters. He said that we should think of the Alliance as something rather like the scaffolding of the common European house that we are building. We need it. We need the capacity to talk, to agree common positions and then to negotiate. It is not a bad analogy.

On the security side, the objectives are clear—to avoid the big East-West conflict and to avoid the next problem, which one might call Balkanisation. If anyone doubts the dangers of a Balkanised central Europe that there could be, he should read the marvellous book by Donald Cameron-Watts about the diplomacy of the last two years before the second world war. I do not think that our security will be much advanced if there are dozens of warring and squabbling little states all seeking alliances with each other and fighting about their boundaries. That is a legitimate objective, and we must see what institutions we have to deal with the problems.

Nobody doubts that we have the institutions on the security side. We have NATO, and we have what I hope will become an increasingly democratised Warsaw pact. I refer to the reforms which the Poles are talking about. It is necessary to have such reforms so that the Warsaw pact is not the creature of one power but a free collection of states looking legitimately at their security interests.

My hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) asked me about political institutions. What do we have? First and foremost we should consider the institution, the strange, complex and unique institution in the history of the world—hardly an institution really, but a sort of process—that is known by the inelegant initials CSCE, or the Helsinki Final Act. They are not household names except among the experts. Perhaps they are in the constituency of the hon. Member for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson)—he is lucky.

We should not forget that in that process which the Helsinki Final Act embodies took place one of the most extraordinary events in the history of the modern world. The Soviet Union, not in Gorbachev's day but under the Brezhnev regime, signed agreements which said that we had the right to question them about their human rights, and that we and they would join together in mechanisms for the resolution of disputes about borders, which has now blossomed out into meetings and discussions about the environment, human rights, culture and a range of other issues.

Somewhere here, it seems that, in this collection of countries, which includes two alliances and the neutral countries, there must exist a germ of the new Europe. Within the institutions that we are developing we have the mechanisms we need to look in the long term at the difficult issues which remain and which must be solved amicably, safely and peacefully, such as borders in Europe.

We never had a peace conference at the end of the second world war. Perhaps we were lucky, bearing in mind what happened to that which was held at the end of the first world war and which did not solve the problems. It is clear that, if that peace conference which we never had in 1945 were called, it would not be the institution to deal with these matters. The four powers alone cannot deal with them now. President Gorbachev has called for the CSCE—the conference on security and co-operation in Europe—process to be brought forward two years, and we shall have to consider whether that is sensible and practical. His emphasis on those institutions is welcome and wise.

This brings me to another piece of wisdom where dangerous forces could be at work and are not. It involves the two Germanies. I welcome the kind of structures about which Chancellor Kohl is talking. What he is doing is, no more and no less, trying to sketch out in institutional terms Konrad Adenauer's doctrine that freedom comes first. Then, with a changed structure in Europe, who knows what changed relationships might come about? Chancellor Kohl says that there are clear interests in common in the two Germanies with which committees can perhaps deal. He makes it clear that, before going down that road, there must be a partnership between two free countries with genuine constitutions. He lays down no timescale for that process. He does not seek to accelerate matters artificially. It is no more and no less than a modern reformulation in entirely satisfactory terms of the old Adenauer doctrine to which all of us in the West have been committed for years.

The key institutions exist on the security side and the CSCE side, but one other institution, which has considerable support in the House and for which many hon. Members have done work, is relevant—the Council of Europe. We are committed to advancing the structures of the European Community, although there are arguments within the House and among the parties about the speed and direction of integration. The European Community will clearly continue to develop and to add to the wealth produced by and goods traded by its members. Although that will be an important room in the European house, it will just be one of the big rooms.

We in the European Community should not be too self-centred, as sometimes some people are, in thinking that only the magnet of the European Community has brought all these changes about. Other models have been influential. The success of the Finnish economy in the past 15 years, as a neutral country with a different tradition, and of the Austrian economy have had a profound effect. The technology gap which is opening up in terms of not only the United States but Japan and the new Pacific rim economies has had a profound effect in making people in central and eastern Europe think that other forces are leaving them behind. Of course, the European Community has been important as a great visible, local, economic super-power, but it has not been the only magnet.

Mr. Ian Taylor (Esher): Does my hon. Friend agree on the importance of the key role played by the Commission in co-ordinating aid to Poland and Hungary on behalf of not only the 12 members of the Community but the 24 countries which agreed on aid at the Paris summit? does my hon. Friend agree that this has an additional importance? As Polish politicians have said, they do not wish to leave the system of the Soviet Gosplan only to become part of the Federal German budget? Therefore, the importance of matters being co-ordinated at Community level has political importance, not just economic importance.

Mr. Waldegrave: That is certainly true, and we pay tribute to Mr. Delors. The effectiveness of the organisation of the food and emergency aid, which will perhaps be vital to Poland this winter, and the naturalness of the idea that the group of 24 should delegate that task to the Community, are a tribute to its institutions.

I am not arguing against that development or against our commitment to the Community, but the Community will not be the whole of Europe. There will have to be other structures. That is why the Council of Europe is important. It may take many years for many of these countries fully to "de-statise" their economies and to develop the plural economies which the institutions of the West believe they will achieve. Those countries will, however, be able more quickly to sign the European convention on human rights and meet the tests that the Council of Europe uses for membership—full democracy, and so on. Hungary, Poland and others are likely to achieve membership if they introduce free elections and the rule of law. This validates the central purpose of the Council of Europe, which is therefore gaining in importance.

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow, East) rose——

Mr. Tim Rathbone (Lewes) rose——

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall give way perhaps twice more only or my speech will be too long.

Mr. Dykes: Does my hon. Friend agree that the Community, having doubled its size since 1973, is not an entity that is anxious to keep its privileges unto itself but will consider further enlargements? Does he also agree that some of those eastern European countries may wish to apply to join when they have established parliamentary democracies? That could take some time, but it need not lead us to deviate from our treaty obligations and practical common-sense obligations to develop further integration in the European Community.

Mr. Waldegrave: Clearly no new membership applications will be considered in the immediate period ahead. We should be a little wary of assuming that all the countries of eastern and central Europe will ultimately choose to follow exactly our model of economic integration. They may, but let us see what happens. Perhaps it is wise not wholly to block such flexibility as remains within the Community so that we can welcome those countries.

Mr. Rathbone: My hon. Friend was kind enough to say earlier that he would give way. I return to his point on the Council of Europe. He correctly identified it as a bridge that already exists between this country and the East. Will he comment on the Government's apparent reluctance to supply the necessary budgets so that the assembly of the Council of Europe, which is where parliamentarian meets parliamentarian, can do its job most effectively?

Mr. Waldegrave: Those matters are under discussion.

Sir Bernard Braine (Castle Point) rose——

Mr. Waldegrave: I must give way to my right hon. Friend, but I am not being allowed to make much progress.

Sir Bernard Braine: Is my hon. Friend seized of the point that the people of Poland want food, not rhetoric?

Mr. Waldegrave: That is true. That is why we are giving them money to buy food, their first need. I will allow the debate between my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine) and my hon. Friend the Member for Lewes (Mr. Rathbone) to continue in its own time.

I shall end on a sombre note. There is much joy at present, but there are also some memories that cannot be forgotten and must be paid proper respect. The Russians are beginning to talk about Stalin's crimes—all honour to them—and one day they will begin to talk about Lenin's crimes. That is a matter for them. The Poles know that in Katyn there is a dark period in history that must be opened up. The Czechoslovaks are beginning to tell the truth and open the records of 1968.

These events are immensely important when societies have been corrupted by the ruthless suppression of freedom. The truth must come out. That is part of the healing process. Numerous individuals, many known only to their families, have suffered during this terrible period of European history. The House has a particular commitment to and fascination with some. The Russians came up to the fence on Wallenberg, but we have not heard the whole story.

Among the most welcome, and perhaps surprising, events of the past week have been the movements in Bulgaria. I do not believe that my officials—I do not insult them in any way—were wholly ready for the change in Bulgaria. I am personally pleased that an environmental movement—eco-glasnost—was at the forefront of those changes. The CSCE, which was discussing the environment in Bulgaria, played a great part in helping those systems to break the log-jam.

This House and this country have a dark memory of an event that took place at the instigation of the Bulgarian Government and it is just one event among many that we need to have cleared up—the murder of Georgi Markov. One day, we must have the truth about that. Let him stand as a symbol of all the changes. His book, published after his death by his widow, was entitled "The Truth that Killed". It killed him, but it has not killed the people in Wenceslas square, and thank God for that. His death is a sombre memory to remind us of the sacrifices that have so often gone for ever unrecognised, but it also inspires joy that such a sacrifice—we hope—will never be necessary again.

10.20 am

Mr. George Robertson (Hamilton): The Minister of State is right in saying that we are remarkably fortunate and privileged to be around in these stirring times. The events of the past year—even of the past few days—have brought home to us just what it means to so many to come out of the darkness of tyranny into the light of freedom, which all too often we simply take for granted.

This debate is taking place at the exactly appropriate time, as the super-powers meet today on their warships tied up off Malta, as the European Community leaders prepare to meet in Strasbourg next week and as this week, the Czech Communists voted away their dominance. Seldom has there been a better time for the House to debate these momentous issues.

At almost this precise time last year, I stood in Wenceslas square in Prague, one of the most beautiful cities of Europe. That evening, I experienced an eerie feeling of silence in that crowded square just before Christmas, where people milled around in almost fearful quiet. I could not but reflect on the days and memories of 1968 when, as an idealistic student, I heard with despair the news on the radio that the Soviet tanks had entered Czechoslovakia and had crushed the life out of the Prague Spring. To remember that desperately sad day with the emotions that so many of us felt and to remember equally that uncanny silence in Wenceslas square last year, yet to see on television over the past 10 days the noisy, determined and vocal crowds in that same square is to feel a joy and a pleasure that are simply beyond words.

It took the Polish people 10 years to achieve their freedom and they say that it took the Hungarians only 10 months. It took the East Germans 10 days to achieve freedom and the Czechs took only 10 days to return the vitality and freedom for which they had yearned, and to bring back life to the heart of the city of Prague. To be alive in these stirring times is a privilege.

My friend John Roper said the other day that the eastern Europeans have turned science fiction into political science in only a few weeks. The impossible dream has become the commonplace reality as day follows day. What is all the more remarkable in this seismic change in Europe is the dignified, self-disciplined and orderly way in which revolution has happened, without violence, strife or even retribution against those who have visited misery and repression for four decades. The people themselves have almost politely taken back the power.

It was Berthold Brecht, himself a citizen of the German Democratic Republic, who said:

"The people has failed the government. Therefore we must elect a new people."

That is what the people have done, and we should cheer them for it.

As the Minister said, we must understand what all this was for. It is an impertinence and an insult to suggest, as the Prime Minister did in her Blackpool conference speech, that this is an extension of the torch of the Thatcherite revolution. She said brazenly:

"The torch we lit in Britain, which transformed our country—the torch of freedom that is now the symbol of our Party—became the beacon that has shed its light across the Iron Curtain into the East."

What demented drivel! Let us remember the words of Alexander Dubcek, who called for

"Socialism with a human face",

rather than this brainstormed fantasy. We are witnessing a revolution for freedom, for open expression and the right to make choices without intimidation. The brave people of eastern Europe were not embracing Thatcherism or any other ism, but asserting their right to choose a better system than the tired, old, failed Stalinism. That right must never again be taken from them.

Sir Jim Spicer (Dorset, West): I thought that I should not need to intervene as the hon. Gentleman's opening remarks were exactly in tune with the speech of my hon. Friend the Minister. However, as the hon. Gentleman has moved the goalposts, I look back in history. Does he believe that if the many Labour Members who, in 1983, were calling for the non-deployment of cruise missiles in Europe had won the day——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Briefly, please.

Sir Jim Spicer: On 22 October 1983, they were in Trafalgar square calling for no cruise missiles. Had they won the day, would Mr. Gorbachev have come on the scene and would all these events be taking place in eastern Europe?

Mr. Robertson: Yes, of course they would. If the hon. Gentleman had listened to the Minister, he would have heard an analysis that might have penetrated even his ideology. If he believes that I am breaking the bipartisan approach adopted this morning, I direct his attention to what the Prime Minister said bizarrely last week in Washington in the famous interview on CNN television. She said:

"Had there been a NATO in Europe between World War One and World War Two, I don't think that World War Two would ever have happened."

I ask Conservative Members to conjure with that answer. Do they believe that Herr Hilter would have sat down with Benito Mussolini to agree a communiqué' with the western powers? One can only begin to think that the Prime Minister is losing all touch with reality.

Mr. Patrick Cormack (Staffordshire, South): I am sorry that the hon. Gentleman takes that line. Many people in this country and in Moscow believe that without the Iron Lady there might still be the iron curtain.

Mr. Robertson: Perhaps a few people believe that. I know that the hon. Gentleman himself has had a few disagreements with the Iron Lady and who knows where he will place his ballot paper over this weekend? She made a contribution—of a sort—earlier and there is little doubt that she was able to influence President Reagan at a critical time in East-West relations, but her contribution now is negative. That is a tragedy not only for individuals who are opposed to her—whether Conservative or Opposition Members—but for our country, as it can influence the pace of events.

Mr. William Powell (Corby) rose——

Mr. Robertson: I shall not give way because I must continue my speech and I have given way enough.

In Czechoslovakia, the Communist party is in retreat each day. In Poland, a non-Communist Government are getting to grips with nightmare economic problems that were left behind. In Hungary, the Communist party has been abolished, free elections are about to take place and a referendum only this week showed the Government's position defeated by the people. Even those in the Conservative party who, over the past week, have gone cool on the idea of free elections will welcome the fact that in Hungary—that marvellous country which has already experimented with the fringes of the free economy—events are moving at such a fast pace.

[Mr. Robertson]

As the Minister said, even in Bulgaria what was regarded almost as the fixed permanence of Todor Zhivkov has gone and an era has ended. Instead of resorting to lynch law the people are resorting to the criminal law to deal with his spectacular excesses. Only in Albania and Romania does Stalinism hold on by its finger tips. We should not mince words about Romania which is one of the nastiest and most brutally corrupt police states in the world. The regime's bitter and indefensible campaign against the Hungarian minority and the state-sponsored vandalism of the Transylvanian villages deserve the world's condemnation. President Nicolai Ceausescu may have received 67 standing ovations in his six-hour speech to the cowed party congress, but even as he speaks he knows that the ground is slipping away from him.

When we consider our approach to this new world, should not we, like those who have repossessed power in the East, work on the basis of optimism?

Mr. Gary Waller (Keighley) rose——

Mr. Robertson: If those who marched in Gdansk, Leipzig and Bratislava had not believed that they might win they would surely have failed. If those who took strike action this week in Prague or went to prison in Warsaw and those who piled through the gaps in the Berlin wall had worried about destabilising the Warsaw pact or unscrambling the post-war settlement or had been paranoid about the impact of their actions on the European politico-military balance, they would have stayed at home and Herr Honecker, Mr. Kadar and Mr. Zhivkov would still reside comfortably in their luxury politburo apartments. The people who filled the streets and brought down the edifice of tyranny acted out of frustration, anger and impatience because they believed that their world was changeable if they wanted it enough.

Perhaps if we in the west could share some of that optimism and believe in what can be done if we care enough, some of the pessimism and misgivings that preoccupy many of our leaders would be put in perspective. To overrule that pessimism requires imagination and considerable vision. Tragically, it is clear beyond doubt that we have no chance of that from the Prime Minister. In the face of the most momentous events for a generation, the Prime Minister is going back, not forward, in time. Last year, in November, she told the Washington Post:

"We are not in a Cold War now. East and West now have a new relationship."

The Washington Post rightly headlined the interview:

"Thatcher says Cold War has come to an end".

Even our good old Daily Telegraph headlined it:

"Cold war over, says Thatcher".

But last week in Washington the Prime Minister was asked by CNN television whether she thought that the cold war was over. She replied that it was:

"Not over, but it's thawing."

The Minister's tone was remarkably different from everything that the Prime Minster has said in the past few weeks. With his renown, intelligence and intellect, is the Minister capable of explaining to the House and to the world how it is that the cold war was over last November but after a year that has seen the collapse of the Berlin wall, the abolition of the Communist party in Hungary, the election of a non-Communist Government in Poland and the disappearance of the leading role of Communists in Czechoslovakia, suddenly it is on again? What is the logic of that? Perhaps the explanation is that the Prime Minister, suddenly finding herself without the enemy and the threat that provided the justification for her every prejudice is as transfixed and immobilised by the new situation as are the dazed ex-members of the Czech politburo whom we have seen on television over the past 10 nights.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett (Pembroke): Does the hon. Gentleman recognise that there is a difference between a threat which is an intention—we all recognise that that has gone—and a threat which is a capability? In the first six months of this year alone, the Soviet Union built another 1,700 main battle tanks. We would be foolish not to recognise that capability. We want action as well as intentions.

Mr. Robertson: We must look at intentions and capability. The United States Defence Secretary said in the last fortnight that the threat from the East is smaller than it has ever been since the second world war. The Prime Minister could say last November that the cold war was over, but, despite the changes that the Minister has outlined to us as if we were not aware of them, she now says that it is on again. Perhaps, as Matthew Parris said in The Times a few weeks ago, we are seeing before our very eyes the Prime Minister losing her marbles. In Der Spiegel it was said that the Pentagon is in confusion because after all its planning of worst-case options it has no best-case option to deal with the position now.

Faced with events in eastern Europe, the Prime Minister is like a beached whale, incapable of registering the scale of what has happened and uniquely incapable of seeing the potential before her. We cannot get away from the fact that she is unable to escape from her cold war prejudices and the time warp that she is in. Therefore, tragically for our country, we shall continue to be marginalised on the world stage.

Mr. Waldegrave: Does it make the hon. Gentleman nervous that the only hon. Member in the House who applauds his descent into hard-line partisanship is the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields)? I am not sure that he wants that support.

Mr. Robertson: That was not up to the Minister's usual intellectual standard of intervention. I am not descending into partisanship. If Britain is to make a contribution we shall have to contrast the Minister's measured and balanced approach to the amazing events in eastern Europe with the way in which the Prime Minister treats them. She is, after all, still the leader of the Conservative party and Prime Minister this week. It is not partisanship per se to underline her weakness in the face of such momentous events.

In spite of the Prime Minister's short-sightedness we must act soon on appropriately ambitious programmes to rebuild the economies of the newly free nations, to satisfy the expectations of their people and to consolidate the drive to democratic pluralism which gets so much easy applause from everyone in the West.

Such a programme must have a number of elements. We agree wholeheartedly with the Prime Minister on the first element. Mr. Gorbachev must be supported and not destabilised by unilateral action by the West. The Minister stated, with more power and force than the Prime Minister found herself able to do, the truism that the momentous changes that we have witnessed happened only because Mr. Gorbachev started the process. Although events have taken place faster and gone further than he desired, it was he who pressed the button. By abolishing the Brezhnev doctrine he let loose the forces that we have witnessed. He, not the spluttering torch of Thatcherism, was the moving force behind the tidal wave engulfing the geriatric rulers of the old Soviet empire.

Mr. Gorbachev's problems at home are formidable. Perhaps that is why disengagement from the satellite states made so much sense to him. His economy is in deep trouble, with difficult decisions yet to be made, made all the more difficult by the emerging new oppositions and the elections due to take place this winter and in the spring. Furthermore, the tide of nationalism and inter-ethnic strife in the Soviet Union threatens it with about seven versions of the problems that we face in Northern Ireland.

It is enormously important to help the President of the Soviet Union, but it will not be easy. It can be done in three ways. First, we can throw away finally the artificial and outdated COCOM mechanism which prevents technology exports to the Soviet Union. If we see that our security is better ensured by helping Gorbachev, it is crucial that the Soviet Union has the technology and intellectual tools to rebuild. Secondly, we can urgently explore ways in which the Soviet economy can come back into the institutions of the world system. That will be difficult, but it is not an impossible objective. Thirdly, we can release military expenditure and in that way also help ourselves.

To listen over the past two weeks to the speeches of western leaders exhorting the importance of the continued existence of the Warsaw pact is to believe that one is almost hearing hallucinations. After all these years when the Warsaw pact was rightly condemned as being an extension of the Soviet machine, all of a sudden we are now to believe that it alone will allow a stable transition from the secure, tested, familiar, manageable European order, which we all nevertheless used to denounce, to the new order which nobody has yet worked out because nobody was planning for the victory that has just happened.

It should go without saying that there must be an acceleration of the arms control process at all levels. I welcome what the Minister said about that. It should also go without saying—there was nothing in the Minister's speech about this—that modernisation of the Lance missile system is now simply a redundant memory, as politically impossible as it is militarily unnecessary. If the American Defence Secretary can say that the risks are the lowest since 1945, our planning and expenditure should reflect that fact. This new scenario has implications for our troubled economy which is over-dependent on military expenditure in many different ways.

We must be imaginative about the aid and assistance that we give. I agree wholeheartedly with the Minister that to add to the debt problems of the Eastern bloc countries is no way to help them. We must give them grants, not further credit, as far as possible. I welcome the announcement of the doubling of the know-how fund for Poland, for the increased food aid and the £64 million committed to the stabilisation fund for currencies. These are apparently new moneys offered by the Government and they go some way to meeting the criticism of parsimony that I levelled at the Government a fortnight ago. But is that enough? Is the know-how fund, the advisory board of which is chaired by the Minister and on which I have the pleasure to serve, really getting £25 million more, or is it getting an extra £5 million a year after the first five-year period, as a radio programme yesterday evening suggested?

Mr. Waldegrave: We shall pay £10 million a year for a five-year period, rather than £5 million for a 10-year period.

Mr. Robertson: I am glad for that clarification and it is right that that should be the case.

Will the Hungarian fund, due to start next April, be similarly doubled? What aid is contemplated for Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria when they reach the standards established by Poland and Hungary? I warmly welcome the change of policy on English language teaching as a beneficiary of the know-how funds. The expertise of the British Council, the BBC world service and the ODA can do much through teaching English to bring Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia into the modern business world.

On Monday the Prime Minister announced to the world on "Panorama" that German reunification was not on the agenda, but on Tuesday Chancellor Kohl spelt out his plan for that very objective. I note that the Minister warmly welcomed his speech and objective. The Prime Minister may assert that the reunification is not on the agenda, but if the Germans put it there, it will certainly be on the agenda. It does not need to dominate any agenda for the future, even when the paranoias of both the Kremlin and 10, Downing street happen momentarily to coincide. We cannot say that self-determination for the GDR is our priority and at the same time say that one outcome is not to be considered. What price the reassertion of democracy in that sort of world?

Two points must be borne in mind. First, there is no inexorable, inevitable path from the GDR to a new united nation. Indeed, the first response to Chancellor Kohl's declaration was from a group of GDR reformers who said that they valued the prospect of an independent, but non-Communist, GDR. Secondly, we must ensure that the future of the two Germanies remains a matter for all Europe, since neither population can pretend that it can act as though it were an island.

It is grossly insulting to forget that the Federal Republic of Germany is a mature, deeply rooted democracy where the post-war generation has built constitutional institutions from which we can certainly learn. It is no springboard for a fourth reich. It is important, however, that the domestic, political battle in the Federal Republic is not allowed to spill over into its fragile, exposed neighbour. Chancellor Kohl's party and the other parties must curb any temptation to use the issue for home consumption.

Above all, as we gaze in wonderment at the way in which our continent has been transformed in a matter of weeks we, who have revelled in the luxury and benefits of democratic traditions for 40 years, must not seek to impose our values and standards on those who will find their own, possibly different, way in future. We must be aware of the time available to grasp the opportunities. Many people say that if we act too quickly, it will all crumble before our eyes. They cry against action before everything settles down, as if these peoples and nations were some giant pot of soup. But if we delay, paralysed by caution, and if we do not offer the help needed, the forces of reaction that are still there waiting for failure will return. Delay would be fatal. That is why a response is needed now to capture the chance of a new order in Europe with all the certainty of the old order but, mercifully, without the terminal risks and miseries that 40 years of the cold war meant in reality.

[Mr. Robertson]

Recently President Mitterrand outlined a great mission for the European Community,

"if it is something that can prove to be stronger than everyone's desire to be master of his own village."

There are some hopelessly tied to the idea of being mistress of their own village, but the rest of us can and should aspire to the greater mission.

10.47 am

Sir Bernard Braine (Castle Point): My right hon. Friend the Minister opened the debate with one of the most thoughtful, helpful analyses of East-West relations that I have ever heard from the Front Bench. I agree with everything he said. I hope that he will forgive me, however, if I say that this debate is timely for one special reason which has hardly been touched on so far.

Naturally events in eastern and central Europe have lifted our hearts in the West in a most remarkable way which none of us could have thought possible less than two years ago. Everywhere Communism is in retreat and whole peoples are demanding free elections, a market economy and a single European home. But between that demand and its fulfilment lies a gap full of uncertainty and even danger.

The test case is Poland. No people in eastern Europe suffered more at the hands of the Nazis and Stalinists. It is one of the saddest ironies of history that Britain went to war in 1939 to save Poland, that Polish flyers fought to defend this island during the Battle of Britain, that Polish soldiers fought alongside our own on almost every front with great bravery and distinction, but that victory for us brought subjugation for them.

Now for the first time since 1945 Poland has a non-communist Prime Minister and its face is turned with hope to the West. What are its immediate prospects? On 5 November the Sunday Telegraph reported:

"Living standards, already among the worst in the Warsaw Pact, have deteriorated further."

The paper went on to say that nobody yet blames Solidarity Prime Minister Mr. Mazowiecki's Government. The Poles know perfectly well whom to blame, but the outlook is bleak. Inflation has now reached a monthly rate of 50 per cent.:

"In many places queues have gone not because the supply of necessities has increased but because the demand has been forced down. In the larger cities many people have become dependent on soup kitchens. The Polish committee for social aid estimates that one in four citizens needs help now to stave off hunger."

The witnesses to this are legion. Reverend David Thomas, rector of Canvey Island in my constituency, recently returned from a church mission to Poland. He has told me how he and a companion on a train journey encountered a student and wanted to share with him their enthusiasm for recent events. The student did not smile; instead he showed them a newspaper detailing a threefold increase in the price of bread over as many weeks. Reverend Thomas told me that everyone he spoke to desperately felt the need for help from the outside world. This is also the message that Mr. Lech Walesa, the great hero of Polish resistance to Communist rule, is delivering here this week.

My purpose in intervening in this debate is to call for special measures to meet immediate needs, over and above what has to be done to rebuild the Polish economy and embark on the necessary work of reconstruction. The immediate needs are specific. Dr. Bozena Laskiewicz of Medical Aid for Poland Fund, which operates from this country, has written to me saying that the bad situation of a few months ago has deteriorated further. There is an acute shortage of food. Dr. Laskiewicz says that food has never been so expensive. People going out shopping have no idea how much money they will need for basic foods such as bread, butter and cheese. Fresh milk is almost unobtainable in the towns, while a women wrote recently from Gdansk saying that she had been able to afford to buy meat only three times since August.

Lady Ryder of Warsaw, who telephoned me earlier this week, is the founder of the Sue Ryder Foundation. She has been closely connected with relief work in Poland ever since the end of the second world war. She tells me that an urgent appeal has been made by Bishop Domin, the head of the charity commission of the Roman Catholic church in Poland, who co-ordinates all food and medical help from the community and the outside world. He confirms that the food situation is appalling: dried milk and rice are unobtainable: meat prices have rocketed; sugar is not always available, I should like to quote what this remarkable lady told me only this morning:

"Four million proples are now below subsistence level. Unless more food and medical supplies are sent within two weeks suffering will be intensified and people will die unnecessarily."

The outlook for health is bleak in the extreme. Life expectancy for both men and women fell in Poland between 1965 and 1985, according to official statistics, and since then is thought to have fallen still further. Infant mortality figures are probably the highest in Europe. There is an acute shortage of medical supplies of all kinds—anaesthetics, drugs, antibiotics, dressings, gauze, syringes, needles and much more. There is a chronic shortage of standard medical equipment.

Only yesterday, Dr. Zbigniew Religa, a cardiac surgeon who works in Katowicz who is visiting here, told me that the shortage of medicines is critical and that basic equipment such as respirators is lacking. His message was clear:

"We need freedom certainly—we have been deprived of it for too long. But what we have will not last if we cannot feed our people and sustain their health."

With him was Dr. Andrew Sasnowski, a cardiac thoracic surgeon. He told me:

"We need help now, not next month or next year. Our new Government must be helped to stay in power long enough to complete the reforms and to get our country moving, but that will be impossible if our people do not have enough to eat and if their health deteriorates further."

Dr. Ian Stephen, a British orthopaedic surgeon from Kent who has worked with Polish doctors for many years, has told me:

"A popular revolution such as we are seeing in eastern Europe will falter and fail if people do not see the prospect of an improvement in the quality of life."

The message is clear: Poland needs help and needs it now. Winter is upon us; the Poles can hardly last until the spring. Only a short time ago we were bewailing the giant surpluses of food accumulated by the European Community and costing the taxpayer vast amounts of money for storage—hon. Members on both sides asked many questions about it. Let generosity be combined with common sense. Let us unlock the storehouse doors and ship the food to Poland. There should be no difficulty about distribution. Bishop Domin and the Church are well placed to help. There is close co-operation between the church authorities and the Sue Ryder Foundation. We need an immediate air lift, which would not necessitate a vast number of planes. Berlin was saved by an airlift in rather different conditions. I am asking for an airlift to Poland of essential supplies—and now. If anyone wants to help, money can be received by the Sue Ryder Foundation and used to purchase supplies which can be channelled to Poland and distributed there in a matter of a few days.

I do not want to minimise the efforts being made by the European Commission to co-ordinate aid measures to Poland and Hungary and other nations in eastern Europe. We must reach out to all of them. I understand that progress will be reviewed in Brussels on 13 December.

Nor do I minimise the British know-how fund of £25 million the doubling of which the Foreign Secretary announced on Wednesday. That increase is timely, but I hope that I may be permitted to make a special plea. Britain owes a special debt of honour to Poland, which so far has not been repaid. At the end of our common struggle in war against unspeakable tyranny and wickedness Poland was betrayed. We had a hand in that —I am not casting aspersions, because we could do nothing about it at the time. Now that, by their own efforts, the Poles are throwing off 45 years of Soviet occupation and Communist misgovernment, the opportunity has arisen for Britain to repay the debt. I hope that we shall not fail to rise to the occasion, and will do so quickly.

10.59 am

Mr. Peter Shore (Bethnal Green and Stepney): I associate myself with the remarks made by the Father of the House, the right hon. Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine). I am not sure whether Poland needs an air lift, but it does need massive food aid quickly to deal with a major crisis which will afflict that country this winter. The right hon. Gentleman was correct to stress the urgency of that. I also support the right hon. Gentleman's tribute to the Minister of State, because I believe that the Minister made a very penetrating and worthwhile contribution to our debate.

When the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which I am a member, reported in April, it was already clear that momentous changes were taking place in the Soviet Union and in eastern Europe. In the Soviet Union that was evidenced internally by the thrusting forward of measures designed to achieve perestroika and glasnost and externally by the quite remarkable changes in Soviet foreign policy in its handling of regional affairs—the speed with which the Afghanistan conflict was at least greatly eased by the withdrawal of Soviet troops—and through the new approaches to disarmament and the perception of the world in which the Soviets live about which Mr. Gorbachev has spoken with such refreshing novelty on so many occasions.

In eastern Europe the changes were already clear in Poland and Hungary. Great demands were made everywhere for more democracy, for the end of Communist party monopoly of political power, for political freedom and for free elections.

Within the past few weeks and months the pace of change has quickened dramatically. There is a Solidarity Government in Poland. In Hungary we have seen the astonishing event of the Communist party dissolving itself and the way is now clear in Budapest for free elections within a relatively short time. I have no doubt that that will result in a non-Communist Government in that country. In East Germany, Honecker has gone and the iron curtain has been breached irretrievably. In Czechoslovakia the Communist leadership has been forced to change and they are setting up a new coalition Government including the major opposition groups.

I want to refer to three actions that symbolise the changes that have deeply moved me and, I suspect, others in this tremendously exciting and historic year of change. First, I felt greatly moved when I saw on television the formal state reburial of Imre Nagy who tried to lead Hungary to independence. He was seized, executed and flung into a pauper's grave. I stirred to see that man honoured and to see Hungary change its name from the people's republic to the Republic of Hungary.

Secondly, I was moved to see the people of East Berlin mingling once more with the people of West Berlin as those tremendous breaches were made in the Berlin wall.

Perhaps the most moving sight was that of Alexander Dubček addressing 250,000 citizens of Prague in Wenceslas square. Only 21 years ago he and his regime were overthrown and Russian tanks rumbled through the streets of Prague.

When the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs reported last April, we asked two basic questions—was the Brezhnev doctrine dead, and was the cold war coming to an end. We can give a pretty clear answer to the first question. God, what a difference it has made; the Brezhnev doctrine is dead. The essence of the Brezhnev doctrine, the right claimed by the Russians for so many years to intervene in the internal affairs of the countries of eastern Europe and of any other Communist country, has been dropped and discarded. That is now the official Russian policy.

Mr. Gorbachev made yet another remarkable speech in Rome yesterday. With regard to eastern Europe, he said specifically:

> "Having embarked on radical reform, the socialist countries one after the other, are crossing the line beyond which there is no return to the past."

That is a most welcome statement. It brings to an end the era of the Brezhnev doctrine which inflicted so much misery upon the people of eastern Europe.

With regard to the second question about the cold war coming to an end, again Mr. Gorbachev said something that underlines the new emphasis of Russian policy and new perceptions. In Rome yesterday he said that those in the Soviet Union

> "have abandoned the claim to a monopoly on truth. We no longer think we are the best and that we are always right; that those who disagree with us are our enemies.
>
> We have now decided, firmly and irrevocably to base our policies on the principle of freedom of choice."

[Mr. Peter Shore]

That opens up the possibility of quite dramatic changes and agreements that will benefit us all.

This debate is really about how Britain and the West collectively should respond to the dramatic changes and new opportunities that are being presented to us. I am hardly surprised that there should be such a plethora of summits as is occurring at the moment with the meeting in Malta today, the NATO meeting which will follow, the meeting a few weeks ago called by President Mitterrand in Paris, the summit meeting in Strasbourg and Mr. Gorbachev's call for an all-European conference. We have an awful lot to talk about and to decide if this great moment of opportunity in post-war history is to be used fully.

Once the principles of verification and asymmetric reduction of weapons by the side that has supremacy in those weapons are accepted, as I believe they are, the way is open for a dramatic change in the levels of armaments held by the East and the West. There is great promise in the Start talks and perhaps even greater promise in the conventional arms reduction talks in Vienna.

I do not agree with the Government about rearmament. As a persistent multilateral disarmer, I believe that in the new circumstances it is wrong to delay for too long talks about tactical short-range nuclear missiles in Europe. If conventional force reductions reach the levels that I believe we can reach, there will be a great benefit to Europe, particularly given the great Soviet supremacy and superiority in those weapons, if we can agree on total abolition on both sides. I should certainly like the conventional arms talks to be speeded up and perhaps even extend the reductions beyond the already extremely exciting levels that have been proposed.

On aid for eastern Europe, the right hon. Member for Castle Point is right. This winter there will certainly be a great problem with hunger and perhaps even fuel famine in parts of eastern Europe. We should respond to that. Undoubtedly, some response is being made by nations individually and by the European Community collectively. We have not yet thought through the longer-term problems of what is happening in eastern Europe and the need for economic reconstruction there. Those countries will go through a sustained period of falling living standards, high unemployment and shortages of the most basic goods.

The new democracies which are emerging will be robust, because the recent experience of tyranny has burnt itself into the minds and hearts of the people of those countries. There will be no quick return to totalitarianism in any form. If we are to help to ease the weight of the profound problems of economic change in fledgling democracies, we must be seen to do so in a serious, co-ordinated way. We must turn our minds to that matter.

Further, we should offer at least the prospect and the choice of longer-term membership of the European Community. Many countries are interested in an association with the European Community, not only because of potential trade benefits but because, unlike the European Free Trade Association, the European Community has a range of additional policies and facilities which can be tailor made in an association agreement to assist the economies of eastern Europe. What was said in a somewhat controversial speech a year ago about the capitals of Budapest, Prague, Warsaw and Vienna being just as much a part of Europe as the capitals Paris, Rome, Bonn and London is true. I wish to see a wider Europe which embraces all those countries as member states.

Because of the speed of change in East Germany, the problem of German reunification has suddenly emerged. It is back on the agenda. It is natural for Germans, both East and West, to wish to come together. We have long been committed to helping to realise that aim. We would be foolish to leave it out of our minds, but we should be careful. First, we must see the emergence of democratic institutions in East Germany. Secondly, although we suspect that we know the answer, the peoples of East Germany and of the Federal Republic must be given the chance freely to express their own wishes for the future. Thirdly, in all sense, we must realise that we cannot yet have the unity of Germany without the settlement of a peace treaty for Germany. We cannot have a reunified Germany when there are still, although much thinned out, several hundred thousand Russian troops in East Germany. That problem must be resolved, and it can be resolved only by talking sensibly and seriously with the Soviet Union.

Fourthly, my colleagues and I on the Select Committee who have been on recent visits to Strasbourg, Brussels, Rome, Paris and Bonn have found a rather odd reaction to events in eastern Europe. In western Europe there is not just the sense of great achievement, great challenge and promise, but there is a great push to create in the European Community something which is overtly federal. They do not seek to disguise it. When we discuss matters that are of great importance for the economic future of this country and our parliamentary institutions—for example, our attitude to economic and monetary union—we approach the issues dispassionately, with a view to identifying our national interest and others' interests in economic matters and in the effective retention of self-government.

Discussions of the merits of economic and monetary union appear to have been swept aside in most capitals of western Europe. For various reasons, they are entranced by the prospect as part of an inevitable progression towards political union. They make no bones about it and they do not seek to disguise it, although they each have a different emphasis. Mr. Delors in Brussels will say that he is in favour of acceleration towards political union and the development of more federal institutions because he thinks that a reunified Germany would be too powerful. somehow or other they must embrace the new reunified Germany when it takes place, within a still tighter political structure within western Europe. That underlines the position of President Mitterrand in France.

As for the Germans, they feel that that is the price that they may have to pay to get west European support for their ultimate aim of achieving German reunification. We are in a difficult position. I cannot think of a more difficult European summit than the one that is to take place in Strasbourg on 8 and 9 December. At the moment, I can see no way in which Britain will not be isolated, and I can see great problems for us and for other members of the Community.

These events have great implications for NATO and the Warsaw pact. Clearly, the emphasis, thrust and content of great military pacts will change. I should like to see a slow period of change, because the Warsaw pact and NATO have had a stabilising effect not merely on relations between East and West but on relations between east Europe and Russia. If we are to avoid the Balkanisation of central and eastern Europe, the Warsaw pact should be phased out rather than abruptly torn aside. We should see the same in NATO, because, unlike any other available instrument, a NATO unified command, together with the transformation of the democratic instincts or wishes of the German people, guarantee western Europe and the world from a resurgence of German power and nationalism.

11.19 am

Mr. William Powell (Corby): The House has had the great benefit of listening to speeches from three distinguished hon. Members. I regret that the contribution by the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) did not do him justice. As a result of what has been said, I shall be able to abbreviate my speech and I hope that that will benefit hon. Members who follow me. Personal circumstances will make it impossible for me to be here for the winding-up speeches and I apologise to Front-Bench speakers and other hon. Members for that.

I shall concentrate on Germany, eastern Europe and the Malta summit. The right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) has said most of what needs to be said about Germany. I welcome the steps that are now being taken and which may well result in unification. My right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) was probably right to use the word unification in a contribution earlier this week. Nobody should imagine that that will be easy to achieve. It will be necessary for genuine democratic institutions to evolve in the German Democratic Republic before much progress can be made.

That evolution may be obvious, but there is one aspect that I should like to underline; it receives little attention. It is that free elections do not guarantee democracy, and we know all too well of such elections which have failed to do that. One of the bulwarks of democracy is a legal system that is without interference from the Government and to which all people have access. The evolution of a legal system that guarantees and underpins freedom is absolutely essential in the GDR.

It is equally clear that there can be no sensible moves towards reunification unless there is currency reform in eastern Germany. That inevitably means that the deutschmark will predominate. That can be done by agreement at the outset or by the free floating of currencies with interchangeability between them. The rapid disappearance of the ostmark would be an inevitable consequence of that.

Plainly, a currency that officially ranks the ostmark to the deutschmark at 1:1 and which until about three weeks ago was 1:7 or 1:8 on the black market, and is now about 1:20 has no prospect of being able to survive. Anyone who imagines that it is possible to talk about progress towards the reunification of Germany without currency reform is not grasping reality.

As the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney emphasised, it is simply not possible to have a reunified Germany in which substantial quantities of Warsaw pact troops are stationed in one part while NATO troops are stationed in another. The whole world knows Abraham Lincoln's famous phrase that a house divided against itself cannot stand. It would be impossible to create any kind of national unity in a country in which enormous numbers of troops from opposing military pacts were stationed.

Although I welcome the steps that are undoubtedly under way and which may result in the unification of Germany in due course, I hope that in Germany and elsewhere people will keep their feet on the ground so that this evolution can take place in a free, steady and organised way. Unless it does, there is a real chance of the whole thing coming unstuck in a spectacular way.

I shall now turn to our obligations to eastern Europe. My right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine), the Father of the House, spoke with passion and force about the problems that are being faced in Poland. Now that the House is being televised and there is a chance to show verbatim what is being said, I hope that there will be considerable coverage in news and other programmes of what my right hon. Friend said. He spoke on behalf of us all and it behoves the Government and hon. Members to do all that we can to help. As the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney said, unless we are prepared to help, the chances of the movements that are now under way resulting in a sustained, growing and maturing democracy will be substantially undermined.

I should like to concentrate on an important aspect of the speech by my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point. It will be necessary for the western European nations to invest in the East. That may be done by way of joint ventures or grants—all sorts of things are possible. We must concentrate on the infrastructure, if I may use that ghastly modern word. In an interview in The Times my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister drew attention to the fact that much of the food grown in the countries of eastern Europe is rotting and not getting to the people who could benefit from it. That is because there are no infrastructures of transport, refrigeration or proper storage.

All the facilities that we take for granted are chronically lacking and we should concentrate on trying to improve such facilities in the East. That must be done directly by the Government through agencies of the European Community and other agencies and, of course, by way of individual ventures. We must proceed on all those matters, and improving storage and refrigeration facilities must be given the highest priority.

The transport infrastructure in central and eastern Europe is inadequate. If the countries there are to develop and strengthen their economies, they must be able to improve that infrastructure. There is one major way in which the EEC can assist in that, and it is in the context of the rail and road facilities from central Europe to the port of Trieste, which was the port of the old Austro-Hungarian empire. The exports of Austria and Hungary passed through that port and its importance now as a major facility could not be greater.

The rail facilities from southern Austria, Vienna, Hungary, Slovakia, Bratislava and southern Poland are hopelessly inadequate. A huge amount will need to be spent, especially to ensure adequate rail facilities, and the only way in which that can be done is through the institutions of the European Community. We must concentrate on such projects in order to build up the economic resources of eastern Europe. I could say much more about that, but that would not be wise, having regard to the enthusiasm of so many hon. Members who wish to speak.

[Mr. William Powell]

The meeting in Malta between the President of the United States and the President of the Soviet Union is of momentous importance and the opportunity must not be lost by either of them. It is not my most important point, but I hope that the President of the United States will take advantage of this opportunity to have a word with Mr. Gorbachev about Mr. Mengistu in Ethiopia. Surely the time has come for the Soviet Union to draw the curtain on that little thing.

In Malta, the two presidents will have to face the fact that political developments in central Europe have now begun to outrun the pace of disarmament talks that are taking place in Vienna and nuclear disarmament talks. I do not want to engage in a debate with the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney about short-range nuclear weapons, but he made an important point that will have to be considered by the Government and others. There is no doubt that, above all else, the situation requires a substantial and continuing reduction in the huge conventional forces that the Soviet Union has stationed in eastern Europe. The West must make it possible for the Soviet Union to reduce the size of those forces. President Buch must be prepared to concede concessions, perhaps in principle only in Malta, but the details must follow soon as they can be completed.

The political imperatives of Europe now require the leaders of the Soviet Union and the United States to show some urgency and to go further than they may have seriously contemplated earlier in the year. If the momentum of the political developments outruns the ability of the military alliances to cope with those changes there will be an immensely destabilising force in Europe, which would be in no one's interest.

These are exhilarating times. The prospect of change and development is bound to engender great enthusiasm in us all. Today in Rome the leader of the Soviet Union meets the Pope. The Pope's first language, in common with our former colleague Stefan Terlezki, is Ukrainian. We hope that that meeting will result in freedom for the Ukrainian church and that it might ease some of the nationality problems presently encountered in the Soviet Union.

There is absolutely no doubt that it behoves our Government and the Governments of western Europe, the United States and the East to rise to the challenges of the momentous events.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must remind the House of Mr. Speaker's earlier announcement that from 11.30 am until 1 pm the 10-minute limit on the length of speeches will apply.

11.31 am

Sir Russell Johnston (Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber): The hon. Member for Corby (Mr. Powell) was modest when he congratulated other hon. Members on their speeches as he made an effective contribution. If this debate had not been taking place on a Friday I am sure that far more hon. Members would be here. Although I welcome this debate, it shows a rather mistaken order of priorities among the Government's business managers for them to put it on a Friday rather than on another weekday.

I go along with those who have already praised the Minister for the way in which he opened the debate. His speech was thoughtful, positive and demonstrated his sense of history as well as the fact that he has a great deal of political sensitivity.

What we are witnessing, as many hon. Members have already said, is a monumental change and the fulfilment of many dreams. Last Sunday I stood at the Berlin wall with a German friend and watched people chipping bits out of it just underneath the Reichstag. I chipped a wee bit out myself. It was an extraordinary experience to be there and it put a song in one's heart—that is the only way in which to describe it. The political climate has changed fundamentally, but the arguments, which are about peace, freedom, political pluralism and economic development and co-operation in Europe, are the same. Our capacity to advance those things, however, has changed in a miraculous way.

Some hon. Members will not see it that way. The hon. Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Lamond) gave aid, comfort and praise to the thugs of the Honecker regime and he cannot have welcomed the scenes in Leipzig. Others will be suspicious and negative. Many people in politics require something either to hate or to fear in order to feel safe in a funny sort of way. It is destabilising to have that hatred or fear removed. The hon. Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) demonstrated that when we had our debate on the Community when he said:

> "More potential damage has been done to the western Alliance . . . by the knocking down of the Berlin wall than Russia's massive armaments programme ever achieved. If the intention was to create uncertainty . . . these recent changes could be the most effective offensive Russia has so far launched."—[Official Report, 15 November 1989; Vol. 160, c. 410.]

I do not go along with that sort of thinking, but between the extremes I know that there is much good will, but a certain amount of hesitation.

On behalf of my party I welcome, without equivocation, what has happened. In common with the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) I pay particular tribute to Mr. Gorbachev who has been the engine driving the whole thing forward. It is difficult to imagine the enormous pressures that must be on him. I do not know how he does it.

How do we respond to the new situation? I do not particularly want to be brief, but rules are rules and I shall make four points only.

First, I agree with the Father of the House, the right hon. Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine), that the most immediate, absolute imperative in Poland in particular, but elsewhere as the need may arise, is that there is enough food this winter. Credit must go to Delors, but the Government should be active in this matter. Secondly, in the medium term, the assistance provided to the emerging democracies must concentrate on improving managerial capacity, infrastructure and the technological base of their industries. A substantial review of the COCOM structure is required. How does the Government's response measure up? They have done certain of the right things and I welcome the doubling of the know-how programme to Poland.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that part of the know-how funds should go towards financing community newspapers in Poland as that would strengthen that fledgling democracy?

Sir Russell Johnston: That is a constructive remark and I agree that we need to strengthen the structure of democracy. It has already been said that those funds are not large and if the Government do not propose to do anything more bilaterally I hope that they will encourage more to be done through the Community in a collective sense.

I am told that no money from the know-how fund for Hungary will be spent until the next financial year, although the Prime Minister referred in Question Time last week to our helping Poland and Hungary. I hope that the Minister will tell us later whether we will help Hungary this year rather than next year.

Thirdly, I should like to quote from Chancellor Kohl who spoke in the Bundestag on Tuesday. I recommend his speech to hon. Members as he succinctly put his finger on a number of points. The best way in which I can make those points is to quote Chancellor Kohl who said:

"the surmounting of the separation of Europe and the division of Germany demands far-reaching and speedy steps pertaining to disarmament and arms control. Disarmament and arms control must keep step with political developments and, therefore, might have to be accelerated.

This is particularly true of the negotiations in Vienna for the dismantling of conventional armed forces in Europe and for the agreement upon measures to establish trust, such as the worldwide ban of chemical weapons. This also demands that the nuclear potential of world powers be reduced to a stragetic minimal level. The up coming meeting between President Bush and General Secretary Gorbachev offers a good opportunity to add new impetus to current negotiations. We are trying via bilateral discussions with the countries of the Warsaw pact, including the GDR to support this process."

Are our Government doing that as well? I agree with the hon. Member for Corby that it is important to catch this tide. As a Liberal I am proud of the role of Hans-Dietrich Genscher in this process. I support his opposition to short-range nuclear modernisation in NATO at this time. I do not believe that that is necessary and I agree with what the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney said about that.

Fourthly, it is wrong to argue as quite a number are arguing—even the Minister seemed to imply this during his speech—that in this new position, one of our first responses should be to slow down the integration of the European Community. People are saying that we should wait. It is noticeable that the people saying that would say so even if the new events in eastern Europe had not taken place.

The idea that if the Community moves—as I would wish—towards ever more effective, economic, political and federal union, that will represent a sort of blocking off of the opportunities to the eastern countries, is a fundamental mistake. It does not do that. On the contrary, it will enable us to respond more effectively and coherently to change there, including the possibility of German reunification if the Germans take that choice and phasing from association to membership of the fledgling democracies in time.

Apart from wondering what we are to do about it, Members should simply be glad that these events have taken place and salute the brave people such as Dubček who, during the years, have kept the flag flying and remained brave. As the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) said, this is a wonderful time to be alive.

11.40 am

Sir Peter Blaker (Blackpool, South): I agree with the final remarks of the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston), particularly when he saluted the individuals who have been responsible for giving leadership in these exhilarating times in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. When considering the causes of these great developments, there is no doubt that they are principally internal both in the Soviet Union and the eastern European countries. But we should not ignore the part that we have played in NATO and the European Community.

For two years between 1981 and 1983 I was the Minister responsible for conducting the campaign for multilateral disarmament and deterrence. I found myself debating with CND and members of the Labour party all over the country. I was constantly accused of being a warmonger and worse and asked, "If the arms race continues, where is it all going to end?" The implication of the question was that it would all end in war. My response was quite different. I said that it was clear that the 16 per cent. of GDP spent on military purposes in the Soviet Union was an enormous burden which could not be kept up for ever. I thought that it was perfectly clear that the Soviet Union could not improve its defence capacity as fast as we could in the West, and if it came to a challenge —as it was then—between the two sides, the Soviet Union might in due course realise that the game was up, abandon its ambitions to expand its power throughout the world and, in the interests of its economy, make a radical change. I could not tell how long it would take, but I thought that it might take a decade or two. I was absolutely right, although I overestimated the time required.

We should consider not only the contribution that our unity and strength in NATO has made to these developments by showing that the Soviet Union could not achieve its external objectives, but the damage which would have been done if the unilateral disarmers had won. I am sure that the subsequent scene would have been different because the Soviet Union's leaders, seeing disunity in NATO, would have been gravely tempted to continue their old ways.

What is the likely course of the east European revolution? Nobody could be more exhilarated by it than I. I played a part in the second world war, as did other right hon. and hon. Members in the Chamber. We particularly welcome what is going on because we can remember the horrors of those days and the dismay we felt when we saw east European countries subjected, one by one, to Soviet rule.

While there is certainly a reduction in the risk of war due to the events now taking place, we must recognise that there will be a great deal of turmoil in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. We have not yet seized the dimensions of what is likely to happen. We have seen only the beginning of the turmoil. These countries have no experience of elections, even to a parish council, let alone to a district council or national Parliament. They do not have a clue about how it is done. They have no experience of running even a free enterprise whelk stall. Until recently, even the whelk stalls were in the public sector. I am told that they are generally in the private sector now. I checked the position with Lech Walesa yesterday. They do not have the experience of running car factories or anything bigger than a whelk stall. They need enormous help from us and will certainly make great mistakes. It is well known that the shelves in the shops in these countries are emptier now than before the revolution began.

[Sir Peter Blaker]

There is a difference between eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. The eastern Europeans have nationalism and the excitement of liberalisation from Soviet control to keep them united and continue the momentum. They will need to rely on those factors. In the Soviet Union, nationalism is not a favourable factor to keep them going but an extremely dangerous one. In the Soviet Union, the Baltic republics, the Georgians, the Uzbeks, the Azerbaijanis, the Armenians and others will feel the need more and more to be independent of Russian domination. That is why Mr. Gorbachev insists that there should be only one party, the Communist party, in the Soviet Union, in contrast to the eastern European countries where it is accepted that there can be a multi-party system. The only thing keeping the Soviet Union together now is the Communist party.

So we should expect that there will be a great deal of turmoil, particularly in the Soviet Union. We do not know what the Russian generals think, but we should remember the point made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence that Sir John Hackett, in his book of fiction, "The Third World War", set the scene for the beginning of that third world war in the break-up of the Soviet Union. I am not predicting that there will be war, but he had a point about the dangers of turmoil.

What should we do? We should help in every way we can the favourable trend in eastern European countries and the Soviet Union. When he replies, I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will deal with the urgent need for food aid in Poland. When I spoke to Lech Walesa yesterday and asked if Poland needed food aid, he said yes, but he did not insist that that was the principal need. He said that Poland is one of the richest agricultural countries in the world, but we have to get the Polish farmers to release that food. The food is in the barns because of the financial position and some means must be found to get it out. There may well be a great need for food aid this winter and I understand that we are providing £15 million worth of food aid, but I should be grateful if my right hon. Friend would clarify the situation.

What I find particularly exciting is the know-how fund. In the next 12 months the BBC external services will be training 40 broadcasters from Poland to run a free broadcasting system. They have absolutely no idea about how to do it. They are trying to do it at the moment and they are making enormous mistakes. We shall be training parliamentarians from Poland and Hungary on how to run a free Parliament. We are also training local government officers.

Mr. Walesa stressed to me that he wants British business men to invest in Poland to help sort out Polish industry. He said that many German business men are going to Poland. In a short time, Germany would buy up a large part of Polish industry if it could, but the Polish people do not want that to happen in a big way because of history and their feelings about Germany. They would like British business men to visit Poland and British banks to be set up there. He said that if a British bank is set up the Polish people will bring out from under their floorboards and mattresses the large sums of money that they will not put into the Communist bank. They will put their money into a British bank because they could get it out if they needed it. In that way more funds from Poland will be available to invest in Polish industry.

We should not weaken our defences prematurely. We should proceed with disarmament by negotiation with the Soviet Union in the forums which already exist. We should certainly be forthcoming about what we are prepared to do. By our policies we have helped to create the prospect of a Europe transformed for the better. Helping that process to continue and helping to manage change so that it is for the better and not for the worse will be a task as complex as anything in the past 40 years, but equally worthwhile.

11.51 am

Mr. Robert N. Wareing (Liverpool, West Derby): I found the Minister's speech extremely interesting. It certainly did not sound like the usual Foreign Office brief, nor did it sound like a speech which could possibly have had the support of the Prime Minister, because it departed from the cold war rhetoric which still seems to be part and parcel of the right hon. Lady's speeches, as we heard the other day when she spoke in Washington. The Minister made a civilised speech, although I did not agree with all of it. I have only two criticisms of what he said.

First, there was a slight element of triumphalism in the Minister's speech. It is not true that people in eastern Europe are anxious for the unrestrained capitalism that the Minister considers is so beneficial for people in Britain. I remind the Minister that two thirds of the human race suffer in poverty. The overwhelming majority of those people live in countries which embrace the market system, and an unfair market system at that.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Where?

Mr. Wareing: The hon. Gentleman shouts, "Where?". Perhaps he has never been to Chile, El Salvador, India or Indonesia. I do not know what he knows about the system he supports, but it has been abused in many parts of the world.

Secondly, I did not like the Minister continually referring to "the other side". We are entering a new era and we must have the vision and imagination that the Prime Minister lacks. Unfortunately, the Minister reflected that in his constant references to "the other side". I like to think of the working people of Europe struggling for a better existence and a better life, instead of the rhetoric that we hear so often from those who continue to believe and often have a vested interest in keeping Europe ideologically divided, backed up by two armed camps.

I welcome the great changes which have taken place in Hungary, Poland and Czechoslovakia. I particularly welcome the changes in Czechoslovakia as I was there enjoying the Prague spring, lapping up the air of freedom. I applaud the fact that Alexander Dubček is now seen on the streets of Prague, freely moving about and expressing his opinions. I hope that he will play a part in the new Czechoslovakia.

I warn the other side—in this context, Conservative Members—that Alexander Dubček is not talking about embracing free market capitalism. If Conservative Members want to refer to what he believes in, they should look at a copy of The Guardian, which published an article of his in early January 1988. He expressed his views about Socialism with a human face, under which there would be a strong element of planning to deal with the problems of the environment and of the maldistribution of wealth. He remains a Socialist, and many of the people who are struggling for a better life in eastern Europe are struggling for democratic Socialism.

The most significant change, because of its impact on the rest of Europe, is that taking place in East Germany, about which I shall make most of my remarks. Some people are saying that there is a danger of a fourth Reich, and the other day Conor Cruise O'Brien made a foolish statement about that.

I am aware of the problems of people who lived in countries under Nazi occupation. I was a child at the time, but I remember living through the blitz on Liverpool. The West German generation of today is different. It was born and nurtured in a democratic political culture and is entirely different from the past. It has been lucky enough to live through a period when the economy has been mostly in boom, and it has not had the problems of the generation of the Weimar republic.

Today West Germany enshrines many human rights. It is not perfect by a long way, but it has far more human rights that we currently have in Britain. Its workers may not be all that Labour Members should want, but at least they have Mitbestimmung and the rights that are being developed under the social charter, which are scorned by the Prime Minister and many on the extreme Right wing of the Conservative party. The Germans have a good reputation for dealing with refugees, such as the Kurds, the Chileans and many others who have been persecuted by dictatorships throughout the world.

I do not think that we should or could stand in the way of German reunification. What would we say if there were an artificial barrier from the Wash to the Severn? We have a divide created by the Government between poverty in one part of the country and prosperity in another, but I am talking about barriers such as the Berlin wall, the barbed wire, and the minefields through Germany.

Some people argue that there would be an upsurge of German nationalism and extreme Right-wing political movements in a united Germany. I believe that the danger of that is greater in a divided Germany. Although the NPD and Republikaner parties are still small parties, they feed on prejudices against immigrants—against the Gastarbeiter, the Turkish worker and workers from other Mediterranean countries. Although currently much sympathy is being shown in West Germany for its brethren from the East, this is the honeymoon period and there is a danger that a continuing flood from the East would result in an upsurge of extremism in certain parts of the country as expressed through parties such as the Republikaner party.

We must express our gratitude for what West Germans are doing for East Germans. I have visited West Germany several times over the past few months. The other week I was able to see the bürgermeister of Bremen offer hospitality to its twin town of Rostock, and its people came in hundreds of thousands to enjoy the freedom of travel.

We must remember that Bremen has 15 per cent. unemployment and that it has housing problems. However the immigrants have been dealt with generously by the Germans.

I understand that Bremen expects 18,000 people from the GDR to settle there in 1990. That is in addition to the 6,000 ethnic Germans from Poland and 2,000 from the Soviet Union who have already been accommodated by the city.

I hope that the Government will consider some of the premises that we could make available. For example, there are military barracks which could be used by the people coming from the East. We should help the Germans with the housing problem.

Reunification of Germany would certainly reduce the numbers coming from the East. However, Bärbel Bohley of the East German New Forum said:

"Without moves towards confederation the exodus from East to West will get worse, but financial help is the main concern."

I appeal for assistance to be given to the East Germans so that they can be fully wedded into a unified Germany. I want to see a Europe, including Germany, which is socialist and democratic and not oppressed by Stalinism or ruled by hard-handed Thatcherite philosophy.

12.1 pm

Mr. Ivan Lawrence (Burton): Many right hon. and hon. Members attended Remembrance Day services and remember the lesson that we read. We said:

"They shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks."

I cannot remember any time in my life when I thought that we were closer to that ideal than when I took part in that service last month. Many people share that feeling as they look around and see that Communism is disintegrating and even dissolving itself everywhere, as the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) said, and the shackles of totalitarianism are bursting open and freedom is blossoming out.

We can all be forgiven for feeling euphoria and joy as we see Dubček addressing the crowds, President Gorbachev welcomed wherever he goes, Solidarity leaders taking power in Poland, democracy emerging in Hungary, the people forcing the Czech regime to surrender its supreme power, and there are even stirrings in Bulgaria. But, we must not let the euphoria go to our heads. Many questions are being asked for which it is too early to give answers. We cannot look too far into the futue with any great certainty.

Let us suppose that President Gorbachev fails—we have to contemplate that possibility. Right hon. and hon. Members on the Foreign Affairs Select Committee, who visited eastern Europe last year and who maintain contacts with people in both eastern and western Europe, appreciate that the domestic achievements of the Gorbachev regime are not substantial. The regime is not securely anchored. There are alarming food shortages, caused mainly by the food distribution system. There are doubts everywhere in eastern Europe about President Gorbachev's survival.

When I was in Moscow at this time last year, I was appalled by the apathy of the people and by their lack of vital enthusiasm for the reforms. Let us suppose that President Gorbachev were deposed and that the reforms he has introduced were brought to a standstill. Most of the people we have met who are in positions of power and influence in Europe believe that the advances that have been made would be halted and then reversed.

At times like these, the only safe approach is to keep cool heads, and to consider carefully what we can do to ensure that the processes of freedom continue.

[Mr. Ivan Lawrence]

My hon. Friend the Minister spoke of the immense amount of encouragement and support that we are prepared to give the reformers in the short term to show that the world is behind them. The immediate economic aid is welcome, as is the free food for Poland for the winter, the know-how fund for Poland and Hungary, economic reconstruction assistance, agricultural advice, manpower training advice and abolition of trade restrictions with those countries. Then there is the debt relief which I hope the IMF is considering, the European Investment Bank's permission for lending and financial activities and, above all, the encouragement of private industrial investment, perhaps most practically through joint ventures.

Our moral support—and even debates such as this—are important, as are the continuation and extension of unofficial exchanges in literature, culture and music. Even the kind of guidance that we may be able to give, although not all of it would be to follow our example, about how to run a democratic process.

There are, however, deeper considerations that we need to accept, perhaps reluctantly. First, we must do nothing to stir up Mr. Gorbachev's enemies in the Soviet Union. He must be sustained in power because all of this is his achievement and the process will continue only if he remains in power. We must therefore do nothing to destabilise Europe and frighten his enemies.

In military defence, it is crucial that there should be a steady reduction in NATO's forces in response to Soviet reductions, but there must not be a dramatic pulling out of troops. We must also bear in mind the fact that, if things go wrong, we will need a strong military presence in Europe. That is a vital consideration.

We must go easy when talking about the reunification of Germany. Nothing is more likely to make things difficult for Gorbachev than for fears to grow that the Warsaw pact is about to dissolve, as it must be dissolved if West and East Germany are to reunify. My colleagues and I on the Foreign Affairs Select Committee have just come back from Bonn. I was relieved to discover that, although there is much talk of reunification—only this week Chancellor Kohl reaffirmed West Germany's commitment to reunification—it is only an aspiration at this stage. Reunification is part of their constitution. West German politicians have always to remember in their speeches that it is an aim, but they do not consider it possible in the foreseeable future. We should not do anything to precipitate fears in the Soviet Union that reunification, and all that it implies for the Warsaw pact, is likely to hapen in the near future.

We must not be quite so pressing in regard to economic and political activity. In this, I take a different view from many others who have spoken this morning. At a time of turmoil in the world we do not want any turmoil in the European Community, which will be the strongest source of assistance, in terms of economic and political power, to eastern European countries. This is not the time for our partners to try to force Britain against our wishes into central banks, common monetary policy, a common currency and a social charter. Doing that would cause disruption at a time when the real force and power of encouragement for eastern Europe will come from its neighbours in the West.

We will be of greatest service to eastern Europe when we in the European Community are strong and are not divided among ourselves. That means that those who are pressing for this revolutionary change in our relationship with the European Community should, in the interests of the reform of the East, lay off for the time being.

If we keep our heads in these explosive times and do all we can to help the reformers and not be unhelpful to Mr. Gorbachev, we will help to ensure that these great reforms and momentous changes continue. If we do things that are disruptive, we will only precipitate what many of us fear is possible; we may find that the reforms are not deeply enough embedded to be irreversible.

The one great achievement—which has not been mentioned, or perhaps I was not concentrating when it was —about which we must marvel and be thankful is that most of these reforms have taken place without bloodshed. It would have been so easy for the people to rise up, and to have been shot down. It would have been easy for the events at Tiananmen square to have been repeated in Wenceslas square and the other great squares of the capitals of those eastern European countries. We must keep uppermost in our minds the fact that at all costs we must not provoke anybody to react to these reformist movements by bloodshed. Keeping our heads and acting in a measured way are more likely than anything else to achieve the peaceful continuance of those reforms.

12.11 pm

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton): Many of us have thought for a long time that, sooner or later, there would be a political revolution in the Soviet Union. Many Members and others argued, certainly during the Stalinist regime, that the extension of the Soviet system to various eastern European countries on the points of Russian bayonets after the second world war was the establishment of Socialism in those countries.

Many of us who are, I hope, genuine Socialists, have never believed that what has existed in the Soviet Union is a Socialist society. However, I am not certain what that society really is. Some of my friends say that it is state capitalism. Others say that it is a kind of deformed workers' state. Others argue that it is bureaucratic collectivism. I do not know what it is. All I know is what it is not. It is not a Socialist society. Hon. Members and others—including political pundits who are now writing at great length in various learned journals and newspapers —say that we are seeing the collapse of Socialism, but that is not the position. Socialism could only collapse in those countries if it had been brought into existence. There was a successful workers' revolution which had a form of democracy for a short period but, once Stalin was in clear control, it did not last five minutes. We know exactly what happened.

I have long been a Rosa Luxemburgist. By that I mean that I support the views that Rosa Luxemburg put forward. She was a Socialist who, incidentally, was murdered by Right-wing——

Mr. Pat Wall (Bradford, North): By so-called Socialists.

Mr. Heffer: She was murdered by the military who were suported by so-called Socialists in Germany at the end of the first world war.

I should like the House to know what Rosa Luxemburg said in an interesting little pamphlet about the Russian revolution which she wrote in 1921 and which was published in 1922. She said:

"Freedom of the press, the rights of association and assembly all have been outlawed for all opponents of the Soviet regime . . . on the other hand, it is a well-known and indisputable fact that without a free and untrammelled press, without the unlimited right of association and assembly, the role of the broad mass of the people is entirely unthinkable . . . Freedom only for the supporters of the Government, only for the members of one party—however numerous they may be—is no freedom at all. Freedom is always and exclusively freedom for the one who thinks differently. Not because of any fanatical concept of justice but because all that is instructive, wholesome and purifying in political freedom depends on that essential characteristic; and its effectiveness vanishes when 'freedom' becomes a special privilege."

That sums up for me the view of a genuine, democratic Socialist and that is what Socialism means. Socialism means the development of the human spirit, the right of free association and the right to organise independent trade unions. Socialism means that one has more than one political party, free elections, free debate and free discussion.

I can say without hesitation, as a democratic Socialist, that the Soviet Union and eastern Europe are not Socialist. I must make it clear that I believe in revolutionary change. I want a new kind of society in this world, but it must be a free society in which there is a free human spirit because without that, it cannot possibly be a Socialist society.

I have been waiting for this day for a long time. I remember having a fight just after the war with two building workers who supported the Communist party.

Dr. Godman: Spoken as a true joiner.

Mr. Heffer: Yes, I trained as a joiner. I supported the East Berlin workers who refused to accept the changes in their normal working and went on strike. The two young Communists said that it was disgraceful for there to be an unofficial strike. I was amazed by their arguments and the dispute almost came to physical violence.

Many great upsurges developed after the war. There was the wonderful Polish Spring when we thought that this was it. There was the Hungarian revolution followed by the Soviet intervention and suppression. Again, I was on the side of the Hungarian revolution. There was the Prague Spring and its suppression. If one was a genuine democratic Socialist, one could not be other than on the side of the Czech people. It was marvellous to see Dubček —who is actually my age—standing in Prague, not calling for bringing in capitalism, but for bringing in Socialism with a human face. He was suppressed earlier for expressing that view, and had he been in some other countries earlier, he would have been killed as so many were. Terrible purges took place in Stalin's Russia and after the war at Stalin's instigation. So many people were murdered because they stood up against Stalinism.

Unfortunately, Tito did not introduce the type of Socialism that I should have liked. It was not extended into the political field although greater democracy was created in the workshops. It was not the Socialism in which some of us passionately believe.

How wonderful it was to see Mr. Dubček speaking again arguing for the things that he had fought for before his regime was overthrown by Russian tanks. Happily, Mr. Gorbachev has made it clear that the Russians will not intervene to suppress the movement in eastern European countries, so there is a great chance that they will come through.

Let us be clear that in the Soviet Union we are seeing a difference in the bureaucratic regime. Mr. Gorbachev has made a tremendous difference and I agree that the role of the individual should never be underestimated. Some of my hon. Friends were wrong when they said that it does not matter who is Prime Minister. I think that it does matter and the sooner that we get rid of her the better. However, that is a political point which has nothing to do with the arguments. The role of the individual is important. Certainly Mr. Gorbachev's role is important, but he reflects the view of one part of the bureaucratic structure. We must understand that another part of the structure is opposed to changes of any kind.

In the end there may be violence in the Soviet Union. There could be an attempt to overthrow what Mr. Gorbachev is doing. If he were removed some people might resort to arms to fight for him. The military itself might break into disarray. We must give every assistance that we can, and as a Socialist I shall do so. However, the aim will not be to bring in a capitalist system but to fight for democratic socialism as I have always done.

12.21 pm

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): I welcome the debate. It is clear that Europe is heading for a period of political turmoil, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Sir P. Blaker) outlined. It is also clear that we in this House must have a major rethink. That would not be best done along the party political lines advocated by the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson).

Since 1945 our defence and foreign policies have been formed on the basis of certainty of a divided Europe with each half comfortably embodied within the aegis of a super-power, with our half framed by NATO and the EEC. Within the past few weeks all those certainties have crumbled along with the Berlin wall. The events in Berlin heralded a new and uncertain future. A principal fear for the future is the fear of the pressure for reunification which has been reawakened in Germany. Although after 45 years old habits of self-effacement still exist, unification of the two German republics is probably inevitable in the medium term. If the will is there, the German people will overcome the problems of currency, law and so on. Although we may fear the result—a great power of some 80 million people in central Europe—we cannot deny their right to self-determination. Therefore, we must exert ourselves to keep Germany wthin the ambit of western Europe and welcome Chancellor Kohl's repeated commitment to NATO and the West.

Of far greater importance, we must lift up our eyes to eastern Europe, the Europe that stretches to the Urals. Not only the satellite nations of eastern Europe are showing signs of casting off the yoke of Socialist domination; far more deeply subjugated nations are striving for national autonomy: in the Baltic states, the Ukraine, Georgia, Armenia and, above all, in the Soveit Muslim lands with all the instability that they can bring with Islamic fundamentalism being so rife.

We are witnessing the final disintegration of the last of the great European multinational empires. The Soviet Union is the inheritor of the Romanov empire and it has held it by force. Whereas the other empires in 1918 broke up into nation states, the Russian empire has been maintained and extended under the Communists. It has taken more than 70 years for the intellectual and economic bankruptcy of Socialism to bring that empire to breaking point.

[Mr. Jacques Arnold]

President Gorbachev has been struggling in a race against time to save his regime through perestroika. Its partner, glasnost, has allowed the Soviet peoples to see the extent of the failure of Socialism, which may yet bring down the whole rotten edifice. The key question is whether the Red Army will allow that to happen. Will it allow the empire to disintegrate, or will it break out in a series of Tiananmen squares? Indeed, could it do so if it so wished, with an army that is half muslim?

Even if all these states were to go democratic, would it last? Economic failure would bring with it disillusionment and successor military regimes, such as Franco's Spain, Galtieri's Argentina or the dictatorships in eastern Europe before the second world war. All that gives us the stark warning that we must maintain our defences and state of preparedness.

If the break-up of the Soviet empire occurs, we shall have a destabilised Europe. We would have the scenario of a unified Germany and a minimised military threat from the Soviet Union. Our forces in Germany would cease to be perceived as protectors and would be identified as occupiers; gone would be the United States forces in Europe; gone the pretext for stationing British and French troops in Germany and no doubt with it our troops. In Europe, we would see a powerful Germany, beyond which would be a multiplicity of nation states squabbling as a result of the legacy of Yalta and Potsdam.

The key question for Europe will be its boundaries. Does the Germany of today accept its boundaries? What is the German opinion today about its former lands—East Prussia in the Soviet Union, Silesia and Pomerania in Poland, and the Sudetenland in Czechoslovakia?

Perhaps the most dramatic is the question of Silesia. Poland has effectively desecrated it, with its heavy industry creating massive pollution. Whereas we thought that the Germans had been pushed out of the province in 1945, Chancellor Kohl's recent visit showed us that he whom we thought to be Jan Krapowsky of Wroclaw has turned out to be Johann Krapmann of Breslau. There are reputed to be 250,000 people in Silesia today who consider themselves to be Germans.

The German silence on this key issue of boundaries is most ominous. Their repetition of the formula that the Federal Republic has no writ to accept borders is no comfort to us and no encouragement for the future of Europe.

The Germans are not alone. Some Solidarity deputies from Poland have recently told us that the Ukraine and Lithuania have designs on some of its border areas, and it has not forgotten its ancient city of Lwow, now in the Soviet Union. Romania has not forgotten Moldavia, nor the Hungarians their compatriots in Romanian Transylvania. Yugoslavia itself shows the potential for nationalist explosions.

Within this potential for instability our own European Community stands as a beacon. Its economic success is an attraction to the peoples of the East. We must use that attraction and any economic aid as a bargaining counter to insist on stability, democracy and the acceptance of the boundaries of Europe. We could even go so far as to say that any boundary changes must depend on local plebiscites conducted by the European Community with the support of the Governments concerned.

One of the most serious legacies of Socialism in eastern Europe has been the deficiencies in managerial cadres. The inefficient state monopolies have been run by party functionaries who have managed by political direction, not by enterprise management. We must contribute to the new democracies with management training as well as capital—and, this winter, with emergency food aid.

East Europeans have asked how they can privatise economies in which about 90 per cent. of production is nationalised, in which there is no private capital and, above all, in which there are no buyers for the inefficient, backward and ill-equipped industries. We have much to contribute to the regeneration of these industries and their markets, from the bottom up. The price that we must exact in return is to bind these countries into an expanded European Community.

We argue in this place over some Euro-fanatics' determination to create a centralist, bureaucratic Europe. These empire builders of the new Euro-elite will find themselves irrelevant as the challenge of the real Europe descends on us. The European Community should now give its energies to creating a new tier of associated states which will benefit from the advantages of free trade, travel and property rights, in exchange for forgoing all the turmoil of nationalist agitation. We must hold out the prospect of full membership of a European community of nation states after this transitional stage.

One of the greatest achievements of the European Community has been to make the possibility of war between its members unthinkable. We must extend that achievement to the new, emerging nation states of Europe.

We stand on the brink of uncertainty in Europe, when all the accepted foundations of our defence and foreign policies are about to be swept away. Britain and Europe have the challenge of creating a continent-wide community of European states living in peace and with a free market. The price of failure for us would be a continent of squabbling nations indulging in a moving pattern of alliances, with a Germany hegemony and ourselves relegated to the periphery. We in this House and this country must give a lead.

12.31 pm

Mr. Pat Wall (Bradford, North): I am the third of four Labour Members with Liverpool accents to speak in this debate. If my accent has been modified by 25 years away from the city, it has been exaggerated by having a head cold. Merseyside has a long tradition of Left-wing radical Socialism, untainted by Stalinism.

Nineteen eighty-nine has been a remarkable year. We have witnessed the events in China and the horrors of Tiananmen square, perhaps marking the beginning of the end of Stalinism in China. There have been marvellous events in South Africa, where the people continue on the move. The Israeli Government have been unable for yet another year to put down the intifada in the West Bank and the Gaza strip. Most important of all has been the break-up of the cold war and the great movements towards a political revolution in Russia and eastern Europe.

For all who are cynical about politics, these events mark a reaffirmation of the enormous capacity of human beings to try again and again to better their conditions, extend their freedoms and build a better society. I offer as an example the people of Hungary. After the break-up of the Austro-Hungarian empire at the end of the first world war, Bela Kun was elected to govern with the first elected Marxist Government in the world. Within a few months that Government were bloodily overthrown by armies of intervention. The Hungarian people then lived without democracy under the regime of Admiral Horthy, and then under the dicatatorship of the Nazis. After the second world war, they lived under the horrors of Stalin and the Stalinist regime in Hungary. In 1956 in a most marvellous movement the people rose up in the space of a few short weeks. They destroyed the state machine which had oppressed them. They launched two general strikes and two insurrections in four or five weeks. Children as young as 13, 14 and 15 fought Russian tanks with Molotov cocktails and people fought them with hunting guns which they had stolen from shops. That shows the enormous capacity of people who had lived for generations under a dictatorial regime to rise up and try to change their situation.

This is not a time for much personal indulgence because the events in eastern Europe are very important. Like my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) I see the events as a vindication of the 40 years that I have spent in this movement opposing Stalinism. I marched against Chile and South Africa. During my national service I marched in Germany against the events in Hungary in 1956. I marched in London in 1968 when Russian tanks were sent into Prague. I have also fought Stalinism inside my own movement. I fought those who supported it, condoned or excused it. That is why I, like my hon. Friend the Member for Walton, will never support any restrictions on thought, or any witch hunting or expulsions inside my movement. Those things also involve the suppression of free speech and are another aspect—albeit much less serious—of Stalinism.

The Minister wanted to know about the regime in Russia. Stalinist states are non-capitalist states with one-party, authoritarian dictatorial rule. It arose in Russia from what I consider to be the most marvellous experience of mankind, namely the Russian revolution of 1917 when working people wrested power into their own hands for the first time.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Which 1917 revolution?

Mr. Wall: The October revolution.

Russia had been devastated by war and faced 20 armies of intervention. Three quarters of the railways and industries were closed in Russia and 1 million homeless children were wandering the countryside. There was mass starvation and not infrequently there was even cannibalism. More than 80 per cent. of the Russian population then could not read or write. Given Russia's isolation at the time, it is not surprising that an authoritarian regime arose. There had to be policemen with that kind of scarcity. The policemen had to have better rations and wages and the seeds of bureaucracy were sown there.

From that beginning, state planning took Russia from one of the most backward nations in the world to the second most powerful. Even in 1950 Britain produced more steel than Russia. Today Britain's steel production, down to 19 million tonnes, is between one third and one quarter of Russia's steel production.

The Minister alluded to the problem that faced Russia. The more the economy developed and became sophisticated and advanced, the more the bureaucracy became nonsense. It leads to inefficiency, corruption, nepotism and the development of a privileged group enjoying enormous privileges over the rest of society. That is precisely what has happened in Russia and eastern Europe.

Statements in America have appeared to say that the events in eastern Europe are a mark of the final victory of capitalism this century. That is an exaggeration. In the post-war period we have seen the biggest development in capitalist industry ever. Between 1945 and 1975 eight times as many commodities were made than in the whole previous history of mankind. Yet what has that meant? As my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) said, two thirds of the world to go bed every night hungry, rise hungry next morning and then go back to bed again hungry. In Britain, which is one of the richest nations of the world, two fifths of the population do not live in dignity and have not benefited from the post-war boom. Thousands of homeless people in America live in tent cities. There is an unequal distribution of wealth. Total debt in the Third world is now $3,000 billion, and $60 billion is transferred from the poorest countries to the richest countries every year. What attraction has that for workers in Russia or eastern Europe?

In its statement this week, the Fiat motor company made it absolutely clear that it regards the Russion market as a source of cheap labour—another South Korea on the doorstep of its main market in western Europe. There is no attraction for workers from eastern Europe who will find that a third or more of their income will have to go on housing as against 10 per cent. at home.

In the summer of 1988 I had the privilege to bring to the House the granddaughter of Leon Trotsky. It was marvellous that Dubček spoke in Prague. Imre Nagy could not speak because he was murdered. At least his grave has been restored to some dignity. We have seen the vindication of the great leaders of the Russian revolution —Bukharin, Rhykov, Kamenev, Zinoviev and others who were murdered in Vyshinsky's and Stalin's trials and above all, the great socialist genius, Leon Trotsky, who was murdered in Mexico in 1940. I went around the House with Leon Trotsky's granddaughter. I look forward soon to going back to a democratic Socialist Russia to visit with her the Kremlin, and, more fittingly, the Solmey institute where her grandfather, along with Lenin, led the Russian revolution.

12.41 pm

Mr. John Wilkinson (Ruislip-Northwood): Had I been lucky enough to catch your eye at this time last week, Madam Deputy Speaker, when we debated foreign affairs, I would have observed how fortunate a coincidence of time and chance it was that my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary was brought to his high office, with his exceptional talents and particularly suitable background at this hour of great opportunity for peace in Europe. Perhaps it would have been too obvious a compliment. Having heard my hon. Friend the Minister of State today, I should perhaps have observed what a remarkably lucid and rational Minister of State my right hon. Friend has, whose particular sphere of responsibility is of such concern to us all. His speech illumined proceedings.

[Mr. John Wilkinson]

The proceedings were further illumined by outstanding contributions by the Father of the House, my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine) who spoke with such passion, force, effectiveness and experience in favour of food aid for Poland. My right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Sir P. Blaker) has a deep understanding of international affairs and defence. The right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) spoke well, as did the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston) who has consistently played an active part in pursuing the cause of European integration and a worthwhile role for the United Kingdom in that process.

In contradistinction we heard unreconstructed contributions of a Liverpudlian nature. One emanated from the hon. Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Wall). I marvelled at his contribution. His speech was rather like the museums which one used to visit in the bad old days in East Berlin in which history was totally rewritten in a fashion so dramatically different from the truth as to be almost unrecognisable. To have heard him, one would have thought that the hon. Member for Bradford, North was not only the active proponent of all things bright and beautiful in the Socialist house but the champion of the liberties of the party members against putsches and coups d'etat. I knew his friend and predecessor, Ben Ford, with whom I used to be a Member for Bradford. I recall how he was cast aside by the Stalinists, which was how they were regarded in the city, whose standard bearer was the hon. Member for Bradford, North. I shall spoil his speech no more but get on with my own.

I agree with the wise observations by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), about the three strands that should be at the heart of what I call our grand strategy on events in central and eastern Europe. I use the phrase "grand strategy" advisedly because we need a comprehensive policy which encompasses the security or military dimension, economic policy, and politics together with the moral aspect of our relations with central Europe and the East.

I shall deal first with the paramount issue, which is security and defence. Above all, we require a secure Europe. For as far ahead as we can see, there will undoubtedly be a continued requirement for the mutual security arrangement which has served us for the past 40 years, the North Atlantic treaty. We need that treaty because in this period of reform the Soviet Union has continued to modernise its military capabilities. The diminution in the numerical strength of the Soviet armed forces and their concomitant modernisation could make them a potentially more formidable military machine.

The more important argument is that we need the NATO Alliance as a framework within which to engage with the Warsaw pact in the vital process of arms control and the pursuit of mutual security at lower force levels. We must recognise that this process of arms control will lead to dramatic changes which will require us as European members of NATO to pay a more active part in our own defence. To do that I urge my hon. Friend the Minister of State to continue with what he is already doing and which he has admitted to me in a written answer—re-examining the terms and provisions of the Brussels treaty.

If we pursue arms control to its logical conclusion, Soviet forces in central Europe and American forces in western Europe will be withdrawn, one hopes to a level of 275,000 on each side. However, one can envisage even now a second stage in which Soviet and American forces will be further reduced. Of course British, French and Canadian force levels in the Federal Republic of Germany will be called into question in the overall equation. I urge the Foreign Office even now to see how membership of the Western European Union can be further expanded and its effectiveness reinforced as a focus for western European security interests within the NATO Alliance. It will be a useful adjunct to the process of arms control but the main forum for arms control will be NATO.

Secondly, I believe that further integration of the European Community, economically and politically, is necessary to anchor our friends in the Federal Republic of Germany firmly in the West while extending the hand of friendship and co-operation to the East. The Minister was right to give his unequivocal and whole-hearted support to the admirable speech made by Chancellor Kohl in the Bundestag two days ago.

Thirdly, I hope that the Minister will do everything he can to support the work of the Council of Europe in involving the newly emerging democracies of eastern Europe in the process of creating what the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney described as the concert of Europe. I serve on the Council of Europe with my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) and I hope that he will catch your eye, Madam Deputy Speaker, later.

Deputies from Hungary, Poland, Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union are already special guest members of the parliamentary assembly. This process is only partial and we hope that democratisation in Czechoslovakia, the GDR and elsewhere in the satellite states will continue. I also hope that democratisation will continue in the Soviet Union. My right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South reminded us that the Soviet Union is still a one-party state and one must question whether it is right that it should have single representation in the parliamentary assembly of the Council of Europe. The Baltic states deserve individual representation as do the Ukraine and Byelorussia, and those last two have that at the United Nations.

I support the grand strategy described by the Minister and I wish it every success at this important time.

12.51 pm

Dr. Dafydd Elis Thomas (Meirionnydd Nant Conwy): I agree with the hon. Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) about the need for the Baltic states to be represented directly at the Council of Europe as a result of future agreements and relationships.

Today some Conservative Members have suffered from the "What do we do without the barbarians" syndrome. The Minister, however, did not display such an attitude. We should not only stand steadfast in the face of what is happening in central and eastern Europe, but we should look forward. Conservative Members cannot say that they are in favour of pluralism, democracy, ecology and peace movements in eastern Europe, but then deny to those of us who have been party to a broad-based western European peace movement for many years our right to contribute to the process of East-West detente.

When we talk about central and eastern Europe there is a danger that we label those regions as though they were one monolithic structure. We are talking about diverse traditions, cultures and linguistic groups. We are also talking about diverse and difficult state boundaries that have been artificially created. All the nation-state boundaries are, in one sense or another, artificial. They divide people who have close ethnic connections. It is difficult to raise the issue of democratic changes without raising what has been described by some Conservative Members as the spectre of Balkanisation.

Balkanisation occurs when a declining imperial power breaks up into sovereign nation states. Today in western, central and eastern Europe the old nation-state model that maintained particular sovereignty over its territory is no longer the effective model of political power. We are now talking about levels of political power and it is possible to envisage cross-border minority rights being agreed by cross-border and multinational agreements without raising the spectre of redrawing state boundaries. When considering the situation in central and eastern Europe it is important to understand what the long-term structures might turn out to be.

Yesterday, President Gorbachev spoke of a vision of Europe

"as a commonwealth of sovereign democratic states with a high level of equitable interdependence and easily accessible borders, open to the exchange of products, technologies and ideas, and wide-ranging contacts among people."

In the Communist regimes in central and eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, there has been a crisis at once economic, social, political, ethnic, national ideological, and moral, and, in an important sense, cultural and religious. It is important to mention an issue which has not been emphasised enough in this debate: the progressive role of the various Christian Churches and other religious groups in the political changes which have taken place.

The nature of the religious culture of so many of these central and eastern European states—which the Minister mentioned in his reference to Christendom—means that those Churches have been able to provide not only a focal point of opposition, but a means of cultural and political stability in the transference to new forms of democracy.

The crisis has been one of a state system in which the state ownership and control of an economy has become disfunctional. It is also a cultural crisis because the role of the state and the party as the controlling apparatus of society, even within civil society, has meant that political and social life in those countries has been stultified. In central and eastern Europe, we are dealing with a post-revolutionary society which suffered from an externally imposed revolution. Even within the Soviet Union we can see how the imposed central structure prevented the development of national aspirations, not only in the Baltic states, but in other Soviet Union republics.

Apart from Czechoslovakia, central and eastern Europe has little experience of effective democratic forms over a long period. We must recognise the developments of those central and eastern European regions—as many Opposition Members have argued—as forms of bureaucratic, oligarchic, collective regimes. Certain Conservative Members are wrong to see what is happening as a crisis of democratic socialism. It is a crisis of a form of collectivism.

Opposition Members do a disservice to their arguments when they pretend that some of the present Government's illiberal activities can be compared with some of the appalling tragedies of oppression in eastern Europe. Similarly, it is wrong for Conservative Members to argue that the collapse of these regimes heralds the end of socialism in the West. I call for a little bit of glasnost and perestroika between the major parties in the House as we try to understand events in central and eastern Europe.

I was glad that the Minister mentioned Bulgaria and the tragic incident that happened some years ago in London. I hope that we can rebuild our understanding with that small country with its population of 9 million. When the Secretary-General of the Bulgarian Communist party spoke to the Bulgarian Parliament on 17 November, he stressed the role of the national assembly and MPs in the legislative process. I hope that it will be possible for us to have observers to this Parliament not just from some of the other central and east European countries and the Soviet Union but from Bulgaria. When describing some of the changes taking place in Bulgaria, which, in contrast to some of the other central and east European countries are still intra-party changes within the Communist party, the Secretary-General said:

"Our society is on the threshold of a qualitatively new stage of development. The country's all-round appearance is changing every day and even every hour. The structures of the command and bureaucratic system are beginning to shake, the administrative idols of yesterday are going to pieces. The fresh air of changes has entered the political atmosphere."

It is wonderful to be able to quote such a statement from the present political leader of Bulgaria.

We look with confidence to the changes taking place throughout central and eastern Europe. In particular, we look to the importance of those changes for the cultural and linguistic minorities in the Soviet Union and the cross-border minorities. I was concerned, although not surprised, to hear the leader of the Romanian regime make a statement which seemed to signify some attempt to repossess Moldavia. Because Moldavian people speak a language which is very close to Romanian, that is no argument for the Romanian leader to assert that a new state form should be imposed to annex Moldavia. The attempts of the Soviet Union to provide a degree of linguistic autonomy in Moldavia could result in other linguistic minorities within the Soviet Union achieving more effective linguistic and economic autonomy which appears to have been established between the Baltic states and Moscow.

Central and eastern Europe are moving towards a pluralistic democracy, but many recent developments have taken place because of the recognition, even by Mr. Gorbachev, that the national question is at the root of the re-establishment of democracy.

It is important to emphasise that there are different types of nationalism. There is the negative nationalism of nation states which oppress other nationalities and there are progressive forms of nationality such as the assertion of cultural identity which leads to a feeling of belonging to a particular group without that, of necessity, becoming a way of attacking the validity, independence or autonomy of another cultural group. In central and eastern Europe and on the borders of the Soviet Union cultural autonomy and cultural rights are being restated, but that should not necessarily lead to political breakdown of order or the repression of one minority by another.

[Dr. Dafydd Elis Thomas]

1.1 pm

Mr. Tim Boswell (Daventry): The scale of events in the past few months is driving all hon. Members towards a measure of consensus. Rather than go back over the wide-ranging discussion on a number of issues such as defence, perhaps it would be more helpful for me to concentrate on four specific points.

First, I endorse the message put so eloquently by the Father of the House, my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine) and others about food aid to Poland this winter. This week I have also been in touch with Lady Ryder. It is quite clear from those discussions and from today's debate that the Government need to recognise that it is not much good being a free Pole this winter if one is also a dead Pole. Therefore it is essential that we intervene quickly.

I am surprised that my second point has not been touched on this morning. It relates largely but not entirely to Poland and concerns environmental pollution. Those of us who have travelled in eastern Europe are immediately aware that that is a great problem. Pollution is confined by no national boundaries. In their own interests, instead of concentrating on the economic use of their resources, and spending so much extra on reducing their smoke stack emissions by 2 per cent. or 5 per cent.—desirable as that may be—western countries should consider ways in which they can give practical help with the awful problems in some eastern European countries with all their impact on human health and the general happiness of the people.

Thirdly, I wish to discuss nationalism which has been discussed by my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) and the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas). I have a Welsh wife and inevitably I am interested in the relationships between the particular and the general in our political systems.

What has happened in eastern Europe is that the release of the Soviet hegemony has allowed old pressures and old territorial disputes to reassert themselves. While we look back to the flashpoints of 1939, the corridor, Sudetenland or whatever, many issues still further back are likely to reassert themselves such as the treaty of Trianon, the resentments thereof, or Teschen, Suwalki or the ethnic balance in the Carpatho-Ukraine. These are matters to which the Foreign Office research department no doubt addresses itself. They have not been aired in the House for many generations, but they will be raised again.

What I would say to those emerging from the period of domination in eastern Europe is that they have a duty and opportunity to work together to find a better way to resolve disputes. One of the great contributions of the European Community and the West is that we have found a way of making a better contribution to resolving the peaceful disposition of nations and their national and minority interests. Who now talks about the problems of Schleswig or Alsace? We found that we can accommodate those problems within a system of prosperity, where, although national boundaries are not irrelevant, they are no longer the dominant issue of political concourse.

My final point, with which I wish to deal at greater length, is how we respond to eastern Europe. Inevitably, we are still driven by the old statist, even Marxist, analysis of relations between states. We say, "What should Britain be doing about it" or "What should the Government be doing about it?", yet it is much more a matter of how individuals relate to the new position. We want to join people together, not just Governments or political systems. The analogy that I should like to offer the House is microsurgery, the complicated joining of blood vessels, arteries and muscles that have been severed by unnatural conditions over 45 years. The armoury of a civil society can be re-established in our common house in Europe.

The Government can give a lead through matters such as the know-how fund and, more immediately, through food aid. I should particularly like to mention the work being done by the Great Britain-East Europe Centre. Next week, some hon. Members are training—that is a pompous word—Hungarians for their new political responsibilities. I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Powell) wished to be associated with these remarks, but I hope that the Government will recognise in their funding that this is an explosion of opportunities that must be taken.

Going outside the immediate sphere of Government and Government aid, the prime responsibility will be on business, which clearly is expected by the East. Closer economic ties are essential to increase prosperity and to bind its peoples together. The emphasis is on the importance of joint ventures, investment banking, sub-contracting arrangements and other ways of linking ourselves. I was particularly grateful for the remarks of the president of the Confederation of British Industry about economic links, and I should like the boards of the top 100 companies to consider as an agenda item whether, and if not why not, they should spend 1 per cent. of their capital investment on East bloc countries. Smaller companies should at least think about such a proposal.

It is not only a matter of business and economic relations, because all aspects of civil society—our clubs, academics, artists, the media, trade unionists, students and ordinary families going on holiday—should consider what they can do. Today, I am wearing the tie of the Hungarian overseas economic chamber of trade—a new bit of civil society that is being re-established, and it is a privilege in which we can all share.

I shall close on a specific point for my hon. Friend the Minister and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to consider. We know that to achieve success there must be travel from East to West as well as from West to East. It is still easier to travel from West to East, but travel is expensive for people in the East bloc, and we are compounding that by the British visa policy. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will consider some aspects of that policy over the next few months.

A visa charge of £20 is more than a week's wages for a working person, and it is a fortune for a student in one of those countries. I am not sure that it is cost effective, because visitors from the East bloc may spend money here, and, if they pay for their visa, we may pile up quantities of non-convertible currencies. A second problem is the availability of visas. It is not satisfactory for people to have to go for example from Riga to Moscow to get them.

Thirdly, the coverage of visas is not sufficiently flexible. We need to look at ways in which we can encourage working visits. There are not as many worries about security now, because there are ways for visa policy to achieve that. The Home Office is clearly worried about others overstaying. I understand that fear, but we have to find ways in which people can come from the East on a working holiday, or a temporary assignment, earn a few pounds or some other foreign currency and take the money back to start a business—and good luck to them.

Great events are taking place and we must respond to them with breadth of spirit. There should be emotions of fear and hope together in all politics. I am anxious that our fears may be allowed to crowd out our hopes and theirs.

1.11 pm

Mr. Terry Fields (Liverpool, Broadgreen): I apologise for the fact that I shall not be able to stay for the winding-up speeches as I have to get back to Liverpool for a meeting.

The Minister will not be disappointed by a non-partisan speech from me today. I do not have much in common with the Government or with some Conservative Members on many topics——

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: And not much in common with most of the hon. Gentleman's right hon. and hon. Friends.

Mr. Fields: Hon. Members would be surprised to learn what I have in common with my hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson).

Everyone is overwhelmed by the breathtaking sweep of events in eastern Europe and its scope—from the Balkans to the Baltic. The scale of those vast working-class movements must be underlined. The workers, trade unionists, students, intellectuals and members of the police and the armed forces in those countries are joining together in the struggle for democracy and freedom.

It is amazing to see heads of state falling like ninepins in eastern Europe, and to see general secretaries of parties go, like so many of yesterday's clothes.

I say with some pride that only the Marxists within the Labour movement foretold the recent events in eastern Europe with any confidence. They did not have a crystal ball but they had faith in the working class, nationally and internationally, and in the inevitability of workers' movements in those Stalinist countries.

My hon. Friends the Members for Bradford, North (Mr. Wall) and for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) adequately exposed the political ignorance of Conservative Members, who said that what they had seen in eastern Europe and Russia was either Socialism or Communism. That shows an ignorance of what Marx spoke about, and a lack of knowledge about politics.

The breathtaking speed at which events have taken place has even been amazing to Marxists. However, I am amused when people such as the Minister and Conservative Members applaud the coming to power in eastern Europe of people such as Egon Krenz. If we cast our minds back, we will recall that he made a statement about the events in Tiananmen square, which applauded that type of activity by the Chinese bureaucracy.

Next week, there will be the following early-day motion on the Order Paper:

"That this House welcomes the magnificent movements in Eastern Europe, for full democratic control over what happens in society and recognises that this outburst of discontent and opposition in East Germany and Czechoslovakia, in particular, reflects deep anger against the corruption and mismanagement of the Stalinist bureaucracy; sees the movement leading in the direction of genuine Socialism, not a return to capitalism; congratulates the workers of the Soviet Union, particularly the striking miners of Vorkuta, in the Arctic Circle, who are leading the struggle for better pay and conditions and for an end to one-party dictatorship; notes that their fight has been in the face of vicious anti-strike laws of a type that even Her Majesty's Government drew back from; believes that these mighty working class struggles deserve the full support of the British and international labour and trade union movement and considers that the only way forward for the peoples of the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe is on the basis of a return to the principles of genuine workers' democracy and socialism which formed the basis and inspiration for the October revolution."

[Laughter.] Again, ignorance is displayed on the Conservative Benches with regard to history and current events. Despite the gleeful rubbing of hands at the prospect of fresh markets by the party of big business, the demands of workers in struggles in Russia and eastern Germany take various forms.

The four demands that Lenin put forward were, first, the election and right of recall of officials. That has been undertaken. Secondly, wages should be no higher than the wage of a worker. Thirdly, there should be immediate transition to the position where for a time all become bureaucrats, and therefore no one becomes a bureaucrat. Fourthly, there is to be no standing army but the armed people.

There are four additional demands: first, free trade unions independent of the state; secondly, freedom of speech, freedom of the press and freedom of assembly; thirdly, the right to strike; fourthly the right to free elections with the participation of all political parties except the Fascists.

I have been in contact with workers in Russia, including the striking Vorkuta miners, and workers in East Germany. I have had messages from a town's workers' committee which say:

"We . . . were glad to receive your letter and share the principles which Lenin proposed for the creation of a democratic workers' state—there is no other way—and we also concur with your opinion about the need for personal contact in the name of strengthening the spirit of friendship and cooperation. We are devoting all our strength and knowledge for the building in our native land of a democratic state. We will defend the interests of the workers by all legal means open to us including strikes. With warm greetings from the members of the town's workers' committee."

This is not a return to capitalism. It is the conditions of the October revolution towards which workers in Russia and eastern Europe are striving.

Another letter signed by a city workers' council set out clearly what they are striving towards. They are striving towards democracy and freedom. They are striving towards Socialism with a human face. Those slogans are equally vivid for workers in East Germany. Workers' councils in East Germany are demanding links not with Rotary clubs and the Confederation of British Industry, but with workers. They want to establish a genuine workers' state in eastern Europe.

Reunification of Germany has been mentioned. According to people with whom I am in contact, workers in eastern Germany went to see Chancellor Kohl when the Berlin wall was opened. They saw that he was jeered and booed by West German workers. Despite good economic conditions in West Germany there is poverty and unemployment there. People tend to gloss over that. The East German people have emblazoned in their memory the history of the war and the Fascism which was brought about by the crisis of capitalism after the first world war. Emblazoned in their memories too is the crushing of the working class throughout Germany by the Fascist regime.

[Mr. Fields]

We applaud the free movement of people. We have plenty of facts, figures and statistics. My hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) referred to the 18,000 East Germans who are settling in Bremen. Although 3 million to 4 million people are travelling backwards and forwards between East and West Germany, very few of them are staying in West Germany.

I am the first to admit that, for many East Germans, the GDR is a prison of sorts. The wall is a symbol of that prison, despite the tremendous gains that have been made in health, welfare, education and other areas of life. The movements to West Germany are merely an expression of throwing off the shackles now the wall has been opened. East Germans are not in any way beguiled by capitalism in West Germany. It is bit like a child finding the garden gate open and wanting to go through, but quickly returning when it knows which side its bread is buttered on. They are not taken in by the West Berlin propaganda.

Mr. Jim Lester (Broxtowe): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Fields: I will not give way, because other Opposition Members want to speak.

Most East Germans say, "Do not go. Stay and fight to reform our country." Reunification is not on their agenda, certainly not on a capitalist basis, although possibly on a Socialist basis as part of the Socialist transformation of the world.

Events in Poland underline the movements in eastern Europe. Jaruzelski has said that the Solidarity of today is very different from the Solidarity of 1981, when its aim was to defend the living standards of workers and have worker control of management. Unfortunately, that 1981 revolution was not completed but was overthrown by suppression. It did not come to terms with what was necessary to achieve proper democracy and, consequently, there was a setback.

With today's Solidarity, we have pontification from the intellectuals and the professional people about going a little further. We need look no further than comrade Walesa who, on a recent visit to the United States, said to American business men:

"We seek buyers for 80 per cent. of the Polish economy."

Is that in the best interests of the working class of Poland? Walesa said that the businesses could not find buyers in Poland because Poland was too poor. He told the business men:

"You can make millions and billions of dollars".

Even the Financial Times was moved to contrast the atmosphere of militancy in the American Federation of Labour/Congress of Industrial Organisations—which is not noted for beng militant but was reflecting the mood of American workers—and Walesa's appeal to the United States for capital.

Another feature of Poland is seen in the current position of a former dissident who is now Minister of Labour. He is now working to suppress the development of the workers' struggle. He said:

"For a long time people couldn't strike, so someone has to strike for them. That's what I did. I used to co-operate with strikes. Now I have to extinguish them."

That speaks volumes for what Solidarity and some of its leaders have become.

A contradiction has arisen because of the crisis and the direction that Solidarity has taken. Walesa has said:

"The system has cornered us in a cul-de-sac and I don't know whether we will save ourselves from civil war."

Taking power and obtaining freedom and a form of democracy do not obviate the crisis within the system. Walesa said:

"If the government forget about society—there will be a clash and I will be on society's side."

At the same time, he is trying to sell off Polish industry to the Americans. He said:

"I'm helping the government. I wish it well. But I must not forget where I hail from."

That contradiction shows the dichotomy in eastern Europe. The bottom line is what the younger generation of workers in the eastern bloc are talking about. A young leader of Solidarity has criticised Walesa's support for the Government leader, saying:

"We are a trade union. Our leadership should be Unionist. We are too close to the government, too entangled. Our interests are entirely different. Government is an employer in this country."

We applaud the striving towards democracy, but what does democracy mean? What does it mean in the Third world? We have heard that two thirds of the world's population suffers from starvation and poverty, resulting in death. What is democracy in South Africa for millions of workers? What is it in Chile, where tens of thousands of workers have been trampled under foot in the name of democracy? What is it in south and central America where united imperialism is interfering with it? What is democracy under capitalism in Africa? What is democracy worth in Britain for millions of workers and the unemployed, the sick, the people who cannot get into hospitals, the 10,000 pensioners who will die this year and the young who have no future except YTS?

The people in eastern Europe are not soft. They can read and understand politics. They understand eonomics, unlike Conservative Members. Those people see clearly the crisis within capitalism in Britain and internationally. They looked at the blip—such as it was—last October and they understand what is going on. They see the warning signs, and they may listen to the Chancellor of the Exchequer at the Dispatch Box warning of inflation rising next year and of a recession in the British economy. They understand what is happening in America and throughout the western economy. Do you think, Madam Deputy Speaker, that they will grasp that nettle when they realise that there is an international crisis of capitalism? To what conclusions will they come?

The want to link up the workers' struggles internationally. While Mr. Walesa is selling off half of Poland in America, it is little wonder that the AFL/CIO is moving to a more radical phase. In May I was in New York at the founding conference at which trade unionists were forming a party of labour to challenge the parties of capital in the United States. They were proceeding not on the basis of privatisation and a free market, but with a programme of Socialism which will be an attraction to workers in eastern Europe.

The crisis in eastern Europe has nothing to do with Socialism or Communism; it is a crisis of the bureaucracy which has stifled the tremendous gains made in 1917. all went well under the plan until about 10 years ago, but now there is a sclerosis in Russian society. The Russians have spent the reserves that they gained previously and the economy is grinding to a halt. Those are the crimes of the bureaucracy.

The bureaucracy is not merely a handful of people at the top. The bureaucracy is not merely Mr. Gorbachev and one or two more in the Politburo. It is a vast, monolithic body made up of 20 million bureaucrats. It is a party nomenclature which has decisive control of every aspect of life, including the economy, families, children and lifestyles. It is a self-perpetuating elite which is depriving the working class of control. Mr. Gorbachev had to move and then reform the bureaucracy because of the pressure from below, but changing a few chairs around and changing the people on those chairs will not change what is happening. Since glasnost, there have been bigger shortages and democratic steps do not put food in people's bellies or build houses for those in dire need.

The slogans of the workers and the demonstrations of eastern Europe are clear. They are saying not that they want capitalism, but that they want to build Socialism, that there should be medicine for all and not only for the few, and that they should get the millions back from the Mafia and return them to the people. They call for power to the people and power to the Soviets. They remind us that the system of reserved seats for the party should be abolished.

The miners are currently struggling in Vorkuta and elsewhere. One of them, talking about perestroika, said

"The Government wants to operate Perestroika from above; we're doing it from below. Perestroika is going too slowly and things are getting worse."

Indeed, they are. Previously there was fear of repression, but that is dissolving. The miner went on to say that it is not so much a matter of being afraid, but that they have been "taught for so long to wait and be patient. They could see we were patient. We believed in the 'brighter future' under Stalin, under Khruschev, under Brezhnev. That's what we were looking forward to. Now people's psychology is that they are going to create Soviet power themselves."

That is a clear sign that those people do not want to return to capitalism or feudalism.

The conditions in Russia and eastern Europe have been described in other speeches today. The irony is that the Prime Minister especially applauds the workers' struggles in eastern Europe and, incidentally, the Vorkuta miners' strike, which is illegal. If workers struck illegally in this country, the courts would be used against them. Despite the fines of £1,000 a head for the Vorkuta miners, the strikes are going ahead and, despite intimidation, workers are in struggle.

It is not surprising that such events should occur in Vorkuta. In 1938, the last remnants of the Left opposition who fought to defend workers' democracy were obliterated at Vorkuta by Stalin's agents. A memorable miners' badge at Vorkuta says:

"The spirit of the fight against Stalin lives on in the miners."

When the coincidence of the Vorkuta strike and the Left opposition was pointed out, a striking miner in Donets strike committee said that that was the reason why he and his colleagues were so militant. The traditions and history of working class struggle are indelibly burnt in the memory of those workers and of British workers. Those whose relations participated in working-class struggle should remember that. Eventually British workers will have their say.

In the past, miners have been shot or put into psychiatric hospitals for striking. Now they are fearless of the bureaucracy and their independent organisations are springing up. We in the Labour movement have a duty to support the struggles and establish direct links with workers in other countries. I am proud and privileged to have done that and that messages from the British trade union movement have been read out in Lenin square and circulated among the masses in eastern Europe. Demands are being made for freedom, free expression, freedom of organisation and free speech and we must assist the workers in that.

When I was researching my speech for this debate I came across two statements made by Trotsky, to whom my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, North referred. Trotsky was a comrade in arms of Lenin at the head of the Russian revolution in 1917. He said:

"The vengeance of history is more terrible than the vengeance of the most powerful General Secretary."

When we see heads rolling in eastern Europe we realise how apposite Trotsky's words were. They were an indictment of Stalinism. More prophetically, he added:

"Crowds will fill the arena. They decide, they act, they legislate in their own unprecedented way."

The struggle is a continual challenge to the rule of the bureaucracy. The international working class has a duty and responsibility not only to support workers in eastern Europe but to join in the struggle against Stalinism in the East and capitalism in the West. The only genuine guarantee of peaceful co-existence and prosperity for all workers, not only in Germany but in all nations across the globe, lies under the umbrella of democratic Socialism.

I am proud to have participated in today's debate. Although my comments will not influence Conservative Members, I say clearly to the workers in eastern Europe, "We stand four square with you, we salute your struggle, and we look forward to the day when we shall live together under the umbrella of Socialism."

1.32 pm

Mr. David Nicholson (Taunton): I shall not follow the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields) in his rewriting of history in the interests of Leon Trotsky. I felt for the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) when the hon. Member for Broadgreen expressed solidarity with him but in view of the vexatious remarks of the hon Member for Hamilton earlier, perhaps he deserved it.

It is a pleasure for me to take part in my first foreign affairs debate. I have three reasons for being particularly interested in this subject. First, my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) referred to the Great Britain—East Europe centre. I support my hon. Friend in his call for more funds for that centre because there is so much for it to do at present. Under the auspices of the centre, I was host to Hungarian democrats and Polish Solidarity Members of Parliament in my constituency. As part of a process that is taking place partly in Westminster and partly in local constituencies we trained them—although that is not the best word to describe it—in the practice of democracy. My right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Sir P. Blaker) said that Poland and Hungary need to move on to local government elections. I was pleased to introduce the Polish Members of Parliament to the mayor and the chief executive of my local authority. They discussed the mechanism of holding local government elections.

[Mr. David Nicholson]

The second reason why I am pleased to take part in the debate is that shortly before the last election I visited East Germany with several of my colleagues who are now my hon. Friends. I pay tribute to the role of the Konrad Adenauer Foundation in the Federal Republic of Germany, which has done much not only to bring together like-minded parliamentarians of western Europe but more recently to put such parliamentarians in touch with democrats in the Parliaments of Poland and other countries. We noticed the tremendous backwardness, the dreadful transport system and the limited supplies and choice of food in the shops in East Germany. Our guide in Dresden, who was not a Communist, to whom we warmed, and with whom we established a good relationship, was born, prematurely, I think, a few hours after that dreadful RAF bombing raid on Dresden in early 1945. There are lessons in that for the peoples of Europe to seek peace and to work together.

The third reason why I am happy to be taking part in the debate is that I am a part-time historian. I must apologise to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) who is right to say that Barbarossa was June, not May, 1941. I edited the diaries of Leo Amery, father of my right hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Pavilion (Mr. Amery), who cannot be here this morning. The House will know that my right hon. Friend was in Albania at the end of the war when the Communists were taking it over. Alas, Albania does not yet feature on the list of countries moving towards democracy. Leo Amery's interest in central Europe and the Balkans stems from the fact that his mother was an early Hungarian refugee. She was driven from Hungary in 1849 after an earlier Russian invasion.

I should like to give a warning about recent developments. My hon. Friend the Member for Daventry is right that our fears and warnings should not stop us hoping for and working towards a better world. But in 1848, the whole of Europe outside Russia had revolutions and by 1849 most had been suppressed. It was back to the ancient regime for most countries. We see the dangers particularly in Poland where the democrats may fail and in Russia where the Baltic states, Georgia and other sections may break apart and the Red Army may clampdown with fearful consequences. That is why we must keep up our guard while hoping for a better world.

I pay tribute to the BBC which broadcast that dramatic report by Charles Wheeler two weeks ago. We have heard of the bravery of the people who are bringing the changes about. The crowd was gathered in the central square in Georgia and the Patriarch appealed to them to leave the square and go into the church because of an impending clampdown. The crowd shouted back, "No" and stood in silence. A few minutes later the tanks rolled in. Troops and others with weapons, including forms of drugs, moved in and we know of the dreadful consequences. Happily, those responsible for those dreadful events were removed from power in the Soviet Union and we must pay tribute to Mr. Gorbachev for that.

My second warning echoes what has already been said today: we do not want a return to Balkanisation. My hon. Friend the Minister said that in the two or three years before those countries were swallowed up, first in Nazi and then in Communist tyranny, they did not show any great fraternity towards each other. The Poles and Hungarians took slices of Czechoslovakia and the Hungarians and Bulgarians took slices of Romania. The borders of eastern Europe and the Balkans have no great certainty or legitimacy. My hon. Friend the Member for Daventry mentioned that in the context of German borders, and his point is well taken.

Even during the war, Leo Amery was working with Czech and Polish exiles to get them to work together for a better world after the war. Alas, they were not to have that opportunity.

Thirdly, there is a German proverb which runs, "Mann ist was er isst"—man is what he eats. That is a rather materialistic view of the world, but if Bismarck returned to us today he would say that Parliaments, constitutions and speeches are no good unless the people can be fed. That need was well expressed by my right hon. Friends the Members for Blackpool, South and for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine), who spoke of ensuring this winter that the Poles can feed themselves and put their agriculture and transport systems into some order.

Fourthly, I commend the work of the British Council and the world service, and of the Churches in the West. The Churches have been responsible for much of what has happened in eastern Europe. The Roman Catholic Church in Poland and Czechoslovakia and the Protestant Churches in East Germany have made themselves the focus for resistance and liberalisation.

Finally, I come to the role of the European Community. I remember the great debate in this country over entry into it in 1971, when my old friend, the much respected and late Member, Sir John Biggs-Davison, told me that we must get our ideals right about entry into the EC. The Common Market, he said, is rather like taking in each other's washing machines—I suppose they could do with a few of those in eastern Europe. To many people in Britain the EC is either about taking in each other's washing machines or about the social dimension—the doling out of substantial sums, or the more sinister and controversial social charter.

The developments in eastern Europe offer tremendous scope for developing the Community as a sort of commonwealth of nations in Europe. This country has done much to develop that idea. I hope that the European Community can rise to these challenges, and that Britain can, too.

Solzhenitsyn summed it up so well. Years ago he made the point that one day in eastern Europe the grass would begin to break out through the concrete, and that is what is happening. The grip of the Red Army, the Communist party and the secret police is loosening and freedom is breaking through the concrete. We must be on our guard, but we should welcome these developments. I urge my hon. Friend the Minister, whose diplomacy, together with that of the Foreign Secretary, has so large a part to play, to continue his work of bringing about a better future for all the people of Europe.

1.42 pm

Mr. Bruce George (Walsall, South): I apologise for not having heard the earlier part of the debate, for which the blame is exclusively attributable to British Rail—the 6.48 from Birmingham arrived at 10.15. I shall not go into that now, but when we eulogise our system and deprecate that of eastern Europe perhaps we should retain a degree of modesty and caution.

Nineteen eighty-nine has been a remarkable year and not only a year of anniversaries. It will come to be seen as epochal in its own right. Most of its events have been positive, but we must not be too euphoric—there have been some disasters of which the world should not be proud.

Superpower detente has returned; the superpower leaders apparently even like each other. NATO has been getting its act together more—for instance, at the Brussels summit in May. There have been remarkable developments in western Europe and probably some redefinition of the relationship between the United States and its NATO allies.

We have witnessed the collapse of Stalinism and the redrawing of boundaries in Europe. I hope that we have seen the emergence of new and more secure borders there. I suppose that the timing of today's debate, coinciding as it does with the floating summit at Marasaxlokk off Malta, provides us with an opportunity to reflect on what has happened and to gaze into the crystal ball.

Many hon. Members have recently been to eastern Europe and there is a danger, into which I shall not fall, of seeing it from the perspective of those who have recently discovered it. If my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields) had not shot off, I would have told him that I believe that it is an incredible impertinence for anyone to offer advice to Lech Walesa, one of the heroes of the 20th century, about what should be happening in Poland. I much prefer Lech Walesa's perspective of what to do for the future of Poland as seen from Gdansk than the perspective seen from Liverpool, Broadgreen. While I do not reflect official party policy in every sense, I am pleased to say that neither does my hon. Friend the Member for Broadgreen.

The situation in eastern Europe is confusing, and I am even more confused having heard my hon. Friend the Member for Broadgreen. Had he made his speech in any eastern European legislature over the past six months, he would not have received the silent opposition that he experienced in this House.

We are all aware that eastern and central Europe has had a sad, tragic and violent history. We have often seen eastern and central Europe as faraway lands about which we know or care little. That indifference has been punctuated by extreme concern at times of crisis. Very few western Governments have even had a policy towards eastern Europe. The worst thing we have done is to ignore eastern Europe and to consider it as a mere clone of the Soviet Union. We seem to think that whatever happens in the Soviet Union is replicated in eastern Europe because that is where the Red Army is and where the Soviet Union has bequeathed its military, political, economic and social institutions. It was never quite like that. Some eastern European leaders tried within the parameters available in the Warsaw pact to encourage a degree of independence, if not autonomy, in Hungary and, to a lesser extent, in Poland.

The Soviet Union has historically seen eastern Europe as a colony. Those are countries in which the Soviet Union dumps its military products and substandard economic products. Those are countries which the Soviet Union can suck dry of their raw materials, although I must admit that the drain on the Soviet Union in more recent years has, to a certain extent, overridden its earlier period of advantage over the eastern European countries. The Soviet Union sees eastern Europe as a cordon sanitaire and as an area from which it can gain surrogates to operate throughout the globe on its behalf. The Soviets see it as a territory which can best be described as the Soviet's means of forward defence.

All that is changing. Indifference has been replaced by deep concern. Nations that were exploited, subjugated, occupied, partitioned and ignored now occupy the centre of the stage. It must be more than a fad and more than people saying that they have been to several countries and we should do this or that and then tomorrow's issues might replace today's concerns.

We are all aware of the incredible transformations that have occurred. A few weeks ago I chaired a session of the North Atlantic Assembly. On one side of me sat the assistant secretary-general of NATO and on the other sat General Lobov, the chief of staff of the Warsaw pact. If anyone had told me three months before that that might happen I would have dismissed him as a lunatic or a romantic. We are all aware of mind-boggling events. No doubt there will be more.

We failed eastern Europe by not appreciating its diversity. We did not appreciate the fact that those countries have long histories of independence and, to a certain extent, democratic traditions. As has been said, we must be cautious. Totalitarianism embodies a single mass party, a revolutionary ideology, control of the media and of the armed forces and the use of terror. However, despite that, the model of totalitarianism as applied in the Soviet Union and, to a lesser extent, in eastern Europe, could not eliminate the spirit or strength of institutions, nationalism and of the Church. In that respect, I must refer once more to the Church of Father Popieluszko, embracing people who had been subjected to totalitarian ideology from the late 1940s.

With the president of the North Atlantic Assembly, I went to the town of Zagorsk, headquarters of the Russian Orthodox Church. I asked one of the priests, "How do you relate to the Communist party? How intimidated have you been?" He said, "You must remember that we recently celebrated our millenium. The Communist party came to office in 1917. See things in that perspective. We will be around for many centuries after the passing of this type of regime."

I freely confess that, when I went to Czechoslovakia in the spring, I could see little sign of any mass movement. Oh yes, one met people from Charter '77 and one heard of the Jazz Section of the musicians' union and the exotic Plastic Children of the Universe, but nothing else. We did not know because we are guilty of making a swift analysis and then disappearing, but under the surface was a mass movement which has now emerged. In Bulgaria, there was even less sign of any opposition to Communism, but it is now bursting forth. We should reflect upon how we have misjudged events in the Soviet Union and in eastern Europe.

There may be a Poszgay in Hungary, and there may be a Solidarity Government in Poland, but one must remember and offer some cautionary advice if they are prepared to take it. The Communist party is an uneasy coalition party. One has only to look at the history of the late 1940s to see how Communist parties in coalition with non-Communist parties ended up. Graveyards are filled with those who learnt the lesson too late and to their cost. Although I would pin my faith on Poszgay as a genuine democrat and on the Solidarity Government, we need a little more time to reflect on whether the Krenzes or the Mvladenovs of this world are genuinely democratic or whether they are simply following the words of Lenin—take one step backwards and two steps forward.

[Mr. Bruce George]

In the The Independent today, Rupert Cornwell referred to President Gorbachev meeting President Bush. He said that no Soviet leader has gone to a summit in such a degree of weakness. He reflected on the comparsion with the treaty of Brest Litovsk. From my reading of history, I remember that for the Bolshevik Government it was a deliberate tactical retreat. I should want to be certain about whether what is happening in the Soviet Union is a tactical adjustment, a genuine conviction that the world is changing, or just a breathing space for the Soviet Union. Six months ago, I would have said that with even greater conviction. I am now much more open-minded. Perhaps we have made mistakes. Perhaps developments in the Soviet Union will show that the economic, political and military system that was inflicted upon the Soviet Union will be but history.

We must get our act together and get a better, coherent multilateral policy within NATO and the EEC on eastern and central Europe so that we can act together politically and economically and in terms of security. We must be positive and adventurous but not reckless. As many people have said, we are not yet certain whether the reforms are reversible.

We should not seek too eagerly to capitalise on the misfortunes of the Soviet Union. That would not be in our interests. We should not at this stage or in future expect countries such as Hungary or Poland to extricate themselves from the Warsaw pact. Whatever the defects of the alliance system today it must survive to bring a degree of order and coherence in the dangerous period that lies ahead. It is in our interests that the current structure of alliances survives. We should not tamper with alliances. We should encourage them and sustain them financially and economically and offer advice. We have heard much of the Government's know-how scheme. A few weeks ago, I participated in the scheme in my town by taking two Polish MPs, one Communist, one Solidarity. The local chamber of commerce has offered to send a team of its specialists to both of the constituencies in a couple of months in order to stimulate enterprise, because they are almost totally lacking in that skill.

We should relax the rules of the co-ordinating committee of western nations on technology transfer, but we must remember that we need more of a track record from the Soviet Union before we agree to transfer highly sensitive technology that might be used for military purposes. A great deal of information should be exchanged on environmental matters, and the arms control process must be sustained. I have not yet talked to the Whips about it, but I am off to Vienna on Sunday as part of a North Atlantic Assembly monitoring operation to look at the confidence-building talks and the conventional arms control negotiations.

We are living in exciting times and must take advantage of them. We must be prudent and not treat politics in the way that Geoff Boycott would treat his batting. Perhaps we should take chances but we remember that, ultimately, Governments are responsible for national security and should move at a pace that is consistent with that. The United States must remain part of the security equation in western Europe and we expect the Soviet Union to remain an integral part of that too.

When President Gorbachev talked two years ago of a common European home, he could not have imagined that the home which would emerge would be one or more democratic states. Countries within his military orbit have shown a disdain for the system within which they were compelled to operate. I am not good at crystal ball gazing, but I can foresee more and more nations seeking to join the European Community. I am not among the Community's most devoted adherents, but I strongly suspect that in future the Community will be greatly enlarged. That will be not only to our economic advantage but to our political and security advantage.

Mr. Hugo Summerson (Walthamstow): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. You protect the rights of Back Benchers. At least half a dozen hon. Members who wanted to speak have not been called in the debate. We have constituents in the same way as those who have spoken have constituents. With the coming of the cameras more and more pressure is put on hon. Members to speak. People say to me, "We have not seen you on telly. When will we see you?" Surely the time has come to place more time limits on speeches when it is clear that many hon. Members wish to speak in a debate. The present system causes great resentment among hon. Members who have taken the time and trouble to prepare speeches and to be here but are not called.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): I regret the fact that a number of hon. Members have been in the Chamber the whole morning wishing to speak. As the hon. Gentleman is probably aware, Mr. Speaker used the Standing Order under which he has authority to limit speeches between 11.30 and 1 o'clock. That is the only Standing Order that Mr. Speaker could employ this morning and he did that in order to get as many Back Benchers as possible into the debate. I assure the hon. Gentleman that if he looks at my list he will see that most hon. Members who were called spoke for between nine and 10 minutes.

1.58 pm

Mr. Donald Anderson (Swansea, East): The hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) has now achieved his wish and his good constituents will at least know that he is here.

This is a timely debate because it is being held on the eve of the summits in Malta and Strasbourg. It has also been a high-quality debate. It was started by the Minister describing from Olympian heights the moral decay of the whole Communist system. We have heard the visionary views of my hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) who followed. We have had political insights from Liverpool and have listened to the experiences of many hon. Members who spoke about their sense of wonder at the scale and pace of what has been happening in central and eastern Europe.

Effectively, the foundations of the political and economic system established at the end of the second world war are now shaking. As the historians among us have pointed out, the crust of Communism imposed on the countries of central and eastern Europe by the limits of the advance of the Soviet tanks at the end of the second world war has dissolved. Underneath that crust is a thousand years of history with all the advantages, challenges and fears that derive from that, including the danger of nationalism, not only within central European states but within the Soviet empire itself, and the destabilisation that might follow if the process is not handled with care.

One needs a sense of history to understand the nature of the changes. Each of the countries of central Europe must be treated in terms of its own history. There is no monolith in central Europe. I noted that fact a few weeks ago when I was with a distinguished dissident from Czechoslovakia. He said that the engine of change in Poland has been the Church, that the engine of change in Hungary has been the Hungarian Socialist Workers party —it has now changed its name—and that perhaps the engine of change in East Germany was the information revolution which meant that people could readily see what was happening across the border. The human exchanges between that divided country also acted as a mechanism for change. He bewailed the fact, however, that there was no similar engine for change in Czechoslovakia. He said, "Alas, we are but small coteries of intellectuals who have no real chance of effecting change." Those small coteries of intellectuals have now been borne aloft by people power and we welcome that. We also welcome what is happening in Bulgaria, which has a special relationship with the Soviet Union because, in the previous century, the Russians liberated that country from the hordes of the east, the Turks——

Mr. George: The Ottomans.

Mr. Anderson: Well the Turks or the Ottomans. I listen to my hon. Friend on this.

We must be ready with our feet on the ground to address the challenges of the new system. We must accept, for example, that there will be profound changes affecting conventional and nuclear disarmament. Despite what the Prime Minister preached during her recent visit to Washington, there must be serious question marks over the reasoning behind the short-range tactical nuclear weapons in the light of the changes taking place in central Europe. Those changes were underlined by the United States' Secretary for Defence, Mr. Dick Cheney. Ultimately, when the mists clear, there will be a new European security system and with it will emerge a new concert of Europe. At its core will be the current European Community with various constellations of countries in different forms of association with it.

I take issue with the Minister on his description of the scaffolding now being built. The word scaffolding assumes that there is a blueprint and that a structure already exists. At this stage the view through the glass is dark and it is impossible to see the shape of the new Europe, either in terms of defence or politics. One should not too easily try to apply the analogy of scaffolding to structures that are not yet properly in place. The flight from the current position to what will be is exciting, but there will be substantial turbulence on the way.

We all have our own personal reactions and memories of what has happened. In the early 1960s I lived for some years as a diplomat in Hungary and it was a joy for me this March to see the silent and dignified march of the people on their own national day.

We think of what President Gorbachev said when he talked of the common European home. Cynics could ask, "How can you possibly have a common European home with a wall through the front room?" That wall has gone and the concept of a common European home has become more plausible. However, we must ensure that there is at least a guest room for the United States in that common European home.

A feature of the current summit is that the superpowers will be unable to make decisions vitally affecting the interests of Europe and its component parts without reference to Europe. Gone are the days of the 1960s and the Glassborough summit or even the recent Helsinki summit, when decisions that vitally affected Europe's security interests were taken above our heads. Now Europe is, and will increasingly be, a key player on the stage.

I shall sound a couple of cautionary notes. We should not be too heady or have too great expectations about the interim period. It may well be that for the immediate years we shall see increasing shortages and unemployment, as the subsidies are removed, and an increasing drain of skilled manpower from central and eastern Europe to the West. We should not be too light-headed about the depth of democracy in central and eastern Europe. Apart from the Czechoslovakia of Masaryk, the history of central Europe in the inter-war years and immediate post-war years was that of autocracy, however benign—one thinks also of the Weimar republic. Therefore, the democratic roots do not go so deep and will have to be carefully watered and nurtured.

Western Europe must respond sensitively to the challenges which have been raised. So much of what we see is interlinked. For example, if we think of East and West Berlin, it is inconceivable in the new circumstances that, as one Conservative Member mentioned, the two currencies can co-exist now that the wall is down and there will be commuters who live in East Berlin and work in the West.

In the worst scenario, the very problems that forced East Germany in the past to erect the German wall—the movement of skilled personnel across the wall and the damage to the economy which resulted—will arise. It is difficult to envisage going back to anything within the Germanys of the sort which led to the wall's erection. The scenario must be of increasing co-operation between the two Germanys, ultimately ending in who knows what.

At the moment, Germany is not on the agenda;, Europe is. However, as the European picture clarifies, so the German picture will clarify. If we truly believe in self-determination we cannot stand in the way of self-determination on the basis of free elections in the two parts of Germany. That must be our position in relation to German reunification.

There was substantial consensus in our debate. The issues on which there was no consensus included the references to the Prime Minister. Had the Prime Minister at Washington and elsewhere spoken in the tones and substance used by the Minister today, the Opposition would not have raised any objections. The Minister avoided the stridency and ideological baggage which made the Prime Minister sound, as The Sunday Times correspondent said, so much "like a figure from the past" in Washington.

[Mr. Anderson]

I have already touched on the German question, which leads to the third area of difference—the relevance of what is happening in central Europe to integration within the Community. We have to be very sensitive and careful because we must show no sign that we are using the developments in central and eastern Europe as an excuse for slowing the process of integration in western Europe. It might be argued that the degree of integration within the European Community is part of the attraction for those in central and eastern Europe.

Mr. Shore: Does my hon. Friend agree that it is equally important that developments in eastern Europe should not be used as an excuse for accelerating in a reckless way the process of integration in western Europe?

Mr. Anderson: I accept that we have to consider the situation as Europeans, certainly not only sub specie aeternitatis, but in the light of fairly recent history. We have to work on the basis that frontiers and alliances are not immutable.

Finally, we have to invest in democracy. Right hon. and hon. Members particularly the right hon. Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine) have mentioned what should be done in the short term because of the immediate food crisis in Poland. Equally, we have to use our influence on longer-term aid with the IMF, the World Bank, and the Group of Seven and of course the European Community. We must mobilise our private sector in terms of joint ventures. We welcome the CBI initiative drawing on the know-how scheme for training middle management from those countries which have not had relevant experience of it.

Institutionally, there have been developments in the Council of Europe, which has a much more extensive role to play in the current context as a bridge between East and West. I was recently in Austria where one can see the evolution of the old concept of Mitteleuropa with Vienna as the traditional capital. Other important areas include English language teaching, student exchanges, visa formalities and all the points which were set out with such foresight in the Select Committee report which my hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) played a part in producing.

The landscape is changing rapidly. If we are adequately to respond to that we need historical insight. Now we see but darkly what is evolving, but it is clear that the European Community will be the core of the new Europe with constellations of countries around it. It is a time of hope for which we need to acknowledge a great debt of thanks to Mr. Gorbachev. Let us stretch out that hand of friendship and help to the countries of eastern Europe at this historic time of hope.

2.13 pm

Mr. Waldegrave: It is a pleasure to follow the speech of the hon. Member for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson) who struck the note that the House wished to hear from the Opposition Front Bench perhaps a little better than the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) who spent most of his speech attacking the Prime Minister. History will answer the Prime Minister's critics. The period of response, strength and solidarity in the West led to the departure from the Brezhnevite regime of any hope of being able to compete through confrontation with the West, and the part that the Prime Minister and President Reagan played in that will be shown by history to be very important.

The hon. Member for Hamilton said that the Prime Minister was cautious, but the best answers to that were given by the hon. Member for Walsall, South (Mr. George) and the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore). We must be careful to ensure that we keep the alliances. When the Prime Minister talked about the dangers of the ice floe breaking, she meant not that she did not want it to break but that large chunks of ice in the river can be a danger to shipping, and that is no more or less than the truth.

So many good speeches have been made that I should run out of time mentioning them one by one. I must mention the speech made by the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney, who spotted the fundamental importance of acceptance by the Soviet Union and the Warsaw pact of the removal of asymmetries. Once that doctrine is established, there will be hope for a movement to true defensive alliances that do no more than secure our genuine security needs at a sensible minimum. The right hon. Gentleman was right about that, as was my hon. friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Powell), who made an excellent speech.

I say to the hon. Members for Hamilton, for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston) and my hon. Friend the Member for Corby, who raised the subject of short-range nuclear weapons, that under the comprehensive concept there is a framework for dealing with the next stages of the negotiations. At a time when we are not seeking to disrupt alliances, we should not seek to overturn the agreement that was unanimously reached in NATO. We should use it for the next stages of the negotiations.

The hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) spoke interestingly of the dangers and the promise of the right and wrong kinds of nationalism. We do not yet know whether the right kinds of nationalism will follow. The hon. Member for Walsall, South and my right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Sir P. Blaker) powerfully said that we do not yet know for sure what the outcome will be in the Soviet Union, which is why we must maintain our insurance. That is no more than prudence. As the hon. Member for Walsall, South said, the co-ordinating committee controlling East-West trade is one element of that insurance. We do not know yet whether it is entirely safe to take down that part of our defences against the transfer of military technologies.

My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence), my hon. Friends the Members for Ruislip-Norwood (Mr. Wilkinson) and for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) said that although we immensely welcome the changes, at this stage we can only applaud what looks like a great turning point in history. As yet, we are not clearly into the new world. The changes in some of the countries that we have been debating, such as Bulgaria and the German Democratic Republic, are immensely welcome, but we are not yet in the new world. I suspect that Mr. Krenz will not be the answer in the GDR, and the Bulgarians are still talking about a more polite face for their regime rather than returning to their people the right to decide what regime they want to live under. Therefore, we have a duty to maintain the structure that has seen us through until now, particularly as it is not difficult to see how it can be adapted to manage peace, as it once prevented confrontation. The caution mingled with pleasure that we heard from many hon. Members is the right response.

We rightly heard much about how the newly emerging democracies should be associated with the other institutions of Europe. I spoke of the Council of Europe, and in a recent intervention the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney argued that we in the European Community should not be too inflexible. We should try to keep open different tailor-made associations, which I think was the phrase that the right hon. Gentleman used. That is exactly right, because one can imagine a variety of different patterns of association with the Community, with the European Free Trade Association and other institutions of Europe that will suit the traditions of particular countries.

I think that the hon. Member for Walsall, South was the only hon. Member who mentioned that we should not underestimate the diversity of traditions in eastern Europe. We are not talking about a monolith, although it may have looked like one because the countries were forced into a monolithic shape from the outside. Historically their traditions are more complex.

The right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney was the first to introduce the subject of Germany, and other hon. Members, including my hon. Friend the Member for Corby and the hon. Member for Hamilton also mentioned it. I think that they welcomed the tone of my statement about Chancellor Kohl's speech. We all know that reunification is a subject that has many reverberations, particularly among the older generation in Poland, France and Britain—and why not?

Surely, the Chancellor was attempting to sketch out the type of institutions which might be required to make a reality of the Adenauer doctrine of freedom first, and that conjunction of the two Germanys could take place only in a new Europe. We have all assented to that doctrine for 30 years or more.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine)—the Father of the House—made an impassioned plea, as he has done to me privately, about Poland and food aid, and many right hon. and hon. Members have joined with him. My hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell), the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber and my right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South also mentioned aid to Hungary.

I assure right hon. and hon. Members that the urgency of the situation is understood. Some $114 million in food aid has already been sent by the European Community —that is a lot of food, and involves a lot of transport and organisation. Another $45 million worth is coming from another group of 24 member countries and I am happy to say that further food aid is being urgently considered by the Commission.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Corby said, distribution is a considerable problem and we shall be doing well if we concentrate on how to get distribution better with some of our bilateral funds.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South made an interesting remark when he mentioned that Lech Walesa had told him that the problem was not to bring food from outside but to get it out of the barns and warehouses on the farms in Poland. What is the cause of that? It is only natural, because the farmers do not trust the currency, and that is a classic symptom of a country or a system which has inflation and the fear of greater inflation. People hoard goods, as they did in Germany during the great inflation of the old days. How can we deal with that? In the short term we have to send food, in the medium term we have to help the Poles develop a real currency. That is why we have put so much emphasis on our support for their stabilisation fund, which is an essential part of their financial package and is aimed at reforming the currency.

If people trust the currency they will put goods into the market, rather than doing deals on the black market and hoarding, which are the problems at the moment. That is why we have put a $100,000 subscription into the billion dollar Polish currency stabilisation fund.

No right hon. or hon. Member mentioned the importance of opening up trade access to the Community, and nor did I so I too am guilty. I am happy to say that this week a raft of quantity and other restrictions on trade from Poland and Hungary were abolished, and more will follow for other eastern European countries as they move forward with their reforms.

The hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy was fair enough to pay tribute to the role of the Churches and so did my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) and the hon. Member for Walsall, South. They mentioned the Catholic Church in Poland and Czechoslovakia, and the Protestant Church in Germany. It was moving to see that great old man, Cardinal Tomisek, playing a crucial role when he used just the right words at the right time to bridge the gap and to help a movement which was essentially an intellectual movement among the intelligensia, as the hon. Member for Swansea, East rightly pointed out spread to the mass of people. His role in that was exceedingly important. It is funny now to think of Stalin's old saying, "How many divisions has the Pope?" He had too many for the Stalinists, that is sure.

We have heard some moving speeches, one in particular to which I must pay tribute, about the relationship of all these changes to democratic Socialism. It is not for Conservative Members to enter these matters as experts, but we must always know who our real opponents are and who is linked to us by enough commitment and belief in the institutions of democracy. We must always know that there is a real bond between us although we argue passionately about the outcome of elections, the right economic policy and the rest.

There is no question in my mind about the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton, (Mr. Heffer), though I find very little to agree with in his view about how to run an economy. I have listened to him making passionate speeches against my party on many occasions, but I can assure my right hon. and hon. Friends, who I know will agree with me, that we know which side of the barricades he would have been on in 1968, and it would not have been with the Russian tanks—but he might have been explaining to the chap next door to him, who thought that he was fighting for capitalism, that he was very wrong-headed to do so. The hon. Gentleman would nevertheless have been beside him and standing up for freedom.

Rather more eccentric were a couple of other speeches we heard. When I was in Cracow recently, I was told—teased, rather—by the rector of the university there that we have more Communists in our universities than they do in Poland. It is clear that we have more Trotskyites in our Parliament than they do in Poland or elsewhere in eastern

[Mr. Waldegrave]

Europe. It is wonderful to hear the argument between the Trotskyites and the Stalinites. It is like hearing the man arguing against someone who says that the earth is flat. The Trotskyite proves marvellously that the earth is not flat at all. Not at all, it is clearly a large cheese floating in a bowl of stewed prunes. It is really wonderful to listen to the lunacy of it all.

I remember somebody once describing the events of 1917 in the Soviet Union as rather like a revolution started by Shirley Williams and taken over by the Kray brothers. I am not entirely sure that if, to make a remark in very poor taste, the ice-pick had been on the other foot, Trotsky's world would have been any more pleasant than that of his old mates who did him in.

We were on the wrong track today. My old job in the Department of the Environment was involved. It is for English Heritage to put a preservation order on such hon. Members. Soon there will be no such people anywhere. The poor hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields), who puts the workers' struggle as his sole special interest, will have to retire to his hobby, which is winemaking—a good hobby—and that will be the end of that. Meanwhile, it is a pleasure of a certain antiquarian kind to listen to these dinosaurs trundling about.

I read recently a clever and intelligent article written by a grand American academic who works for the Rand Corporation and the State Department—one cannot get much grander than that. He proved by logic that history had ended—that it was all over. At this very moment in the committee rooms of whatever the University Grants Committee is now called, I can imagine historians getting together in desperation in view of that thesis. What he meant by the article, which is worth reading, is not that history is over. What nonsense! He meant that "history" is over, that "history", as defined as an inevitable process by Hegel or Marx, is over. That narrow view of determinist history is indeed over. It is a concept that never had much intellectual force behind it.

The events of this year in Europe have shown that, far from history being over, a marvellous new chapter of history is opening up for Europe, one much more full of joy, excitement, interest, and some danger too, than the gloomy and bleak chapter on which we hope to close the page.

It being half-past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, in relation to any Standing Committee to which the Census Order 1989 may be referred, Standing Order No. 101 (Standing Committees on Statutory Instruments, &c) shall have effect as if for the words 'one and a half hours' in paragraph (4) were substituted the words 'two and a half hours'.—[Mr. Nicholas Baker.].

LIAISON

Ordered,

That Sir Ian Lloyd and Mr. Timothy Raison be discharged from the Liaison Committee and Dr. Michael Clark and Mr. Malcolm Thornton be added to the Committee.—[Mr. Garel-Jones.].

Trust Ports

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Nicholas Baker.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Stuart Bell (Middlesbrough): I am grateful for the opportunity to speak on the Adjournment on this important topic of the future of the trust ports. The concept of trust ports is of long standing. Of the 15 major ports, six are trust ports: London, Liverpool, Glasgow, Leith, Newcastle upon Tyne and Middlesbrough.

Trust ports were said to be non-profit-making, in the sense that there would be no dividends but the profits would be ploughed back into the ports for the benefit of the users and, in a sense, for the benefit of the community. Trust ports were usually capitalised by fixed interest borrowings and they were managed by boards, partly elected by port users and partly appointed by Ministers. There was also local authority or particular interest involvement.

I would not wish to leave the House with the impression that I am caught in any time warp in relation to trust ports. Nevertheless, it would be helpful to quote from the report of the Royal Commission on transport in 1930, which declared:

> "We are further of the opinion that the best kind of authority to own docks and harbours is a public trust."

Because Britain was an island and, certainly in those days, docks were the only means of taking cargo in and out of the country, it seemed right therefore and in the national interest that as assets they should be held in trust for all the British people.

Another review of the trust ports was that of the Rochdale committee, whose findings were published in 1962. The report suggested a number of ways in which the running of trust ports could be improved and added the following and, in my view, significant recommendation:

> "In order to simplify the procedure for making such revisions and to reduce the expense which promoting private legislation means for port authorities, we suggest that in any legislation arising out of this report, the Minister of Transport should be empowered to approve amendments to port statutes by Order subject to affirmative resolution procedure."

This recommmendation will have some significance as I develop my theme on the future of trust ports.

Middlesbrough is a trust port, or rather the Tees and Hartlepools authority covering both Middlesbrough and Hartlepool is a trust authority where the assets are, in every sense of the word, held in trust for the British people, and certainly for the local community.

The Tees and Hartlepools port authority owes its existence to and derives its powers from an Act of 1966, subsequently amended. That Act established the Tees and Hartlepools port authority and made provision for the appointment of members to the board by the Minister—now the Secretary of State for Transport—vested the authority with duties and powers of authority and made other general provisions for the running of the ports.

There is no suggestion that the Tees and Hartlepools port authority has been run in other than an exemplary fashion. I draw particular attention to its policies on equal opportunities and the employment of disabled persons. The authority has been and will continue to be fully committed to the principle of equal opportunity in employment. That has meant that recruitment has been carried out on the basis of ability and without regard to race, colour, ethnic or national origins, sex, marital status, religion or sexual orientation. The authority gives full and fair consideration to disabled persons who apply for employment. If employees become disabled during their employment, every effort is made to keep them in the same job or to find them an alternative. The authority's training and career development is structured to ensure that disabled persons have the same opportunities as other employees.

Notwithstanding the observations of the Rochdale committee's report—that trust ports are essentially non-profit-making—the Tees and Hartlepools port authority turned out last year profits of £9·246 million, with a historic capital employed of £52·508 million and a return on capital of 17·61 per cent., which is an impressive record by any standards.

The Tees and Hartlepools port authority is one of the leading authorities in the United Kingdom both in tonnage and profitability. It handles about 37 million tonnes a year and the majority of that tonnage is brought in and out by the oil, chemical and steel customers, who have private terminals on the river Tees. The authority also owns and manages two general cargo docks. There is the Tees dock, near the mouth of the Tees, which handles more than 2 million tonnes a year of general cargo, cars, steel and forest products. There is also the Hartlepool dock, which handles more than 1 million tonnes a year of forest products, cars, scrap and bulk cargoes.

With such a success story, one wonders why the Tees and Hartlepools port authority wants to take itself out of the ambit of the trust ports and into the somewhat more risky commercial world of the private company. Having served Tees and Hartlepool for many years under the 1966 Act and having fulfilled the obligations of the Act, why is it that the authority now wishes to alter not only the way in which it does business, but the ownership of the assets?

I shall not refer at length to the private Bill that was published on 27 November, but I want to refer to the assets. According to the last balance sheets, the assets of the Tees and Hartlepools authority stood at £52·508 million. The reason why proposals are now coming forward is the abolition of the dock labour scheme earlier this year. We were told by the Secretary of State for Employment that the abolition of the dock labour scheme would open a new door to the docks and that there would be more investment and more jobs. In practice, the only door that has opened has led to lay-offs and redundancies, and now the proposed privatisation of dock assets running into millions of pounds. The abolition of the dock labour scheme has cleared the way to privatisation which was on the Government's hidden agenda all along. Rather than jobs being created, jobs have been lost. In Hartlepool alone, 70 jobs have been lost and on the Tees, 130 jobs have gone in a few months. In all the docks that were formerly covered by the dock labour scheme, 3,800 jobs have been lost. That may fit in with the Government's scheme of things, but it does not fit in with the promises or forecasts made by Ministers at the Dispatch Box.

The fear on Teesside and at Hartlepool docks is that once privatised, the Tees and Hartlepools authority will not stay in cargo handling for long, but will concentrate on property investments, where the pickings might be said to be easier. Indeed, moves in the direction of property development were begun by the Tees and Hartlepools port authority even before the abolition of the dock labour scheme when the proposed privatisation was but a gleam in its eye. Property deals took place involving the Tees offshore base where the former Smith's dock shipbuilding site has been transformed significantly, and there is to be a tripartite development venture in Hartlepool marina involving the Teesside development corporation and the Lovell partnership.

As I understand it, the new proposal is designed to provide a legislative framework for selling assets. It will also permit the authority to spread its wings, invest other than on Teesside and buy into other ports if that is its wish. It will be able to invest in Europe while remaining on Teesside. If that was the ambition of the Tees and Hartlepools port authority, why did it not simply apply to the Government to extend its powers in accordance with the recommendations of the Rochdale report, to which I referred in my opening remarks? Why did the Government not come to the House with the appropriate orders to amend the powers of the Tees and Hartlepools port authority so that it could do all those things within its existing framework? If that was not possible within the present legislative framework, why did the Government not agree to bring before the House a short amending Bill to give the port authority such powers?

Again, we are seeing the hidden hand of the Government, not to allow the port authority to spread its wings but, in accordance with the Government's ideology, to insist on the privatisation of its assets, forcing it into the considerable expense of putting a private Bill through the House of Commons. It will be a long and hard route.

When Mr. John Hackney, who was chief executive of the Tees and Hartlepools port authority announced the proposed privatisation of the docks he said that it was the authority's wish to take advantage of the competitive environment in which it operates and of the pan-European transport industry in the run-up to 1992. I hope that I have demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary that the first aim might have been achieved through appropriate orders in the House or Government legislation. Perhaps he will clarify that when he responds.

What is one to make of the authority's second proposal, which is to take advantage of the pan-European transport industry? What on earth is a pan-European transport industry other than a fine phrase from the press agency? Mr. Hackney has said that the authority wishes to defend and build on the success that it has achieved since its creation in 1966. No one doubts that success, least of all myself. He also said that it must have full scope to develop its business, both in the United Kingdom and Europe, in providing port facilities and in other distribution activities. Again, I submit that all that might have been achieved through orders before the House or amending legislation. Mr. Hackney also stated:

> "The authority is determined to ensure that this development will take place without any reduction in its commitment to maintain, develop and expand the ports of Tees and Hartlepool."

I accept fully the assurances which Mr. Hackney wishes to give.

Mr. Hackney has also said that the authority is committed to a continuing Teesside base for the business and to ensuring that the area shares to the maximum the benefits that will come from the development of its business on a broader scale. We on Teesside do not want simply a share; we want to develop in our own right. We want to make Teesside the third largest port and a busy port facing out, as it does, towards Europe. We want a vigorous approach to more business for the river and more facilities so that Tees and Hartlepool can become the Rotterdam of the north.

[Mr. Stuart Bell]

As it is a trust port, all that is possible within the present legislation. Sharing is not what we are about. A full-scale investment in the ports and a massive search for the kind of in-going and out-going business that Britain needs are what Cleveland needs, not a right to buy into other docks elsewhere or to share in the so-called pan-European transport industry.

The new proposals make no mention of a commitment to Teesside, to jobs, to the port remaining a secure and permanent employer in Cleveland, to maintain and expand the ports of Tees and Hartlepool, to a continuing Teesside base for the business or to ensuring that the area shares to the maximum the benefits that will come from the development of its business on a broader scale. The words of the press handout do not find their way into the cold light of the print of the new proposals.

Was it the Government's decision not to allow Tees and Hartlepool to have their additional powers by appropriate orders through the House? Was it the Government who rejected amending legislation? Did the Government push Tees and Hartlepool on to the privatisation road? Has the Tees and Hartlepools port authority asked the Government to widen its powers under the 1966 Act by the use of orders through the House? Has the THPA asked for public legislation to give it additional powers? If so, what was the Government's response? If the request has not been made and were it now to be made, how would the Government respond?

Have the Government a policy towards trust ports as a whole? Do the Government support the privatisation of trust ports throughout the country? Do they support the privatisation of the trust port of Tees and Hartlepool? Will they use their payroll vote to push through the final legislation on any privatisation should it come to the Floor of the House?

Has the Department calculated the impact of such privatisation on rates for the use of the port of Tees and Hartlepool? Has the Minister taken account of the fact that as an island nation most freight still comes through the ports and that our ports continue to have, if not a full monopoly, certainly a quasi-monopoly of importations and exportations of freight? Does he accept that privatisation of the assets of Tees and Hartlepool ultimately means that a public monopoly will become a private monopoly? Has he calculated the impact of such a private monopoly on employment prospects within the docks?

How can the present trust port assure job prospects when the company is privatised and passed out of its control? What provisions in the 1966 Act will be allowed to find their way into the articles of association of the future privatised company? What safeguards will the Government demand for the perpetuity of the Hartlepool port as well as that on the Tees?

Should privatisation come about, who will ultimately own the THPA? Will it be the employees themselves? Will it be the local pension funds, the local authorities or a mixture of all three? Or will the shares in the final privatised public company be floated off to the general public with a stock market quotation on the London stock exchange or on the unlisted securities market? If not, why not? Who will ultimately sit on the board—not on the board of a trust which may be created but on the board of the ultimately privatised company which will hold the assets?

What will happen to profits? We have already discussed the concept of trust ports. We have seen that the trust port does not make profits merely in a commercial sense. It makes a proper return on its investments and on its capital. It does not, however, distribute those profits, because they are there to stabilise port and cargo handling charges and to improve the infrastructure and facilities of the port.

If a private company is to operate a port monopoly in Tees and Hartlepool, will dividends be paid in such a way that charges will have to rise, thus making Tees and Hartlepool less attractive to the user and diminishing not only the prospects of the port but the prospects of employment in it?

The Minister will see from this series of questions that the future of the trust ports and a proper policy to be announced today or later on their future—particularly on that of the trust port of Tees and Hartleport—touch on the livelihood of Teeside. They touch on the work force in the ports and on the nature of the towns of Middlesbrough and Hartlepool. Middlesbrough was built around the port when the river was deepened to accommodate iron and coal terminals in the last century. As the port shrinks, so do the town's prospects. The answers to the questions that I have asked today are of the utmost significance to my constituents and to the wider public on Teeside.

2.52 pm

The Minister for Aviation and Shipping (Mr. Patrick McLoughlin): I congratulate the hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) on raising this subject for debate. I believe that it has not been debated widely in the House before, so this provides us with a chance of some novelty. I hope in the short time left to me to be able to answer some of the hon. Gentleman's questions, but I am sure that he will appreciate that I am not in a position today to discuss primary legislation; it would be out of order, to do so.

I certainly note the hon. Gentleman's concern about the proposals put forward in the port authority's Bill. They will be considered in the usual parliamentary way during the coming months.

The hon. Gentleman has said that Tees and Hartlepool is one of the most successful ports, and I agree with the figures that he gave. In 1988 the port made a pre-tax profit of £9·2 million on a turnover of £35·5 million. It makes an important contribution to our exports and exports a large amount of steel and Nissan cars.

Trust ports are a peculiarly British concept, although modified versions of them can be found in some other countries. Like many British institutions, they have developed by virtue of circumstance rather than as a result of any express policy or planned development. The term "trust port"—so I am told—is not legally defined and indeed does not appear anywhere in statute law. It is a convenient shorthand term to describe ports which are not owned and run by a company, a local authority, or a nationalised industry.

It may be helpful to describe the main features of trust ports. They are ad hoc bodies created by Act of Parliament to manage a harbour. They are thus statutory undertakings. The directors—variously known as members of an authority, as harbour commissioners, or sometimes, in Scotland, as harbour trustees—are appointed either by a Minister of the Crown or by a variety of bodies specified in the governing Act, or by a mixture of the two. These appointments are nearly always non-executive. Trust ports have no equity capital. Originally they raised their capital from bonds and stock. For a period between 1964 and 1980 they were able to obtain loans from the Government, but that practice has now ceased and trust ports which need to raise finance today must do so from commercial sources. Since there are no shareholders, any profit goes to reserve or to finance new investment.

I should make it clear that trust ports are independent of the Government. They are not accountable, financially or otherwise, to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport or any other Minister. That is the case even where a Minister appoints all or some of the members of a trust port authority.

Trust ports vary enormously in size and scope. At one end of the spectrum are some of our largest ports, such as Dover harbour board, the Port of London Authority, and of course the Tees and Hartlepools port authority. At the other end are a host of tiny harbours catering for recreational boating or local inshore fishermen. In between is a wide range of types and size of port undertaking. Taken together, the trust ports account for between 40 and 50 per cent. of the country's seaborne cargo trade, and a good deal of passenger traffic as well.

The hon. Gentleman asked about the Government's policy in relation to trust ports. As with other types of port, it has been gradually to disengage, and to leave the ports to determine their own destinies. Thus, as I have said, the Government are no longer a source of capital for them. Their investment and pricing are entirely within their own control. They are not subject to any Government controls.

Nevertheless, we regard the trust ports as slightly odd in the changing ports world of the last few years. The success of the old nationalised British Transport Docks Board, since it was privatised in the shape of Associated British Ports, has been widely recognised. But trust ports are restricted in what they can do. Like any creature of statute, they are limited by the powers which Parliament has bestowed on them. They cannot readily diversify. They are not free to develop their land for purposes other than those connected with the port. Yet in essence they are commercial operations, especially the larger ones like the Tees and Hartlepools port authority, and they are competing in a commercial world, in this country against many ports which have the freedom and flexibility of company ownership. It has therefore seemed to us only sensible to consider the possibility that trust ports might be converted into companies so that we do not tie their hands behind their backs. As a general principle, we think that commercial operations are best carried out wholly in the private sector.

The hon. Gentleman also spoke of his fear of a loss of jobs. I understand that fear, and the associated thought that the port, which I understand is the largest employer on Teesside——

Mr. Richard Holt (Langbaurgh): My hon. Friend the Minister has just said that the Tees and Hartlepools port authority is the largest employer on Teesside. It is not. Cleveland county council is the largest employer, followed by ICI and British Steel.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that information. However, the Tees and Hartlepools port authority is a large employer in the area and its headquarters are based locally. The fear is that it might be taken over by a company based elsewhere in the United Kingdom which might be inclined to treat the Tees port business as a branch economy. I believe that those fears are misplaced. Tees and Hartlepools has been a successful port, as the hon. Gentleman has shown, for several years now, in terms both of traffic and of profitability. It is well placed for further measured expansion. Its prospects are extremely good. It is ably managed. I am sure that the port authority has in mind the future prosperity of the port and the interests of Teesside as a whole. It is not for me to judge a possible Bill. That will be a matter for the House and the House authorities at a later stage.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at two minutes to Three o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 22 November 1989

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Compensation (USSR)

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in implementing the Foreign Compensation (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) (Distribution) Order 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has approved interim payments to successful property and bond claimants against the Russian fund of 30 per cent. of the value assigned by the Foreign Compensation Commission to a successful property claim and 20 per cent. of the value assigned by the commission to a bond. The interim payments will be made on or after 15 December 1989.

Successful bond claimants received a first interim payment of 10 per cent. of the value assigned to a bond in November 1987.

As of 17 November 1989, all bond claims but one and 2,123 out of 2,635 property claims made against the Russian fund had been determined by the Foreign Compensation Commission.

It is expected that the final distribution from the fund will be announced during the first half of 1990 and that it may exceed 15 per cent. of the value assigned by the commission to a property claim or bond. This would result in a total pay-out from the fund of 45 per cent. of the value assigned to a claim.

NATIONAL FINANCE

PAYE (Relocation)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether a decision has been made to relocate the remaining PAYE tax work currently carried out in London.

Mr. Lilley: Yes. As my hon. Friend will be aware, the majority of the Inland Revenue's PAYE work in the London area was removed to offices in other parts of the country in the 1960s and 1970s. This arrangement has provided a good service to taxpayers and has worked well over the years. On 24 July 1989 my predecessor announced at column 542 the removal of a further 400 PAYE clerical and executive posts from the London area to other parts of the country in late 1989 pending a review of the future for the remaining posts. That review has now been completed and it has been decided to remove these remaining PAYE posts over the period from May 1990 to June 1992 to Bootle, East Kilbride, Llanishen (Cardiff), Middlesbrough, Salford and Sunderland. In total the relocation announced on 24 July and today involves some 1,600 posts.

The Department intends to move the work and to redeploy existing staff in the London area, and will do everything possible to avoid any compulsory redundancy.

During the period in which the work is moved, the Department will ensure that any inconvenience to taxpayers and employers is minimised. Following the relocation, the Department expects to provide taxpayers and employers with a more efficient and effective service.

In order to maintain a service for those who need to make a personal visit to discuss their tax affairs, the existing network of local inquiry offices in the London area will be strengthened and enlarged where necessary.

EC Budget Council

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent meeting of the European Community's Budget Council.

Mr. Ryder: The Council considered the European Parliament's amendments and modifications to the 1990 Draft Budget established on 28 July (Official Report 18 October, columns 122-23); and the second amending letter to the 1990 preliminary draft budget (PDB). The council agreed to a revised draft budget totalling 48,416 mecu in commitments and 44,668 mecu in payments.

The main issue was Community aid to assist the economic restructuring of Poland and Hungary. The Council endorsed the aid package of 200 mecu which the Commission proposed in the first letter of amendment to the 1990 PDB and which the Economic and Finance Council established on 9 October; and agreed to provide a further 100 mecu by means of a supplementary budget early next year following the necessary revision of the relevant ceiling in the financial perspective under the terms of article 12 of the inter-institutional agreement (IIA).

As regards other non-compulsory expenditure, the Council accepted amendments totalling 219 mecu in commitments and 96 mecu in payments (around one third and one quarter respectively of the increases proposed by the Parliament at its first reading on 26 October). Only a small part of the agreed amendments was for privileged expenditure (the structural funds, the R and D framework programme and the integrated mediterranean programmes). The bulk was for non-privileged expenditure. The growth of this expenditure in the revised draft budget, by comparison with 1988, is 5·2 per cent. in commitments and 5·1 per cent. in payments, some way below the calculated maximum rate of 6·1 per cent. communicated by the Commission at the beginning of the budget procedure.

In the second amending letter to the 1990 PDB the Commission proposed a reduction in required revenue of 837 mecu. This was to take account of agricultural underspending in 1989 resulting from movements in the dollar/ecu exchange rate and occasioning a transfer of appropriations into the monetary reserve. The Council unanimously took the view that the letter should also include a reasonable estimate of agricultural underspending stemming from factors other than exchange rate movements. The Commission was unwilling to adjust the letter in line with the Council's wishes and the Council therefore made an adjustment on its own authority, increasing the figure in the letter by 1,000 mecu. Overall, the revised draft budget is around 4,500 mecu below the global ceiling in the financial perspective.

The Council also agreed the basis on which it would enter into a process of co-decision with the European Parliament under article 203(9) of the treaty to agree the overall growth of non-compulsory expenditure at the time of the Parliament's second reading in the week beginning 11 December.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Privatisation

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further progress he has made with the water share offers.

Mr. Chris Patten: Schroder's is today offering for sale 2,183 million shares in the 10 water companies, at an offer price of 240p per share. This represents 100 per cent. of the aggregate of the share capitals of the 10 companies.

At the offer price, the market capitalisation of the 10 companies will be as follows:

	£ million
Anglian	707
Northumbrian	157
North West	854
Severn Trent	849
Southern	393
South West	293
Thames	922
Welsh	346
Wessex	246
Yorkshire	472
Aggregate market capitalisation	5,239

Prospectuses will be available in banks and post offices from Wednesday 29 November. People who have registered with the water share information office will be sent a mini-prospectus and personalised application form. Application forms will also be published in newspapers from Wednesday 29 November. Applications have to be received by 10 am on Wednesday 6 December. Copies of the prospectus are being placed in the Library of the House today.

Water and Sewerage plcs

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect the legal action by local authorities against the water and sewerage plcs will have on the flotation of the companies.

Mr. Howard: None.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales and I put before Parliament on 1 November departmental minutes describing indemnities which the Government proposed to grant to the water and sewerage companies. Under these, the companies would be indemnified against any material additional expenditure incurred as a result of legal claims, of the kind understood to be planned by a consortium of local authorities against the proceeds of sales of assets which cease to be used for water and sewerage functions.

Having considered the writs, it is clear that the indemnity proposed earlier does not cover a second component of the local authority claims, for compensation of an unspecified amount for the assets transferred under statute in 1974 from the pre-1974 local authorities to the water authorities. It is the view of leading counsel that there is no foundation for these claims either.

We believe, therefore, that such indemnities are extremely unlikely to be called upon. But we nevertheless feel duty bound to protect the interests of taxpayers by securing flotation on the basis that Parliament intended. We have therefore put further minutes before Parliament describing indemnities which will ensure beyond doubt that the flotation is unaffected by these local authority actions. The writs were issued shortly after Parliament prorogued on 16 November, and today is the earliest day on which I could announce this to Parliament. The offer period for water shares opens today and closes on 6 December; in order to minimise any uncertainty for potential investors, the minute is designed to allow the indemnity to be signed early next week.

The Government will defend the claims on behalf of the water services companies.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce final details of the community charge transitional relief scheme.

Mr. Chris Patten: Final details of the community charge transitional relief scheme will be sent to local authorities today and copies have been placed in the Library. The scheme is broadly as proposed in October except that, in the light of suggestions by local government, I have decided that in properties occupied by three or more chargepayers relief based on two assumed community charges will be allocated equally between all chargepayers living in the property and not granted to two nominated individuals as originally proposed. This will simplify the task of making preparations for the scheme and help authorities to issue community charge bills next April which reflect both transitional relief and entitlement to rebates.

TRANSPORT

Road Haulage Permits

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has determined the fees to be charged to United Kingdom hauliers for international road haulage permits in 1990.

Mr. Atkins: Yes. The fees for 1990 permits are to be reduced once again following the successful negotiation by Department of Transport officials of significant increases in the United Kingdom's quotas. These have meant greater income from permits without significant increases in costs.

The Department's success benefits British hauliers twice —first from the more plentiful supply of permits, and secondly from the reduction in fees.

The fees will be as follows, with the 1989 charges in brackets:

	Fee
Single journey permit	£2 (no change)
Multi-journey permit	£1 (no change)
	Per journey
Annual period permit	£40 (£50)

	Fee
3 month period permit	£10 (£14)
Multilateral EC/ECMT annual permit	£80 (£100)
Multilateral EC/ECMT 3 months permit	£20 (£26)
Community removals authorisation	£25 (£50)

Vehicle Registration Marks

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made with the Government's plans to sell unused attractive vehicle registration marks.

Mr. Parkinson: Regulations made under the Finance Act 1989 establishing the sale of marks scheme came into effect on 20 November. The first sale will be by auction, and will take place on 14 December at Christie's London showrooms. Further auctions will follow in the new year. Less valuable numbers will be sold at fixed prices later in the year for new vehicles registered on or after 1 August 1990. Details of the scheme are given in leaflets available in the Library of the House, from DVLC, or from Teledata Ltd., the Department's fixed price agents.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Geography

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the publication of the interim report of the national curriculum geography working group.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I published the interim report of the national curriculum geography working group on 20 November, together with our letter to the group's chairman, Sir Leslie Fielding. Copies of the interim report including the letter have been deposited in the Library.

Student Loans Company

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in acquiring premises for the Student Loans Company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Negotiations are proceeding for the acquisition of premises in Glasgow. My Department is likely to be asked by a landlord to guarantee the Student Loans Company's obligations under an agreement to lease and the lease. My Department has, therefore, presented a minute to Parliament today describing the nature of the contingent liability which would arise.

Science and Engineering Research Council

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the annual report of the Science and Engineering Research Council for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The annual report of the Science and Engineering Research Council for 1988-89 has been submitted to me under the requirements of the Science and Technology Act 1965, and a copy is being laid before the House today.

I was most interested to read the report on what has clearly been another exciting and interesting year for the Council. I was particularly impressed to learn of:

a. the completion during the year of two satellite instruments to observe the composition of the atmosphere and its global variation—both key elements in the United Kingdom's study of the global environment;

b. the revelation, by means of radio-astronomical techniques, of 80 species of chemical molecules in inter-stellar space, thereby stimulating ideas about matter in the universe and contributing to the enhancement of man's understanding of chemical reactions at very high temperatures;

c. the success of the Council's synchrotron radiation source at its Daresbury laboratory in determining the molecular structure of the foot-and-mouth disease virus;

d. the observation, by British, Dutch and Spanish astronomers at the William Herschel telescope in the Canary islands, of a high-energy radio pulsar that is slowly extinguishing its celestial companion, the White Dwarf star;

and

e. the use of highly sophisticated techniques, developed in nuclear physics, for studying lake sediments and thus the historical evolution of sulphur dioxide emissions.

I was also pleased to note that the SERC is currently reviewing its policy for wider public education about the science it conducts, focusing particularly on the interests of young people. I congratulate the Council and the academic community on these and other achievements, and look forward to reading about further progress in next year's report.

British Geological Survey

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future funding of the British Geological Survey.

Mr. MacGregor: Last year, pending further work on defining the British Geological Survey's (BGS) core programme and its future financial and funding arrangements, an additional £3 million was made available in 1989-90 with planning additions of £4 million in 1990-91 and £5 million in 1991-92. I have now considered the outcome of this work conducted by the BGS programme board and by a group of officials, from relevant Government Departments and the Natural Environment Research Council (NERC), and have concluded that the survey has the potential to generate more of its income from the users of geological information, and that this should be the source of any funds needed to accelerate the rate at which it conducts its core surveying.

In order to facilitate this process, I am providing additional investment for the national geosciences information service, to allow better access to, and marketing of, the survey's geological information and its interpretation. I am therefore making available to the survey, through the NERC, a further £1 million in 1990-91, £2 million in 1991-92 and £3 million in 1992-93. With these once and for all additions, the science budget income to the BGS should provide a secure base for the development of the survey's activities in the years ahead.

Research Councils Advisory Board

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance he has given the advisory board for the research councils in seeking its advice on the allocation of the science budget in 1990-91 to 1992-93, following his announcement on 15 November, Official Report, columns 272-76; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have written to Sir David Phillips inviting the board's advice. Following is the text of my letter:

Dear David,

"THE SCIENCE BUDGET 1990-91 to 1992-93

In offering the Board's advice for this year's public expenditure survey, you emphasised the importance which the Board attached to the need to build on the foundations laid by the 1988 settlement. You noted that the momentum of that settlement would be lost unless the value of the Science Budget was preserved in real terms. I am glad to say that, despite the difficult economic circumstances surrounding this year's discussions, I have been able to achieve this, and more.

The Government is providing increases for each year of the Survey of £61m, £53m, and £59m. These increases include about £1m in each year in respect of transfers into the Science Budget from the DTI for the British Geological Survey and from another DES Vote for MRC intercalated awards. At £897m the Science Budget in 1990-91 will be about 10 per cent. above the level in 1989-90 in cash terms. Total provision for science in 1990-91 includes receipts from the European Community and non-voted public expenditure by the IPSR from privatisation receipts, and will amount to £904m.

You expressed concern about the profile of last year's settlement. This year's profile of expenditure over the period is heavily influenced by the provision which I have made—£17·2m in 1990-91 and £1·4m in 1991-92—to sustain scientific research programmes while meeting the construction costs of the RRS James Clark Ross. If provision for this ship is excluded from the figures the real terms index of spend (1989-90 = 100) is 102·5 in 1990-91, 103·6 in 1991-92 and 103·3 in 1992-93. I have therefore ensured that, in this year's settlement, the underlying Budget is not only higher in real terms but remains at the higher 1990-91 level over the planning period.

Apart from the ship, I have sought to keep earmarking to the minimum in order to leave the Board with maximum discretion in framing its allocations advice. I intend however to make an allocation of £2 million in each of the Survey years for the Remote Sensing Instrument associated with ERS-2 in line with the Government's declaration at the meeting of the Council of the European Space Agency last October. I should greatly value the Board's advice on what further allocation may be appropriate for earth observation instruments, particularly on Polar Platforms.

Finally, I am also earmarking sums of £1 million, £2 million and £3 million in the PES years, respectively, for the British Geological Survey. This is being made available to enable the national Geosciences Information Service (NGIS) to provide better access to and marketing of the Survey's geological information and its interpretation. This once and for all investment in NGIS concludes the Government's treatment of the BGS as a national scientific commitment; I do not intend to earmark sums for BGS in future years.

The Government is making this increased provision for science in the context of its overall policies for reducing the rate of inflation. I am sure the Board will appreciate the overriding importance of this. At £897 million, the Science Budget in 1990-91 is £189 million higher than expenditure in 1988-89—an increase of 27 per cent. over 2 years. Over the last two public expenditure exercises the Government has increased provision by £490 million; and expenditure in real terms in 1990-91 will be more than 27 per cent higher than in 1979-80. I hope that the scientific community at large will see this as further evidence of the importance which the Government attaches to civil science in the Research Councils and the universities. I look forward to receiving the Board's advice on how the additonal resources for next year can best be distributed.

The Science Budget is a matter of considerable Parliamentary and public interest and I propose therefore to follow precedent by publishing the text of this letter in the form of a Parliamentary Answer."

ENERGY

Community Insulation Projects

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has to assist the least well off to improve their energy efficiency by introducing new arrangements for supporting the work of community insulation projects.

Mr. Wakeham: Community insulation projects play a valuable role in providing basic insulation measures in low income households. My predecessor and I have therefore monitored carefully the impact on the projects of the transition from the community programme to employment training. Despite the success of the special support measures introduced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment during the past year there is now widespread agreement that particularly in today's changed climate of substantially reduced unemployment we cannot continue to rely soley on training programmes for the unemployed to support a national network of insulation projects. There is an increasing need for projects to develop into community insulation businesses, capable of financing themselves directly through the insulation services they provide.

I hope therefore to include powers in the forthcoming social security Bill to enable my Department to introduce a new scheme of grants towards the cost of basic insulation measures in low income households in England, Scotland and Wales. Grants towards the cost of draughtproofing, loft, tank and pipe insulation will be available under the legislation. Details of the proposed scheme, which will cover both owners and tenants in both the public and private sectors, will be announced in due course.

This announcement is good news not only for community insulation projects and for those on low incomes but for all concerned with improving energy efficiency, and I am sure it will be widely welcomed.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture Council

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Brussels Agriculture Council held on 20 and 21 November.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting together with my hon. Friend, the Member for Skipton and Rippon (Mr. Curry), the Parliamentary Secretary in my Department.

The Council had before it important proposals for reforming the Community's regime for agricultural structures. Good progress was made and a number of substantial improvements were made to the text. One component of the Commission's proposal was that in future normal Community reimbursement of member states' payments of hill livestock compensatory allowances should be limited to 45 livestock units per farm with half the normal reimbursement rate between 45 and 90 livestock units. (One livestock unit is defined as 1 cow or $6\frac{2}{3}$ ewes). Although the extent of Community reimbursement has no necessary direct effect on the levels of payments to producers, the proposal was unsatisfactory in that it would discriminate against United Kingdom farms in the less favoured areas most of which are necessarily extensive and limited to the raising of livestock.

As a result of our representations the figures quoted were effectively more than doubled and implementation was delayed for a year until 1 January 1991. However, I was unable to accept the limitations even at this higher level and accordingly I voted against the package which was, however, agreed by a qualified majority.

The Council agreed two measures on the additional cereals co-responsibility levy which forms a part of the stabiliser for that sector. First, it agreed in principle to set the levy at zero for 1989-90 under a new de minimis provision which was, however, altered in negotiation so that it applies to the current marketing year only. Arrangements have already been made to cease collecting levy when the relevant legal text is adopted and to repay levy already collected. Second, the Community agreed in principle to new and better arrangements for determining the level of the additional co-responsibility levy from 1990-91, which should avoid any possibility of repaying levy in future years. This latter decision will ensure that levy is paid at the full rate implied by the size of the Community harvest, will save administrative costs for Government and the industry and will, I am sure, therefore be welcomed by farmers and the cereals trade.

The Council agreed to the issue of 1 per cent. extra milk quota from 1989-90 to all member states and the cancellation of 1 per cent. of existing quota currently suspended. To offset the costs involved reductions will be made in the intervention price of butter by 2½ per cent. and skimmed milk powder by ¾ per cent. from 1 March 1990, and an increase of 15 per cent. made in the supplementary levy from 1 April 1990. In a full year this package could be expected to be neutral in budgetary terms. The outcome is much more satisfactory in this respect than the original Commission proposal. However, because the cost in 1989-90 will not be fully offset by savings I abstained in the vote. Agriculture Ministers will announce details of how the extra quota will be allocated in the United Kingdom as soon as possible.

The Council considered again a proposal concerning veterinary checks in intra-Community trade of meat and meat products. I emphasised the vital need to ensure that the arrangements for the single European market do not prejudice the favourable animal health status of countries like the United Kingdom. Agreement was reached on a useful regulation on mutual assistance in the veterinary area between member states and the Commission.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Security Service Act 1989

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to implement the Security Service Act 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The Security Service Act will come into force on 18 December 1989. I have made an order, published today, to bring the Act into full effect on that date. The Act provides for the appointment of a commissioner and a tribunal. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has decided to appoint Lord Justice Stuart-Smith to be commissioner. The members of the tribunal will be Mr. Justice Simon Brown (president); Sheriff John McInnes (vice-president) and Sir Richard Gaskell. My right hon. Friend and I are grateful that the Commissioner and members of the tribunal have agreed to undertake these important new tasks. I welcome the implementation of this legislation which for the first time puts the security service on a statutory basis and which provides an avenue for the independent consideration of complaints against the service.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 23 November 1989

HEALTH

AIDS

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will respond to the report by the Social Services Committee on AIDS.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend will tomorrow present to the House the Government's observations on the report from the Social Services Committee on AIDS. The committee's report covers a number of important issues raised by HIV infection and AIDS, and the Government's response sets out the strategy which they have adopted to meet the challenge of AIDS.

Consultants

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the expansion rate of 2 per cent. in "Achieving a Balance" has been reached in the 1988 consultant expansion figures.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am pleased to report that these figures are now available and expansion for the year 1987-88 was 3 per cent. This shows that in the first year since the introduction of "Achieving a Balance" the rate of expansion has exceeded the projected level.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the financial support available for haemophiliacs who have become infected with HIV.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government share the universal sense of shock at the unique position of haemophiliacs who have been infected by the AIDS virus, as a result of NHS treatment which they require in order to survive. It was for this reason that the Government made an ex gratia grant to the Haemophilia Society to enable them to establish a special trust fund, now called the Macfarlane Trust, so that special payments could be made to meet the needs of the individuals affected and their families throughout the United Kingdom.

When my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security, who was then the Minister for Health, announced the grant in 1987 he explained that the Government had chosen this course of action because we thought that it would enable help to be given with greater flexibility than could be achieved in any other way. He also made it clear that while the Government regarded the sum involved as appropriate at the time, it would be kept open to review.

The trust has been able to give significant and valuable help to a large number of infected haemophiliacs and their families. But the time has now come to reassess the total sum available to it. The true nature and extent of the needs of the infected haemophiliacs have become much clearer now that the trust is in operation and has been able to examine individual cases in detail. I am satisfied that the Government should now make extra resources available to the trust.

The Government are therefore proposing to make an additional ex gratia payment totalling £19 million bringing to £29 million the total payments made. The House will appreciate that, as before, this is not compensation but a payment which responds to a particular and tragic situation.

In making this new allocation the Government have two objectives in mind:

First, to enable the trust, if the trustees see fit, to make individual payments of £20,000 this year. These would go to each person with haemophilia who is infected with the AIDS virus as a result of treatment with blood products in the United Kingdom or to the family of such a person who has died.

Secondly, to enable the trust to continue on a more generous scale its help to families in particular need.

The Government accept the need to ensure that the fund has adequate resources both to meet its existing commitments and to give more generous help to families in particular need. We will be discussing further with the trust how these objectives should be met.

The ex gratia payment of £19 million is being charged to the Reserve this year. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Department of Health administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England will be increased accordingly.

Payments from the trust will continue to be completely disregarded for the purposes of social security. So any social security payments will be on top and may add significantly to the overall financial support available to particular families.

I am sure that hon. Members will be very grateful, as the Government are to those serving on the Macfarlane Trust for agreeing to serve on the trust and for their excellent work as trustees.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Establishments

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is able to announce his decisions on increases in police establishments for 1990-91.

Mr. Waddington: I am able to approve 1,100 additional police posts for 1990-91; 950 of these are to be allocated to the provincial forces and 150 to the Metropolitan police. In addition I can approve up to 60 posts where I am satisfied that the full cost would be reimbursed by a third party.

Applications from police authorities for increases in establishments have exceeded the number of posts available for allocation and I have therefore had to set priorities. With advice from Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary I have approved increases, with effect from 1 April 1990, as shown in the following table. In a number of cases my approval of extra police posts for forces is conditional on the police authorities' confirmation that their share of funding is available.

Force	Number
Avon and Somerset	10
Bedfordshire	8
Cambridgeshire	7
Cheshire	20
Cleveland	13
Cumbria	19
Derbyshire	19
Devon and Cornwall	17
Dorset	14
Essex	55
Greater Manchester[1]	54
Gwent	2
Hampshire	25
Hertfordshire	18
Humberside	15
Kent	50
Lancashire	28
Leicestershire	53
Lincolnshire	14
Norfolk	46
Northamptonshire	20
Northumbria[1]	38
North Wales	21
North Yorkshire	25
Nottinghamshire	26
South Wales	31
South Yorkshire	20
Staffordshire	14
Suffolk	18
Surrey	10
Sussex[1]	39
Thames Valley	65
Warwickshire	15
West Mercia	32
West Midlands	63
West Yorkshire	20
Wiltshire	13
Total	957

[1] Includes approval for 23 posts for Manchester Airport; 25 for Gatwick Airport and 10 for the Tyne and Wear Metro where the costs are reimbursed by a third party.

Over 90 per cent. of the posts approved will be deployed on operational duties identified by chief constables, mainly at constable level.

I have also retained 51 posts for allocation to regional crime squads specifically for their work in connection with drugs. I await the advice of Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary before I decide on their specific allocation.

In addition to police posts, provision has been made for 1,200 additional civilian posts (150 for the Metropolitan police) which it is intended should help forces to continue to obtain police officers through civilianisation.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the diploma in magisterial law is sufficient to qualify the holder of act as clerk to a magistrates court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Yes. I am not persuaded that there is any need to insist that all clerks are professionally qualified as barristers or solicitors. More are not. The diploma course is, however, being improved and given a stronger practical element. At the same time the Home Office will continue to support members of the courts service wishing to qualify as barristers or solicitors, recognising the need to ensure a good supply of candidates for its senior posts.

ENERGY

British Coal

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether British Coal's external financing requirement for 1989-90 is expected to remain within the external financing limits of £720 million announced on 6 February.

Mr. Wakeham: British Coal's external finance requirements this year have risen sharply. Restructuring and redundancy costs are around £220 million higher than expected, including the payment of around £80 million in respect of redundancies that took place at the end of 1988-89. Mild weather and improved nuclear performance have reduced power station demand for coal. Interest rates are higher than anticipated. Offsetting savings have been achieved; in particular the capital expenditure allocation for 1989-90 has been trimmed from £550 million to £520 million. Taking all these factors into account, I have agreed to raise the corporation's external finance limit by £423 million from £720 million to £1,143 million. This increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure. British Coal's temporary borrowing limit has been increased from £2,500 million to £2,910 million.

To finance these additional requirements a Supplementary Estimate for additional voted loans of £250 million was presented and approved in July, and a further Supplementary Estimate for voted loans of £200 million will shortly be laid before the House.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Royal Mint

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans for the Royal Mint to become an executive agency under the Next Steps initiative.

Mr. Ryder: I am pleased to announce that my right hon. Friend has considered whether the Royal Mint should become a Next Steps executive agency and has decided that it should. Executive agency status would help the Mint further to develop its business on sound commercial lines. The aim will be to give the mint agency status by 1 April 1990.

TRANSPORT

"The Road User and the Law"

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress in implementing proposals contained in the White Paper "The Road User and the Law".

Mr. Atkins: Many of the proposals announced in the White Paper "The Road User and the Law" (Cm 576) will require legislation. This will be brought forward as soon as time is available.

The further consultation outlined in the White Paper on the details of the legislative changes and administrative arrangements for key proposals is well advanced. Copies of the papers on driver retesting, vehicle prohibition and the use of technology for enforcement have been placed in the Library.

The White Paper also identified a number of areas where action can be taken to improve the operation of the road traffic legal system without any change in the law. Further discussions are planned, in particular with the police and other interested organisations, on how these proposals are being taken forward. A number of projects have been added to our research programme to follow up those aspects of the North report which require further research.

Powers were taken in the Road Traffic (Driver Licensing and Information System) Act 1989 to enable the scope of the high risk offenders scheme, which deals with drivers whose dependence on alcohol presents a serious road safety risk, to be extended. Regulations will be introduced to enable the extended scheme to commence in 1990.

One of the key problems identified in the North report was the public concern about the inadequacy of penalties imposed by the courts for the most serious bad driving offences. Under powers introduced in the Criminal Justice Act 1988, the Appeal Court has recently decided to increase the sentences of two drivers convicted of causing death by reckless driving to include a period of imprisonment to reflect the very serious nature of the behaviour involved.

We welcome the announcement by the Magistrates Association of its intention to produce guidelines for sentencing road traffic offenders designed to achieve greater consistency in sentencing.

We aim to strike the right balance between the need to come down hard on those who commit the more serious road traffic offences while acknowledging the scope for use of alternatives to prosecution for minor offences which are designed to educate drivers about the need for safer and more responsible conduct on the road.

Motorway Services, Iver

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the provision of a motorway service area at Iver.

Mr. Atkins: I have now decided to ask consultants to undertake a fresh search for a site to satisfy the need for a motorway service area on the western quadrant of the M25. This is because of the very complex problems which make the provision of a full single-sided site at Iver very unlikely for the foreseeable future.

Street Works

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to introduce legislation to reform the Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950.

Mr. Atkins: It remains our intention to introduce legislation to reform the Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950 along the lines of the proposals contained in the consultation paper issued in May, a copy of which is in the Library. A Bill will be introduced as soon as a suitable opportunity can be found.

ENVIRONMENT

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the proposed reorganisation of the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I very much welcome the advice that we have received from the Nature Conservancy Council on the arrangements that it would be appropriate to make, within the context of three independent councils for England, Scotland and Wales, to ensure the continuation of a strong and consistent science base for their work, and to address issues that have a Great Britain and international dimension. The Government have also taken account of the wide range of advice received from the conservation and scientific communities and the NCC's paper on "Policy and Science" which was published earlier this month.

I am glad to note that there is no disagreement with the NCC on the main elements of the organisational structure that will be required. The Government intend to place on the successor bodies to the present NCC a statutory duty to form a joint committee comprising the chairmen and other representatives from those bodies to which they will be required to remit matters calling for collective consideration. They will have joint statutory responsibilities, in addition to those which they will exercise for their respective areas, to:

(a) provide advice (including advice to Government) and disseminate knowledge about nature conservation issues with a Great Britain or international dimension; and

(b) establish common standards for designation, research, monitoring and data analysis and to commission or support research on matters affecting Great Britain and international responsibilities.

The councils will be required to ensure that adequate and appropriate resources are provided to undertake the committee's identified tasks.

These arrangements complement our determination to ensure that each council is adequately provided with scientific advice for its individual responsibilities. They will ensure that effective scientific and co-ordination services are available to enable the councils to meet those responsibilities which can best be discharged collectively and that they are able to tender authoritative advice to Government on Great Britain, United Kingdom and international matters.

The Government intend to make appropriate arrangements for participation by organisations in Northern Ireland to secure full coverage of the United Kingdom.

The NCC has suggested that the joint committee should have an independent chairman appointed by the Government. In our view, however, such an arrangement would detract from the concept of the collective responsibility of the successor bodies jointly to ensure a coherent scientific basis for their work and agree the advice to be tendered to Government. The arrangements for chairing the committee will, therefore, be a matter for the committee to determine. We intend, however, that the committee should be assisted by independent assessors appointed by the Government. It is our intention to seek nominations for assessors from leading scientific institutions.

I am sure that these arrangements will secure the advance of nature conservation in all four countries, from a sound scientific foundation, and take forward the work of the present council (to which tribute is due for the splendid work it has done) in a manner that is appropriate to the 1990s.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Hanoi (Visit)

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement, with reference to humanitarian aid, about the visit to Hanoi by his officials.

Mr. Chalker: An official from the British embassy in Bangkok, accompanied by an adviser from ODA, will visit Cambodia in the early to middle part of December. The main object will be to review the humanitarian aid programmes being conducted by British non-governmental organisations and international agencies such as UNICEF with Cambodia, and to consider how best Her Majesty's Government could increase their input into these programmes through the joint funding scheme with the NGOs.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farm and Countryside Initiative

Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for the farm and countryside initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The value of the farm and countryside initiative in encouraging rural-based projects of benefit to local communities is now widely recognised. In order to ensure that the initiative continues to met that objective, I have decided that it should be reconstituted. From 1 January 1990, the scheme will operate through agricultural colleges which will be given the opportunity to develop suitable projects in their areas. I am sure that this will be welcomed with enthusiasm.

In addition, I am pleased to announce that the National Westminster bank has generously agreed to continue to act as the national sponsor for the farm and countryside initiative, and has offered to double its previous funding.

I am confident that these new arrangements will provide fresh impetus for the initiative to go forward into the 1990s and, in stimulating activity at local level, to continue to make a valuable contribution for the benefit of rural communities.

PRIME MINISTER

Advisory Committee on Business Appointments

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the members of her advisory committee on business appointments.

The Prime Minister: The present membership of the advisory committee on business appointments is as follows:

Lord Carlisle of Bucklow—Chairman
Sir Patrick Nairne—Deputy Chairman
Sir Trevor Holdsworth
Admiral Sir Anthony Morton
Sir David Orr
Mr. Merlyn Rees
Lord Thomson of Monifieth

Lord Thomson was appointed to the committee on 1 November. He replaced Lord Barber of Wentbridge whose second term of appointment had come to an end.

SCOTLAND

NHS (Competitive Tendering)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by how much the figures previously announced of savings from competitive tendering in the National Health Service will be affected by requirements to pay value added tax.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The figures already given will not be affected by requirements to pay VAT. Value added tax will continue to be recoverable for contracts awarded up to 1 December 1989. For contracts awarded from that date VAT will also continue to be recoverable where the cost of a private contract plus VAT, after taking account of redundancy costs, exceeds the cost of an in-house contract. Except in a few cases I expect therefore that VAT will continue to be recoverable but where it is not the proportion of unrecoverable VAT to overall savings will be small.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount of moneys released for use by health boards as a result of competitive tendering in Scotland since December 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since December 1987 more than 150 contracts have been awarded estimated to release over £59 million during the periods of the contracts and this money is available for investment in direct patient care. Savings of this order could buy over 5,500 kidney dialysis machines or pay for 19,500 hip replacement operations or about 9,000 heart by-pass operations.

EMPLOYMENT

Key Training

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees of his Department, and of what grades, have been seconded to Key Training of 10 Eaton place, Reading, in each of the last five years; and how many of these have since left the Department.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on Monday 13 November (Official Report, column 55).

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new managerial posts, with no workplace inspection duties, will be created as a result of the implemention of the Martin report on reorganisation of the Health and Safety Executive senior management.

Mr. Nicholls: Seven new regional director of field operations posts will be created through reallocation of the functions of existing senior staff.

Seven new regional support manager posts at senior executive officer level will also be created to improve the support given to the Health and Safety Executive's professional staff in the regions. Their creation will be offset by a reduction in headquarters staff.

Mr. Andrew Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he expects the target of 100 construction inspectors to be in post for the Health and Safety Executive by 1990 to be achieved.

Mr. Nicholls: The HSE already has 100 inspectors regularly engaged in construction activities.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if it is planned to publish the Health and Safety Executive plan of work for 1990.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission's plan of work for 1989-90 and beyond—which covers the work of the executive, as the commission's operational arm—was published in May 1989. The commission's plan for 1990-91 and beyond will be published in the spring.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if it is planned to publish the Martin report on the reorganisation of Health and Safety Executive senior management.

Mr. Nicholls: This report on a review of the HSE's field operations was commissioned by the executive for internal management purposes. Copies were distributed widely among HSE staff at the time the executive received it in February this year, but there are no plans to publish the report.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the average length of time elapsing between basic inspection visits by the factory inspectorate and subsequent written communications with employers and employees, for each area office, for the last year for which figures are available;

(2) what is the average length of time elapsing between receipt of (i) a verbal and (ii) a written complaint, and the subsequent investigation by the Health and Safety Executive, at each area office, for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: The wide variety of circumstances covered by the terms employed would make comparisons of the kind requested meaningless, and the information is therefore collected as part of the HSE's monitoring systems.

The majority of complaints made to the executive, and all which are serious in nature, are investigated and most are cleared within a month of receipt.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current average amount of training, in days, received by inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive, to enable them to deal with (i) the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations, (ii) the Control of Noise at Work Regulations and (iii) the new Electricity at Work Regulations.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the current average amount of training in days received by inspectors to enable them to deal with the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations is not available.

Training is ongoing and is underpinned by written guidance produced for inspectors.

Training for inspectors in respect of the forthcoming regulations on noise and electricity will follow a similar pattern.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current estimated cost of implementation of the Martin report on reorganisation of Health and Safety Executive senior management, in fiscal years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Nicholls: Final details of the reorganisation are still being discussed within the HSE. It is expected that extra costs will be offset by savings from integration of certain functions currently carried out in several HSE divisions.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of premises currently awaiting fire certification by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: At 31 March 1989, the number of premises awaiting fire certification by the Health and Safety Executive under the Fire Certificates (Special Premises) Regulations 1976 was 205. A majority of the outstanding premises already have valid fire certificates issued under either the Factories Act 1961 or the Fire Precautions Act 1971. The HSE has given priority to those premises which had no existing certificates.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 24 November 1989

NORTHERN IRELAND

Subsidised Rents

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much funding, excluding housing benefits, has been allocated to subsidise the rents of Northern Ireland Housing Executive private dwellings in the next financial year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The amount of housing grant payable in the current financial year is estimated at £112 million. The grant payable in 1990-91 will be calculated after my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State makes his public expenditure statement. The arrangements for financing the Northern Ireland Housing Executive include payment of an annual housing grant based on the difference between the executive's approved revenue expenditure and its revenue income, mainly from rents.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

A-levels

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of the staying on rates for those studying for A-levels in (a) 11-to-18 schools, (b) sixth form colleges, (c) tertiary, (d) and further education colleges, following 11-to-16 schooling.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The estimated proportion of 16-year-olds studying for A-levels in England in 1987-88 was as follows:

	per cent.
Schools[1,2]	18·0
Sixth form colleges[2]	3·6
Tertiary and further education[3,4]	2·9

[1] All schools (including the private sector) excluding sixth form colleges and tertiary colleges.
[2] Students on first year of an 'A' level course.
[3] Maintained and direct grant colleges.
[4] Full-time and sandwich students only.

Pupil Numbers

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list (a) by local education authorities and (b) nationally the proportions of children attending (i) grammar, (ii) comprehensive and (iii) secondary modern schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information requested is given as at January 1989 in the following table.

Proportion of children attending Grammar, [1]Comprehensive and Secondary Modern schools January 1989

	Grammar	Comprehensive[1]	Secondary Modern
Barking	0·0	100·0	0·0
Barnet	6·8	93·2	0·0
Bexley	13·2	68·8	18·0
Brent	0·0	100·0	0·0
Bromley	8·0	92·0	0·0
Croydon	0·0	100·0	0·0
Ealing	0·0	100·0	0·0
Enfield	7·8	92·2	0·0
Haringey	0·0	100·0	0·0
Harrow	0·0	100·0	0·0
Havering	0·0	100·0	0·0
Hillingdon	0·0	98·5	1·5
Hounslow	0·0	100·0	0·0
Kingston upon Thames	21·7	0·0	78·3
Merton	0·0	100·0	0·0
Newham	0·0	100·0	0·0
Redbridge	9·5	90·5	0·0
Richmond upon Thames	0·0	100·0	0·0
Sutton	27·0	32·9	40·1
Waltham Forest	0·0	100·0	0·0
Inner London	0·0	100·0	0·0
Birmingham	8·6	91·4	0·0
Coventry	0·0	100·0	0·0
Dudley	0·0	100·0	0·0
Sandwell	0·0	100·0	0·0
Solihull	0·0	100·0	0·0
Walsall	6·6	93·4	0·0
Wolverhampton	3·3	96·7	0·0
Knowsley	0·0	100·0	0·0
Liverpool	0·0	99·7	0·3
St. Helens	0·0	100·0	0·0
Sefton	0·0	100·0	0·0
Wirral	18·0	62·7	19·4
Bolton	0·0	100·0	0·0
Bury	0·0	100·0	0·0
Manchester	0·0	100·0	0·0
Oldham	0·0	100·0	0·0
Rochdale	0·0	100·0	0·0
Salford	0·0	100·0	0·0
Stockport	0·0	100·0	0·0
Tameside	0·0	100·0	0·0
Trafford	34·0	4·4	61·6
Wigan	0·0	100·0	0·0
Barnsley	0·0	100·0	0·0
Doncaster	0·0	100·0	0·0
Rotherham	0·0	100·0	0·0
Sheffield	0·0	100·0	0·0
Bradford	0·0	100·0	0·0
Calderdale	11·9	68·0	20·1
Kirklees	2·1	94·6	3·3
Leeds	0·0	100·0	0·0
Wakefield	0·0	100·0	0·0
Gateshead	0·0	100·0	0·0
Newcastle-upon-Tyne	0·0	100·0	0·0
North Tyneside	0·0	100·0	0·0
South Tyneside	0·0	100·0	0·0
Sunderland	0·0	100·0	0·0
Isles of Scilly	0·0	100·0	0·0
Avon	2·7	97·3	0·0
Bedfordshire	0·0	100·0	0·0
Berkshire	7·9	84·3	7·7
Buckinghamshire	32·5	29·4	38·1
Cambridgeshire	0·0	100·0	0·0

	Grammar	Comprehensive[1]	Secondary Modern
Cheshire	0·0	100·0	0·0
Cleveland	0·0	100·0	0·0
Cornwall	0·0	100·0	0·0
Cumbria	0·0	100·0	0·0
Derbyshire	0·0	100·0	0·0
Devon	8·0	79·6	12·4
Dorset	8·4	81·4	10·2
Durham	0·0	100·0	0·0
East Sussex	0·0	100·0	0·0
Essex	5·8	94·2	0·0
Gloucestershire	13·1	83·0	3·9
Hampshire	0·0	100·0	0·0
Hereford and Worcester	0·0	100·0	0·0
Hertfordshire	0·0	100·0	0·0
Humberside	0·0	100·0	0·0
Isle of Wight	0·0	100·0	0·0
Kent	19·8	47·8	32·4
Lancashire	3·5	90·8	5·7
Leicestershire	0·0	100·0	0·0
Lincolnshire	22·0	43·3	34·6
Norfolk	0·0	100·0	0·0
North Yorkshire	3·6	93·5	2·9
Northamptonshire	0·0	100·0	0·0
Northumberland	0·0	100·0	0·0
Nottinghamshire	0·0	100·0	0·0
Oxfordshire	0·0	100·0	0·0
Shropshire	2·4	94·9	2·7
Somerset	0·0	100·0	0·0
Staffordshire	0·0	100·0	0·0
Suffolk	0·0	100·0	0·0
Surrey	0·0	100·0	0·0
Warwickshire	8·9	66·6	24·5
West Sussex	0·0	100·0	0·0
Wiltshire	3·7	91·6	4·7
England	3·4	92·7	3·9

[1] Comprehensive includes middle deemed secondary schools and technical schools.

Non-designated Courses

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, if he will list the categories of courses that are still listed as non-designated courses.

Mr. Jackson: Higher education courses which are designated for mandatory student awards purposes are those which fall within the terms of regulation 10 of the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1989 (SI 1989 No. 1458), a copy of which I am sending to the hon. Member. No central list is kept of courses which are not designated.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the amount spent by local education authorities on non-designated advance course grants.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available in the precise form requested.

In 1987-88, the latest academic year for which figures are available, local education authorities in England and Wales paid a total of £158·3 million in discretionary awards made under section 2 of the Education Act 1962, as amended, to students attending non-designated courses of either higher or further education.

In-service Training

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what changes he has made in the method of funding of training grants to local education authorities in the financial year 1990-91; and what effects he expects these changes to have on the availability of in-service training courses.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The LEA training grants scheme in 1990-91 will support LEA expenditure of £122 million on national priority areas at a 65 per cent. rate of grant—an increase of £38 million over 1989-90. Adjustments have been made to the national priority rate of grant—from 70 per cent. to 65 per cent.—and to the amount of support given to expenditure on local priorities. Overall the effect will be that local education authorities will be able to spend more on training on national priorities, particularly the national curriculum. My right hon. Friend therefore expects more training to be available for national priorities, especially the implementation of the national curriculum and other provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988.

School Sport Forum

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the Government intend to respond to the School Sport Forum report.

Mrs. Rumbold: My hon. Friend the Minister for Sport and I will be publishing the Government's response to the School Sport Forum report on Monday 27 November. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses on that day. As our response emphasises, the Government fully recognise the importance of sport for young people and the value of close co-operation between providers.

Agricultural and Food Research Council

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the annual report of the Agricultural and Food Research Council for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The annual report of the Agricultural and Food Research Council has been submitted to me under the requirements of the Science and Technology Act 1965, and a copy is being laid before the House today.

I was most interested to read about the council's achievements during what has clearly been another challenging year. I was particularly impressed by and interested in:

(a) the initiation of a new programme of plant molecular biology to be undertaken in universities and Agricultural and Food Research Council institute-based research groups throughout the United Kingdom. This programme will help to maintain the United Kingdom lead in an area of work of great importance for United Kingdom science and industry;

(b) the creation of a research unit at the university of Oxford on agriculture and the environment. This will bring a new focus to such questions as the enrichment of the agricultural environment, sensitive agricultural practices and the conservation of plants and animals;

(c) work on animal health including the identification of the seal plague virus;

(d) work on food safety: the improvement of techniques for the rapid and precise detection of bacteria; and the development of methods of modelling and thus predicting the likely growth of bacteria on foods;

(e) the studies of the molecular genetics of the Streptomyces bacteria which could lead to the production of modern designer antibiotics; and

(f) the implementation of new programmes in studentship and fellowship allocations which will help to train the high-quality manpower required to ensure the United Kingdom's progress in plant and animal biotechnology.

I congratulate the council on these and its many other achievements and look forward to reading about further progress in next year's report.

TRANSPORT

"Trade Routes to the Future"

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is planning to take with reference to the recent Confederation of British Industry report "Trade Routes to the Future".

Mr. Atkins: The CBI report urges a more ambitious and urgent approach to investment in transport infrastructure. That is exactly what the Government are doing. The road programme has been doubled and so will the roads vote by 1992-93. British Rail's investment is at its highest level for a quarter of a century and will increase further particularly on rail freight and London commuter services. It is also investing heavily for the Channel tunnel. London Regional Transport's investment is at record levels and is set for a further large increase. The Jubilee line extension alone will be the first major addition to the underground network for 25 years. The Civil Aviation Authority plans major additions to airspace capacity and Manchester airport is to increase its terminal capacity by 50 per cent.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he proposes to introduce to lessen the congestion of road traffic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The expanded programme of trunk road widening and new construction announced in "Roads for Prosperity" will relieve congestion on major roads between cities and towns. In urban areas road improvements, traffic management and public transport have valuable contributions to make.

London Assessment Studies

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make available copies of the final east London assessment study, free of charge, to people living in the study area; and if he will make a statement on consultation.

Mr. Atkins: Free copies of the reports will be available for members of the public to consult in borough libraries throughout the study area. Free summaries will also be readily available. Details of the arrangements for obtaining public comment will be given when the consultant's report is published next month.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of the east London assessment study phase 11A study; and what is the estimated cost of the east London assessment study 11B study.

Mr. Atkins: Stage 2 of east London assessment study is expected to cost about £1·75 million, but that sum is not readily apportionable between stages 2A and 2B.

Cost-Benefit Analysis

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what value is put on open space in cost-benefit analyses relating to proposals to build new roads.

Mr. Atkins: Public open space taken for road schemes, like all land acquired for road schemes, is valued in the cost-benefit analysis on the basis of market price as assessed by the district valuer, who is independent of the Department. Cost-benefit analysis is only one part of the total appraisal procedure for road schemes. Decisions are taken in the light of a comprehensive assessment which includes environmental effects, such as the effect on amenity and nature and environmental conservation. Under the terms of the Acquisition of Land Act 1981, if open space or common land is taken for a road scheme, the Department provides equivalent land in exchange or the compulsory purchase order is subject to special parliamentary procedures. The current approach to the valuation of public open space, like all elements in the appraisal of roads, is kept under review.

Freight

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his Department's estimates of the proportion and value of freight carried in the United Kingdom by (a) rail, (b) road and (c) water for each year since 1979; and what are his estimates for the next five years.

Mr. Atkins: The proportions of goods lifted and moved by transport mode in Great Britain between 1978 and 1988 are published in table 1.13 of "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1978-1988", a copy of which is in the Library. Information is not available on the value of freight or of estimates by all modes for future years. However, forecasts of goods moved by heavy goods road vehicles are given in table 2.45 of the publication referred to above and in "National Road Traffic Forecasts (Great Britain) 1989" which is also in the Library.

M1/A1 Link

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects the M1 to A1 link road to be completed to the west of Kettering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Work is now completed on the contract for the A605 interchange and is in hand on two more of the 11 contracts for the link road. We expect to let four more contracts this financial year—for the Catthorpe interchange, the section from Rothwell to Kettering, the Kettering southern bypass and an advance railway bridge on the Kettering northern bypass.

With statutory procedures still outstanding, including public inquiries, on the Catthorpe to Rothwell section we cannot give a firm forecast for its completion or for completion of the remainder of the link road. We shall let the remaining contracts as quickly as possible.

Road Building Programme

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the proposed increase in the road building programme.

Mr. Atkins: We have received a large number of representations from organisations and individuals about the proposed increase in the trunk road building programme in England. Many have been supportive of our plans.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what improvements in service to its customers and the general public have followed the establishment of the vehicle inspectorate as an executive agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I am pleased to say that the agency has already introduced a number of worthwhile improvements aimed at improving its service to customers and furthering road safety. The most recent initiative is to offer operators of heavy goods and public service vehicles the option of requesting an annual test or retest on a Saturday. This extension to the normal working week will operate first on a trial basis to test the demand at the Aberdeen, Edinburgh, Liverpool, Sheffield, Stoke-on-Trent, Kidderminster, Northampton and Ipswich heavy goods vehicle testing stations.

Following a succ ssful trial at selected locations, a brake performance check service will be made available from next January on a national basis. The service is mainly intended for operators and repairers of heavy goods and public service vehicles.

The inspectorate has also opened its training centre in Bristol to the private sector and has run a number of courses on brake testing and the inspection of public service and heavy goods vehicles. Training courses are also being run at operators' own premises where this is preferred.

The manuals for the inspection of heavy goods and public service vehicles, cars and motorcycles are now available from the inspectorate's operations centre, Swansea, in addition to the normal HMSO outlets. A motorcycle test guide aimed at owners who undertake their own servicing and repairs will be available in the new year. This is being published by HMSO and sponsored by the Norwich Union Insurance Company. It will be sold through high street bookshops, as well as those of HMSO.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

El Salvador

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what humanitarian aid Her Majesty's Government have sent to El Salvador to assist the victims of the civil war; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have provided £100,000 through the International Committee of the Red Cross for its emergency relief programme in El Salvador. This is in addition to Britain's share of the European Community's 300,000 ecu emergency assistance.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. France Monien

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the reasons for the refusal of a certificate of naturalisation to Mr. France Monien, a Crown servant in Mauritius.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Section 44(2) of the British Nationality Act 1981 relieves the Home Secretary of the obligation to assign any reason for the grant or refusal of any application under this Act where the decision is at his discretion. My right hon. Friend is not prepared to make an exception in this case.

Referral of Legal Cases

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all cases since 1964 which the Home Secretary has referred to (a) the Court of Appeal and (b) for re-examination by the Director of Public Prosecutions, where all the normal legal processes have been exhausted.

Mr. John Patten: Under the provisions of section 17(1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 (which replaced section 19 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1907) my right hon. and learned Friend will normally refer to the Court of Appeal the case of someone who has been convicted on indictment, if there is some new evidence or other consideration of substance which has not been before the courts and which appears to cast doubt on the safety of the conviction. He is also prepared to refer cases under this section, where there is doubt about the validity of a sentence. It is not our practice to refer such cases to the Director of Public Prosecutions, although the director's advice may be sought from time to time in individual cases.

Since 1964, the following cases have been referred to the Court of Appeal under section 19 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1907, or section 17(1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968:

Year	Conviction	Sentence
1964	Scudder, Henry Cheesman, Alan Ford, John Fraser, James Oliva, Joseph Pedrini, Ricardo	Lennon, Gordon Leslie O'Connor, John Augustus Ryan, Thomas John Fitzsimmons, Dennis James Cohen, David Julian
1965	Irvine, William Patrick Wharton, Raymond Hall, Thomas Hinds, Alfred George	Brookes, Maurice Joseph
1966	Brett, Terence David Norman, Richard	Emmins, John
1967	Griffin, Daniel John
1968	Forbes, Ralph Khar Hobbs, John Patrick Jones, Lee Anthony McKenna, Kenneth Snowden, Robert Knight	Witt, David Arthur
1969	Brandon, James Prentice Tourick, Ronald Michael	Bardoe, James Noble Coleman, Barry Hunter, Michael Stephen Bell, Henry

Year	Conviction	Sentence
1970	Trevarthen, Peter Cunliffe, Francis Devers, John Thomas Curbishley, William George Stupple, William John	Lucas, Raymond Joseph King, Victor Herbert
1971	Dickens Arthur Thomas Dickens, David Leslie Szulimowski, Derek Sidney	Hulme, William Ernest Locker, John Victor
1972	Banjo, Ade Luvaglio, Michael Stafford, Dennis Goodwin, Matthew Murphy, Patrick Colin	Gunnee, John Roger
1973	Saunders, John Frederick Dougherty, Luke Clement Eastelow, John Arthur	Turner, John Eric
1974	Najar, Munthar Cooper, David McMahon, Michael Graham	Whitehead, Keith
1975	O'Connor, Michael Kevin Anderson, Kenneth Lattimore, Colin George Leighton, Ronald William Salih, Ahmet Shilhan, Peter Charles	Johnston, Harry Wilkinson, Edward John
1976	Singh, Bedi, Randip Singh, Gurmeet Singh, Bakshi Singh, Charan Benhamin, Donald Sylvester Cooper, David McMahon, Michael Graham Leeman, Peter Elias Murphy, Patrick Colin Davis, William Albert Shields, David Trevor Patrick, Steven Hugh Telfer, Fabian Augustus Naughton, Thomas Anthony	Hurst, William Michael Daniel, Eric George Cook, Phylus May Khan, Shenshi Mitchell, Thomas Doughty, John
1977	Hands, Simon Adair, Roger	Adams, Harry Thomas
1978	Brown, David Cowley, Alan Morgan, William Bennett, Henry Albert Winter, Cameron James Taylor, Albert Edward
1979	Winston, Anne Harper, David Stocks, David Stanley	Davey, Michael Joseph Kitchen, Kenneth Harry Jones, Robert Essuah, Benjamin Yau Underhill, Gareth Paul Durrani, Ijaz Ahmed
1980	McDonagh, Richard Casey, Richard Davies, David William	—
1981	Chard, Alan John	Tate, Robert David Maan, Gurmail Singh
1982	Saltman, Bernard Brian Tarrant, Edward Charles Wakefield, Ian Ferguson Neal, John Stephen Woods, Bernard John Cousins, Alverstone Edmond Todd, Percival George	Moore, Peter Damien John Watts, Richard David
1983	Bhaskar, Vinod Kumar Russell, Mervyn John Scott Abrol, Kewal Krishan	Cooper, Leonard William
1984	McDonagh, Michael McDonagh, Patrick Harrison, Melvyn Copeland, William Ian Mycock, Geoffrey Gilfellan, Ian Charles Hartley, Hugo North, Norman Berry Sample, Alan John Szpythma, Michael Gordon, Keith Schnepel, Dieter Asquith, Adrian Harold, Roy	Harper, Andrew Bown, Paul John Butler, James Edward
1985	Fellows, Keith Noel Clarke, Ernest Adolphus Mycock, Anthony Willis, Alan Anthony	Lunnon, Khaliq Hossain James, Irene Ingrid Showell, John Joseph McKenna, Dean Robert
1986	Jarrom, Rodney Robert Mapstone, Kerry Andrew Livesey, Margaret Edwards, Derek Goronwy	Jenkinson, Karl Lawrence, Roy Fountain, Peter Bovis, John Edward Celisse, Paul Arthur Buck, Kevin John Cain, Douglas Roy Critchlow, Janine Patricia Phelan, Michael Chamberlaine, Sharal Limb, Martin Ernest Meah, Farouk Creary, Shirley Elaine
1987	Andrews, Aurilius Benedict Hickey, Michael Joseph Hickey, Vincent Robinson, James Cahill, Michael Peter Devaney, Phillip Callaghan, Hugh Hill, Patrick Hunter, Robert McIlkenny, Noel Power, William Walker, John Bargh, Patrick Joseph	Price, Gareth David Valentine, Jason Richard Clayton, Shane Stanley Lyons, James Teal, Graham Kite, Christopher Joseph Jones, Frederick Curtis, Mark Lawrence Whitworth, George Edward Buswell, David Lincoln, Timothy William Parsons, Royston Michael Tourie, Albert Saidu Curtis, Anthony Dean Gibbon, Christopher Cade, Gary Michael Blanco, Leopoldo Findlay, Raymond Hayden, Darren Earl Heal, Kevin John Sheehan, Michael Wlodarczyk, Jan Wood, Jeffrey Walker, Gerald Francis Camponi, Christina Ellington, Clare Hardie, John James Coaten, Glynn

Year	Conviction	Sentence
1988	O'Callaghan, Daniel	Rowley, David Alan
	Lacy, Gerard Francis	Rathbone, Gary Michael
		Lynas, Gerrard
		Demicol, John
		Seafield, Susan Elizabeth
		Patrick, Robert John
		Hart, Lesley Jane
		Hudd, Nigel Paul
		Prince, Michael
		Brumwell, Michael
		Seager, Jeremy Hugh
		Morrison, Everton
		Brown, Ivan Michael
		Baker, Norman Russell
		McGrath, Marie Ann
		McDonald, Scott William
		McRea, Angus
		Benham, Robert Steven
		Grant, Alan Adam
		Beevers, William
		Stevens, Susanagh Marie
		Clayton, Andrew Albert
		Ward, Darren Ernest
1989	Howard, Mark William	Tolladay, Vincent James
	Oliwiecki, Ronald	Steed, Gareth
	Armstrong, Patrick	Atkinson, John Peter
	Conlon, Gerard Patrick	Smith, Robert Brian
	Hill, Paul Michael	Buttimer, Michael
	Richardson, Carole Margaret	Anthony
		Franklin, John Francis

Birmingham Six

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new representations he has received concerning the case of the Birmingham Six; and what consideration he has given to referral of their case to the Court of Appeal.

Mr. John Patten: Since my reply of 16 November 1989 to the hon. Member at column 449, we have continued to receive representations from Members of both Houses of Parliament and from members of the public, proposing that the case be referred again to the Court of Appeal.

Careful consideration is given to all representations received about the safety of the convictions, but at present, my right hon. and learned Friend can find no grounds to justify his referring this case back to the Court of Appeal. He is, however, always ready to consider new evidence or other considerations of substance which have not been before the courts and which appear to cast doubt upon the safety of any conviction.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Labelling

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress with nutritional labelling.

Mr. Maclean: We are taking an active part in negotiation of the European Commission's nutrition labelling proposals and hope that a common position will be reached soon. The proposals are similar to the Ministry's nutrition labelling guidelines and provide for a voluntary system of nutrition labelling with a mandatory format so that consumers can compare products more easily. Nutrition labelling would be compulsory only when a nutrition claim was made. There is no provision for a three-year lead-in period to allow labels to be changed and, given the close resemblance of the guidelines to the Commission proposals. I hope that manufacturers and retailers will be encouraged to provide as much nutrition information as possible within their resources according to the guidelines until Community legislation is in place. I also refer the hon. Member to the debate on nutritional labelling in Standing Committee on 1 November 1989.

Pelagic Drift Net Fishing

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if any British fishers or registered ships are currently employing large-scale pelagic drift net fishing.

Mr. Curry: It is not the practice of British fishers or British registered ships to employ large-scale pelagic drift nets.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of large scale pelagic drift net fishing.

Mr. Curry: Where appropriate, the Government support the introduction of suitable management procedures so that fisheries are conducted on a rational and sustainable basis, with due regard also to the conservation of the wider marine environment. Should large-scale pelagic drift net fishing be found to impact adversely on marine resources, we would support appropriate measures being taken.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the impact on marine resources of large-scale pelagic drift net fishing.

Mr. Curry: For the south Pacific, there is information which suggests that the current extent and practices in the large-scale pelagic drift net fisheries are likely to affect marine resources adversely.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether large-scale pelagic drift net fishing takes place in waters over which Her Majesty's Government exercises jurisdiction.

Mr. Curry: No.

CIVIL SERVICE

Advisers

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he has any plans to introduce new contracts for special advisers.

Mr. Luce: There are no such plans.

THE ARTS

Museums

Mr. Adley: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his policy towards encouraging the national museums to raise their own funds.

Mr. Luce: I continue to attach high importance to encouraging national museums and galleries to develop self-reliance and diversification of funding. I congratulate the institutions on their achievements to date, and on becoming more professional in their management in recent years. I was delighted to announce on 23 November that MEPC plc is donating £1 million over five years to Sir John Soane's museum towards the repair of the fabric of the building. I am pleased to have been able to match this generous offer.

Indemnity Scheme

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether there has been any change in the forecast of liabilities under the Government indemnity scheme.

Mr. Luce: The forecast total liability in 1989-90 for indemnities under section 16 (2) of the National Heritage Act 1980 was £350 million, to cover objects on loan to non-national museums, galleries and other institutions in the United Kingdom, as shown in paragraph 6 (c) of the introduction to the estimate class XIII, vote 1. The Government will now be giving further indemnities in respect of loans to non-national institutions which will increase the total outstanding liability for the period from 25 November 1989 to 30 June 1990 to £600 million.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Legislation

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will consider publishing a Green Paper on the subject of drafting of legislation, its scrutiny and subsequent interpretation, following the rejection by the Lord Chancellor of the proposal for the scrutiny of selected Bills by High Court judges, contained in the petition to this House of 17 April by George Bednar.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have no plans to do so.

ENERGY

Nuclear and Renewable Energy

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the percentage and amount of his Department's research and development budget now allocated to nuclear and renewable energy projects; and if he has any plans to review the priorities with a view to adjusting the present balance, consequential to his statement on the future nuclear power station construction programme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Department's plans for expenditure on nuclear and renewable energy research and development in the years 1989-90 to 1991-92 are set out in the table. The Department's expenditure on research and development is kept under review.

Expected expenditure by the Department of Energy on research and development

	1989-90		1990-91		1991-92
	£ million	per cent.	£ million	per cent.	£ million	per cent.
Total	174·6		144·9		140·2
Renewable energy	18·6	10·7	21·1	14·6	22·6	16·1
Nuclear energy	135·3	77·5	101·7	70·2	94·9	67·7

Source:

"R & D 1989—Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development", HMSO October 1989, page 143.

Notes:

1. With effect from 1 April 1990, responsibility for expenditure on nuclear safety research will be transferred to the Health and Safety Commission, with a consequent reduction in Department of Energy expenditure in 1990-91 of £22·7 million.
2. The figures for nuclear energy research and development include expected contributions to United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority restructuring costs of the order of £25 million in 1989-90, £25 million in 1990-91 and £10 million in 1991-92.

DEFENCE

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military ambulances are available for use by a civilian power in the west midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A total of 54 service ambulances have been allocated for deployment in the west midlands if required to assist in the maintenance of essential accident and emergency services for the civilian population.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ambulances from (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Navy and (c) the Royal Air Force have been deployed on civilian duties in the current ambulance dispute.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To date, 54 Army ambulances, six Royal Air Force ambulances and no Royal Navy ambulances have been deployed on civilian duties in the current ambulance dispute.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel from (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Navy and (c) the Royal Air Force have been deployed on civilian duties in the current ambulance dispute.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To date, 228 Army personnel, 54 Royal Air Force personnel and no Royal Navy personnel have been deployed on civilian duties in the current ambulance dispute.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of the use of Army vehicles during the ambulance staffs' dispute.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is too early to provide an estimate of the cost of the use of Army vehicles since the calculation is dependent, among other things, both on the length of the dispute and the number of vehicles finally involved. The Department of Health has undertaken to meet all the extra costs incurred by the Ministry of Defence.

Incident (Stornoway)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about an incident involving a fishing vessel Scotia and a Royal Naval submarine off Stornoway on 13 November; what action he proposes to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At 2156 hours on Monday 13 November, some 8·5 nm east south east of the Butt of Lewis, the fishing vessel Scotia was towed astern for a short distance by a Royal Navy submarine, which was on exercise in the area and which had snagged the fishing vessel's gear. The submarine, on becoming aware of the incident, conducted a full visual search to confirm that neither the fishing vessel involved nor any other vessel in the area was in any difficulty, then proceeded with her exercise. The circumstances of the incident are being investigated.

Biological and Chemical Weapons

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what manufacturing capacity the United Kingdom proposes for biological and chemical weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

PRIME MINISTER

Billericay

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make an official visit to Billericay.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kurdish People

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings with Kurdish groups and visits to Kurdish-speaking areas have been undertaken by Her Majesty's embassy staff in Ankara; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The staff of Her Majesty's embassy in Ankara undertake visits to all parts of Turkey, including Kurdish-speaking areas, during the course of their duties, and maintain contact with groups representing a wide range of opinion.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings with Kurdish organisations and visits to Kurdish-speaking areas of Iraq have been undertaken by staff of Her Majesty's embassy in Baghdad since January 1988.

Mr. Waldegrave: The British embassy maintains contact with a wide range of groups and individuals in Iraq including some of Kurdish origin.

Since January 1988, diplomatic staff from the embassy have travelled frequently to Kurdish-speaking areas of Iraq.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been received for the Kurdish people to be given observer status at the United Nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Embassy (Iraq)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the commercial staffing section of Her Majesty's embassy in Iraq for each year since 1979.

Mr. Waldegrave: Before the February 1987 inspection, the commercial section of the British embassy comprised four United Kingdom-based and six locally-engaged staff. In 1987 the number was reduced to three and five respectively.

Pelagic Drift Net Fishing

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if Her Majesty's Government will agree to a moratorium on all high seas drift net fishing by 30 June 1992; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on an immediate ban on the practice of drift net fishing in the South Pacific; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are concerned at the effects of large-scale pelagic drift net fishing and are playing a constructive role in discussions on this issue. The European Community has competence in high seas fisheries policy.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the governments of Japan and Taiwan in respect of drift net fishing.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have made clear to the Japanese Government our concern at the effects of large-scale pelagic drift net fishing in the South Pacific, on both fish stocks and marine mammals and sea birds. We have no dealings with the authorities in Taiwan.

COCOM

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the United Kingdom representatives who sit on the COCOM commission; and when it last met.

Mr. Maude: The COCOM regular committee meets in continuous session. The head of the United Kingdom delegation is Mr. H. Freeman, counsellor at the British embassy in Paris. The United Kingdom permanent, deputy and assistant delegates are Mr. M. Hentley, Mr. S. Shelly and Mr. S. Morgan.

HEALTH

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff of the registrar general and at what grade are engaged in providing population estimates to the Department of the Environment in respect of standard spending assessments and the population report relating to the introduction of the poll tax.

Mr. Freeman: The registrar general has no staff engaged primarily to provide a service to the Department of the Environment in respect of the community charge as such. However, the OPCS population estimates unit, which provides population estimates to all central Government Departments and to local and health authorities, has seven staff, with the following grade structure:

1 Grade 7 statistician.
1 Senior executive officer.
1 Assistant statistician.
2 Excutive officers.
3 Administrative officers.

Abortion

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will seek to obtain from the United States Government the number of abortions per state performed on girls aged 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17 and 18 years, according to gestation, in each year since 1985;

(2) if he will seek to obtain from the United States Government the number of abortions per state performed on women aged 18 to 24 years, 25 to 30 years, 30 to 35 years and 35 years and over, according to each gestational week, in each year since 1985.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that the most recent federal abortion statistics for the United States were published in September 1989 for the years 1984-85. The data are collected and published by the centres for disease control (CDC), United States Department of Health and Human Services, Atlanta, Georgia 30333. Some more recent abortion statistics were published in the CDC's morbidity and mortality weekly report on 29 September 1989 but not in the form requested.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ambulance staff in each region outside London have been suspended during the period of the current dispute; for what period; and how many have been reinstated.

Mr. Freeman: These statistics are not collected centrally and the situation fluctuates on a day by day basis. I advise the hon. Member to make inquiries to the region direct.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of London ambulance service personnel who have been suspended from duty in the last month; how many received written warnings; and how many have been reinstated.

Mr. Freeman: The management of the London ambulance service is the responsibility of the South West Thames regional health authority, to which I refer the hon. Member.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings he has had with representatives of ambulance workers in the last month.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Health met representatives of the Association of Professional Ambulance Personnel on 14 November. The chief executive of the NHS has met national officers of the trade unions represented on the staff side of the ambulance Whitley councils on three occasions in an attempt to find a basis upon which negotiations might be resumed in the Whitley councils.

Asthma

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to extend to asthmatics the same arrangements for free regular prescriptions that now apply to diabetics.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The Government's policy is to direct help with prescription charges to those who are likely to have difficulty in paying charges on financial grounds. More than 75 per cent. of prescriptions are now dispensed free of charge. To extend the small list of medical conditions which confer exemption from charges to include asthma would benefit only those whose income is above the qualifying threshold for low income exemption. This would not be making the best use of NHS resources.

Elderly People

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that a sufficient amount of the health services' resources to meet the increasing need are directed to the health care of the elderly.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for each health authority to develop detailed plans for the services that it will provide, and to decide the division of its resources between those services. The Department regularly scrutinises each regional health authority's plans, which include details of resource allocation, to ensure that all services, including those for elderly people, are developed with the guidelines which the Government have given to health authorities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Telecommunications

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received representations concerning the working relationship between British Telecom plc and Mercury plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I receive numerous representations on telecommunications. Some refer to the working relationship between British Telecom and Mercury Communications, but this is essentially a matter for the companies.

Design Initiative

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what allocation of funds there is in the design initiative for (a) administration, (b) projects and (c) marketing and advertising.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no specific budget provision for the design initiative; which is one of six demand-led consultancy options within the enterprise initiative.

Grants

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the annual figures in cash and real terms nationally and per region from 1978 to date for grants under each of (a) AMT Project Planning and Implementation, (b) Aid and Trade Provision, (c) Alvey Research Programme, (d) BTAS: Productivity Element, (e) BTAS: Quality Element, (f) BTAS: Support for Design, (g) BTAS: Support for Marketing, (h) Better Business Services (Scotland: Strathclyde; Tayside), (i) Better Technical Services (Scotland: Strathclyde; Tayside), (j) Business Improvement Services (England), (k) Business Improvement Services (Wales), (l) Exchange Risk Guarantee Scheme, (m) Feasibility Studies: Advanced Manufacturing Technology (AMT) (n) Feasibility Studies: Biotechnology Technical Advice (o) Feasibility Studies: Microelectronics and Integrated Circuits, (p) General Investment support for Major Projects (Industrial Development Act 1982: section 8), (q) Home Shipbuilding Credit Guarantee Scheme, (r) Investment Support for Biotechnology, (s) Investment Support for Fibre Optics and Opto-Electronics, (t) Investment Support for Microelectronics, (u) Iron and Steel Employees Readaptation Benefits Scheme, (v) Joint Appraisal Scheme, (w) Joint Opto-Electronics Research Scheme, (x) Overseas Projects Fund, (y) Quality Assurance Support Scheme, (z) Regional Development Grant, (aa) Regional Selective Assistance (Industrial Development Act 1982: section 7), (bb) Shipbuilding Intervention Fund, (cc) Support for Electronics Manufacture, (dd) Support for Innovation, (ee) Support for Microelectronices Distance Learning Video Courses, (ff) Support for Software Products, (gg) Support for Training in Microelectronics Applications, (hh) Teaching Company Scheme and (ii) Training in Support of RSA.

Mr. Forth: The information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mergers

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to give general consents for share dealings following a merger reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission by way of exception from the prohibition in section 75(4A) of the Fair Trading Act, inserted by the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. I shall today be giving a general consent to cover intra-group transactions and a copy of the consent will be placed in the Library of each House.

Mergers

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made on the negotiations on European Community merger control regulation.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I attended the internal market Council on 23 November 1989. Major progress was made on a number of important issues. It appears that member states are now happy with the question of criteria for reference. There has been general agreement about the threshold levels of 5 billion ECU world-wide turnover, 250 million ECU and 66 per cent. Community-wide turnover. The UK also received assurance that there would be no Council statement concerning any downward presumption about the nature of the review of thresholds in four years' time. It is the United Kingdom Government's view that this review should be conducted in four years' time in the light of the experience of EC merger jurisdiction and in the light of evidence about whether there are a larger number of mergers below the current threshold for EC jurisdiction which entail a significant EC-wide merger problem.

There was active discussion about when and if there should ever be parallel jurisdiction for both the EC and the member states. There was general agreement that there should be exits from EC jurisdiction to cover prudential controls in the financial sector, public security interests and media issues. In response to a request from Germany there was a long discussion about whether there should also be a parallel authority for a member state to pursue competition issues within its own territory at the same time that the EC was considering the merger for European competition questions.

The United Kingdom put forward a compromise proposal which may form the basis for a conclusion on the whole subject, but this awaits a considered response from Germany. If a satisfactory conclusion is reached on this vital question of the single-stop shop, the United Kingdom and the other countries are likely to remove all their remaining reserves on other items of the package and agreement should then follow swiftly.

The United Kingdom managed to persuade the Council that the reciprocity clause should include unanimous voting in the event of any action or measure being contemplated under it, as the United Kingdom was naturally worried about any signals that might point in the direction of a fortress Europe.

There will be a discussion at the internal market Council on 21 December 1989 which may produce a result following the long-running debate on this very important measure.

ENVIRONMENT

Water (Disconnections)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of domestic disconnections in the North-West Water region in each of the last five years.

Mr. Howard: The information requested by the hon. Member is shown in the table.

Household disconnections for non-payment

	North West
1984-85	110
1985-86	238
1986-87	457
1987-88	448
1988-89	457

Reservoirs

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek powers to direct water companies to permit public inspection of reports concerning the safety of reservoirs, especially in those cases where water companies are required to submit such reports to local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: No. Under the Reservoirs Act 1975 county and metropolitan district councils are required as part of their enforcement role to keep public registers containing prescribed information about large raised reservoirs in their areas. The information includes a summary of the contents of all reports made under the Act. The registers provide the means by which members of the public can satisfy themselves that the requirements of the Act are being met and any safety recommendations made by inspecting engineers implemented.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when a civil engineer last inspected Horton Bank Top reservoir in Bradford; when their draft report was passed to Yorkshire Water; when Yorkshire Water expects the completed report to be passed to Bradford metropolitan district council; whether the public will be entitled to inspect the report lodged with Bradford council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: These are matters for Yorkshire Water as the owner of Horton Bank Top reservoir and for Bradford metropolitan district council as enforcement authority under the Reservoirs Act 1975. The register which the council is required to maintain will show when the reservoir was last inspected and give a summary of the engineer's report.

Councils (Privatisation of Functions)

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what regulations exist to prevent local government officers having the opportunity to draw salaries from privatised companies established by the West Wiltshire district council in addition to their district council salaries.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Under section 112 of the Local Government Act 1972, local authority officers are to be appointed on such reasonable terms and conditions, including conditions as to remuneration, as their appointing authority thinks fit.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what regulations exist which prevent a district council from privatising parts of its function and then allowing a former chief executive from procuring it;

(2) what regulations prevent a district council from disposing of part of its assets to former officers and bypassing tendering procedures.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: All local authorities are subject to a general fiduciary duty to their ratepayers in managing, and disposing of, their assets. There are no special rules on sales to former officers.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from residents of west Wiltshire on the conduct of the former chief executive of West Wiltshire district council.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has had discussions with West Wiltshire district council regarding the circumstances under which West Wiltshire Holdings has been wound up.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has identified the legislative loopholes which were exploited by the West Wiltshire district council in order to set up private companies which are now being investigated by the district auditor.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Part V of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 makes new provision for the regulation of local authority interests in companies.

Water Privatisation

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what payment has been agreed to firms acting as underwriters for the privatisation of water.

Mr. Howard: The aggregate commission rate on shares underwritten in the United Kingdom is 0·1731 per cent. An additional 0·625 per cent. commission is paid on such shares under the sub-underwriting arrangements. The composite commission rate on the United Kingdom underwriting is thus 0·7981 per cent., which is the second lowest rate on any Government privatisation. The commission rate on shares underwritten for the overseas offers is 1·2356 per cent. Full details of the underwriting are set out in the "Prospectus for the Water Offers", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Air Pollution

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many days for the latest year for which figures are available, air at each site where air pollution levels are monitored failed to meet the World Health Organisation safety level for (a) carbon monoxide, (b) nitrogen oxides and (c) ozone.

Mr. Trippier: World Health Organisation air pollution guidelines are meant to provide background information and offer guidance, and are not intended to set limit values or standards.

Data are not available on daily exceedances of WHO guidelines for carbon monoxide and ozone since these guidelines are expressed in terms of exceedances of concentration levels averaged over shorter periods of time —one hour and eight hours. Data for these pollutants is therefore presented under these criteria.

The following data were obtained from the pollution monitoring network operated on behalf of the Department by Warren Spring laboratory, and covers the period January to July 1989.

Carbon monoxide (CO)

CO is monitored at two central London sites. One of these sites recorded 25 exceedances of the one-hour limit (25ppm) and two exceedances of the eight-hour limit (10ppm).

Nitrogen dioxide (NO_2)

NO_2 is monitored at six urban and rural sites. Four of these sites recorded a total of 17 exceedances of the 24-hour limit (80ppb).

Ozone (O_3)

O_3 is monitored at 11 urban and rural sites. Exceedances were recorded at all sites; a total of 669 for the one-hour limit of 76-100ppb and 3092 for the eight-hour limit of 50-60 ppb.

WALES

Chromic Acid Leak

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the watercourses between the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment and the sea which are affected when there is any discharge from that establishment (a) similar to the one which took place on Friday 17 November or (b) in the event of a more serious incident;

(2) what action has been taken by the Welsh region of the NRA following the discharge of chromic acid from the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment in Cardiff on Friday 17 November;

(3) what acutal contamination was identified in each of the watercourses between the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment in Cardiff and the sea following the discharge of chromic acid on Friday 17 November;

(4) what information he has about the discharge of chromic acid to the interceptor which discharges into Llanishen brook from the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment in Cardiff on Friday 17 November.

Mr. Grist: There is only one receiving water course system from Atomic Weapons Establishment, Cardiff. The immediate receiving water is the Llanishen brook which enters Roath Park lake. The outlet from the lake forms the Roath brook which discharges into the tidal reach of the River Rhymney.

Prompt action by the National Rivers Authority and AWE staff on Friday 17 November resulted in containment of the chromic acid spill in the on-site surface water oil interceptor. The interceptor's contents were tankered off site during the early hours of Saturday morning. Slight seepage from the interceptor into the adjacent watercourse occurred. Samples taken showed the maximum concentration in the immediate watercourse to be 2 milligrammes per litre (mgl). This was not regarded by the National Rivers Authority as significant and did not affect Roath Park lake. However, as a precaution, NRA staff also took samples of the inlet stream to Roath Park lake which contained the following levels of chromium.

0·1 mgl at 2015 hrs. on 17 November 1989.
0·04 mgl at 1900 hrs. on 18 November 1989.

These concentrations are not regarded as significant.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the health and safety implications of any discharge of chromic acid into a watercourse; and what is his assessment of the maximum safe level for (a) humans and (b) fish.

Mr. Grist: Chromic acid is an industrial chemical used in metal finishing and is in no way unusual. When diluted in a watercourse, the acid's corrosive properties would be greatly reduced, but it is the chromium content of chromic acid that would normally be of concern. National environmental quality standards (reflecting EC directives) have been set for chromium and are shown in the following table:

	Quality Objective
Fresh Water	Class of River
Direct Abstraction to potable supply	A1	50PT
	A2	75MT

	Total hardness of water (as mg/l $CaCo_3$)
Protection of sensitive aquatic life (eg salmonid fish)	0-50	5AD
	50-100	10AD
	100-150	20AD
	150-200	20AD
	200-250	50AD
	250+	50AD
Protection of other aquatic life (eg cyprinid fish)	0-50	150AD
	50-100	175AD
	100-150	200AD
	150-200	200AD
	200-250	250AD
	250+

Salt Water
Protection of salt water life		15AD

All values given as microgrammes per litre.
A = Annual average.
P = 95 per cent. of samples.
M = Maximum Allowable Concentration.
D = Dissolved.
T = Total.

In line with the EC directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption, the new Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 (S.I. 1989 No. 1147) set a maximum concentration of 50 microgrammes of chromium per litre in drinking water.

Water Pollution

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give (a) the number of people in Wales who receive water from supplies granted relaxations to the lead standard under the Water Act 1989, (b) the location of each supply, by county, and (c) the number of people served by each of those supplies.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 10 November.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give (a) the number of people in Wales who receive water from supplies granted relaxations to the nitrate standard under the Water Act 1989, (b) the location of each supply, by county, and (c) the number of people served by each of those supplies.

Mr. Grist: None.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give (a) the number of people in Wales who receive water from supplies granted relaxations to the nitrite standard under the Water Act 1989, (b) the location of each supply, by county, and (c) the number of people served by each of those supplies.

Mr. Grist: Under section 20(5)(b) of the Water Act 1989, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has accepted an undertaking from Dwr Cymru Cyfyngedig relating to the nitrite parameter in respect of the following treatment works:

WTW	Estimated population served	Location
Trecastell	1,500	Clwyd

Note:—The population figure has been derived by Dwr Cymru from the average daily output of the works when in use and therefore represents the potential number of customers.

Schools

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each Welsh local education authority the number of primary schools which have been closed or amalgamated in each of the past 15 years which had (a) under 10 pupils, (b) 11 to 20 pupils, (c) 21 to 30 pupils, (d) 31 to 40 pupils, (e) 41 to 50 pupils, (f) 51 to 60 pupils, (g) 61 to 100 pupils, (h) 101 to 150 pupils, and (i) 151 to 200 pupils.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information in the form requested is not available. The table shows the net changes in the number of primary schools by local education authority for the period 1974-89. Many closures occur as part of wider schemes of reorganisation or amalgamation which can incorporate the establishment of new schools.

Local Education Authority

Net change per year	Clwyd	Dyfed	Gwent	Gwynedd	Mid Glamorgan	Powys	South Glamorgan	West Glamorgan
1974-75	−1	−2	−1	−2	—	+1	—	+1
1975-76	+6	−1	+3	−1	−1	−3	+2	—
1976-77	−2	−5	−6	−1	—	−1	+2	—
1977-78	+4	−3	−3	−3	+1	−1	−1	−2
1978-79	—	−1	−5	−2	—	−4	+2	−2
1979-80	−2	+1	−7	—	+2	—	+4	−3
1980-81	−1	−2	−3	—	−4	−2	−3	−2
1981-82	−3	−6	−10	−1	−2	−4	−4	−5
1982-83	−2	−5	−1	−1	+2	−3	−7	−12
1983-84	−5	−4	−3	—	−3	−1	−3	−4
1984-85	−1	−3	−8	—	−5	−2	−3	−3
1985-86	−1	−6	−14	—	+3	−2	−2	—
1986-87	—	−6	−1	—	—	−2	—	−3
1987-88	+1	—	−6	−2	—	−1	—	−1
1988-89	—	−2	−4	−2	—	—	—	−1

Pembroke Bypass

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for a bypass for Pembroke; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This is a matter for Dyfed county council as the local highway authority.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Irish Citizens

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the privileges enjoyed by Irish citizens resident in the United Kingdom which are not enjoyed by citizens of other European Economic Community countries.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are no benefits provided by the Department which are available to Irish citizens resident in the United Kingdom which are not available to citizens of other EC member states also resident in this country.

Winter Heating Premium

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for a winter heating premium for pensioners payable during the winter months without a means test.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The provision of cold weather payments from the social fund, at times of very cold weather, provides help to those in greatest need. To extend this provision to all pensioners would not represent the best use of available resources.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to raise the basic level for the retirement pension to half of average earnings for a couple and a third of average earnings for a single pensioner.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no plans to do so. The key factor in improving pensioners' incomes is their total income. Between 1979 and 1986 pensioners' average total net income increased by 23 per cent. in real terms, compared with a 3 per cent. increase between 1974 and 1979.

Source: Family Expenditure Survey.

Family Incomes

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest average length of time taken to process applications for family credit, income support and housing benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: During October 1989, family credit claims were cleared on average in 17·6 working days, of which only 4·3 days were for work within the family credit unit. The remaining 13·3 days were taken up awaiting replies to inquiries mainly from employers. During September 1989, income support claims were dealt with on average in 5·2 working days. For housing benefit, which is processed by local authorities, information is not collected in the form requested. Information for the financial year 1988–89 is not yet complete, but the figures available indicate that three out of four claims were processed in 14 days.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest figure for the administrative cost of (a) child benefit and (b) family credit, in cash terms and as a proportion of overall expenditure on each benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest child benefit figures available—for the year to April 1988—are estimated as:

Administrative expenditure	£103 million
Proportion of total benefit expenditure	2·2 per cent.

No figures are yet available for family credit which was introduced only from April 1988 but the figures for its preceding benefit—family income supplement—for 1987-88 are:

Administrative expenditure	£8 million
Proportion of total benefit expenditure	4·4 per cent.

Figures for the year ending April 1989 will be available shortly.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the attendance allowance board will reconsider the claim of Mrs. Lilian Margaret Redfern, following the Social Security Commissioner's decision in her favour dated 29 June.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The attendance allowance board is reviewing Mrs. Redfern's case in the light of the Social Security Commissioner's decision that the determination made by its delegate was erroneous in point of law, and it has asked for an up-to-date report of her disabilities and attendance needs.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 27 November 1989

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

National Curriculum

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will visit Ball Green county primary school, Stoke-on-Trent, to discuss resources in schools and funding for delivery of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. It is for Staffordshire education authority to determine, and discuss as appropriate with the schools it maintains, the resources allocated to each of them. We are giving specific grant support for the implementation of the national curriculum. This financial year these grants will support £2,344,700 expenditure in Staffordshire. That is in addition to the general rate support grant funding which local authorities receive in support of spending. It is for Staffordshire itself to decide how much in total to allocate to implementation of the national curriculum.

Teachers' Pay

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will visit Hill Top county primary school, Stoke-on-Trent, to discuss teachers' pay.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to do so.

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what incentives he will arrange to enable teaching staff to attend training courses for the national curriculum and other essential out-of-school learning activities required under the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The LEA training grants scheme will, in 1990-91, support local education authority expenditure of over £72 million with grant at a rate of 65 per cent. on training related to the implementation of the provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988. Of this £61 million specifically relates to training on the national curriculum. My right. hon. friend also expects local education authorites to make full use of the non-contact days for training. Expenditure eligible for grant includes the cost of supply cover and of other items associated with planning and running training activities. Much training takes place on school premises and out of normal school hours.

Education Act 1988

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how he intends to tackle the problem of the shortage of teachers and resources, particularly in certain areas and subjects, in order to implement the Education Act 1988.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department has a vigorous action programme, costing £50 million so far, to improve teacher supply. The programme includes bursaries for trainee teachers in maths, physics, design and technology and chemistry; national advertising and publicity, spearheaded by the Teaching as a Career unit; taster courses to enable those seeking a career change to obtain some experience of teaching; new initial and in-service training courses; and support for local initiatives to attract mature new entrants and former serving teachers.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 6 November the proposed local authority grant settlement for 1990-91. That allows for £14,988 million to be spent on education next year, an increase of 9·6 per cent. over the comparable total for 1989-90. Given effective management, I am confident that this will be sufficient to allow good progress to be made in implementing the education reforms.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much his Department has paid, or plans to pay, to Price Waterhouse in consultancy, accountancy and research fees.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has paid £451,223 to Price Waterhouse for preparatory work on the top-up loans scheme. Future expenditure will depend upon the extent to which the Student Loans Company Ltd. makes use of Price Waterhouse's services.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how students who do not hold a bank account with any of the participants in the Student Loans Company will apply for the proposed top-up loan facility.

Mr. Jackson: Students will be required to apply for a loan through a branch of one of the financial institutions participating in the Student Loans Company.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those banks and building societies and other financial institutions with which his Department has had discussions concerning participation in the formation of Student Loans Company Ltd.

Mr. Jackson: Discussions have been held with a range of financial institutions, representing principally the bank and building society sectors.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now publish the detailed cost-time estimates referred to in the initial Price Waterhouse feasibility study on the student loans scheme.

Mr. Jackson: The Price Waterhouse stage II report, placed in the House of Commons Library on 16 November, contained a revised implementation timetable. Administration costs are still subject to contractual negotiations.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish all contracts between his Department and the Student Loans Company or its participants.

Mr. Jackson: The memorandum of understanding was published on 16 November. Other agreements must remain confidential at this stage for commercial reasons.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will update and publish annex E of the White Paper "Top-up Loans for Students", Cm. 520, taking into account (a) administration costs and (b) transaction fees of £12 per student loan application per year, on the assumptions of (x) 80 per cent., (y) 90 per cent. and (z) 100 per cent. take-up of the student loan scheme and on the assumption of annual inflation at (i) 3 per cent., (ii) 4 per cent., (iii) 5 per cent., (iv) 6 per cent., (v) 7 per cent. and (vi) 8 per cent. up to the year 2027.

Mr. Jackson: The following 18 tables set out, on the same basis as annex E of Cm. 520, the financial effects of the scheme on the assumptions specified. They make no allowance for administrative costs (of which the transaction fee forms a part) as these are subject to contractual negotiations.

Table i(x)
United Kingdom—3 per cent. inflation—80 per cent. take-up
(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	167	0	103
1991	−22	−65	193	2	105
1992	−42	−64	216	9	103
1993	−61	−63	236	21	93
1994	−78	−61	255	39	78
1995	−95	−59	275	62	59
1996	−112	−59	297	83	42
1997	−131	−62	324	102	30
1998	−152	−63	356	119	22
1999	−172	−65	385	131	17
2000	−190	−65	410	142	13
2001	−206	−65	429	155	2
2002	−222	−65	450	176	−14
2003	−236	−65	469	192	−25
2004	−251	−65	488	203	−31
2005	−266	−65	506	211	−37
2006	−280	−65	523	217	−39
2007	−293	−65	541	220	−39
2008	−293	−65	541	231	−49
2009	−293	−65	541	251	−69
2010	−293	−65	541	275	−94
2011	−293	−65	541	296	−113
2012	−293	−65	541	313	−130
2013	−293	−65	541	329	−147
2014	−293	−65	541	345	−162
2015	−293	−65	541	357	−174
2016	−293	−65	541	367	−184
2017	−293	−65	541	375	−193
2018	−293	−65	541	383	−200
2019	−293	−65	541	388	−206
2020	−293	−65	541	393	−210
2021	−293	−65	541	399	−216
2022	−293	−65	541	404	−222
2023	−293	−65	541	407	−225
2024	−293	−65	541	410	−227
2025	−293	−65	541	411	−228
2026	−293	−65	541	411	−228
2027	−293	−65	541	412	−230

Table i(y)
United Kingdom—3 per cent. inflation—90 per cent. take-up
(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	188	0	123
1991	−22	−64	217	2	129
1992	−42	−63	242	10	128
1993	−60	−62	265	23	120
1994	−78	−61	288	43	106
1995	−95	−60	310	68	87
1996	−112	−60	334	93	68
1997	−131	−61	365	115	58
1998	−152	−63	400	133	52
1999	−173	−64	434	147	50
2000	−190	−65	461	159	46
2001	−206	−65	484	176	37
2002	−222	−65	506	198	21
2003	−237	−65	528	216	10
2004	−252	−65	549	228	4
2005	−266	−65	569	238	1
2006	−280	−65	589	245	0

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
2007	−293	−65	608	248	2
2008	−293	−65	608	260	−10
2009	−293	−65	608	283	−33
2010	−293	−65	608	310	−60
2011	−293	−65	608	333	−83
2012	−293	−65	608	351	−101
2013	−293	−65	608	371	−121
2014	−293	−65	608	387	−137
2015	−293	−65	608	401	−151
2016	−293	−65	608	412	−163
2017	−293	−65	608	423	−173
2018	−293	−65	608	430	−180
2019	−293	−65	608	436	−186
2020	−293	−65	608	442	−192
2021	−293	−65	608	448	−198
2022	−293	−65	608	455	−205
2023	−293	−65	608	458	−209
2024	−293	−65	608	460	−210
2025	−293	−65	608	462	−212
2026	−293	−65	608	463	−213
2027	−293	−65	608	464	−214

Table i(z)
United Kingdom—3 per cent. inflation—100 per cent. take-up
(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	209	0	144
1991	−22	−64	242	3	153
1992	−42	−63	269	11	153
1993	−60	−62	295	26	147
1994	−78	−61	320	48	133
1995	−95	−60	344	76	113
1996	−112	−60	371	104	95
1997	−131	−61	406	128	85
1998	−152	−63	444	148	82
1999	−173	−64	482	164	81
2000	−190	−65	512	177	80
2001	−206	−65	538	195	71
2002	−222	−65	562	220	55
2003	−237	−65	586	240	44
2004	−252	−65	610	253	40
2005	−266	−65	632	264	37
2006	−280	−65	654	272	38
2007	−293	−65	676	276	42
2008	−293	−65	676	289	29
2009	−293	−65	676	314	3
2010	−293	−65	676	344	−27
2011	−293	−65	676	370	−52
2012	−293	−65	676	390	−73
2013	−293	−65	676	412	−94
2014	−293	−65	676	430	−113
2015	−293	−65	676	446	−128
2016	−293	−65	676	458	−141
2017	−293	−65	676	469	−152
2018	−293	−65	676	478	−161
2019	−293	−65	676	484	−167
2020	−293	−65	676	491	−173
2021	−293	−65	676	498	−181
2022	−293	−65	676	505	−188
2023	−293	−65	676	509	−192
2024	−293	−65	676	511	−194
2025	−293	−65	676	513	−195
2026	−293	−65	676	514	−197
2027	−293	−65	676	515	−198

Table ii(x)
United Kingdom—4 per cent. inflation—80 per cent. take-up
(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	167	0	102
1991	−28	−64	201	2	107
1992	−53	−63	230	9	105

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1993	−77	−62	257	21	97
1994	−99	−61	282	40	83
1995	−119	−60	307	63	64
1996	−140	−60	333	88	45
1997	−164	−61	366	109	32
1998	−189	−63	403	127	24
1999	−214	−64	438	142	18
2000	−235	−65	467	155	11
2001	−254	−65	491	173	−1
2002	−272	−65	514	196	−19
2003	−290	−65	536	215	−33
2004	−290	−65	536	228	−46
2005	−290	−65	536	238	−56
2006	−290	−65	536	245	−64
2007	−290	−65	536	248	−66
2008	−290	−65	536	258	−77
2009	−290	−65	536	279	−98
2010	−290	−65	536	303	−121
2011	−290	−65	536	322	−141
2012	−290	−65	536	336	−155
2013	−290	−65	536	351	−170
2014	−290	−65	536	363	−181
2015	−290	−65	536	372	−190
2016	−290	−65	536	378	−197
2017	−290	−65	536	384	−203
2018	−290	−65	536	389	−207
2019	−290	−65	536	392	−210
2020	−290	−65	536	395	−214
2021	−290	−65	536	400	−219
2022	−290	−65	536	405	−224
2023	−290	−65	536	408	−227
2024	−290	−65	536	409	−228
2025	−290	−65	536	410	−228
2026	−290	−65	536	410	−228
2027	−290	−65	536	410	−229

Table ii(y)
United Kingdom—4 per cent. inflation—90 per cent. take-up
(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	188	0	123
1991	−28	−64	226	2	132
1992	−53	−63	259	10	133
1993	−77	−62	289	24	126
1994	−99	−61	317	45	113
1995	−119	−60	345	71	94
1996	−140	−60	375	99	76
1997	−164	−61	412	123	64
1998	−189	−63	453	143	58
1999	−214	−64	493	160	55
2000	−235	−65	525	175	50
2001	−254	−65	552	194	39
2002	−272	−65	578	221	20
2003	−290	−65	603	241	7
2004	−290	−65	603	256	−7
2005	−290	−65	603	268	−19
2006	−290	−65	603	276	−27
2007	−290	−65	603	279	−30
2008	−290	−65	603	291	−42
2009	−290	−65	603	314	−65
2010	−290	−65	603	341	−92
2011	−290	−65	603	362	−114
2012	−290	−65	603	378	−130
2013	−290	−65	603	395	−147
2014	−290	−65	603	408	−160
2015	−290	−65	603	418	−170
2016	−290	−65	603	426	−177
2017	−290	−65	603	432	−184
2018	−290	−65	603	437	−189
2019	−290	−65	603	441	−192
2020	−290	−65	603	445	−196
2021	−290	−65	603	451	−202
2022	−290	−65	603	456	−208
2023	−290	−65	603	459	−211

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
2024	−290	−65	603	460	−212
2025	−290	−65	603	461	−212
2026	−290	−65	603	461	−213
2027	−290	−65	603	461	−213

Table ii(z)
United Kingdom—4 per cent. inflation—100 per cent. take-up
(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	209	0	144
1991	−28	−64	251	3	156
1992	−53	−63	287	11	160
1993	−77	−62	321	26	156
1994	−99	−61	353	49	144
1995	−119	−60	383	79	125
1996	−140	−60	416	109	106
1997	−164	−61	458	136	96
1998	−189	−63	504	159	92
1999	−214	−64	548	178	92
2000	−235	−65	583	194	89
2001	−254	−65	613	216	79
2002	−272	−65	642	245	60
2003	−290	−65	670	268	47
2004	−290	−65	670	284	31
2005	−290	−65	670	297	18
2006	−290	−65	670	306	9
2007	−290	−65	670	310	6
2008	−290	−65	670	323	−7
2009	−290	−65	670	349	−33
2010	−290	−65	670	379	−63
2011	−290	−65	670	403	−87
2012	−290	−65	670	420	−105
2013	−290	−65	670	439	−123
2014	−290	−65	670	453	−138
2015	−290	−65	670	465	−149
2016	−290	−65	670	473	−158
2017	−290	−65	670	480	−165
2018	−290	−65	670	486	−170
2019	−290	−65	670	490	−174
2020	−290	−65	670	494	−179
2021	−290	−65	670	501	−185
2022	−290	−65	670	507	−191
2023	−290	−65	670	510	−195
2024	−290	−65	670	511	−196
2025	−290	−65	670	512	−196
2026	−290	−65	670	512	−197
2027	−290	−65	670	512	−197

Table iii(x)
United Kingdom—5 per cent. inflation—80 per cent. take-up
(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	167	0	102
1991	−34	−64	209	2	109
1992	−65	−63	246	9	108
1993	−94	−62	279	22	101
1994	−120	−61	310	41	88
1995	−145	−60	340	66	68
1996	−170	−60	371	92	48
1997	−198	−61	409	116	34
1998	−227	−63	451	137	24
1999	−256	−64	492	154	17
2000	−280	−65	524	169	9
2001	−301	−65	551	190	−5
2002	−301	−65	551	216	−32
2003	−301	−65	551	238	−53
2004	−301	−65	551	252	−67
2005	−301	−65	551	263	−78
2006	−301	−65	551	270	−85
2007	−301	−65	551	271	−86
2008	−301	−65	551	280	−95
2009	−301	−65	551	300	−115

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
2010	−301	−65	551	324	−139
2011	−301	−65	551	342	−138
2012	−301	−65	551	355	−170
2013	−301	−65	551	369	−184
2014	−301	−65	551	379	−194
2015	−301	−65	551	387	−202
2016	−301	−65	551	393	−208
2017	−301	−65	551	398	−213
2018	−301	−65	551	402	−217
2019	−301	−65	551	404	−220
2020	−301	−65	551	408	−223
2021	−301	−65	551	413	−228
2022	−301	−65	551	418	−233
2023	−301	−65	551	421	−236
2024	−301	−65	551	421	−236
2025	−301	−65	551	421	−237
2026	−301	−65	551	421	−237
2027	−301	−65	551	421	−237

Table iii(y)
United Kingdom—5 per cent. inflation—90 per cent. take-up
(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	188	0	123
1991	−34	−64	236	2	134
1992	−65	−63	276	10	138
1993	−94	−62	314	24	133
1994	−120	−61	349	46	121
1995	−145	−60	382	75	102
1996	−170	−60	417	104	83
1997	−198	−61	460	131	71
1998	−227	−63	508	154	64
1999	−256	−64	553	174	59
2000	−280	−65	589	191	54
2001	−301	−65	620	213	40
2002	−301	−65	620	244	10
2003	−301	−65	620	267	−14
2004	−301	−65	620	284	−30
2005	−301	−65	620	296	−42
2006	−301	−65	620	303	−50
2007	−301	−65	620	304	−51
2008	−301	−65	620	315	−61
2009	−301	−65	620	338	−84
2010	−301	−65	620	364	−111
2011	−301	−65	620	385	−132
2012	−301	−65	620	399	−146
2013	−301	−65	620	415	−161
2014	−301	−65	620	426	−173
2015	−301	−65	620	435	−182
2016	−301	−65	620	442	−188
2017	−301	−65	620	448	−194
2018	−301	−65	620	452	−199
2019	−301	−65	620	455	−201
2020	−301	−65	620	459	−205
2021	−301	−65	620	465	−211
2022	−301	−65	620	470	−217
2023	−301	−65	620	473	−220
2024	−301	−65	620	474	−220
2025	−301	−65	620	474	−220
2026	−301	−65	620	474	−220
2027	−301	−65	620	474	−220

Table iii(z)
United Kingdom—5 per cent. inflation—100 per cent. take-up
(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	209	0	144
1991	−34	−64	262	3	160
1992	−65	−63	307	11	167
1993	−94	−62	348	27	165
1994	−120	−61	387	27	155
1995	−145	−60	424	83	136

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1996	−170	−60	463	116	118
1997	−198	−61	512	145	108
1998	−227	−63	564	171	103
1999	−256	−64	614	193	101
2000	−280	−65	655	212	98
2001	−301	−65	688	237	85
2002	−301	−65	688	271	52
2003	−301	−65	688	297	25
2004	−301	−65	688	315	7
2005	−301	−65	688	329	−6
2006	−301	−65	688	337	−15
2007	−301	−65	688	338	−16
2008	−301	−65	688	350	−27
2009	−301	−65	688	375	−53
2010	−301	−65	688	405	−82
2011	−301	−65	688	428	−106
2012	−301	−65	688	444	−121
2013	−301	−65	688	461	−138
2014	−301	−65	688	474	−151
2015	−301	−65	688	484	−161
2016	−301	−65	688	491	−168
2017	−301	−65	688	498	−175
2018	−301	−65	688	502	−180
2019	−301	−65	688	505	−183
2020	−301	−65	688	510	−188
2021	−301	−65	688	516	−194
2022	−301	−65	688	522	−200
2023	−301	−65	688	526	−203
2024	−301	−65	688	526	−204
2025	−301	−65	688	527	−204
2026	−301	−65	688	527	−204
2027	−301	−65	688	527	−204

Table iv(x)
United Kingdom—6 per cent. inflation—80 per cent. take-up

(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	167	0	102
1991	−41	−64	218	2	110
1992	−77	−63	261	9	111
1993	−111	−62	300	22	105
1994	−141	−61	336	42	92
1995	−170	−60	371	69	72
1996	−198	−60	406	97	51
1997	−229	−61	449	123	36
1998	−262	−63	496	146	25
1999	−294	−64	540	166	16
2000	−296	−65	544	183	0
2001	−296	−65	544	205	−22
2002	−296	−65	544	235	−51
2003	−296	−65	544	257	−73
2004	−296	−65	544	271	−87
2005	−296	−65	544	280	−97
2006	−296	−65	544	284	−101
2007	−296	−65	544	282	−99
2008	−296	−65	544	288	−105
2009	−296	−65	544	307	−124
2010	−296	−65	544	329	−146
2011	−296	−65	544	345	−162
2012	−296	−65	544	356	−173
2013	−296	−65	544	369	−185
2014	−296	−65	544	378	−195
2015	−296	−65	544	385	−202
2016	−296	−65	544	390	−207
2017	−296	−65	544	395	−212
2018	−296	−65	544	399	−215
2019	−296	−65	544	400	−217
2020	−296	−65	544	404	−221
2021	−296	−65	544	409	−225
2022	−296	−65	544	414	−230
2023	−296	−65	544	416	−233
2024	−296	−65	544	416	−233
2025	−296	−65	544	416	−233

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
2026	−296	−65	544	416	−233
2027	−296	−65	544	416	−233

Table iv(y)
United Kingdom—6 per cent. inflation—90 per cent. take-up

(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	188	0	123
1991	−41	−64	245	2	137
1992	−77	−63	293	10	143
1993	−111	−62	338	25	140
1994	−141	−61	378	48	129
1995	−170	−60	417	78	109
1996	−198	−60	457	109	90
1997	−229	−61	505	138	77
1998	−262	−63	558	164	68
1999	−294	−64	607	186	63
2000	−296	−65	612	206	45
2001	−296	−65	612	231	20
2002	−296	−65	612	264	−13
2003	−296	−65	612	289	−37
2004	−296	−65	612	304	−53
2005	−296	−65	612	315	−64
2006	−296	−65	612	320	−69
2007	−296	−65	612	317	−66
2008	−296	−65	612	324	−73
2009	−296	−65	612	345	−94
2010	−296	−65	612	370	−119
2011	−296	−65	612	389	−137
2012	−296	−65	612	401	−149
2013	−296	−65	612	415	−163
2014	−296	−65	612	425	−174
2015	−296	−65	612	433	−182
2016	−296	−65	612	439	−188
2017	−296	−65	612	444	−193
2018	−296	−65	612	448	−197
2019	−296	−65	612	451	−199
2020	−296	65	612	454	−203
2021	−296	−65	612	460	−209
2022	−296	−65	612	465	−214
2023	−296	−65	612	468	−217
2024	−296	−65	612	468	−217
2025	−296	−65	612	468	−217
2026	−296	−65	612	468	−217
2027	−296	−65	612	468	−217

Table iv(z)
United Kingdom—6 per cent. inflation—100 per cent. take-up

(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	209	0	144
1991	−41	−64	272	3	164
1992	−77	−63	326	11	174
1993	−111	−62	375	28	175
1994	−141	−61	420	53	165
1995	−170	−60	463	86	147
1996	−198	−60	507	121	128
1997	−229	−61	561	154	117
1998	−262	−63	619	182	112
1999	−294	−64	675	207	110
2000	−296	−65	680	229	91
2001	−296	−65	680	257	63
2002	−296	−65	680	293	26
2003	−296	−65	680	321	−1
2004	−296	−65	680	338	−19
2005	−296	−65	680	350	−31
2006	−296	−65	680	355	−36
2007	−296	−65	680	352	−33
2008	−296	−65	680	360	−41
2009	−296	−65	680	383	−64
2010	−296	−65	680	411	−92
2011	−296	−65	680	432	−113

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
2012	−296	−65	680	445	−126
2013	−296	−65	680	461	−141
2014	−296	−65	680	472	−153
2015	−296	−65	680	481	−162
2016	−296	−65	680	488	−169
2017	−296	−65	680	494	−175
2018	−296	−65	680	498	−179
2019	−296	−65	680	501	−181
2020	−296	−65	680	505	−186
2021	−296	−65	680	511	−192
2022	−296	−65	680	517	−198
2023	−296	−65	680	520	−201
2024	−296	−65	680	520	−201
2025	−296	−65	680	520	−201
2026	−296	−65	680	520	−201
2027	−296	−65	680	520	−201

Table v(x)
United Kingdom—7 per cent. inflation—80 per cent. take-up
(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	167	0	102
1991	−47	−64	226	2	112
1992	−89	−63	276	9	114
1993	−127	−62	321	23	109
1994	−161	−61	362	44	96
1995	−193	−60	400	72	75
1996	−223	−60	439	102	54
1997	−258	−61	486	130	37
1998	−294	−63	536	155	25
1999	−301	−64	549	176	7
2000	−303	−65	553	195	−10
2001	−303	−65	553	219	−34
2002	−303	−65	553	250	−65
2003	−303	−65	553	273	−87
2004	−303	−65	553	286	−101
2005	−303	−65	553	294	−109
2006	−303	−65	553	297	−112
2007	−303	−65	553	293	−107
2008	−303	−65	553	297	−112
2009	−303	−65	553	315	−130
2010	−303	−65	553	337	−152
2011	−303	−65	553	353	−168
2012	−303	−65	553	364	−179
2013	−303	−65	553	376	−191
2014	−303	−65	553	385	−200
2015	−303	−65	553	392	−207
2016	−303	−65	553	398	−212
2017	−303	−65	553	402	−217
2018	−303	−65	553	406	−220
2019	−303	−65	553	407	−222
2020	−303	−65	553	411	−226
2021	−303	−65	553	416	−321
2022	−303	−65	553	421	−235
2023	−303	−65	553	423	−238
2024	−303	−65	553	423	−238
2025	−303	−65	553	423	−238
2026	−303	−65	553	423	−238
2027	−303	−65	553	423	−238

Table v(y)
United Kingdom—7 per cent. inflation—90 per cent. take-up
(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	188	0	123
1991	−47	−64	254	2	140
1992	−89	−63	310	10	148
1993	−127	−62	361	26	146
1994	−161	−61	407	49	136
1995	−193	−60	450	81	116
1996	−223	−60	494	114	96
1997	−258	−61	547	146	82

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1998	−294	−63	603	174	72
1999	−301	−64	618	198	54
2000	−303	−65	622	220	35
2001	−303	−65	622	247	8
2002	−303	−65	622	281	−27
2003	−303	−65	622	307	−52
2004	−303	−65	622	322	−68
2005	−303	−65	622	331	−77
2006	−303	−65	622	334	−80
2007	−303	−65	622	329	−75
2008	−303	−65	622	335	−80
2009	−303	−65	622	355	−101
2010	−303	−65	622	379	−125
2011	−303	−65	622	398	−143
2012	−303	−65	622	409	−155
2013	−303	−65	622	423	−169
2014	−303	−65	622	433	−179
2015	−303	−65	622	442	−187
2016	−303	−65	622	447	−193
2017	−303	−65	622	453	−198
2018	−303	−65	622	456	−202
2019	−303	−65	622	458	−204
2020	−303	−65	622	462	−208
2021	−303	−65	622	468	−213
2022	−303	−65	622	473	−219
2023	−303	−65	622	476	−222
2024	−303	−65	622	476	−222
2025	−303	−65	622	476	−222
2026	−303	−65	622	476	−222
2027	−303	−65	622	476	−222

Table v(z)
United Kingdom—7 per cent. inflation—100 per cent. take-up
(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	209	0	144
1991	−47	−64	282	3	168
1992	−89	−63	345	11	181
1993	−127	−62	401	28	184
1994	−161	−61	452	55	175
1995	−193	−60	500	90	157
1996	−223	−60	549	127	138
1997	−258	−61	607	162	126
1998	−294	−63	670	193	120
1999	−301	−64	686	221	100
2000	−303	−65	691	244	79
2001	−303	−65	691	274	49
2002	−303	−65	691	313	11
2003	−303	−65	691	341	−17
2004	−303	−65	691	358	−34
2005	−303	−65	691	368	−45
2006	−303	−65	691	371	−48
2007	−303	−65	691	366	−42
2008	−303	−65	691	372	−48
2009	−303	-65	691	394	−71
2010	−303	−65	691	422	−98
2011	−303	−65	691	442	−118
2012	−303	−65	691	455	−131
2013	−303	−65	691	470	−147
2014	−303	−65	691	482	−158
2015	−303	−65	691	491	−167
2016	−303	−65	691	497	−173
2017	−303	−65	691	503	−179
2018	−303	−65	691	507	−184
2019	−303	−65	691	509	−186
2020	−303	−65	691	513	−190
2021	−303	−65	691	520	−196
2022	−303	−65	691	526	−202
2023	−303	−65	691	529	−205
2024	−303	−65	691	529	−206
2025	−303	−65	691	529	−206
2026	−303	−65	691	529	−206
2027	−303	−65	691	529	−206

Table vi(x)
United Kingdom—8 per cent. inflation—80 per cent. take-up
(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	167	0	102
1991	−53	−64	234	2	114
1992	−100	−63	290	9	117
1993	−142	−62	340	23	113
1994	−180	−61	386	45	100
1995	−214	−60	428	75	79
1996	−248	−60	470	106	56
1997	−285	−61	520	136	38
1998	−293	−63	535	163	16
1999	−300	−64	548	186	−3
2000	−302	−65	552	206	−21
2001	−302	−65	552	231	−46
2002	−302	−65	552	262	−77
2003	−302	−65	552	284	−99
2004	−302	−65	552	296	−111
2005	−302	−65	552	303	−118
2006	−302	−65	552	303	−118
2007	−302	−65	552	297	−112
2008	−302	−65	552	300	−115
2009	−302	−65	552	317	−133
2010	−302	−65	552	339	−154
2011	−302	−65	552	354	−169
2012	−302	−65	552	364	−179
2013	−302	−65	552	376	−191
2014	−302	−65	552	385	−200
2015	−302	−65	552	392	−207
2016	−302	−65	552	397	−212
2017	−302	−65	552	402	−217
2018	−302	−65	552	405	−220
2019	−302	−65	552	406	−222
2020	−302	−65	552	410	−225
2021	−302	−65	552	415	−230
2022	−302	−65	552	420	−235
2023	−302	−65	552	422	−237
2024	−302	−65	552	422	−237
2025	−302	−65	552	422	−237
2026	−302	−65	552	422	−237
2027	−302	−65	552	422	−237

Table vi(y)
United Kingdom—8 per cent. inflation—90 per cent. take-up
(miliion, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	188	0	123
1991	−53	−64	263	2	143
1992	−100	−63	326	10	153
1993	−142	−62	383	26	153
1994	−180	−61	434	51	142
1995	−214	−60	481	84	123
1996	−248	−60	528	119	101
1997	−285	−61	585	153	86
1998	−293	−63	602	183	63
1999	−300	−64	616	210	42
2000	−302	−65	621	232	22
2001	−302	−65	621	259	−6
2002	−302	−65	621	294	−41
2003	−302	−65	621	319	−66
2004	−302	−65	621	333	−79
2005	−302	−65	621	340	−87
2006	−302	−65	621	341	−87
2007	−302	−65	621	334	−80
2008	−302	−65	621	338	−84
2009	−302	−65	621	357	−103
2010	−302	−65	621	381	−127
2011	−302	−65	621	398	−145
2012	−302	−65	621	410	−156
2013	−302	−65	621	423	−169
2014	−302	−65	621	433	−180
2015	−302	−65	621	441	−187
2016	−302	−65	621	447	−193
2017	−302	−65	621	452	−198

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
2018	−302	−65	621	455	−202
2019	−302	−65	621	457	−203
2020	−302	−65	621	461	−207
2021	−302	−65	621	467	−213
2022	−302	−65	621	472	−218
2023	−302	−65	621	475	−221
2024	−302	−65	621	475	−221
2025	−302	−65	621	475	−221
2026	−302	−65	621	475	−221
2027	−302	−65	621	475	−221

Table vi (z)
United Kingdom—8 per cent inflation—100 per cent. take-up

(million, 1990 prices)

Year	Change in Grant	Change in Benefits	Gross Loan Outlay	Loan Repayments	PSBR Effect
1990	0	−65	209	0	144
1991	−53	−64	292	3	172
1992	−100	−63	363	11	188
1993	−142	−62	425	29	192
1994	−180	−61	482	56	185
1995	−214	−60	534	93	167
1996	−248	−60	587	133	147
1997	−285	−61	650	170	134
1998	−293	−63	669	204	109
1999	−300	−64	684	233	87
2000	−302	−65	690	258	65
2001	−302	−65	690	288	35
2002	−302	−65	690	327	−4
2003	−302	−65	690	355	−32
2004	−302	−65	690	370	−47
2005	−302	−65	690	378	−55
2006	−302	−65	690	379	−56
2007	−302	−65	690	371	−48
2008	−302	−65	690	375	−52
2009	−302	−65	690	397	−74
2010	−302	−65	690	423	−100
2011	−302	−65	690	443	−120
2012	−302	−65	690	455	−132
2013	−302	−65	690	470	−147
2014	−302	−65	690	482	−159
2015	−302	−65	690	490	−167
2016	−302	−65	690	496	−174
2017	−302	−65	690	502	−179
2018	−302	−65	690	506	−183
2019	−302	−65	690	508	−185
2020	−302	−65	690	512	−189
2021	−302	−65	690	518	−196
2022	−302	−65	690	525	−202
2023	−302	−65	690	528	−205
2024	−302	−65	690	528	−205
2025	−302	−65	690	528	−205
2026	−302	−65	690	528	−205
2027	−302	−65	690	528	−205

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if premises have yet been secured by the Student Loans Company; and if the company's chief executive has yet been appointed.

Mr. Jackson: No.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he plans to publish his revised start-up costs for the Student Loans Company; and if the running costs have been revised.

Mr. Jackson: These costs are the subject of contractual negotiations and must remain confidential at this stage for commercial reasons.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether any of the participating financial institutions in the Student Loans Company has proposed the payment of an indemnity in the event of a change of policy or a change of Government.

Mr. Jackson: The terms on which financial institutions are to participate are subject to confidential contractual negotiations.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the Student Loans Company will be wholly funded by his Department; whether he proposes that participating financial institutions can cease to participate at any time; and what financial penalties are proposed for such withdrawal.

Mr. Jackson: I expect the Student Loans Company to be funded by the Education departments for both the loan principal and running costs. The terms on which financial institutions will participate in the company are subject to contractual negotiation.

Malawi

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what aid his Department supplied to the Government of Malawi either directly or through other agencies since 1979.

Mr. Jackson: The Department of Education set up the overseas research students awards scheme (ORSAS) in December 1979 in recognition of the institutional and scholarly contribution made by overseas research students of outstanding merit. The first awards were made for the academic year 1980-81.

The only criteria for the awards are outstanding merit and research potential; other factors, such as means, nationality, proposed field and institution of study, will not be taken into account.

The scheme is administered by the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals of the Universities of the United Kingdom. The CVCP has appointed a special committee, composed of senior members of academic staff of academic institutions, to be responsible for the selection of awardholders and the detailed management of the scheme.

1980 1 award was offered to Malawi but was not taken up.
1981 2 awards were offered to Malawi but were not taken up.
1982 2 applications were made by Malawi, both were rejected.
1983 3 awards made to Malawi at a total cost of £6,818.
1984 4 awards made to Malawi at a total cost of £7,420.
1985 2 awards made to Malawi at a total cost of £5,556.
1986 2 awards made to Malawi at a total cost of £4,908.
1987 3 awards made to Malawi at a total cost of £8,257.
1988 2 awards made to Malawi at a total cost of £5,676.

Summary
1980-88 3 awards were not taken up by Malawi
2 applications for awards were rejected
16 awards were made to Malawi at a total cost of £38,635.

Teaching Establishments

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will study the impact of removing head teachers from the establishment figures for teaching staffs in all schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Questions relating to the staffing of individual schools, and policies relating to such matters, are the responsibility of local education authorities and schools, and my right hon. Friend has no present plans to make such a study.

Human Genomes

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will outline what progress has been made on developing a framework in which scientists from Europe and Japan can participate on the project to map the human genome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I understand from the Medical Research Council, which funds the United Kingdom human genome mapping project, that all research on mapping the human genome is a collaborative venture on an international scale. The Council of the European Community is at present in the final stages of considering a proposal for a programme of human genome analysis which includes among its objectives the organisation of networks and co-ordination, on a European and international scale, of researchers from all disciplines working in this field. These plans involve close association with Japanese and American groups. Furthermore the Human Genome Mapping Organisation (HUGO), an independent international body whose aim is to obtain a complete map of the human genome, includes leading scientists from Europe and Japan.

ENERGY

North Sea Gas

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he intends to set a limit on the amount of North sea gas which will be allocated for burning in existing or future electricity generating stations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: We do not intend to limit the amount of gas from the UKCS for gas-fired electricity generation. The Government do not believe that we should discourage gas burn. It is one of our major objectives to encourage competition in generation and we welcome the growing interest in gas-fired capacity from the private sector.

Sizewell B

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the capability of British Nuclear Fuels Limited to manufacture and supply uranium fuel for the Sizewell B pressurised water reactor at prices competitive with those of French and German manufacturers, in the light of the recent announcement postponing the construction of three other pressurised water reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British Nuclear Fuels plc has recently submitted a tender to supply fuel for Sizewell B. The details of this are a commercial matter for BNFL and the new nuclear company.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the future role of Sizewell B power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government attach the highest importance to the successful completion and operation of Sizewell B. This will maintain the PWR option in the United Kingdom, provide environmentally clean energy, and contribute to diversity.

THORP

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the future of British Nuclear Fuels Limited's thermal oxide-reprocessing plant in the light of his recent decision to postpone construction of three pressurised water reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 13 November 1989 at column 103.

Severn Barrage

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress towards the placing of firm contracts for the Severn electricity generating barrage.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Any substantial further developments of the Severn barrage, as with other renewable energy schemes, will depend on commercial decisions made by the private sector.

Recent studies by the Severn tidal power group, partly funded by the Department, omitted consideration of organisation and financing problems. Work on these topics together with further work on environmental issues will be carried out over the next two years.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if the Government intend to continue to allocate funds for investment in British Nuclear Fuels Limited's enhanced actinide removal plant at the Sellafield installation;

(2) if the Government intend to continue to allocate funds for investment in British Nuclear Fuels Limited's Line Four Hex plant at the Springfield installation;

(3) if the Government intend to continue to allocate funds for investment in British Nuclear Fuels Limited's new oxide fuel complex at the Springfield installation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a commercial matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc. The Government do not allocate funds to the company. Its business is financed by borrowing on the commercial market.

Non-fossil Fuels

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what part of the 20 per cent. of total British electricity generation to be provided from non-fossil fuel generating systems after electricity privatisation is to be generated by (a) hydro stations, (b) combined-cycle gas-fired stations, (c) wave power systems and (d) wind power systems.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The non-fossil fuel obligation will provide a considerable encouragement to the development of the renewable sources of energy. Contracts to meet the obligation are a matter for the area electricity boards and their successors. It is too early to say how much each renewable source will contribute. Combined cycle gas turbines burn fossil fuel and are therefore not eligible for the obligation.

Apprenticeships

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many apprentices were started by electricity boards in England and Wales in 1979 and each succeeding year.

Mr. Wakeham: This is a matter for the industry. I am asking the chairman of the Electricity Council to write to the hon. Member.

Switchgear

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of 11KV switchgear owned by area electricity boards is affected by operational bans for safety reasons.

Mr. Wakeham: This information is not available to my Department. However, I will ask the chairman of the Electricity Council to write to the hon. Member in due course.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps his Department is taking to secure improved safety in 11KV switchgear operated by area electricity boards.

Mr. Wakeham: The Electricity Supply Regulations 1988 require the area electricity boards to notify my Department of all disruptive failures of 11KV switchgear, as well as any incident which could have given rise to injury, death, fire or explosion. The engineering inspectorate within my Department monitors all such reportable incidents and may investigate as necessary on my behalf to ensure that the operation and maintenance of such equipment by area electricity boards is as safe as reasonably practicable.

Coal Prices

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he intends to secure cuts in the price British Coal charges the new generating companies to offset the levy to be charged to cover the extra cost of electricity from nuclear stations.

Mr. Wakeham: No.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those facilities which the new public utility for the nuclear power industry may take into ownership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB will be coming forward with a draft transfer scheme containing proposals for the division of its assets. There are no plans for non-CEGB facilities to be transferred to the nuclear company.

Atomic Energy Commission

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is to be the future of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority will continue to carry out research and development into nuclear power and other technologies as required by its customers.

Winfrith

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals exist to secure the development of the safe integral reactor at Winfrith; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No application has been made for a SIR on the UKAEA's site at Winfrith. The SIR consortium's bid for funds from the United States Department of Energy as part of its small power advanced light water reactor programme was unsuccessful and I understand that the partners are actively seeking other sources of funding.

Nuclear Plants (Decommissioning)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will now make public the plans proposed, during the chairmanship of the Atomic Energy Authority of Sir John Hill, for the decommissioning of nuclear power stations by removing most parts, other than the reactor concrete shields, and smothering the site with landscaped turf and earth; and what were the cost estimates at (a) plan prices and (b) current prices.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I regret that my Department is unaware of the particular plans referred to by the hon. Member, and that, on the basis of the information he has provided on the question, further research could be carried out only at disproportionate cost.

Joint European Torus, Abingdon

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what response he is giving to the application by scientists working at the Joint European Torus at Abingdon for a £200 million four-year expansion of their programme, to investigate ways of reducing the intrusion of impurities into their machine's plasma; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that the JET Council has agreed to seek a further extension of the life of the joint undertaking from 1992 to 1996. The Commission of the European Communities is expected to forward the proposal to the Council of Ministers next year for decision in parallel with a new Community programme for research and development on fusion for the period 1990-1994. The United Kingdom will play a full part in these discussions.

TRANSPORT

Rail Accidents

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many significant collisions occurred on British Rail each year from 1982 to 1988 inclusive (a) between passenger trains, (b) between passenger and other trains, (c) between non-passenger trains and (d) buffer stops.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not readily available for British Rail alone. The figures for all railways are as follows:

	Between passenger trains	Between passenger trains and other trains	Between non-passenger trains	With buffer stops
1982	6	9	11	28
1983	1	16	8	36
1984	5	12	10	34
1985	6	11	7	35
1986	6	13	12	36
1987	6	14	11	33
[1]1988	8	10	16	52

[1] Provisional.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many significant derailments occurred on British Rail each year from 1982 to 1988 inclusive involving (a) passenger trains and (b) non-passenger trains.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not readily available for British Rail alone. The figures for all railways are as follows:

	Passenger trains	Non-passenger trains
1982	23	106
1983	25	107
1984	33	106
1985	30	105
1986	34	99
1987	20	116
[1]1988	28	112

[1] Provisional figures.

London Underground

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all those London underground stations that have been closed, either in part or completely, since 1 July, indicating for each occasion the period it was closed inside normal working hours, together with the reason.

Mr. Portillo: This is essentially a matter for London Underground Ltd. (LUL), though I understand there have been 551 occasions since 1 July when London Underground stations have been either wholly or partly closed, during the Underground's normal operational hours. The required information about these closures may be obtained from LUL.

Private Bus Companies

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new private bus firms have begun operations since deregulation was introduced.

Mr. Portillo: It is estimated that by 1 May 1988 there had been a net increase of 465 operators running local bus services since deregulation.

London Bus Routes

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bus routes in London have been subject to competitive tendering; and what has been the saving to London Regional Transport from this process.

Mr. Portillo: I understand from London Regional Transport that to date 176 routes have been put out to competitive tender. It estimates that this has achieved savings of broadly 15 per cent. of previous operating costs.

Air Traffic

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent consideration he has given to according gateway status to Birmingham International airport.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am examining this question at present.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss monitoring the number of scheduled flights between London Heathrow-Gatwick and Edinburgh-Glasgow that are either late or are cancelled with a view to publishing this information.

Mr. McLoughlin: The authority already publishes monthly airline and route punctuality statistics covering flights at six United Kingdom airports, including scheduled services between Heathrow-Gatwick and Edinburgh-Glasgow.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about future plans to increase scheduled passenger services from East Midlands international airport in the run-up to 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: Many routes from East Midlands international airport to European Community destinations are already open under existing Community arrangements. I am urging my European Community colleagues to take further steps towards the Single Market by giving airlines yet greater freedom to exercise their commercial judgment in offering the range of scheduled services which customers want at the keenest prices.

At present five European Community destinations are served from east midlands though more routes are available for airlines to serve if they chose to do so.

Motorways

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the precise location where the M4 motorway crosses the geographical boundary between England and Wales.

Mr. Atkins: At the mid-point of the bridge over the River Wye.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the Ove Arup and Talis Channel tunnel rail link alternatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend made a full statement on Friday 3 November. The Government have welcomed the joint venture established between British Rail, which has the contractual rights to operate through the Channel tunnel, and its chosen partner, Eurorail. The BR/Eurorail joint venture is pursuing the route through Kent and up to King's Cross. Others are, of course, free to formulate and promote alternatives.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the joint venture agreement for Channel tunnel rail services between British Rail and Eurorail referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) of 3 November, Official Report, columns 346-67 is currently in the form of an exchange of letters, agreed heads of terms or an agreed joint venture agreement.

Mr. Portillo: BR and Eurorail have exchanged letters outlining the scope of a joint venture between them. They are now negotiating a detailed shareholders agreement for the joint venture which will require my approval.

Coastguard Service

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the emergency calls made to Her Majesty's coastguards relating to the North Devon coast, or coastal waters, during daylight hours on 16 August; and what actions resulted in each case.

Mr. McLoughlin: Emergency calls, by radio or the 999 telephone system were received as follows: (Times shown are as logged at each individual station.)

Swansea MRCC

08.45—999 call reporting a coaster dumping cargo in Lynmouth bay. Subsequently confirmed as a dredger working in the area dumping surplus water.

15.20—999 call from Mr. Kift, reporting one person cut off at Rapparee cove.

15.22—VHF radio call from Milford Haven, reporting the same incident, but identifying two persons involved. The Ilfracombe auxiliary coastguard in charge, advised and instructed to proceed.

15.35—999 call from Mr. Richards, reporting one child recovered, one child still in the water. Rescue helicopter from RAF Chivenor scrambled, and Ilfracombe lifeboat launched.

15.51—999 call reporting windsurfer in difficulties on Bideford Bar. Appledore lifeboat launched, auxiliary coastguard tasked to attend on scene. The windsurfer reached shore unaided.

16.51—Police report of small cabin cruiser adrift in River Taw. Appledore lifeboat launched and towed boat, unmanned, to moorings.

Milford Haven

15.25—999 call (mis-routed) reporting two boys swept on to rocks at Rapparee cove. Information passed by VHF radio to Swansea coastguard for action, and subsequently confirmed by Telex message.

Noise Standards (Railways)

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the terms of reference of his Department's study of noise standards for new railways.

Mr. Portillo: The objective will be to establish the standard at a level which equitably relates to the standard set by regulation for new highways. I hope to make an announcement shortly about the establishment of a departmental committee to carry out this task.

Motorways

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies have been undertaken by his Department as to the feasibility of converting Britain's motorways into toll roads.

Mr. Atkins: None.

ENVIRONMENT

Rose and Globe Theatres

130. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on the future of the Rose and Globe theatre sites in Southwark.

Mr. Trippier: The remains of the Rose theatre are now fully protected to safeguard them while construction work takes place on the site. Discussions are taking place between various interested parties, including English Heritage, to determine the best methods for the future conservation and display of the remains.

English Heritage has submitted advice to the Department on the future of the Globe theatre remains. This is being considered.

Homelessness

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have taken place between Government officials and the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux in respect of advice services dealing with housing and homelessness.

Mr. Chope: Since our announcement on 15 November of the conclusions of the homelessness review, my officials have had one meeting with officers of the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning has had one meeting with the association's council. The discussions have concerned our proposal to base a national advice service for homeless people on citizens advice bureaux network.

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to withdraw section 73 funding from any of the organisations which currently receive it.

Mr. Chope: Following our review of the homelessness legislation, we have decided to increase by almost threefold the funding of voluntary bodies concerned with homelessness under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985. In the next financial year, £2 million will be available to support a national advice service and to enable voluntary bodies to mount a range of projects of direct and practical help to the homeless. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has not yet taken any decisions about the organisations which will receive this much increased grant aid under section 73 next year.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the areas with the highest contribution to the safety net if no maximum contribution were set and give the figures for each area.

Mr. Chope: The table shows the areas which would contribute more than £75 per adult to the area safety net in 1990-91 if there were no maximum contribution. The figures use the same data as the exemplifications in the consultation paper my right hon. Friend issued on 6 November.

Areas making highest contributions to safety net if no maximum contribution using provisional 1990-91 figures

	Contribution (£ per adult)
City of London	228
Westminster	226
South Bucks	126
Chiltern	124
Kensington and Chelsea	120
Oxford	94
Camden	91
Wycombe	86
Elmbridge	84
Epping Forest	80
Cambridge	75

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are his latest estimates of the distributional impact of the community charge on household finance;

(2) what information he has showing the relationship of domestic rates and the community charge to net household income on the equivalent net income basis following his statement of 6 November, Official Report, columns 685-7;

(3) if he will construct a table in the same form as figure 4 of Cm. 9714, "Paying for Local Government", showing the first year with safety net and fully in place, the relationship between gross and net community charge to net household income for (a) single pensioner households, (b) other single person households, (c) two adult households, and (d) three adult households;

(4) if he will estimate the number of (a) single-pensioner households and (b) single pensioners who will (i) gain and (ii) lose upon introduction of the community charge;

(5) if he will construct a table similar to table J7 in Cm. 9714 based upon the figures in his statement of 6 November, Official Report, columns 685-7, in respect of the community charge;

(6) if he will produce an updated version of table J7 in Cm. 9714, "Paying for Local Government", showing households gaining and losing with full replacement of domestic rates by the community charge by (a) region, (b) local authority and (c) parliamentary constituency;

(7) if he will set out in the Official Report his estimates for the main household types of the gains and losses upon the full introduction of the community charge, showing totals, figures net and gross and the effect of rebates.

Mr. Chope: The latest estimates of the distributional impact of the community charge on household finance, using illustrative community charges for 1988-89 were placed in the Library on 15 December 1988. An extension of the analysis to cover pensioner couples was placed in the Library on 28 February 1989.

An analysis using the 1990-91 charges published by my right hon. Friend on 6 November is under preparation and will be published as soon as possible. Analyses by local authority or Parliamentary constituency will not be possible however due to limitations of the sample survey data. There are some limitations on the analyses which can be made by region.

Indigenous Shrubs and Trees

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he offers any advice to local authorities or other public bodies concerning the use of indigenous shrubs and trees in landscaping or reclamation schemes.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department has not issued advice specifically on the use of indigenous shrubs and trees. The NCC has published a booklet "Natural Trees and Shrubs for Wildlife in the UK" which is available to local authorities and which MAFF has distributed to farmers in conjunction with the farm woodland scheme.

Energy Efficiency

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that all new Government buildings will be designed and built utilising the latest available technologies to ensure the maximum energy efficiency.

Mr. Chope: The Property Services Agency will continue to promote the use of the latest energy efficiency technology in the buildings it designs but it is the responsibility of each department sponsoring the construction of new accommodation, to decide on the standards which are to be applied.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy will continue to make available to departments information on relevant technological and other developments.

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what permission he has given to the London Docklands development corporation to raise capital for construction of the Beckton extension of the Docklands light railway; and what is the liability so incurred.

Mr. Moynihan: The Beckton extension of the docklands light railway will be funded by the LDDC from the proceeds of land sales in the royal docks and Leamouth. Any in-year shortfalls between construction costs and land receipts will temporarily be met by grant in aid.

Pewsey Partnership Development

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will exempt from the debt requirements of the Housing and Local Government Act the partnership deal between Lovells and Kennet district council for the partnership development at Pewsey.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Regional Fisheries Advisory Committees

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each regional fisheries advisory committee those members who are board members or senior employees of water holding companies, stating, where relevant, their position within the water holding company.

Mr. Chris Patten: The only member of a regional fisheries advisory committee who is either a board member or senior employee of a water holding company is Dr. D. G. Jamieson, water resources manager of Thames Water Utilities Ltd, who is a member of the regional fisheries advisory committee for the Thames region.

Rivers Advisory Committees

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each regional rivers advisory committee those members who are board members or senior employees of water holding companies, stating, where relevant, their position within the water holding company.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

Anglian: Mr. D. Latham—Director of Water Services, Anglian Water Services Ltd.
Northumbria: Mr. A. Foster—Director of Operations, Northumbrian Water Ltd.
North West: Mr. E. Harper—Chief Scientist, North West Water Ltd.
Severn Trent: Mr. W. Scott—Assistant Director, Severn Trent Water Ltd.
Southern: Mr. B. Hewett—Managing Director, Southern Water Services Ltd.
South West: Mr. W. J. Dickens—Director of Water Services, South West Water Ltd.
Thames: Mr. P. T. McIntosh—Water and Environmental Science Director, Thames Water Utilities Ltd.
Welsh: Dr. M. P. Brooker—Quality and Planning Director, Dwr Cymru Cyfyngedig.
Wessex: Mr. C. F. Skellett—Managing Director, Wessex Water Services Ltd.
Yorkshire: Dr. A. J. Shuttleworth—Director of Water Quality, Yorkshire Water Services Ltd.

Water Companies

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each water company, the names and status of the trustees nominated for the purpose of the water holding company trust schemes for employee share ownership.

Mr. Chris Patten: The trustee of the trust scheme established by each of the water holding companies is a wholly owned subsidiary of the relevant water holding company. The names of the trustees are as follows:

Anglian Water Share Scheme Trustees Limited
Northumbrian Water Share Scheme Trustees Limited
North West Water Share Scheme Trustees Limited
Severn Trent Water Share Scheme Trustees Limited
Southern Water Share Scheme Trustees Limited
SWW Share Schemes Trustees Limited
Thames Water Share Scheme Trustees Limited
WW Share Scheme Trustees Limited
Wessex Water Trustee Company Limited
Yorkshire Water Share Scheme Trustees Limited.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the number of households circulated by Anglian Water plc in respect of their recent publicity campaign;

(2) what was the number of households circulated by Severn Trent Water plc in respect of their recent publicity campaign;

(3) what was the cost of the recent publicity campaign by Anglian Water plc;

(4) what was the cost of the recent publicity campaign by Severn Trent Water plc;

(5) what was the source of funding for the recent publicity campaign by Anglian Water plc;

(6) what was the source of funding for the recent publicity campaign by Severn Trent Water plc.

Mr. Howard: In September, the chairmen of Anglian Water plc and Severn Trent plc wrote to some 2,247,000 and 3,360,000 customers respectively about the forthcoming water share offers. The cost of these mailings and those by the other eight water plcs will be borne jointly by the water plcs through their subscriptions to the Water Services Association and by the Government. The costs to the Government of marketing the water share offers will be reported to Parliament in due course.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the upper limit and lower limit, respectively, on the proportion of shares in each of the 10 water companies which are being made available to foreign investors;

(2) what is the upper limit and the lower limit, respectively, on the proportion of shares in each of the water companies which will be sold only to British people.

Mr. Howard: Full details are set out in the prospectus for the water share offers, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Out of the total number of shares on offer, 18·5 per cent. are initially being made available to overseas investors. If there is heavy demand for shares by members of the public in the United Kingdom offers for sale, a clawback provision allows for 25 per cent. of the shares available under the overseas offers to be made available to the public.

Under the United Kingdom offer for sale 23·55 per cent. of the ordinary share capital is being made available to the general public (including eligible customers, employees and pensioners of the companies). A further 3 per cent. is reserved for share bonus entitlements and applications from eligible employees under the free and matching offers. If both the overseas and the institutional clawbacks are triggered then 46·75 per cent. of the ordinary share capital is available to the general public.

There are no nationality restrictions on the United Kingdom public offer, except that United States and Canadian persons as defined in the prospectus are not permitted to apply. Eligible customers, employees and pensioners of the companies will be given preference over the general public in the allocation of shares as described in the prospectus.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what protections are built into the flotation process for each of the 10 water companies currently subject to flotations to guard against foreign takeover; and what guarantees exist to ensure these protections have long-term effects.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will hold a special share in each of the nine English water and sewage companies which will empower him to prevent anyone owning more than 15 per cent. of the shares in any of the companies in the period until 31 December 1994. There are also provisions in the Water Act 1989 relating to mergers in the water industry. Details of the special share arrangements and the merger provisions of the Water Act 1989 are set out in the prospectus for the water offers, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Adjudications

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what administrative support will be made available to an adjudicator appointed to fulfil the functions described in part I of the Local Government and Housing Act.

Mr. David Hunt: The adjudicator is being given the administrative support reasonably necessary to enable him to fulfil his duties.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what remuneration will be made to an adjudicator appointed under part I of the Local Government and Housing Act.

Mr. David Hunt: The adjudicator is being paid on a fee basis at a rate equivalent to the salary of grade 3 in the Civil Service.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what timetable an adjudicator appointed to fulfil the functions described in part I of the Local Government and Housing Act is required to work to when producing guidance for local authorities on part I of the Act and when setting up the appeals procedure referred to in section 3.

Mr. David Hunt: Section 3(1)(a) of the Local Government Act 1989 provides that the issue of general advice is at the discretion of the adjudicator; the timetable for this is therefore a matter for him. Section 3(7) of the Act requires him to give priority, according to the time available before the election, to applications from those who certify that they are candidates in a forthcoming election. Subject to that, the timetable for dealing with applications is a matter for the adjudicator.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment where the office of the adjudicator appointed to fulfil the functions described in part I of the Local Government and Housing Act will be situated; and how those wishing to appeal will contact him.

Mr. David Hunt: The Department has written to all local authorities involved giving details of the adjudicator's address. This is room 246, Lambeth bridge house, London SE1 7SB. The telephone number for inquiries is 01-238 4316. I understand that the adjudicator will shortly be writing to local authorities and trade unions involved about the procedures he wishes to follow.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who an adjudicator appointed to fulfil the functions described in part I of the Local Government and Housing Act, will consult when drawing up the guidance on political restrictions to be issued to local authorities.

Mr. David Hunt: Section 3(1)(a) of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 provides that the adjudicator is to consult such representatives of local government and such organisations appearing to him to represent employees in local government as he considers appropriate. The choice of persons and organisations to be consulted is therefore for the adjudicator.

London Zoo

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in assessing his response to London zoo's request for more of Regent's park, he has considered the levels of salmonella at the zoo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Salmonella is endemic in a wide range of bird species and has been identified in some birds in London zoo. The zoo has taken proper health and hygiene precautions and there is absolutely no risk to any member of the public. The position would not be changed by the zoo's development proposals.

Water Protection

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those orders he has made under section 111 of the Water Act relating to water protection measures.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend has made no orders under section 111 of the Water Act.

Forestry Unit Areas

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give encouragement in the form of Government advice to local authorities to permit the renovation of derelict properties or the building of at least one new dwelling in forestry unit areas.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend will shortly be issuing for consultation a draft of new planning guidance for the countryside. This will include advice on the re-use and restoration of rural buildings and on the provision of housing needed by farm and forestry workers.

"Common Sense"

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to act upon the recommendations contained in the broadsheet "Common Sense" published by the Royal Society for Nature Conservation, a copy of which has recently been sent to him.

Mr. Trippier: The Government announced in 1987 that they accept the case for legislation based broadly on the Common Land Forum's report and intends to introduce legislation at a suitable opportunity when parliamentary time permits. The proposals in the broadsheet "Common Sense" are broadly in line with the forum's recommendations, and are being studied in conjunction with those recommendations, the earlier responses to the Government's consultation paper issued in 1987, and the subsequent representations received. My right hon. Friend expects to make a further statement within the next few months on the Government's intentions on common land legislation.

HIP (Waltham Forest)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the housing investment programme allocation paid or payable to the London borough of Waltham Forest in 1979-80 and in each year since 1986-87 in (i) cash and (ii) real terms expressed in 1979-80 prices.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 24 November 1989]: Allocations since 1981-82 are not directly comparable with earlier years because since that date authorities have been able to augment their allocations with a proportion of their capital receipts. Nevertheless, the information requested is as follows:

£ million

	HIP allocations	1979-80 prices
1979-80	17·046	17·046
1986-87	7·716	4·626
1987-88	7·205	4·113
1988-89	7·391	3·934
1989-90	6·214	3·135

Waltham Forest's estimated capital expenditure on housing in 1989-90 is £29·5 million.

Rifle Range (Palace of Westminster)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Palace of Westminster rifle range will be available for use.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 27 November 1989]: Safety requirements enlarged the scope of the work carried out by the Parliamentary Works Office to extend the use of the range to include pistol shooting, and it was not completed until 13 November 1989. I understand that a recent safety inspection proved satisfactory and that the range has now been approved for use.

Urban Development

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline, in constant prices, the total annual Government spending on urban development policy in the period 1979 to 1989 inclusive, on an annual basis and broken down into its constituent sub-headings, so as to include amounts allocated to the urban development corporations, urban programmes, urban development grants, derelict land grants, enterprise zone allowances and similar.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 24 November 1989]: Expenditure by the Department of the Environment on Urban Regeneration programmes, over the period 1979-80 to 1989-90, is set out in the table.

Urban regeneration (£ million)—expenditure at constant prices 1988-89

	Urban Development Corporations	Urban Programme	City Grant UDG/URG	Derelict Land Grant	Enterprise Zones Rates Relief	Enterprise Zones Capital
1979-80	—	348	—	40	—	—
1980-81	—	321	—	48	—	—
1981-82	55	312	—	44	5	20
1982-83	84	399	—	82	12	20
1983-84	121	391	10	87	13	20
1984-85	108	376	20	84	19	30
1985-86	100	344	28	84	26	70
1986-87	101	325	27	90	37	90
1987-88	143	319	29	84	n.a.	n.a.
1988-89	234	284	34	77	n.a.	n.a.
1989-90	411	243	33	63	n.a.	n.a.

Notes:

1. Urban Programme includes contributions from DES, DH and DTp.
2. Urban Development Grant and Urban Regeneration Grant were replaced by City Grant in May 1988.
3. Enterprise Zone rates relief figures show revenue foregone.
4. Enterprise Zone capital figures show an assessment of tax foregone to the nearest £10 million, including Scotland and Wales. Separate data for England is not available.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the numbers of adult residents in each district council area of the west midlands likely to be entitled to the maximum rebate during the first year of operation of the community charge in England and Wales; and if he will express these figures as a proportion of the estimated population of each local authority liable to community charge.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Malawi

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the value of British aid to Malawi for each year since 1979;

(2) what aid his Department supplied to the Government of Malawi either directly or through other agencies since 1979.

Mrs. Chalker: Following is the information requested:

United Kingdom Aid to Malawi 1979-1988

Year	Gross Bilateral Public Expenditure £ thousand[1]	Estimated United Kingdom share of multilateral aid £ thousand
1979	15,937	n/a
1980	11,531	3,400
1981	14,263	3,000
1982	13,615	3,700
1983	11,544	4,000
1984	12,211	8,300
1985	21,081	3,800
1986	13,370	5,500
1987	19,587	5,800
1988	30,761	n/a

[1] Excludes Commonwealth Development Corporation and includes some aid granted via Non-Governmental Organisations.
Source: British Aid Statistics.

PRIME MINISTER

Haemophiliacs (AIDS)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister when she will be replying to the letter sent to her by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe on 25 October about the urgent need for an out-of-court settlement of the compensation claims of people with haemophilia who, in the course of National Health Service treatment, were infected with the AIDS virus.

The Prime Minister: As court proceedings have now begun it would not be right for me to comment on the question of an out-of-court settlement.

However, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced on 23 November that we have offered an additional £19 million to the Macfarlane trust, again on an entirely ex-gratia basis. For the details I refer the right hon. Member to that reply.

British Rail

Mr. Adley: To ask the Prime Minister when she last travelled officially on a British Rail service train; and what conclusions she drew from the experience.

The Prime Minister: I regret that for reasons of practicality and security it is difficult for me to travel by rail on official business. I do so when a suitable opportunity arises. I last travelled by train to an official function on 31 August 1989.

Stedeford Report

Mr. Adley: To ask the Prime Minister if she has yet been able to find, at 10 Downing street, a copy of the Stedeford report on transport policy and the railways.

The Prime Minister: No. I understand that the Department of Transport has traced papers which indicate that there was no formal report and that this was made clear when Sir Ivan Stedeford's advisory group was set up. (Official Report, 13 April 1960 at column 1345.)

Finchley Ambulance Station

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make an official visit to Finchley ambulance station.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 November 1989]: I have at present no plans to do so.

Kincora Boys Home

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister why, in her answer, Official Report, 15 November, relating to representations received by the Cabinet Secretariat relating to events at the Kincora boys home, she underlined the word "such".

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 November 1989]: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member on 15 November at column 269.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many accountancy firms criticised by the Department of Trade and Industry or sued by the Government since 1979 for negligence have advised on privatisations or authenticated privatisation prospectuses; how many have supplied inspectors for Department of Trade and Industry investigations; and how many have been permitted to make audit policy through their representations on the Auditing Practices Committee or its working parties.

Mr. Redwood: Eight inspectors have been appointed from four firms of accountants that were previously criticised in inspectors' reports published since 1979, and one of those firms has since been appointed by the Government for privatisation work. I am not aware that any inspector has been appointed from a firm after it was sued by the Government or that such a firm has been appointed by the Government for privatisation work.

The voting members of the Auditing Practices Committee (APC) are nominated on a personal basis by their professional body and appointed by the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies, which has stipulated that they shall not regard themselves as delegates of sectional interests but shall be guided by the need to act in the general interests of the community and of the accountancy profession as a whole. Members of its working parties are appointed by the APC itself.

Investigations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the number of Department of Trade and Industry investigations approved under the Companies Acts since June 1979 and the number of reports published in the same period, clearly distinguishing between those relating to investigations approved in the pre-June 1979 and the post-June 1979 periods.

Mr. Redwood: Inspections into 56 companies, some of which are linked, have begun since June 1979. During that same period, 32 reports have been published dealing with 46 different companies. Of the 32 published reports, 13 dealing with 16 different companies relate to inspections begun after 1 June 1979.

EC Preferences (Poland and Hungary)

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the proposal to extend the European Community's generalised system of preferences scheme to Poland and Hungary.

Mr. Redwood: The proposal to extend the EC's generalised scheme of references benefits to Hungary and Poland is part of a wider package of measures that has been under consideration in the Community as a contribution to a programme of western assistance to these two countries.

The proposal was considered at the EC's Foreign Affairs Council on 6 November and approved in principle. This was on the understanding that textiles and some agricultural products were excluded from the package of benefits and would be considered further with a view to their inclusion of being approved at the FAC on 27 November.

I regret that because of the late stage at which firm proposals were received, a decision had to be taken before the scrutiny process was complete. A refusal on our part to endorse the proposals on 6 November would not have been understood by our EC partners or by Hungary and Poland.

Poland

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the adoption of the European Community trade, commercial and economic co-operation agreement with Poland.

Mr. Redwood: In order to encourage the reform process in Poland the Foreign Affairs Council on 3 October adopted a trade and economic co-operation agreement between the European Community and Poland.

In the light of the current international focus of attention on Poland and the wish expressed at the Paris summit to find ways of encouraging the reform process in Poland it was clear that the agreement needed to be implemented as soon as possible. The Government therefore agreed to the adoption of the proposal even though our own parliamentary scrutiny procedures has not been completed. A delay on our part would have hindered the ratification process and would have been misunderstood by Poland and our EC partners.

I regret that the normal parliamentary procedures were not followed on this occasion.

Landlords and Tenants

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Government intend to introduce legislation extending the provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act to the licensed trade.

Mr. Redwood: I hope to introduce a Bill to bring the tenants of licensed premises within the protection of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954 early in the Session.

Reports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the number of reports made available to professional bodies, regulatory bodies and other non-governmental bodies since June 1979.

Mr. Forth: The approximate number of non-HMSO publications published by the Department since June 1979 is 4,149.

Delta Te Immune Support Therapy

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on inquiries into whether the sale of Delta Te immune support therapy is in breach of the Trades Description Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: None, but I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health is looking into this matter in connection with the provisions of the Medicines Act 1968.

FIMBRA

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is satisfied with the workings of FIMBRA; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: It is the responsibility of the Securities and Investments Board to ensure that self-regulating organisations, including FIMBRA, continue to comply with the requirements for recognition under the Financial Services Act 1986.

Girobank

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of Girobank.

Mr. Forth: The then Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster announced on 20 April that the Post Office Board had accepted a conditional offer from the Alliance and Leicester Building Society for Girobank. The Post Office and the Alliance and Leicester are engaged in detailed negotiations with a view to completing the sale as soon as practicable.

The regulatory authorities will need to be satisfied and my consent will be required before the sale can take place.

Telephone Chat-lines

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will meet the Director General of Telecommunications to discuss the priority to be given to the protection of the public and the consumer when controls are set for telephone chat-lines;

(2) whether he will introduce legislation to require that access to chat-lines and other premium charge telephone calls shall be subject to a fail-safe mechanism, such as connection via an operator, in order to ensure that accidental connection to high-cost calls is ruled out.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 24 November 1989]: On 17 November, the Director General of Telecommunications, Sir Bryan Carsberg, announced new controls on multiline and one-to-one services provided over British Telecom's network. From 8 December, when the controls come into effect, such services can be provided only in accordance with a code of practice acceptable to the Director General or if granted a specific exemption. No such codes have yet been recognised for these purposes.

In the light of this announcement, I have no intention of meeting the Director General or of considering the introduction of legislation on this subject.

Broadcasting

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will (a) review the availability and allocation of the broadcasting spectrum for television and radio in the United Kingdom and (b) detail the European Community and other constraints upon such review.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 24 November 1989]: The Government have a series of rolling reviews of the radio spectrum in progress, which will facilitate decisions on allocation of spectrum to broadcasters (and other users) in the coming years. The most recent review was of the civil spectrum between 470 and 3400 MHz, which was carried out in 1988-89 in consultation with all interested parties. Consideration will be given to a similar review of higher frequencies.

An essential part of the spectrum allocation process, if interference with other users is to be avoided, is international co-ordination. The United Kingdom is therefore an active participant in the International Telecommunication Union and the Conference of European Postal and Telecommunications Administrations, which are the key international spectrum co-ordination bodies.

Iraq

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the annual import and export statistics for trade between Britain and Iraq and break the figure down between visibles and invisibles for each year since 1979.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 24 November 1989]: Information on the value of invisible trade between the United Kingdom and Iraq is not available. Figures for visible trade are as follows:

£ million

	Imports	Exports
1979	451	201
1980	556	322
1981	103	624
1982	171	874
1983	96	400
1984	77	343
1985	293	445
1986	250	444
1987	324	272
1988	176	412
1989[1]	63	343

[1] To 30 September 1989.
Source: Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom.

Footwear Imports

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has responded to the European Economic Community consultative document on the imports of footwear from Korea and Taiwan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 24 November 1989]: No. We shall consider how to respond after the options put forward by the Commission have been discussed with the British Footwear Manufacturers' Federation early next week.

Life Insurance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has made any assessment of the implications for the United Kingdom life insurance industry if the current bid for the Pearl Group by Australian Mutual Provident is allowed to proceed.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 24 November 1989]: On 13 November my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced his decision not to refer the proposed acquisition of Pearl Group plc by AMP (UK) PLC to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for investigation. Under the merger control provision of the Fair Trading Act 1973 each merger is considered on its own merits. My right hon. Friend's decision in this case was taken after full consideration of all relevant issues and was in accordance with the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading.

Building Societies

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will consider making illegal the conditional selling of some building societies who offer special deals only if the endowment or pension plan is written with them.

Mr. Ryder: I have been asked to reply. Since January 1988 building societies have followed a code of practice which precludes them from making it a condition of an offer of a first mortgage advance that the borrower uses other services, required by the borrower in connection with the making of the advance, provided by the society. The Government agreed with societies in July 1986 that section 35 of the Building Societies Act 1986, which makes such linking of services an offence, would not be implemented if such a code was adopted. Neither section 35 nor the code seek to prevent cross-subsidy because there can be legitimate commercial reasons for it, and it may be to the advantage of the borrower.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Chernobyl

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of (a) farms, (b) sheep and (c) acres in Northern Ireland currently under restriction owing to the radioactive contamination following the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information at November 1989 is as follows:

	Number
Number of farms	123
Number of sheep	19,570
Area of land	[1]21,612

[1] acres.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what expenditure he has incurred in compensation for farmers in Northern Ireland as a result of the Chernobyl accident for each year since 1986.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The amount of compensation paid to farmers in Northern Ireland resulting from the Chernobyl accident was as follows:

	£
1987-88	12,658
1988-89	29,084
[1]1989-90	18,313

[1] (to date).

Coats Viyella

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assistance the Northern Ireland Office is providing to Coats Viyella for its operations in Northern Ireland; and what assistance has been given specifically for the transfer of work from the Van Heusen production facilities in St. Austell to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 24 November 1989]: Coats Viyella has 10 manufacturing plants within the textiles and clothing sector in Northern Ireland employing 3,600 people. In the 1988-89 financial year financial assistance totalling £5,556,670 was paid to the CV group.

No assistance has been either offered or given for the transfer of work from the Van Heusen production facilities in St. Austell to Northern Ireland.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Companies Act Investigations

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will conduct a review of the possibilities of prejudice to a criminal trial of individuals named in a Companies Act investigation when those individuals are, in advance of their trial, publicly disciplined by a self-regulatory organisation established under the Financial Services Act.

The Attorney-General: No. I do not believe such a review to be necessary.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iran-Iraq Conflict

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in negotiating the peace settlement to the Iran-Iraq conflict.

Mr. Hurd: We maintain our full support for the early implementation of Security Council resolution 598 in its entirety. We applaud the efforts of the Secretary-General and of his special representative, Mr. Jan Eliasson, to achieve progress in the negotiations. We are glad that the recent visit to the area by Mr. Eliasson has confirmed that the ceasefire is holding and that further talks may take place in New York in December. Movement is urgently needed. It is now over two years since the resolution was passed and 15 months since the ceasefire took effect. We urge the parties to work imaginatively and energetically to bring permanent peace to the region through early and successful negotiations under the Secretary-General's auspices. We will continue to do everything possible to help achieve this aim.

West Bank and Gaza

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent protests have been conveyed by his Department to representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organisation regarding the Palestinian Arabs killed by other Palestinians since the disturbances began in the West Bank and Gaza two years ago; and what reply has been received.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have taken this up with several representatives of the PLO, including Mr. Arafat himself.

British Diplomats (Israel)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the guidelines followed by (a) diplomatic staff of the consulate general in Jerusalem and (b) diplomatic staff of the Embassy in Tel Aviv regarding visits to areas under Israeli military administration since June 1967; what specific guidelines exist regarding visits to communities under curfew or declared to be closed by the Israeli military administration; and what guidelines exist regarding East Jerusalem, as annexed by Israel in 1967.

Mr. Waldegrave: Diplomatic and consular staff in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem are free to move throughout the occupied territories, including that part of Jerusalem which Israel illegally annexed de facto in 1967, while having regard to any restrictions imposed by the Israeli authorities in accordance with Israel's responsibilities as a military occupier of these territories under international law, in particular the fourth Geneva convention of 1949.

Beit Sahour

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the recent visit of Her Majesty's consul-general in Jerusalem to Beit Sahour; and what discussions have been held with the Government of Israel regarding the circumstances surrounding the visit.

Mr. Waldegrave: Her Majesty's consul-general visited Beit Sahour on 12 October in the light of reports that the Israeli authorities were conducting punitive tax-collecting raids on the inhabitants. We have assured the Israelis that there was no impropriety in his doing so. We await a reply to our representations to the Israeli authorities about their action in Beit Sahour.

Short-range Nuclear Forces

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards negotiations on short-range nuclear forces after the conclusion of a global ban on chemical weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: Although a global ban on chemical weapons is an arms control goal of the Alliance, NATO's policy on negotiations on short-range nuclear missiles, as expressed in the comprehensive concept, is not linked to the conclusion of such a ban.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards negotiations on short-range nuclear forces after a conventional forces in Europe agreement has been concluded and reductions are under way.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our policy is as set out in the comprehensive concept adopted by NATO Heads of State and Government at their summit in May, namely that, once the implementation of an agreement on conventional arms is under way,

"the United States, in consultation with the Allies concerned, is prepared to enter into negotiations to achieve a partial reduction of American and Soviet land-based nuclear missiles of shorter range to equal and verifiable levels."

The comprehensive concept also makes it clear that negotiated reductions should not take place until a CFE agreement has been implemented.

Combat Aircraft

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's current proposed ceiling on combat aircraft in the region from the Atlantic to the Urals; and what is the present level of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation combat aircraft in this region.

Mr. Waldegrave: At the NATO summit in May, the Allies decided to expand their proposal at the negotiations in Vienna on conventional forces in Europe, so as to include reductions by each side to equal ceilings in all land-based combat aircraft at the level 15 per cent. below current Alliance holdings. This has subsequently been amplified into a specific proposal for an equal ceiling of 5,700 such aircraft.

Malawi

Mr. Chris Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British Government employees are currently based in Malawi; and what are their duties.

Mr. Waldegrave: Thirty-one British Government employees are currently based in Malawi. Sixteen are employed at the British high commission in Lilongwe in normal diplomatic service duties. Fifteen are employed at the office of the British development division in southern Africa, also in Lilongwe, which manages our aid programmes in Botswana, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

There are also 13 technical co-operation officers, employed by the British Government, who are on loan to the Government of Malawi.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the fund-raising activities of British diplomats in Malawi during the last two years.

Mr. Waldegrave: British diplomats themselves are not involved in any fund-raising activities in Malawi. The Association of Diplomatic Women in Lilongwe, which represents all wives and women staff in the diplomatic community there, organises fund-raising events and gives the proceeds to private charities in Malawi. Members of British diplomatic families have taken part in these events, in particular an annual fair.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made since 1979 to the Government of Malawi regarding human rights in that country.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government of Malawi are fully aware of our views on human rights, which have been made known on a number of occasions in various fora, including the United Nations. My right hon. Friend the then Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised the issue in Malawi during her visit there in 1987. We are aware of recent developments and are monitoring them closely.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made concerning the violations of human rights by the Government and Indian forces in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have made our concern about human rights abuses clearly known to the Sri Lankan Government. Most recently, our high commissioner in Colombo raised the subject on 27 October. We welcome President Premadasa's invitation to the International Committee of the Red Cross to monitor the situation and report their findings.

HEALTH

Civil Service Dispersal

131. Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the civil servants offered over £12,000 per family to move to Leeds have accepted this offer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend made an announcement on relocation on 14 November and at this early stage we have no indication of how many staff are likely to wish to move to Leeds.

Cruse

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, in light of the increase in disasters, he will increase his Department's financial help to Cruse for bereavement care.

Mr. Freeman: The increased level of grant aid to Cruse, from 1 April 1990, will be determined in the light of the increase in the organisation's headquarters administrative costs arising from increased demand for its services.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date he received an application from Cruse for a one-off grant of £150,000 in 1990 and for a total of £710,000 for the years 1990 to 1993; and when he expects to announce a decision upon it.

Mr. Freeman: The application was received in the Department on 10 November and is under consideration. Ministers expect to announce decisions on new and renewal grants to voluntary bodies in good time before the commencement date of 1 April 1990.

Neuroblastoma

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) why there is no national screening programme for babies with neuroblastoma; and what is his estimate of the average cost to the National Health Service of treating cases of neuroblastoma;

(2) what study his Department has made of the routine screening of babies for neuroblastoma in other countries.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It has yet to be demonstrated that a screening service reduces mortality from neuroblastoma. The Department keeps research and development in this field at home and abroad under regular review. Comprehensive information on the costs of treatment for this condition is not available, but it has been estimated that in one region these are about £45,000 per case.

Ambulance Service (Dispute)

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to monitor the length of time from call-out to arrival of substitute police and army vehicles used as ambulances in the London area.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The London ambulance service with the help of the police control room at New Scotland Yard and army and police emergency crews has established a system which allows response times to be monitored.

Broiler Sheds (Diseases)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government intend to take following the publication of the Wigtoft report on the emission of diseases through the extraction fans in broiler sheds which are used on chicken farms.

Mr. Freeman: We are not aware of this report and would be grateful for details. If there are health implications in circumstances described in the report these will be fully considered.

Alternative Therapies

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been undertaken into alternative therapies as a means of reducing the cost of the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: Medical practitioners may offer complementary therapies within the NHS if they feel competent to do so. The Department of Health has commissioned no research into the cost effectiveness of complementary therapies. However, the Medical Research Council, in conjunction with the British Chiropractic Association, are funding a study, at Northwick Park hospital into the treatment of back pain using chiropractic and orthodox techniques.

Young People

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's assessment of the decline in the number of 16 to 19-year-old males in the United Kingdom between 1989 and 1993.

Mr. Freeman: The Government Actuary's mid 1988-based population projections indicate that the number of males aged 16-19 in the United Kingdom is projected to fall from 1·718 million in mid 1989 to 1·413 million in mid 1993, a decrease of 18 per cent.

Listeria

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the results of the Public Health Laboratory survey into listeria contamination in milk.

Mr. Freeman: It is for the Public Health Laboratory service to publish the results of its own survey. I understand that collation and publication are in hand.

Herts and Essex Hospital

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce his decision on proposed changes in hospital provision at Herts and Essex hospital.

Mr. Freeman: We hope to make an announcement shortly.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to enable a person born live but damaged during an abortion prior to 28 weeks' gestation to secure compensation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The hon. Member may wish to refer to section 1 of the Congenital Disabilities (Civil Liability) Act 1976.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance on (a) methods of abortion, (b) possible complications after an abortion, (c) causes of death in abortions to the unborn baby and (d) characteristics and development of the unborn baby, he makes available to mothers considering abortion after 18 weeks' gestation;

(2) what guidelines he has issued to abortionists concerning the matters that should be mentioned to mothers considering abortion after 18 weeks' gestation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department does not give direct advice to women seeking abortion. Circular HC(77)26 issued to health authorities and all places in the private sector which carry out abortions, deals with the general arrangements for the provision of counselling services to these women. The circular endorses the Lane committee's view that as part of the counselling process a women seeking abortion should be told of the nature of the operation; and of the likelihood of complete recovery from it or possible resultant morbidity. A copy of the circular is in the Library.

Medicines (Product Licences)

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether all product licence applications for medicines distributed in the United Kingdom have included the submission of a full product specification.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All product licence applications for medicinal products used in the United Kingdom are submitted in accordance with the Medicines Act 1968 and the relevant EC directives. These currently include the requirement that licence application must be supported either with or by reference to full data on the product particulars.

Orthopaedics (Waiting Times)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average waiting time for an appointment in the Leicester area for a patient waiting to be seen by an orthopaedic specialist; and what was the waiting time one year ago and five years ago.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We do not collect information on out-patient waiting times centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to write to the chairman of Leicester district health authority who could supply the information he seeks.

Haemophiliacs (AIDS)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will take steps to expedite the settlement of compensation claims for haemophiliacs who are HIV positive.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend gave my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 23 November at columns 11-12.

Salmonella

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each week from March 1989 to date the number of salmonella food poisoning cases which have been reported.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table. Figures are collated monthly, and are not available on a weekly basis.

Human isolates of salmonella confirmed by the Department of Enteric Pathogens, PHLS

1989	Number
March	1,213
April	1,106
May	1,364
June	2,854
July	3,303
August	4,586
September	4,684
October	3,556

Griffiths Report

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding April 1991 as the implementation date of the recommendations of the Griffiths report as not being a sufficient period in which local authorities can prepare for their new responsibilities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received no representations to date which have suggested that local authorities will not be able to prepare to discharge their new responsibilities adequately by April 1991.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make local authorities statutorily responsible for the funding, registration and inspection of residential and nursing homes.

Mr. Freeman: Our intention which we set out in the White Paper "Caring for People", is that from 1 April 1991 local authorities will become responsible for a single unified budget to cover the costs of social care in residential care and nursing homes. The new arrangements will not apply to people already resident in homes before April 1991. The Registered Homes Act 1984 places a duty on local authorities and district health authorities to register and inspect residential care homes and nursing homes respectively. We have no plans to alter these arrangements.

Community Care

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make new funds available to finance the additional expenditure which will be incurred by local authorities in implementing the new community care packages, whilst still retaining responsibility for funding those already within residential care as at April 1991.

Mr. Freeman: As we have made clear in recent statements and in our White Paper "Caring for People: Community Care in the Next Decade and Beyond" (published on 16 November) we recognise that local authorities will require adequate resources to enable them to discharge their new responsibilities. This will involve a switch of resources from social security and the aggregate amount of transferred resources will allow for the projected growth in the numbers of people needing support, taking account of demographic factors. Final decisions will be taken in the public expenditure survey in 1990, following discussions with the local authority associations which are currently underway.

Patient Referrals

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients from the Irish Republic have been referred to United Kingdom hospitals over the last full period for which figures exist.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987, 83 patients were referred from the Irish Republic for treatment in NHS hospitals in the United Kingdom under the European Community regulations. Figures for referrals to private hospitals are not held centrally.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many United Kingdom patients have been referred to hospitals in the Irish Republic over the last full period for which figures exist.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987, one NHS patient was referred from the United Kingdom for treatment in the Irish Republic under the European Community regulations. Figures for referrals between private hospitals are not held centrally.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Malawi

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what aid his Department has supplied to the Government of Malawi since 1979.

Mr. Waddington: None.

Rayner Review

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the interim report of the Rayner review on the funding of the voluntary sector.

Mr. John Patten: The efficiency scrutiny of Government funding of the voluntary sector which was announced on 16 May has delivered its report. We are considering the report, and the question of publication, with colleagues in other Government Departments who have an interest in its findings.

Fines

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has plans to review the relative severity of fines for different categories of offence.

Mr John Patten: The Crown court has unlimited powers to impose fines. The maximum penalties for offences tried in magistrates courts are determined in legislation and are related to the seriousness of each offence. Maximum penalties are reviewed as necessary. Sentencing in individual cases is a matter for the courts.

IBA

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the current levels of remuneration and allowances paid to each member of the Independent Broadcasting Authority by name, including the chairman and deputy chairman; what were the levels before they were last increased; and whether he proposes to increase them.

Mr. Mellor: The following levels of remuneration apply:

	Current Level £	Previous Level £
Chairman	39,200	37,335
Deputy Chairman	10,085	9,605
National Members	7,545	7,185
Other Members	5,030	4,790

The current levels incorporate this year's Top Salaries Review Body's recommended increase of 5 per cent.

Broadcasting Complaints Commission

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the current levels of remuneration and allowances paid to each member of the Broadcasting Complaints Commission, including the chairman and deputy chairman; what were the levels before they were last increased; and what proposals he has for increasing them.

Mr. Waddington: The following levels of remuneration apply in relation to the Broadcasting Complaints Commission (BCC):

	Chairman	Member
With effect from 1 October 1988	£23,875 for 3 days per week	£4,790 for 1 day per week
With effect from 1 April 1989	£25,070 for 3 days per week	£7,545 for 1½ days per week

There is no deputy chairman of the BCC. We have no plans at this stage to increase these salary levels. They are subject to review by the Top Salaries Review Body.

UHF Channel

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has yet received an assessment of the technical feasibility of a sixth ultra high frequency channel; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: As my noble Friend Lord Young of Graffham announced in another place on 27 April at c. 1403 in response to a question from Lord Mowbray and Stourton:

"Paragraph 5.7 of the Government's White Paper Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition, Choice and Quality stated:

'In the longer term, a sixth network at UHF covering up to 50 per cent. of the population might be feasible. But this has not yet been studied in detail, and the cost and interference implications could be significant. Further study is also needed of the implications for existing users of the spectrum involved. The Government has put these studies in hand.'

After careful consideration of the results of the technical feasibility studies carried out so far, the Government have decided not to pursue the studies further for the foreseeable future.

The studies show that the best prospects of achieving a sixth terrestrial UHF television network (Channel 6) lie in making a more intensive use of the 44 channels currently used to provide the four existing UHF services. However, if off-air reception of the four existing UHF services is to remain intact, Channel 6 would be unable to achieve more than about 17 per cent. coverage of United Kingdom households and there would, for example, be no coverage at all of the London area. The technical studies have shown that it might be possible to extend Channel 6 coverage to as much as 40 per cent. of United Kingdom households; but the price would be that perhaps 20,000 viewers in up to 10 areas (mainly in London and the North West) would lose the ability to receive off-air one of the four existing UHF services. The Channel 6 franchisee could of course be required to restore the lost service by cable or some other means to those viewers, who would also generally be unable to recive off-air either Channel 5 or Channel 6.

There would however be other adverse consequences. These would include the virtual abandonment of the programme to instal some 200 further relay transmitters to bring the four existing UHF services to many of the 350,000 people who are still unable to receive them. Additionally, because the BBC and the independent television programme companies currently make as much use as they can of the remaining 'spare capacity' within the 44 channels to accommodate some of their programme-making requirements, the loss of this capacity to Channel 6 would create a major problem in finding suitable alternative spectrum for the programme-making activities (including outside broadcasts) of the broadcasters, at a time when spectrum for these purposes is at a premium to meet the needs of the new wave of satellite and other broadcasters. A further disadvantage is that most viewers would need to instal a third UHF aerial to receive Channel 6.

Substantial further study would now be needed to take this work further forward. The Government have taken the view on a careful analysis of the studies so far that the very considerable costs and penalties attached to TV6 on this basis are simply not justified by such a limited result, especially at a time when there is the promise of a considerable proliferation of new television networks—satellite, local cable/MVDS, and Channel 5. If we wished to preserve the options on Channel 6 until the picture on other new services has become clearer, the present moratorium on the building of additional relay transmitters, which has now been in force for some 18 months, would need to be extended for perhaps several more years. This would almost certainly spell the end of the programme to extend progressively the UHF network to cover those who are at present unserved, or inadequately served, by it. We do not regard this as an acceptable consequence, and we have agreed that the moratorium should now be lifted.

DNA Testing

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the DNA testing scheme will become fully available to applicants wishing to join their families in the United Kingdom; what will be the cost of each test; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The results of privately commissioned DNA tests have been accepted as proof of relationship in immigration cases for some time. The Government's intention to introduce DNA testing into the entry clearance process was announced earlier this year. It was made clear that the DNA scheme will not be centrally funded, but also that we will seek to avoid imposing too great a burden on individual applicants. We will make a further announcement about the implementation of the Government scheme when the necessary arrangements have been completed.

Pornography

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to require shops wishing to sell pornography to obtain a licence from a local authority in a process open to representations from the general public.

Mr. Waddington: I refer the hon. Member to section 2 of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982, which enables a local authority to adopt the provisions of schedule 3 to the Act for the control in its area of sex cinemas and sex shops.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department or any organisation responsible to him monitors the contents of pornographic material available in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The Department keeps closely in touch with the Metropolitan police's obscene publications branch, the Crown prosecution service, and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, all of which have information on pornographic material. The British Board of Film Classification, whose officers have responsibilities under the Video Recordings Act 1984, and the Broadcasting Standards Council are other sources of information.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how long the waiting list is of applications to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; and what has been the length of the waiting list in each of the past five years;

(2) how many applications are currently before the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; and what has been the figure over each of the past five years.

Mr. John Patten: The number of applications awaiting resolution at 31 October 1989 was 95,294. The number of applications awaiting resolution at the end of each of the last five financial years is given in the table.

	Number
1984-85	41,800
1985-86	51,500
1986-87	64,000

	Number
1987-88	78,000
1988-89	82,000

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases have been decided within 12 months by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each of the past five years; and whether, in dealing with such cases any distinction is made between cases which are straightforward and cases which are not.

Mr. John Patten: The board does not keep information on the number of cases resolved within 12 months of receipt. The board's annual reports record the percentage of cases submitted to a single member of the board within time bands of registration. The percentage of cases dealt with in this way within 12 months of registration is given in the table for each of the last five years.

Each application is dealt with on its own merits. The time taken to resolve a claim will normally depend on the seriousness of the injury, the prognosis and the number and nature of inquiries necessary to assess compensation. Priority is given to claims from the bereaved, the elderly, the young and cases of severe injury.

Percentage of cases submitted to a single member within 12 months of registration

Year	Per cent.
1984-85	74·5
1985-86	69·6
1986-87	49·8
1987-88	30·8
1988-89	26·9

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total financial resource allocated to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each of the past five years; what is the average expenditure on an inquiry; whether he has any plans to increase the funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The average cost of resolving a claim at single member stage on the papers is £152, and by oral hearing £537. Total expenditure on the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each of the last five years in given in the table.

Year	Expenditure (£ million)
1984-85	39·5
1985-86	45·8
1986-87	52·9
1987-88	58·9
1988-89	77·5

The Government's expenditure plans for future years will be published in the next public expenditure White Paper.

Litter

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in what proportion of the cases brought under the Litter Act, during the most recent period for which statistics are available, the prosecution was successful;

(2) what was the average fine imposed under the Litter Act during the most recent period for which statistics are available.

Mr. John Patten: The latest figures are for 1988 which show that for England and Wales there were 1,762 prosecutions under the Litter Act 1983. Of those 1,607 (91 per cent.) were found guilty. The average fine imposed under this Act was £40.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether magistrates receive training on the details of the Act relating to littering and guidance as to the appropriate level of fines to be levied.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

Magistrates receive advice from their clerk on the details of the Act, the range of penalties available for particular offences, and any guidance relevant to the choice of penalty provided by the law or by decisions of the superior courts.

Broadcasting

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy for allowing freedom to programme makers who adhere to standards of decency.

Mr. Waddington: Programme makers have freedom to choose their material within the statutory framework for broadcasting, part of which makes it clear that broadcasters have a responsibility to ensure that nothing is included in their programmes which offends against good taste and decency.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy for ensuring that there are proper controls over broadcasts.

Mr. Waddington: Controls are in place through the Broadcasting Act 1981 in the case of independent television and radio, through the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984 in the case of cable and satellite broadcasting, and in the case of services provided by the BBC through its royal charter, licence and agreement. In addition, the Government propose in the Broadcasting Bill to put the Broadcasting Standards Council on a statutory footing.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on access to broadcasting by Christian organisations.

Mr. Waddington: We are proposing that religious groups, including Christian groups, should be allowed to run independent radio stations provided that they observe the content requirements envisaged in paragraph 7.7 of the Green Paper "Radio: Choices and Opportunities" (February 1987, Cm. 92).

Religious groups will continue to be disqualified from holding licences to run television services. But there is no reason why programmes dealing with religious matters should not continue to be broadcast and indeed proliferate on television, subject to their observing the content requirements set out in paragraph 6.10 of the White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition, Choice and Quality" (November 1988, Cm. 517).

The Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has reveived from organisations and individuals in Northern Ireland about the Government's proposed Broadcasting Bill.

Mr. Waddington: My right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) placed in the Library on 21 April a list of the main organisations which submitted comments on the White Paper (as indicated in a reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) at column 342). A number of these submissions were from organisations in Northern Ireland. In addition, a number of comments have been received from viewers and listeners in Northern Ireland.

Immigration

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ease the travel restrictions on those resident in the United Kingdom with indefinite leave of stay here, who wish to travel within the EEC; and what representations he has made to fellow EEC members on this matter.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Assuming that the reference is to non-EC nationals, the position is that no steps have been taken or representations made with a view to easing travel restrictions because none of the relevant EC law is designed to benefit resident non-EC nationals per se. However, if it is intended to refer to particular cases of difficulty in which it is thought the Government have a locus, I would of course be glad to look into detailed circumstances further should the right hon. Member wish to write.

Telephone Chat-lines

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to ban telephone chat-lines.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 24 November 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

On 17 November, the Director General of Telecommunications, Sir Bryan Carsberg, announced new controls on multiline and one-to-one services provided over British Telecom's network. From 8 December, when the controls come into effect, such services can be provided only in accordance with a code of practice acceptable to the Director General or if granted a specific exemption. No such codes have yet been recognised for these purposes.

In the light of this announcement, I have no intention of meeting the Director General or of considering the introduction of legislation on this subject.

SCOTLAND

Chernobyl

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of (a) farms, (b) sheep and (c) acres in Scotland currently under restriction owing to the radioactive contamination following the Chernobyl accident.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Sixty-nine farms, approximately 66,000 sheep and about 66,000 acres are currently subject to restrictions.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what expenditure he has incurred in compensation for farmers as a result of the Chernobyl accident for each year since 1986 in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Payments in Scotland have been as follows:

	£
1986	1,132,901
1987	403,610
1988	143,718
[1]1989	103,108

[1] To the end of October.

Local Authorities

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had on the draft scheme of members' allowances to be applied to local authority members in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Representations have been received from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and several individuals. The main points raised related to the overall quantum and cash limit on local authorities, the abolition of financial loss allowance for councillors, the possible banding of the levels of allowance for Scottish local authorities by population and provision of special responsibility allowances for minority groups.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what special provisions he is considering to take account of the special needs of councillors in rural areas in the scheme of members' allowances in local government.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. Councillors in rural areas who have to travel long distances in the course of their duties will be able to claim travel and subsistence allowances as before.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the detailed conclusions on the scheme of members' allowances to be applied to local authority members in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The details of the new scheme will be the subject of further consultation with the local authority associations and decisions will be announced as soon as possible. The intention is that the new scheme will come into effect on 1 April 1990.

Access to Personal Files Act

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make regulations under the Access to Personal Files Act 1987 on access to (a) housing records and (b) school records and further education records.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We are currently examining the points made in consultation and expect to make regulations as soon as possible with a view to their coming into force in spring 1990. Regulations covering school and further education records will be made under the Education (Scotland) Act 1980.

Haddock Quota

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to what extent the 1989 haddock quota has been exceeded; what is the extent to which quotas have been exceeded at each port; when it first became clear that the local quotas had been exceeded and why action was not taken immediately to prevent excess fishing continuing by those who had exceeded their quotas; and what steps he intends taking to prevent this situation recurring.

Mr. Lang: Final information is not yet available on the exact level of the United Kingdom's landings of North sea haddock. The table shows the estimated level of overfishing by those groups excluded from the fishery before the complete closure. In all cases the exclusions took effect before recorded landings had reached the level of the allocation made to each of the groups concerned. As part of the normal arrangements for distributing internally the United Kingdom's quotas those groups disadvantaged by this year's closure will be compensated next year with correspondingly increased quotas. It is estimated that 85 per cent. of the allocation untaken as a result of the total closure of the fishery is attributable to vessels based in Scotland.

Organisation	Allocation (tonnes)	Catch known at 11 November (tonnes)	Catch as a percentage of allocation	Date of withdrawal of licences
Scottish Fishermen's Organisation	18,252	18,791	103	7 October
North East of Scotland Fishermen's Organisation	13,090	13,790	105	7 October
Shetland Fish Producers Organisation	2,602	2,680	101	4 November
Fish Producers Organisation	879	954	109	13 September

Caledonian MacBrayne

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to announce the composition of the new board of Caledonian MacBrayne Limited; what representations he has received regarding the delay in making the announcement; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer to the answer which my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 27 October 1989 (Hansard Vol. 158 Col. 456). No representations have been received suggesting that there has been unreasonable delay in making an announcement. It is important that the widest possible range of experience, expertise and local knowledge is reflected in the board's membership.

Universities

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the extent of rate relief that each Scottish university can expect to receive in 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: From 1 April 1990 universities in Scotland, like those in England and Wales, will benefit from the same 80 per cent. relief from rates which is to be extended to other charitable organisations. The relevant rating authority in each case will have discretion to increase this relief to up to 100 per cent. The benefit in cash terms to each university will not be known until the valuation roll containing the rateable values to apply from 1 April 1990 is published on 15 February.

Forestry

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will consider introducing a procedure of inquiry in principle, where appropriate, in relation to streamlining Forestry Commission activities;

(2) if he will consider the introduction of a maintenance grant linked to five-year plans of operation for forestry management purposes;

(3) if he will make arrangements so that grants in relation to the woodlands grant scheme are henceforth based on the total area of the approved unit of forest land applied for;

(4) if he will take immediate steps to introduce a grant towards forest road construction to enable better access to inaccessible areas;

(5) if he will take steps to increase the better land supplement to £400 per hectare.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All these aspects of the Government's support arrangements for forestry were covered in the Forestry Industry Committee of Great Britain's paper "Options for British Forestry", a copy of which was sent recently to the Secretary of State for Scotland. The Government will consider the recommendations contained in that paper and will respond to the committee in due course.

Nairn Bypass

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects a bypass to be constructed around the town of Nairn.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At present there are no immediate proposals for a Nairn bypass. Nairn is predominantly an end destination and the volume of through traffic on the A96 is insufficient to justify provision of a bypass.

There are, however, plans for a major scheme to build a new Nairn railway bridge which will include improvements to the layout of the junction of the A96 and A939, provide a new alignment under the railway and considerably ease traffic flow at the east end of the town.

DEFENCE

War Widows

133. Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what would be the net annual cost to the Exchequer if the war widows' pension for pre-1973 war widows were to be placed on the same level as applies to post-1973 war widows.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The standard rate of war widows pension paid by the Department of Social Security is the same regardless of when the husband served or died. Differences arise in the total benefits received by war widows for a number of reasons, such as their eligibility for awards under the provisions of the occupational scheme for the armed forces, the date of the award under the scheme, and eligibility for other pensions or income-related benefits. It has been estimated that the cost of awarding an attributable family pension under the armed forces occupational pension scheme, at current rates, to all service widows who are ineligible for such an award but who receive a war widows pension under the DSS scheme, would be around £200 million a year. That is an approximate cost. Production of a refined net cost would require a detailed assessment of the personal circumstances of every war widow who would be affected.

SS21 Missile

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment as to the number of SS21 missile launchers that were deployed by the USSR when Mr. Gorbachev came to office.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1985, the year in which Mr. Gorbachev took office, we currently estimate that the USSR deployed in the region of 90 SS21 missile launchers.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of the range of the SS21 missile.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The range of the SS21 is estimated to be approximately 90 km.

Trident

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment as to the proportion of time during which at least one Trident submarine could not be guaranteed to be on station if only three Trident submarines were procured.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am unable for reasons of security to give details of my Department's assessment. However, I can say that a three-submarine force could not guarantee the presence of at least one submarine on station at all times. Continuity of operations is essential to the maintenance of a credible strategic deterrent, and has been our policy throughout the life of the Polaris force. It follows, therefore, that the planned Trident force must comprise four submarines if an effective deterrent is to be maintained.

Soviet Short-Range Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the basis upon which his Department has calculated that 95 per cent. of Soviet short-range systems have been modernised.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice to give details of the sources and methods used to make such estimates.

Destroyers and Frigates

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether all the destroyers and frigates in table 1 are declared to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, pursuant to the information provided by his Department to the Defence Select Committee, 6th report, Session 1988-89, HC 419, page vii, table 1.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 6 November 1989, at column 482.

Defence Equipment

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether figures for the United Kingdom's defence equipment holdings have been made publicly available prior to publication in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation publication, "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts", dated November 1988.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make it his Department's practice to publish the United Kingdom's equipment holdings, as set out in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation publication, "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts", in subsequent editions of the Statement on the Defence Estimates.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no current plans to do so. The annual Statements on the Defence Estimates already contain extensive information on United Kingdom forces.

BAOR

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has made any assessment as to the likely effects on the British Army of the Rhine of the use of nuclear artillery shells by United Kingdom forces against WTO forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member on 6 November at column 482.

Combat Aircraft

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the figures for combat aircraft in the statement on the defence estimates 1989 include air defence fighters, reconnaissance aircraft, training aircraft and electronic counter-measure aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As explained in footnotes, the figures for combat aircraft in figures 8 and 9 of chapter 6 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989 include fighters, fighter-bombers, light and medium bombers, reconnaissance and electronic warfare aircraft, but exclude combat capable trainers. Figure 11 covers the same types of aircraft, except that the Warsaw pact calculation of the ratio of aircraft (shown in the right-hand column) also includes naval aircraft.

Tornado

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Tornado aircraft is a longer-range intermediate nuclear force or shorter-range intermediate nuclear force capable aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to figure 12 in volume I of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989 (Cm. 675—I).

Malawi

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what aid his Department supplied to the Government of Malawi since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Minister of Defence does not provide aid as such. However, in recent years the British Government, through the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, have given limited assistance to the Malawian army in the form of military training and gifts of non-lethal defence equipment. It is not our practice to disclose the cost of such assistance to individual countries.

WALES

Housing (Disabled and Elderly)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has plans to encourage Welsh local authorities to build houses in their areas especially for single disabled and elderly people.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is for local authorities to determine how best to use the resources available to them, taking account of local needs and seeking to maximise value for money. Generally, local authorities should seek to achieve this by, for example, entering into partnership arrangements with the voluntary and private sectors to meet all aspects of their housing need.

National Museum (Admission Charges)

87. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the fall in attendance at the National Museum of Wales following the introduction of admission charges.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 6 November 1989, Vol. 159, c. 444-45.

Chernobyl

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of (a) farms, (b) sheep and (c) acres in Wales currently under restriction owing to the radioactive contamination following the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Peter Walker: Approximately 416 holdings, 300,000 sheep and 210,000 acres.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what expenditure he has incurred in compensation for farmers as a result of the Chernobyl accident for each year since 1986 in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Payments have been as follows:

	£
1986	1,830,887
1987	1,416,812
1988	573,825
[1]1989	349,960

[1] To the end of October.

Sheep

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to assist the sheep industry within the hill areas of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The sheep industry in the hill areas of Wales benefits directly from a number of measures, including the hill livestock compensatory allowances, the sheep annual premium and the sheep variable premium. In addition, the farm and conservation grant scheme provides assistance to improve the efficiency and structure of the industry.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency and what issues were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have frequent meetings with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency to discuss matters relating to the whole range of the agency's activities.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to require that the sale of shares in Welsh Water is dealt with through an address in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: No.

Water Pollution

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he has made any orders under section 111 of the Water Act relating to water protection measures;

(2) if he will introduce measures under section 111 of the Water Act empowering the National Rivers Authority to issue consents in respect of potentially hazardous material stored alongside or in proximity to water courses in the valleys of the south Wales coalfield.

Mr. Ian Grist: No. It is for the National Rivers Authority or a water undertaker to apply to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State if they consider it necessary to restrict particular activities likely to result in the pollution of water.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many male (a) employees and (b) self-employed and female (i) full and (ii) part-time were in employment in Wales on the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Walker: In June 1989, the latest date for which information is available, the position is shown in the following table:

'000s

Males		Females
Employees in Employment[1]	Self Employed[2]	Employees in Employment[1] Full-time	Part-time
517	111	251	197

Source: Employment Department.

[1] Quarterly estimate series.

[2] Based on Annual Labour Force Survey and decennial Census of Population.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will require the National Rivers Authority to review the effectiveness of its communications and emergency planning systems with the emergency services;

(2) if he will seek an urgent meeting with the chairman of the National Rivers Authority to discuss its response to the recent pollution incident in the Rhymney river;

(3) if he will take steps to ensure that the National Rivers Authority implements a programme of re-stocking of the Rhymney river to replace fish stocks lost during the recent pollution incident;

(4) what information he has about the extent of pollution of the Rhymney river following an incident on 17 November; what were the numbers and species of fish killed; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what information he has about the loss of or damage to the fauna and flora of the Rhymney river, other than fish life, following the recent pollution incident.

Mr. Peter Walker: The pollution incident on 17 November affected approximately 20 km of the River Rhymney between New Tredegar and Machen. The National Rivers Authority estimates that some 20,000 fish were killed, the majority of which were brown and juvenile sea trout but some grayling and small numbers of juvenile salmon, roach, chub, rainbow trout, pike, adult salmon and sea trout were also affected. There is no discernable evidence of damage of the flora or other fauna of the river. The authority proposes to commence a restocking programme early in 1990.

The NRA will be producing a full report on the incident which will be copied to me. The Welsh region of the Authority has a formal procedure for continually reviewing the effectiveness of its communications and emergency planning systems.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the upper limit and the lower limit, respectively, on the proportion of shares in Welsh Water which will be sold only to Welsh people in the current share flotation;

(2) what is the upper limit and the lower limit, respectively, on the proportion of shares in Welsh Water which are being made available to foreign investors;

(3) what is the upper limit and the lower limit, respectively, on the proportion of shares in Welsh Water which will be sold only to British people.

Mr. Peter Walker: Initially 18·5 per cent. of the total offer is being made available to overseas investors. If there is a heavy demand for shares by members of the public a clawback provision allows for 25 per cent. of the shares available under the overseas offer to be made available to the public.

Under the United Kingdom offer for sale 23·55 per cent. of the ordinary share capital is being made available to the general public (including eligible customers, employees and pensioners of the company). A further 3 per cent. is reserved to meet share bonus entitlements and applications from eligible employees under the free and matching offers. If both the overseas and the institutional clawbacks are triggered, 46·875 per cent. of the ordinary share capital is available to the general public.

Eligible customers of Welsh Water who apply for shares in the company will be able to indicate whether they wish to receive customer bonus shares or a customer discount if their application is successful. It is for individuals, including those who are Welsh, to decide for themselves whether or not to buy shares.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the £62 million cost of the present water flotation will fall to met by Welsh Water plc.

Mr. Peter Walker: The prospectus for the water share offers which has been placed in the Library discloses that Welsh Water estimates that the expenses attributable and incidental to the Welsh combined offer will amount to £5 million (exclusive of VAT).

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what protections are built into the flotation process for Welsh Water to guard against foreign takeover; and what guarantees exist to ensure these protections have long-term effect.

Mr. Peter Walker: I will hold a special share in Welsh Water which will empower me to prevent anyone from owning more than 15 per cent. of the shares in Welsh Water plc in the period up to 31 December 1994. Following the redemption of the special share the 15 per cent. limitation on shareholding will remain unless it is removed by a vote of 75 per cent. of shareholders in a special resolution.

Housing

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many houses in (a) Wales, (b) Gwent and (c) Newport are classified as unfit to live in at the latest available date;

(2) how many houses in (a) Wales, (b) Gwent and (c) Newport are seriously in need of repair at the latest available date;

(3) how many houses in (a) Wales, (b) Gwent and (c) Newport lack (i) an inside toilet and (ii) a fixed bath at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Walker: Estimates from the 1986 Welsh house condition survey are given in the table together with the available comparative data on the significant improvement achieved since 1981. The data relate only to dwellings used as first homes.

Number of dwellings with certain characteristics

Characteristic	Wales		Gwent		Newport
	1981	1986	1981	1986	1986
Unfit	90,900	79,900	17,000	8,800	1,300
Threshold repair cost[1]	243,900	123,600	30,700	14,700	1,700
Lacking inside wc	55,000	19,600	6,100	2,100	400
Lacking fixed bath or shower	44,300	14,900	4,800	2,000	400

[1]Threshold figures for repair costs are £2,500 and £3,000 in 1981 and 1986 respectively.

Since 1986, a substantial additional renovation has been carried out with grant assistance: the total numbers of dwellings renovated in Wales, Gwent and Newport since October 1986 are 53,900, 8,800 and 1,500 respectively.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many housing completions there were in (a) Wales, (b) Gwent and (c) Newport in 1979; and what is the next recent figure;

(2) how many housing starts there were in 1979 in (a) Wales, (b) Gwent and (c) Newport; and what is the most recent figure.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is given in the following table:

	Housing Starts		Housing Completions
	1979	1988	1979	1988
Newport	432	456	594	646
Gwent	1,485	1,589	1,575	1,601
WALES	11,426	13,037	11,265	11,037

CIVIL SERVICE

Trade Unions

127. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he last met representatives of the Civil Service trade unions; and what matters were discussed.

128. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he next expects to meet representatives of the Civil Service trade unions to discuss staffing levels.

129. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he expects to meet Civil Service trade unions to discuss conditions of service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher).

Management Training

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what steps he is taking to promote management training in the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: Management development programmes are available to all levels of managers in the Civil Service. The top management programme, a six-week course with equal numbers of civil servants and non-civil servants, caters for all those newly promoted to grade 3 (under-secretary). The senior management development programme, a scheme involving a wide range of developmental opportunities, provides a framework for the systematic development of managers at grades 4 to 7 (broadly, assistant secretary to principal). A wide range of other opportunities is available to more junior managers. The Civil Service College provides high quality management training for senior and developmental grades.

In their response to the first report of the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee on Next Steps, the Government announced an incentive funding scheme designed to encourage Departments to increase their investment in training and development carried out as part of the senior mangement development programme. I am pleased to say that Departments and agencies have risen to the challenge, and this scheme has been responsible for considerable additional investment in these key management grades. I am delighted to announce that £1 million has been made available for continuing the challenge funding scheme in 1990-91.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service Dispersal

132. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Civil Service jobs have been moved from London to other areas in each of the past three years; what steps have been taken to ensure that these operations have given satisfactory results to the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Comprehensive data for the period in question is not held centrally. However, we can confirm that since April 1986 more than 4,000 Civil Service posts have been located or relocated away from London. The relocation guidelines (copy available in the Library of the House) require relocating departments to ensure that operational efficiency and overall cost effectiveness are taken into proper account in their decisions, which are announced by the relevant departmental Minister.

Privatisation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest figure for the total income from the selling into the private sector of state-owned industries and companies since 1979.

Mr. Lilley: The net proceeds from privatisation since May 1979 to date amount to some £27½ billion.

Company Borrowing

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet the Governor of the Bank of England to discuss company borrowing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor meets the Governor from time to time to discuss matters of current interest.

Interest Rates

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects interest rates to fall.

Mr. Ryder: Interest rates will be kept as high as is needed for as long as is needed to bring down inflation.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the impact of high interest rates on the number of unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The current level of interest rates is designed to bring down inflation. High inflation is the greatest threat to jobs.

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on interest rates.

Mr. Ryder: Bank base rates are 15 per cent.

Business Start-ups

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many business start-ups there were during the latest quarter for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In the calendar year 1988, the latest for which official figures have been published by the Employment Department, the net increase in the number of businesses registered for VAT was 64,000, an average of over 1,200 a week, the highest recorded level. This compares with an average weekly increase of around 800 a week in 1987.

Manufacturing, East Midlands

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much manufacturing output in the east midlands has changed in real terms since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that this information is not available. Constant price estimates are not made because there are no regional price indices.

Investment

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest available figures for inward investment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest information on the level of direct investment in the United Kingdom by overseas residents was published in British Business of 29 September 1989. Table 9.1 of the 1989 United Kingdom balance of payments (Pink Book) contains the latest information on the level of portfolio investment in the United Kingdom by overseas residents.

Banking and Currency

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to discuss with the European Community the development of a free market in banking and currency.

Mr. Ryder: The Government are fully committed to the European single market after 1992. Financial services legislation will form a major part of the measures introduced to secure the single market and many of these have already been agreed or are under active consideration. In the banking field, the Council agreed a common position text for the second banking co-ordination directive and the associated solvency ratios directive in July. These directives, together with the own funds directive, which was formally adopted in April 1989, make up a package of measures which are intended to secure a single market in banking. Briefly, these measures will provide credit institutions (largely banks and building societies in the United Kingdom) which are authorised in one member state with a "passport" to offer banking services throughout the Community without the need of further authorisation. Further information can be obtained from the DTI booklet "The Single Market: Financial Services" published in September 1989, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

The Council adopted the capital liberalisation directive on 24 June 1988 which provides for the free movement of capital across the Community. Remaining exchange controls in most member states are due to be abolished from 1 July 1990; but Spain, Ireland, Greece and Portugal have until the end of 1992 to comply with all its terms (with the possibility of a further extension for three years in Greece and Portugal). The Government strongly support the removal of exchange controls in the community: this is essential for the development of a single market. The United Kingdom abolished all exchange controls in 1979.

The United Kingdom's response to the Delors report "An Evolutionary Approach to Economic and Monetary Union", also proposes lifting further restrictions on the use of Community currencies and removing barriers to the use of cheaper and more efficient means of payment.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out general Government expenditure by his Department for the years 1974-75 to 1983-84, in cash and real terms, consistent with the figures for 1984-85 to 1992-93 that are set out in tables 3 and 4 of the 1989 Autumn Statement.

Mr. Lamont: Figures for central Government's own expenditure by my Departments in the years 1978-79 to 1983-84 consistent with those given in tables 3 and 4 of the 1989 Autumn Statement public expenditure press notice are as follows:

£ billion

	Cash figures	Real terms figures (1988-89 prices)
1978-79	1·5	3·2
1979-80	1·7	3·3
1980-81	2·0	3·2
1981-82	2·5	3·6
1982-83	2·7	3·6
1983-84	2·5	3·3

Corresponding figures for earlier years are not readily available.

Balance of Trade

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the annual balance of trade deficit or surplus for each of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries in each year of the 1980s.

Mr. Ryder: A trade balance series for each OECD country is published by the IMF in "International Financial Statistics Yearbook".

Inflation

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rate of inflation at the end of March in each year of the 1980s in each of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Ryder: Monthly figures for the 12-month growth in consumer price inflation for each OECD country have been published by the OECD throughout the 1980s in the monthly publication "Main Economic Indicators".

THE ARTS

Funding

93. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Minister for the Arts what will be the rate of increase of Government support for the arts over the next three years.

Mr. Luce: The central Government programme of expenditure on the arts will increase by 24 per cent. over the next three years at an average rate of 7·5 per cent. per year.

96. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Minister for the Arts by what percentage the funding of his Department will increase in 1990-91 over 1989-90.

Mr. Luce: By 12·5 per cent.

97. Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to what proportion of money for the arts announced in the Chancellor's Autumn Statement will be applied to (a) arts for the disabled, (b) arts for young people and (c) arts in the community.

Mr. Luce: The proportion of my Office's expenditure programme which are devoted to the causes described are not determined centrally. However, the institutions funded from the arts programme are aware of the needs of the disabled, etc and are free to give such support within their individual priorities. I was pleased to be able to announce a grant of £150,000 to the Carnegie trust ADAPT fund to improve the accessibility of arts venues to the disabled.

98. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Minister for the Arts what are the increases for the next three years in the funding of the Arts Council.

102. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a further statement on the increased budget for arts funding announced in the Autumn Statement.

99. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received following the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Autumn Statement as to the allocation of funding to the arts.

Mr. Luce: I am pleased to say that I have received a number of letters of appreciation from chairmen and directors of institutions which have benefited from the revised allocations I was able to announce on 16 November.

104. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received following his statement of support for the Arts Council and other arts funding bodies for 1990-91 and subsequent years.

Mr. Luce: I have received many representations thanking the Government for the substantial increase in arts funding which I announced on 16 November.

106. Mr. Watts: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will make a statement on three-year funding.

Mr. Luce: My aim in introducing three-year funding has been to give arts bodies a firm basis for their future planning and to encourage greater self-reliance and diversification of funding. This has involved the introduction of new measures, notably incentive funding for the performing arts and for libraries, and major increases in funding for the buildings and maintenance programme of the museums and galleries. I am very pleased at the success of the three-year strategy and congratulate arts and organisations on their achievements in diversifying and increasing their sources of funding from the private sector, and on becoming more professional in their management in recent years.

On 16 November I announced that following a review of the provisions made in last year's three-year settlement for 1990-91 and 1991-92, in the light of price movements and other developments. I was increasing those provisions by £33 million in each year. I was also pleased to announce an extension of the three-year funding programme to 1992-93, with an increase of 24 per cent. over that period.

107. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Minister for the Arts, whether he will make a statement on the budget of the Office of Arts and Libraries for the next three years.

Mr. Luce: My Office's total central Government programme of expenditure on the arts, including provision for the heritage and for the British Library St. Pancras project, will rise from £439 million in the current year to £544 million in 1992-93, an increase of 24 per cent.

115. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether the priority requests from the directors of the national museums and galleries have been met in his allocation of funds over the coming three years.

Mr. Luce: In the funding announcement that I made on 16 November I have taken account of the priorities detailed in the corporate plans of the national museums and galleries submitted to us earlier this year, especially on running costs, buildings, and maintenance and the conservation of collections. Over the period 1990-91 to 1992-93 expenditure on national museums and galleries will rise by 25 per cent. overall, and there will be an extra 34 per cent. for building and maintenance in the same period.

Wilding Report

94. Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has met the chairman and director of East Midlands Arts to discuss the Wilding report.

Mr. Luce: I have not yet done so.

103. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister for the Arts what timetable he is envisaging for his response to the Wilding report on regional arts.

Mr. Luce: I hope to announce my decision on Mr. Wilding's recommendations as soon as possible in the new year.

105. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has met the chairman and director of North West Arts to discuss the Wilding report.

Mr. Luce: I have not done so, but I plan that such a meeting should take place in the near future.

114. Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he intends to meet the chairman and director of the Lincolnshire and Humberside Arts Association to discuss the implications of the Wilding report.

Mr. Luce: I have asked for written representations but will, of course, be prepared to see the chairman and director if they wish.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on the proposals in the Wilding report from arts organisations and local authorities in the east midlands.

Mr. Luce: I have received a number of representations from such bodies.

Inflation

95. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will make a statement on the effect of inflation on arts bodies over the past two years.

Mr. Luce: The settlement I announced recently for the next three years has taken into account levels of inflation in the last two years.

117. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the increase over the next two years in the grant to the Arts Council.

98. Mr. James Couchman: To ask the Minister for the Arts, what are the increases for the next three years in the funding of the Arts Council.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) earlier today.

Museums and Galleries (Repairs)

100. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Minister for the Arts how he intends to meet the need for the repair and refurbishment of museums and galleries.

Mr. Luce: I announced on 16 November that the provision for the building and maintenance programme at the national museums and galleries which I sponsor will increase by 34 per cent. to some £64 million in 1992-93. This will bring the total provision for building and maintenance over the next three years to over £180 million.

Southern Arts

101. Mr. Martin: To ask the Minister for the Arts what benefits there will be for Southern Arts as a result of the increased expenditure for the arts announced in the Autumn Statement.

Mr. Luce: It is for the Arts Council to determine the level of its grant to the 12 regional arts associations. In 1990-91 these will increase by 10 per cent. in total. I am confident that this will enable all the RAAs to build on their excellent achievements of recent years.

Autumn Statement

108. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the implications for his Office of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Autumn Statement.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to my announcement on 16 November about the new three-year arts programme, which followed directly on the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Autumn Statement and the public expenditure programmes it contained. My new programme allows for growth on 24 per cent. over the years to 1992-93.

"Supporting the Arts"

109. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the proposed national touring board referred to in "Supporting the Arts".

Mr. Luce: This is one of a large number of recommendations that Mr. Wilding makes in his report. I shall not be reaching decisions about any part of the report until after the end of the consultation period.

Purchase Grants

110. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what consideration he is giving to increasing the purchase grants of the national museums and galleries and the National Heritage memorial fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The increase in the grants for the national museums and galleries that I announced on 16 November were directed to the institutions' own priorities of running costs and building maintenance. Purchase grants were not increased but I shall be discussing with the institutions concerned whether there is now scope for adjusting the balance of their budgets to allow additional expenditure on purchases.

The grant to the national heritage memorial fund is being maintained at £3 million a year for the time being, with equal shares being provided by my Department and by that of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. The requirements of the fund for 1991-92 onwards will be the subject of separate consideration.

Achievements

111. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the Government's achievements in the arts since 1979.

Mr. Luce: The Government's achievements in the arts since 1979 have been both numerous and varied. Among the most important, I would list:

The maintenance of central Government support for arts activities, and the introduction of measures to encourage greater self-reliance among arts institutions.

The establishment of a three-year programme of funding for the arts.

The introduction of corporate planning for the national museums and galleries and other non-departmental bodies, linked to the three-year funding programme.

The national museums and galleries being given greater control over their affairs by the move to grant-in-aid funding, and by their being untied from the Property Services Agency.

The major expansion schemes at some national museums and galleries, including the Clore gallery at the Tate, the new Tate gallery in Liverpool, and the re-development of the new Imperial War museum.

The Government's support for the development strategies designed to give the regions a larger share of arts spending and facilities.

The significant upsurge in, and continued success of, business sponsorship of the arts.

The new marketing initiatives to encourage arts bodies to market themselves more professionally and to increase access to the arts.

The creation of the national heritage memorial fund.

The development of incentive funding schemes for the performing arts and for public libraries, designed to encourage subsidised bodies to become more self-reliant in their development and growth.

The setting up and implementation of the public lending right scheme.

The very substantial progress with the British Library's St. Pancras project which will bring together most of the library's London-based collections and reading rooms on a single site, and provide much-improved facilities.

Towngate Theatre, Basildon

112. Mr. Amess: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last visited the Towngate theatre in Basildon to discuss funding for the dramatic arts.

Mr. Luce: I last visited the Towngate theatre on 13 April 1988 just prior to its opening.

Spending

113. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the current level of expenditure per capita on the arts.

Mr. Luce: The central Government programme of expenditure on the arts administered by my Office represents £9 per capita in England in the current financial year. This is of course a small fraction of the total spending on the arts throughout the country by local authorities, independent organisations and individuals themselves.

Admissions

116. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the current level of admissions to national galleries and museums.

Mr. Luce: I understand that in 1988 the total number of visitors to the 11 national museums and galleries for which I am responsible, including their outstations, was 20,571,119.

Business Sponsorship

118. Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has assessed the extent to which business sponsorship of the arts benefits innovative projects and small local arts bodies.

Mr. Luce: Under my incentive scheme business sponsors increasingly support innovative projects such as fringe theatre, local choirs and youth brass bands. Seventy per cent. of the awards go to groups based outside London. In addition, the business in the arts initiative, run by the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts, encourages local business communities to help with all manner of arts projects.

Arts Council

119. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of the Arts Council; and what was discussed.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon West, (Miss Nicholson).

Grant Aid, Devon

120. Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the value of grant aid for the arts provided for Devon in 1988; and which were the two organisations receiving the most funding.

Mr. Luce: South West Arts provided £386,000 for the arts in Devon in 1988-89 while the Arts Council directly funded organisations to the tune of £461,000. The Theatre Royal, Plymouth, and the Northcott theatre, Exeter, were the two organisations receiving the most funding.

Royal Shakespeare Company

121. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he proposes to visit the Royal Shakespeare Company during its stay in Newcastle upon Tyne in February and March 1990.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so, but I welcome the company's regular visits to Newcastle upon Tyne.

Rural Museums and Galleries

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he is taking to encourage the development of museums and galleries in rural areas.

Mr. Luce: In my announcement of 16 November I increased the allocation to the Museums and Galleries Commission which supports the network of area museum councils. The area museum councils in turn assist with the development of local museums and galleries, including those in rural areas. The area museums service for south-eastern England, for example, is funding county-wide consultancy groups, including one in Cambridgeshire, to improve local museum standards.

EMPLOYMENT

Football Clubs (Safety Inspections)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many football clubs have been inspected by the Health and Safety Executive over the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received following the issue in May 1986 and July 1989 of the booklet "Payment on Time" to indicate the success or otherwise of a voluntary code of practice to tackle the problem of the late payment of bills.

Mr. Eggar: We have received representations from a number of individuals and organisations following the publication of "Payment on Time" in 1986 and of "Prompt Payment Please" in 1988. These have been largely favourable and support the principle of voluntary arrangements to improve payment practice. I was very pleased that the top 100 companies were able to endorse the publication.

Young People (Protection)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to protect young people while at work.

Mr. Nicholls: The health and safety of virtually all employees, regardless of age, is fully protected by the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and its relevant statutory provisions. This includes young people on training courses designated under the Health and Safety (Training for Employment) (Amendment) Regulations 1989.

YTS (Accidents)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many fatal, major and minor reportable accidents occurred on YTS for each quarter since 1 October 1988, and what these figures were by region and as a percentage of total YTS trainees in each region.

Mr. Nicholls: The tables give the numbers of fatal, major and minor reportable accidents which occurred in YTS for each quarter since 1 October 1988 by region. Accident rates are expressed as an annual rate per 100,000 trainees.

Quarterly regional accident statistics vary markedly between regions and over time and should be interpreted with caution. The figures are subject to statistically random fluctuations, but are also heavily influenced by differences and changes in the occupational mix of training, in the administrative process of collecting the statistics, and other factors.

Quarter 1 April 1989—30 June 1989

Region	Numbers in training[3]	Accidents[1] Fatal	Major[2]	Minor	All accident rate/100,000[3]
Scotland	47,021	1	20	97	1,003
Northern	29,339	1	12	89	1,390
North West	58,260	—	30	115	995
Yorkshire and Humberside	44,209	—	12	102	1,031
West Midlands	42,309	—	16	55	671
East Midlands and Eastern	44,755	—	8	34	375
Wales	23,509	—	6	55	1,037
South West	28,785	—	9	16	347
South East	38,536	—	10	30	415
London	20,543	—	3	6	175

Quarter 1 July 1989—30 September 1989

Region	Numbers in training[3]	Accidents[1] Fatal	Major[2]	Minor	All accident rate/100,000[3]
Scotland	49,494	—	30	89	961
Northern	31,640	—	11	99	1,390
North West	62,904	—	22	142	1,042
Yorkshire and Humberside	48,035	—	21	85	882
West Midlands	45,629	—	13	70	727
East Midlands and Eastern	48,358	—	15	55	579
Wales	24,514	—	9	47	913
South West	30,966	—	4	30	439
South East	40,021	—	10	29	389
London	20,887	—	4	8	229

Quarter: 1 October 1988 to 31 December 1988

Region	Numbers in training[3]	Accidents:[1] Fatal	Major[2]	Minor	All accident rate/100,000
Scotland	48,679	1	22	97	986
Northern	32,587	—	14	130	1,767
North West	65,836	1	33	116	911
Yorkshire and Humberside	49,011	1	28	101	1,060
West Midlands	48,578	—	8	73	666
East Midlands and Eastern	50,346	—	24	84	858
Wales	25,297	—	8	87	1,502
South West	33,026	—	12	44	678
South East	44,151	—	14	58	652
London	22,571	—	1	13	248

Quarter: 1 January 1989 to 30 March 1989

Region	Numbers in training[3]	Accidents:[1] Fatal	Major[2]	Minor	All accident rate/100,000
Scotland	49,454	—	15	95	889
Northern	30,633	—	17	94	1,449
North West	60,920	—	34	123	1,030
Yorkshire and Humberside	45,461	—	28	123	1,328
West Midlands	43,937	1	19	103	1,119
East Midlands and Eastern	46,888	—	16	51	571
Wales	23,880	—	8	51	988
South West	30,587	—	5	30	457
South East	40,278	—	6	35	407
London	21,242	—	2	11	244

[1] Training Agency figures have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) on employed persons. However, the Training Agency's figures will include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments and road traffic accidents which may not have been reportable to HSE had the individuals been employed. HSE information is also collected on a different geographical basis.

[2] Major injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR). These regulations which came into force on 1 April 1986 reclassified fractured wrists and ankles as major injuries which were not considered to be major under the previous regulations, the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 (NADOR).

[3] These figures are provisional.

Disabled Workers

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to introduce further incentives in the near future to encourage firms to employ an increased percentage of disabled workers.

Mr. Eggar: Measures to encourage the employment of people with disabilities are among the matters being considered in the internal review of services for people with disabilities which my Department has been undertaking. A consultative document covering the conclusions reached in the review will be published as soon as possible.

Retail Prices

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to develop indicators for retail prices, which take account of regional variations, including variations in housing costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I have been asked to reply.

The RPI already takes account of regional variations in housing costs and other prices since it is based on expenditure information and price quotations from every region, weighted together so as to give an appropriately balanced indicator for the United Kingdom as a whole. It has never been the practice to compile separate indicators for the different regions and I have no plans to do so.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Limit (Isle of Man)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions have taken place between his Department and the European Commission about the implications for European Community fisheries policy of a 12-mile fishing limit around the Isle of Man; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: None. Common fisheries policy provisions already apply to the area which would be covered by an extended 12-mile limit and will continue to do so given our obligations under community treaties.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions have taken place between his Department and representatives of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations about a proposed 12-mile fishing limit around the Isle of Man.

Mr. Curry: None. The NFFO is, however, aware that given the provision in the Territorial Sea Act 1987 for a 12-mile territorial sea for the Isle of Man, Fisheries and other Departments are considering how this should be put into effect. The NFFO has been assured that any arrangement made would clearly have to safeguard the interests of all fishermen, and our Community obligations.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions have taken place between his Ministry and the Isle of Man authorities about a proposed 12-mile fishing limit around the Isle of Man; and what is the position of the Government.

Mr. Curry: Fisheries Departments have discussed with the Home Office and the Isle of Man authorities how the provision for a 12-mile territorial sea round the Isle of Man contained in the Territorial Sea Act 1987 might be implemented in relation to fishing. We are clear that it is necessary to safeguard the rights of all fishermen and our Community obligations.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the meetings he has had with the Isle if Man authorities over their proposals to impose a 12-mile exclusion zone for fishing.

Mr. Gummer: There are no proposals for a 12-mile exclusion zone for fishing. What is being explored are arrangements for implementing the provision in the 1987 Territorial Sea Act for a 12-mile territorial sea for the Isle of Man. For fishing, these would have to safeguard the interests and traditional rights of all fishermen within 12 miles of the Isle of Man.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with fishermen's repesentatives over the proposals by the Isle of Man to impose a 12-mile exclusion zone for fishing.

Mr. Gummer: None. There are no proposals for a 12-mile exclusion zone for fishing.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the proposals of the Isle of Man authorities to impose a 12-mile exclusion zone for United Kingdom fishermen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Isle of Man have made no proposals for a 12-mile exclusion zone for fishing. Nor would the Government entertain any proposals which did not accommodate the traditional rights of all fishermen.

Haddock Quota

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent English fishermen have been denied part of the 1989 haddock quota as a result of overfishing in Scotland; what steps he proposes to take to prevent a recurrence; and what proposals he has to compensate the fishermen concerned by increasing their future quotas at the expense of those who overfished or otherwise.

Mr. Curry: Catches to 11 November (latest available) show that three Scottish groups and one English group exceeded their allocations by 1,257 tonnes and 75 tonnes respectively. As a result the following groups (which contain both English and Scottish members) were prevented from taking 1,172 tonnes of their allocations: Anglo-Scottish Fish Producers Organisation Ltd., the non-sectoral group, and the group comprising vessels of 10 metres and under. In addition two Scottish groups were unable to take their full allocations. Fisheries Departments have recently consulted the industry about arrangements for the 1990 fishery, and it was agreed that compensation should be available to groups disadvantaged by the overfishing of others. Fisheries Departments will continue to monitor uptake in 1990 and will withdraw licences from any group which they estimate has taken its allocation.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the pesticides/active ingredients for which he has withdrawn approval for each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Approvals for pesticide products containing the following active ingredients were revoked:

1985
bitertanol

1988 binapacryl
chlordane (one remaining use which expires 31 December 1992)
cyhexatin dinoseb dinoseb-acetate dinoseb-amine
dinoterb
DNOC

1989 aldrin captafol
dieldrin

Milk

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the contaminants for which milk is tested prior to sale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Production and processing conditions are strictly regulated with a view to ensuring that contamination does not occur. In addition, the Milk Marketing Board tests raw milk to assess its bacterial quality and to detect antibiotic residues and similar tests are carried out by processing dairies. The Ministry prescribes bacteriological standards for the finished product and monitors milk for contaminants under its food surveillance programme.

Chernobyl

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of (a) farms, (b) sheep and (c) acres currently under restriction due to the radioactive contamination in England following the Chernobyl accident.

Mr Gummer: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

(a) 150 Cumbrian holdings.
(b) With some 170,000 sheep (maximum post-lambing figure).
(c) In a restricted area comprising some 116,000 acres.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what expenditure he has incurred in compensation for farmers as a result of the Chernobyl accident for each year since 1986 in England.

Mr. Gummer: Payments in England have been as follows:

	£
1986	189,749
1987	212,402
1988	128,545
[1]1989	53,842

[1] To end of October.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of cattle found to have bovine spongiform encephalopathy in the age ranges (i) 0 to six months, (ii) seven to 12 months, (iii) 13 to 18 months, (iv) 19 months to two years, and (v) two years and over.

Mr. Gummer: The answer is as follows:

(i) None.
(ii) None.
(iii) None.
(iv) None.
(v) All the 7,925 confirmed cases so far have been over two years of age.

State Veterinary Service

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the reviews of the state veterinary service he has undertaken over the last 10 years, giving the year in which each review was carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Apart from the routine programme of staff inspections throughout the Department, the State Veterinary Service (SVS) has been the subject of two reviews since 1979. An efficiency study of the veterinary investigation service was carried out in 1984, followed by a review of the divisional organisation of the SVS in 1985. As an arm of the agricultural development and advisory service, the service was also considered in the review of ADAS organisation and management in June 1986.

Salmonella

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what temperature requirements he imposes on rendering plants for the heating of animal material; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Animal protein processors are subject to the requirements of the Processed Animal Protein Order 1989. This does not contain specific temperature requirements but lays down controls which are designed to prevent the removal from processing plants of animal protein, for use as feedingstuffs, which is contaminated with salmonella.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tests are carried out for salmonella in chickens imported into the United Kingdom for breeding purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Chickens imported into Great Britain for breeding purposes undergo a serological test for salmonellosis when they reach 16 to 18 weeks of age, which is towards the end of the required post-import isolation period. Imported chickens are also subject to the detailed bacteriological testing regime laid down by the Poultry Breeding Flocks and Hatcheries (Registration and Testing) Order 1989.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which European Community measures he is proposing to adopt to tackle the problem of salmonella in poultry foods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The European Commission is drafting proposed measures on salmonella which are expected to include controls on feedingstuffs. If agreed by the Council these would apply throughout the Community.

Listeria (Milk)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will conduct an inquiry into the listeria contamination of milk.

Mr. Gummer: My officials have been in touch with the industry about the Public Health Laboratory Service findings, which are provisional, and individual firms have taken action to deal with the very low levels of contamination detected.

Malawi

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what aid his Department supplies to the Government of Malawi either directly or through other agencies since 1979.

Mr. Maclean: Aid for Malawi is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development. However, my Department plays an active role in the development of United Kingdom and EC measures, including in particular, those affecting trade in agricultural products, which are intended to provide benefits for developing countries, including Malawi.

Lead-contaminated Feed

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which of his Ministry's laboratories in England and Wales are currently involved in the food monitoring programme arising from the import of lead-contaminated animal feed; and if he will estimate by percentage of the total the amount of work carried out in each case.

Mr. Maclean: Between 7 and 23 November inclusive, the following laboratories were engaged in the analysis of samples in connection with the food monitoring programme:

	Percentage allocation of work
Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, Aberdeen	4
Milk Marketing Board, Thames Ditton	80
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food regional office, Leeds	1
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food food science laboratory, Norwich	11
Plymouth polytechnic	1
United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, Harwell	3

Farmers' Retirement

Sir John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to stimulate a farmers' retirement scheme for introduction in appropriate areas, to encourage farmers to sell their land or part of it for forestry purposes.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans at present to introduce such a scheme.

Food Labelling

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress with nutritional labelling.

Mr. Maclean [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1989]: My reply of 24 November contained a typing error. I apologise to the hon. Member. The reply should have read:

We are taking an active part in negotiation of the European Commission's nutrition labelling proposals and hope that a common position will be reached soon. The proposals are similar to the Ministry's nutrition labelling guidelines and provide for a voluntary system of nutrition labelling with a mandatory format so that consumers can compare products more easily. Nutrition labelling would be compulsory only when a nutrition claim was made. There is provision for a three-year lead-in period to allow labels to be changed and, given the close resemblance of the guidelines to the Commission proposals, I hope that manufacturers and retailers will be encouraged to provide as much nutrition information as possible within their resources according to the guidelines until Community legislation is in place.

I also refer the hon. Member to the debate on nutritional labelling in Standing Committee on 1 November 1989 (ISBN 0 10 999789 1)

SOCIAL SECURITY

War Widows

11. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women covered by Liverpool social security offices are receiving the pre-1973 rate for war widows' pensions.

Mr. Newton: Under the war pensions scheme administered by my Department, the basic pension paid to a war widow is the same regardless of when she was widowed. There are, however, extra payments to older widows, which will be further improved in real terms next April. It is estimated that about 2,000 war widows live in the Liverpool area.

21. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received about war widows' pensions.

27. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received recently concerning the payment of pensions and other benefits to war widows.

Mr. Scott: We have received a number of representations, mainly about the position of war widows who do not receive a pension under the armed forces pension scheme administered by the Ministry of Defence.

47. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Security what provision his Department makes for the support of war widows.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The standard war widows pension is £56·65 a week. In addition age allowances of £6·10 at 65, £12·20 at 70 and £13·50 at 80 are paid. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently announced, these amounts will be increased next April to £60·95, £7, £13·50 and £20 respectively. All war pensions and allowances are tax free. A widow receiving a war widows' pension may also receive any national insurance benefit earned by her own contributions. When claiming income-related benefits £5 of a war widows pension is disregarded. This statutory disregard will be doubled to £10 from next April.

Social Fund

13. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the rate of refusal for (a) grants and (b) loans under the social fund for each month since April 1988.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

Refusals as a percentage of applications processed

	CCGs	Budgeting loans	Crisis loans
April 1988	54·5	65·9	17·1
May 1988	55·8	41·1	13·1
June 1988	55·7	42·0	11·8
July 1988	54·7	42·1	10·2
August 1988	54·6	39·6	10·3
September 1988	53·0	40·0	10·1
October 1988	52·1	36·4	10·0
November 1988	50·5	35·1	9·7
December 1988	48·0	34·0	10·2
January 1989	44·8	44·0	9·1
February 1989	44·5	37·0	9·2
March 1989	43·4	37·0	8·7
April 1989	52·6	41·3	9·2
May 1989	55·3	42·2	9·5
June 1989	56·6	48·4	9·2
July 1989	56·6	42·0	9·5
August 1989	55·7	45·9	9·3
September 1989	56·5	46·7	9·1
October 1989 (provisional)	56·7	45·3	9·1

38. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications there were for grants and loans from the social fund in the last month for which figures are available; what was the monthly average for the last financial year; and whether he has any plans to increase the size of the fund.

Mr. Scott: With regard to the size of the budget, I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 10 November 1989 at column 812. The average number of applications received in 1988-89 can be derived from information in the Secretary of State's annual report published in July 1989. Figures for the period April to October 1989 can be derived from the information placed monthly in the Library.

45. Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will reconsider his allocation of resources to the social fund.

69. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will reconsider his allocation of resources to the social fund.

83. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will reconsider his allocation of resources to the social fund.

Mr. Scott: We are continuing to monitor closely the situation in the current year. We shall announce the individual social fund allocations to local offices for 1990-91 in due course.

82. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received concerning the availability of social fund loans.

Mr. Scott: Between 1 April 1989 and 13 November 1989 we received 129 letters from hon. and right hon. Members and 120 letters from members of the public specifically concerning social fund loans.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the operation of the social fund.

Mr. Scott: We are continuing to monitor closely the operation of the social fund. Nearly 1½ million interest-free loans have been made since the scheme began averaging £211 for budgeting loans and £46 for crisis loans. Over a quarter of a million community care grants have been awarded averaging £266. The number of awards of community care grants awarded in the period April to October 1989 was 128 per cent. higher than in the same period last year, and the numbers of budgeting loans increased by 36 per cent. over the same period.

The flexible way in which the scheme operates has enabled social fund officers to provide help which would not have been available under the rigid regulations of the old single payments scheme.

Pensioners' Incomes

14. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest figures he has available on the growth of pensioners' incomes since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The latest available figures show that pensioners' average total net income increased by 23 per cent. in real terms between 1979 and 1986.

24. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest figures for the growth in pensioners' incomes from savings since 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available figures show that pensioners' average income from savings grew by 64 per cent. in real terms between 1979 and 1986.

Spending

15. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what amount social security spending has increased in real terms since 1979.

Mr. Newton: On current plans social security spending will be £52·6 billion in 1989-90, an increase in real terms of 35 per cent. over the figure in 1978-79, which, at today's prices, was £39 billion.

Independent Living Fund

16. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disabled people have been assisted by the independent living fund.

Mr. Scott: More than 2,500 disabled people are currently being helped by the independent living fund.

Benefits (Young People)

17. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what conclusions he is able to draw from his monitoring of the Social Security Act 1988 changes to the benefit entitlements of young people; and if he will make a statement.

26. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will reconsider the entitlement of young people to benefit.

32. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to review the benefit entitlements of 16 to 18-year-olds.

33. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will reconsider the entitlement of young people to benefit.

35. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to review the benefit entitlement of 16 to 18-year-olds.

36. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will reconsider the entitlement of young people to benefit.

48. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will restore benefit to 16 and 17-year-olds.

75. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will reconsider the entitlement of young people to benefit.

85. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to review the benefit entitlement of 16 to 18-year-olds.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Torfaen (Mr. Murphy) earlier today.

One-parent Families

18. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the total budget of his Department is used to provide for the needs of one-parent families; and what was the corresponding percentage for 10 and 20 years ago.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Data on a consistent basis are available only for the years from 1981-82. In that year spending on lone-parent families accounted for 4·8 per cent. of total benefit expenditure compared with 7·5 per cent. for 1988-89. For the purposes of this comparison the benefits paid to lone-parents have been counted as one-parent benefit, supplementary benefit income support, housing benefit, child benefit, maternity benefit and family income supplement family credit. The comparison excludes benefit paid to widows with children because insufficient information is available.

23. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends publishing the results of his Department's internal review of benefits for single parents.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Social security benefits, including those for lone-parent families, are kept constantly under review to ensure that they respond to need while encouraging independence. So, for example, my right hon. Friend's recent uprating statement recognised the special needs of lone-parent families by increasing the lone-parent premium in housing benefit from next April from £8·60 to £9·70 a week and raising the amount lone parents can earn before housing benefit is affected from £15 to £25 a week from October 1990. These changes will give further help to working lone parents with high housing costs.

Benefit Changes

19. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he intends doing to reduce any disincentive to work effect of the April 1988 benefit changes.

Mr. Scott: We have improved incentives by bringing about significant increases in the real value of take-home pay through reductions in income tax, increased tax allowances, the restructuring of national insurance contributions last month and improvements to in-work benefits. The replacement of family income supplement by family credit in April 1988 ended the absurd situation where an increase in pay could make people worse off. We recognise the importance of improving work incentives and shall continue to pursue policies in the future which make it worthwhile for people to take and keep employment.

62. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he estimates to be the maximum weekly addition to benefit payable as a result of his proposals announced on 25 October.

Mr. Scott: From next April, the parents of a severely disabled child under two could receive up to £65·75 in additional financial help through attendance allowance and invalid care allowance.

Family (Policy)

20. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he gives to policy on the family in his conduct of social security policy.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We attach great importance to the role of the family, and have pursued policies which improve their living standards. Working families have seen significant increases in their take home pay and we have concentrated extra resources in social security on those families who most need them.

Pensioner Premiums

22. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners he estimates will benefit from the increases in pensioner premiums which took effect in October.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: More than $2\frac{1}{2}$ million pensioners will benefit from these changes. Couples will be up to £3·50 a week better off and single people will get up to £2·50 a week extra.

Pensions

25. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he is considering restoring the index link between pensions and earnings.

51. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will reconsider his decision not to uprate pensions in line with earnings.

59. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will reconsider his decision not to uprate pensions in line with earnings.

74. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will review his decision not to uprate pensions in line with earnings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have no plans to restore the link between pensions and earnings. The Government do not accept that uprating state retirement pension in line with earnings is the key factor in improving pensioners' incomes. Between 1979 and 1986 pensioners' average total net incomes increased by 23 per cent. in real terms.

55. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will meet pensioners' representatives to discuss linking pensions to wages and prices; and if he will make a statement.

77. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last met representatives of pensioners' organisations; and what matters where discussed.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State regularly meets representatives of pensioners' organisations. The last meeting he attended was shortly before the summer recess when he met a delegation from the joint committee of pensioner organisations. Amongst the topics of discussion were the reform changes, pensioners' incomes, the uprating of retirement pension, the poorer pensioners' package and National Health Service changes.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out recent measures to benefit pensioners; and what steps are being taken to inform those eligible of new entitlement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In addition to the annual uprating of benefits we have introduced two wholly beneficial changes for pensioners with effect from October 1989—the abolition of the retirement pension earnings rule and the extra help for less well off elderly and disabled pensioners. Pensioners benefiting from the latter change who received income support or housing benefit had their benefit automatically increased. Separate national publicity campaigns were mounted to announce both these changes. We also identified and contacted nearly 3½ million individuals who were likely to be affected.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average per capita cost of implementing an increase in pensions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Family Credit Take-up

28. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the take-up of family credit; and what was his original target.

34. Mr. Oakes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the take-up of family credit; and what was his original target.

57. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the take-up of family credit; and what was his original target.

60. Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the take-up of family credit; and what was his original target.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest information about the level of take-up relates to 1988 when a special examination of family expenditure survey returns indicated that, amongst employees, take-up was 65 per cent. in expenditure terms and 50 per cent. by caseload. The original estimates for family credit were based on an assumption that take-up would be one fifth higher than for family income supplement, the benefit it replaced.

49. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest reported percentage take-up among those who should receive family credit or income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest take-up estimates, (published in March 1989), based on FES data for April to December 1988 show that take-up for family credit over that period was 65 per cent. in expenditure terms and 50 per cent. by caseload.

The latest take-up estimates for income support (supplementary benefit) are for 1985. On a caseload basis, take-up is 84 per cent. overall. Both the caseload and the expenditure take-up of supplementary benefit is higher than for previous years. Full technical notes on these take-up estimates are available in the Library. Overall, almost £9 out of every £10 of available income-related benefit expenditure is claimed and almost four out of every five eligible people claim what they are entitled to.

63. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families are being helped by family credit; and what was the figure for family income supplement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest comprehensive information about family credit is for July 1989 when over 320,000 families received the benefit. Around 213,000 families received family income supplement at the time that scheme came to an end in April 1988.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the number of recipients of family credit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo), earlier today.

Low-income Families

29. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what additional support his Department will be providing next year to low-income families with children.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We will be providing additional support in 1990-91 of around £70 million for less well-off families with children over and above the normal uprating of benefits.

OPCS Survey (Disability)

30. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how may disability organisations have commented on the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys survey.

Mr. Scott: We have received comments on the findings of the surveys of disability carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys from over 40 national and local disability organisations including the Disability Benefits Consortium which represents over 250 disability organisations.

56. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what opportunity he has given disability organisations to comment on the implications of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys survey on disability.

86. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what opportunity he has given disability organisations to comment on the implications for policy which arise from the data published in the Office of Population Censuses and Survey survey on disability.

Mr. Scott: The reports by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on disabled people were published between September 1988 and July 1989. Copies of the reports dealing with prevalence of disability and the financial circumstances of disabled people were sent to organisations of and for disabled people, together with the successive press notices emphasising our wish to receive comments on the reports and their implications. Many people and organisations have sent us their comments.

Travel Facilities

50. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what account he takes of concessionary travel facilities in his calculation of levels of retirement pensions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Retirement pension is increased each year by the annual rate of the retail prices index. The RPI includes the cost of bus, coach and rail travel but does not take account of concessions in fares.

Young People

31. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will make it his policy to so amend benefit regulations affecting young people as to encourage them to gain appropriate education and qualifications without providing discouragement to individuals wishing to take up either part-time or full-time courses.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have no plans to amend regulations in the manner proposed.

It is the prime responsibility of unemployed people claiming benefit to make every effort to secure paid employment. Nonetheless the benefits system is already sufficiently flexible to allow those who remain available for and are actively seeking employment to spend their spare time usefully by pursuing a course of part-time study or training. They must, though, organise their studies so that they can make adequate arrangements to seek work and must be prepared to break off their studies if a job opportunity arises. It is not the purpose of the benefits system to provide support for those who choose to study full-time. Such provision is for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

Hypothermia

37. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to prevent people receiving pensions and benefits from dying from cold this winter.

Mr. Scott: On 22 November I was pleased to announce, with my noble Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, the third year of the "Keep Warm, Keep Well" campaign, a unique co-operative venture between statutory and voluntary organisations, which provides up-to-date advice about beating the cold. The campaign's leaflet contains essential information on health, food, draughtproofing, advice from the fuel industry and about cash help and cold weather payments. A copy has been placed in the Library.

I hope that this third annual campaign will also increase awareness of the dangers of cold weather among those at risk, their friends, relatives and neighbours and those agencies who care for them.

Earnings Rule

39. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has as to the number of economically active pensioners in the north-west as a result of the abolition of the earnings rule.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information is not available in the form requested.

Housing Benefit

40. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of people in receipt of housing benefit in London.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: At the end of February 1989 the estimated number of recipients in inner and outer London boroughs was 655,000.

Nursing Home Fees

41. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of income support claimants in private residential or nursing homes whose personal allowances are spent on meeting the fees for their care.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information necessary to make such an estimate is not available.

Child Benefit

42. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to review the uprating of child benefit.

67. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to review the uprating of child benefit.

81. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to review the uprating of child benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Members to my right hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Tottenham (Mr. Grant) earlier today.

44. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the Government's recent decision not to uprate child benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the statement which my right hon. Friend made to the House on 25 October at columns 841-69.

58. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many mothers serving prison sentences receive child benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the freezing of child benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have received a number of representations from organisations and individuals expressing a variety of views.

Transitional Protection

43. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he now proposes to give any additional benefit to those receiving transitional protection arising from the changes to income support from supplementary benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The normal arrangement is that transitional protection is eroded when benefits are uprated or a claimant's circumstances change. An exception was made in October 1989 when the poorer pensioner package was introduced.

Computerisation

46. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what effect the changes in the benefit system and computerisation have had on the speed of service provided by his Department.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The speed of service has improved since the introduction of the 1988 social security reforms and the first stages of computerisation. The reforms have made the scheme easier for the public to understand and, combined with computerisation, easier for the staff to operate. As a result, so far in 1989-90, there has been a 20 per cent. improvement in the average time taken to process income support claims compared with 1987-88 and a 24 per cent. reduction in the average time income support and social fund callers spend in our offices.

79. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made in his Department's computerisation programme.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox), earlier today.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the full results of the pilot exercise on computerisation; what problems the exercise revealed; what steps he is taking to solve the problems; and what plans he has for the exercise to go nationwide.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A report of the pilot exercise on computerisation was produced in September 1989. It concluded that despite teething difficulties the systems were operating satisfactorily and problems identified in piloting had either been resolved or were being tackled as a matter of priority.

The main difficulties encountered related to some of the more complex computer screens; the need to modify training courses and the need to redesign organisation and jobs.

The recommendations of the pilot exercise are being implemented. Extension of computerisation to other offices began on 23 October in line with the agreed timetable.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was his original estimate of the savings to be gained from computerisation; and what is his revised estimate following evaluation of the pilot exercise.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The original estimate of savings from the computerisation programme was £150 million per year by 1995. Savings estimates are regularly updated; not only as a result of pilot office evaluation but, also as a result of model office testing, changing workload forecasts and any revised development or implementation plans. We do not keep a record of the changes that are specifically attributable to pilot office evaluation.

Food Vouchers

52. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number and value of food vouchers issued (a) by the Newcastle St. James' office of his Department and (b) in the United Kingdom in the period April to October 1989.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The number of food vouchers issued by the Newcastle St. James office between 1 April and 31 October 1989 is 203 at a total value of £4,707·42. Information for the United Kingdom is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Community Charge Rebates

53. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he estimates will qualify for community charge rebates; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Estimates of the number of people who will receive community charge benefit are being recalculated to take account of the effects of the transitional relief scheme. I shall write to my hon. Friend when the numbers are known. The Department does not produce projections of the number of people who might be entitled to social security benefits.

Homelessness

54. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will bring forward proposals to amend the benefit regulations with a view to reducing homelessness amongst those under 25 years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Homelessness has many complex causes and it would be wrong to relate it directly to the benefit system which still enables those who are homeless to secure and retain accommodation.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any proposals to increase financial support for young single homeless people.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A wide range of benefits continues to be available to young single homeless people. These benefits are to be increased from April 1990 under the usual uprating arrangements. In addition, I announced today measures which will ensure that special arrangements are made in local social security offices for dealing with income support claims from 16 to 17-year-olds. In particular, all 16 to 17-year-olds will be automatically considered for special hardship payments if they are not otherwise entitled. Details have been placed in the Library.

Disabled People

61. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disabled people will benefit from the changes in the 1990 uprating of social security benefits.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that over 500,000 disabled people and their carers will benefit from the changes announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 25 October.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether he has any plans to invite evidence from interested parties and independent experts when drawing up his proposals on social security benefits for the disabled;

(2) whether he has any plans to review the eligibility criteria of mobility allowance so that people with a visual handicap qualify.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 13 November at columns 51-52.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to increase the level of benefits paid to disabled persons to a level that will allow them to meet the full costs incurred to them by their disability outwith the spending of the non-disabled benefits allowance;

(2) what plans he has to increase the level of benefits paid to disabled persons in employment so that their income can equate to that of the national average.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend has already announced on 25 October at columns 841-54 a range of improvements in benefits for disabled people and their families. Some of these assist people who, because of their disability, incur additional expenditure or have only limited earning capacity. We intend to bring forward within the next few months more far-reaching proposals, to improve the balance and structure of social security provision for disabled people.

Christmas Bonus

64. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to increase the Christmas bonus to pensioners.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will increase the size of the Christmas bonus payable to pensioners.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would have been the present level of the pensioners' Christmas bonus if it had been raised since it was first introduced by (a) the rise in prices and (b) the rise in average earnings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The level of Christmas bonus for 1989 had it been raised, since introduction, by the rise in prices or the rise in average earnings would have been £48 or £62 respectively.

Source: DSS Extract of Statistics for Index of Retail Prices, Average Earnings, Social Security Benefits and Contributions.

Note: Figures rounded to the nearest pound.

Income Support (Manchester)

65. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of income support claimants in Greater Manchester.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Greater Manchester is served by the local offices of Ashton, Bolton, Bury, Central Manchester, Cheetham, Chorlton, Failsworth, Farnworth, Hyde, Leigh, Longsight, Middleton, Oldham, Openshaw, Rochdale, Rusholme, Sale, Salford North, Salford South, Stockport North, Stockport South, Wigan and Wythenshawe, though the boundaries are not conterminous.

The number of people claiming income support is 270,216.

Source: August 1989. 100 per cent. count of cases in action. The figure includes a small number of cases not actually in receipt of benefit.

NACAB

66. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last met representatives from the National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux; and what was discussed.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, met representatives of the National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux on Wednesday 27 September. The discussion covered a wide range of issues.

Nursing Homes

68. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy, in the light of evidence received, to review the income support levels payable to residents of private and voluntary nursing homes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The level of income support payable to a resident of a private or voluntary nursing home depends on the actual fee charged by the home, subject to national limits depending on the type of home. It is already our policy to review these limits each year, taking account of a variety of evidence, including detailed and differing representations received from various sources. We announced our proposed increases for next year on 25 October.

70. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that social security benefits paid to people already in private residential and nursing homes in April 1991 will be uprated each year in line with rises in charges.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The income support limits will continue to be reviewed every year taking account, as now, of all the available evidence.

Community Care

71. Mr Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he proposes to increase the local office community care grant budgets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 10 November 1989 at column 812. We shall announce individual local office allocations for 1990-91 in due course.

Personal Pensions

72. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest figures on the number of people opting to take out personal pensions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Just over 3·5 million people have so far applied for an appropriate personal pension.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for men and women aged 16, 20, 30 and 40 years in April 1988, the ages at which it would pay the person concerned to cease contributing to a personal pension or other money purchase scheme, assuming rates of return of 0·5 per cent. and 2·5 per cent. above the annual increase in average earnings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is not possible to give such a table because of the wide range of other factors, in addition to the rate of return, which would affect the amount of the personal pension.

State Pensions

73. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the purchasing power of the state pension in the United Kingdom and in each of the European Community countries.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: State pensions in most countries of the European Community are related to individual earnings before pension age and so no standard figure for a state pension is possible.

Details of the pension systems of the member states of the European Community are contained in the Department's publication "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the European Communities" the 1989 issue of which is available in the Library.

Payments

76. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average level of social security payments per capita of the total population paid in May 1979 and in May 1989 adjusted for inflation.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Dividing the total amount of Social security benefit expenditure paid in 1979-80 by estimated population produces an average annual figure of £680 at today's prices, while the corresponding figure for 1989-90 is £870.

Reforms

80. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what indicators he has used to measure the quality of service offered by his Department as a result of the 1988 social security reforms.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The quality of service offered by the Department is measured in a variety of ways. Data are collected on the speed with which business is cleared, the accuracy of benefit payments and the length of time callers spend in our offices. In addition, in local offices an annual quality assessment package measures the quality of correspondence, and face-to-face and telephone contact with the public. There is a customer opinion survey element within the package.

Cold Weather Payments

84. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the current operation of the system of cold weather payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: No. We have looked again at the cold weather payments scheme and we are satisfied that it concentrates the help available on those vulnerable groups most at risk from the cold.

National Insurance (Evasion)

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many officers were involved in detecting evasion of payment of national insurance contributions by employers at the latest date for which figures are available; what the total estimated cost of such work amounts to; and what total actual savings resulted from such work.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are approximately 2,000 staff in the Department's local offices who work on a full-time or part-time basis as national insurance inspectors. A major, but unquantifiable proportion of their work is concerned with ensuring that employers meet their obligations for paying national insurance contributions. Within that staff allocation 200 man years are directed solely to this work and during the year ended 31 March 1989 generated income of £34·4 million at an estimated staff cost of £2·3 million. However the main responsibility for the collection of contributions from employers rests with the Inland Revenue which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

21-Hour Rule

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the actively seeking work clauses of the Social Security Act 1989 will affect people studying under the 21-hour rule provision.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I expect the actively seeking employment condition to have similar effects on all unemployed claimants. In reinforcing the principle that it is a claimant's personal responsibility to look for work it will make a significant contribution to returning unemployed people to jobs. Unemployed claimants studying under the 21-hour rule must, as before, be prepared to leave their studies immediately should a job opportunity arise. They must also make efforts to seek employment. In determining whether a claimant has taken reasonable steps to seek employment, regard is had to time spent on vocational training or study, but no claimant, no matter how usefully he occupies his time out of work, should ignore job opportunities.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to accelerate the attendance allowance assessment process.

Mr. Scott: We have already been successful in reducing the average time taken to decide attendance allowance claims from 12·5 weeks in 1983 to 7·5 weeks currently. Finding ways to further accelerate the process is not a simple or quick task; but it is one of the aspects of the attendance allowance scheme which we are considering in the light of the information from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys disability surveys.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions since 1983 the general practitioner of an applicant for attendance allowance was present when their medical assessment for eligibility for the allowance was carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I regret that this information is not available.

Community Care

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amount of money has been spent on community care grants in those offices covering Nottingham, North constituency; and what instructions have been issued by his Department to reduce the categories of people eligible for these grants.

Mr. Scott: The local offices of the Department covering the Nottingham, North constituency are Nottingham Castle gate, Nottingham David lane and Nottingham Shakespeare street.

Information on the numbers of applications for social fund loans and grants processed and awarded, listed by local office, including information on budget allocations and expenditure for 1988-89 and 1989-90 to date, may be obtained from the details held in the Library.

There have been no departmental instructions issued to reduce the categories of people eligible for community care grants. Local office managers are required to provide guidance to social fund officers on the level of priorities which should generally be met. Awards of community care grants from the social fund are decided by independent social fund officers based upon the individual circumstances of the applicant and the priority of their needs.

National Insurance Regulations

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the regulations governing the payment of national insurance benefits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: These regulations are contained within the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987 and are as a matter of course kept under constant and ongoing review.

Local Offices (Illness)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what attempts have been made to identify stress-related illnesses suffered by staff in social security offices; and what is being done to alleviate the problem.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have recently changed the system of collecting information on sick absences to provide more detailed analysis of illnesses which could be stress-related. The first analysis will be available in about 12 months time and will give a clearer basis for identifying any problem in this area and for exploring what needs to be done. This Department is also taking part in a long-term study on health and stress being conducted by University college, London, in conjunction with the Civil Service occupational health service.

Carers' Premium

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many carers on income support he estimates will benefit as a result of the new carers' premium announced in the Chancellor's Autumn Statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis), earlier today.

Income Support

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to increase financial provisions for pensioners on income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, on 25 October, at columns 841-54.

Turkish Kurds

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the arrangements which local offices of his Department have for notifying officials of the Home Department of the addresses at which Turkish Kurds entering the United Kingdom may reside.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Local office staff notify the Home Department of all cases where income support is paid to people from abroad. Full instructions are contained in the income support manual, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Disability Benefits Consortium

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he next expects to meet representatives of the Disability Benefits Consortium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security expects to meet representatives of the Disability Benefits Consortium shortly.

"Delivery of Service in the 90s"

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the purpose of his Department's study "Delivery of Service in the 90s"; who is involved in the exercise; what consultation will be carried out with staffs and clients; and when the study will be completed and published.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: "Delivery of Service in the 90s" is the title of a proposed initiative to examine how we might maximise the improvements in service to the public, efficiency and job satisfaction for our staff which will be derived from our computerisation programme—the operational strategy. The initiative comprises a linked set of proposals for action in eight local offices. Staff are being encouraged to contribute ideas towards the proposals.

Consultation with the staff in the offices involved and the trade unions is taking place. It is envisaged that this examination will be completed in the first half of next year. No decision on publication has been taken.

Local Office Network

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what decisions he has made regarding changes to the current local office network.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The local office network is currently being reviewed with the aim of providing a better service to the public. The review will take into account changes arising from the setting up of the benefit agency. Preliminary proposals are unlikely to be available before next spring.

Social Security Costs

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he estimates will be the increase in social security costs in the next year; and what is the breakdown of those costs between increases due to costs related to (a) unemployment and (b) other factors.

Mr. Scott: Expenditure on social security will be £55·6 billion in 1990-91, an increase of £3 billion on the estimated outturn for 1989-90, as shown in the Chancellor's Autumn Statement. However, the figure for 1990-91 excludes rent rebates in England and Wales, and the increase on a directly comparable basis is £5·6 billion. Of this increase, £0·2 billion is the result of a small change in the assumed level of unemployment, and £5·4 billion is due to other factors.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 28 November 1989

CIVIL SERVICE

Malawi

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what aid his Department has given to the Government of Malawi either directly or through any other agency since 1979.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 27 November 1989]: It is not within the ambit of my Department's vote to grant aid to foreign Governments and none has been made.

THE ARTS

Libraries (European Information)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) whether he will list the United Kingdom library authorities which (a) are European business co-operative network intermediaries, (b) have European business co-operative network contracts and (c) subscribe to tenders electronic daily service;

(2) how many library authorities have European information centres.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 27 November 1989]: No record of this information is maintained centrally.

ENVIRONMENT

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many United Kingdom filling stations have offered unleaded petrol for sale for the first time over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the total number of filling stations currently selling unleaded petrol in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: About 17,000 of the 20,000 petrol stations in the United Kingdom now stock unleaded petrol. In the last 12 months around 14,000 of these started selling the fuel for the first time. The United Kingdom has fully complied with the European directive that required member states to ensure the availability and balanced distribution of unleaded petrol from 1 October 1989. The dramatic increase in outlets has greatly assisted the successful campaign efforts of the Government, the private sector and voluntary groups, which have encouraged many motorists to switch to unleaded petrol during the year.

Nitrous Oxide

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of nitrous oxide emissions will be reduced when the programme to fit low nitrous oxide burners to main United Kingdom coal-fired stations has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The United Kingdom is committed under the EC large combustion plants directive, agreed in 1988, to reduce emissions of oxides of nitrogen (NOx) from existing large combustion plants by 15 per cent. by 1993 and 30 per cent. by 1998. The Central Electricity Generating Board's programme of retrofitting low-NOx burners to its 12 largest coal-fired power stations, representing 23,000 MW of generating capacity, will make a major contribution to meeting this commitment.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects Britain to meet the levels of chlorofluorocarbon emissions agreed under the terms of the Montreal protocol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Montreal protocol requires consumption of chlorofluorocarbons to be cut to 50 per cent. of 1986 levels by 1999. We expect this to be achieved in the United Kingdom by the end of this year—10 years ahead of the protocol timetable. The United Kingdom is pressing for a strengthening of the protocol to cut CFC consumption and production elsewhere by 50 per cent. in 1991-92, by 85 per cent. in 1995-96 with a phaseout in 2000.

English Heritage (Chairman)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to reappoint Lord Montagu as chairman of English Heritage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Since Lord Montagu's current appointment as chairman has until 30 September 1991 to run, my right hon. Friend will naturally not be taking a decision on the future chairmanship until much nearer the time.

Local Government Borrowing

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report his estimates for the amount of income from borrowing obtained by local government and the proportion these figures represent of total local government spending in England for each year since 1982.

Mr. Chope: The available information is as follows:

£ million

	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
(1) Local authority borrowing	42	1,018	2,246	2,042	1,703	2,152	2,588
(2) Gross capital expenditure	4,875	5,569	5,852	5,298	5,205	5,919	n/a
(3) Total gross expenditure	33,835	36,533	38,488	40,242	41,998	45,479	n/a

	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
(1) as a percentage of (2)	0·9	18·3	38·4	38·5	32·7	36·4	—
(1) as a percentage of (3)	0·1	2·8	5·8	5·1	4·1	4·7	—

Notes:

1. Local authority external borrowing net of repayments but gross of investments (such as deposits with the financial sector). Includes temporary and longer term borrowing. Excludes intra- and inter-authority loans.
2. Gross of capital receipts.
3. Gross of sales, fees and charges, capital receipts and Government grants. Excludes double counting of flows between service accounts and other local authorities. Excludes the notional value of capital assets acquired by leasing.

n/a: not available.

Source: Local Government Financial Statistics England. The 1989 issue, generally covering the period up to 1987-88, is due to be published towards the beginning of December.

Page Street (Development)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what access to Westminster hospital will be affected by proposals by the Property Services Agency to carry out development at Page street, London SW1;

(2) what correspondence he has received from Lord St. John of Fawsley on behalf of the Royal Fine Art Commission in relation to the proposed Property Services Agency development at Page street, London SW1;

(3) what objections he received from English Heritage in the case of the Property Services Agency's proposals for development at Page street, London SW1; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what recommendations he received from English Heritage in the case of Berkely House's proposals for development at Thames house, Page street, London SW1;

(5) what representations the Government have received as to its proposed development by the Property Services Agency at Page street, London SW1;

(6) whether he has received objections to the proposed development by the Property Services Agency at Page street, London SW1 from the Westminster Society; and if he will make a statement;

(7) whether the Property Services Agency intends to apply for planning permission for the proposed development at Thames house, Page street, London SW1;

(8) which Government Departments will occupy Thames house following upon the proposed works by the Property Services Agency;

(9) why he waived listed building requirements in the case of the proposed development by the Property Services Agency at Page street, SW1.

Mr. Moynihan: The proposals by the Property Services Agency to carry out works to refurbish Thames house were considered by Westminster city council under the procedure for development by the Crown set out in DOE circular 18/84—"Crown Land and Crown Development". Listed building requirements were not waived.

The views of English Heritage were given to the local planning authority and to the Property Services Agency during consideration of the proposals. Local residents' associations were consulted by the local planning authority and any representations made by them were taken into account. The agency is discussing the proposals with the secretary of the Royal Fine Art Commission and will take account of any comments to be made by the commission. The development will not affect access to Westminster hospital. The local planning authority raised no objections to the proposals. Arrangements have not been finalised as to which Departments should be accommodated in the building. There were no recommendations from English Heritage in the case of Berkely House's proposals.

Council Housing

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations requesting permission for an inner-city housing estate to opt out of local authority control.

Mr. Chope: The tenants' choice provisions of the Housing Act 1988 give public sector tenants the opportunity to choose a new landlord. The Housing Corporation has the responsibility under the Act to provide information, advice and assistance to such tenants and to consider applications for tenants' choice landlord approval. Applications are decided by a ballot of the tenants concerned.

One tenants' choice application has been made so far. Many other tenant groups and potential new landlords are in discussion with the Housing Corporation.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has any operational schemes to promote home ownership in the inner cities.

Mr. Chope: Yes. Sales to sitting tenants under the right to buy remain buoyant; the Housing Corporation has this year allocated 65 per cent. of its programme of new housing association low-cost home ownership projects to designated urban stress areas and local authorities have been given new powers to make grants to help tenants move out into homes of their own. A total of 39 authorities are now operating cash incentive schemes. Subject to proper safeguards, authorities in areas of particular housing pressure will be allowed to offer tenants more generous assistance than now. In 1990-91 the Housing Corporation will introduce a tenants' incentive scheme, enabling housing associations similarly to help their tenants buy homes of their own. Cash incentives are an important new tool by which local authorities and housing associations can secure vacancies for reletting to homeless people while helping existing tenants reach the goal of home ownership.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what initiatives his Department has taken since June 1987 to encourage tenants to buy their council homes.

Mr. Chope: The right to buy has been improved, with higher maximum discount, a modified cost floor rule, and a procedure under which tenants can be compensated if the landlord holds up the sale. Houses let by one right-to-buy landlord to another have been brought within the right to buy, and it has been extended to tenants of housing for disabled people outside sheltered schemes. New housing for elderly people, outside sheltered schemes, will shortly be brought within the right to buy. These changes help more tenants to buy their homes.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will calculate the financial effects on commercial and industrial concerns in (a) Colne Valley constituency, (b) Kirklees metropolitan district council and (c) Yorkshire and Humberside region resulting from the introduction of the unified business rate, and what is his estimate of the likely effect in employment in these areas resulting from the introduction of the unified business rate.

Mr. Chope: The Inland Revenue sample survey of the effects of the uniform business rate and of the non-domestic revaluation, the results of which were published in July, suggested that the aggregate of non-domestic rate bills in the Yorkshire and Humberside region would fall by £80 million (10 per cent.) in real terms in 1990-91 and by £210 million (25 per cent.) a year in real terms once the new system was fully in place. No information is yet available at sub-regional level. I have made no estimate on the likely effect of these changes on employment.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in order of administrative cost the various options available under current legislation for payment of the community charge.

Mr. Chope: Under the Local Government Finance Act 1988, chargepayers with a full-year liability must be offered the facility of paying their charge by 10 monthly instalments. Authorities will have a discretion to offer smaller, more frequent, instalments if they wish and to offer appropriate discounts to those who choose to pay in a single lump sum.

There are no statutory requirements on the method of payment chargepayers may offer. The Audit Commission's 1986 report "Improving Cash Flow Management in Local Government" listed the cost of different payment methods as follows:

	Pence per transaction
Direct Debit	12·9
Standing Order/Bank Giro	20·5
Postal remittance	28·5
Cash collection	50·5

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent pre-school nursery education provided by local education authorities is taken into account in his calculation of standard spending assessments in respect of the poll tax.

Mr. Chope: The standard spending assessment for education is a measure of the appropriate amount of revenue expenditure consistent with providing a standard level of service, taking account of each authority's social, demographic and geographical characteristics. It takes no account of the actual provision of services, such as pre-school nursery education, by each authority.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why, in calculating the standard spending assessments for poll tax in respect of children at risk, he decided to take account only of children of lone parents and children of claimants of income support.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend did not. The children-at-risk indicator also takes account of the number of resident children aged under 18 years of age, and the proportion of children aged under 16 living in private households in rented accommodation. The selection of these indicators is based on recent research conducted by the personal social services research unit at Kent university and was the subject of consultation with the local authority associations.

Population Statistics

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the basis for each of his estimates of population in paragraph 4 of his population report laid under paragraph 2 of schedule 12A to the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

Mr. Chope: The estimates of population referred to in paragraph 4 of the draft population report would be used only in the calculation of the relevant population of a charging authority in certain limited circumstances.

The estimates in paragraph 4 are based on the best information available to the registrar general, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security as appropriate.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why he decided to use population figures at 30 June 1988 in respect of setting revenue support grant for April 1990 to March 1991; and what factors prevent a date nearer to the introduction of poll tax being used.

Mr. Chope: These figures are the latest annual estimates of the resident population compiled on a consistent basis for all local authorities by the registrar general. They are available for the age groups used to define the client groups for particular local authority services in the calculation of standard spending assessments.

Pollution Control

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to introduce marketable permits to increase pollution control effectiveness.

Mr. Trippier: There are no plans to introduce marketable permits for the purposes of pollution control, but their use and effectiveness in other countries, notably the United States of America, is under study.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to incorporate the concept of inter-generational equity into decision-making within his Department in respect of policy towards environmental protection.

Mr. Trippier: The United Kingdom comments on the report of the world commission on environment and development (known as the Bruntland report), published in July 1988, accepted the report's definition of sustainable development as development which meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs (para 2.1). The comments also indicated that, whilst there could be no quarrel with this as a general definition, the key issues were now how to translate the concept into practice, how to measure it, and how to assess progress towards its achievement. It was concern over this point that led the Department of the Environment to commission the Pearce report which was published under the title "Blueprint for a Green Economy" in September this year. I believe that the Pearce report makes an important contribution to our understanding of the requirements for sustainable development, including the need to safeguard the well-being of future generations.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current complement of the environmental protection statistics and economics branch of his Department; whether he has plans to increase the complement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The environmental protection statistics and economics division was split on 1 November 1989. There are now two divisions known as the environmental protection statistics division (EPS) and the environmental protection economics division (EPE) respectively. The professional complements of the two divisions are as follows:

Environmental Protection Statistics division (EPS)
1 Chief statistician
3 Statisticians
1 Senior assistant statisticians.

Environmental Protection Economics division (EPE)
1 Senior economic adviser
3 Economic advisers.

The support staff consists of one higher executive officer, one executive officer, one administrative assistant and two personal secretaries.

The complement of the two divisions is under continual review in the light of new developments. However, the senior economic adviser's post was newly created with effect from 1 November and one of the economic adviser posts was transferred from another division on the same date.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last received representations advocating a free market solution to environmental problems.

Mr. Chris Patten: I receive a wide range of representations. Recent engagements have included my address to the CBI's national conference on 20 November in which I stressed that private enterprise was essential to meeting the challenges of environmental protection.

Pearce Report

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the statement in the Pearce report that unfettered free markets will not solve environmental problems.

Mr. Trippier: The Pearce report suggests that "unfettered markets will tend to over-use the services of natural environments". The correction to this tendency is to be sought by proper and appropriate valuation and pricing of these services together with effective regulation and monitoring.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be in a position to review his detailed response to the recommendations within the Pearce report.

Mr. Trippier: The detailed response to the Pearce report will be an integral part of the work leading up to the publication of the White Paper on the environment in the autumn of next year.

Benzene

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research is presently being undertaken on behalf of the Government to examine the possible health implications of benzene in the atmosphere.

Mr. Trippier: The toxic effects of exposure to high concentrations of benzene in the air are well understood, but possible consequences to health of exposure to low levels of benzene are less well understood. A monitoring study funded by the Department has recently been completed and has increased our understanding of the levels of benzene to which the public may be exposed. The Government's health advisers will be asked to consider the evidence on exposure to benzene in the atmosphere and advise on its implications for public health.

Defective Housing

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, following the recent decision by Liverpool city council to repurchase defective dwellings of the Boot and Boswell type, whether he will provide extra financial assistance to Liverpool to help resolve the problem.

Mr. Chope: Liverpool city council received an additional HIP allocation of £545,000 in 1989-90, specifically to help it meet its housing defects obligations. Housing investment programme allocations to individual local authorities for 1990-91 will be announced in early December. In taking decisions on the level of allocations to authorities, my right hon. Friend will have regard to the total needs of each authority for housing capital expenditure, including the need for expenditure on housing defects.

Environmental Groups

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he considers the political stance of the environmental groups with which he has discussions before meeting them.

Mr. Chris Patten: No; nor do they seem to consider mine.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the environmental groups with which he has had discussions since taking office.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have met the Council for the Protection of Rural England, the Countryside Commission, the European Environment Bureau, the Institute for European Environmental Policy, Friends of the Earth, the Nature Conservancy Council, the royal commission on environmental pollution and the National Trust.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on meeting environmental groups whose philosophy is against the free market.

Mr. Chris Patten: The same as it would be with any other group which held such views: I argue with them.

Oxfordshire

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the community charge paying population of Oxfordshire has been calculated.

Mr. Chope: Details of the proposed method of calculation were set out in the consultation paper issued by my right hon. Friend on 6 November.

In general, the relevant population of a charging authority for 1990-91 will be based on the numbers of people shown on the community charges register on 1 December 1989, as subject to a personal community charge or a collective community charge of that authority.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out for each of the last five years that sum which his Department judged appropriate for Oxfordshire county council to spend to provide a reasonable level of service and the amount actually spent by Oxfordshire county council.

Mr. Chope: The amount my Department considered appropriate for Oxfordshire to spend and the actual total expenditure for Oxfordshire in the past five years are as follows.

	Grant related expenditure £ million	Latest reported total expenditure £ million
1985-86	180·220	175·373
1986-87	189·659	192·623
1987-88	200·008	203·556
1988-89	216·081	227·906
1989-90	226·794	242·075

The total expenditure figures shown are outturn figures, with the exception of 1989-90 which is based on Oxfordshire's budget returns.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice his Department gave to Oxfordshire county council last year concerning the use of its reserves.

Mr. Chope: I am not aware of any such advice having been given.

Public Sector Pay

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of any increase in teachers' pay for next year is included in the sums that he is making available to local authorities for next year.

Mr. Chope: In making proposals for the amount it would be appropriate for authorities to spend on education, my right hon. Friend made full allowance for an increase in teachers' pay in line with the remit given to the interim advisory committee by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Steel-framed Houses

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet a delegation of hon. Members and Peers in connection with steel-framed houses.

Mr. Chope: No, but I hope that the hon. Member will take up my suggestion that he should visit the building research establishment and meet the experts who have been responsible for the BRE steel-framed house research programme.

East Anglia

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now in a position to publish for consultation his draft regional guidance for the future strategic planning of East Anglia; and if he will make a statement on the representations he has received from local authorities including the standing conference of East Anglian local authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: We welcome the initiative of the standing conference of East Anglian local authorities in producing the regional strategy document, and expect to publish for consultation draft regional guidance for East Anglia early in 1990.

We will of course take the representations that have been received from local authorities and other bodies into account when preparing the draft regional planning guidance note.

Water and Sewerage Rates

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secreary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the calculation of the water and sewerage rate based on the new rateable value.

Mr. Howard: It is for each water and sewerage undertaker to determine the methods and principles on which its charges will be based subject to the conditions of its appointment and the prohibition, in section 80 of the Water Act 1989, on basing charges on rateable values after 31 March 2000. Those undertakers who decide for the time being to charge their unmetered customers on the basis of rateable values will be able to use the 1973 valuation list or, as an alternative for non-domestic customers only, any valuation list created under the Local Government Finance Act 1988. Those undertakers who use a valuation list under the 1988 Act will have to adjust their poundage charges to non-domestic customers to take into account the change in rateable values.

A45, Cambridgeshire

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, before reaching any conclusions about the various proposals for new settlements along the A45, to the east or to the west of Cambridge, he will personally visit this corridor and discuss the strategic planning implications of the planning applications he has called in for his own decision with both honourable Members representing constituencies that may be affected in Suffolk and Cambridgeshire and with the standing conference of East Anglian local authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: In reaching a decision on the proposed new settlement on the A45 east or west of Cambridge, the Secretary of State will have regard to all the evidence presented to the public inquiry due to commence on 6 February 1990. It is not possible for him to meet either the hon. Members representing constituencies that may be affected or the standing conference of East Anglian local authorities (SCEALA) since to do so would give the appearance that the Secretary of State was giving separate and special consideration to one particular viewpoint outside the statutory process. For that reason he will also be unable to visit the sites personally. He will rely on the report of his inspector who will conduct site visits at the appropriate time.

I understand that SCEALA has recently decided that it wishes to give evidence at the inquiry. It is also open to hon. Members in the constituencies affected to give evidence to the inquiry if they so wish.

Merchant Seafarers

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the guidance note issued to local authorities in October 1989 concerning merchant seafarers and liability for the poll tax.

Mr. Chope: Copies of the Department's guidance note on merchant seamen's liability for the community charge were placed in the Library on 26 October 1989.

Poppy Farms

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce new regulations to ensure that local authorities have powers to intervene to inspect, and, if necessary, enforce action on poppy farms.

Mr. Moynihan: Planning permission is not needed for growing poppies. If the hon. Member is concerned about other aspects of poppy farms, perhaps he would write to me, or to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what regard he had to the level of fees charged by private schools and paid for by the assisted places scheme, when calculating the SSA for education announced by him on 6 November.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Norman Shaw South (Chimney)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the purpose of the chimney which has its outlet adjacent to a window of Room GO1, Norman Shaw South; what substances are emitted from that outlet; whether any health risks are associated with those substances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The flue provides the outlet from the gas central heating boiler serving 1 Canon Row. It discharges exhaust gases diluted with fresh air to reduce the carbon dioxide content to less than 1 per cent. This complies with British Gas recommendations for emissions from low-level outlets.

Water Charges

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has been notified of any plans by water companies in England and Wales to alter the basis on which water charges are calculated; and if he will make a statement;

(2) who is responsible for authorising water companies introducing flat-rate water charges, not related to water consumption or rateable values of properties supplied with water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: It is for each water and sewerage undertaker to determine the methods and principles on which its charges will be based, subject to a condition in its appointment, enforced by the Director General of Water Services, that in fixing charges it should not show undue preference to, or undue discrimination against, any class of customers. Several companies have notified my right hon. Friend of their intention to meter new properties and I understand some companies are considering introducing alternative unmeasured charges such as a flat rate licence fee.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has been notified of any proposals by Yorkshire Water to introduce a flat-rate water charge, not related to the rateable values of properties supplied with water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: No, I understand that the board of Yorkshire Water has yet to make a decision on how the company will charge in future; section 80 of the Water Act 1989 prohibits the use of rateable values as a basis of water and sewerage charges after 31 March 2000.

Homelessness

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the homeless in London; and what plans he has to alleviate it.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 24 November 1989]: Latest estimates of households accepted as homeless in London appear in table 1(a) of "Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the second quarter of 1989. Supplementary Tables", which is in the Library.

The Government's plans were announced on 15 November. In particular, local authorities in London have been invited to submit bids for a share of the £177 million extra funds available to local authorities over the next two years for projects designed to move homeless families out of bed and breakfast accommodation. In addition, we have doubled the funds for Housing Corporation, in the next three years; and trebled the resources available for advice and other services for the homeless through the voluntary sector.

Air Pollution

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is or was the average total daily weight of carbon monoxides and nitrogen oxides emitted into the air by road traffic in Greater London in 1987 and 1988; and what estimates are available for 1989, 1990 and 2000.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 24 November 1989]: Warren Spring laboratory has provided the following estimates assuming the London annual total emission from road transport to be 7·55 per cent. of the United Kingdom total, and daily emissions to be 0·274 per cent. of the annual total (1/365).

Average daily emissions 1987:
CO = 925 tonnes
NOx = 213 tonnes

Corresponding data are not yet available for 1988 and 1989. The Department is currently revising its projections of future vehicle emissions in the light of the recent EC agreement on tighter emission standards and other developments, and I regret therefore that the information sought for 1990 and 2000 is also not presently available.

Landlords and Tenants

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to bring forward proposals (a) requiring landlords to provide tenants with a written statement of their present rates contributions and (b) making it an offence to include that amount in rent payments after 1 April 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 27 November 1989]: No, since such a provision would not be workable. Many tenants will have a legal basis for ensuring that their rents are not in effect increased as a result of the abolition of domestic rates. The Government will shortly be issuing a leaflet on rents and rates explaining the position for both tenants and landlords.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Robert N. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in respect of Government policy towards the Nature Conservancy Council; what his response has been; which organisations he has consulted about this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 27 November 1989]: My right hon. Friend has received a variety of representations and advice about the Government's proposals to reorganise the conservation agencies, which were announced in July. Discussions have also taken place with a range of organisations and individuals, as well as with the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commissions. I would also refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend on 23 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) at column 16.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Computers (Imports)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the percentage of the home market of electronic computers supplied by imports.

Mr. Forth: Imports represented 90 per cent. of the United Kingdom's home market in 1988 for electronic data processing equipment.

Cellular Telephone Networks

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will direct the two cellular telephone operators to indicate within the detailed maps of the areas covered by their networks those parts of the network where reception is below an acceptable standard.

Mr. Forth: The coverage maps issued by the two cellular radio network operators clearly indicate areas where full coverage is available and those with fringe coverage. They also specify the circumstances in which reception may be limited, particularly for hand portable equipment.

In these circumstances, I have no plans to direct the operators to publish more detailed coverage maps.

Satellite Services

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has considered further the provision of services by the specialised satellite service operators.

Mr. Forth: I am pleased to announce that the United Kingdom's seven specialised satellite services operators will be permitted to provide satellite-based telecommunication services in Europe as well as the United Kingdom. I have also decided to issue licences under the Telecommunications Act allowing greater flexibility in the running of receive-only satellite dishes by the seven operators and by broadcasters.

The seven operators will now be permitted to provide one-way point to multipoint satellite services of all kinds within Europe as well as the United Kingdom. This will allow them to provide, for example, a simultaneous data or video distribution service to all the European offices of a company.

This reflects the growth of liberalisation in Europe, and puts the United Kingdom in a good position to take advantage of any further changes which take place. The United Kingdom remains in the vanguard of European telecoms liberalisation, and I hope that the operators will now go out and sell innovative and competitive services in the single market which will be with us in 1992.

Two new licences are also to be issued allowing particular groups of people to pass on signals received from satellites beyond the premises on which the reception dish is sited.

The first will allow the seven specialised satellite services operators to receive signals from satellites at their main uplink sites and then retransmit them. The second licence will allow both sound and vision broadcasters to receive material from satellites, whether uplinked in the United Kingdom or overseas, at their studio and retransmit it over their broadcast networks.

These changes arise from particular limitations which the operators have found under the current arrangements. They will allow satellites to be used to provide a wider range of services, especially from locations where it is not easy to use ordinary telecommunications equipment. The new licences will ensure that satellite-based services can be of use to a larger number of companies, particularly the broadcasters, without moving away from the basis of the original terms on which they were liberalised in 1988.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received the Director General of Telecommunications' report on British Telecom's arrangements for the provision of space segment capacity on behalf of the new specialised satellite service providers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: In his report, published today, the director general has concluded that British Telecom's arrangements for dealing with the specialised satellite operators, through its signatory affairs office, will, if properly followed, be fair and impartial. I am pleased that the director general has been able to give this assurance which is essential to the specialised satellite service operators as they begin to develop their businesses. These arrangements are to be reviewed at the end of next year and in the meantime the director general has undertaken to investigate any complaints that they are not working fairly.

The director general has also concluded that it would be more satisfactory if end-users were able to deal directly with the international satellite consortia. This would require changes in the Intelsat and Eutelsat operating agreements which may be achieved in the longer term. I have written to the director general to welcome his report and its conclusions. I have placed copies of the report in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

German Democratic Republic

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give, for visibles and invisibles, the annual trade between the United Kingdom and the German Democratic Republic for each year since 1979, indicating the trade and payments balance in each case.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 27 November 1989]: Information on the value of invisible trade between the United Kingdom and the German Democratic Republic is not available. Figures for visible trade are as follows:

£ million

	Imports	Exports	Crude Balance
1979	110	57	−53
1980	88	93	+5
1981	94	83	−11
1982	134	64	−70
1983	168	61	−107
1984	198	92	−106
1985	204	64	−140
1986	195	82	−113
1987	180	81	−99
1988	153	113	−40
1989[1]	125	82	−43

[1] January-September
Source: Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom.

Iraq

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list for each year since 1979 the number of agreements and total value of facilities under the export credit guarantee system between Britain and Iraq.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 24 November 1989]: Prior to 1983 United Kingdom export credit facilities for Iraq were limited to basic credit insurance on cash or short-term credit transactions. The value of such Iraq business insured by ECGD since 1979 is as follows:

Year	£ million
1979	113
1980	170
1981	292
1982	589
1983	461
1984	140
1985	161
1986	208
1987	55
1988	121

In addition, since 1983, under a series of intergovernmental financial protocols, the ECGD has supported the financing of United Kingdom contracts on medium-term credit involving the sale of capital goods, services, pharmaceuticals and humanitarian products as follows:

1983: £250 million for Capital Goods and Projects.
1984: £250 million for Capital Goods and Projects.
1984: £25 million for Pharmaceuticals and Humanitarian Products.
1985: £50 million for Pharmaceuticals and Humanitarian Products.
1986: £50 million for Pharmaceuticals and Humanitarian Products.
1987: £100 million for Capital Goods, Services and Projects.
1987: £75 million for Pharmaceuticals and Humanitarian Products.
1988: £60 million for Pharmaceuticals and Humanitarian Products.
1988: £280 million for Capital Goods, Services and Projects.

Iran

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state for visibles and invisibles the annual trade between the United Kingdom and Iran for each year since 1979; and what actions are being taken to increase this.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 24 November 1989]: Data on United Kingdom trade in services are not available by partner country. Visible United Kingdom imports from and exports to Iran were as follows:

Year	Imports[1] £ million	Exports £ million
1979	380	232
1980	142	393
1981	198	403
1982	307	334
1983	102	631
1984	476	703
1985	147	526
1986	94	399
1987	237	308
1988	172	248
1989[2]	215	179

[1] Country of Origin.
[2] To 30 September 1989.
Source: Overseas Trade Statistics.

Despite the absence of diplomatic relations, the Department of Trade and Industry remains ready to assist British companies wishing to export to Iran as far as it can.

Chile (Security Equipment)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Government will introduce a ban on United Kingdom companies selling equipment to the Chilean security police and armed forces.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 27 November 1989]: The Government have no plans to change their present policy on the control of exports of equipment to Chile. Export licence applications are considered on a case-by-case basis, in accordance with stringent criteria. It is not our practice to grant a licence for the export of equipment which is likely to be used for internal repression.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Budget

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the aid budget for the next three years.

Mrs. Chalker: The substantial increases in the aid budget over the next three years announced to the House on 15 November are clear evidence of the Government's determination to play their full part in helping to promote sustainable economic and social development and in alleviating poverty in developing countries.

Compared with the original provision this year of £1,430 million, the aid budget is now planned to grow by 22 per cent. in cash terms over the next three years, or by 9 per cent. after allowing for forecast inflation. These increases will enable us not only to continue our widespread support for economic reform in developing countries, but to commit more resources to tackle the environmental issues that are fundamental to sustainable economic growth.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Privatisation

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many officials are employed at the Treasury to advise him on estimates of privatisation proceeds.

Mr. Ryder: The Treasury's public enterprises group, responsible for privatisation and nationalised industry policy, employs 30 people. However, estimates of proceeds from individual sales are the responsibility of the Departments concerned.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent inflation will have to fall before the Government will consider entering the European exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Lilley: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has repeatedly made clear, sterling will join the exchange rate mechanism when, among other conditions, the level of United Kingdom inflation is significantly lower.

Gross National Product

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest figure he has for the gross national product per capita; and what information he has on comparable figures for the German Democratic Republic.

Mr. Ryder: The 1989 edition of "United Kingdom National Accounts"—otherwise known as the CSO Blue Book gives annual estimates of gross national product (on United Kingdom definitions table 1.1; on international definitions page 130) and of population (table 17.1). A copy is available in the Library of the House. For 1988, the United Kingdom figures are:

	£
Gross national product at market prices (United Kingdom definition) per head of home population	8,200
Gross national product at market prices (international definition) per head of home population	8,100

For the German Democratic Republic (GDR), fully comparable figures are not readily available in the publications of the international organisations.

National Loans Fund

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to use the power taken in the Finance Act 1989 to enable the Government to use the National Loans Fund money to acquire gilt-edged stock held in the issue department of the Bank of England for immediate cancellation.

Mr. Major: The first use of this power will be made on 6 December, when £4½ billion of stock will be acquired from the issue department for immediate cancellation. The Bank of England will today be issuing a separate notice giving precise details of the stock to be cancelled.

Inflation

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the projected rates of inflation for the indexation of Civil Service pensions for the last five years; and what were the yearly actual inflation figures.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 27 November 1989]: Under the Social Security Pensions Act 1975 Civil Service pensions, in common with other public service pensions, are uprated in line with movements in the retail prices index (RPI) in order to maintain their value. Until 1980 the uprating was on the basis of the forecast RPI but since then it has been on an historic basis, which is a simpler and more certain method. Accordingly no RPI forecasts are now made for the purpose of uprating these pensions.

Over the years there have been some changes in both the timing of the uprating periods and the date from which the upratings are paid. These are shown in the table.

	Pensions increase (per cent.)	Paid in	Based on movement of prices between
1989	5·9	April 1989	September 1988 – September 1989
1988	4·2	April 1988	September 1987 – September 1988
1987	2·1	April 1987	January 1986 – September 1987

	Pensions increase (per cent.)	Paid in	Based on movement of prices between
1986	1·1	July 1986	May 1985 – January 1986
1985	7·0	November 1985	May 1984 – May 1985

Widows' Pensions

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his most recent estimate of the loss to the Exchequer if widows' pensions were to be treated as non-taxable income.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 27 November 1989]: Of the 3½ million widows in the United Kingdom only about 850,000 are liable to income tax. If all their widows' state retirement pensions were treated as non-taxable, the direct revenue cost would be about £270 million.

Forestry

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will introduce legislation to allow unitised vehicles for forestry investment to benefit from the same tax treatment currently enjoyed by individual owners of forests and woodlands;

(2) whether he will take steps to see that commercial forestry and woodlands are removed from inheritance tax where such forestry and woodlands have been owned by a deceased person for seven years.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 27 November 1989]: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Broadcasting

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the ban on the televising of speeches by members of Sinn Fein extends to the transmission of historical programmes containing recordings of speeches by deceased supporters of Sinn Fein.

Mr. Mellor: The directions prevent the broadcasting of direct statements by persons representing, or purporting to represent, the organisations named in the notices, or which support, or invite support for, those organisations. The directions do not distinguish between statements made by the living and recordings of statements by those who have died.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of the Independent Broadcasting Authority have been required to resign for being in breach of schedule 1(4) to the Broadcasting Act 1981.

Mr. Mellor: None.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to how many former Independent Broadcasting Authority members by name compensation has been paid when they have ceased to be a member of the authority otherwise than on the expiry of their term of office.

Mr. Mellor: None.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last satisfied himself that no member of the Independent Broadcasting Authority has a financial or other interest in any advertising agency or in any business concerned with the manufacture or sale of apparatus for wireless telegraphy or other telegraphic equipment or in any business consisting or intended to consist in whole or in part of entering into or carrying out contracts with the Independent Broadcasting Authority for the provision of programmes or parts of programmes.

Mr. Mellor: Under schedule 1(4) to the Broadcasting Act 1981, my right hon. and learned Friend has to be satisfied on these matters before appointing a person to be a member of the Independent Broadcasting Authority. This procedure is carried out before each appointment is made, and repeated annually for existing members.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list those public bodies concerned with aspects of broadcasting to which he has powers to appoint.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend is responsible for appointments to the following bodies concerned with broadcasting:

Broadcasting Complaints Commission
Broadcasting Standards Council
Cable Authority
Independent Broadcasting Authority
Welsh Fourth Channel Authority.

Appointments to the British Broadcasting Corporation are made by Her Majesty the Queen by Order in Council.

Official Secrets Act

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list those public bodies to which he appoints people where it is required that a declaration is made under the Official Secrets Act as a condition of membership.

Mr. Waddington: None of the people I appoint to public bodies are required to sign a declaration that they recognise that they are bound by the terms of the Official Secrets Act. Whether or not such a declaration is signed does not affect the application of the law in any specific case.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constables of police as to whether they require from the applicant for a shotgun certificate evidence by way of written permission to shoot over farmland before granting the certificate.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for the grant or renewal of a shotgun certificate is a matter for chief officers of police who must have regard to the statutory requirements of the Firearms Acts 1968 to 1988.

My right hon. and learned Friend has issued guidance to chief officers of police in the publication entitled "Firearms Law: Guidance to the Police", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those provisions of the Firearms Acts that refer to procedures governing applicants for shotgun licences.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Section 26 of the Firearms Act 1968, as amended by sections 9 and 10 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988, provides for applications for the grant and renewal of a shotgun certificate to be made in the prescribed form. Sections 26 and 53 of the 1968 Act empower the Secretary of State to make rules prescribing the form of application and certificates. These are set out in the Firearms Rules 1989, a copy of which is in the Library.

Child Abuse

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a requirement whereby if a sexual abuse offender admits guilt the mother must be informed if the offender intends to return to the parental home.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: If a suspect admits that he has sexually abused a child, it will be for the police, and subsequently the courts, to decide whether he should be kept in custody or released on bail while criminal proceedings are pending. Under the arrangements recommended in "Working Together", social service departments should be fully informed of any decisions to release a suspect on bail, and able to take whatever steps are needed to protect the interests of the child. However, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health and my right hon. and learned Friend will consider whether further guidance is needed on this aspect.

Water Charges

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in Bradford have been issued with court summonses in the last year, to date, to appear in court for the non-payment of water charges; how many people have been fined; what level of fine was imposed; and what other sentence was imposed.

Mr. Waddington: This information is not held centrally.

Prisoners (Complaints)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the report of the working group established to examine the proposals in the report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons on prisoners' complaints.

Mr. Waddington: I am issuing today the report of the working group on grievance procedures and placing a copy in the Library. I have not reached any firm views on the working group's proposals and would welcome comments on them. They should be sent to

P3 Division
Her Majesty's Prison Service
Room 717
Cleland House
Page Street
LONDON
SW1P 4LN

by 22 January 1990.

ENERGY

Independent Electricity Producers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many gas turbine, wind and landfill gas projects capable of producing up to 5,000 MW of electricity there are in Britain; and how many such companies have gone into receivership since the Government first announced their privatisation plans.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information is as follows:

Gas Turbines
The CEGB currently has 11 gas turbine power stations having a declared net capacity of around 2,500 MW.

Wind Energy
There are nearly 30 known grid-connected or otherwise significant wind energy installations with a total installed capacity of around 8 MW.

Landfill Gas
There are 13 known existing projects totalling 16 MW installed capacity.

None of the above is known to have gone into receivership.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the Association of Independent Electricity Producers; what was discussed; and if he will commission a survey to discover how electricity privatisation will affect smaller generating companies.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend last met the Association of Independent Electricity Producers on 19 October to discuss developments in our thinking on privatisation and my Department will continue to keep them in touch with progress. We are confident our proposals for the ESI will offer good prospects for independent generation. I do not see the need for a survey.

Collieries

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many British Coal operating collieries there are in the current year and each previous year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The number of operating collieries is published in British Coal's annual report and accounts, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. British Coal currently has 76 operating collieries.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the number of men on colliery books by British Coal area, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Average colliery manpower by British Coal area is shown in British Coal's annual report and accounts, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Power Stations

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the average production output and potential output of each Central Electricity Generating Board power station for each of the last three years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information requested by the hon. Member with respect to 1986-87 and 1987-88 is contained in the statistical yearbook of the CEGB's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library of the House. The 1988-89 yearbook has yet to be published.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the oil-fired power stations and indicate which can be dual-fired.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information requested by the hon. Member is contained in the statistical yearbook of the CEGB's 1987-88 annual report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Coal Exports

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the amount of British Coal output which will be exported in the current year; and what was the amount for each year since 1979;

(2) what is the size of British Coal's domestic market in the current year and in each year since 1979;

(3) what is the size of British Coal's industrial and commercial market for the current year; and what it was in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These are commercial matters for the British Coal Corporation and I have, therefore, asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Early Retirement Payments (Electricity Boards)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the cost to the individual area electricity boards of early retirement payments to their senior and middle management.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the industry. I am asking the chairman of the Electricity Council to write to the hon. Member.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid (Northern Ireland)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Attorney-General what sums have been paid out in legal aid for fees to (a) solicitors and (b) barristers in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years.

The Attorney-General: The figures for payments out of the legal aid fund in each of the last three financial years to (a) solicitors and to (b) barristers are as follows:

(a)

Financial year	Fees	Disbursements	Total
1986-87	5,043,872	1,172,368	6,216,240
1987-88	[1]5,914,822	1,275,835	7,540,659
1988-89	8,125,482	1,704,474	9,829,956

(b)

Financial year	Total
1986-87	1,841,119
1987-88	[1]1,666,831
1988-89	2,499,817

[1] This figure is an estimated apportionment of legal aid fees paid to solicitors and barristers. Difficulties encountered during the initial stages of computerisation of the Legal Aid Department prevented barristers' fees and solicitors' fees in respect of Civil Legal Aid being accounted for separately.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Attorney-General what sums have been paid out in legal aid in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years.

The Attorney-General: The total expenditure from public funds for legal aid in Northern Ireland for the last three years is as follows:

	£
1986-87	9,009,849
1987-88	10,000,384
1988-89	13,080,815

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has taken any steps to determine the perceived religion of those persons who have received legal aid in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years.

The Attorney-General: Persons who receive civil legal aid do so on the grounds of financial eligibility and where applicable, on grounds that their involvement in the proceedings is reasonable, as is their receipt of legal aid in the particular circumstances of the case. Persons who receive criminal legal aid do so at the discretion of the court, it being satisfied that granting a certificate is desirable in the interests of justice and is necessary to assist the defendant in meeting the costs of the case.

A person's perceived religion does not have any bearing upon the decision-making process, and no steps have been taken to determine the perceived religion of recipients of legal aid in Northern Ireland.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Bulwell St. Mary's School

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he received a letter from the head teacher of Bulwell St. Mary's Church of England primary school; and what response he has made.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend received a letter from Mr. J. St. John, the head teacher at Bulwell St. Mary's Church of England primary school on 10 November 1989. A response will be sent as soon as possible.

Education Act 1988

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how he intends to respond to letters he has received from head teachers, parents and governors in Liverpool expressing concern regarding the implementation of the Education Act 1988.

Mrs. Rumbold: All letters to this Department will continue to receive appropriate replies which I hope the recipients find helpful.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many letters of concern regarding the implementation of the Education Act 1988 he has received from head teachers, parents and governors throughout the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not readily available in the form requested. My right hon. Friend frequently receives correspondence about various aspects of the provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988 from head teachers, parents and governors.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the circular "Working Together for the Protection of Children From Abuse: Procedures within the Education Service", is available to persons other than educational authorities.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The circular was sent to a wide range of educational bodies in addition to local education authorities, including maintained schools, non-maintained special schools and independent schools, and institutions providing courses of initial teacher training. The circular was also sent to local authority social services departments, health authorities and family practitioner committees.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to receive the report on the progress of the programme initiated by his Department to monitor the protection of children from child abuse; how many education authorities have taken action following his circular; and how many individual educational programmes have been established.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Local education authorities' reports to the Department on action they have taken to implement the recommendations in circular 4/88 are due by the end of this month. These will provide information about programmes which local education authorities are undertaking.

School Examinations and Assessment Council

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has yet replied to the advice of the School Examinations and Assessment Council on the issues which it raised in July, in the context of A-level and AS examinations, on education and training of 16 to 19-year-olds generally and on the vocational relevance of academic study; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I am writing today to SEAC, with a parallel letter to the National Curriculum Council, and placing copies of both letters in the Library of the House.

I am concerned to see that all young people aged 16 to 19, including those studying for advanced and advanced supplementary examinations, should be equipped with the general skills, knowledge and understanding needed for employment and adult life generally in the 21st century.

I have therefore asked the SEAC and the NCC, working together and with other interested parties including the National Council for Vocational Qualifications, the further education unit and the Training Agency, to define the common skills and knowledge which are needed by advanced-level and advanced supplementary examination syllabuses. I have also asked the SEAC, in its future work in this area, to take account of widely expressed concerns about the apparent gap in the structure of qualifications between GCSE and A-levels.

I believe that the work now set in hand will increase the breadth and relevance of study of advanced-level students, and also ensure the development of links between A-AS qualifications and vocational qualifications, which will in the longer term improve opportunities for progression and credit transfer for all young people aged 16 to 19 in education and training.

TRANSPORT

Waterloo Development

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the likely increase of road users and the effect on traffic congestion as a result of the construction of the Channel tunnel terminal at Waterloo.

Mr. Portillo: The effect of the additional traffic flow generated by the Channel tunnel terminal on the surrounding road network is not expected to be significant, provided that British Rail proceeds with its proposals to improve the internal road layout within the station. This issue was discussed at some length during parliamentary proceedings on the Channel Tunnel Bill.

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the effect on local residents, traffic circulation and local businesses as a result of development proposals for the Waterloo area; and whether, in view of these developments, he will agree to a public inquiry into the strategy and co-ordination of developments in the Waterloo area.

Mr. Moynihan: I have been asked to reply.

The effects of development proposals are for the local authority to assess. I recognise that there are a number of proposals for development in the Waterloo area, one of which has recently been the subject of a public inquiry. There are others which may be the subject of future inquiries as part of the planning process. In view of this, and the recent adoption of alterations of the Waterloo district plan which would be a material consideration at public inquiries, I see no need for holding a public inquiry to co-ordinate several unrelated developments for the area.

Swanley-London Rail Link

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the latest estimated figures on the amount of increased traffic, particularly freight traffic, that will use existing rail lines as a result of British Rail's decision not to build a tunnel for a high-speed rail link to Waterloo, London from Swanley, specifying the number and size of increased trains on existing routes, the frequency of these trains and the amount of night-time movement of freight;

(2) what works will be required to upgrade sections of existing railway lines on the route from Swanley to central London to allow for the increased passenger and freight traffic; when these works will commence and how long they will take to complete; what is the latest estimate of the effect on local communities of these works; and what arrangements have been made for compensation to local residents on the effect of any upgrading works.

Mr. Portillo: These are matters now being studied by British Rail and its chosen private sector partner, Eurorail.

Dalton-in-Furness Bypass

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an announcement regarding the A590 Dalton-in-Furness bypass.

Mr. Atkins: The inspector's report on the public inquiry is expected shortly. An announcement will be made as soon as my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment have considered it.

Scarisbrick-Pinfold Bypass

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will appoint consultants to advise him on the proposed route of the Scarisbrick-Pinfold bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Department is appointing consultants for new schemes included in the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity" in several tranches over a period of about 12 months. I expect to invite competitive bids for this scheme early next year. Our aim will be to consult the public on route options within two years of appointing a consultant.

Channel Rail Link

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will raise the designation of the Channel rail link as a route qualifying for assistance under the proposed European Community transport infrastructure scheme when he next meets his fellow European Transport Ministers; and if he will make a statement on the proposals.

Mr. Portillo: The Council of Ministers has yet to decide whether any further grants should be made from budget line 580 beyond the end of this year. It would be premature to consider what specific projects might or might not benefit from a future programme.

Green Roof Marker Lights

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider the safety aspects of forward-facing green-coloured roof marker lights displayed by trucks.

Mr. Atkins: I am not aware of any safety benefit, or harm, due to green roof-mounted lights on trucks.

The rules on lighting require that if additional lamps are fitted which serve to indicate the width as well as the presence of the vehicle, they must emit white light. These do not, however, prohibit the fitting of green ornamental lights near the centre of truck roofs.

Learner Motor Cyclists

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the practice of companies employing L-plate motor cycle and moped riders for delivery of goods; and if he intends to bring in regulations to prohibit such practice.

Mr. Atkins: Motor cycle couriers provide a useful service. It requires skill and experience. We deplore the use of unqualified riders, and no responsible company should employ them for the delivery of goods.

Roads (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on any recent decisions affecting the London assessment studies.

Mr. Atkins: No.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has anything to add to the answer given by the Minister for Roads and Traffic on 1 November on Roads (London), Official Report, column 192, in the light of the letters he sent to the hon. Members for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) and for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi), advising them that he had asked the consultants for the London assessment studies to study the possibility of building roads along the line of the Parkland walk and across Barnes common in tunnels.

Mr. Atkins: No. We expect the consultants' report to be published next month.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total cost to his Department of the London road assessment studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The cost to date of the London assessment studies is £8·5 million.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the cost to purchase a copy of the London road assessment studies report when it is published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The selling price of the consultants' reports has yet to be determined.

Land Values

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why his Department does not retain information on the values ascribed to individual portions of land needed for trunk road construction.

Mr. Atkins: The extent of the information held by the Department on the value of individual plots of land needed for trunk road constuction varies according to the circumstances of each case and the stage the preparation of the scheme has reached. Information in respect of individual plots, when available, is not made public since this could prejudice negotiations and would breach confidentiality between the Department and individual land owners.

Page Street (Development)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make it his policy to reject any application to divert the public right of way in the case of the Property Services Agency proposals to develop Page street, SW1.

Mr. Atkins: Such matters must be considered on their merits in accordance with the normal statutory procedures. A draft order under section 209 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 proposing the stopping up of the relevant length of Page street was published on 12 October. Objections received to that draft order are being considered. An announcement will be made shortly on the next step in the statutory procedures.

Bradford Rail Link

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will have discussions with the chairman of British Rail on the provision of financial assistance for the development of a cross-Bradford rail link; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: It is for British Rail and the West Yorkshire passenger transport authority to decide whether there is a case for investment.

British Rail (Meetings)

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of British Rail on 22 November, when a variety of railway matters was discussed.

Road Maintenance

Mr. Tredinnick To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what incentive schemes are in operation to encourage motorway and other major road maintenance contractors to complete repairs on or ahead of schedule; whether any new incentives are planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The main incentive to contractors to complete maintenance work as soon as possible is the use of lane rental contracts. Since these contracts were introduced in 1984, they are estimated to have saved over 2,000 days of lane closures worth around £40 million in avoided delays to road users.

As well as encouraging contractors to complete work more quickly, we are acting to reduce the impact of works on the road user. A number of new traffic management arrangements are being tested to increase vehicle flows past contraflow sites. These include the use of narrower traffic lanes to enable more lanes to be provided, and tidal flow systems in which the number of lanes available in each direction changes to match traffic demand. The Department is also developing a computer system to assist in optimising the planning and scheduling of maintenance and improvement works on trunk roads, including motorways, to minimise disruption to road users.

Motorways (Safety)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to improve safety on motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Responsible driving is the key to improving motorway safety. We announced a comprehensive package of measures last year to help drivers. These included advice leaflets, videos, extra driving tuition, roadworks safety, signing requirements and 70 mph repeater signs.

A further development to which I attach particular importance is better information for drivers on what is ahead.

Cost-Benefit Analysis

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to instruct BR to undertake full cost-benefit analyses on their investment proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The circumstances in which cost-benefit appraisal is appropriate for the evaluation of rail investments were set out in the Government's observations on the third report of the Transport Committee, Session 1987-88 (House of Commons paper 420). British Rail is aware of them.

Motorways

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning congestion at junction 21 of the M1 motorway.

Mr. Atkins: Since the beginning of 1987 the Department has received six letters and two parliamentary questions from hon. Members, including one letter and one question from the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West. The Department has also received a total of 14 other representations from Leicestershire county council, Blaby district council, Leicestershire constabulary, local businesses and individuals.

I am aware of the particular problems at junction 21. Plans were announced in the "Roads for Prosperity" White Paper in May for M1 widening and junction improvements, including a major scheme at junction 21. Construction of an interim improvement scheme will begin in the spring.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with Eurotunnel and British Rail about the proposed Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend and I have had discussions with Eurotunnel and with British Rail on a range of issues related to the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what contact his Department has had with Eurotunnel or TML representatives to discuss the disposal of surplus spoil from the Shakespeare cliff site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department has discussed the disposal of spoil arising from the Channel tunnel with Eurotunnel and TML on a number of occasions.

I understand that Eurotunnel originally planned to use 1 million cu m of spoil as part of the bulk fill required for the construction of the Cheriton terminal. At the start of the operation, it used sand brought in by pipeline. This was welcomed by local authorities, as it involved less environmental disturbance than would the use of spoil. Sand was therefore used for the whole operation. Eurotunnel identified a number of options for disposal of the now surplus spoil, on which it consulted the Department and other interested parties. It announced at the meeting of the Kent joint consultative committee on 18 October, chaired by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, that it was not its intention to bring forward a private Bill on the matter. It is still considering, with TML, disposal options permitted within the Channel Tunnel Act, and has promised full consultation with those concerned.

Public Transport

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Government have undertaken a comparative cost analysis between increased investment in public transport and constructing new roads and improving old ones.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer Monday 27th November 1989]: The Government's policy is to support worthwhile investment in both public transport and roads. Investment in public transport is supported in its own right and where it is a more cost-effective way of dealing with transport problems than road improvements or traffic management measures. The policy is explained more fully in the Government's response to the Transport Select Committee published in March 1988 (House of Commons Paper No. 420, Session 1987-88.)

SCOTLAND

Toxic Waste

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the ports currently registered for the import of toxic waste in Scotland, and the amount of such waste imported, the country of origin and the destination, and the nature of the waste, through each of those ports, for the last three years available.

Mr. Rifkind: There is no requirement under the legislation on waste disposal for specific ports to be registered for imports. Returns made by Scottish local authorities indicate that the total amounts of waste imported into Scotland in 1987 and 1988 were as follows:

Year	Amount (tonnes)	Country of origin	Destination (district council)	Nature of waste
1987	15	Holland	Strathkelvin	Sub-soil
1988	2	Sweden	Inverness	Sodium metal
	451	Eire	Edinburgh	Solvent and contaminated methylated spirits (for recycling)

Information is not available for earlier years.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to issue new guidance to bring the community charge liability of merchant seamen who are at sea for more than six months in the year into line with the guidance issued for England and Wales by the Department of the Environment on 26 October.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so at present. It is for community charges registration officers, whether in Scotland or in England and Wales, to decide in the light of all the facts and circumstances relating to individual cases whether a person is solely or mainly resident in their area and thus liable to pay the personal community charge. Decisions made by community charges registration officers are, of course, appealable.

Further Education

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will reconsider the timetable for appointing the new further education college councils under the Self-Governing Schools Etc. (Scotland) Act 1989.

Mr. Ian Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations that the proposed date of 1 April 1990 for appointing further education college councils will leave insufficient time for education authorities to carry out full consultations on the appointment of employer representatives. In the light of these representations, he intends to make a direction under the Act amending the date to 1 August 1990. College council regulations will be made early in 1990 once we have had time to consider comments on our proposals in the consultative paper the "College Control Principle". It is open to an authority to appoint college councils before 1 August 1990, and the date for college councils taking over their new functions will continue to be 1 October 1990.

Conservation

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has considered the responses to the Scottish Development Department's consultation paper, "Scotland's Natural Heritage."

Mr. Rifkind: I have received 179 responses to the consultation paper seeking views on our proposal to merge the proposed Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland (NCCS) and the existing Countryside Commission for Scotland (CCS) and express my appreciation to all who submitted views. The responses have been wide ranging both in their sources and their comments. I am encouraged that our consultation paper stimulated a wide debate and provided scope for those responding to offer their own proposals for developing the potential of the new framework for a more co-ordinated approach to nature conservation and countryside matters in Scotland.

Of the 159 respondents expressing a view, 98 (over 60 per cent.) are in favour of the merger of NCCS and CCS and 61 are opposed. Twenty did not express a view. I am pleased to report that our merger proposals are supported by a wide cross-section of respondents including voluntary conservation organisations. I was particularly pleased that CCS and the NCC (the Scottish advisory committee) are in favour of our proposals.

A great many respondents paid tribute to the work of the NCC and CCS in Scotland and I would also add my own tribute to both bodies and especially their staff, to whom the Government have given assurances of job security.

The responses have confirmed the Government's judgment that a new unified body will provide a sensitive, coherent and co-ordinated approach to the protection and enjoyment of Scotland's unique and priceless landscape, wildlife and habitat.

Many responses emphasised the need for a strong science base and co-ordination on standards, research and matters of GB or international significance. The Government recognise this need and the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 23 November at columns 16-17, set out the Government's proposals for a statutory co-ordinating committee of the three proposed nature conservation bodies.

Many respondents, including some who supported the merger, also sought reassurances on a range of matters including the independence, funding, staffing and location of the new body. I intend to respond to their concerns and will consult further on the detailed aspects of my proposals before bringing forward the legislation needed to create a single natural heritage body in Scotland. I will invite comments early in 1990.

Badgers

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives his Department is taking to develop vaccine to protect badgers from tuberculosis.

Mr. Maclean: Work on a vaccine for use on badgers has been carried out at the Middlesex hospital in collaboration with the central veterinary laboratory (CVL). Further work is planned, particularly in respect of safety, to enable field trials to be undertaken. This work will commence at the CVL shortly.

Pesticide Unit

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he proposes to take to improve the efficiency of the pesticide unit at Harpenden.

Mr. Maclean: Procedural changes and closer contacts with other national regulatory bodies conducting reviews of old chemicals are being implemented aimed at speeding up the evaluation of pesticides and minimising duplication of effort. Scientific and administrative staff have received special pay awards designed to encourage recruitment and retention. In addition, outside consultants have been asked to study the benefits of installing a suitable new information technology system and the use of independent consultants to evaluate certain data is being explored.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Brussels Fisheries Council held on 27 November.

Mr. Curry: I attended the Council of Fisheries Ministers in Brussels on 27 November 1989. The Council decided on guide prices for 1990 and we secured the maintenance of the seasonal price arrangement for herring which is important to our industry. The Council agreed on useful arrangements for assisting the improvement of member states' enforcement. Further, the Council agreed on an increase in the total allowable catch for Channel cod which gives the United Kingdom a further 66 tonnes this year.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on cross-contamination within slaughterhouses.

Mr. Maclean: Statutory hygiene controls, enforced by local authorities, apply at all stages of meat production to reduce the risk of cross-contamination. My Department is continuously seeking ways of further reducing the incidence of cross-contamination. We will be advising local authorities and the industry shortly on additional measures further to reduce the incidence of contamination in poultry slaughterhouses.

Food Irradiation

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the implications for Government policy of the recent European Parliament vote on food irradiation.

Mr. Maclean: The vote as such has no implications for Government policy. It is the means by which the Parliament has set out its opinion on the proposal from the Commission. The co-operation procedure provides for the Commission to take a view of the Parliament's opinion and for the Council to seek a common position among the member states.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies have been carried out or are in progress to examine the effects of food irradiation on (a) listeria monocytogenes, (b) pesticide residues and (c) vitamin levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the bibliography at Appendix G of the report on the safety and wholesomeness of irradiated foods by the advisory committee on irradiated and novel foods, available in the Library of the House. This refers to a number of studies on vitamin levels in treated foods and to the use of the process to reduce or eliminate pathogenic micro-organisms. So far as listeria monocytogenes is concerned a further study has been carried out by my Department which may be published in the near future. Further a recent study by Dr. M. Patterson, Queens university, Belfast has been published in "Letters on Applied Microbiology 8(5)" pages 181-184.

The effects of irradiation on pesticide residues were considered by the advisory committee on irradiated and novel foods which concluded that the levels of any radiolytic products of such residues would be negligible. Further information on this sector will be found in the World Health Organisation publication "Consumer Concerns about the Safety of Irradiated Food" (ref WHO/EHE/FOS/89.1).

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the membership of the working party on food irradiation, and indicate which members represent consumer interests, which enforcement agencies, and which food industry interests.

Mr. Maclean: The membership of the advisory committee on irradiated and novel foods is as follows. The members did not represent sectoral interests, but were chosen for their expertise in the various specialised branches of science relevant to consideration of the safety and wholesomeness of irradiated food.

Chairman
Sir Arnold Burgen MD, FRCP, FRS.
Master of Darwin College, University of Cambridge.

Members:
Professor J. W. Bridges BSc, PhD, CChem, FRSC, FIBiol, MRCPath, MinstEnvSci.
Director of the Robens Institute of Industrial and Environmental Health and Safety, University of Surrey.
Professor J. D. Bu'Lock BA, PhD.
Head of the Microbial Chemistry Laboratories, University of Manchester
Dr. J. C. Gould BSc, MD, FRCPE, FRCPath, FFCM, FIBiol, FRSE.
Former Director of the Central Microbiological Laboratories, Edinburgh.
[1]Dr. H. Smith PhD, FIBiol.
Former Head of the Biology Department, National Radiological Protection Board.
Professor J. Hawthorn BSc, PhD, ARCST, CChem, FRSC, FIBiol, FIFST, FRSE.
Emeritus Professor of Food Science, University of Strathclyde.
Professor W. P. T. James MD, MA, DSc, FRCP, FRCP(Edin).
Director of the Rowett Research Institute, Aberdeen.
Professor B. E. B. Moseley BSc, PhD.
Head of Reading Laboratory, Agriculture and Food Research Council Institute of Food Research, Reading.
Dr. A. N. B. Stott MB, ChB, FFOM.
Former Chief Medical Officer, United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.
Dr. A. J. Swallow PhD, DSc, ScD, CChem, FRSC.
Head of the Biophysical Chemistry Division, Paterson Institute, Christie Hospital and Holt Radium Institute Manchester.
[2]Professor E. D. Wills MA, MSc, PhD, ScD.
Late Head of the Department of Biochemistry, St. Bartholomew's Hospital Medical College, London.

Ex Officio Members:
Professor A. E. Bender PhD, DSc(Hon), FRSH, FIFST.
Emeritus Professor of Nutrition and Dietetics, University of London.
(Chairman of the Panel on Novel Foods).
Professor P. Turner MD, BSc, FRCP, HonMPS, HonFIBiol.
Professor of Clinical Pharmacology, St. Bartholomew's Hospital Medical College, London.
(Chairman of the Committee of Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment).
Dr. J. E. M. Whitehead MA, MB, FRCPath, DipBact.
Former Director of the Public Health Laboratory Service, London (Former Member of the Standing Panel on Hazards from Microbial Contamination of Food).

[1] Until December 1982.
[2] From August 1983 until April 1985.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations from members of the public he has received in favour of the relaxation of the ban on food irradiation; and how many against.

Mr. Maclean: Since the announcement of the Government's decision to take steps to enable consumers to choose the additional protection of irradiated food if they so wish, 34 letters have been received from members of the public either expressing support or seeking further information and 92 letters have expressed concern about aspects of the matter.

Microwaves

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the use of microwaves for primary heating of food products.

Mr. Maclean: The question presumably refers to the use of microwave ovens to cook food from raw. Each microwave oven manufacturer provides instructions on how best to do this using his particular oven. The user should of course check that the food is thoroughly cooked in the same way as is necessary with any other cooking method.

Food Industry

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many meetings he has had within the last 12 months with representatives from (a) Sainsburys, (b) Safeways, (c) Tesco, (d) Marks and Spencer and (e) Trusthouse Forte; what matters were discussed; if he plans any future meetings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend, like his predecessor, maintains regular contacts with the food industry, including on occasions meeting representatives from individual companies to discuss matters of mutual concern. During the past year at such meetings, particular emphasis has been put on all aspects of food safety and protection of the consumer.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to make an announcement about the new rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: An announcement of the 1990 HLCA rates and scheme conditions will be made as soon as possible following completion of the annual autumn review of the economic conditions in the hill and upland areas.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of his meeting with the Agriculture Council of Ministers regarding the future arrangements for hill livestock compensatory allowances.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 22 November at column 8.

Eli Lilley

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met a representative from Eli Lilley; and what was discussed.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend has not met representatives of Eli Lilley since his appointment as Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

PRIME MINISTER

Wales

Q22. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent visit to Wales.

The Prime Minister: During my visit to the Rhondda valley and Cardiff bay, I was able to see the remarkable regeneration that is taking place; with new factories, shops, new housing and offices together with major improvements in the local environment.

I visited Allied Steel and Wire where I was pleased to meet management and employees and to congratulate them on their impressive growth and achievements over recent years. I also saw a fine example of inward investment when I visited the Kyushu Matsushita Electric United Kingdom plant at Newport. This inward investment has high productivity and a fine export record. It is just one example of over 230 inward investment projects that have been attracted to Wales.

I met the Health Promotion Authority for Wales and to learn about its campaign to reduce the incidence of heart disease and cancer. I visited Companies House which is one of many examples of the relocation of Government activities from London to the regions. These have brought benefits to the local economy and provided very good facilities for those carrying out these important Government operations.

I was delighted to witness personally the remarkable transformation that is taking place in both the economy and the environment of Wales under this Government.

Child Abuse

Q39. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with co-ordination between programmes in Whitehall to combat the problem of child abuse.

The Prime Minister: The interdepartmental group on child abuse provides a permanent and formal mechanism to facilitate interdepartmental co-ordination in the field of child protection.

German Democratic Republic

Q55. Mrs. Currie: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit the German Democratic Republic.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Portsmouth

Q62. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make an official visit to Portsmouth.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

USA President

Q70. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet the President of the United States of America.

The Prime Minister: I shall meet President Bush at the NATO Summit in Brussels on 4 December following his meeting with President Gorbachev.

Haemophiliacs (AIDS)

Q81. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Prime Minister when she intends to reply to the letter she received from an all-party group of hon. Members requesting an immediate out-of-court compensation payment for AIDS-infected haemophiliacs.

Q113. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received about the plight of people with haemophilia who, in the course of National Health Service treatment, have been infected with the AIDS virus; and what reply she has sent.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced on 23 November that we have offered an additional £19 million to the Macfarlane Trust to provide ex gratia payments to haemophiliacs who contracted the AIDS virus in the course of treatment. I refer the right hon. Members to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 23 November at columns 11-12. Over 300 representations in support of people with haemophilia and HIV infection have been received. Replies will be sent shortly. As court proceedings have now begun, it would be inappropriate to comment on the question of an out-of-court settlement.

Hereford

Q88. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make an official visit to Hereford.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Cyprus (President)

Q118. Mr. Cox: To ask the the Prime Minister if she will invite the President of Cyprus to make an official visit to the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: President Vassiliou paid an official visit to this country in March this year. He is a frequent visitor to the United Kingdom and had talks with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in London earlier today.

Northern Ireland

Q139. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister when she last met the leaders of the Northern Ireland political parties represented at Westminster.

The Prime Minister: I last met the leaders of the main Northern Ireland political parties represented at Westminster on 23 February, when we discussed the future of Harland and Wolff.

English Language

Q151. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received on the role of English as a world language.

The Prime Minister: I have received no such representations. I believe that it is essential that young people should have a full command of the English language and that they should be proficient in at least one modern foreign language. Both are included as foundation subjects in the national curriculum.

Keighley

Q156. Mr. Waller: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make an official visit to Keighley.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Ambulance Dispute

Q168. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about the ambulance dispute.

The Prime Minister: It is a matter of great regret that ambulance staff are refusing to do non-emergency work and in many cases not maintaining an adequate accident and emergency service as the unions have promised. The National Health Service chief executive has put forward an excellent basis for a settlement. This includes an increase of 9 per cent. on basic rates, with 11·8 per cent. for qualified staff in the London ambulance service, and an additional annual payment of £500 for fully trained paramedical staff. The unions should return to the negotiating table.

Edmonton

Q200. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make an official visit to Edmonton.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Clifton, Rugby

Q212. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to make an official visit to Clifton, near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Government Accountability

Q215. Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she will take to improve Government accountability to Parliament.

The Prime Minister: I am satisfied that Ministers are already fully accountable to Parliament for the work of their Departments.

Wales

Q227. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Prime Minister when she next intends to visit Wales.

The Prime Minister: I visited Wales on 17 November 1989. I have at present no further plans to do so.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Q240. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will give the list of conditions she has established for United Kingdom adherence to the European monetary system exchange rate mechanism of the European Community.

The Prime Minister: The decision on when to join the exchange rate mechanism will have to be judged against progress in a number of areas—in particular, when the level of United Kingdom inflation is significantly lower, there is capital liberalisation in the Community and real progress has been made towards the completion of the single market, freedom of financial services and strengthened competition policy.

British Rail

Mr. Adley: To ask the Prime Minister when she last met the chairman of the British Rail board; and what was discussed.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport regularly meets the chairman to discuss a wide range of issues.

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister when she next intends to pay an official visit to India.

The Prime Minister: I look forward to visiting India again, but have no current plans to do so.

European Community

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the cost of the common agricultural policy; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom has taken the lead in EC budgetary reform. I have no plans to raise the cost of the common agricultural policy at the next European Council.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what issues she intends to raise at the next meeting of the European Council.

The Prime Minister: I expect discussion of a range of issues, including eastern Europe, the single market, economic and monetary union and the social charter.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the degree of progress made in the implementing of free trade within the European Economic Community; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: In the context of the single market programme, considerable progress has been made on breaking down the barriers to free trade within the European Community: 147 single market measures have now been agreed. This means the community is about halfway through the programme set out in the Commission's White Paper, "Completing the internal market". At the meeting of the European Council in Strasbourg I shall be urging that the momentum on the single market programme be kept up, and that the Community should not allow itself to be distracted from this important goal.

Relocation

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister if, in the process of implementing the Government's policy of dispersing departmental offices out of high-cost urban areas, she will co-ordinate the plans of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Secretary of State for Defence, and the Minister of Agricultue, Fisheries and Food to concentrate into Cambridge offices of the Inland Revenue, the Property Services Agency, the Ministry of Defence and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food that at present are located in East Anglia's smaller market towns.

The Prime Minister: The guidelines already require relocating Departments to consult other relevant Departments, so that issues such as comparative costs, the benefits of property rationalisation and interdepartmental co-ordination can be fully considered in advance of Ministers announcing their decisions.

Nicaragua

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions she had with Senora Violeta Chamoro on 13 November concerning United Kingdom development aid to Nicaragua after the elections in February 1990.

The Prime Minister: I saw Senora Chamoro in order to demonstrate our support for the democratic process in Nicaragua. We did not discuss development aid.

United Nations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister why representatives of the African National Congress were asked by officials of the United Kingdom mission to the United Nations not to offer her congratulations on the occasion of her recent speech to the United Nations General Assembly.

The Prime Minister: We look to the African National Congress to agree to the suspension of violence on the basis set out in the negotiating concept of the Commonwealth eminent persons group. It has not yet done so. The question of ministerial contact with the ANC is viewed in this context.

Engagements

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 November.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 November.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 November.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 November.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 November.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with President Roh of South Korea who is on an official visit.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Kincora Boys' Home

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will set up a public inquiry into the events at Kincora boys' home.

Mr. Cope: No.

Arts

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to encourage co-operation between the Belfast festival at Queen's and Glasgow, European city of culture as part of overall promotion of the arts; whether he will investigate the possibility of sponsorship by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Co-operation between the Belfast festival at Queen's and Glasgow, European city of culture is a matter for the organisers of the festival which is already supported by public funds through the Arts Council of Northern Ireland. Equally, the question of sponsorship of any co-operative ventures is a matter for the respective organisers. I understand that contact between the organisers has in fact already been established.

Belfast Airport

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what European Community and Government grants have been provided for Belfast international airport in the last 10 years; and what are the projected airport passenger traffic figures for the next 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 27 November 1989]: In the 10 years to 31 March 1989, Belfast international airport received grants of £11·98 million and £11·76 million from the Government and the European Community respectively. Northern Ireland Airports Ltd. projects airport passenger traffic figures for the next 10 years as follows:

	Million
1989-90	2·2
1990-91	2·4
1991-92	2·7
1992-93	2·8
1993-94	2·9
1994-95	3·0
1995-96	3·1
1996-97	3·2
1997-98	3·3
1998-99	3·4
1999-2000	3·5

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made with negotiations with the Soviet Union over the elimination of chemical weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: Negotiations are taking place at the Geneva conference on disarmament, to which the Soviet Union is a party, for a comprehensive, global ban on chemical weapons. Useful progress has been made in the talks, which are due to resume on 28 November.

Separately, the United States and the Soviet Union have agreed on a bilateral data exchange and series of visits. In addition, the United States has proposed a substantial mutual destruction of chemical weapon stockpiles.

Poland

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of relations between the EEC and Poland.

Mr. Maude: Relations are excellent based on a trade, economic and commercial co-operation agreement signed in September 1989. The Community's aim is to support and encourage economic liberalisation and political reform; it has agreed in principle a substantial package of assistance for Poland which includes free food, trade concessions, European investment bank lending, and aid for agriculture reform, environment and training. The EC Commission is also co-ordinating broader western assistance to Poland.

Amnesty International

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet British representatives of Amnesty International to discuss the Indian Government's refusal to grant entry visas to representatives of Amnesty in January, March and December 1985, November 1986, November 1987 and March 1989.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are always ready to consider requests from Amnesty for meetings, which take place regularly. On the substance of the issue of visas, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office gave him on 8 November.

North Atlantic Treaty Organisation

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications of recent events in the German Democratic Republic for the future of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Waldegrave: NATO remains the cornerstone of our defence and has a vital role in providing the framework of stability within which further progress towards democracy and freedom in the German Democratic Republic can be made.

Refuseniks

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian authorities about the case of Vladimir and Irina Tsifkin of Leningrad and their daughter.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have not previously raised this particular case with the Soviet authorities but we will be happy to do so if my hon. Friend will provide the necessary details.

British Embassies

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current number of naval and air attachés, defence and military attachés and attachés (defence) posted to British embassies.

Mr. Waldegrave: At present the total global deployment of service attachés and advisers at British embassies and high commissions overseas is 132. The current numbers of naval and air attachés, defence and military attachés and attachés (defence) posted to British embassies are eight, 16 and two respectively.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the current tours of duty of the naval and air attaché, the defence and military attaché and the attaché (defence) presently attached to the British embassy in Thailand began; and when they are due to end.

Mr. Sainsbury: The current naval and air attaché in the British embassy in Bangkok began his tour in November 1989; the defence and military attaché arrived in October 1988, and the attaché (defence) arrived in December 1988. They will leave Bangkok on the completion of their postings; it is not our practice to release details of staff movements in advance.

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will reconsider his decision forcibly to repatriate Vietnamese boat people from Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: There is unanimous international agreement that those who are not refugees should return to Vietnam. It is universal practice for non-refugees to be repatriated to their country of origin. Involuntary repatriation to Vietnam will go ahead only if there are assurances from the Vietnamese Government that they will not be persecuted and there is independent monitoring of their condition.

Tibet

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the present situation in Tibet.

Mr. Maude: Martial law remains in force in Lhasa, but there have been no recent reports of widespread unrest.

Bilateral Aid

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what levels and types of technical assistance and bilateral aid are given to (a) Costa Rica, (b) Panama, (c) Nicaragua, (d) Guatemala, (e) El Salvador, (f) Belize and (g) Mexico, according to the latest available figures; and when was the last time a project for such aid or assistance was approved for Nicaragua.

Mr. Sainsbury: The table shows the kinds and amounts of bilateral aid provided in 1988:

£'000

	Technical co-operation	Financial aid	Relief aid	Commonwealth Development Corporation	Aid and trade provisional
Costa Rica	713	—	20	817	—
Panama	134	—	—	—	854
Nicaragua	—	—	180	—	—
Guatemala	4	—	—	—	—
El Salvador	14	—	140	—	—
Belize	1,242	1,547	—	340	47
Mexico	1,249	—	—	—	—

The last project for Nicaragua was approved in 1973 and concluded in 1979. The last expenditure on non-projectised aid—training awards and wholly financed personnel—was in 1986.

El Salvador

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to increase direct humanitarian aid to El Salvador during the present emergency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development gave on 24 November to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn). Since then, Britain's share of emergency aid provided so far by the European Community has risen to £200,000.

Nicaragua

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to resume direct aid to Nicaragua following the conduct of free and fair national elections; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if United Kingdom development aid will be made available to meet the needs of the Nicaraguan people after the February 1990 elections are held, regardless of which party or parties form the next Government.

Mr. Sainsbury: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister told President Ortega in May, we will judge Nicaragua's performance on the facts. As regards aid, we have to set priorities and we focus mainly on Commonwealth countries, with which we have close ties, and on the poorest countries. We do, of course, take into account changes in circumstances.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria Nicaragua is required to meet before Her Majesty's Government will provide bilateral development aid to meet the needs of the Nicaraguan people.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our aid priorities concentrate on the developing Commonwealth countries and on the poorest countries. We recognise, nevertheless, the case for helping other developing countries also. The most recent figures published by the World Bank indicate that there are 60 countries with per capita incomes lower than Nicaragua's. Nevertheless, we are contributing, through the European Community aid programme, to Nicaragua. Our share of EC commitments in 1988 totalled £3·3 million. We also provided bilateral emergency aid of over £260,000 in 1988 to assist following Hurricane Joan. In addition, since 1985-86, we have supported from our aid programme 42 projects in Nicaragua jointly funded with Oxfam, CAFOD and Christian Aid at a total cost to the aid programme of £247,000.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings Violeta Chamoro had with Ministers or officials during her visit to the United Kingdom; and under what terms United Kingdom development aid was offered to Nicaragua.

Mr. Sainsbury: Senora Chamoro was received by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and by officials of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The subject of bilateral development aid was not raised from either side.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any progress has been made in increasing scheduled air services to and from Gibraltar.

Mr. Maude: No. Progress is unlikely until the Gibraltar Government take steps to implement the 1987 airport agreement.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the gardens adjoining the governor's residence, Gibraltar, are now being tended.

Mr. Maude: The Gibraltar Government assumed responsibility for the maintenance of the gardens from 1 April 1989.

Southern Africa

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is the amount of bilateral debt owed by each member of the Southern African development co-ordination conference; to which countries, including the United Kingdom, the debt is owed; and what provision for debt relief for Southern African development co-ordination conference countries has been agreed;

(2) what is the amount of multilateral debt owed by each member of Southern African development co-ordination conference; to which institutions the debt is owed; and what provisions for debt relief for Southern African development co-ordination conference countries have been agreed;

(3) what is the total debt for each member of the Southern African development co-ordination conference.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following table sets out the amounts of bilateral, multilateral and total external debt owed by each member of the southern African development co-ordination conference at end December 1988 (the latest figures available). The table shows bilateral debt owed to all OECD countries. Details of the individual claims of bilateral creditors other than the United Kingdom are not available.

The United Kingdom has outstanding aid loans to Swaziland and Zambia only, of £10·9 million and £56 million respectively.

The details of the United Kingdom's trade credit claim to individual countries are matters of commercial confidence, but the combined total for all SADCC countries is £493,095,000.

One SADCC country (Tanzania) has already obtained concessional rescheduling of its official debts in the Paris Club on "Toronto Terms".

Malawi and Tanzania are also benefiting from a World Bank initiative to offer supplementary concessional IDA credits to compensate borrowers whose per capita income is now below the IDA-only threshold, but who are still repaying old IBRD non-concessional loans, for part of the interest payments due.

The United Kingdom has cancelled its old aid loans to all SADCC countries except for Swaziland (whose GNP per capita is too high for it to be eligible for this relief) and Zambia. The possibility of comparable treatment for Zambia will be kept under review.

$ million

Country	Official bilateral debt to OECD countries	Multilateral debt			Total external debt
		IMF	World bank	African development bank
Angola	1,506	—	—	135·15	2,121
Botswana	513	—	161	316·49	707
Lesotho	65	4	096	200·15	298
Malawi	419	95	643	—	1,421
Mozambique	1,764	42	138	271·04	2,476
Swaziland	133	—	059	119·52	310
Tanzania	3,346	133	199	78·09	5,291
Zambia	3,496	908	703	427·92	6,232
Zimbabwe	1,317	70	374	209·06	2,617

Source: OECD.

OECD member countries are: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

WALES

A487 (Porthmadog Bypass)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether officials in the highways section of his Department, or of the Gwynedd county council, have drawn up alternative outline routes for a bypass for Porthmadog for the A487; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: As indicated in "Roads in Wales —Progress and Plans for the 1990s", the A487 between Maentwrog and Caernarfon is the subject of a study. The consultant's report on the Porthmadog section will identify possible routes for a bypass.

Housing Associations

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what extra resources he proposes to give to Welsh housing associations.

Mr. Grist: We shall be making an announcement on this shortly.

Schools

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will outline the role of his Department following proposals by a local authority to close a primary school in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The statutory process to be followed by local authorities proposing a school closure is set out in section 12 of the Education Act 1980. Welsh Office circular 20/88, a copy of which is in the Library, stresses the importance of consultation with appropriate bodies well before the publication of a statutory notice. Once a section 12 notice has been published there is a period of two months to allow for objections. If there are statutory objections, that is, by any 10 or more local government electors for the area, the closure proposal is referred to my right hon. Friend for determination.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department has identified those primary schools in Wales that do not satisfy the physical requirements necessary for their pupils and teachers to cope with the demands of the national curriculum.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. The suitability of school premises for delivery of the national curriculum is the responsibility of local education authorities.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information his Department holds on the percentage of secondary school children in Wales who take part in linking activities with companies.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A survey of links between schools and industry will be undertaken early in the new year to cover the academic year 1989-90. The technical and vocational education initiative now available throughout the Principality places importance on work experience and shadowing for pupils. The enterprise and education initiative aims to provide two or more weeks of work experience for every young person in the final year of schooling. As part of my right hon. Friend's programme for the valleys, we are discussing with the five local education authorities concerned ways of further improving links between valley schools and industry. Our objective is to ensure that young people have the opportunity to learn about the wide range of career choices available and that business has a work force better prepared and equipped to meet its needs. As a result of these and the many other link activities, the majority of pupils in their final year of schooling are involved with business.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the pupil number capacity of the following primary schools in the county of West Glamorgan (i) Crwys, (ii) Dyfnant, (iii) Penclawdd, (iv) Llanforlais, (v) Garnswllt, (vi) Dunvant and (vii) Bishopston.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information on the capacity of primary schools is not collected centrally. However, the total number of full-time and part-time pupils on roll in January 1989 is shown in the table:

	Number on roll
Crwys	194
Dyfnant	177
Penclawdd	104
Llanforlais	109
Garnswllt	28
Dunvant Infants	266
Dunvant Junior	308
Bishopston	298

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of Betios county primary school in the county of Dyfed.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The total number of full-time and part-time pupils on roll in January 1989 at Betws county primary school was 105.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has taken to ensure children with special educational needs receive a broad and balanced curriculum appropriate to their ability under the national curriculum.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Education Reform Act 1988 requires maintained schools to provide a balanced and broadly based curriculum for all pupils. Pupils with special educational needs are required to follow the national curriculum as far as practicable. The attainment targets so far defined enable pupils of different abilities to demonstrate progress in relation to the same curriculum. The Curriculum Council for Wales is preparing guidance on the national curriculum and pupils with special educational needs.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans to allocate resources to assist the county of West Glamorgan to build a new school at (a) Penyrheol, Gorseinon, (b) Llangyfelach, Swansea and (c) Three Crosses, Swansea.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is for West Glamorgan county council to determine its own priorities for spending the capital resources available to it.

Community Care

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which organisations he will be consulting regarding the issue of quality assurance in community care provision; and when he will announce the results of his deliberations.

Mr. Grist: The Government's approach to quality assurance in the provision of community care services in Wales is set out in paragraphs 11.42 to 11.44 inclusive, of the White Paper "Caring for People: Community Care in the Next Decade and Beyond" (Cm 849).

A comprehensive range of interested bodies, including representatives of the independent sector and of users of services are being consulted about a proposed strategy for quality assurance throughout the National Health Service in Wales, and also on all aspects of the independent review of community care services in the light of the recently published report of the all-Wales advisory panel on services for people with mental handicaps. Consultation on the former has ended and we intend to issue the strategy for the NHS before the end of the year. Consultation on the all-Wales panel's report runs until 16 February, and we will announce our conclusions as soon as possible thereafter.

M4

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by how long expenditure on road schemes in north Wales has delayed the start of the missing gap on the M4 motorway between Baglan and Lonlas.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Priorities for road improvement schemes are set out in successive editions of "Roads in Wales". Start dates for individual schemes are affected by a range of factors and it is not possible to say how they might have progressed given different priorities.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many journeys he has made in his official capacity along the missing link on the M4 motorway between Baglan and Lonlas since his appointment; what were the dates and times of those journeys; and what was the length of any delays he experienced.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have travelled regularly along this stretch of road since my appointment as Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each of the last 10 years the number of serious and fatal accidents on the missing link of the M4 motorway between Baglan and Lonlas.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Fatal and serious accidents on the A48 between Baglan and Lonlas, including roundabouts, junctions and slip roads, are shown in the table:

	Accidents
Year	Fatal	Serious
1979	0	1
1980	1	6
1981	0	5
1982	1	6
1983	0	5
1984	0	4
1985	1	10
1986	0	6
1987	1	5
1988	1	6

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department has financed any studies which have examined the time delays for road traffic using the M4 motorway between Baglan and Lonlas.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The cost benefit analysis carried out for the scheme includes an assessment of delays to traffic using the existing road system.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on inward investment projects that have not been proceeded with because of the road transport bottleneck on the missing link of the M4 motorway between Baglan and Lonlas.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I am unaware of any projects that have not been proceeded with because of the missing link.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to allocate extra resources to speed up the start of the missing link on the M4 motorway.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Work is expected to start in the current financial year as announced in the Welsh Office commentary on the 1988 public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the problems associated with the missing link on the M4 motorway between Baglan and Lonlas.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about completion of the motorway between Baglan and Lonlas. Tenders for the first stage, between Earlswood and Lonlas, are due back shortly and it is intended that construction will begin in the spring. The whole scheme is expected to be completed by mid 1994.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans to allocate resources to assist the West Glamorgan health authority and West Glamorgan county council to improve the road access to Morriston hospital from the Llangyfelach junction of the M4 motorway.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Resources for expenditure on local authority capital projects are distributed on an annual basis to county and district councils. Allocation of funding for individual schemes, including local road improvements, is a matter for them.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether his department has financed any studies to examine the economic consequences of the road transport bottleneck on the missing link of the M4 motorway between Baglan and Lonlas.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The cost benefit analysis carried out for the improvement scheme is an economic assessment of its benefits to the road user.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people will be exempt from paying the poll tax in Wales, separately distinguishing the figures by category.

Mr. Peter Walker: This information is not yet available.

Schools

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the formula his Department uses for the calculation of the pupil number capacity of primary schools in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The method of assessing the capacity of existing primary schools was set out in an appendix to Welsh Office Circular 20/88 "Educational Quality in Wales: The Response to Falling School Rolls", copies of which were placed in the Library in June 1988.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report those local authorities in Wales that are not involved with the school curriculum industry partnership strategy.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I understand that those local authorities in Wales that are not involved in the partnership are Gwynedd, Clwyd, Dyfed and West Glamorgan.

Rechem

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department has now completed the analysis of PCB incidents in the area surrounding the Rechem chemical incinerator.

Mr. Grist: The Department has received the results of the analyses of a number of samples of materials from the area surrounding the incinerator. The landowners and the local environmental health authority have been informed of the results, and I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Teachers

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of teachers in Wales were provided with a work experience placement in industry of not less than two weeks during the academic year 1988-89.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is not available in the form requested. However, I understand that so far this calendar year there have been 286 teacher placements in business with a further 19 programmed for this year. It is a prime aim of the Government's enterprise and education initiative that every year 10 per cent. of teachers should have the opportunity to gain personal experience in business.

CFCs

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which local authorities in Wales are making arrangements for the recycling of CFC gases from freezers and refrigerators before being landfilled.

Mr. Grist: Two local authorities are known to the Department to make such arrangements—Preseli Pembrokeshire and Montgomery.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency to discuss the north Pembroke economy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I frequently discuss matters affecting all parts of the Welsh economy with the chairman of the WDA.

British Coal

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will indicate on a county-by-county basis the land area in Wales acquired by British Coal in each of the last five years, separately distinguishing the land (a) bought and (b) leased;

(2) if he will indicate on a county-by-county basis the land area in Wales (i) owned and (ii) leased by British Coal.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the sites in Wales where British Coal is currently engaged in drilling exploratory boreholes as part of its programme to assess the viability of opencast coal mining.

Mr. Peter Walker: British Coal Opencast Executive is currently drilling exploratory boreholes at the following three sites in Wales:—

i. Land south of Glynneath, West Glamorgan
ii. Helid Colliery (near Rhymney), Mid Glamorgan
iii. East Merthyr Reclamation Scheme, Mid Glamorgan

Aberystwyth Harbour

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy towards the development of Aberystwyth harbour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Ceredigion district council has submitted a scheme in respect of the development of Aberystwyth harbour as a project of regional or national importance. My decision on this scheme will be announced shortly.

EMPLOYMENT

Small Firms Service

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many requests for advice have been received by the small firms service in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In 1988-89 the small firms service in England handled 281,459 inquiries and provided 43,029 counselling sessions.

"Unofficial Action and the Law"

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Trades Union Congress to discuss his Green Paper, "Unofficial Action and the Law".

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend regularly meets representatives of the Trades Union Congress to discuss a wide range of employment issues. He has no plans to meet the chairman of the TUC to discuss the Green Paper.

Unemployment Benefit (Childbirth)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women have been deprived of unemployment benefit due to a refusal to return to a former employer after childbirth at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not available and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Warrington-Runcorn NTDC

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he proposes to give any extra incentives to increase employment in Cheshire in the light of the demise of the Warrington-Runcorn new town development corporation.

Mr. Eggar: The Warrington and Runcorn development corporation was wound up by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment because he was satisfied that it had substantially completed the purposes for which it was established.

The Widnes and Runcorn travel-to-work area has assisted area status. This Department operates a wide range of employment, enterprise and training measures, which are available in Cheshire as well as elsewhere. I do not believe that the winding up of the corporation is a reason to introduce further measures to create employment opportunities in this area. In the year to October 1989, unemployment in the county of Cheshire fell by 8,656 (26·6 per cent.) and the rate of unemployment is currently 5·3 per cent. of the total work force.

Single European Market

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs will be lost in the initial phase of the single European market; and which sectors will be most affected.

Mr. Eggar: Neither the Department of Employment nor the Department of Trade and Industry has produced any forecasts of the employment effects of 1992. However, the Cecchini report, published last year by the European Commission, contains estimates of the Communitywide effects of the completion of the single market. The Cecchini report estimates that 525,000 jobs will be lost over the Community as a whole in the first year after completion. However, in the second year employment is forecast to grow strongly, reducing the net loss of jobs to only 35,000. In the medium term—about six years—completion of the single market is expected to result in a net gain of about 1·8 million jobs. However, the report does not describe the employment effects of 1992 on individual industries. All these estimates are subject to a large degree of uncertainty. The actual employment effects in the United Kingdom depend crucially on the reactions of British industry to the new opportunities offered by the single market.

Health and Safety

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has recently received on health and safety at work.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has not received any specific representations recently on this wide-ranging subject.

Availability for Work

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research has been commissioned to study the effect on claimants of the new availability for work tests.

Mr. Eggar: Unemployed claimants have always had to be available for work. Under the Social Security Act 1989 they also have to seek employment actively in each week for which they claim. We shall be monitoring the effects of this change. At this stage no research has been commissioned.

Equal Pay

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy on (a) maintaining and (b) strengthening the laws relating to equal pay for work of equal value.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government fully support and intend to uphold the principle of equal pay including the principle of equal pay for work of equal value.

We monitor closely the working of the Equal Pay Act to ensure that it is operating fairly and effectively, and in accordance with European Community law. In addition, the Equal Opportunities Commission has a statutory duty to review the legislation. The commission is currently carrying out a review and any proposals for change which may emerge from this will be carefully considered, as will proposals received at any time from other interested parties.

Domestic Service (Foreign Workers)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available to non-British nationals arriving in the United Kingdom to work in domestic service; and if his Department will issue a pamphlet outlining the rights and protection available to foreign workers.

Mr. Eggar: Foreign workers coming to work as employees in the United Kingdom enjoy the same employment rights and protection as British workers. My Department publishes a comprehensive range of booklets covering these rights and they are available from jobcentres, unemployment benefit offices and citizen advice bureaux.

Aquaculture

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will make it his policy to include aquaculture in the Government loans guarantee scheme until a new credit scheme to include agriculture and horticulture can be established to replace the scheme ended by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in March;

(2) when he expects to announce a replacement for the agriculture credit schemes which ended in March; and whether he will seek to include aquaculture in the Government loans guarantee scheme in the meantime.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is actively considering the feasibility of including agriculture and horticulture in the loan guarantee scheme and I expect to announce a decision shortly.

Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by region and for Great Britain as a whole, how many employment training trainees are in continuation training with employers for each month since August; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Information about the number of people in employment training is not available broken down into continuation training and other categories of trainees. Continuation training is a valuable feature of employment training because it enables trainees to take up offers of jobs and still complete their training.

Tourism

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any progress to report on the implementation of his review of tourism policy.

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the review of tourism.

Mr. Fowler: I have now approved detailed proposals for implementing the results of the review on tourism that I announced on 6 July. The proposals have also been approved by the English tourist board (ETB) and the British Tourist Authority (BTA). The ETB and BTA will streamline their central operations releasing an additional £4 million to be spent directly by the regional tourist boards in England, under a form of contract to the ETB, and the the BTA's offices overseas.

The changes will take effect from 1 April 1990. Both ETB and BTA in conjunction with my Department will be considering further steps to involve industry and regional tourist boards more closely in their work; to ensure maximum flexibility of response to market conditions; further to increase efficiency; and to focus Government funding more clearly and in a way which is consistent with general policy.

I would wish to emphasise the importance of tourism to this country. The tourism industry makes a major contribution to the United Kingdom economy. Its total annual turnover is about £19 billion. About 1·5 million people are employed in the industry, and this number is growing rapidly. 1988 was a record year for overseas visitors to the United Kingdom, with nearly 16 million visits, and the performance in 1989 so far is even better.

These new arrangements will provide positive opportunities for the ETB, the BTA and the regional tourist boards to increase the effectiveness of their work, in partnership with the private sector. The Government remain committed to the success and growth of the tourism industry.

Film, Record and Publishing Industries

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current level of employment in (a) the film industry, (b) the record industry and (c) the publishing industry.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 27 November 1989]: The available information, taken from the 1987 census of employment, and relating to industry classifications particularly associated with filming, recording and publishing, is as follows:

Employees in employment in the United Kingdom, September 1987, by industry groups of the Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) 1980

	Groups of SIC 1980	Numbers (thousands)
971	Film Production, Distribution and Exhibition	29·8
974	Radio and Television, Services, Theatres, etc.	77·1
475	Printing and Publishing	341·4

The full results of the 1987 census of employment for the United Kingdom were published in the October 1989 issue of the "Employment Gazette" (pp 540-558) a copy of which is in the Library. A copy of the standard industrial classification (SIC) (detailing the industries which make up groups of the SIC) can also be found in the Library.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many men were in employment in each standard planning region of the United Kingdom in June 1979 and the latest date for which figures are available;

(2) how many women were in full-time and part-time employment on the latest date for which figures are available in each standard planning region of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 27 November 1989]: The information is as follows:

Civilian workforce in employment in regions of the United Kingdom—Unadjusted

Thousands

	Males	Females	of which		Total
			Full-time	Part-time
June 1979
South East	4,839	3,285	2,006	1,279	8,124
East Anglia	481	300	178	122	781
South West	1,032	712	417	295	1,744
West Midlands	1,462	920	550	370	2,382
East Midlands	1,013	658	393	265	1,671
Yorks and Humberside	1,302	842	480	362	2,145
North West	1,700	1,190	719	471	2,890
North	802	522	314	208	1,325
Wales	716	441	276	165	1,157
Scotland	1,333	929	597	332	2,262
Northern Ireland	359	239	n/a	n/a	598
June 1989
South East	4,972	3,899	2,490	1,409	8,871
East Anglia	520	398	232	166	918
South West	1,137	915	528	386	2,051
West Midlands	1,334	1,003	590	412	2,337
East Midlands	1,016	778	442	336	1,794
Yorks and Humberside	1,172	928	499	429	2,100
North West	1,540	1,233	718	515	2,773
North	706	548	302	246	1,255
Wales	649	502	294	208	1,151
Scotland	1,230	976	590	386	2,206
Northern Ireland	327	257	n/a	n/a	584

n/a = Breakdown not available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

War Widows (Pensions)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated number of widows of service men killed in action currently in receipt of war widows' pensions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: War widows' pensions are paid to all where the death of the husband was due to service in the armed forces. No distinction is made between deaths in action or from other causes. The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Fraud Investigation

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many officers were involved in social security fraud investigation work at the latest date for which figures are available; what the total estimated cost in respect of such investigation amounts to, and what the total actual savings amounted to as a result of fraud investigation work.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Precise figures are not available, but it is possible to estimate the number of full-time equivalent posts on the basis of records of staff time expended by this Department on social security benefit fraud-related work. The number of full-time equivalent posts is 3,335. Estimated salary costs are now some £43 million in a full year. There are in addition some costs for travel and subsistence. The estimated savings achieved as a result of the Department's anti-fraud efforts in 1988-89 totalled £262 million.

Disabled People

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the change in the level of spending on the disabled over the past 10 years.

Mr. Scott: Expenditure on benefits for long-term sick and disabled people has increased, in cash terms, from £1·8 billion in 1978-79 to £8·3 billion in 1989-90. In real terms, this is an increase of £4 billion in 1989-90 prices.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to introduce a specific benefit to cover the additional day-to-day costs incurred by people with disabilities.

Mr. Scott: There are already a number of social security benefits which provide help with the additional day-to-day costs incurred by people with disabilities. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced on 25 October a range of significant measures to extend the availability of such help. We shall announce within the next few months further proposals to improve the balance and structure of disability benefits.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of the form used by his Department's local offices to communicate names and addresses of certain claimants to the relevant local authority community charge registration officer.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have placed a copy of form NHB10(CC) in the Library together with a copy of the instructions for the completion of the form that have been issued to DSS local offices.

Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how may low-paid workers he estimates would be better off if they were unemployed and claiming unemployment benefit; how many of these are full-time or part-time workers; and how these figures have changed over the last 10 years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is estimated that, out of approximately 14 million working heads of tax units, only about 15,000 who currently work full time would be better off out of work. Figures are not availble to show the number of part-time workers who would be better off unemployed or to show the change over the last 10 years.

Income Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the number of (a) elderly people, (b) sick and disabled people, (c) unemployed people, (d) one-parent families, (e) others and (f) total in receipt of income support, giving the date to which his estimates apply.

Mr. Scott: The latest available information, which relates to May 1989, is as follows:

	Number of income support claimants (thousands)
Elderly people[1]	1,557
Sick and disabled people[2]	291
Unemployed people	1,254
One-parent families	741
Others	321
Total in receipt of income support	4,164

[1] Aged 60 or over.
[2] In receipt of a disability premium.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether those under 18 years of age who are entitled to income support and required to be available for work are also required to meet the full demands of the actively seeking work test; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Irrespective of age, anyone claiming income support because of unemployment, who is required to be available for work, has also to meet the "actively seeking employment" test.

Social Fund

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the percentage refusal rates in each of the last two years for social fund (a) grants and (b) budgeting loans in each local authority area.

Mr. Scott: Details of the number of applications processed and awards made for the period 11 April 1988 to 31 October 1989 listed by local office areas are available in the Library. The information that the hon. Member seeks may be derived from that source. Statistical information about the social fund is not collected by local authority area.

Community Care

Mr. Brian Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, by social security office in Scotland, the number of applications for (a) community care grants and (b) emergency loans at each office since April 1989 and the number in each category which have been approved.

Mr. Scott: Details of the number of applications processed and awards made for community care grants, budget loans and crisis loans listed by region and local office are available in the Library.

Pensioners

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will bring forward changes to the rules by which pensioners cannot obtain arrears of payments of more than 12 months even though they can show good cause why payment orders had not been cashed.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Regulation 7 of the Social Security (Medical Evidence, Claims and Payments) Amendment Regulations 1989, which came into force on 9 October 1989, introduced a relaxation of the absolute 12-month time limit for the encashment of an instrument of payment of benefit. The amendment provides that the 12-month period can be extended by the independent statutory authorities where a continuous period of good cause is established for the non-encashment of the instrument of payment.

Deserted Women (Financial Support)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of women with children where partners have left them are receiving financial support from their former partners; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The only information that the Department collects about maintenance relates to lone parent families receiving income support. Ninety-five per cent. of these families are headed by lone mothers. The most recent figures available are for May 1988 and show that maintenance was paid for 23 per cent. of these families. The Government are naturally concerned that absent parents should meet their responsibilities for their children wherever they can afford to do so, and we are considering how to make our procedures as effective as possible.

Source: Income Support Annual Statistical Enquiry May 1988.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how he intends to take account of the views of disability organisations in developing his proposals for changing social security provision for disabled people;

(2) who will be invited to give evidence to assist him in reviewing social security benefits for disabled people.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) and the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 23 October at columns 341-42.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will be establishing a working party to formulate proposals for the review of disability benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 13 November at columns 51-52.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish his proposals for social security benefits for disabled people as a Green Paper.

Mr. Scott: We will make a statement within the next few months announcing proposals to improve the balance and structure of benefits for disabled people. It is too early to say what form that statement will take.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of claimants in receipt of income support transitional protection who are getting child disability premium at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Based on the May 1988 annual statistical inquiry, an estimated 2,000 claimants getting the disabled child premium were in receipt of transitional protection immediately after the April 1989 annual benefit uprating.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of claimants in receipt of income support transitional protection who are getting pensioner premium or higher pensioner premium at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Based on the May 1988 annual statistical inquiry, an estimated 250,000 claimants getting the pensioner premium or the higher pensioner premium were in receipt of transitional protection immediately after the April 1989 annual benefit uprating.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of claimants in receipt of income support transitional protection who are getting disability and/or severe disability premium at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Based on the May 1988 annual statistical inquiry, an estimated 25,000 claimants getting the disability premium, or the disability premium and the severe disability premium were in receipt of transitional protection immediately after the April 1989 annual benefit uprating.

Grants and Loans

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much for all social security offices individually in London north and London south for 1988-89, the budget was for (a) community care grants, and how much of it was paid out to claimants, (b) crisis loans, and how much of it was paid out to claimants, (c) budgeting loans, and how much of it was paid out to claimants and (d) for each of the three categories above, how many applications were made, how many were granted and how many refused.

Mr. Scott: Details by region and local office of the number of applications processed and awards made for community care grants, budget loans and crisis loans for each month, together with details of the budget allocations for 1988-89 are available in the Library. Details of the number of such applications that were refused may be obtained from that information.

Welfare Milk Scheme

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans his Department has to review the operation of the welfare milk scheme.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

We have no plans to change the operation of the welfare milk token scheme as it affects beneficiaries. The Department is currently considering reimbursement prices for welfare milk tokens following negotiations with the liquid welfare milk suppliers.

HEALTH

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if foreign mothers presenting for abortion in Britain are required to give the details of medical contact in their country of origin;

(2) if he requires doctors to present documentation covering the medical details of abortion on foreign mothers undergoing abortion in Britain for presentation to their doctor on return to their country of origin.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This kind of information is already obtained and given as part of good medical practice.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he collects any figures concerning the prevalence of abortion-induced sterility in women following abortions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the information required of foreign mothers presenting for abortion prior to the abortion being performed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information required is that normally collected from a patient seeking medical treatment.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement detailing the evidence and reasons on which he based his Department's decision to require the availability of resuscitation equipment at abortions of unborn babies of 20 weeks' gestation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The decision was reached at a time when measurement of foetal size by ultra-sound was less well developed and not so widely available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has conducted any studies into the psychological effects on medical staff of performing late abortions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the prevalence of the practice of severing the umbilical cord of an unborn baby several hours before conducting an abortion by dilation and evacuation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. Severing of the umbilical cord is carried out during the first stage of one of the techniques which may be used for performing abortions. The choice of method is entirely a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctor concerned.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the prevalence of the practice of anaesthetising unborn babies prior to dismemberment by dilation and evacuation in abortions after 18 weeks.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. The decision as to the anaesthetic technique to be employed in any particular case is a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctor responsible for the patient's care.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what standards he specifies for counselling for mothers undergoing late abortions; and what checks he conducts to ensure that such standards are maintained.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We require adequate counselling to be provided for all women seeking abortion. Checks on this are made in the course of the Department's inspection visits to approved places and registered pregnancy advice bureaux in the private sector.

Counterfeit Medicines

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether National Health Service patients who receive counterfeit medicines will be entitled to a refund of any prescription charges involved.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes. Should this situation arise and not be immediately corrected by the pharmacist it would be open to the family practitioner committee to recommend a refund as part of the complaints procedure.

Disability

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines his Department has issued for the purposes of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 which cover the right of mentally handicapped people to demand services.

Mr. Freeman: The issuing of guidelines relating to the implementation of the Local Government Act 1988 is for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. Severely mentally impaired people are exempt from liability to pay the personal community charge under the Act. Their right to local services is, however, no different from those who will be liable to pay the community charge, including those people with a less severe mental impairment.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population suffers from any form of handicap, physical or mental.

Mr. Freeman: The information that my hon. Friend requires is available in the reports "The prevalence of disability among adults" and "The prevalence of disability among children" which were produced at the request of the Department by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Grading

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the proposal to classify all nursing assistants to grades B and C in 1992 will involve payment of arrears of wages to those currently on grade A.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is no such proposal.

Tampons

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what study his Department has made concerning the risk to women's health arising from internal sanitary protection.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: For several years the staphylococcal reference laboratory of the public health laboratory service has gathered information about the occurrence of toxic shock syndrome, a condition which is associated, very rarely, with the use of internal sanitary protection.

Haemoglobinopathy Services

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to write to the hon. Member for Brent, South about the survey of haemoglobinopathy services.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that pressure of other work has delayed completion of the analysis of the results of this survey, but it remains our intention to review present provision for counselling and genetic diagnosis and screening—including that for sickle cell disease and thalassaemia—and consider the need for further central guidance. I hope that this work can commence early in the new year.

Health Advisory Service

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the composition of the members of the Health Advisory Service who monitored health services in Central

Nottinghamshire health authority in 1989, stating their qualifications and the basis on and by whom they were appointed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The appointment of members of NHS Health Advisory Service visiting teams is a matter for the director, Professor Philip Seager. My hon. Friend may wish to write to him for the information.

New Hospital, Kendal

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what he estimates will be the latest cost of constructing the new hospital in Kendal;

(2) when he expects the new hospital in Kendal to receive its first patients.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that development of the new Westmorland General hospital, Kendal is proceeding to time and cost and the latest estimate of the works cost of the project (excluding fees and equipment) is £15·6 million. The first patient use is expected to be in April 1991.

Hospital Site Sales

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by region the number of hospitals which have been considered for capital support against future site sale.

Mr. Freeman: Regional health authorities decide their own priorities for capital projects within overall limitations on their spending. Health authorities' plans for development of services in their area may involve the relocation of services from existing sites, with the eventual potential for sale of surplus sites, but it is not generally possible to link particular hospital developments with site sales. The Department does not provide capital support against specific future site sales.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instigate a national campaign against child abuse which is aimed specifically toward general education for citizens and all their children.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has long recognised the need to raise public awareness of child abuse. The Department has funded production of a training package by the Open University which was launched earlier this year. This aims to provide greater awareness and recognition skills to people who have had little or no knowledge of the subject, as well as professionals and voluntary workers. The Department also provides core funding for several child care organisations such as the NSPCC, Childline and the National Children's Bureau which, as part of their day-to-day activities, raise public awareness of child abuse.

Huntington's Chorea

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in each of the last 10 years have (a) consulted a counsellor, (b) taken the test, (c) had a positive result and (d) had a negative result for the genetic tests to discover if they are carrying the hereditary disease Huntington's Chorea, by area health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally, although we recognise the need to safeguard, by proper counselling, those at risk of developing or transmitting a hereditary disease such as Huntington's Chorea. Therefore, in the light of rapid advances in clinical genetics and the growth of interest in screening, we have initiated a review of the genetic services currently available in the NHS to see if central guidance on the scope and organisation of these services is required.

NHS Reform

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received from general practitioners regarding the new contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since the publication of "The 1990 Contract" on 3 August 1989, the Department has received over 800 letters on the subject, mostly from general practitioners. The regulations necessary to introduce the new contract were laid on 16 October and have been approved by Parliament. All GPs will shortly be receiving their new terms of service and the revised statement of their NHS fees and allowances. The new arrangements will come into operation from 1 April 1990.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement regarding budgeting levels for regional health authorities and family practitioner committees in relation to the Government White Paper.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have announced that, following this year's public expenditure survey, an additional £257 million will be made available in the NHS as a whole in England in 1990-91 for initiatives arising from the White Paper "Working for Patients". This brings the total available for regional health authorities and family practitioner committees in England next year for implementing the White Paper to £300 million. This is part of the extra £2·6 billion resources that the NHS in the United Kingdom will have available next year, £2·2 billion of which will be for England.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent he intends that general practitioners who are not budget holders will be permitted to choose the hospital to which they send their patients for (a) non-emergency treatment on an inpatient basis and (b) maternity care, including delivery of the baby; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: For all services, including non-emergency and maternity services, GPs should usually be able to choose the hospital that they consider most appropriate, taking account of their patients' needs and wishes. GPs who are not fund-holders will normally refer patients to hospitals with which the district health authority (DHA) has placed contracts. In placing those contracts the DHA will be expected to secure the referral patterns which local GPs wish to see put in place, unless there are compelling reasons for not doing so. In addition, the DHA will maintain a financial reserve to cover those occasions when GPs need to refer patients to hospitals with which their DHA has not contracted.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements will be made in relation to the assessment of the unit costs of small local community hospitals in the event of budget-holding general practitioners seeking to place their patients in larger hospitals with lower unit costs; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We will be issuing guidance next year on the costing of hospital services in respect of the operation of general practice fund holding.

British Medical Association

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met British Medical Association officials; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) on 3 November 1989 at column 385.

Maternity Statistics

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average length of time spent by mothers who have given birth to their first babies in district general hospitals between the birth and their discharge; what is the average lying-in period in maternity units in small local community hospitals; and what advice he has given to regional health authorities about the provision of lying-in time, especially for those mothers having their first babies.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not held centrally on length of stay in maternity units which distinguishes between district general hospitals and smaller local hospitals, nor are we able to identify first babies. In 1985, the last year for which data are available, the average length of stay post-delivery for all births was 4·1 days.

It is for health authorities to determine their own policies on post-natal care including the timing of hospital discharge which, in addition to a clinical assessment of the health of mothers and their babies, takes into account the family's social and economic circumstances, the location of the maternity unit in relation to the centres of population and the scope of the community health services.

Child Protection Register

Mr Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health at what age local authorities remove children from the child protection register; and if he will bring forward legislation to ensure that all children can be kept on such registers until the age of 18 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authorities will normally remove children from the child protection register when it is decided in a case conference that formal inter-agency working is no longer necessary to protect the child. The age of the child may be one consideration in such a decision. Provided the criteria for continuing registration are met, there is nothing to prevent a young person remaining on the child protection register until the age of 18 years. The "Survey of Children and Young Persons on Child Protection Registers Year Ending 31 March 1988", copies of which are available in the Library, shows that there were an estimated 1,700 young persons aged 16 and over on child protection registers in England at 31 March 1988.

Residential Homes

Mr Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authorities in England and Wales currently insist that owners of small homes for residential care inform them of their presence; how many local authorities have a register for such information; if he will make it compulsory for all residential home owners serving the vulnerable in society to inform their respective local authorities; and if he will make it compulsory for all local authorities to keep a register of these homes.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward legislation making it compulsory for local authorities to assess all intending providers of residential care and, if approved, place them on a register.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under part 1 of the Registered Homes Act 1984 the owners of private and voluntary residential care homes catering for four or more residents are required to register with the local social services authority. There are no plans at present to extend this requirement to cover homes with fewer than four places. Information on any records held by local authorities of such homes is not held centrally.

Sexual Abuse

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce safeguards to protect individual disabled people over the age of 17 years, who live at home with a family member convicted of a sexual abuse offence who is likely to re-offend.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At present, there is a specific statutory provision reflecting the needs of people with a severe mental handicap who are the subject of sexual abuse. Under the Sexual Offences Act 1957 is is an offence for a man to have sexual intercourse with a woman whom he knows or suspects to be mentally handicapped. Under the Sexual Offences Act 1967 homosexual acts with a man whom is known to be suffering severe abnormality within the meaning of the Mental Health Act 1959 are also unlawful unless the offender can prove he was not aware of the fact. We have no plans for further additional statutory provisions.

Carers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce training requirements for those establishing themselves as carers of residential placements.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Training is available from a variety of sources. We have asked local authorities, in using the training support grant for the elderly, to have regard to the training needs of independent agencies. As part of the follow-up by the Department to the Wagner report on residential care, the National Institute for Social Work has been commissioned to undertake a programme to promote the training of staff in homes of all types.

The Registered Homes Act 1984 requires people running residential care homes to be fit persons and the Residential Care Homes Regulations 1984 require home owners to employ suitably qualified and competent staff. Guidance on the qualifications and experience the person running the home should normally have is contained in "Home Life", a code of practice for residential care.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what legal sanctions are enforced if cases of malpractice among residential carers are found; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authorities have powers under the Registered Homes Act 1984 to cancel an existing registration where the person registered or any other person concerned with the running of a residential care home is found to be unfit to do so. They may also cancel a registration where the person registered fails to provide adequate services or facilities in the home or otherwise fails to comply with the provisions of the Act or regulations made under it. Where a criminal offence is alleged to have been committed, action is a matter for the police.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a statement on the role and extent of services which he intends to be delivered in local community hospitals; and how he intends these services to be made available to non-budget holding partnerships of general practitioners.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under the proposals in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill, district health authorities (and those GPs with practice budgets) will take into account the services offered by community hospitals when they place contracts to ensure the provision of a comprehensive range of services for their patients. Where DHAs have placed contracts with community hospitals the services offered will be available as now to those general practitioners who do not hold a practice budget.

Young Disabled People

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultants are employed by each Mersey health authority specifically to meet the needs of younger disabled people.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We do not hold this information centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Mersey regional health authority, specifying which age group he has in mind.

St. Helens and Knowsley Health Authority

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on capital investment funding for St. Helens and Knowsley health authority in relation to capital investment funding in other health authorities in the Mersey region since 1974.

Mr. Freeman: We do not hold this information centrally. It is for regional health authorities to decide how they allocate funding, both capital and revenue, among the districts. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Mersey regional health authority.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on trends in patient demand in the St. Helens and Knowsley health authority area.

Mr. Freeman: Information in the form requested is not available. However, recent trends in the number of patients treated and in inpatient waiting lists are shown in the following tables:

Patients treated in National Health Service hospitals
St. Helens and Knowsley district health authority

	1982	1986	1987-88	[1] 1988-89
In-patient cases treated	32,965	34,045	35,140	35,346
Day cases	6,271	8,034	7,875	9,549
New out-patients	34,181	38,433	37,381	40,533
Total out-patients attendances	166,574	169,750	163,726	164,773

[1] Provisional

Source: 1982, 1986: SH3 return.
1987-88, 1988-89: SH3A, KH09, KP70 returns.

In-patient waiting lists
St. Helens and Knowsley district health authority at at 31 March

	Total
1982	3,405
1986	3,868
1987-88[1]	3,775
1988-89[1]	3,586

[1] Total less self-deferred.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on ward closures in the St. Helens and Knowsley health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The management of health services locally is a matter for the health authority concerned. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the St. Helens and Knowsley health authority.

Funding (Mersey Region)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representation he has received from Mersey regional health authority with regard to levels of funding to maintain standards of patient care.

Mr Freeman: We have not received any such representation from the Mersey regional health authority.

Anti-tetanus Injection

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost to the National Health Service each year or financial year of anti-tetanus booster injections.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will insert in the new general practitioner contracts guidelines on the frequency with which anti-tetanus booster injections should be offered.

Mr. Freeman: Guidelines on anti-tetanus and other vaccinations are set out in the memorandum "Immunisation Against Infectious Disease" which is prepared for the health departments by the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation, and issued to all doctors, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. A new edition of the memorandum is due to be published early next year.

Genetic Modification

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in the light of scientific developments indicating the possibility of medical treatment involving genetic modification, what guidance is available to doctors contemplating such treatment; and what steps he is taking to inform himself of progress in this area and of the implications of such developments.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Developments are taking place in this field. Following primary research in animals there is within the next two to three years the prospect of treating adults and children with certain serious conditions of genetic origin by gene modification. Such modification would be confined to the individual patient and not transmissible to offspring. The Government consider that it is important that the introduction of such treatments should be carefully studied in advance. I have therefore decided to set up a committee on the ethics of gene therapy with the following terms of reference:

"To draw up ethical guidance for the medical profession on treatment of genetic disorders in adults and children by genetic modification of human body cells; to invite and give ethical consideration to proposals from doctors wishing to use such treatment on individual patients and to provide advice to the United Kingdom health Ministers on scientific and medical developments which have a bearing on the safety and efficacy of human gene modifications."

The committee will report to the Secretaries of State for Health, for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland. It will be chaired by Sir Cecil Clothier KCB, QC (formerly Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration and Health Service Commissioner for England, Scotland and Wales and Chairman of the Police Complaints Authority). Its members are:

Miss Margaret Auld (formerly Chief Nursing Officer Scottish Home and Health Department), Professor Martin Bobrow (Prince Philip Professor of Paediatric Research, United Medical Schools of Guy's and St. Thomas'), Mrs. Jane Davies (Member, North West Thames RHA), Professor the Rev. Canon Gordon Dunstan, DD, LLD, FSA (Emeritus Professor of Moral and Social Theology, University of London), Dr. Alison Hill (general medical practitioner, Oxfordshire), Professor June Lloyd (President, British Paediatric Association, Nuffield Professor of Child Health, Institute of Child Health, London), Mr. Nick Ross (Broadcaster), Professor Sir David Weatherall FRS (Nuffield Professor of Clinical Medicine, Oxford University), Professor R. Weiss (Director, Chester-Beattie Laboratories).

Although no such treatment is at present being carried out in the United Kingdom it seems likely that it will be available within a few years. The Government consider it important that the introduction of such treatments should be carefully studied in advance.

Information Technology

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to support information and information technology requirements arising out of "Working for Patients" and "Promoting Better Heath"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Freeman: The reforms outlined in "Working for Patients" will assist in integrating the NHS. There will, for example, be better links between primary and secondary care. District health authorities will need to work closely with GPs to take account of GPs' views when agreeing patterns of provision. GPs holding their own funds for elective and diagnostic services will be involved in direct transactions with hospitals.

These changes come into effect in April 1991, and health authorities, hospitals and GP practice fund holders will need to be ready for them. In the first instance, block contracts will predominate, but with experience contracts will become increasingly sophisticated. To reap all the considerable benefits of these changes, the NHS will need to make major progress in such matters as the letting and management of contracts, the definition and measurement of quality of care and costing and resource management. To do all this they will need improved information systems and investment in technology to support them.

We can, however, build upon present information systems for the task ahead. Implementation of the Körner recommendations put in place a range of minimum data sets that provide an excellent foundation for the post-review NHS. Some changes in the data sets will be necessary, of course, and one of the review implementation projects is considering what these should be.

Spending on computing in health authorities has risen from £36 million in 1983-84 to around £130 million in 1988-89. This very considerable resource indicates the priority which we—and health authorities themselves—have given to information and IT in managing the delivery of health care. Computerisation is not, of course, an end in itself. District health authorities and the family practitioner services need to base IT developments on careful assessment of their information needs and the best means, clerical or IT, of meeting them. That is why the information requirements of the proposals in "Working for Patients" are being considered by working groups involving both the NHS and the Department. We expect the development of IT to be an evolutionary process. The past developments in IT already complement the general direction of the proposals in "Working for Patients" and the IT systems now in use in the NHS provide a firm base on which to build. For example, the new arrangements for contracting for services in the NHS, which will be introduced in April 1991, will initially be able largely to operate on the basis of existing information systems. In the longer term, as more sophisticated forms of contracting develop, we would expect changes in the information which is needed and the way it is provided. We believe that IT will have an important role in supporting such developments.

Starting with the hospital and community health services, we propose to make available the following resources for 1990-91:

	£ million
	Capital	Revenue	Total
Resource management	39	39	78
Hospital information and support systems	21	4	25

"Working for Patients" set out our plans to extend the introduction of resource management to 260 acute hospitals by April 1992. The £78 million now available for resource management in 1990-91 will enable progress to be made in many sites. I expect to announce very soon the names of the 20 sites which will move into full resource management this year, following a period of preparation and the commencement of training, and the details of the programme for the remaining sites will follow. The management executive have evaluated the progress made at the six pilot sites and are still discussing some details of the evaluation with the joint consultants committee.

It is important to emphasise that resource management is important in its own right in involving clinicians in hospital management and in giving both clinicians and managers the information they need. A major part of the funds available will be directed at these aspects. The proposed system of contracts will be supported at the outset by existing information systems. In due course, resource management systems will provide much information which will allow contracts to become more precisely specified. But the pace of implementation of resource management set out in the White Paper and now matched by the funds which will achieve it will not be rushed for this reason.

We believe strongly that IT systems can benefit patients, not only by making NHS administration more efficient and by helping healthcare professionals to manage their resources better, but in more direct ways, such as the Eurodiabeta project at St. Thomas' hospital, which is developing better management of care for diabetics.

We have made funds available to enable the two HISS projects in Darlington and Greenwich to move ahead towards completion and for work to continue on the Nottingham HISS project—which is using new methods of specifying and designing hospital computer systems. We shall also fund other projects in this field in 1990-91 to broaden our experience both in achieving integrated systems and in obtaining the maximum benefit from them.

District health authorities, too, will need information systems to help them carry out their new functions such as placing and monitoring contracts and, most importantly, assessing the health needs of the population they serve. A study is under way to assess how best to meet districts' information needs. We will make a further statement next year on support for such systems.

Although we are intending to fund a number of different initiatives at sites throughout the country, we will take steps to ensure that the money is spent in a co-ordinated way, irrespective of the level at which the initiative takes place. We also believe that the NHS could make more use of its considerable purchasing power to get even better value for money in IT and we will be taking steps to encourage this, in concert with the NHS procurement directorate and the centre of responsibility for computer procurement based at South Western RHA.

We are well aware that information systems require expertise—people to design, build and operate them, as well as to use the information they produce. These people need training and we have established a number of centrally financed projects—some £4½ million will be spent over the next two years—to build up a training infrastructure for information management and technology in the NHS. As the need for exchange of information between different parts of the service grows, there will be increasing need for an electronic network which facilitates this exchange. The Department has therefore recently entered into negotiation for a private network for the NHS under the umbrella agreement between the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency and Racal Data Networks Ltd. for the Government data network. The first links to the network will be between family practitioner committees (FPCs) and the newly computerised NHS central register, starting in mid-1990. Thereafter, it is planned to link other FPS administrative bodies and those FPS practitioners with computer systems meeting the required communications standards. We expect this FPS network to evolve over time to be capable of handling most of the needs of the wider NHS.

FPCs are already working to improve the quality of the data they hold—data which will assume an increasing importance in a contractual environment. The management information requirements for FPCs arising from "Promoting Better Health" have been examined and work has begun to develop some of the information systems required.

As far as IT in GPs' practices is concerned, the Government have already made it clear that we are fully behind the movement towards more and better computerisation. Quite apart from the importance of IT to link family doctors to family practitioner committees and hospitals, we are keen to encourage them to use computers to secure clinical benefits for their patients, to provide a wider range of services and to manage their practices more effectively.

To encourage that, we announced earlier this year that, from 1 April 1990, GPs will be able to claim 50 per cent. direct reimbursement of their computer maintenance costs, the balance to be reimbursed indirectly through the setting of general fees and allowances. I am now able to announce that in 1990-91 additional resources amounting to £24 million will be made available for computerisation in general practice. From 1 April 1990, all GPs will be able to claim 50 per cent. direct reimbursement of the costs of purchasing, leasing, upgrading and maintenance of their computer systems, together with 70 per cent. of the initial staff costs of setting up the systems. The balance of these costs will be reimbursed indirectly. These allowances will be subject to upper limits based on a sliding scale according to practice list sizes and will take account of systems obtained in 1989-90. We shall be discussing the details with representatives of the medial profession and in due course will publish them in the statement of fees and allowances. These revised arrangements will be reviewed after three years. Additional assistance will be announced shortly for GPs who choose to be funded through practice budgets to reflect their special computer needs.

We are also making available additional sums from 1991-92 to set up a central GP computer development and research fund to examine and evaluate developments in this field.

We have also set aside funds to develop and pilot systems to provide GPs with information on waiting times for hospital treatment. This, together with other information relating to availability, cost and quality of service, will enable them to refer their patients to hospitals which provide a good quality service in a reasonable time.

As well as information about their patients and practices and the contracts held by their DHAs, GPs will also require information about their prescribing costs. This will help them to monitor expenditure against their indicative prescribing budgets. We are funding the changes necessary to provide them from the enhanced prescription analyses and cost (PACT) system being developed at the prescription pricing authority. All GPs will be able to monitor such information without computer assistance but, over time, information technology will be of growing assistance in this field.

A more detailed document setting out our strategy for the information needs and use of information technology in the NHS will be launched for consultation on 17 January 1990.

DEFENCE

Short-range Nuclear Forces

13. Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any reassessment has been made of the need to replace short-range nuclear forces in the light of the recent political changes in eastern Europe.

32. Mr. Buchan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any reassessment has been made of the need to replace short-range nuclear forces in the light of the recent political changes in eastern Europe.

33. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any reassessment has been made of the need to replace short-range nuclear forces in the light of the recent political changes in eastern Europe.

37. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any reassessment has been made of the need to replace short-range nuclear forces in the light of the recent political changes in eastern Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At its summit in May, NATO reaffirmed its position that for the foreseeable future there is no alternative to the Alliance's strategy of deterrence based on an appropriate mix of adequate and effective nuclear and conventional forces which will continue to be kept up to date where necessary.

Gurkhas

16. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to deploy a Gurkha regiment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no current plans to deploy Gurkha infantry regiments to Northern Ireland.

Eastern Europe

17. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any reassessment has been made of the need to develop a new strategy to replace flexible response in the light of the recent political changes in eastern Europe.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any reassessment has been made of the need to develop a new strategy to replace flexible response, in the light of the recent political changes in eastern Europe.

108. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any reassessment has been made of the need to develop a new strategy to replace flexible response, in the light of the recent political changes in eastern Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We continue to believe that NATO's strategy on flexible response and forward defence provides the best means of maintaining deterrence and thereby preserving peace in Europe.

28. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his assessment of the implications of recent developments in eastern Europe on United Kingdom arms expenditure.

99. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in the light of the changes in the politics of eastern Europe in the current year, whether he intends to reduce levels of defence expenditure.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Welcome though the positive developments in eastern Europe are, proper funding for defence must be maintained. It would be quite wrong to pre-empt the outcome of the current arms control talks by decreasing our defence expenditure when there is still such a large imbalance of forces in Europe.

59. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is undertaking any reviews of Britain's defence strategy in the light of the breaching of the Berlin Wall.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We remain committed to NATO, whose policies of seeking dialogue with the East while maintaining adequate defensive strength have contributed to the political changes taking place in the GDR and elsewhere in eastern Europe.

104. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the military threat from the Warsaw pact countries in the light of recent developments in central Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 15 November 1989 at column 269.

116. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of submarines, tanks, military aircraft and army divisions at the disposal of the Warsaw pact countries taken together; and what are the corresponding figures for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to figures 8 and 10 of chapter 6 of volume I of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989" (Cm 675), and to the NATO publication "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts", published in November 1988, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Tanker Aircraft

18. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the replacement programme of tanker aircraft for mid-air refuelling.

24. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the replacement programme of tanker aircraft for mid-air refuelling.

106. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the replacement programme of tanker aircraft for mid-air refuelling.

Mr. Alan Clark: As the Victor aircraft reach the end of their useful life, current plans are to convert a number of in-service VC10 and Tristar aircraft to provide air-to-air refuelling for the RAF.

Frigates

19. Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will be announcing orders for the next batch of type 23 frigates.

81. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will be announcing orders for the next batch of type 23 frigates.

Mr. Neubert: I hope to announce the outcome of the competition by the end of this year.

Lance Missiles

20. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to reduce the number of Lance missiles in Europe.

60. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to reduce the number of Lance missiles in Europe.

88. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to reduce the number of Lance missiles in Europe.

122. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to reduce the number of Lance missiles in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no such plans.

Free-fall Nuclear Bomb

21. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what expenditure has been incurred to date on the study of possible replacement options for the replacement of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb.

75. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what expenditure has been incurred to date on the study of possible replacement options for the replacement of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies).

92. Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about progress on the replacement of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have nothing to add to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) on 24 October 1989 at column 429 by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces.

Soviet Union

22. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any evidence that the Soviet Union has altered its military doctrine; and what changes there have been.

62. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any evidence that the Soviet Union has altered its military doctrine; and what changes there have been.

128. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any evidence that the Soviet Union has altered its military doctrine to one that is solely defensive.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Soviet Union formally redefined the political aspect of its public military doctrine in 1987, to emphasise both the priority aim of the avoidance of war, and its defensive nature. The cuts in Soviet forces announced by President Gorbachev at the United Nations in December 1988 and the accompanying restructuring of its remaining forces along strictly defensive lines, are quoted as evidence of the practical implementation of this doctrine. These measures are very welcome, but even when they are fully implemented, the Warsaw pact will still possess a significant military superiority over NATO in Europe.

RTM322 Helicopter Engine

23. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in selecting the RTM322 helicopter engine.

Mr. Alan Clark: A competition for the supply of more powerful engines for the EH101 helicopter was run by the Ministry of Defence last year. It was won by the Rolls-Royce Turbomeca RTM322 engine, which beat the rival General Electric CT7 series engine on both cost and technical grounds.

Exceptionally, the competition was run in advance of an established requirement for a more powerful engine in the EH101, in recognition of Rolls-Royce Turbomeca's desire for an early decision. Work to define the production standard of the aircraft (including its power requirement) is well in hand and will be completed shortly. A decision in respect of the engine contract will be made as soon as possible thereafter.

Pegasus 11-61 Engine

25. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has yet identified a United Kingdom requirement for the Pegasus 11-61 aero engine.

Mr. Alan Clark: There is currently no United Kingdom requirement for a more powerful engine for the RAF's Harrier.

Defence Budget

26. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the increased military threat to the United Kingdom; and what are the reasons for the increase in the defence budget as announced in the Autumn Statement.

45. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the increased threat to the United Kingdom to justify the increase in the defence budget as announced in the Autumn Statement.

129. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the increased military threat to the United Kingdom; and what are the reasons for the increase in the defence budget as announced in the Autumn Statement.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the increased military threat to the United Kingdom; and what are the reasons for the increase in the defence budget, as announced in the Autumn Statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The plans for the defence budget reflect the Government's resolve to maintain the necessary funding for a strong defence. Whilst we welcome the positive developments in Warsaw pact countries, we shall not undermine the prospects for sound arms control agreements by implementing force reductions in advance.

Conventional Forces

27. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the need for new strategies and doctrines for conventional forces over the next 10 years.

65. Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the need for new strategies and doctrines for conventional forces over the next 10 years.

115. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the need for new strategies and doctrines for conventional forces over the next 10 years.

123. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the need for new strategies and doctrines for conventional forces over the next 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO's fundamental strategies of flexible response and forward defence, together with its commitment to seek dialogue with the Warsaw pact, have successfully contributed to progress on arms control, and remain valid. Alliance plans will continue to take account of current military realities.

49. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the environmental impact of negotiated cuts in British conventional forces over the next 10 years.

66. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the environmental impact of negotiated cuts in British conventional forces over the next 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not possible at this stage to assess the impact on the environment of the negotiations on conventional forces in Vienna, which cover the forces of all NATO and Warsaw pact countries, not just those in the United Kingdom. Regardless of force levels, however, the essential training of British troops is always conducted with a view to causing minimum disruption to the environment and local population.

Helicopters

29. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the performance of helicopters assigned to the 24 Airmobile Brigade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes.

US Defence Secretary

30. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet his American counterpart to discuss United States defence levels in western Europe.

41. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the possibility of nuclear-tipped tactical short-range attack missiles being deployed on aircraft based in the United Kingdom.

70. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the possibility of nuclear-tipped tactical short-range attack missiles being deployed on aircraft based in the United Kingdom.

117. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the possibility of nuclear-tipped tactical short range attack missiles being deployed on aircraft based in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is today attending the meeting of NATO's defence planning committee in Brussels, where he will meet Mr. Cheney. They will discuss a range of matters of mutual interest.

56. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next plans to meet the United States Secretary of State for Defence; and what issues he plans to raise.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend will discuss a wide range of matters of mutual interest with Mr. Cheney at today's meeting of the defence planning committee in Brussels.

82. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to meet the United States Secretary of State for Defence to discuss reductions in United States forces in Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Faversham (Mr. Moate).

Troops (Medical Training)

31. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what level of medical proficiency have troops involved in civilian ambulance and emergency work been trained.

34. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what level of medical proficiency have troops involved in civilian ambulance and emergency work been trained.

80. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what level of medical proficiency have troops involved in civilian ambulance and emergency work been trained.

96. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what level of medical proficiency troops involved in civilian ambulance and emergency work have been trained.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Medical orderlies currently deployed with military ambulances undertaking civilian accident and emergency work have all received special training in basic nursing and medical skills in order to deal at an appropriate level with all likely first aid and emergency incidents.

Our service personnel should be congratulated on the professional and dedicated way in which they have undertaken this essential work under difficult circumstances.

Ferranti

35. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has met the chairman of Ferranti to discuss the company's future as an indigenous defence contractor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend and I, and Ministry of Defence officials, maintain contact with the senior management of all major defence contractors, including Ferranti. The details of our discussions are always confidential.

Efficiency Savings

36. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what efficiency savings his Department has achieved in the past six months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Detailed efficiency achievements in the last six months have not yet been assessed centrally. However, in the first year of the three-year efficiency programme, which covers almost two thirds of the defence budget and to which I referred in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. French) on 3 February 1989 at column 443, the Department exceeded its target of 2·5 per cent.

NATO

38. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet the secretary general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation to discuss maritime security in the eastern Atlantic.

40. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the secretary general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation concerning the modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement.

83. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the secretary general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is today attending the meeting of NATO's defence planning committee in Brussels, where he will meet the secretary general. They will discuss a range of matters of mutual interest.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, when he next expects to meet his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation colleagues to discuss defence expenditure.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation counterparts; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is today attending the meeting of NATO's defence planning committee in Brussels, where he will meet his ministerial colleagues. They will discuss a range of matters of mutual interest.

Trident

39. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest cost of the Trident nuclear weapons system.

Mr. Alan Clark: The current estimate for Trident is £9,089 million at 1988-89 prices and an exchange rate of £1=$1·76. It is intended to announce a revised estimate early next year.

61. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of discussions between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Administration in relation to the anticipated delivery dates for the D5 Trident missiles.

Mr. Alan Clark: There has been no change to the planned dates for delivery of Trident missiles to the United Kingdom.

102. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Trident programme.

121. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Trident programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Trident programme continues to progress to time and budget towards its in-service date of the mid-1990s.

131. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of Defence if it is his intention to review the commitment to Trident, in the light of recent developments in Warsaw pact countries.

132. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of Defence if it is his intention to review the commitment to Trident, in the light of recent developments in the Warsaw pact countries.

133. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of Defence if it is his intention to review the commitment to Trident, in the light of recent developments in the Warsaw pact countries.

134. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his intention to review the commitment to Trident, in the light of recent developments in the Warsaw pact countries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Heritage Assets (Gibraltar)

42. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the preservation of heritage assets held by his Department in Gibraltar.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Property Services Agency, on behalf of the Ministry of Defence, undertakes considerable preservation work on historic properties which are part of the defence estate in Gibraltar.

Disaster Relief

43. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what disaster relief assistance the armed forces have undertaken in the last six months.

94. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what disaster relief assistance the armed forces have undertaken in the last six months.

98. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what disaster relief assistance the armed forces have undertaken in the last six months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friends to my reply of 24 October to my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) at column 430.

Challenger Tank

44. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will report on the progress being made in completion of the contract for Challenger II tanks.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter).

Defence Exports

46. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the amount of defence exports achieved since 1979.

86. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the amount of defence exports achieved since 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess).

Confidential Information

47. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to ensure that confidential information held on individuals by all those for whom his Department is responsible is not passed on to other individuals or organisations who may do harm to the person concerned.

72. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to ensure that confidential information held on individuals by all those for whom his Department is responsible is not passed on to other individuals or organisations who may do harm to the person concerned.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn).

Naval Forces

48. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation about the possibility of reducing naval forces by negotiation.

95. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation about the possibility of reducing naval forces by negotiation.

97. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation about the possibility of reducing naval forces by negotiation.

113. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation about the possibility of reducing naval forces by negotiation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has regular meetings with his NATO counterparts, at which a wide range of arms control matters are discussed. The Alliance's priority in conventional arms control is to achieve stability in conventional forces in Europe, with particular emphasis on the Warsaw pact's land forces with a capability for surprise attack and large-scale offensive action. Maritime forces are explicitly excluded from the mandate for the CFE negotiations.

United States Defence Spending

50. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the United Kingdom's defence policies of possible United States defence cuts in Europe.

118. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the United Kingdom's defence policies of possible United States defence cuts in Europe.

125. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the United Kingdom's defence policies of possible United States defence cuts in Europe.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the United Kingdom's defence policies of possible United States defence cuts in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We remain committed to maintaining adequate and effective nuclear and conventional forces in Europe to underpin NATO's strategy of flexible response and forward defence. The United States Government fully share this view.

War Widows (Pensions)

51. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the level of pre-1973 war widows' pensions.

63. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the level of pre-1973 war widows' pensions.

84. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the level of pre-1973 war widows' pensions.

Mr. Neubert: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng).

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will grant compensation to ex-service men who were involved in the atomic test on Christmas Island and who are now suffering from leukaemia as a result of their involvement.

52. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will provide compensation for those ex-British service personnel whose health suffered as a result of their participation in British nuclear tests.

85. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will provide compensation for those ex-British service personnel whose health has suffered as a result of their participation in British nuclear tests.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, South (Mr. Doran).

Recruitment and Retention

53. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the current levels of recruitment and retention in the armed services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Overall, both recruitment and outflow are running at a slightly higher level than last year.

European Fighter Aircraft

54. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will announce the order for the radar for the European fighter aircraft.

114. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will announce the order for the radar for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: The decision on the choice of radar for the EFA will be announced as soon as possible. Discussions are continuing between the four partner nations, the international management agency and the international industrial consortium responsible for the development of the EFA.

Devonport Dockyard

55. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are taken to ensure that present arrangements ensure adequate work for Her Majesty's dockyard, Devonport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Devonport royal dockyard is allocated a core programme of MOD work, negotiated on a single-tender basis, which is kept under review, to ensure that it provides a viable basis for maintaining strategic capacity in the longer term.

Women Fliers

57. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are plans to increase the opportunities to fly with the Royal Navy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no current plans to do so, although various possibilities for widening the employment of the Women's Royal Navy Service, including in the field of aviation, are under review.

Chemical Weapons

58. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation he has had with his United States counterpart regarding the current (a) Soviet stockpile and (b) United States production of chemical weapons.

76. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation he has had with his United States counterpart regarding the current (a) Soviet stockpile and (b) United States production of chemical weapons.

87. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation he has had with his United States counterpart regarding the current (a) Soviet stockpile and (b) United States production of chemical weapons.

107. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any evidence that the Soviet Union has begun to destroy its stockpile of chemical weapons.

126. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any evidence that the Soviet Union has begun to destroy its stockpile of chemical weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We continue to maintain close liaison with the United States on all aspects of chemical weapons; most recently during the meeting my right hon. Friend had with Mr. Cheney last month.

Common European Home

64. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the implications for current defence policies of the concept of a common European home.

103. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the implications for current defence policies of the concept of a common European home.

119. Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the implications for current defence policies of the concept of a common European home.

120. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the implications for current defence policies of the concept of a common European home.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is NATO's policy to pursue opportunities for dialogue with the East, and we welcome the commitment to greater co-operation implicit in the, as yet, undefined concept of a common European home. Any specific proposals for reducing the potential for confrontation, made in the conference on security and co-operation in Europe or other fora, will be given due consideration.

Drug Trafficking

67. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution Her Majesty's forces are making to control drug trafficking.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In response to occasional requests for assistance from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, the armed forces provide a variety of support to their operations in the United Kingdom and in home waters. The armed forces also provide anti-drugs assistance overseas. For example, at the request of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, training is being given to Colombia in VIP protection, bomb disposal and basic river boat skills, and non-lethal equipment is being supplied. In addition, the West Indies guardship provides surveillance assistance in co-ordinated anti-drugs patrols with the United States Coastguard.

Defence Spending

68. Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the proportion of gross domestic product Britain spends on defence.

71. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the proportion of gross domestic product Britain spends on defence.

100. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the proportion of gross domestic product Britain spends on defence.

111. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the proportion of gross domestic product Britain spends on defence.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the current financial year, it is estimated that defence expenditure will be about 3·9 per cent of GDP.

Service Personnel (Radiation Exposure)

69. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the average level of radiation exposure suffered by (a) Her Majesty's armed forces personnel, (b) Australian service men and (c) American service men and women during involvement in nuclear testing in the 1950s.

Mr. Neubert: The committed effective doses equivalent, in millisieverts per person, sustained on average by participants in the whole programme of overseas atmospheric nuclear tests and experiments conducted by the United Kingdom Ministry of Supply within the period 1952 to 1967 inclusive has been professionally assessed to be approximately as follows:

All participants:	Zero point four (0·4)
Participants who were citizens of the United Kingdom:	Zero point five (0·5)
Participants who were members of Her Majesty's forces of the United Kingdom:	Zero point four (0·4)
Of which the division of work led to respectively on average:
Commissioned Officers:	Two (2)
Warrant Officers and other ranks:	Zero point one five (0·15)
Participants who were civilian citizens of the United Kingdom and supporting roles:	Two point five (2·5)

For comparison, individuals in the United Kingdom on average sustain in every year a dose of approximately 2·5 millisieverts from background radiations and radioactivity throughout their adult lives, and depending on location this level can be up to four or more times higher.

Details of the involvement of, and doses sustained by, citizens of other countries are matters for the Governments of the nations concerned.

Royal Navy (Recruitment)

73. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the level of recruitment to the Royal Navy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the last complete financial year, which ended in March, the achievement in relation to targets was 93 per cent. for officers and 91 per cent. for ratings. It is too soon to say what the achievement will be in 1989-90, but we are mindful of the fact that both economic and demographic conditions affect recruiting and we are accordingly increasing our efforts in this respect. The additional advertising in which we are engaging is producing an increase in applications, but we are by no means complacent.

Compensation Payments

74. Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what compensation has been paid by the Ministry of Defence (a) to farmer Mr. Paul Adorian of Kirklington, Carlisle, Cumbria, for the death of one of his llamas attributed to a low-flying incident involving an RAF jet and (b) to the parents of Private Jason Winter of the 1st Battalion Light Infantry for the murder by the Irish Republican Army of their 19-year-old son while serving with the Army in Ulster.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has paid £5,021 in compensation to Mr. Paul Adorian in respect of the loss of one of his llamas, as a result of low flying military aircraft activity. No claim has been received by the Ministry of Defence in respect of the tragic death of Private Jason Winter, although it is understood that a claim has been considered by the criminal injuries compensation division of the Northern Ireland Office.

Coastal Patrol Boats

77. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many fast coastal patrol boats are available to the Royal Navy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are 25 patrol craft of various classes in service with the Royal Navy, as set out in annex A to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989" (Cm. 675-I).

Training (Casualties)

78. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many incidents of collapse due to excessive heat during training or exercises occurred this summer; in how many cases was (a) medical attention and (b) hospitalisation required; and how frequently the outcome was death or permanent disability.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested will not be available until the publication next summer of firm figures for the whole of 1989 in the "Service Annual Health Tables". These statistics will not, however, include casualties that required hospitalisation for a period of less than 48 hours. Figures will record deaths but not permanent disabilities which cannot generally be established until treatment is completed.

Submarines

79. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has regarding recent incidents involving fishing vessels and submarines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There have been six incidents this year involving submarines and fishing vessels, two of which involved United States Navy submarines. The Royal Navy regards the avoidance by submarines of fishing vessels and their nets as a matter of considerable importance and is establishing closer links with fishermen's associations in order to promote mutual understanding.

Recruits

89. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the new recruits to the armed forces last year were of Asian or Afro-Caribbean origin.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Provisional results of the ethnic monitoring survey of new recruits to the armed forces in the year ended 31 March 1989 show that 0·7 per cent. were black and 0·2 per cent. were Asian.

USAF Planes

90. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about the possible deployment of further United States Air Force F111s to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from right hon. Members, hon. Members and the public.

NATO Forces

91. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the current balance between nuclear and conventional forces in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

101. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the current balance between nuclear and conventional forces in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

112. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the current balance between nuclear and conventional forces in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

127. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the current balance between nuclear and conventional forces in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At the summit meeting in May, NATO reaffirmed its position that, for the foreseeable future, there is no alternative to the Alliance's strategy of deterrence for the prevention of war. That strategy is based upon an appropriate mix of adequate and effective nuclear and conventional forces, which will continue to be kept up to date where necessary.

Military Security

93. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the level of security at military establishments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are constantly looking for ways in which our security arrangements can be improved.

Royal Army Veterinary Corps

105. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the visit by the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces to the Royal Army Veterinary Corps, Melton Mowbray, on 24 November.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend's visits to the Royal Army Veterinary Corps Centre and to the dog training squadron of the RAF police school on 24 November had the aim of helping to inform his decision on the proposed service animal centre. I understand that he found the visit to be most useful.

Chemical Weapons (USSR)

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any evidence that the Soviet Union has begun to destroy its stockpile of chemical weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no evidence that the Soviet Union has begun to destroy its chemical stockpile.

Defence Contracts

109. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of his policy to offer small companies in the United Kingdom the opportunity to tender for defence contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Smaller companies are especially encouraged to compete for defence work under the successful small firms initiative.

Between November 1986 and October 1988, about 4,000 companies sought guidance and information on how to sell to the Ministry of Defence from the then MOD small firms advice division. A further 1,800 companies have sought advice since the division was relaunched in November 1988 as the new suppliers service, which contains a specialist small firms group. The group provides advice to new companies on how to sell to the MOD. Over the past three years, MOD has made direct payments to small firms totalling around £1 billion each year, and the number of small firms receiving direct payments has increased from about 4,000 in 1986-87 to over 5,500 in 1988-89. Registration of new companies on the defence contractors list remains high. In 1988, about 300 small firms were registered, the same as in 1987. To help companies gain visibility of our requirements, we publish our contract opportunities in a fortnightly "Contracts Bulletin". Small firms are encouraged to bid for work direct, or as sub-contractors to our major suppliers.

We shall continue actively to encourage the important contribution of small companies to obtain better value for money.

Swansea Docks

110. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the current position is on the Royal Navy's plans to use part of Swansea docks for berthing submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since this subject was last discussed in the House on 19 July 1989 at columns 490-98, my officials have had further discussions with West Glamorgan county council, concentrating on the preparation of a special safety scheme.

Low Flying

124. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is yet in a position to announce whether he will consult hon. Members over the local detail in drawing up and revising the advisory maps used for the purposes of low-flying activity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Quality Assurance Unit

130. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the intended move of his Department's quality assurance unit to Stockton on Tees.

Mr. Neubert: I refer my hon. Friend to the angwer I gave on 2 November at column 328.

West Germany

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to review the present numbers of British troops based in West Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government keep overall British force levels under continual review. At the same time, it is our policy to maintain our commitments to NATO, of which the British forces in Germany form an important part.

Warsaw Pact

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the Warsaw pact in military terms; and how the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation is proposing to respond to recent changes.

Mr. Hamilton: NATO remains committed to seeking improved security at a lower level of forces. This policy has contributed to the political changes now under way in almost all the Warsaw pact countries.

National Employment Liaison Committee

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement of the progress of the NELC campain.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The response to the campaign launched in September 1988 has been most encouraging. Pledges of support for the volunteer Reserves have been received from over 600 major employers representing over half of the United Kingdom work force. We are confident that the campaign has widened public understanding of the importance of the volunteer Reserves.

JMC Exercises

Mr. Macdonald : To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made in the live weapon firing allowances for JMC exercises in the last two years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no fixed allowances for live weapon firing for JMC exercises. The firing levels are derived from the requirements of those vessels or aircraft taking part in the exercise, but do not vary appreciably from one exercise to another.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use was made of (a) Stornoway airport, (b) Benbecula airport and (c) the Cape Wrath ship-to-shore gunnery range during exercise JMC 89/3.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During Joint Maritime Course 89/3, no use was made of Stornoway airport. Benbecula airport was used as a command and control centre, and Cape Wrath ship-to-shore gunnery range was used on 17, 20 and 21 November by NATO ships participating in the exercise.

Royal Artillery Range, Hebrides

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose of the special extension to the danger area of the Royal Artillery range, Hebrides, between 29 November and 8 December; what units are involved in the activity; and whether live firing has been authorised.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The danger area of the Royal Artillery range, Hebrides is being extended between 29 November and 8 December while missile testing takes place, to ensure that spent missiles fall within the designated area. Aircraft of No. 5 Squadron of the Royal Air Force will fire the missiles, with their warheads removed.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 29 November 1989

ENVIRONMENT

Environmental Protection

142. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on United Kingdom participation in international efforts to protect the environment.

143. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what international initiatives Her Majesty's Government are taking to protect and improve the natural environment; and if he will make a statement.

144. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what initiatives Her Majesty's Government are taking to protect and improve the international environment; and if he will make a statement.

145. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's participation in international efforts to protect the environment.

146. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what international initiatives Her Majesty's Government are taking to protect and improve the national and international environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what role Britain can play in international efforts to protect the environment.

Mr. Chris Patten: I will write to my hon. Friends.

Tritium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will investigate the reasons why 5 gm of radioactive tritium imported from the United States of America to the United Kingdom for the use in lighting has gone missing; if he will instruct Her Majesty's chief inspectors of pollution and nuclear installations to produce a report on the disappearance of the tritium; and if he will seek details from the United States Department of Energy on the background to its report on the incident issued in November 1989.

Mr. Trippier: Users of tritium are either registered under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 or, in the case of licensed nuclear installations, licensed under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 and are regulated by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution or Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate as appropriate. In all cases the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985, which control the storage and provide for accountancy for all radioactive substances, apply.

Officials of the United States Department of Energy met recently with the United Kingdom Department of Energy and with United Kingdom customers for United States tritium to discuss improved measurement and auditing procedures.

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why he decided to use 1981 census information about the numbers of persons in households without inside lavatories in setting the all-ages social index for his calculation of standard spending assessments in respect of poll tax.

Mr. Chope: Decisions on information to use for standard spending assessments were taken after full discussion with the local authority associations. The proportion of persons in private households without exclusive use of a bath or inside WC has been used as one of a number of factors selected to identify those local authorities with relatively inferior living conditions. The information from the 1981 census is the latest available on a consistent basis for each local authority.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why he has used 1981 census information about the numbers of elderly living alone in calculating standard spending assessments in respect of poll tax.

Mr. Chope: Decisions on information to use for standard spending assessments were taken after full discussion with the local authority associations. The information from the 1981 census on the number of elderly people living alone is the latest available on a consistent basis for each local authority for which the assessments are made.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why he has used 1981 census information in respect of children of lone parents in calculating standard spending assessments in respect of poll tax.

Mr. Chope: Decisions on information to use for standard spending assessments were taken after full discussion with the local authority associations. The 1981 census is the most recent source of this information on a consistent basis for each local authority.

Caravan Sites

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the caravan sites owned by local authorities which afford permanent housing yet lack a bathroom, indoor lavatory and hot water system; and if he will give the reasons why he decided to withhold permission for the necessary expenditure in these cases.

Mr. Howard: My Department does not keep detailed records of the standards of facility local authorities provide on caravan sites they own, and councils do not need my permission to spend money on such sites. Grant is available to meet 100 per cent. of the reasonable capital costs of provision.

Rifle Range (Palace of Westminster)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the proposals which his Department has received since 1979 for alternative uses for the Palace of Westminster rifle range.

Mr. Chope: No alternative proposals have been put to my Department.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the standard spending assessments for highway maintenance for each highway authority in England giving, in each case, the actual spending for 1988-89 adjusted for inflation;

(2) if he will list the 1990-91 standard spending assessment for (a) personal social services, (b) social services for children, (c) social services for the elderly and (d) other social services for each social services authority in England, giving in each case the actual spend for 1988-89 adjusted for inflation.

Mr. Chope: The information requested on SSAs has been placed in the Library. The provisional figures are those underlying the exemplifications in the consultation paper my right hon. Friend issued on 6 November. Outturn expenditure figures for 1988-89 are not yet available for all relevant authorities.

Housing Starts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing housing starts in each region to May 1989, showing the percentage change in starts from the same quarter in 1988.

Mr. Chope: Housebuilding starts for regions in England are now available for the September quarter of 1989, and are given below, together with figures for the corresponding quarter of 1988.

Housebuilding starts in thousands

	September quarter 1988	September quarter 1989	Percentage change
North	2·6	2·5	−4·2
Yorkshire and Humberside	4·9	3·9	−19·3
East Midlands	6·0	3·9	−35·5
East Anglia	4·5	2·9	−36·0
South East:
Greater London	3·6	2·3	−34·6
Rest of South East	16·2	8·4	−48·1
South West	7·3	4·3	−41·3
West Midlands	4·8	3·3	−31·0
North West	4·5	4·4	−3·1
England	54·4	35·9	−34·0

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions there have been or are pending as a result of damage caused by agricultural or forestry activities to sites of special scientific interest under part II of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for each year since 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
1981	None
1982	None
1983	None
1984	1
1985	2
1986	None
1987	None
1988	4
1989	1

Details of these cases are set out in the Nature Conservancy Council's annual reports.

Basking Sharks

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about his investigations into giving basking sharks protection under part I of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and when he expects to make an announcement.

Mr. Trippier: The Nature Conservancy Council recommended protection for the basking sharks under section 9 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 as part of its first statutory quinquennial review of schedules 5 and 8 to that Act. This recommendation is the subject of ongoing consultation with other Government Departments and an announcement will be made when the consultation is complete.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to research into the status of basking sharks in the United Kingdom; what financial resources have been devoted to this by his Department; when he expects the results of this research be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Research on basking sharks populations is being carried out by the Marine Conservation Society with grant aid from the Nature Conservancy Council which also holds the data bank for the project. No date has yet been fixed for the publication of the results.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a statement on the uniform business rate.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend told the House on 6 November his provisional view that the non-domestic rating multiplier for 1990-91 would be 36p. The final figure, which will appear in the revenue support grant report to be laid in January, will depend on later information about the non-domestic revaluation.

Housing Grants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing housing grants in each region to June 1989 showing the percentage change in grants for the same quarters in 1988.

Mr. Chope: The total number of conversion and improvement, intermediate, repairs and special grants paid in each region in the June quarters of 1988 and 1989 are shown in table 2.19, part C, of "Housing and Construction Statistics, Part 2" No. 38. A copy of the publication is available in the Library.

Pensioners

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice the Government have received from the Audit Commission and from the Government Actuary's department about the proposal that in future local authorities should not be allowed to fund fully their obligations to future pensioners, but should be restricted to 75 per cent. of this obligation.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 28 November 1989]: The proposals for funding the payment of pensions increases, as well as basic pensions in the local government superannuation scheme, have been developed in full consultation with the Government Actuary's department. They have been the subject of consultation with various bodies, including the Audit Commission.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of re-establishing the link of pensions to the rise in earnings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In 1988-89 the cost of restoring the link between retirement pension and average earnings would have been £3·58 billion.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what are the obstacles to reaching a reciprocal agreement which would allow indexing of British pensions abroad in each of the countries where unindexed pensions are paid;

(2) what would be the net cost of providing a reciprocal agreement which would allow the uprating of British pensions abroad in each of the countries where pensions are paid but not currently indexed.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: British pensions are payable anywhere in the world, but pension increases are not paid in some 145 countries where British pensioners live. The primary obstacle to paying full British pensions in these countries is the high cost, which would be of the order of an additional £248 million a year at April 1989 rates of benefit and a further £38·2 million at the April 1990 uprating.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the net cost of uprating British pensions in each of the countries with which the United Kingdom has a reciprocal agreement to index pensions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The current annual cost of British pensions in the 30 countries where pension increases are paid is of the order of £266 million. The cost of uprating these pensions in April 1990 will be about £20·2 million.

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what reduction in civil servant numbers there will be in existing Government Departments presently dealing with the electricity industry after its privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: There will be a reduction in civil servants employed in my Department to deal with the electricity industry after privatisation, but I cannot at this stage say what the full extent of the reduction will be.

Collieries

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the collieries closed or merged since 1979, by British Coal area.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In his reply of 13 May 1987 to my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart), my predecessor gave details of collieries closed between 1960 and March 1987 by British Coal area, at columns 237-54.

The following brings the list of colliery closures up to date:

1987-88

Scottish
Seafield/Frances

North East
Ashington

North Yorkshire
Wheldale
Nostell
Woolley/Redbrook
South Kirby/Riddings

South Yorkshire
Manvers

Nottinghamshire
Linby
Mansfield

Central Arkwright
Cadley Hill

Western
—

South Wales
Lady Windsor/Abercynon
Abernant

Kent
Snowdown

1988-89

Scottish
Barony/Killoch

North East
———

North Yorkshire
———

South Yorkshire
———

Nottinghamshire
Blidworth

Central
Baddesley

Renishaw Park

Western

South Wales
Cynheidre
Marine

Kent

1989-90
Scottish
Bilston Glen

North East

North Yorkshire
Royston Drift

South Yorkshire
Barnburgh

Nottinghamshire
Sutton

Central Warsop

Western Holditch

South Wales
Trelewis
Oakdale
Methyr Vale

Kent
Betteshanger

The following list shows those pits which have merged since 1979:

Scottish
Seafield/Frances
Barony/Killoch

North East
Shilbottle/Whittle
South Hetton/Murton
Lynemouth/Ellington
Vane Tempest/Seaham

North Yorkshire
Caphouse/Denby Grange
Caphouse/Denby Grange/Bulcliffe Wood
Woolley/North Gawber
Haughton Main/Darfield Main
South Kirkby/Ferrymoor Riddings
Denby Grange/Park Mill

South Yorkshire
Shireoaks/Streetley
Goldthorpe/Highgate/Hickleton
Manvers/Wath/Kilnhurst

Nottinghamshire
Huchnall/Babbington
Annesley/Bentinck
Shirebrook/Pleasley
Markham/Ireland
Snibston/South Leicester/Whitwick

Western
Donisthorpe/Measham/Rawdon
Bayworth/Ellistown

South Wales
Oakdale/Celynen North
Blaensercan/Six Bells
Tower/Mardy
Marine/Six Bells

Environment and Local Economy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what input Her Majesty's Government had into the energy, environment and local economy conference, held at Wakefield in West Yorkshire on 21 November.

Mr. Wakeham: No Minister was invited.

PRIME MINISTER

Lancashire

Mr. Hind: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Lancashire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Cambodia

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last reviewed Her Majesty's Government's aid and development embargo on Cambodia.

Mrs. Chalker: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) on 23 November, at col 17.

Horn of Africa

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about inter-governmental co-operation and co-ordination with non-governmental organisations, in the light of the situation in the Horn of Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: At the European Community Development Council on 21 November I drew attention to the serious threat of famine in northern Ethiopia and urged that all possible diplomatic channels be used to exert pressure on the parties to the conflict to secure free access for food supplies. We are also liaising closely with other donor Governments and international agencies. Similar co-ordination takes place on the situation in Sudan. I meet regularly with the British non-governmental organisations working in the Horn of Africa.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if h has any plans to increase overseas aid to Sri Lanka.

Mrs. Chalker: Aid disbursements were £19·2 million in 1988-89, but will be less this year. We have plans for a number of new projects including some in the natural resources sector and further assistance with reconstruction, but some of these have been or are being held up due to civil disturbances in the country.

Animal Conservation, Africa

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make additional resources available for those African countries implementing animal conservation and anti-poaching measures.

Mrs. Chalker: We are already funding a number of wildlife conservation activities in Africa, and are always ready to consider new requests for help. The hon. Gentleman may wish to refer to the list placed in the Library of the House, which was referred to in the answer I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick) on 6 November, at column 437, as an indication of the sort of assistance we are able to provide.

Ethiopia

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further emergency assistance he is providing to Ethiopia in the light of reports of impending famine.

Mrs. Chalker: I approved on 27 November a further allocation of £2 million of emergency relief aid for Ethiopia. This is in addition to more than £7·5 million already agreed this year. This new money will probably be channelled largely through British voluntary agencies involved in the provision of food to those at risk of famine in Eritrea and Tigray.

WALES

M4

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate by how long the start of work on the missing link on the M4 motorway between Baglan and Lon Las has been delayed by expenditure on roads in the former county of Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave on Tuesday 28 November, at column 206.

Local Authority Expenditure

216. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will make known his plans for local authority capital expenditure for 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Walker: Following the autumn review of public expenditure, I have decided to issue, in accordance with the new planning total arrangements, capital grant and credit approvals to local authorities in 1990-91 amounting to £414·3 million.

In addition, there is no limit being set on the amount district councils can spend on mandatory home renovation grants next year. I have already provided £75 million for this purpose. Additional resources will be made available if local authorities spend beyond this level.

My proposals include priority for investment in personal social services and transport; gross provision for both is being increased by 16 per cent. in real terms. The increase in personal social services provision reflects the need for local authorities to provide services for the rising number of the elderly as well as to provide for the shift in the burden of care in the mental health services from the NHS to local authorities. The increase in transport provision allows for three major road schemes to progress.

The new arrangements for capital expenditure embodied in part IV of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 enabled local authorities to enhance the spending authorised by grant and credit approvals by the use of capital receipts not required for debt redemption and by an unfettered use of contributions from revenue.

Assuming they continue previous trends in spending from these sources, total spending in the year will be of the order of £475 million. This compares with an equivalent total gross provision in 1989-90 under the previous capital control system of £444 million; and represents an increase of around £30 million.

Within the total for housing, £38·5 million has been set aside for highly cost-effective group repair schemes and to complete approved enveloping schemes; to support renewal areas; to support the priority estates programme (to improve the quality of the housing service to the customer in council estates); to help rural authorities with a high concentration of rural homes and to assist specific homelessness projects. In addition, £10 million has been distributed to authorities in the form of supplementary credit approvals for discretionary home renovation grants.

Local authorities are being notified today of their individual annual capital guidelines and basic credit approvals on all services including supplementary credit approvals and grant in respect of major road schemes (£51 million) and projects of regional or national importance and special projects (£14·7 million).

The distribution of urban programme capital resources, totalling £24·9 million, will be announced shortly.

Details of the allocation of resources to individual authorities have been placed in the Library.

Tai Cymru

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of funding he is providing to Tai Cymru in 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am delighted to announce that I shall be providing for an increase of over £27 million in the funds made available to Tai Cymru in the next financial year. This is an improvement of over 40 per cent. and will result in a major advance in the activities of housing associations within the Principality. The gross programme for Tai Cymru increases to over £102 million.

Tai Cymru has been established only since April 1989. It has made an excellent start. I want to see its work develop strongly so that housing associations can provide many more homes for people in housing need in Wales, both now and for the future.

The increase in provision is planned to rise further over the period to 1992-93. I shall be reviewing the allocations year by year in the light of Tai Cymru's overall performance, and that of housing associations generally —not least in developing further partnership arrangements with local authorities. But already I expect that as early as 1991-92, and just three years after Tai Cymru's inception, net provision will have increased to nearly double that provided for housing associations in 1988-89.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the country of origin and the destination of all toxic waste imports through the ports (a) Briton Ferry (Neath), (b) Fishguard, (c) Holyhead and (d) Newport for the last three available years, together with the nature of toxic waste in each case.

Mr. Grist: The information for the period is not available in the detail requested. Since the implementation of the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste

Regulations in October 1988, more detailed information is being collected, and the first full financial year's data will be available after March 1990.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether there have been any movements of special hazardous waste through Swansea in the last 10 years.

Mr. Grist: None was reported in the local authority returns for the period to March of this year, but we understand that a consignment of special waste was imported through Swansea in July.

Intensive Care (Babies)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of intensive care baby cots available in Wales, the number in each health authority and their locations within each health authority.

Mr. Grist: Specialist care for new-born babies in Wales, including intensive care, is presently provided in special care baby units, the disposition of which is shown in the table:

Health Authority	Hospital	Cots
Clwyd	HM Stanley	15
	Wrexham Maelor	22
East Dyfed	Bronglais	2
	West Wales General	12
Gwent	Nevill Hall	15
	Royal Gwent	20
Gwynedd	Ysbyty Bangor	22
Mid Glamorgan	Prince of Wales	17
	East Glamorgan	15
	Merthyr General	12
South Glamorgan	University Hospital	25
	St. David's	16
West Glamorgan	Morriston	16
	Neath	10
Pembroke	Withybush	8

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase the number of intensive care baby cots available in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has recently received the report of the advisory group on perinatal intensive care in Wales which was set up to inform the Department of development requirements. It will be considered carefully in formulating plans.

Chernobyl

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what expenditure he has incurred in compensation for farmers as a result of the Chernobyl accident for each year since 1986 in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 27 November, at column 118.

Interest Rates (Farmers)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received about high interest rates from the Farmers Union of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have received two representations in writing and the matter was discussed in my meeting with the union on 23 October.

Rivers (Protection)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many rivers in Wales have protection zone status; and if he will extend the scheme to cover other rivers.

Mr. Grist: None. It is for the National Rivers Authority or a water undertaker to apply to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State if they consider it necessary to restrict particular activities likely to result in the pollution of water.

Roads

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will set out his allocation for Welsh roads.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Our proposals for the development of the motorway and trunk road network in Wales are set out in "Roads in Wales 1989". Details of the schemes programmed to start in 1990-91 will be given in the Welsh Office commentary to be published early next year.

We have announced today the provision made for local authority programmes. Within the total available, gross provision for local roads is £86.6 million, an increase of 22 per cent. over the provision for the current year. Local authority expenditure accepted for transport grant in 1990-91 is £50·9 million, an increase of 29 per cent. over that for 1989-90. Details of the transport grant settlement for individual county councils in Wales have been sent to each chief executive today.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Management Studies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has made to the Polytechnic and Colleges Funding Council and the Universities Funding Council to change the funding of courses and student places in management studies.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has made no such proposals.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the number of students involved in (a) degree courses and (b) Higher National Diploma or equivalent courses in management in each of the last three years.

Mr. Jackson: The available information is given in the table.

Full-time and part-time higher education students[1]

thousands

	1985	1986	1987
Management and management related studies
Degree	45·8	48·0	51·2
Sub-degree	75·1	83·2	89·2

[1] Universities in Great Britain, polytechnics and colleges in England.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table to show, for secondary schools in England (a) how many have been closed, (b) how many have been subject to significant change of character by (i) loss of sixth form and (ii) other means and (c) how many have been subject to significant change of capacity for (i) girls' schools, (ii) boys' schools, (iii) mixed schools, (iv) voluntary schools and (v) county schools for the last five years; and if he will indicate in each case how many schools there were in that category at the commencement of the five-year period.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information is given in the following table; figures are in respect of schools approved for closure in the year in question:

Calendar year	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989[1]
Number of maintained secondary schools approved for closure	61	53	43	24	43
Total number of maintained secondary schools in 1985	4,382
Number of maintained secondary schools for which proposals were approved for significant change of character
(i) By loss of sixth form	18	46	16	8	27
(ii) Otherwise	13	29	2	27	10
Number of maintained secondary schools for which significant enlargement proposals were approved
(i) Girls' schools	—	—	—	—	1
Total number of maintained girls' secondary schools in 1985	333
(ii) Boys' schools	—	—	—	—	—
Total number of maintained boys' secondary schools in 1985	318
(iii) Mixed schools	2	6	3	5	1
Total number of maintained mixed secondary schools in 1985	3,731
(iv) Voluntary schools	—	2	1	1	1
Total number of maintained voluntary schools in 1985	871
(v) County schools	2	4	2	4	1
Total number of maintained county schools in 1985	3,511

[1] 31 October 1989.

Nursery Education (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number of children under the age of five years who are currently receiving nursery education provided by Bolton education authority; and what was the figure 10 years ago.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of children under five attending maintained nursery schools and classes in Bolton in January 1989 and January 1979 are as follows:

January 1989: 2,785.
January 1979: 1,941.

Safety (London Schools)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the safety of school buildings in London, following the death of Richard Cooney at Sir James Barrie primary school, Battersea, on 23 November.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I was greatly saddened to hear of this tragic accident. I understand that the Inner London education authority, which is responsible for the safety of school premises in inner London, is preparing a report on the incident. I am asking the Inner London education authority to make a copy of its report available to my hon. Friend.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Seat Belts

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) males and (b) females, aged (i) under 16, (ii) 16 to 18, (iii) 19 to 21, (iv) 22 to 24, (v) 24 to 30 and (vi) 30 years and over were (aa) charged and (bb) convicted of failure to wear a seat belt in each month in 1987, 1988 and to date in 1989 in England and Wales; what percentage the latter was of the former; and what was the average fine;

(2) how many (a) males and (b) females, aged (i) under 16, (ii) 16 to 18, (iii) 19 to 21, (iv) 22 to 24, (v) 24 to 30 and (vi) 30 years and over were (aa) charged and (bb) convicted of failure to war a seat belt in each month in 1987, 1988 and to date in 1989 in the Basildon area; what percentage the latter was of the former; and what was the average fine.

Mr. John Patten: Breaches of regulations requiring wearing of seat belts are normally fixed penalty offences. The amount of the fixed penalty was £12 during 1987 and 1988, but the motorist could opt instead for court proceedings.

The table gives the number of court proceedings and convictions for each month in 1987 and 1988 in England and Wales and for Billericay petty sessional division; details for the Basildon area are not available. Separate figures are shown for males and females and an age breakdown is given; no sub-division of those aged 21 and over is available. Data for 1989 are not yet available.

In 1987 and 1988, the proportion of those charged who were convicted was 77 per cent. in England and Wales and 90 per cent. in the Billericay petty sessional division. The average fined for those offenders fines were £15 and £16 respectively.

Proceedings at Magistrates' Courts for seat belt offences, Billericay

	Under 16		16-18		19-20		21 and over		Total
	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female
Proceedings
1987
January	—	—	—	—	—	—	3	—	3	—
February	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—
March	—	—	1	—	—	—	4	—	5	—
April	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—
May	—	—	1	—	—	—	1	—	2	—
June	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—
July	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
August	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—
September	—	—	1	—	—	—	1	—	2	—
October	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—
November	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
December	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	1	—
Total	—	—	3	—	1	—	19	—	23	—
1988
January	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—
February	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
March	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
April	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
May	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—
June	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—
July	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—
August	—	—	—	—	1	—	2	—	3	—
September	—	—	—	—	1	—	2	—	3	—
October	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1
November	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	1	—
December	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	1
Total	—	—	—	—	3	1	11	1	14	2
Found guilty
1987
January	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—
February	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—
March	—	—	1	—	—	—	4	—	5	—
April	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—
May	—	—	1	—	—	—	1	—	2	—
June	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—
July	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
August	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—
September	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	1	—
October	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—
November	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
December	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	1	—
Total	—	—	3	—	1	—	16	—	20	—
1987
January	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—
February	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
March	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
April	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
May	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—
June	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—
July	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—
August	—	—	—	—	1	—	2	—	3	—
September	—	—	—	—	1	—	2	—	3	—
October	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1
November	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	1	—
December	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	1
Total	—	—	—	—	3	1	10	1	13	2

Proceedings at magistrates' courts for seat belt offences
England and Wales

	Under 16		16-18		19-20		21 and over		Total
	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female
Proceedings
1987
January	—	—	40	2	84	8	879	80	1,003	90
February	2	—	31	3	76	3	796	72	905	78

	Under 16		16-18		19-20		21 and over		Total
	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female
March	1	—	33	2	52	6	703	52	789	60
April	4	—	27	—	57	2	645	40	723	42
May	—	—	28	5	42	4	550	45	620	54
June	2	—	17	5	58	3	647	50	724	58
July	—	—	25	2	42	1	566	48	633	51
August	1	—	22	5	49	5	519	35	591	45
September	1	—	30	3	54	3	511	34	596	40
October	1	—	33	1	45	10	619	32	698	43
November	2	—	35	—	58	2	564	46	659	48
December	2	—	20	1	50	2	469	34	541	37
Total	16	—	341	29	657	49	7,468	568	8,482	646
1988
January	1	—	20	2	44	1	550	30	615	33
February	3	—	26	—	49	2	543	43	621	45
March	3	—	27	—	62	4	613	55	705	59
April	—	—	32	1	45	3	536	40	613	44
May	1	—	31	—	67	5	559	37	658	42
June	1	—	29	—	51	6	622	49	703	55
July	—	—	29	2	73	1	520	37	622	40
August	2	—	31	4	64	4	601	46	698	54
September	1	—	31	4	48	2	537	42	617	48
October	2	—	27	1	57	2	529	56	615	59
November	3	—	29	—	62	2	575	48	669	50
December	—	—	24	—	34	3	422	29	480	32
Total	17	—	336	14	656	35	6,607	512	7,616	561
Found Guilty
1987
January	—	—	36	—	75	8	743	70	854	78
February	1	—	21	3	62	2	649	64	733	69
March	1	—	30	2	43	6	565	43	639	51
April	3	—	23	—	43	2	513	33	582	35
May	—	—	24	4	40	3	435	37	499	44
June	1	—	13	5	53	2	523	43	590	50
July	—	—	19	2	32	1	469	43	520	46
August	1	—	18	5	42	4	415	28	476	37
September	1	—	27	3	42	2	432	30	502	35
October	1	—	25	1	39	9	490	27	555	37
November	2	—	30	—	42	2	468	38	542	40
December	2	—	18	1	41	2	381	31	442	34
Total	13	—	284	26	554	43	6,083	487	6,934	556
1988
January	1	—	16	2	35	—	426	26	478	28
February	3	—	23	—	41	1	446	39	513	40
March	2	—	24	—	49	4	513	46	588	50
April	—	—	29	1	42	2	442	36	513	39
May	1	—	28	—	53	5	475	31	557	36
June	1	—	26	—	45	6	511	42	583	48
July	—	—	29	2	66	1	434	34	529	37
August	2	—	27	4	56	4	502	43	587	51
September	1	—	26	4	42	2	451	36	520	42
October	2	—	25	1	47	2	442	52	516	55
November	3	—	25	—	52	2	465	47	545	49
December	—	—	22	—	29	2	351	24	402	26
Total	16	—	300	14	557	31	5,458	456	6,331	501

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) males and (b) females, aged (i) under 16, (ii) 16 to 18, (iii) 19 to 21, (iv) 22 to 24, (v) 24 to 30 and (vi) 30 years and over were sent to prison for failure to pay a fine for not wearing a seat belt in (aa) England and Wales and (bb) the Basildon area in each month since 1987.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Discrimination

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will consider whether there should be further general guidelines as to the amount of an award of damages for compensation for injury to feelings in cases brought under the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 and the Race Relations Act 1976 following the decisions of the Court of Appeal in Alexander v. Home Office and Noone v. North West Thames regional health authority.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend considers it neither necessary nor appropriate for him to issue any such guidelines.

Probation Service

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to monitor the effectiveness of the probation service's action plans during the next two years.

Mr. John Patten: The effectiveness of the probation service's action plans will be monitored by analysis of national sentencing and probation statistics, with special reference to young adult offenders; by the collection of core monitoring data from probation areas which are establishing intensive probation programmes; and by detailed research projects funded by the Home Office in five probation areas. Good progress is being made.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many action plans he has received from probation services in England and Wales during the course of 1989.

Mr. John Patten: Action plans have been received from 55 of the 56 probation areas. No action plan has been received from the City of London probation service.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the aims and objectives of the probation service's action plans.

Mr. John Patten: In general the action plans have the following aims and objectives: improving the presentation to courts of proposals for supervising offenders under non-custodial orders; confronting offending behaviour and reducing the risk of further offending; improving co-operation and co-ordination between different local services which can contribute to effective supervision; and improving information systems within the probation service for monitoring the effectiveness of their work with the courts and with offenders.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to increase the resources available to the probation service during the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have provided for the following increase in specific grant payable to local authorities in support of current and capital expenditure on the probation service:

millions

1989-90 £	1990-91 £	1991-92 £
184	206	223

The Government also plan to increase their capital and current expenditure on probation and bail hostels from £22 million in 1989-90 to £24 million in 1990-91 and £28·1 million in 1991-92. Between 1979-80 and 1988-89 there has been a 51 per cent. increase in expenditure on the probation service.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will identify the number of cases in the last year in which the child has been removed from the home instead of the abuser.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

Information available centrally relates solely to the number of children for whom a place of safety order was made and where the local authority was responsible, or where the local authority made provision for a child removed on the authority of some other person or body. The most recently published information is in "Private Fostering and Place of Safety Orders in the year ended 31 March 1988: England" and is available in the Library. Provisional estimates for the year ended 31 March 1989 are that there were 7,100 children subject to such orders.

Statistics are not available centrally about whether the suspected abuser was part of the household.

Birmingham Six

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that members of the Legal Affairs Committee of the European Parliament, in their inquiry into the conviction of the Birmingham Six, are given full access to information about those west midlands police force members who at the time were members of the recently disbanded regional crime squad.

Mr. Waddington: I understand that the Legal Affairs Committee has not yet decided whether to conduct such an inquiry, and if so, what its terms of reference should be. We believe it would be wholly inappropriate for the European Parliament to inquire into the convictions of the Birmingham Six, which are within national competence.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Private Advisers

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rules or guidelines govern the use by Government Departments of paid advisers or consultants from the private sector.

Mr. Ryder: Central terms and conditions and guidance, supplemented as appropriate by individual Departments, govern the use by Government Departments of paid advisers or consultants from the private sector.

Special advisers are appointed by Ministers under terms and conditions of service which in the main are the same as for civil servants. They are used by Ministers as considered necessary subject to those terms and conditions.

Guidance on the use of consultants is contained in the establishement officers guide. For management consultancy this is supplemented by the Treasury's "Seeking Help from Management Consultants" booklet. Other central advice is also provided, by, for example, the Treasury's central unit on purchasing for works consultants and by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency for computer consultancies.

Government Purchasing

Mr. Burt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress is being made in implementing the report, "Government Purchasing", of December 1984.

Mr. Ryder: A report by the central unit on purchasing on progress in Government purchasing during 1988-89 is published today. It records that central Government Departments (excluding the Ministry of Defence) reported value-for-money improvements in their purchasing totalling over £350 million equivalent to 5·3 per cent. of total reported expenditure. This represents an increase of over £100 million, or 1·4 percentage points, over last year's achievement and exceeds the 5 per cent. target originally set by Ministers.

For 1989-90, these Departments have set targets for value-for-money improvements totalling about £450 million, equivalent to over 6 per cent. of expenditure. Greater emphasis is being given to monitoring Departments' current performance within this target, with a separate and sharper focus on value for money improvements arising from actions taken by Departments during the year. The purchasing initiative has now resulted in value for money improvements equivalent to some £850 million during the period 1985-86 to 1988-89.

A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Import Penetration

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the proportion of imports of semi-manufactures bought by manufacturing industry; and what is the ratio of imports of consumer goods to United Kingdom production of consumer goods.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 28 November 1989]: No estimates exist giving the proportion of imports of semi-manufactures bought by manufacturing industry, or of the ratio of imports of consumer goods to United Kingdom production of consumer goods. To derive these estimates would involved disproportionate costs.

THE ARTS

National Plan

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what input his Department is making into the drafting of the national plan Her Majesty's Government will offer to the European Community in 1990.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 27 November 1989]: I am not aware of such a plan.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Derbyshire were employed in 1979; and how many were employed in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information on a comparable basis for Derbyshire is from censuses of employment taken in September 1981 and September 1987. There were 334,900 employees in employment in September 1981 and 342,500 in September 1987. These figures exclude the self-employed and members of Her Majesty's forces.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the recent fall in unemployment in the northern region.

Mr. Nicholls: The following information is available in the Library. In the 12 months to October 1989 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the north fell by 35,000, or 21 per cent. Unemployment in the north is now at its lowest level for nearly nine years, as it is in the country as a whole.

Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many EC countries that operate quota schemes have been visited by his officials in the course of their consideration of measures to help disabled people secure employment.

Mr. Eggar: My officials are in regular contact with their European counterparts in the disability field and have access to information about provision in all EC countries including those which operate quota schemes. This information is being fully taken into account in the review of services for people with disabilities which my Department is undertaking.

National Council for Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are taken to ensure that the National Council for Vocational Qualifications is doing sufficient to set standards for training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The National Council for Vocational Qualifications does not itself have responsibility for setting standards for training, although it has an important role in approving qualifications based upon standards.

Encouraging the development of occupational standards and the nationally recognised vocational qualifications based upon them is a key objective of the Training Agency. It carries out this remit by providing specialist advice, and financial assistance to almost 150 lead bodies each responsible for developing, implementing and maintaining standards and qualifications for the occupational area it represents. The Training Agency is confident that this will lead to standards being available by 1991 up to NCVQ level IV for at least 90 per cent. of the employed population.

Benefit Office (Hackney)

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to visit the unemployment benefit office in Hackney.

Mr. Eggar: There are two unemployment benefit offices serving the Hackney area. Neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State nor I have any current plans to visit them.

Enterprise Agencies

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many enterprise agencies have been set up; how many more are under consideration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We know of 415 local enterprise agencies operating in the United Kingdom. Of these, 396 are approved by my Department under the statutory provisions which allow for tax relief on donations to them.

Enterprise agencies are independent organisations set up locally, usually through members of the business community, local authority or others. Currently there are no applications for approval being considered.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of its planned programme of basic inspections the Health and Safety Executive area office 17 in Merseyside has achieved in the half year from 1 April to 31 October; and how many visits were involved in total.

Mr. Nicholls: The plan of the Health and Safety Executive's factory inspectorate is based on proportions of time to be spent on different aspects of its work. In the half year from 1 April to 30 September 1989 inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive's Merseyside area office made 2,910 preventive inspection visits which is 111·9 per cent. of the number of visits which it was estimated would be carried out in the period.

Protection of Employment

Mr. Tom Clarke To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to extend the protection of employment rights to those at work.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to extend the employment protection legislation.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rural Roads

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the £25 million announced by the Under-Secretary of State at the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, on Friday 10 November for rural roads provision over the next six years will be spent in the Newry and Mourne district council area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The reference was to funding of a programme of measures to improve the strategic road network in Northern Ireland. Approximately 40 per cent. of this programme relates to the Newry and Mourne district council area.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the £25 million announced by the Under-Secretary of State at the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, on Friday 10 November for rural roads provision over the next six years will be spent in the Down district council area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The reference was to the funding of a programme of measures to improve the strategic road network in Northern Ireland. None of this programme relates to the Down district council area.

Slieve Croob, Dromara

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what inspections were carried out by the Department of the Environment's town and country planning service on the site of the building currently under construction at Slieve Croob, Dromara in South Down.

Mr. Needham: None.

Roads Expenditure

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the capital expenditure on roads provision in Down district council in each year from 1 April 1977 until 31 March 1989.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Capital expenditure on roads, and associated road lighting and car park provision was as follows:

	£'000's
1977-78	612
1978-79	984
1979-80	1,350
1980-81	1,083
1981-82	426
1982-83	305
1983-84	380
1984-85	424
1985-86	369
1986-87	478
1987-88	419
1988-89	486

Roads Expenditure

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the capital expenditure on roads provision in each of the years from 1 April 1977 until 31 March 1989 in the Newry and Mourne district council area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Capital expenditure on roads and associated road lighting and car park provision was as follows:

£'000s

Year	Number
1977-78	1,219
1978-79	1,246
1979-80	2,018
1980-81	1,186
1981-82	827
1982-83	908
1983-84	1,912
1984-85	1,892
1985-86	1,839
1986-87	1,968
1987-88	2,113
1988-89	1,310

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the capital expenditure on roads provision in the constituency of South Down in each year since 1 April 1977 until 31 March 1989.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Roads functions in Northern Ireland are not administered on a constituency basis. Information is not held in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the planning application was submitted and approved in respect of the building currently under construction at Slieve Croob, Dromara in South Down at the divisional planning office in Craigavon.

Mr. Needham: This is Crown development, which does not require planning permission.

Hospices

The Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to give financial support to hospices in Northern Ireland similar to the proposals recently announced by the Scottish Office for hospices in Scotland.

Mr. Needham: Arrangements for financial support for independent hospices in the United Kingdom have been under careful consideration for some time and my noble Friend the Minister with special responsibility for the Department of Health and Social Services hopes to be in a position to make a statement on the way forward in Northern Ireland in the near future.

Quarrying

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what expressions of public concern he has received about a planning application in respect of a proposed quarrying operation on land in the vicinity of the Ballybarnos road, Newtownards; if he will ensure that there is full consultations with Ards borough council about the application; and if he will arrange a public inquiry before a final planning decision is issued.

Mr. Needham: Nine letters of objection have been received in respect of the quarry extension application. The DOE (NI) will ensure full consultation with Ards borough council before a decision is taken. A public inquiry will not be held.

Level Crossings

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement as to the practical consequences of the revocation of the No. 315 Road and Railway Transport Statutory Rules 1989 relating to the level crossing at Bushmills road, Coleraine.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The level crossing will remain as it is until the new road improvement scheme being carried out in conjunction with Northern Ireland Railways' scheme for modernising the crossing is completed.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the allocation to individual programmes in Northern Ireland of the public expenditure totals announced on 15 November.

Mr. Brooke: In his Autumn Statement on 15 November, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced total public expenditure planning figures for the Northern Ireland programme. I have now decided on the following allocations to individual programmes:

£ million

Programme	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Northern Ireland Office:
Law, Order, Protective and Miscellaneous Services	684	730	780
NI Departments:
Northern Ireland Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Services and Support	113	110	120
Industry Trade and Employment	481	440	440
Energy	−35	−70	−110
Transport	162	170	180
Housing	248	250	260
Environmental and Miscellaneous Services	243	250	260
Law, Order and Protective Services (Fire Service)	32	30	30
Education	989	1,040	1,080
Health and Personal Social Services	1,035	1,090	1,140
Social Security Administration	117	120	120
Other Public Services	68	70	80
TOTAL NI BLOCK (excluding Social Security Benefits)	4,136	4,270	4,380
Social Security Benefits	1,751	1,900	2,010
TOTAL NI BLOCK	5,887	6,170	6,390
National Agriculture and Fishery Support	81	70	70
TOTAL NORTHERN IRELAND PROGRAMME	5,968	6,240	6,460

Notes:

(1)Figures are rounded to nearest £1 million for 1990-91 and to the nearest £10 million for 1991-92 and 1992-93. Figures may not sum to totals due to roundings.

(2) Figures for the Industry, Trade and Employment programme include support for capital investment and restructuring costs of Shorts and Harland and Wolff, following their privatisation.

(3) Figures for the Energy programme are negative because it is anticipated that in the years concerned NIE will be repaying loans to Government: while it is Government's intention that NIE should be privatised early in 1992, work is at an early stage and the PE plans for the energy programme for 1992-93 have not yet been adjusted to reflect the proposed privatisation.

(4) Figures for Social Security administration also include district councils' share of rate rebates.

The planning figures for 1990-91 form the basis for preparation by Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office of main estimates for the coming year. These will be presented to Parliament in due course.

The allocations reflect my assessment of how best to distribute the Northern Ireland public expenditure totals in response to local needs and circumstances. Copies of a more detailed statement on these allocations have been placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

TRANSPORT

M6 (Truck Stops)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the provision of truck stops or lorry parks close to the M6; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: There have been several representations to the Department about the proposed truck stop at Lymm on the M6. Representations have come from the developers of the proposed truck stop, from local residents, from the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) and from my hon. Friend himself, in whose constituency the proposed development lies.

More general representations have also been made about adequacy of service facilities for heavy goods vehicles on motorways. If my hon. Friend has any other specific questions in mind about truck stops in relation to M6, perhaps he will write to me.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being taken to ensure that an integrated transport system is established so that all parts of the country benefit from the opening of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: Good road and rail links to the Channel tunnel will be available when it opens. Users will have a choice of modes to suit their needs. British Rail will shortly be publishing a plan setting out its current proposals for Channel tunnel passenger and freight services in accordance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many houses are directly under the flight paths to (a) Glasgow (b) Edinburgh and (c) Prestwick airports;

(2) if he will detail the noise abatement procedures in operation at Glasgow and Edinburgh airports;

(3) if he will give the number of chapter 2 type aircraft using (a) Prestwick, (b) Edinburgh and (c) Glasgow airports at present;

(4) if he will list the regulations governing noise pollution in the areas surrounding Glasgow and Edinburgh airports;

(5) what are the present noise limits in operation at Glasgow and Edinburgh airports; when these limits were set; and when they were last reviewed;

(6) what surveys his Department has made into the effect of vibration on houses on the flight paths to Glasgow airport;

(7) what was the number of payments made under the noise insulation grants scheme for each of the last five years in the Glasgow and Edinburgh areas.

Mr. McLoughlin: These are all matters for the operators of the airports concerned.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of aircraft landing and taking off from Glasgow airport between the hours of 11 pm and 7 am during the last year.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on night aircraft movements at Glasgow (between the hours of 11.30 pm and 6 am) is available from Glasgow Airport Limited. I understand that in the year to April 1989 the figure was 2,294, of which 1,843 were jet aircraft.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on studies into the effects of aircraft noise in the Glasgow area since 1986.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am aware of no such studies.

Rail Electrification (East Midlands)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in the past year seeking his approval for the electrification of British Rail's east midlands line.

Mr. Portillo: We have received some 20 such representations.

Motorcyclists (Leg Protectors)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement of the compulsory introduction of leg protectors for motorcyclists.

Mr. Atkins: Over 3,000 serious injuries to motorcyclists a year would be prevented with properly designed leg protectors. That represents a huge sum of pain, disfigurement and personal financial loss. We want manufacturers to design and offer them to motorcyclists who want better protection from accidents. No decision has been taken about any legislative option.

Bermuda 2A Negotiations

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the principles upon which Britain has entered the current round of negotiations under Bermuda 2A.

Mr. McLoughlin: We shall be asking the United States Government to address the broad question of a thorough liberalisation of air services arrangements between our two countries and we shall also be seeking a balanced exchange of opportunities to meet the shorter term ambitions of the airlines of both sides.

Road Construction (Safety)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what safety initiatives he has reseafched for the construction of new roads.

Mr. Atkins: There is a continuing programme of research into methods of improving road safety. The results are applied to existing as well as to new roads.

Recent safety research has resulted in improvements to traffic signs and signals; better road layout and junction design; skid resistant surfaces; more widespread use of safety fencing; and better road markings. In addition, following research, the Department will shortly be introducing systematic independent safety audits of the design of its new roads.

Avonmouth Relief Road

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the results of the recent public consultations on the proposed Avonmouth relief road.

Mr. Atkins: Over 650 people attended the public exhibition held between 8 and 11 November. Some comments have been received, but more are expected before the close of the consultation period on 31 December. After due consideration has been given to all the representations, a further announcement will be made.

Air Traffic

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made to integrate Europe's air traffic control.

Mr. McLoughlin: The United Kingdom's proposals for the integration of Europe's air traffic control were well received at the first meeting of the European civil aviation conference task force held on 3 November. These are now being developed by the task force with a view to the presentation of proposals to the Ministers of the European civil aviation conference next spring.

Irish Lights

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representation Northern Ireland has within the controlling body of Irish Lights; how such persons are appointed; and what is the authority for Irish Lights to require payment to it of light dues by fishing boats based in Northern Ireland ports.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Commissioners of Irish Lights is the statutory general lighthouse authority charged with the superintendence and management of all lighthouses, buoys and beacons around the whole of Ireland. Their powers in Northern Ireland and the Republic are similar and were vested in them under part XI of the Merchant Shipping Act 1894. This legislation remains in force in Northern Ireland and has a parallel counterpart in the statutes of the Republic. Irish Lights commissioners are appointed by the CIL board, and currently three of the commissioners are from Northern Ireland. The light dues liability of United Kingdom fishing vessels is contained in regulations made by the Secretary of State under section 5(2) of the Merchant Shipping (Mercantile Marine Fund) Act 1898. The relevant regulations are SI 1987 No. 746, SI 1988 No. 330 and SI 1989 No. 305. The general lighthouse authorities are required to levy such dues under section 5(1) of the 1898 Act.

M5

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the purpose of the lane closures on the west bound carriageway of the M5, between junctions 25 and 26; how long the closures are expected to last; what other closures are planned for the near future on this stretch of motorway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The current lane closures are required to enable localised maintenance operations to be carried out. This work should be completed within a few days.

No further closures are planned in the near future. However, I hope to award a contract next spring for the replacement of a further length of the concrete carriageway.

M11 Link Road

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will extend the times of the current M11 link road public inquiry beyond Tuesday to Friday 10 am to 5 pm to allow residents whose homes are likely to be affected by the proposed road, and who work at these times, to participate fully; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether creche facilities will be made available at the current public inquiry into the proposed M11 link road; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether interpreting facilities will be made available at the public inquiry now under way, for residents whose first language is not English, and whose homes are likely to be affected by the proposed M11 link road; and if he will make a statement;

(4) whether the scope of the current public inquiry into the proposed M11 link road will be widened beyond consideration of compulsory purchase orders and exchange of land, to include consideration of the views of people whose homes are likely to be affected by the proposed road and who have moved into the area since the earlier public inquiry several years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The inspector conducting the public inquiry is an independent nominee of the Lord Chancellor. The inspector alone is responsible for conduct of the inquiry.

The inspector has already given a written ruling at the inquiry on points of procedure. The representations dealt with by this ruling included those relating to the scope of the inquiry, evening sessions, creche facilities and translators.

Peterlee

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will travel by car on an official visit from London to Peterlee via the M1, M18, A1M, A1 and A19 and then make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have no plans to visit Peterlee in the near future. But if the opportunity arises to inspect any of the roads referred to, I will of course do so.

Fishing Boat Loss

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements are being made for an inquiry into the loss of the fishing boat Flamingo off Lamorna on 24 November; whether the findings of the inquiry will be published in full; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The loss of the Grey Flamingo is being investigated by the marine accident investigation branch. A report will be published which will include the inspector's findings in full.

Coastguard Service

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of any telex messages dated 16 August between Milford Haven coastguard and Swansea coastguard, together with a copy of any forms CG15, CG19 and CG21 used at Swansea coastguard on that day.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer Monday 27 November]: Following the coroner's inquest in September on the death by drowning of Mark Woodward on 16 August, Mr. J. Smith, a relative of the deceased, has written to the coroner stating that he has new evidence to hand. In view of the contents of this letter, the coroner has requested the police to carry out an investigation into the case. The police have asked that no documentary evidence be made available to third parties until the investigation is complete.

SCOTLAND

Railways

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet the chairman of ScotRail to discuss the electrification of the Edinburgh-Glasgow rail link.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the chairman of the British Rail (Scotland) Board from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest. But decisions on electrification are for British Rail, working within guidelines set by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Prisoners

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each year since 1986, the average daily prison population in Scotland per 100,000 inhabitants distinguishing between convicted and untried prisoners.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table.

Average daily prison population in Scotland per 100,000 population

Year	Convicted	Untried
1986	94	16
1987	92	15
[1]1988	89	14

[1] Provisional.

Law of Damages

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Scottish Law Commission will complete its review of the civil law of damages in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I asked the Scottish Law Commission in mid-September to consider the case for amending the law of damages in Scotland having regard to the possibility that there may be an incentive in the present law for a defender to postpone making settlement until after the death of the pursuer to minimise the amount of any compensation. The commission has accorded the matter priority and hopes to issue a discussion paper in 1990. It is too early to say when the commission's report will be completed.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will introduce interim measures in civil litigation in actions for damages for personal injuries (a) to prevent defenders seeking to delay hearings, (b) to allow courts to increase an award of damages where it is considered that there has been a deliberate use of delay by defenders in preventing cases from coming to a hearing, submissions of appeals on spurious grounds, or otherwise, (c) to encourage realistic settlements of claims at an early stage and (d) to permit executors to pursue claims for personal injuries of a deceased family member.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. Interim measures on these lines would be inappropriate. Under existing provisions, the Court of Session or the sheriff may—by an award of expenses, or otherwise—act to prevent a party abusing court procedures by unreasonable delay. In addition, interest is payable on damages from the date when the claimant's loss occurred. However, the Scottish Law Commission has been asked to consider the case for amending the law of damages in Scotland having regard to the possibility that defenders may delay an action to minimise the amount of compensation payable in the event of the claimant's death before conclusion of the action.

British Medical Association

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will institute an investigation to find out the source of the leak of the confidential British Medical Association correspondence to The Sunday Times, Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The correspondence concerned was not marked confidential and I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I have given today to the hon. Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker).

Employment Training

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many inspectors examine employment training schemes, by region in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Training Agency has 115 staff in Scotland monitoring training agents and training managers, and six training standards inspectors. Financial checks on all employment training providers are carried out by the Training Agency's professional accountant. The Training Agency also employs independent consultants to undertake a range of quality development tasks. The activities of many of these staff cross regional boundaries and it is therefore impossible to give a regional breakdown.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any recent representations regarding the operation of the employment training scheme in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: In the last six months my right hon. and learned Friend has received 10 representations about the operation of employment training in Scotland.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the bodies in Scotland which have been asked to make improvements in their performance to comply with the terms of their contract under the employment training scheme.

Mr. Lang: I cannot provide details of individual training agents and training managers who have been asked to improve their performance because the terms of contract with these organisations require such communications to be treated as commercial in confidence.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of trainees in the employment training scheme in Scotland go into full-time employment; what proportion leave the scheme and return to unemployment; and how many instructors have the appropriate qualifications for the supervisory work that they undertake.

Mr. Lang: At present information about employment training trainees in Scotland who find full-time employment or return to unemployment is unavailable. A 100 per cent. follow-up survey which will provide such data is now under way.

All supervisory staff of employment training providers are required to be competent to undertake such work and these training providers are expected to have plans to develop and update the skills of their staff.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to monitor the effectiveness of the employment training scheme in Scotland; and if he has any proposals to improve the current level of accountability of all training agencies in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Under the approved training organisations scheme, the ability of each training organisation to meet the Training Agency's quality requirements is being assessed. All training organisations that wish to continue as employment training providers will be expected to achieve approved training organisation status.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how frequently inspections are made of employment training schemes in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Frequent visits to training agents and training managers are undertaken by Training Agency staff in accordance with a laid down sampling framework. The frequency of visits will vary and will be governed by agency's confidence in the organisations visited.

Rents-into-Mortgages Scheme

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to extend his rents-into-mortgages scheme to local authority tenants.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The rents to mortgages scheme introduced by Scottish Homes is a trial scheme which is intended to run for three years, during which it will be subject to very careful monitoring and a full evaluation to ensure that any changes in content or in application which might be appropriate can be made as soon as possible.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to use television advertising to promote his rents-into-mortgages scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. The experimental scheme now in operation is restricted in application to a specified group of tenants. Promotion of the scheme will be through a careful targeting of that group of tenants, rather than through the widespread publicity of a television campaign.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the estates owned by Scottish Homes, showing their locations; and if he will estimate the average income of eligible tenants for participation in the rents-into-mortgages scheme for those estates.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Homes owns houses in some 600 locations in Scotland. I will write to my hon. Friend with the list shortly.

We have no information on tenants' incomes in these areas on which to base an estimate of the average income of those tenants eligible for participation in the rents to mortgages scheme.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of applications he has received to date from eligible tenants wishing to convert their rents into mortgages.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Applications are made to Scottish Homes which is the body responsible for the operation of the scheme. As at 27 November one application from an eligible tenant has been received by that body.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of inquiries since 30 October which have been received from eligible tenants willing to convert their rents into mortgages.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since my right hon. and learned Friend's announcement of the formal launch of the scheme on 30 October, at least 360 inquiries have been received.

At this stage we have insufficient information on the persons making these inquiries to enable us to say what percentage are eligible to purchase under the rents to mortgages scheme.

Scottish Homes (Sales)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of Scottish Homes dwellings were sold prior to 30 October.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of Scottish Homes dwellings sold prior to 30 October 1989 was 3,566, representing 4·8 per cent. of the dwellings inherited by that body on 1 April 1989.

Health Service

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce which hospitals are to become independent hospital trusts.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend will consider each initial proposal carefully before deciding whether to seek a full application, and announcements will be made as decisions are taken.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money was raised in prescription charges in Scotland in each year from 1979-80 to 1987-88; and into what fund these receipts are paid.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total amounts raised from prescription charges in Scotland were as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	4·247
1980-81	7·597
1981-82	9·879

	£ million
1982-83	11·805
1983-84	12·798
1984-85	13·976
1985-86	15·313
1986-87	18·869
1987-88	17·233

The prescription charges collected in Scotland in the family practitioner services are credited to class XVI, vote 17, subheads A2 and AZ.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of his latest negotiations with the British Medical Association with regard to general practitioner contracts in Scotland; and if he will publish the British Medical Association's latest letters on this matter.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 24 November 1989]: Formal negotiations with the British Medical Association on the new contract for general practitioners culminated in the agreement reached with the GMSC negotiators on 4 May. Since then, and despite the rejection of that agreement by a number of doctors, there has been extensive consultation with the British Medical Association, including the Scottish General Medical Services Committee, on the draft regulations, statement of fees and allowances and other matters relating to the implementation of the new contract. Within the terms of the 4 May agreement, I remain willing to consider any matters affecting the detailed implementation of the contract in Scotland which the SGMSC may wish to draw to my attention to take account of the particular circumstances of doctors in Scotland. These have been the subject of correspondence between me or officials and the British Medical Association. I have arranged for copies of the latest letters from the chariman of the Scottish General Medical Services Committee to be placed in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufactured Goods (Imports)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the increase in import penetration of manufactured goods from 1979 until the first quarter of the current year.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 1 November 1989, at column 258.

Task Force (Leicester)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the current position of the task force which he established in Leicester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Highfields (Leicester) task force closed its doors on 31 October after closure was announced on 9 March this year.

A number of projects will continue to receive financial and other forms of support over the next 12 months. These include a construction skills training centre, and a public-private sector inner city partnership which will act as a focal point for encouraging enterprise development locally. I will be in Leicester on 1 December to launch the partnership.

Trade Deficit (West Germany)

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the manufacturing trade deficit with West Germany.

Mr. Redwood: In the first nine months of 1989 imports of manufactures into the United Kingdom consigned from the Federal Republic of Germany exceeded United Kingdom exports to that country by £7,411 million.

South Africa

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the trend of trade with South Africa in recent years by (a) the United Kingdom (b) Canada, (c) Australia, (d) New Zealand and (e) India.

Mr. Redwood: Shares of these countries in South Africa's total trade in the five years to 1988 are as follows:

South Africa Trade [1]
Percentage Shares by Partner Country

	United Kingdom	Australia	New Zealand	Canada	India
1984	7·4	0·9	0·1	0·9	NA
1985	8·3	0·8	0·1	0·8	NA
1986	7·5	0·7	0·1	1·1	NA
1987	7·1	0·6	0·1	0·6	NA
1988	7·4	0·4	0·1	0·5	NA

[1]exports plus imports not available
Source: IMF Direction of Trade Statistics.

Shops (Closing Down Offers)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any representations concerning shops which misrepresent their closing down in order to attract custom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: There have been few complaints to date about the misrepresentation of closing down sales.

This term would normally imply a comparison with a previous, higher price at which goods were on offer. Any misrepresentation may therefore be considered an offence under the provisions of part III of the Consumer Protection Act 1987. I believe that this legislation provides sufficient safeguards for consumers.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice his Department is issuing to businesses to help them develop trading links with countries in eastern Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The advice given depends on the needs and circumstances of individual businesses. My Department provides information about the economic changes in eastern Europe and their implications, and about specific opportunities for business and investment. Companies are encouraged to make full use of existing mechanisms for undertaking market research and pursuing identified opportunities. These include Government-supported joint commissions, sectoral working groups, seminars, missions and exhibitions, as well as the know-how fund for Poland which is administered by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The know-how fund announced for Hungary will open in April.

Giro Bank

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of the Giro bank.

Mr. Forth: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 27 November.

Subsidy

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much direct subsidy was paid by (a) the United Kingdom Government, (b) the Italian Government and (c) the French Government to their domestic industry in 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I regret that comparable figures for 1987 are not yet available. According to the European Commission, in 1986, the United Kingdom gave £1·9 billion, France £3·6 billion, Germany £4·8 billion and Italy £16 billion (or nine times as much as the United Kingdom). Average 1981-86 figures are as follows:

Aids to manufacturing industry (excluding steel and shipbuilding) Average 1981-86

(a) Percentage of value added United Kingdom	(b) £ per worker France	(c) ECU per worker Italy
(a) 2·9	3·6	15·8
(b) 448	724	3,523
(c) 757	1,223	5,951

Source: Survey of state aids—European Commission.

European Community

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet European Economic Community Ministers to discuss trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I intend to maintain close contact with all my EC counterparts, and a whole range of matters will be discussed.

Footwear and Textiles

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many firms closed in the (a) footwear and (b) textile industry for each year since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not available.

MFA (Silberston Report)

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Silberston report on the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 19 October 1989, of column 176. The Government have received comments on the Silberston report from a number of organisations and these are now being considered.

Sales (Capacity Constraints)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which industries wholly or mainly engaged in manufacturing importable and exportable goods were unable to increase sales to the United Kingdom market in 1988 because of capacity constraints; and if he will provide similar figures for 1989 to date.

Mr. Redwood: Information on capacity constraints can be found in the results of the quarterly industrial trends surveys carried out by the Confederation of British Industry, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library. Decisions as to whether to use available capacity to supply the home or the export market are matters for individual firms to decide on commercial grounds.

Estate Agents

Mr Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what would be the cost to the Exchequer of implementing section 22 of the Estate Agents Act 1979;

(2) when he expects to give a considered response to the recommendation of Professor Likierman on the implementation of section 22 of the Estate Agents Act 1979;

(3) whether he has consulted the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors, the National Association of Estate Agents, the Incorporated Society of Valuers and Auctioneers, and the Law Society regarding the main conclusions of the Likierman report;

(4) whether he plans to implement the recommendation in the Likierman report, that estate agents should be brought under greater control through tests of competence.

Mr. Forth: The arguments for and against implementation of section 22 of the Estate Agents Act 1979 were examined in the review of estate agency which I completed in June. I decided against implementation for reasons which are set out in my report, copies of which are in the Library. The Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors, the National Association of Estate Agents, the Incorporated Society of Valuers and Auctioneers and the Law Society were all consulted in the course of my review. Accordingly, I have no plans to consult these bodies about the recommendation in the Likierman report on section 22. No estimate has been made of the cost to the Exchequer of implementing section 22.

European Business Co-operative Network

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on how many companies subscribe to the European business co-operation network.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 27 November 1989]: At the end of each month, the Commission publishes figures on the number and types of companies subscribing to the business co-operation network (BC-Net). The latest set of statistics available, published at the end of October 1989, show that there are currently 5,604 subscribers, of which 23·9 per cent. are United Kingdom companies.

Inspections

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the Guinness plc inspectors to complete their inspection.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 28 November 1989]: Not before the conclusion of the criminal proceedings.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the James Ferguson (Holdings) plc inspectors completed their inspection; and how much it cost.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 28 November 1989]: The inspection is continuing together with that into Barlow Clowes Gilt Managers Limited. Their combined cost to date is £1,216,085.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what regional preferential assistance, including regional selective assistance, is in (a) cash terms and (b) 1988-89 process, as (i) the outturn for each financial year since 1978-79, (ii) plans for 1990-91, (iii) 1991-92 and 1992-93 and (iv) these figures broken down by region.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money has been spent in real terms in each eligible standard planning region of the United Kingdom on regional preferential assistance in each year from 1978-79 to 1988-89.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will outline, in constant prices, the total Government spending on regional policy in the United Kingdom for the period 1979 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 24 and 27 November 1989]: The information requested for the financial years 1978-79 to 1988-89 is set out below. Information on provision for future years will be published in the public expenditure White Paper in January 1990.

Table 1
Government expenditure on regional preferential assistance to industry at current prices[1]

£ million

Region	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
Northern	158·9	147·8	145·4	175·1	158·5	124·7	122·2	94·4	137·1	108·7	133·2
Yorkshire and Humberside	37·4	32·1	52·2	61·6	52·9	35·5	41·9	34·3	41·4	38·6	49·9
East Midlands[3]	3·4	4·1	4·6	8·6	13·7	17·6	10·1	8·3	10·5	9·3	8·9
South West	9·6	10·7	11·5	14·8	16·4	11·9	13·7	11·8	22·2	14·7	14·5
West Midlands[4]	0·4	0·1	—	—	—	—	—	5·5	10·0	18·8	25·5
North West	[6]114·0	[6]86·7	[6]130·2	[6]174·8	[6]123·8	[6]104·2	101·6	85·9	128·5	78·6	82·0
England	323·7	281·5	343·9	434·9	365·3	293·9	289·5	240·2	349·8	268·7	314·0
Wales	132·1	100·2	171·3	198·1	182·2	116·8	146·0	137·7	150·4	132·2	147·4
Scotland	153·6	130·5	192·8	231·9	369·4	227·8	179·2	204·7	241·6	152·1	151·1
Great Britain[2]	609·4	512·2	708·0	864·9	917·0	638·5	614·6	582·6	741·8	552·9	612·5
Northern Ireland	102·6	108·3	142·5	115·7	153·6	115·0	141·5	158·7	146·7	127·2	125·9
United Kingdom	712·0	620·5	850·5	980·6	1,070·6	753·5	756·1	741·3	888·5	680·1	738·4

Table 2
Government expenditure on regional preferential assistance to industry at 1988–89 prices[1,5]

£ million

Region	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
Northern	347·9	277·2	230·5	253·4	214·1	160·9	149·9	110·0	154·7	116·3	133·2
Yorkshire and Humberside	81·9	60·2	82·8	89·1	71·5	45·8	51·4	40·0	46·7	41·3	49·9
East Midlands[3]	7·4	7·7	7·3	12·4	18·5	22·7	12·4	9·7	11·8	10·0	8·9
South West	21·0	20·1	18·2	21·4	22·2	15·4	16·8	13·7	25·0	15·7	14·5
West Midlands[4]	0·9	0·2	—	—	—	—	—	6·4	11·3	20·1	25·5
North West	[6]249·6	[6]162·6	[6]206·4	[6]253·0	[6]167·2	[6]134·4	124·7	100·1	145·0	84·1	82·0
ENGLAND	708·8	528·0	545·2	629·3	493·5	379·2	355·2	279·9	394·7	287·5	314·0
WALES	289·2	188·0	271·6	286·7	246·1	150·7	179·2	160·4	169·7	141·4	147·4
SCOTLAND	336·3	244·8	305·7	335·6	499·0	293·9	219·9	238·5	272·6	162·7	151·1
GREAT BRITAIN[2]	1,334·2	960·8	1,122·5	1,251·7	1,238·8	823·8	754·2	678·8	837·0	591·6	612·5
NORTHERN IRELAND	224·7	203·1	225·9	167·4	207·5	148·4	173·6	184·9	165·5	136·1	125·9
UNITED KINGDOM	1,558·9	1,163·9	1,348·4	1,419·1	1,446·3	972·2	927·8	863·8	1,002·5	727·7	738·4

[1] All figures are gross and include payments to nationalised industries.
[2] The totals do not always equal the sum of the component parts because of rounding.
[3] Includes some minor expenditure in west midlands in respect of Oswestry TTWA which ceased to be an assisted area in 1982-83.

[4]Certain TTWAS in the west midlands were designated as assisted areas on 29 November 1984.
[5]Expenditure on a 1988-89 price basis for each year is calculated by applying the appropriate deflator to expenditure at current prices.
[6]Includes expenditure in Cumbria, otherwise shown within the totals for the Northern region.

The items included in the expenditure are regional development grants and regional selective assistance; regional enterprise grants; expenditure on land and factories by the English Industrial Estates Corporation, the Scottish and Welsh Development Agencies, the Development Board for Rural Wales, and the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Northern Ireland has a different range of financial incentives available and the items included are Industrial Development Board grants and loans, expenditure on land and factories, standard capital grants and Local Enterprise Development Unit grants and loans.

Israel

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current balance of trade between the United Kingdom and Israel; what the balance of trade is with other countries in the middle east; what steps are taken by his Department to encourage United Kingdom/Israel trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: For the period January to September 1989, the crude visible trade balance between the United Kingdom and Israel was £7 million. The crude balance of the United Kingdom's trade with other countries in the middle east for the same period was as follows:

	£ million
Egypt	86
Syria	−20
Lebanon	21
Jordan	66
Saudi Arabia	1,409
Kuwait	34
Bahrain	54
Qatar	61
Abu Dhabi	70
Dubai	221
Sharjah	19
Oman	174
Yemen North	29
Yemen South	8
Iran	−10
Iraq	305

Her Majesty's Government encourage trade with overseas countries, including Israel, consistent with our international obligations. My Department provides a grant-in-aid to the British Overseas Trade Group for Israel, and the normal range of the Department's services are available to British exporters to Israel.

Iraq

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money has been spent on promoting United Kingdom trade with Iraq for each year since 1979.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 24 November 1989]: Details of DTI programme expenditure on promotion of United Kingdom exports to Iraq are not available for the years 1979-80—1983-84. Net promotional expenditure in subsequent years was as follows:

£000

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Assistance provided under the Outward and Inward Missions, TradeFairs and Seminars Schemes	145·6	122·6	158·7	60·3	238·6	[1]512·2
Overseas Projects Fund expenditure against projects in Iraq	220·7	167·3	42·0	0·0	0·0	[2]220·2
	366·3	289·9	200·7	60·3	238·6	732·4

[1] estimate.
[2] to date.

Forestry Investment

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to review the Financial Services Act 1986, section 76, to permit the marketing of forestry and forestry investment schemes.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 27 November 1989]: It is already possible for regulations to be made under section 76(3) of the Act permitting promotion of commercial forestry schemes otherwise than to the general public. The power to make those regulations has been transferred to the Securities and Investments Board. I am not satisfied that investors' interests would be served by an amendment to the Act permitting these schemes to be promoted to the general public.

Columbus (Polar Platform)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are his expectations regarding the future of the British option for Columbus's polar platform; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 27 November 1989]: Discussions between European Space Agency officials and industry to finalise the design configuration for the Columbus polar platform are under way. These should be completed soon and we are hopeful of a satisfactory outcome.

Records and Publishing

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish tables showing (a) the invisible and (b) the visible imports and exports of (i) the record industry and (ii) the publishing industry for the past five years.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 27 November 1989]: Figures for visible trade are shown in the table. Invisible trade data are not available.

Visible trade 1984-1988

£ million

Year	The record industry		The publishing industry
	Imports	Exports	Imports	Exports
1984	48·5	52·0	285·6	514·2
1985	49·3	69·3	318·9	569·0
1986	55·6	75·6	325·0	559·9
1987	4[illegible]·5	86·2	373·6	628·6
1988	96·8	111·8	491·4	674·1

Notes and Definitions.
The Record Industry: Records (7" and 12") and pre-recorded cassettes. Compact discs are included in the 1988 totals (imports £48·2 m; exports £40·1 m), but figures are not available for earlier years.
Source: BPI Year Book 1989-90.
The Publishing Industry: Books, pamphlets, maps, newspapers, Journals and periodicals (SITC 892.1, 892.2).
Source: Overseas Trade Statistics.

Mergers

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made on the negotiations on European Community merger control regulation.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to his reply, 24 November, c. 41]: I should like to point to a typographical error which led to the omission of some of the text in the fourth sentence. The fourth sentence should now read:

"There has been general agreement about the threshold levels of 5 billion ECU worldwide turnover; 250 million ECU Community-wide turnover in each of at least two of the undertakings concerned; unless 66 per cent. of the Community-wide turnover is in one and the same Member State."

HEALTH

Delta Te

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the activities of Mr. Yves Delatte and the sale of Delta Te immune support therapy;

(2) if his Department will immediately ban the sale and distribution of Delta Te immune support therapy;

(3) what are his Department's estimates as to the amount of Delta Te sold in Great Britain;

(4) what information he has about the continued sale of Delta Te immune support therapy;

(5) what representations he has received about the sale of Delta Te immune support therapy;

(6) what steps his Department has taken to prohibit the import and sale of Delta Te immune support therapy under the Medicines Act;

(7) if he will make a statement on the sale of Delta Te immune support therapy.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

Further to the reply my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) gave on 5 July at column 186, the Department is continuing to investigate the activities of Mr. Yves Delatte and the supply of Delta Te, including recent reports about the renewed sale of the substance. The information obtained so far is being examined for possible action. This will include prosecution where, on legal advice, there is evidence of a breach of the Medicines Act, or if the evidence supports this: possible use of powers to prohibit, in the interests of safety, import, sale and distribution of the material. Representations about the sale of Delta Te have been received from journal and television reporters and the Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Association. Information about the amount of Delta Te sold in Great Britain is not collected centrally.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will commission a study into the composition and effects of Delta Te immune support therapy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply. I understand that the Medical Research Council is not aware of any evidence indicating the safety of Delta Te for human use, or its likely effectiveness in treatment of persons whose immune system has been compromised. The council has no current plans for a study.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he requires an interpreter fluent in the language of the foreign mother presenting for an abortion to be present during counselling.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Clinics accepting foreign patients for treatment already have arrangements for interpreters to be present when required.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available upon pregnancies of 18 weeks or more upon women with four or fewer previous children; and what percentage of all abortions upon pregnancies of 18 weeks or more gestation this figure represents.

Mr. Freeman: The number of abortions performed under the Abortion Act 1967 upon usually resident women with four or fewer previous liveborn or stillborn children at 18 weeks or more gestation in England and Wales, 1988[1] was 6,374. This figure represents 98·90 per cent. of all abortions performed upon usual residents at 18 weeks or more gestation.

[1] Provisional data.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available upon pregnancies of 18 weeks or more upon resident women; and what percentage of all abortions upon pregnancies of 18 weeks or more gestation this figure represents.

Mr. Freeman: The number of abortions performed under the Abortion Act 1967 upon usually resident women at 18 weeks or more gestation in England and Wales 1988[1] was 6,445. This figure represents 66·37 per cent. of all abortions performed at 18 weeks or more gestation upon usual residents and non-residents.

[1] Provisional data.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available upon pregnancies of 18 weeks or more in emergency to save the life of the mother; and what percentage of all abortions upon pregnancies of 18 weeks or more gestation this figure represents.

Mr. Freeman: There were no abortions performed on usual residents of England and Wales 1988[1] at 18 weeks or more gestation in an emergency to save the life of the pregnant woman (ground 5 of the Abortion Act 1967).

[1] Provisional data.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available upon pregnancies of 18 weeks or more for the reason that the child was likely to be born handicapped; and what percentage of all abortions upon pregnancies of 18 weeks or more gestation this figure represents.

Mr. Freeman: The number of abortions performed under the Abortion Act 1967 upon usual residents of England and Wales, 1988[1] at 18 weeks or more gestation under ground 4 of the Act, which allows abortions to be performed when there is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped, was 682. This figure represents 10·58 per cent. of all abortions performed upon usual residents at 18 weeks or more gestation.

[1] Provisional data.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available upon pregnancies of 18 weeks upon single women; and what percentage of all abortions upon pregnancies of 18 weeks or more gestation this figure represents.

Mr. Freeman: The number of abortions performed under the Abortion Act 1967 upon usually resident single women at 18 weeks or more gestation in England and Wales 1988[1] was 4,781. This figure represents 74·18 per cent. of all abortions performed at 18 weeks or more gestation.

[1] Provisional data.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available upon pregnancies of 18 weeks or more for social reasons under ground 2 of the Abortion Act; and what percentage of all abortions upon pregnancies of 18 weeks or more gestation this figure represents.

Mr. Freeman: The number of abortions performed under ground 2 of the Abortion Act 1967 (which allows abortions to be performed when the continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk of injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated) upon usually resident women at 18 weeks or more gestation in England and Wales 1988[1] was 5,343. This figure represents 82·9 per cent. of all abortions performed upon usual residents at 18 weeks or more gestation.

[1] Provisional data.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a breakdown by grounds of the number of abortions in England and Wales performed in the latest year for which figures are available upon girls aged under 16 years, women aged 16 to 20 years, women aged 21 to 40 years, and women aged 40 years or more.

Mr. Freeman: The exact information requested is not available. The number of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 by statutory grounds and mothers age to usual residents of England and Wales 1988[1] is shown in the table.

Statutory grounds[2]	Mothers age	Number of abortions
All grounds	All ages	168,298
	Under 16	3,568
	16-19	37,928
	20-39	121,332
	40+	5,470
1. (with other)	All ages	479
	Under 16	7
	16-19	72
	20-39	36
	40+	39
2. (alone)	All ages	148,895
	Under 16	3,522
	16-19	36,601
	20-39	104,625
	40+	4,147
3. (with or without)	All ages[1]	17,181
	Under 16	31
	16-19	1,151
	20-39	14,972
	40+	1,027
4. (alone)	All ages	1,205
	Under 16	3
	16-19	73
	20-39	1,002
	40+	127
4. (with any other except 1)	All ages	527
	Under 16	5
	16-19	31
	20-39	363
	40+	128
5. or 6.	All ages	11
	Under 16	—
	16-19	—
	20-39	9
	40+	2

[1] Provisional data.

[2] Statutory grounds

1. The continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk to the life of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.
2. The continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk of injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.
3. The continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk of injury to the physical or mental health of any existing child(ren) in the family of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.
4. There is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped.
5. To save the life of the pregnant mother.
6. To prevent grave permanent injury to the physical or mental health of the child.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a breakdown by marital status of the total numbers of abortions performed in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: Numbers of abortions performed under the Abortion Act 1967 upon usual residents of England and Wales 1988[1] by marital status.

Marital status	Number of abortions
Total	168,298
Single	111,044
Married	38,689
Widowed/divorced/separated	15,860
Not stated	2,705

[1] Provisional data.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of abortions performed in the latest year for which figures are available upon girls aged 15 years and under, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21 or more years; and, in each case, whether these were National Health Service abortions, private abortions, or National Health Service abortions performed under agency arrangements in the private sector.

Mr. Freeman: Numbers of abortions performed in 1988[1] to usual residents of England and Wales by category of premises and age.

Age	Category of premises
	NHS	Non-NHS	Agency
Under 16	2,063	1,505	368
16	3,184	3,329	677
17	4,055	5,157	904
18	4,389	6,209	642
19	4,679	6,926	652
20	4,709	7,057	640
21	4,603	6,887	570

[1] Provisional data.

Counterfeit Medicines

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if any United Kingdom product licence holders have informed his Department of counterfeit medicines reaching the United Kingdom supply chain.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department was informed on 27 September 1989 by Glaxo Pharmaceuticals Limited of a suspected counterfeit version of their licensed product Zantac, which had entered the United Kingdom supply chain. With the company's help it was confirmed that the product was a copy of Greek Zantac 150 mg. I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 2 November at columns 311-12.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes to take in the immediate future to minimise the risk of National Health Service patients receiving counterfeit medicines imported from other European Community countries.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department are seeking to identify products which might be vulnerable to counterfeiting. These will be targeted in the sampling programme operated by the medicines inspectorate for analysis. We are also proposing to collect and monitor data relating to selected imported products. These activities are in addition to the controls outined to my hon. Friend on 2 November 1989 at columns 311-12.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has of the number of pharmaceutical wholesalers or importers who received quantities of Zantac 150 mg tablets, batch number A092F8, which were the subject of a drug alert notice issued by his Department on 29 September; and if he will name the wholesalers or importers concerned.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department established that five pharmaceutical wholesalers/importers received consignments of Zantac 150 mg tablets, batch No. A092F8. A study of the batch samples retained by these trading companies suggests that only one may have received the counterfeit product. As the Department's examination of the incident is continuing and it is also the subject of police inquiries, it would not be appropriate to identify the companies concerned.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response was received from hospital and community pharmacists in respect of the drug alert notice issued by his Department on 29 September concerning counterfeit Zantac 150 mg tablets; and what quantity of stocks were returned by dispensing pharmacists to their usual suppliers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The response to the Department from hospital and community pharmacists following the issue of the drug alert letter on 29 Sepember was limited to a few inquiries seeking clarification. No stocks were returned by dispensing pharmacists to their suppliers.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain has informed his Department of incidents of counterfeit medicines being distributed in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has been informed by the Royal Pharmaceutical Society that during inquiries carried out by their inspectors into the sale of steroid creams and lotions some counterfeit medicines have been identified. The products, which are only permitted to be sold from registered pharmacies, were being sold by food and general shops to Afro-Caribbean customers for lightening the skin. The society intend to prosecute the retailers where possible.

There is no evidence that the material has reached pharmacies or even entered the licensed distribution system. On present information there is nothing to suggest that the application of the cream would be a danger to health. The society has alerted its members through professional journals.

Oral Tobacco Products

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has now received a signed copy of the voluntary agreement relating to the sale of oral tobacco products from United States Tobacco.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. The agreement, which is without prejudice to the decision whether to ban oral snuff, was concluded on 14 November.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the consultation period on his proposed oral tobacco product ban has been further extended by the European Community Commission proposal to bring forward its own recommendations on oral tobacco.

Mr. Freeman: No, the consultation period ended on 9 November. The Government will now reach a final decision on whether to proceed to a ban on oral snuff as quickly as possible.

Haemophiliacs

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements have been made by each of the Governments of the 12 European countries to arrange for compensation to haemophiliacs accidentally infected with the AIDS virus through contaminated blood transfusions, listing the actions taken, country by country, including the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Haemophiliacs were infected through the use of blood products such as factor VIII and not through ordinary blood transfusions. The information available to us about schemes set up by governments in the European Community countries is set out in the table. The hon. Member may wish to contact the embassies concerned for full details.

Payments for people with AIDS or HIV in other countries

Denmark

Government have provided ex-gratia payments totalling 250,000 Danish kroner (about £25,000) for each person infected with HIV through blood products or blood transfusions.

Eire

Government have provided £1 million for a trust for haemophiliacs infected with HIV.

France

Government are providing a fund which will pay an average of 100,000 French francs (about £10,000) to haemophiliacs who have developed clinical AIDS.

United Kingdom

Government are providing £29 million to the Macfarlane Trust to provide assistance to haemophiliacs with HIV and to their dependants.

We do not know of any Government schemes in other Community countries. [In the Federal Republic of West Germany we understand that the insurers of the manufacturers of blood products have made out-of-court settlements averaging 80,000 deutschmarks (about £27,000).]

Self-Governing Hospitals

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals have indicated that they wish to become self-governing; and if he will list them.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of 187 units have expressed interest in National Health Service trust status. I understand that 79 of these intend to proceed with preparing applications for the first wave, which we would expect to be established in April 1991. However, applications will not be invited until Parliament has approved the necessary legislation. The table lists all the units which have expressed an interest in National Health Service trust status.

Northern Regional Health Authority

Aycliffe Hospital and Mental Handicap Services
Blood Transfusion Service (Northern Regional Health Authority)
Darlington—hospital and community services
Freeman Hospital, Newcastle
Hartlepool District
Mental Illness Services in Gateshead
Newcastle Mental Health Services
Newcastle General Hospital
North West Durham hospital and community services
North Tyneside District
Northgate Hospital
Northumbrian Ambulance Service
South West Durham Community Services

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

Bradford Acute Services
Bradford—Psychiatric Unit Hospital Trust
Calderdale Hospitals, Calderdale Health Authority
Grimsby District General Hospital and associated services
High Royds Hospital Mental Health Services, Leeds Western Leeds General Infirmary and associated Hospitals
Seacroft and Killingbeck Hospitals, Leeds Eastern
St. James's University Hospital, Leeds
Wakefield District—Mental Health Unit
Wharfedale General Hospital, Leeds Western

Trent Regional Health Authority

Bassetlaw
Children's Hospital, Sheffield
Doncaster Royal Infirmary and Montagu Hospital
Lincolnshire Ambulance Service
Nether Edge Hospital, Sheffield
Northern General Hospital, Sheffield
Royal Hallamshire Hospital, Sheffield
South Lincolnshire Mental Handicap Services
University Hospital, Nottingham

East Anglian Regional Health Authority

East Suffolk Community Services
East Suffolk Psychiatric Services
Great Yarmouth and Waveney Priority Services
Newmarket General Hospital
Peterborough District General Hospital, Edith Cavell District General Hospital, Stamford and Rutland Hospital
West Norfolk and Wisbech Community Services
West Norfolk and Wisbech Acute Services

North West Thames Regional Health Authority

Central Middlesex Hospital
East Hertfordshire Priority and Community Services Units
East Hertfordshire Acute Services Unit
Harefield Hospital
Hillingdon Hospital/Mount Vernon Hospital
North Hertfordshire Acute and Community Services
Northwick Park Hospital
North West Hertfordshire Priority Services Unit
Westminster and Westminster Children's Hospitals

North East Thames Regional Health Authority

Basildon and Thurrock Health Authority
Brentwood Community Hospital
Central North London Mental Health Unit
City and Hackney (St. Bart's, Homerton and St. Marks Hospital Trust)
Harwich Hospital
Mid Essex Acute Unit
North East Essex Acute Unit
North Middlesex Hospital
North East Essex Mental Health Unit
North East Essex Mental Handicap Unit
Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital
Royal London Homeopathic Hospital
Southend District Services
St. Bartholomew's Hospital
St. Peter's Group of Hospitals
St. Margaret's Hospital, Epping
Tavistock and Portman Clinics
The London Hospital Group
The Royal Free Hospital
The Royal National Throat Nose and Ear Hospital
Waltham Forest Health Authority
Waltham Forest Mental Health Unit
West Essex Priority Care Services

South East Thames Regional Health Authority

Bexley Health Authority—Mental Health Community Services
Brighton Acute Services
Bromley Acute Services

Conquest Hospital, Hastings Health Authority
Dartford and Gravesham HA—Proposed District General Hospital
Eastbourne Acute Services
Guy's and Lewisham Hospitals and associated Mental Illness Services
King's-Camberwell and associated Community Services
Lewisham Hospital Unit
Lewisham and North Southwark Health Authority—Mental Illness Services
Maidstone District General Hospital
Queen Victoria Hospital, East Grinstead
Queen Mary's Hospital, Sidcup and Erith and District Hospital and Community
South East Kent Health Authority—Community Services
South East Thames Regional Health Authority Commercial Services Directorate
Sevenoaks Hospital
St. Thomas' Hospital and associated Community Services
Tunbridge Wells Mental Handicap Unit
West Lambeth Health Authority—Priority Care Unit
William Harvey and Buckland Hospitals—South East Kent Health Authority

South West Thames Regional Health Authority
Croydon Community Unit
Croydon Health Authority—Mental Illness Unit
Croydon Mental Handicap Unit
East Surrey Health Authority—Combined Mental Illness-Mental Handicap Unit
East Surrey Health Authority—Acute and Community Services Unit
Kingston Hospital
Mid Surrey Health Authority—Mental Illness Unit
Mid Surrey General Unit
Mid Downs West Unit
Mid Downs East Unit
North West Surrey Health Authority—Mental Handicap, Mental Health and Acute Units
South West Surrey Acute Unit
St. George's Group Trust, Wandsworth Health Authority
St. Helier and Sutton Hospitals
Weybridge Hospital
Worthing and Southlands Hospitals, Worthing Health Authority

Essex Regional Health Authority
Bournemouth Acute Unit, East Dorset Health Authority
Christchurch Hospital, East Dorset Health Authority
Lymington Hospitals
Mental Health Services, East Dorset Health Authority
North West Wiltshire Community Service, Bath Health Authority
Psychiatric Division, Basingstoke Health Authority
Royal National Hospital for Rheumatic Diseases
Swindon Health Authority—All District Services
Treloar Chase Unit, Basingstoke Health Authority
West Dorset Mental Health Services
West Dorset Community and General Hospital Services

Oxford Regional Health Authority
Nuffield Orthopaedic Centre

South Western Regional Health Authority
Avon College of Health
Bristol Homoeopathic Hospital
Bristol Paediatric Services
Bristol
Cornwall Mental Handicap Services
Cornwall Community Services
East Somerset
East Gloucestershire National Health Service Trust
Exeter Community Services
North Devon
Plymouth Acute Services
Royal Cornwall Hospitals
South Devon Health Care Trust
Supplies Function—Regionwide (South Western Regional Health Authority)
West Cornwall
West Somerset
Weston
Wonford Acute Services

West Midlands Regional Health Authority
Alexandra Hospital
Bridgnorth Cottage Hospital (including community) (Shropshire)
Bromsgrove Community Unit (Bromsgrove and Redditch)
Coventry and Warwick Hospitals (including Paybody) (Coventry)
Ellesmere Cottage Hospital (Shropshire)
Good Hope District General Hospital/Northcroft/Jaffray/Community (North Birmingham) [Hayley Green Hospital (Dudley) (Withdrawn 26 June 1989)]
Highcroft, Mental Illness Hospital (North Birmingham)
Lady Forrester Cottage Hospital (Much Wenlock, Shropshire)
Mid Staffordshire Mental Health Unit [St. George's Hospital]
Mid Staffordshire Community Unit
Oswestry and District Hospital (including Community) (Shropshire)
Robert Jones and Agnes Hunt Orthopaedic Hospital (Shropshire)
Royal Shrewsbury Hospital (Shropshire)
Royal Orthopaedic Hospital (South Birmingham)
Rugby District Services
St. Margaret's, Mental Handicap Hospital, (Walsall)
Walsall Acute Services [Manor District General Hospital]
Walsgrave District General Hospital, Coventry

Mersey Regional Health Authority
Arrowe Park and Clatterbridge Hospitals
Broadgreen Hospital, excluding Mersey Regional Cardio-Thoracic Unit
Cranage Hall, Crewe
Crewe, Psychiatric and Community Services
Halton Community Services
Halton, combined Hospital and Community Services
Leighton Hospital, Crewe (Acute Services)
Liverpool Obstetrics and Gynaecology Services
Liverpool Mental Health Services
Liverpool Dental Hospital
Liverpool Community Health Services
Macclesfield District General Hospital (Acute Services)
Macclesfield Mental Health Services
Macclesfield Community and Mental Handicap Services
Regional Adult Cardio-Thoracic Unit (RACTU), Liverpool
Royal Liverpool Children's Hospital (Alder Hey)
Royal Liverpool Hospital
Southport District General Hospital (Acute Services)
Southport and Formby Psychiatric/Community Services
St. Helens and Knowsley Community Health Services
Walton and Fazakerley Hospitals, South Sefton
Warrington District General Hospital
Whiston and St. Helens Hospital
Wirral Community and Support Hospitals

North Western Regional Health Authority
Central Manchester Hospital and Community Services
Christie Hospital [South Manchester Health Authority]
Royal Preston Hospital, Preston Health Authority
South Manchester Health Authority Community Unit
Stepping Hill Hospital and Stockport Infirmary, Stockport Health Authority
Wrightington Hospital, West Lancashire Health Authority

Special Health Authorities
Eastman Dental Hospital

Leicestershire Health Authority

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations he intends to have concerning the re-appointment of the chairman of Leicestershire health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The terms of office of a number of district health authority chairmen come up for consideration with effect from 1 April 1990. My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor), then Minister for Health, invited nominations from hon. Members in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wimbledon (Mr. Goodson-Wickes) on 10 May at column 457.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was raised in prescription charges in England in each year from 1979-80 to 1987-99; and into which fund these receipts were paid.

Mr. Freeman: Prescription charges, including receipts from the sale of pre-payment certificates, in the family practitioner service in England amounted to:

year	£ million
1979-80	38·6
1980-81	70·8
1981-82	86·6
1982-83	102·8
1983-84	110·0
1984-85	120·7
1985-86	127·8
1986-87	147·9
1987-88	157·5

The prescription charges collected in the family practitioner services in England are credited to class XIV, Vote 2.

Young Offenders

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many local authorities' areas there are special counselling services available for young offenders.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not held centrally in the form requested. All local authorities have a statutory duty to provide programmes of intermediate treatment. Juvenile offenders who are subject to supervision orders may be required by the juvenile courts to take part in these programmes, which often include counselling services.

Midwives

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will negotiate midwives' pay independently with representatives of midwives.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The pay of midwives is determined on the advice of the pay review body, established in 1983 for nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine. The review body is independent and free to determine its own methods of working and to take evidence from interested parties, including a number of trade unions who have midwives in membership.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many midwives are currently undergoing training for the advanced diploma in midwifery; and how many of these receive financial assistance from their local health authority;

(2) what guidance he has issued to health authorities about assistance and support to be given to midwives studying for the advanced diploma in midwifery; and if he has any plans to issue new guidance;

(3) what is his policy on the value of the advanced diploma in midwifery;

(4) what steps he is taking to encourage midwives to undertake further training to improve their qualifications.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The advanced diploma in midwifery (ADM) is a recordable qualification on the register maintained by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, which is an independent statutory body. It is evidence of professional development for midwives whether in clinical practice, management or teaching. It is also an entry requirement to midwife teacher training.

It is for health authorities to determine the extent to which they should fund midwives to undertake training in the ADM in the light of the needs of the service locally. Information supplied by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting shows that there were 141 entrants to training for the ADM in the year ending 31 March 1989. Information is not held centrally on how many midwives currently taking the ADM receive financial assistance from their local health authority.

No guidance has been issued to authorities on financial assistance to midwives who study for the ADM. However, the Department has commissioned the South Bank polytechnic to develop an open learning package for the ADM, with funding of £175,850 for that purpose. In addition, South East Thames regional health authority has been provided with £52,614 this year, for the South Bank polytechnic to develop a two-year part-time course for the ADM.

Blind People

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances blind people are (a) required to pay for white canes and (b) exempt from having to pay for white canes.

Mr. Freeman: Section 2 of the chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 places a statutory responsibility on local authorities to provide equipment to all disabled people, including those with a visual impairment. A number of voluntary organisations have also, traditionally provided equipment to visually impaired people. Both voluntary organisations and local authority social services departments have discretion over whether to charge for equipment, including white canes.

There is a wide range of canes available at various prices up to a maximum of £21. However, many local authorities provide a symbol white cane free of charge. Concessionary rates are also available for those individuals who obtain their canes directly from voluntary organisations.

Overtime Pay

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of pay was overtime in the National Health Service in administrative, clerical and staff grades for 1960, 1970, 1979, 1983, 1985 and 1989 or the latest date possible.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The percentages were as follows:

	Per cent.
1984-85	0·7
1985-86	0·8
1988-89	1·4

Information is not held centrally for years before 1984-85.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of his letter to the Northern regional health authority declining to allow the regional blood transfusion service to become a self-governing trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. We do not believe that self-governing status is appropriate to the blood transfusion service at present.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which districts or regions it is proposed to operate the blood transfusion service as a trading agency.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All regional health authorities have reviewed their arrangements for managing the blood transfusion service as part of their response to the Department's circular EL(89) MB/59 (a copy of which is in the Library). Several have proposed to set up boards to manage the service on their behalf and to devolve the budgets to district health authorities.

Nuclear Magnetic Resonance Scanners

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when it is proposed to have nuclear magnetic resonance scanners available within the National Health Service in the regions of the north, Yorkshire, north-west and Merseyside.

Mr. Freeman: Installation of these scanners is a matter for individual regional health authorities. I understand that scanners are already in place in Manchester and Liverpool, that one is planned for Leeds and one for Newcastle is under discussion. The hon. Member may wish to contact the regional chairmen for more information.

Pharmacies

Mr. Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide revised guidance to family practitioner committees on the handling of applications for the inclusion of pharmacies in National Health Service pharmaceutical lists.

Mr. Freeman: Experience of the arrangements introduced in 1987 to control the number of new pharmacies suggested that some revised guidance would be helpful. Following widespread consultation new guidance has been prepared and is now being sent to family practitioner committees. Copies are also being sent to all existing pharmacy contractors. A copy has been placed in the Library and I have sent one to the hon. Member.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the research study commissioned by his Department into the speech therapy requirements of different kinds of patients will be published; whether it will be placed in the Library; and whether it will cover the use of speech therapy in assisting recovery from strokes.

Mr. Freeman: An article by Dr. Davies and Dr. Enderby based on the research study will be published in the December 1989 edition of the British Journal of Disorders of Communication. A copy of the article will be placed in the Library. Both the research study and the article cover the use of speech therapy in assistin recovery from strokes.

Orpington Hospital

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if assurances given by the Under-Secretary of State for Health in reply to questions about capital expenditure plans, asked by the hon. Member for Bolton, North East (Mr. Thurnham), apply to the current approved plan for Orpington hospital.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 24 November 1989]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Bolton, North East (Mr. Thurnham) on Tuesday 7 November at columns 823-24. I was referring to specific capital expenditure plans supported by districts and awaiting implementation. I am not aware that these circumstances apply to Orpington hospital.

Adoptions

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what conveniently available figures he has for the number of babies adopted in each year from 1980 to 1989; and if he has any conveniently available breakdown into the regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 27 November 1989]: The number of adoption orders awarded by the courts are shown. Because the courts, and in particular the High Court, do not relate to defined geographical areas more detailed geographical analyses are not available. Data for 1989 for the United Kingdom are expected to be available in April 1990.

Number of adoptions of babies aged under one year

Location of court	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
England and Wales	2,599	2,365	2,177	1,962	1,836	1,605	1,572	1,333	1,235
Scotland	379	321	326	291	229	199	160	156	132
Northern Ireland	147	116	82	113	89	93	83	73	70
United Kingdom	3,125	2,802	2,585	2,366	2,154	1,897	1,815	1,562	1,437

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Colouring Matter

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take in the light of the recommendations of the food advisory committee in its review of the colouring matter in food regulations.

Mr. Maclean: My colleagues and I accept the view of the food advisory committee that food colours have a role in providing consumers with a choice of attractively presented foods. We also accept the committee's recommendations. We therefore intend to issue detailed proposals for public comment as quickly as possible to:

i. restrict the amount of colour in food by setting maximum levels for all permitted colours;

ii. prohibit or restrict certain colours which are currently permitted in food.

Implementation of a number of the specific recommendations would first require amendment to EC legislation and we will be discussing these with our European partners as appropriate. I will also encourage our EC partners to adopt the same approach to colours in Community legislation. The FAC made 25 recommendations in all, and I have placed in the Library of the House a detailed statement of how we intend to deal with each of them.

Copies of the committee's final report on the review of the Colouring Matter in Food Regulations 1973, published by HMSO in 1987, have already been placed in the Library of the House. The committee's response to comments received on that final report has been published by my Department today and I have also arranged for copies of this to be placed in the Library.

Milk (Lead Pollution)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish the information he has received from the Netherlands about the safety of milk which has been condemned in the last two weeks on the ground of lead pollution.

Mr. Curry: I understand that the Dutch action level for lead in milk is 50 parts per billion, and we are working to the same figure.

Imports (Eastern Europe)

Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he plans to support European Commission proposals for quotas of imports into the Community for onions, cut flowers and soft fruit from eastern European countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The European Commission has not proposed any quotas for imports into the Community for onions, cut flowers or soft fruit from eastern Europe.

A Commission action plan for co-ordinated aid to Poland and Hungary was agreed in principle on 3 October. As part of that plan the Commission put forward proposals for tariff concessions on a number of agricultural products of primary interest to Poland and Hungary, including dried onions, cut flowers and semi-processed fruit to be included in the Community's generalised system of preferences. Both I and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland are aware of the difficulties which tariff concessions in these sectors pose for our industry. The package which has finally been secured involves smaller cuts in tariffs on certain products, including soft fruit, than those originally proposed. These changes should alleviate the impact of the measures on our growers and processors, while at the same time reflecting our commitment to assist the process of political and economic reform in eastern Europe.

Eggs

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was (a) the number and (b) the value of eggs imported into the United Kingdom in each month since September 1988.

Mr. Curry: The monthly data supplied by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are as follows:

	'000 Eggs	£
1988
September	28,765	967,272
October	29,172	995,983
November	28, 728	949,873
December	7,767	260,444
1989
January	14,371	454,818
February	7,553	254,033
March	7,956	275,402
April	40,073	1,387,578
May	28,172	895,365
June	25,961	861,535
July	22,794	729,146
August	35,120	1,308,199
September	58,044	2,532,210

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many calves have been born, during the incubation period for the disease, to cows later certified as having bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and what is his Department's policy on the slaughter of such calves.

Mr. Maclean: It is estimated that some 20,000 calves could have been born to cows later confirmed as having BSE. There is no evidence that BSE can be transmitted from cow to calf and therefore no scientific justification for such calves to be slaughtered.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cows have been certified as contracting bovine spongiform encephalopathy in each year from 1985 to the present.

Mr. Maclean: The information is as follows:

Year of confirmation	Number of cases
1985	0
1986	4
1987	149
1988	1,910
[1]1989	6,037
	8,100

[1]Up to 27 November 1989.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what inquiries are made about calves to which a cow found to be suffering from bovine spongiform encephalopathy has given birth during the incubation period of the disease.

Mr. Maclean: A comprehensive epidemiological inquiry is made into every case of BSE including information on calves.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tests are carried out on calves of cows certified as having bovine spongiform encephalopathy to see whether they are carrying the disease.

Mr. Maclean: No diagnostic test exists to determine sub-clinical BSE in a live animal.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy for each county of England and Wales for the four-week period ended 16 November.

Mr. Maclean: The information is as follows:

Number of cases of BSE confirmed 20 October—16 November 1989

County	Number
Bedfordshire	3
Cambridgeshire	2
Essex	3
Hertfordshire	6
Lincolnshire	7
Norfolk	5
Northamptonshire	10
Suffolk	8
	44
Cheshire	12
Deryshire	13
Hereford and Worcestershire	12
Lancashire	15
Leicestershire	19
Nottinghamshire	7
Shropshire	9
Staffordshire	8
Warwickshire	11
	106
Cleveland	2
Cumbria	11
Durham	5
Humberside	2
Northumberland	4
Tyne and Wear	1
Yorkshire North	22
Yorkshire South	2
Yorkshire West	1
	52
Berkshire	3
Buckinghamshire	5
Hampshire	26
Isle of Wight	4
Kent	11
Oxfordshire	5
Surrey	6
Sussex East	12
Sussex West	19
Avon	15
Cornwall	45
Devon	40
Dorset	51
Gloucestershire	28
Somerset	66
Wiltshire	35
	280
Clwyd	7
Dyfed	18
Glamorganshire M	2
Glamorganshire S	7
Gwent	9
Gwynedd	1
Powys	5
	49
	622

Enzyme-treated Meat

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the policy reasons for the European Commission's intention to propose a ban on the sale of enzyme-treated meat.

Mr. Maclean: None. The draft proposal has not yet been discussed in Brussels. The existing derogation under which the United Kingdom and Ireland trade in meat treated with enzymes would not be compatible with the concept of the single market, and the Commission may simply be anticipating that a proposal to permit trade in enzyme-treated meat throughout the Community after 1992 is unlikely to attract sufficient support from member states.

Bovine Offal

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further necessary scientific studies were required between the announcement of his proposed ban on human consumption of bovine offal on 13 June and its implementation on 13 November; and what were the results of those studies.

Mr. Maclean: Studies were conducted into the presence of lymphatic tissue which might harbour the bovine spongiform encephalopathy agent, in bovine gut and tripe, casings and rennet produced from it. The results showed that no restrictions were necessary on bovine stomachs (including the tripe organs) or rennet. Intestines and the casings produced from them did, however, contain significant amounts of lymphatic tissue and were thus included in the ban as a precautionary measure.

Environmental Protection Grants

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to ensure that all grants given to farmers by his Department for environmental protection and improvement do not give an unfair financial advantage to farmers in the lowlands as against farmers in upland and hill areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The current grant scheme, the farm and conservation grant scheme, makes generous provision for the aiding of investments benefiting the environment. For most grants, farmers in the hills and uplands receive rates which are 10 percentage points higher than in the lowlands. The only exceptions are grants for investments in farm waste control which attract uniform rates of 50 per cent., reflecting the priority that we attach to combating farm pollution in the lowlands, and grants for the repair or renovation of traditional farm buildings. For these the grant rate is 35 per cent. and takes account of the generally higher cost of repairs in the lowlands.

In no case do grants outside the less favoured areas exceed those within.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Drugs

16. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the adequacy of current United Nations policies to combat drug abuse; and if he will make a statement.

71. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current United Nations policies to combat drug abuse.

90. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current United Nations policies to combat drug abuse.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Nations performs a vital role in the international anti-drugs effort, but there is much scope for improvement. We are supporting efforts to secure additional resources for the United Nations drugs effort and structural reforms to make its work more cost-effective.

19. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the involvement of his Department in the efforts to reduce the illegal imports of drugs from Colombia.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department, and Her Majesty's embassy in Bogotoa, liaise closely with the Colombian authorities on anti-narcotics measures, and are currently supervising the delivery and implementation of the special package of drugs-related training and equipment for Colombians announced by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 27 September.

80. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking against drug trafficking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking against drug trafficking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom has signed the 1988 United Nations convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, adopted in December 1988. Our Drug Trafficking Offences Act provides strong powers for the tracing, freezing and confiscation of the proceeds of trafficking. We have agreed bilateral agreements or arrangements to reciprocate these powers with 11 countries and are negotiating with a number of others.

Britain is the fourth largest donor to the United Nations fund for drug abuse control.

We are also hosting a world ministerial summit next April to reduce the demand for drugs and combat the cocaine threat.

82. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to reduce the worldwide demands for illegal drugs; and if he will make a statement.

104. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to reduce the worldwide demand for illegal drugs; and if he will make a statement.

122. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his plans for an international conference in London next year on the subject of reducing the demand for cocaine and other illegal drugs.

131. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his plans for an international conference in London next year on the subject of reducing the demand for cocaine and other illegal drugs.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are hosting a world ministerial summit in London in April 1990 to reduce the demand for drugs and combat the cocaine threat. The Prime Minister will open the summit and President Barco of Colombia and the UN secretary-general have agreed to speak at the opening ceremony. The United Kingdom is also providing, or has provided, bilateral assistance to demand reduction projects in such countries as Barbados, Nigeria, Peru and Malaysia.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he is doing to encourage China to sign the single convention on narcotic drugs.

Mr. Sainsbury: The People's Republic of China acceded to the single convention on narcotic drugs in 1985.

Hong Kong

17. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

64. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to visit Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs hopes to visit Hong Kong in the new year. Precise dates have not yet been determined.

23. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any commitment has been made to the Chinese People's Republic regarding the number of British passports to be issued to the people of Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: No.

33. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese nationals are at present detained in camps in Hong Kong; and what is the cost of accommodating them.

Mr. Maude: There are just over 56,800 Vietnamese boat people in Hong Kong. We estimate that capital expenditure on the camps for 1989-90 will be about £38 million. The cost of running them during the same period will be around £40 million.

132. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his European Community counterparts regarding the future of Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: We have been taking every suitable opportunity to discuss international aspects of Hong Kong's continued prosperity and stability with our Community partners both in multilateral fora such as the Madrid European Council and the Paris economic summit and in bilateral contacts.

137. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends meeting his Chinese counterpart to discuss Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans at present to meet the Chinese Foreign Minister.

Cambodia

18. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received from the public regarding his policy on Cambodia.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received more than 10,400 representations this year regarding our policy on Cambodia.

45. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the reasons for the Government's decision to abstain on the last vote on Cambodia at the United Nations.

66. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the reasons for the Government's decision to abstain on the last vote on Cambodia at the United Nations.

91. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the reasons for the Government's decision to abstain on the last vote on Cambodia at the United Nations.

126. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will explain the reasons for the Government's decision to abstain on the last vote on Cambodia at the United Nations.

Mr. Sainsbury: As one of 79 co-sponsors of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) resolution on Cambodia, Britain voted in favour of the resolution at the United Nations General Assembly on 16 November. Our vote underlined our wish to see a comprehensive political solution of the conflict in Cambodia.

74. Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government propose to take to provide assistance to the people of Cambodia.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 8 November. My right hon. Friend has since held a meeting with representatives of leading British non-Government organisations working in Cambodia to discuss the possibility of further Government co-sponsoring of humanitarian projects inside Cambodia.

89. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he will give to British subjects working in Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he will offer to British subjects working in Cambodia in the light of the military situation there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: British subjects should be aware that the situation in Cambodia remains unsettled and that fighting is taking place in some parts of the country. There is no local British consular or diplomatic representation and therefore no assistance available. Local medical facilities are very limited. We strongly recommend that British subjects avoid travelling outside the main cities, especially after dark, and in particular that they keep away from the provinces bordering Thailand and other areas where fighting is reported.

93. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the British representative at the United Nations to discuss Cambodia.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met our permanent representative to the United Nations during his visit to the General Assembly from 24-29 September. Cambodia was among the topics discussed.

103. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Government policy on the representation of Cambodia at the United Nations.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 16 November at column 497.

107. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards Cambodia, with specific reference to the position of the Khmer Rouge.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 8 November at column 645.

117. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Cambodia.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has at present no plans to visit Cambodia.

124. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with Her Majesty's mission to the United Nations on the subject of Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom mission to the United Nations in New York regularly provides reports to the Department and receives instructions from it.

127. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has at present no plans to visit Cambodia.

129. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Cambodia.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has at present no plans to visit Cambodia.

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Cambodia and towards support for the inclusion of representatives from the Khmer Rouge in any negotiated settlement for a future Cambodian Government.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 8 November.

El Salvador

20. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he will now offer to British subjects working in El Salvador; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The British chargé d'affaires is advising those members of the British community with no urgent need to remain in the country to leave while normal commercial flights are available. The advice to those remaining is to stay at home.

27. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the murder of the six Jesuit priests in San Salvador on 17 November; and if he will make a statement.

29. Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the murder of the six Jesuit priests in San Salvador on 17 November; and if he will make a statement.

87. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the murder of the six Jesuit priests in San Salvador on 17 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our information is that Father Ignacio Ellacuria, Rector of the Catholic university in El Salvador, five of his colleagues, their cook and her daughter were murdered in the early hours of 16 November by assassins armed with automatic weapons. Some were reported to be in uniform. We utterly condemn this cowardly and appalling murder, and urge that those responsible be identified and brought to justice without delay.

30. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action his Government are taking to promote a cease-fire in El Salvador.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have called on the FMLN to end their offensive and have urged both sides to return to the negotiating table.

37. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed the situation in El Salvador with representatives of the United States Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have regular discussions with the United States Administration on a wide range of subjects, including El Salvador.

38. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of El Salvador about the safety of British subjects there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Her Majesty's chargé d'affaires in San Salvador has repeatedly reminded the authorities of their responsibility for their protection and given clear advice to United Kingdom citizens in El Salvador. He has received the fullest co-operation in carrying out his consular duties during the present emergency.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, he will cut British financial and diplomatic links with the Government of El Salvador, in the light of Government violence against citizens.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have no plans to break relations with the Government of El Salvador. The current escalation of violence there results from the offensive launched by the FMLN guerrillas on 11 November. We call on them to return to the negotiating table.

51. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the United States of America concerning the worsening human rights situation in El Salvador.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have regular discussions with the US Administration on a wide range of subjects, including El Salvador.

East Germany

21. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his discussions with the West German Foreign Minister on East Germany's relationship with the European Community.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 15 November Herr Genscher and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed the dramatic changes taking place in eastern Europe, including the GDR, and the Community's response to them. They agreed on the importance of real political and economic reform in the GDR. My right hon. Friend will resume his discussions with Herr Genscher this evening.

112. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit East Germany.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no present plans to do so.

Poland

22. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met a member of the Polish Government; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not yet had an opportunity to meet any members of the new Polish Government. He will have talks on 30 November with Mr. Lech Walesa, chairman of Solidarity. I met Mr. Regulski, Minister of Local Government on 21 November.

50. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current United Kingdom relations with Poland.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council on 24 October.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress Her Majesty's Government are making in setting up a know-how fund for Poland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We established a know-how fund for Poland after General Jaruzelski's visit to Britain in June. This will contribute £25 million over the next five years towards projects which will underpin Polish democracy and help economic reform. A considerable number of projects are already under way, notably in the field of management training.

Middle East

24. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to promote a middle east peace settlement.

59. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the Israeli-Palestinian dispute.

67. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards peace in the middle east.

78. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement of progress towards peace in the middle east.

105. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the peace process in the Palestinian-Israeli dispute.

118. Sir Dennis Walters: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards a middle east peace settlement.

133. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends submitting any fresh proposals to try and resolve the middle east problem; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We fully support current efforts to bring about a dialogue between the Israeli Government and a representative team of Palestinians.

70. Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his European counterparts about ways of assisting the middle east peace process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We discuss the middle east regularly with our European colleagues, and did so most recently on 27 November. We shall continue to support the current efforts to develop a dialogue between Israel and the Palestinians.

72. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what latest representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Israel about the occupation of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Mr. Waldegrave: Issues that we and our EC partners have taken up recently with the Israeli authorities include the closure of universities, Israeli tax-collecting raids at Beit Sahour, harassment of UNRWA's operations and a number of individual cases.

77. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens are at present held in middle eastern gaols; and if he will list in which countries they are being held and the length of their sentences.

Mr. Sainsbury: According to our latest information, 24 British citizens were in detention in the middle east on 23 November 1989. The countries in which they are held and the length of their sentences are as follows:

Number of British citizens in detention in the Middle East on 23 November 1989

Country	Number of detainees	Sentence
Egypt	2	(i) 25 years (ii) 25 years
Iraq	2	(i) detained without charge (ii) 20 years
Iran	2	(i) detained without charge (ii) detained on remand
Israel	3	(i) 10 years (ii) 12 years (iii) 18 months (12 months suspended)
Kuwait	3	(i) 6 years 4 months (ii) 3 years 6 months (iii) 4 years 6 months
Saudi Arabia	4	(i) 1 year (ii) 2 years (iii) detained on remand (iv) detained on remand
Turkey	1	(i) 5 years 5 months
United Arab Emirates	7	(i) 8 years (ii) 20 years (iii) 7 years (iv) 10 years (v) until debts are paid (vi) 15 years (vii) detained on remand

Cyprus

25. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current position on the Cyprus talks.

Mr. Maude: The intercommunal talks remain stalled. When my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister met the United Nations Secretary-General on 8 November, he told her that he would be meeting the leaders of the two communities at the end of this month to discuss ways in which the talks can be resumed. She assured Mr. Perez de Cuellar of our continued full support.

36. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to make an official visit to Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no present plans to visit Cyprus.

Israeli Occupied Territories

26. Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government will monitor the elections within the Israeli occupied territories.

Mr. Waldegrave: We support the early convening of Israeli/Palestinian talks in Cairo to discuss the modalities of the proposed elections in the occupied territories, including possible international supervision, and shall be ready to play our part in helping to implement the arrangements agreed.

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the Israeli Government concerning the enforced closure of schools in the West Bank.

Mr. Waldegrave: We do not accept that the closure of schools and universities in the occupied territories is justified. We have called regularly on the Israeli authorities, most recently in the EC statement on 6 October, to allow them to function normally.

Turkey

28. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet the Turkish Foreign Minister in the near future.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will meet Mr. Yilmaz, when they are both at the North Atlantic Council meeting on 14 to 15 December.

Eastern Europe

31. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is being given to Poland and Hungary in their efforts to establish liberal democracy.

40. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress Her Majesty's Government are making in setting up a know-how fund for Poland; and if he will make a statement.

53. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress Her Majesty's Government are making in setting up a know-how fund for Poland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what training in the technical processes of democracy Britain is offering to countries in eastern Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We established a know-how fund for Poland after General Jaruzelski's visit to Britain in June. This will contribute £25 million over the next five years towards projects which will underpin Polish democracy and help economic reform. I am glad to be able to announce that it will now be doubled in size to £50 million. Moreover, we shall be making a contribution of $100 million to a stabilisation fund set up in support of the agreement being discussed between the IMF and the Polish Government. Finally, we shall be spending £15 million on a major project to improve the Polish food supply situation.

A know-how fund will provide British expertise for Hungary, amounting to £25 million over five years and will operate from next year.

39. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress the European Community Commission has made in carrying out its co-ordination of aid measures to Poland and Hungary following the Paris summit.

Mr. Maude: The European Commission is co-ordinating aid measures to Hungary and Poland effectively, and have within the Community made numerous proposals which have led to the comprehensive series of measures approved by the Council. Three co-ordination meetings of the 24 countries providing aid to Poland and Hungary have been held since the Paris summit, as well as expert working groups dealing with food aid, investment, environmental protection and vocational training. The international financial institutions and the OECD have been associated with this work. There will be a substantive review of progress at a ministerial meeting of the 24 countries in Brussels on 13 December.

86. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is planning any changes in Britain's relations with eastern Europe in the light of the breaching of the Berlin wall.

Mr. Maude: We welcome the changes that are taking place in eastern Europe. Our policy of maintaining sound defences through NATO, and building up economic success in the EC, has been an important factor in the process which is now unfolding. This policy will continue. As individual countries in eastern Europe embark on genuine political reform, we are actively seeking, in common with our Community partners, to develop our relations with them and to encourage them with advice and practical help.

95. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on European Economic Community policy towards eastern Europe.

Mr. Maude: The aim of EC policy has been to respond to and encourage reform in the emerging democracies of eastern Europe. The Community therefore differentiates in its relations with individual countries. The Community responds positively to significant progress towards genuine democracy and a market economy through appropriate bilateral trade and co-operation agreements, the extent of which depends on the reform being achieved.

110. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place within the European Community concerning the entry into European Community territory by nationals of east European states.

Mr. Sainsbury: Discussions are continuing between member states in the European Community ad hoc working group on immigration on access to the Community by third country nationals generally, but there has been no specific discussion on east Europeans.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit eastern Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no firm plans to visit eastern Europe at present, but hopes to include it in his travels at an early stage.

48. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is being given to Poland and Hungary in their efforts to establish democracy.

119. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what training in the technical processes of democracy Britain is offering to countries in eastern Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have invited groups of Hungarian and Polish parliamentarians to this country to learn about democratic procedures. We intend to invite further groups in the future. We also intend to help in other areas, such as the media and local government.

Namibia

32. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent elections in Namibia.

85. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent elections in Namibia.

92. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Namibia following the elections for a constitutional council.

102. Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent elections in Namibia.

Mr. Waldegrave: We warmly welcome the successful elections in Namibia and the unanimous adoption by the constituent assembly of the 1982 constitutional principles. We call on all parties to adhere to the remaining provisions of the United Nations settlement plan.

43. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he intends to give to the newly elected Government of Namibia; and if he will make a statement.

101. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking in support of the newly independent and democratic Namibia.

Mr. Waldegrave: We will continue to give our full support to the United Nations' secretary general's efforts to ensure a peaceful transition to independence. We have already indicated our willingness to provide financial aid and, if asked, military training assistance to an independent Namibian Government after independence is achieved.

57. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to support Namibia.

Mr. Waldegrave: We will continue to give our full support to the United Nations Secretary General's efforts to ensure a peaceful transition to independence in Namibia, and we look forward to discussing Namibia's requirements with the new Government after independence.

100. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to meet the new Government of Namibia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is looking forward to meeting the new Government of an independent Namibia at the earliest opportunity after independence is declared.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to visit Namibia.

Mr. Waldegrave: At present my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no firm plans to visit Namibia.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to support Namibia.

Mr. Waldegrave: We will continue to give our full support to the United Nations Secretary General's efforts to ensure a peaceful transition to independence in Namibia, and we look forward to discussing Namibia's requirements with the new Government after independence.

European Community

34. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet his counterparts in the European Community.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs expects to meet his EC colleagues at the European Council in Strasbourg on 8 to 9 December.

35. Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many draft and final European Community directives, regulations and decisions have been published by the Commission since 31 November 1988; approximately how many pages this represents; and if he has any plans to improve scrutiny of European Community documents in future.

Mr. Maude: The Commission have been asked for information on the number of formal proposals issued during the period. When this is available it will be passed to my hon. Friend.

Effective scrutiny is essential. The Government will consider the Procedure Committee's forthcoming report with care and sympathy.

41. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the United Kingdom's priority at the forthcoming Heads of Government meeting in Strasbourg.

Mr. Maude: We hope the European Council will ensure sustained progress on measures necessary for the Community's healthy internal development, and effective Community support for emerging democracies in eastern Europe.

58. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the enlargement of the European Community.

Mr. Maude: According to the EEC treaty, any European state may apply to become a member of the Community. We agree with the consensus in the Community that the emphasis—until at least 1993—must be on consolidation, not enlargement. The Community's priority must be completion of the single market.

69. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met his counterparts in the European Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Foreign Affairs Council met in Brussels on 27 November. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development and I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed preparations for the Strasbourg European Council on 8-9 December. The Council confirmed its agreement to a further package of trade measures for Poland and Hungary and agreed in principle to a draft Commission regulation on the disbursement of 300 mecu of assistance to the two countries. The Council welcomed a Commission report on progress made in exploratory discussions with EFTA on strengthening EC-EFTA relations: the United Kingdom and other member states now look forward to a joint EC-EFTA ministerial meeting on 19 December. The Council took note of a paper presented by the Commission on future relations between the Community and Mediterranean countries, which was remitted for further study. In the margins of the Council, a meeting of the EC-Yugoslavia Co-operation Council took place, and the Community expressed its support for the process of economic reform in Yugoslavia. Also in the margins, the Community position on all aspects of Lomé IV was confirmed. The non-aid elements were agreed with ACP representatives. In the framework of European political co-operation, Ministers discussed the situation in eastern Europe, the middle east, southern Africa and central America, issuing a statement condemning the fresh upsurge in violence in central America. Copies of the statement have been placed in the Library of the House.

115. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals have been received by Her Majesty's Government, other than those in the monetary sphere, concerning institutional development of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Maude: Proposals to establish a Community trade mark office and a European environment agency are under discussion in the Council. They do not require treaty amendment.

130. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expect to meet the President of the European Commission; and if the European social charter will be discussed.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will next meet the President of the Commission on 30 November in London. The European social charter may be among the subjects that they discuss.

Nepal

42. Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the effect on the people of Nepal of the restricted flow of imports to that country through India; and what representations Her Majesty's Government has made to the Government of India on such restrictions.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have been very concerned at the dispute between India and Nepal, in particular at its increasingly damaging effect on the people of Nepal and on their economic development. Nepal is an old and close friend of Britain, whose prosperity we have always sought to promote.

We remain closely in touch with both sides. The Indian Government are aware of our concern to see early negotiations leading to a mutually satisfactory settlement of this dispute.

Entry Clearance Applications

44. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to reduce the time taken to process applications for entry clearance at British high commisions in Pakistan.

Mr. Sainsbury: The majority of visit visa applications in Pakistan are processed within 24 hours of receipt. In settlement cases waiting times for interview have been reduced this year following an increase in the number of permanent entry clearance staff and a further streamlining of procedures. I expect that waiting times will shorten still further during the coming year.

Spain

46. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet his Spanish counterpart; and if he will make a statement.

52. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet his Spanish counterpart; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs meets his Spanish counterpart regularly at EC and NATO meetings. In addition, he will be going to Madrid next month for the annual bilateral talks on Gibraltar and other issues.

Commissioner Papandreou

47. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met Commissioner Papandreou; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has yet to meet Commissioner Papandreou.

Iraq

54. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Iraqi Government concerning the human rights of the Kurdish people in Iraq.

Mr. Waldegrave: We regularly make clear to the Iraqi Government at all levels our concern over Iraq's human rights record, including the treatment of its Kurdish population.

Conventional Forces

55. Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made at the CFE talks in Vienna.

62. Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made at the CFE talks in Vienna.

Mr. Waldegrave: The negotiations on conventional armed forces in Vienna continue to make successful progress and a wide measure of convergence has already been achieved. There is a good prospect of an agreement being reached in the course of next year.

Central America

56. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Secretary-General of the United Nations in regard to the sending of a United Nations peace-keeping force to central America.

88. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Secretary-General of the United Nations in regard to the sending of a United Nations peace-keeping force to central America.

108. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Secretary-General of the United Nations in regard to the sending of a United Nations peace-keeping force to Central America.

Mr. Sainsbury: The formation of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA) was approved in Security Council resolution No. 644 on 7 November, with our support.

Berlin

60. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent visit to West Berlin.

83. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Berlin.

98. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Berlin.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs visited Berlin on 16 November. He called on the acting Governing Mayor, Frau Stahmer, and visited Potsdamerplatz, the Brandenburg gate and the Reichstag. He saw the great excitement and happiness which followed the breaching of the Wall, and the tremendous efforts which the Berlin authorities are making to cope with the influx of new arrivals. He was glad to see the British Military Government and our forces helping with this work.

South Africa

61. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to visit South Africa in the near future.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to do so.

63. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now meet the President of the African National Congress of South Africa to discuss future developments to end apartheid.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to do so.

94. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with other Commonwealth countries concerning Commonwealth policy towards the Republic of South Africa in the light of recent reforms announced within the Republic.

Mr. Waldegrave: There have been no such discussions since the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting held in Kuala Lumpur from 18 to 24 October.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet the South African ambassador to discuss the situation of the railway workers under sentence of death in that country.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Argentina

65. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of relations with Argentina.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have made progress towards more normal relations with Argentina, without in any way compromising our position on Falklands sovereignty. Last month in Madrid we were able to resolve a number of practical issues, and will shortly be resuming consular relations. A copy of the joint statement agreed in Madrid has been placed in the Library of the House.

We aim to build on this progress. Working groups will meet in Montevideo on 5-7 December to discuss measures to build confidence and avoid incidents in the military sphere and in Paris on 18-20 December to discuss fisheries conservation. We agreed to consider the question of diplomatic relations at our next substantive meeting in Madrid on 14-15 February.

Burma

68. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Burmese Authorities that the elections promised for next year should be free and fair.

99. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Burmese authorities that the elections promised for next year should be free and fair.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes. We shall continue to make plain to the Burmese authorities that any elections which are not seen to be free and fair will be regarded as a sham.

Czechoslovakia

73. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his assessment of developments in Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Waldegrave: The situation in Czechoslovakia is very fluid. We strongly urge the Czechoslovak authorities to permit the people to exercise their rights under the Helsinki Final Act and to open the way to peaceful political change, as has happened elsewhere in eastern Europe.

114. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what protests he has made to the Czechoslovakian Government about the use of violence against the two British journalists, Edward Lucas of The Independent and cameramen Philip Bye of ITV.

Mr. Waldegrave: We protested both to the Czechoslovak ambassador in London and to the Foreign Ministry in Prague on 20 November about this disgraceful incident.

Baltic Republics

75. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's present policy towards developments in Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania.

134. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the present situation in Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Successive British Governments have never recognised de jure the forcible incorporation of the former Baltic states in the Soviet Union. It follows that we respect the right of the peoples of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania to say what their own future should be. Considerable progress has been made towards greater democracy in the Baltic states in recent months. We welcome this.

Pakistan

76. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he may be able to give to the Government of Pakistan to help resolve their economic difficulties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We welcome Pakistan's return to the Commonwealth. We have an effective and growing bilateral aid programme for Pakistan. Last year we spent £23 million. During Prime Minister Bhutto's visit here in July, a memorandum of understanding was signed covering grants of £25 million for social sector projects.

Israel

79. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement concering British relations with Israel.

Mr. Waldegrave: Relations with Israel are good.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions when (a) Ministers and (b) officials from his Department visited Israel during 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I visited Israel in March. Officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office pay regular visits to Israel.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions when (a) Ministers and (b) officials from his Department met officials from the embassy of Israel during 1989; what was discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Ministers and officials have frequent contacts with the Israeli ambassador and his staff to discuss issues of mutual interest.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the prospects for realistic peace negotiations developing from current international efforts to bring representatives of the Palestinian people and the Israeli Government to direct talks.

Mr. Waldegrave: We fully support efforts to convene talks in Cairo between the Israeli Government and the Palestinians, from inside and outside the occupied territories, to carry forward Mr. Shamir's elections proposal.

Soviet Union

81. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet his Soviet counterpart to discuss Anglo-Soviet relations.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs hopes to meet Mr. Shevardnadze during the first half of next year.

Nicaragua

96. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he plans to offer Nicaragua to help in the organisation of the forthcoming general elections there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: At the invitation of the Nicaraguan Supreme Electoral Council, we have appointed an official British election observer for the elections. We have also donated photocopying equipment. A number of our partners have provided aid for the elections, and the EC is also considering doing so.

Chile

97. Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit Chile.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans at present to visit Chile.

Brussels Treaty

106. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to re-examine with its co-signatories the provisions of the Brussels treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes.

Sarawak

109. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Sarawak.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no immediate plans to visit Sarawak.

British Council

111. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the British Council's promotion of British interests overseas.

135. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the British Council is promoting British interests overseas.

Mr. Sainsbury: The British Council have proved that they can deliver excellent value for money in promoting our interests worldwide, most notably in the fields of educational exchanges, English language teaching and the arts. We are glad to have been able to increase their grant substantially for the second year in succession which will, for example, enable the British Council to increase its operation in eastern Europe.

Somalia

113. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what fresh initiatives he has taken or intends to take to encourage an end to the civil war in Somalia and enable refugees to return home.

Mr. Waldegrave: We continue to support efforts aimed at bringing peace and reconciliation to Somalia.

NATO

116. Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications of recent events in Germany for the future of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Waldegrave: NATO remains the cornerstone of our defence, and has a vital role in providing the framework of stability within which further progress towards democracy and freedom in the German Democratic Republic can be made.

Lebanon

120 Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the peace process in the Lebanon.

Mr. Waldegrave: The assassination of President Moawad is a grave setback to the process of reconciliation in Lebanon. We call on the Lebanese people and other parties concerned to exercise restraint and to continue the search for peace.

125. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on any current Government initiatives to bring about the release of British citizens held captive in Lebanon.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he plans any new initiatives to free the British hostages held captive in Lebanon.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have reviewed our efforts to secure the release of the hostages and have concluded that our policy of making no substantive concessions to the hostage holders is correct. We shall take every opportunity to urge those countries and organisations having influence on this matter to use it to bring about the hostages' release. Meanwhile, we shall continue to follow up all possible leads.

Arms Control

121. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the current state of arms control negotiations.

Mr. Waldegrave: NATO is pursuing energetically all the arms control priorities set out at the May NATO summit, and western proposals continue to dominate the arms control agenda. The conventional arms control negotiations have made good progress since they were established in March, and we remain on course to reach the ambitious target we have set ourselves of agreement next year. We are also moving forward towards a global chemical weapons convention at the negotiations in Geneva. As United States and Soviet negotiators are making progress towards a START agreement which would make deep cuts in each country's strategic nuclear arsenal.

Council of Europe

123. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet his opposite numbers in the Council of Europe.

Mr. Maude: The next ministerial session of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe will take place on 10 May 1990. A decision on whether my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary or another Minister will attend will be taken nearer the time.

Human Rights

128. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make it his policy that the United Kingdom should not attend any human rights conference in Moscow until there is a substantial improvement in Soviet performance in protecting human rights; and if he will make a statement about recent developments in this area.

Mr. Waldegrave: As we made clear in January, we shall attend the CSCE human rights conference in Moscow in 1991 only if progress made on human rights in the Soviet Union in recent years is sustained. While there have been undoubted improvements, significant problems remain—in particular the plight of many long-term refuseniks who are still not allowed to emigrate.

Islamabad

136. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit Islamabad.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no immediate plans to visit Pakistan.

UNESCO

139. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how Her Majesty's Government are using the resources previously allocated to UNESCO; and if he will make a statement.

140. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how Her Majesty's Government are using the resources previously allocated to UNESCO; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the financial year 1988-89 the money saved by our withdrawal from UNESCO was re-allocated and spent as follows:

	£ committed	£ spent
1. ODA Technical Co-operation Training Programme	1,872,000	1,773,033
2. English Language Training Courses	799,000	593,920
3. ODA Shared Scholarship Scheme	320,000	320,000
4. FCO Scholarships and Awards Scheme	640,000	640,000
5. ODA Cultural Projects	100,000	92,000
6. PES transfer to FCO for cultural projects	100,000	100,000
7. Chinese student scholarships in United Kingdom	950,000	950,000
8. Distance learning project in Commonwealth countries	100,000	—
9. Nassau fellowships	500,000	743,368
10. Commonwealth Media Development Fund	150,000	150,000
11. Royal Society	112,000	116,000
12. Research in Arid Commonwealth Africa	300,000	300,000
13. Inter-Governmental Oceanographic Commission	96,000	78,000
14. Man and the Biosphere/ International Hydrological Programme/ International Association of Hydrological Sciences	200,000	200,000
15. Dissemination of results of research	200,000	200,000
Total	6,439,000	6,256,321

China

141. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current relations between the United Kingdom and the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Christchurch (Mr. Adley) on 20 October at column 267.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is satisfied that the sale of radar equipment to China by GEC-Marconi was not in contravention of the Madrid declaration of 27 June to cease high technology and military sales to China.

Mr. Maude: The Madrid declaration imposed an embargo on trade in arms with China but did not prohibit sales of high technology. We have therefore banned export of weapons together with any equipment which could be used for the purposes of internal repression. Proposed exports are considered on a case-by-case basis. The avionics equipment to be supplied to China by GEC Marconi falls outside the embargo.

Refuseniks

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Russian Government about their treatment of refuseniks.

Mr. Waldegrave: We continue to take every opportunity to raise individual refusenik cases with the Soviet authorities, and to underline the need for satisfactory and effective legislation in this area. The most recent high level exchange took place on 29 September when my predecessor met Mr. Shevardnadze in New York.

Tibet

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the Chinese occupation of Tibet.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has received four letters from hon. Members on behalf of constituents and 48 letters from members of the public.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations

he has made to the Government of the People's Republic of China about events in Tibet; and what response has he received.

Mr. Maude: We have frequently made clear to the Chinese our concern about human rights in Tibet, both bilaterally and in association with our EC partners. The Chinese have reiterated their willingness to talk with the Dalai Lama but reject any moves to promote the independence of Tibet.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to meet the Dalai Lama.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Membe to the answer that I gave at column 498 on 16 November to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry).

Arts and Culture

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what prominence he intends to give to the role of arts and cultural policy in the national plan that Her Majesty's Government will offer to the European Community in 1990.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 27 November 1989]: I am not aware of such a plan.

Bulgaria

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to meet Mr. Peter Mladenov, the new head of state of Bulgaria.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to meet Mr. Mladenov.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to promote a cessation of the escalating conflict in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Sainsbury: We support the efforts of the Sri Lankan Government to restore peace and stability throughout the country. To that end, we welcome the agreement between India and Sri Lanka announced on 18 September, which provided a framework for implementation of measures to achieve a peaceful settlement in the north and east.

Genocide (UN Convention)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those countries known to his Department to have ratified the United Nations convention on genocide, according to date of ratification.

Mr. Sainsbury: As at 1 August 1989, 102 countries have ratified acceded or succeeded to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide:

Ethiopia: 1 July 1949.
Australia: 8 July 1949.
Norway: 22 July 1949.
Iceland: 29 August 1949.
Ecuador: 21 December 1949.
Panama: 11 January 1950.
Guatemala: 13 January 1950.
Israel: 9 March 1950.
Monaco: 13 March 1950.
Jordan: 3 April 1950.
Liberia: 9 June 1950.
Philippines: 7 July 1950.
Saudi Arabia: 13 July 1950.
Bulgaria: 21 July 1950.
Turkey: 31 July 1950.
Yugoslavia: 29 August 1950.
El Salvador: 28 September 1950.
Sri Lanka: 12 October 1950.
Costa Rica: 14 October 1950.
Democratic Kampuchea: 14 October 1950.
France: 14 October 1950.
Haiti: 14 October 1950.
Republic of Korea: 14 October 1950.
Romania: 2 November 1950.
Poland: 14 November 1950.
Lao People's Democratic Republic: 8 December 1950.
Czechoslovakia: 21 December 1950.
Denmark: 15 June 1951.
Belgium: 5 September 1951.
Hungary: 7 January 1952.
Nicaragua: 29 January 1952.
Egypt: 8 February 1952.
Honduras: 5 March 1952.
Brazil: 15 April 1952.
Sweden: 27 May 1952.
Italy: 4 June 1952.
Mexico: 22 July 1952.
Canada: 3 September 1952.
Cuba: 4 March 1953.
Chile: 3 June 1953.
Lebanon: 17 December 1953.
Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic: 11 August 1954.
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: 3 May 1954.
Ukranian Soviet Socialist Republic: 15 November 1954.
Germany, Federal Republic of: 24 November 1954.
Greece: 8 December 1954.
Albania: 12 May 1955.
Syrian Arab Republic: 25 June 1955.
Burma: 14 March 1956.
Afghanistan: 22 March 1956.
Argentina: 5 June 1956.
Iran (Islamic Republic of): 14 August 1956.
Tunisia: 29 November 1956.
Pakistan: 12 October 1957.
Morocco: 24 January 1958.
Austria: 19 March 1958.
Ghana: 24 December 1958.
Iraq: 20 January 1959.
Iceland: 27 August 1959.
Colombia: 27 October 1959.
Finland: 18 December 1959.
Peru: 24 February 1960.
Venezuela: 12 July 1960.
Zaire: 31 May 1962.
Algeria: 31 October 1963.
Burkina Faso: 14 September 1965.
Netherlands: 20 June 1966.
Mongolia: 5 January 1967.
Uruguay: 11 July 1967.
Spain: 13 September 1968.
Jamaica: 23 September 1968.
Nepal: 17 January 1969.
United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland: 30 January 1970.
Tonga: 16 February 1972.
Fiji: 11 January 1973.
German Democratic Republic: 27 March 1973.
Mali: 16 July 1974.
Lesotho: 29 November 1974.
Rwanda: 16 April 1975.
Bahamas: 5 August 1975.
Ireland: 22 June 1976.
New Zealand: 28 December 1978.
Gambia: 29 December 1978.

Barbados: 14 January 1980.
Vietnam: 9 June 1981.
Luxembourg: 7 October 1981.
St. Vincent and the Grenadines: 9 November 1981.
Papua New Guinea: 27 January 1982.
Cyprus: 29 March 1982.
Gabon: 21 January 1983.
China: 18 April 1983.
Mozambique: 18 April 1983.
Senegal: 4 August 1983.
United Republic of Tanzania: 5 April 1984.
Maldives: 24 April 1984.
Togo: 24 May 1984.
Democratic Yemen: 9 February 1987.
Antigua and Barbuda: 25 October 1988.
United States of America: 25 November 1988.
Democratic People's Republic of Korea: 31 January 1989.
Yemen: 6 April 1989.
Libyan Arab Jamahiriya: 16 May 1989.

Soviet Jews

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those Soviet Jews known by his Department who emigrated from the Soviet Union during 1989, together with the date they first applied.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following is a list of refuseniks whose cases we have raised with the Soviet government since August 1988 and who have received permission to emigrate. This amounts to 70 per cent. of the total number of cases that we have raised. The dates in brackets show when those concerned first applied for exit visas.

Boris Aibinder (1975)
Lydia Berkovich (1980)
Mark Bernfeld (1977)
Alexander Blinov (1975)
Irina Chasin (1979)
Boris Chernobilsky (1976)
Yuri Chernyak (1978)
Miron Finerman (1977)
Leonid Gershun (1988)
Grigory Gimpleson (1978)
Valery Golub (1980)
Leonid Gonorovskiy (1979
Inna Gorenstein (1978)
Mikhail Gurfink (1976)
David Gusak (1982)
Yakov Ioselevich (1979)
Mikhail Kalendarev (1979)
Mikhail Kazanevich (1980)
Mikhail Kaplansky (1987)
Elena Keiss-Kuna (1974)
Yulian Khasin (1979)
Kilberg family (1983)
Vladimir Kislik (1974)
Genzl Klebanov (1979)
Vladimir Knokh (1975)
Vladimir Koifman (1979)
Valerie Kokuyeva (1988)
Yuli Kosharovsky (1971)
Don Kozlenko (1981)
Mikhail Kremen (1974)
Pavel Krivonos (1974)
Iosif Latinsky (1980)
Evgeny Lein (1978)
Oleg Leshinsky (1979)
Boris Lifshitz (1979)
Ludmilla Lubenskaya (1979)
Alexander Lukatsky (1979)
Emmanuel and Judith Lurie (1980)
Feliks Lyuboshits (1980)
Norbet Magazanik (1977)
Oscar Mendeleyev (1970)
Vladimir Meshkov (1981)
Eduard Nadgorni (1979)
Boris Orlov (1977)
Zinovy Ostrovsky (1979)
Iosif Pilmenstein (1979)
Elias Pinsker (1986)
Georgy Pozdnyakov (1977)
Malka Prilutskaya (1988)
Alexander Pyatetsky (1974)
Naum Rabinovich (1981)
Gennady Reznikov (1979)
Ilya Resnikov (1979)
Grigory Rosenstein (1982)
George, Vera and Victor Samoilovich (1972)
Max Severinovsky (1978)
Lev Sheibas (1979)
Dmitri Shchiglik (1973)
Ilya Shostakovsky (1974)
Mikhail Shoychet (1976)
Arnold Shpeizman (1977)
Alexander Sinichkin (1988)
Anna Sofman (1983)
Roman Sorkin (1988)
Sonya Spitkovsky (1978)
Abe Stolar (1975)
Lev Stambler (1979)
Igor Uspensky (1979)
Elya Varshavskaya (1980)
Alexander Yampolsky (1974)
Mikhail Yusim (1979)
Raold Zelichenok (1978)
Boris Zolotarevsky (1988)

Raoul Wallenberg

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance his Department gave to the family of Raoul Wallenberg during their recent visit to the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The visit was organised by members of Raoul Wallenberg's family with the co-operation of the Soviet authorities. We were not involved. We welcome the visit as a further step towards establishing the truth about what happened to Raoul Wallenberg.

Palestine Liberation Organisation

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy on the application of the Palestine Liberation Organisation to join the World Health Organisation and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The 12 member states of the European Community made their position clear in a formal note to the director general of the World Health Organisation on 28 April 1989. No member of the European Community has recognised the "state of Palestine" declared by the Palestine National Council in November 1988. Accordingly we do not accept that the PLO satisfied the criteria for membership of WHO. We have also strongly advised the PLO not to pursue their application.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards official contacts with the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

Mr. Waldegrave: We believe that the steps that it has taken in the past year have qualified the PLO to participate in the peace process. We maintain regular contact with members of the PLO.

United States House of Representatives

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in obtaining the hearings and reports from the United States House of Representatives on house joint resolution 220 of the 97th Congress, session one; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have asked Her Majesty's embassy in Washington to try to obtain copies of these reports. These will be deposited in the Library of the House.

Dr. Peter Southwell

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent action has been taken by Her Majesty's Government to ascertain the whereabouts of Dr. Peter Southwell, a British citizen missing in Kenya.

Mr. Sainsbury: The British High Commission in Nairobi is in regular contact with the Kenyan authorities about the progress of the latter's investigations into the disappearance of Dr. Southwell. To date, the investigations have proved inconclusive.

Iran

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about public executions in Iran since the death of the Ayatollah Khomeini.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have consistently condemned violations of human rights in Iran. We continue to be disturbed by reports of summary executions there. We therefore welcome the decision of the Iranian authorities to accept a visit by the United Nations special representative on human rights in Iran and urge them to co-operate fully with his investigations.

Visas

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will reduce the cost of visas which Hungarian students require to come to the United Kingdom on student exchanges.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. Visa fees are levied at the same rates on a world wide basis, irrespective of the nationality of the applicant and the purpose of travel.

Human Rights Day

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to celebrate human rights day 1989.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have no particular plans to celebrate human rights day. The best way for all nations to do so is by better observance of human rights in accordance with the universal declaration of human rights.

Burundi

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the use of the joint funding scheme for funding development projects being carried out by British non-governmental organisations in Burundi.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is no predetermined geographical allocation of resources under the joint funding scheme. Non-governmental organisations are free to submit long-term development project proposals for most developing countries, including Burundi. Decisions on funding rest on the quality and relevance of those project proposals.

HIV (Central Africa)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to launch any specific programme to aid those regions of Central Africa where the HIV infection rate appears to exceed 30 per cent. of the population.

Mr. Waldegrave: According to the World Health Organisation, no country in Africa is known to have an HIV infection rate of 30 per cent. or more in the general population.

Subject to parliamentary approval, we shall contribute a further £4·5 million to the WHO's global programme on AIDS in 1990, bringing the total committed so far to £16·33 million. All countries in Africa collaborating with the WHO benefit from this contribution. In addition, we have agreed to provide £6 million so far through WHO to national AIDs programmes in 10 countries in Africa where we can build on our existing health assistance programmes. We stand ready to help further where we can and where countries can absorb more assistance.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 30 November 1989

CIVIL SERVICE

Disabled Employees

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what are the numbers of (a) deaf, (b) blind and (c) wheelchair-bound civil servants that are currently employed; and what percentage they form of the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: At 1 June 1989, there were 7,682 staff employed in the Civil Service who are registered as disabled. This represents 1·3 per cent. of all civil servants. No comprehensive Civil Service—wide information is available about the number of civil servants who are deaf, blind or wheelchair-bound or about the numbers of civil servants who are disabled but who have chosen not to register under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

THE ARTS

Theatres

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of Arts how many theatres he has visited in the last 12 months; and if he will list them.

Mr. Luce: I have made 19 such visits since December 1988. In that month I visited the Apollo theatre, Shaftesbury avenue, and the Unity theatre, Liverpool. In 1989 I have so far visited Sadlers Wells (on 18 January and 3 April); the Old Vic (16 February); the Royal National theatre (1 March); the Tricycle theatre (8 March); the Mercury theatre, Colchester (22 March); the Derby Playhouse (25 April); the Marlowe theatre, Canterbury (3 May); the Theatre Royal, Norwich (8 June); the Theatre Royal, Margate (30 June); the Stephen Joseph theatre in the Round, Scarborough (12 July); the Cricklade theatre, Romsey (14 July); the Hawth theatre, Crawley (28 July); the Theatre Royal, Newcastle (12 September); the Theatre Royal, Brighton (27 October); the Theatre Royal, Bury St. Edmunds (9 November); and the Savoy theatre (28 November. On 1 December I shall again visit the Unity theatre, Liverpool.

Drama, West Glamorgan

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has any plans to increase the percentage of grants that his Department allocates to drama in West Glamorgan.

Mr. Luce: The funding of drama in Wales is a matter for the Welsh Arts Council.

Drama and Museums

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what studies he commissioned and what research surveys he drew on as the basis for his statement of 27 November, Official Report, column 432 that Britain has the highest standards for drama and museums.

Mr. Luce: My statement reflected what many people have said. It is unnecessary to spend public money on research in this field: the evidence should be plain for the hon. Member to see, visit and enjoy.

Taxation

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister for the Arts if there have been any items accepted in lieu of tax or allocated since he last made an announcement on the subject to the House.

Mr. Luce: Since my announcement on 19 July at column 180, I am pleased to announce that three offers of items have been accepted in lieu of tax; a portrait of Sir Alexander Carew attributed to Gheerhaerdts, a painting by Pissarro, and eight Islamic pottery tiles. The tax liability satisfied was £103,976·42, £73,040 and £42,000 respectively. The Carew portrait will remain in situ at Antony house, Cornwall and the Pissarro painting will go to the Whitworth art gallery, Manchester. The ceramic tiles originally formed part of the Godman collection which was accepted in lieu of tax in 1983 and they will now be allocated to the British museum to join the rest of that collection.

WALES

Employment

83. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by how much employment has risen in Wales since 1983.

Mr. Peter Walker: Over the period June 1983 to June 1989 the civilian work force in employment total has increased by 135,000.

Low-cost Housing

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those measures which have been taken since 1985 to increase the supply of low-cost housing in rural areas, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Since 1985 the Housing Corporation, and more recently Housing for Wales, has been asked to pay particular attention to rural areas. Consistently about 25 per cent. of the development programme for housing associations in Wales has, therefore, gone to these areas.

More specifically, in July 1989, Housing for Wales announced a rural housing initiative to assist local people, and especially young people, to find a suitable home they can afford in their own communities. This initiative will be run on a pilot basis in 31 villages, the majority of homes being provided on shared ownership terms with a pre-emption right to return the home eventually to the relevant housing association.

In addition, Housing for Wales has recently commissioned two research projects on rural housing issues. These will consider the nature and extent of need for housing for young people throughout rural Wales and will assist Housing for Wales in the development of its future strategy to meet the needs of rural areas.

In June this year a draft planning guidance, "Low cost housing in rural areas in Wales", was issued for consultation and we are currently considering the responses received.

In his Budget statement my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced changes to capital gains and inheritance taxes on land sold at less than best price to registered housing associations. Tax is now based on the actual proceeds of sale rather than the market value, thereby encouraging landowners to release small units of surplus land for low-cost local housing needs.

Local authorities also have a very important role to play both in assessing local housing requirements and in seeking to achieve the most cost-effective means of matching them. In addition to the general resources that the Department has made available to Welsh authorities we have also allocated £1 million this year between nine authorities to purchase homes which would otherwise become second homes and then to make those homes available to local people.

The Department is working with rural authorities and other agencies in Wales to help to broker best practice in meeting rural needs.

Rural Unemployment

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what form he keeps figures for rural unemployment in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: There is no classification by which unemployment areas can readily or systematically be categorised as rural or urban.

Homelessness

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many people are now classified as homeless in Wales; and what steps he is taking to reduce that figure;

(2) if he will make a statement on homelessness legislation in Wales;

(3) what plans he has to deal with the homeless in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The normal measure of statutory homelessness is given by cases accepted by local authorities under part III of the Housing Act 1985. The number of persons in households accepted during the second quarter of 1989 (April to June) was 4,832. The Department is in touch with a wide range of organisations concerned with homelessness and a statement will be made soon.

Land Authority for Wales

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the acreage of land acquired by the Land Authority for Wales for each of the past five years; and if he will separately distinguish those figures by district council area;

(2) what was the acreage of land owned by the Land Authority for Wales in each district council authority in Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. Grist: We have asked the chairman of the Land Authority for Wales to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Rents-into-Mortgages Scheme

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to extend his rents-into-mortgages scheme to local authority tenants.

Mr. Grist: The scheme is being introduced by the Development Board for Rural Wales on an experimental basis. We shall be assessing its impact within the next 12 months.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to use television advertising to promote his rents-into-mortgages scheme.

Mr. Grist: No.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the estates owned by the Development Board for Rural Wales, showing their location within Wales; and if he will estimate the average income of eligible tenants for participation in the rents-into-mortgages scheme, for these estates.

Mr. Grist: The development board has five estates at Newtown—Trehafren, Treowen, Measydail, Vaynor, and St. Mary's close—and also housing at Bala, Dolgellau, Twyyn, Llandrindod Wells and Abercrave. It is not possible to estimate the average incomes of the development board's tenants with any accuracy.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of Development Board for Rural Wales dwellings have been sold to sitting tenants.

Mr. Grist: Before the new scheme, 14 per cent.

Housing

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were classified as homeless in (a) Wales, (b) Gwent and (c) Newport in 1979; and what is the most recent figure.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 27 November 1989]: The number of cases accepted as homeless during 1979 and 1988 is shown in the following table:

	1979	1988
Newport	313	643
Gwent	1,115	1,671
Wales	4,676	6,818

The number of persons involved in these cases is 864 and 1,635 (Newport), 2,950 and 3,891 (Gwent) and 12,698 and 17,105 (Wales), for 1979 and 1988 respectively.

Autumn Statement

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will make a statement on the implications for health, education, housing, roads, the environment, tourism and the arts in Wales flowing from the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Autumn Statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Table 1.4 of the Autumn Statement 1989 shows that in round terms my total expenditure provision for 1990-91 is £4,460 million. As explained in the statement, the public expenditure picture is affected by the introduction of the new planning total. On this basis the £4,460 million represents an increase of 15·5 per cent. (10 per cent. in real terms) over the forecast outturn for the current year (£3,860 million). Allowing for changes in coverage of Welsh Office programmes between the two years, the increase is 12 per cent. or 6·7 per cent. in real terms. This compares with the average increase of less than 9 per cent. (3·8 per cent. in real terms) for all other departmental programmes.

I announced yesterday the provision that I have made for local authority capital programmes next year. This provides for gross spending of £475 million, an increase of almost 7 per cent. over the comparable provision for 1989-90.

I shall be announcing my decisions on other major Welsh Office programmes in due course. Full details of my planned expenditure for the next three years covering all my programmes will be set out in the public expenditure White Paper and the Welsh Office commentary which will be published early next year.

Health Authorities (Backlog Maintenance)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list, by health authority, the aggregated total figure for each district of estimated backlog maintenance, for the last available date.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is determined annually by district health authorities. They reported for 1988-89 the estimate of the cost of backlog maintenance for their respective districts in the following table:

	£ million
Clwyd	19·2
East Dyfed	4·5
Gwent	14·6
Gwynedd	10·0
Mid Glamorgan	26·4
Pembrokeshire	0·7
Powys	1·2
South Glamorgan	45·0
West Glamorgan	11·1

Food Poisoning

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will give the total number of reported cases of food poisoning in Wales per 1,000 of the population for the years 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988, together with the total for 1989 to the latest date currently available;

(2) if he will give the total number of reported cases of food poisoning in Wales per 1,000 of the population for the years 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987 and for 1989 up to the latest date currently available.

Mr. Grist: The number of notifications to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) of food poisoning (together with cases as certained by other means) in 1989 totalled 2,670 up to 10 November.

The annual notification rates per 1,000 population for 1984 to 1988 were shown in the following table:

Year	Number
1984	0·35
1985	0·47
1986	0·50
1987	0·59
1988	0·68

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what causes his Department has identified for the increase in incidents of food poisoning in Wales;

(2) what research he has commissioned into the causes of food poisoning in Wales and ways of reducing incidence in the future;

(3) what response he has made to the increase in the incidence of food poisoning in Wales; what steps he has taken to reduce future incidence; and if he will make a statement;

(4) whether he will make it his policy to make additional funds available for local authorities in Wales to strengthen their food inspection and environmental health teams.

Mr. Grist: All parts of England and Wales have an increased incidence of reported food poisoning to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre. A contributory factor must be an increased awareness of, and therefore increased reporting of, food-borne illness generally.

The Committee on Microbiological Safety of Food, chaired by Sir Mark Richmond, has been asked to establish whether any rise is linked to changes in agriculture and food production, food technology and distribution, retailing, catering and food handling in the home; and to recommend action where appropriate. After the first meeting, in April 1989, the committee indicated that it aimed to submit its first report as soon as possible.

The Government have recently announced a series of measures which together will make a significant contribution towards preventing and controlling the incidence of food poisoning.

The Food Safety Bill was published on 23 November. This is primarily intended to strengthen existing food law and provides improved powers to protect the consumer. In particular, for the first time it will be an offence to supply food that does not comply with food safety requirements. There will be tougher powers for enforcement authorities. In recognition of the additional burdens which will fall upon local authorities, it has been announced that resources totalling £30 million will be made available to local authorities in England, Scotland and Wales for 1991-92.

It is also proposed to amend the food hygiene regulations so as to introduce more stringent temperature controls on certain types of food and to extend these controls into distribution and retailing. These proposals have recently been the subject of a public consultation exercise.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the British Rail Board to publish, for Wales, the results of the consultation process under section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We expect the board to publish its plan, which includes Wales, before the Christmas recess.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of total standard spending and aggregate external finance he has proposed for 1990-91; what increase this represents over 1989-90; what is his estimate of the community charge for standard spending in Wales; what are his estimates of the community charges which would be set by individual councils if local authorities budget to spend in 1990-91 at the same level as their income from rates and grant in 1989-90, adjusted for changes in funding arrangements and increased to be consistent in aggregate with total standard spending; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am proposing to set total standard spending and aggregate external finance (AEF) at £2,114·5 million and £1,738·5 million respectively. Total standard spending would thus increase by 7·1 per cent. and AEF by 8·6 per cent. compared with the equivalent figure for 1989-90. Both increases provide sufficient resources to enable local councils to meet their obligations without reducing services and without passing extra costs on to their community charge payers. The community charge for standard spending for Wales is £174. This is achievable if all authorities spend in line with my proposals.

The community charges which could be set by individual councils if they were to spend at the same level as their rates and grants income for 1989-90, increased to equate in total to £2,114·5 million and after adjusting for changes in funding arrangements, are set out in the table. The figures are provisional at this stage and are subject to amendment in the light of final population figures and other data changes. I look to councils in setting their budgets and actual community charges to ensure that their charge payers can share in the benefits of the realistic settlement that I have proposed for 1990-91.

Provisional spending and community charge figures for 1990-91[1]

Authority	Standing spending assessment	Expenditure projection[2]	Community charge for standard spending	District and county council charges[2]	Difference assuming present spending patterns	Total community charge
	£000	£000	£	£	£	£
Alyn and Deeside	6,967	6,962	27	27	0	184
Colwyn	5,196	5,484	27	34	+7	191
Delyn	5,695	6,636	27	45	+19	203
Glyndwr	3,785	3,622	27	22	−5	180
Rhuddlan	5,637	6,466	27	46	+19	204
Wrexham Maelor	11,122	11,256	27	28	+2	186
Carmarthen	5,436	4,701	27	10	−17	151
Ceredigion	6,505	6,214	27	21	−6	162
Dinefwr	3,499	2,952	27	9	−18	150
Llanelli	8,285	9,030	29	42	+13	183
Preseli Pembrokeshire	7,041	6,148	27	11	−16	152
South Pembroke	4,653	4,093	27	10	−17	151
Blaenau Gwent	9,807	10,713	27	42	+15	184
Islwyn	8,075	7,947	27	24	−2	166
Monmouth	6,599	6,829	27	31	+4	172
Newport	16,125	16,659	29	34	+5	176
Torfaen	9,604	9,591	27	27	0	168
Aberconwy	5,270	5,735	27	38	+11	170
Arfon	6,075	5,946	27	24	−3	156
Dwyfor	3,596	3,511	27	23	−4	155
Meirionnydd	3,828	4,363	27	46	+19	178
Ynys Mon	7,034	7,712	27	40	+13	172
Cynon Valley	8,507	8,145	29	22	−7	167
Merthyr Tydfil	8,000	7,891	29	27	−2	172
Ogwr	14,959	15,299	27	30	+3	175
Rhondda	11,923	10,836	29	11	−18	156
Rhymney Valley	10,490	11,381	27	38	+12	183
Taff Ely	9,889	8,559	27	8	−19	153
Brecknock	4,197	4,022	27	22	−5	130
Montgomeryshire	4,628	3,992	27	11	−15	120
Radnorshire	2,070	1,943	27	20	−7	129
Cardiff	29,856	30,691	27	31	+4	163
Vale of Glamorgan	10,268	9,599	27	19	−8	151
Port Talbot	6,259	6,167	27	25	−2	208
Lliw Valley	5,882	5,368	27	16	−11	200
Neath	6,924	6,895	27	26	−1	210
Swansea	23,514	23,840	27	29	+2	213
Clwyd	225,056	228,557	147	158	+11	—
Dyfed	203,291	201,935	146	141	−5	—
Gwent	248,799	247,225	146	141	−5	—
Gwynedd	141,985	139,287	147	132	−15	—
Mid Glamorgan	319,716	319,296	146	145	−1	—
Powys	77,887	74,342	147	109	−38	—
South Glamorgan	226,991	222,909	147	133	−14	—
West Glamorgan	209,474	219,651	147	184	+37	—
Total districts	307,200	307,198	27	27	0	174
Total counties	1,653,200	1,653,202	147	147	0	—
Total Wales	1,960,400	1,960,400	174	174	0	174

[1] These exemplifications are based on provisional population figures from community charge registers and are subject to change in the light of final population figures and other data. A fuller description is given below. [2] District expenditure figures include community councils' precepts and the district charge includes the average community council charge for the district area.

Standard Spending Assessments

The Secretary of State's provisional assessment of the spending level for each authority to be financed by Revenue Support Grant, income from the non-domestic rate pool and community charges in order to provide a standard level of service.

Expenditure projection

Each authority's projected spending level, consistent with Standard Spending Assessments, based on 1989-90 budgets adjusted for changes in functions and funding arrangements and inflated to 1990-91 levels.

Community charge for Standard Spending (CCSS)

The community charge component each authority could set if it spent in line with its Standard Spending Assessment and if appropriate payments were to be received from all those on the provisional community charges register. Variations in the CCSS between districts or between counties reflect the way library services are provided in each area.

District and county council charges

The community charge component each authority could set if it spent in line with its expenditure projection and if appropriate payments were to be received from all those on the provisional community charges register. District charges include the average community council charge for the district area.

Difference assuming present spending patterns

The District or county charge minus the CCSS.

Total Community charge

The sum of the district (including average community council) and the appropriate county council components of the community charge, assuming each authority spends in line with its expenditure projection.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made by community charge registration officers in Wales in compiling community charge registers for 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Walker: Excellent progress has been made. I have received provisional estimates of registered population as at 9 November from all 37 community charge registration officers in Wales. They show a very high rate of registration. Estimates of adult population from the registers are very close, for all authorities, to the equivalent estimates based on data provided by the registrar general. The total for Wales is slightly above the registrar general's 1988 mid-year estimate.

TRANSPORT

Birmingham Airport

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in view of its expanding international operations, he will grant gateway status to Birmingham International airport.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 27 November, Official Report, column 80.

European Community

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the results of the United Kingdom presidency of the European Conference of Ministers of Transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: During the United Kingdom's year of holding the Presidency of the European Conference of Ministers of Transport (ECMT) which ended on 23 November, I chaired two regular meetings of the Council of Ministers at which we discussed a wide range of inland transport issues. We also decided to give Hungary and Poland observer status at ECMT Council meetings.

In June, as President of the ECMT, I invited all Transport Ministers of eastern and western Europe to a meeting in London to discuss the possibilities of closer co-operation on transport matters. This meeting was followed by a similar meeting in Budapest in September at the invitation of the Hungarian Transport Minister, at which we concentrated on road safety issues.

The final event of the United Kingdom's Presidency was a special session in Paris on 23 November on transport and the environment, in which Transport Ministers and representatives from Environment Ministries from ECMT member states met for the first time and reached a broad agreement on co-ordinated international action to back national initiatives. Ministers agreed that mobility is essential to economic development, but that a balance needs to be struck between transport and environmental needs. Considerable scope exists for further technological advances towards environmentally friendly cars and lorries; fiscal measures also have an important contribution to make, as is demonstrated by the actions taken by several member states, including the United Kingdom, to encourage the use of unleaded petrol. Ministers accepted that transport users should bear the costs which they impose on the infrastructure and the environment.

Ministers agreed to set up a working group to promote and monitor follow-up action, and to hold a hearing with vehicle manufacturers and the fuel industry. The Swedish Transport Minister, as incoming President of the ECMT, has invited Transport Ministers from eastern and western Europe to a conference on transport and the environment in Stockholm in September 1990.

The substantial progress made on international, political, transport and environmental protection matters has made this last year one of great importance for the ECMT.

Merchant Fleet

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that the current size of the United Kingdom merchant fleet is sufficient to provide the support which the Royal Navy would require in time of war.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 28 November 1989]: The requirement of the Royal Navy for the use of suitable merchant vessels as support in time of transition to war or war is the subject of continuous planning between this Department and the Ministry of Defence. The situation is constantly monitored and there are at present sufficient numbers of these vessels available on the British registry to meet current needs.

British Rail (Live Rails)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are (a) the total numbers of reported offences, (b) the total number of arrests and (c) the numbers of deaths in the areas of live rails, such as those used by British Rail Network SouthEast track for (i) England and Wales and (ii) the Greater London area each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The information is not available in the form requested. I can, however, provide details relating to the numbers of fatalities resulting from contact with electrified railway lines for the country as a whole. The figures, taken from the Department's chief inspecting officer's annual reports, are as follows:

Year	Passengers killed	Trespassers killed	Railway staff killed	Total
1979	1	10	—	11
1980	—	9	—	9
1981	—	9	2	11
1982	1	11	15	27
1983	—	5	—	5
1984	—	12	8	20
1985	—	4	—	4
1986	1	7	1	9
1987	—	5	1	6
1988	—	4	—	4
Total	3	76	27	106

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information he has on the instructions or guidelines the British Transport police and the Metropolitan police have issued on the safe apprehension of suspects in the areas of live rails;

(2) what specific training or guidelines are given to British Transport police and Metropolitan police officers on the policing of areas with live rails; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Portillo: Relevant guidelines have been produced by British Rail's director of operations at the request of the British Transport police (BTP). These have been issued to all police forces throughout the United Kingdom and I am placing a copy in the House of Commons Library as the hon. Member has requested. BTP officers receive specialised training concerning safety aspects of policing British Rail and London Underground railways. All BTP officers are authorised to work on running lines in the same way as British Rail operational staff. I understand that this does not apply to officers in other police forces, but advice and assistance is available from the BTP as and when needed.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Slieve Croob, Dromara

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what type of building is currently being constructed at Slieve Croob, Dromara in South Down; and what consideration is being given to the fact that it is being constructed in an area of outstanding natural beauty.

Mr. Cope: The building under construction at Slieve Croob is required to provide accommodation for the equipment and personnel involved with the communications relay station.

The buildings have been designed and located to take the maximum advantage of the local topography to lessen the effect which the buildings might have on the surrounding environment.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what type of business or work will be carried out at the building currently under construction at Slieve Croob, Dromara in South Down on completion.

Mr. Cope: The building work currently under way at Slieve Croob is concerned with the improvement and development of an existing communications relay station which provides a service to the community at large. It is used by a number of public bodies, including the ambulance and other emergency services, the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) roads and water services and the Department of Agriculture forestry division.

Strangford Lough

Mr John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what amendments he made to the proposed Strangford Lough ASSI part 3, following representations from Strangford Lough Nature Conservation Association and representations from the local community living near Strangford Lough.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 29 November 1989]: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland confirmed the ASSI declaration with six minor amendments to the boundary. These amendments, which recognise changes which took place since the original survey and the need to correct some mapping errors, reduce the area originally included in the ASSI by half a hectare.

Flag Flying

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has advised the Southern health and social services area boards of the appropriate dates to fly the Union flag on its buildings; and if he will seek information from the board why the Union flag was not flown on its premises at The Mall, Armagh, on Remembrance Sunday.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 29 November 1989]: The requirement to fly the Union flag on those prescribed days relevant to Northern Ireland applies to central Government offices only. There is no requirement therefore for the Southern health and social services board to comply.

At the request of the Southern health and social services board, details of the prescribed days for flying the Union flag are issued to it each year.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Registry (Surveyors)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish in the Official Report the number of surveyors employed by the Land Registry to serve each of its geographical divisions.

The Attorney-General: The current number of staff employed by the Land Registry on site and boundary inspections is set out in the table by district registry. At any one time in each district registry a large number of staff is qualified to do this work.

	Number
Croydon	1
Harrow	2
Tunbridge Wells	3
Lytham	3
Nottingham	4
Gloucester	3
Stevenage	2
Durham	2
Plymouth	2
Swansea	2
Birkenhead	2
Weymouth	2
Peterborough	3
Telford	1
Coventry	1
Hull	1
Total	34

In addition, the Ordnance Survey carries out surveys for the Land Registry on a repayment basis.

Emma Worthington

Mr. Speller: To ask the Attorney-General if he will refer to the Court of Appeal the sentence for the manslaughter of Emma Worthington which was imposed upon Stuart William Ross at Exeter Crown court on 14 November.

The Attorney-General: The matter is under consideration. I will write to my hon. Friend when I have reached my decision.

Mr. Khalil Ahmed

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General when the appeal of Mr. Khalil Ahmed, date of birth 1 October 1969, Ref. Imm/93246, who has been refused permission by the post in Islamabad to join his wife, will be heard by the appellate authorities.

The Attorney-General: The papers in this case (which has been allocated the reference number TH/6834/89) were copied by the appellate authorities to Mr. Ahmed's nominated representatives in the United Kingdom on 14 August 1989. They replied on 16 August that they were ready to proceed, but before the matter was listed for hearing they withdrew from the case, as did another firm of solicitors on 4 October. The appeallate authorities wrote to the appellant in Pakistan on 12 October 1989 stating that unless he nominated a further representative before 12 December the appeal would be determined by an adjudicator without a hearing on the papers before him. If no representative is nominated the appeal will be dealt with as soon after that date as possible.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Kemp Report

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to alter the methods of operation of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Redwood: The interdepartmental working group of officials formed to advise Ministers on the Kemp review of status options for ECGD has now submitted its report, which is being considered by Ministers. A decision on the way forward will be taken as soon as possible.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he proposes to implement the recommendations of the Kemp report on export credit guarantees.

Mr. Redwood: The interdepartmental working group of officials formed to advise Ministers on the Kemp review of status options for ECGD has submitted its report, which is now being considered by Ministers. An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Optoelectronics

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals exist for the development of a major programme for a national fibre optics communications network aimed at implementing optoelectronic research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Development of the national telecommunications networks is a matter for the telecommunications operators in response to market demands.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what support he has given for trial schemes to test optoelectronic systems and products in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I have recently licensed British Telecommunications plc to run, in collaboration with equipment manufacturers, a technical trial in Bishop's Stortford to test telecommunications delivery systems based on optical fibre.

Life Assurance

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are in place to protect with-profit policy holders against a foreign predator acquiring and asset stripping a United Kingdom life insurance company.

Mr. Redwood: The Insurance Companies Act 1982 (section 61) provides that no person may become the controller of an insurance company without first notifying the Secretary of State, who may object if he considers that the proposed controller is not a fit and proper person to be a controller of that company. "Fit and proper" is not defined in the Act, but in considering whether to exercise his power to prevent a change of control the Secretary of State has regard to any issue which may affect the interests of the company's policyholders.

Further provisions in the Act require that the long-term business fund must be kept separate from the company's other funds and place restrictions on the purposes for which these funds may be applied. The Act also gives the Secretary of State wide-ranging powers to intervene where this is necessary to protect policyholders' interests. Where appropriate the Secretary of State may require assets of the company to be maintained in the United Kingdom or to be held in trust.

Pyramid Selling

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will introduce new pyramid selling scheme regulations to replace the 1973 regulations.

Mr. Forth: I have today laid the Pyramid Selling Schemes Regulations 1989, under the Fair Trading Act 1973, which will come into operation on 1 March 1990.

The new regulations are designed to ensure that no one will be able to participate in a pyramid selling, or multi-level marketing scheme, without having first signed a contract which sets out their rights and includes a statutory warning about such schemes.

The promoters of the scheme will be required to set out in the contract details of when the scheme started in the United Kingdom and where it is operated from as well as descriptions of the goods or services on offer. They will also have to specify in the contract that the participant may withdraw from the scheme without penalty within 14 days of first signing and set out the participant's rights should he subsequently wish to withdraw.

The regulations also prohibit promoters from accepting more than £75 from participants within the first seven days. They set an upper limit of £30 as payment for participants recruiting others. There are also provisions relating to payments for training facilities and deposits.

In making these regulations I have focused on enabling a prospective participant to make an informed choice when considering whether to join the scheme.

These regulations do not cover the content of advertisements, notices, prospectuses and circulars which do not state the financial benefits of joining a scheme, or which may appear in the press or as handouts. These remain, quite properly, subject to the Advertising Standards Authority's code of practice.

Copies of the regulations have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Israel

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will list the ministerial visits which have taken place in the last two years involving United Kingdom ministers visiting Israel and Israeli ministers visiting the United Kingdom; what further visits are planned over the next 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 29 November 1989]: I can only answer for visits to or by Ministers of my Department. In the last two years the following Israeli Ministers have visited the Department of Trade and Industry: Mr. Moshe Shahal, Minister for Energy; Mr. Ariel Sharon, Minister of Industry and Trade; Mr. Gad Ya'acobi, Minister of Communications.

No DTI Ministers visited Israel in that period, and no inward or outward ministerial visits are currently planned. DTI officials are expected to go to Israel in 1990 for the United Kingdom-Israel joint committee on bilateral trade.

Company Accounts

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies failed to lodge annual accounts for the financial year 1986-87; and how many prosecutions took place as a result.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 29 November 1989]: The chief executive of Companies House tells me that information is not available in the form requested. However, 130,000 companies in England and Wales had not filed their latest accounts at 30 June 1988. These accounts related mostly to financial years ending between September 1986 and August 1987.

Companies House seeks to achieve compliance primarily by means of reminders to companies before they are due to file and warning letters after companies have gone into default. These measures are supplemented by publicity aimed at directors and professional advisers.

Companies House's present policy is to prosecute only when other methods of obtaining statutory documents have failed. In the year ending 31 March 1989, there were 4,543 prosecutions for failure to deliver accounts. Some, but by no means all, of these prosecutions would relate to accounts for 1986-87.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

History Teaching

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement regarding the recent Government report on recommendations for the teaching of history in the national curriculum, and its relevance to a multi-cultural society.

Mrs. Rumbold: In its interim report published in August the national curriculum history working group gave its provisional views on the teaching of history. The group is expected to make its final report to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Wales by the end of the year. My right hon. Friends will publish their proposals when they have considered that report.

Head Teachers (Correspondence)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many primary school head teachers have written to him in the month of November, either directly or through hon. Members forwarding their letters to him, expressing concern about teacher morale, pressure of work and administrative or resource difficulties in implementing the national curriculum; and what has been the general nature of his reply to such letters.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not available in the form requested. My right hon. Friend frequently receives correspondence from primary school head teachers about various aspects of education provision. They receive appropriate replies, which I hope they find helpful.

Maintained Schools

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on how many occasions in the last three months he and his Departmental Ministers have visited maintained schools in their official capacities; and what are the equivalent figures for grades 1, 2 and 3 officials in his Department.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In the three months to 30 November my ministerial colleagues and I have visited 30 maintained schools. The equivalent figures for grades 1, 2 and 3 are zero, 13 and three respectively.

Departmental Information

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take to reduce the flow of Departmental circulars, letters or guidance notes to head teachers; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The flow of material to schools over the last year has reflected the need to give schools information and guidance about their new responsibilities under the Education Reform Act. My right hon. Friend recognises the pressure which the volume of material has placed on schools and is taking a close interest in the flow of new material to ensure that it is kept within reasonable bounds and within the capacity of the system to absorb it.

Supply Teachers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the report by Her Majesty's inspectorate on primary schools training of supply teachers.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The report by Her Majesty's inspectorate, "The Implementation of the National Curriculum in Primary Schools", found that primary schools have made a satisfactory start in preparing for the introduction of the national curriculum. Expenditure on training related to the national curriculum (including that for supply teachers) is supported through the local education authority training grants scheme. It is for LEAs to make decisions about training priorities in the light of identified local needs.

National Curriculum

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the report by Her Majesty's inspectorate on primary schools on resources to implement the Government's plans for the core subjects of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The report by Her Majesty's inspectorate, "The Implementation of the National Curriculum in Primary Schools", found that levels of resourcing for the core subjects in key stage 1 were generally adequate. The report also comments on the good use being made of the specific grants which the Government have provided to support the introduction of the national curriculum.

Higher Education

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he expects the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council to close courses which cannot meet the minimum resource requirements.

Mr. Jackson: The Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council has no power to close courses. It is for the institutions to determine their own academic provision in the light of the funds available to them.

Engineering Courses

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the student-to-staff ratio in engineering courses at polytechnics for each of the last 10 years to the current year.

Mr. Jackson: Available data on student : staff ratios (SSR) are given in the table.

Laboratory and workshop based higher education SSRs at polytechnics: 1978-79 to 1987-88 (England)

Academic year	Ratio
1978-79	7·8
1979-80	8·0
1980-81	8·5
1981-82	9·1
1982-83	9·5
1983-84	10·1
1984-85	10·6
1985-86	11·0
1986-87	11·1
1987-88	11·5

These SSRs are calculated from data collected in the Department's Annual Monitoring Survey and are on a different basis from those calculated using student data from the Departments Further Education Statistical Record and lecturer data from Form 618G.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department will make available resources to the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council sufficient to meet the funding requirements indicated by the Engineering Council.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend announced the resources available to the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council (PCFC) in his statement on 15 November (Official Report, written answers, columns 272-76). I understand that the Engineering Council has written to the PCFC about the question of resources for engineering education. It is for the PCFC to consider what its response should be.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when Her Majesty's inspectors received a copy of the Engineering Council's recommendations on the minimum resources required for engineering education in the polytechnic sector; and what response they propose to make.

Mr. Jackson: Her Majesty's inspectorate is aware of the statement published in 1984 entitled "Resources for Engineering Education" at degree and HND level. A review of engineering in the polytechnics and colleges, based on HMI inspections over the last five years, is about to be published. The review will include comment on a wide range of aspects of engineering education, including resources and their management.

Research Councils

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration the Advisory Board for the Research Councils has given to the proposed merger of the five research councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend recently received advice from the ABRC on the future structure of the research council system. This arose from consideration of a report to the board by a review group under the chairmanship of Mr. J. R. S. Morris CBE which recommended a merger of the present five research councils.

My right hon. Friend is considering the board's advice and will make a statement in due course.

Civil Science Expenditure

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total Government spending on civil science in Britain (a) in real terms and (b) as a percentage of gross domestic product for each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The figures of total Government spend on civil research and development are as follows:

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
			Estimate	Provision
Real terms (£M) (1989-90 prices)	2,792	2,805	2,729	2,674	2,706
Proportion of GDP	0·62	0·60	0·55	0·52	0·52

Sources:
Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development 1988 and 1989.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current pay claim by the National Union of Teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: The interim advisory committee will no doubt consider carefully the evidence it has received from the NUT in formulating its recommendations on teachers' pay for 1990-91.

Recruitment

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps are being taken to attract more well-qualified young people into the teaching profession; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Since 1986 the Department has taken a number of measures to improve teacher supply, at a cost so far of £50 million. These include bursaries for trainee teachers in maths, physics, design and technology, and chemistry; new forms of initial teacher training courses; and greater publicity and advertising of teaching opportunities through the teaching as a career unit, TASC.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will indicate for the city technology colleges at (a) Solihull, (b) Nottingham and (c) Teesside the number of pupils from outside the agreed catchment area that he has authorised to be accepted.

Mrs. Rumbold: All pupils under the age of 15 attending the Teesside and Nottingham CTCs are admitted from within the college's catchment areas. There is no defined catchment area for 16-plus admission to the Nottingham CTC, but priority is given to pupils living within a two-mile radius of the college. My right hon. Friend has given permission for nine of the 360 pupils attending the Kinghurst CTC to be admitted from outside its catchment area. I understand that all pupils attending CTCs live within reasonable travelling distance of the colleges.

DEFENCE

Armoured Vehicles (USSR)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any evidence that the Soviet Union has reduced its production of modern armoured fighting vehicles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Soviet officials have said that there has been a significant reduction in activity at the Soviet Union's tank plants during the course of this year. We believe that total tank production will be lower than in previous years but are unable to quantify the actual figures.

US Bases (East Anglia)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has made any assessment of the future of United States air bases in East Anglia, following comments by the United States Secretary for Defence on possible troop reductions in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United States Government has made it clear that the Allies will be consulted on any force level reductions made in Europe. Any decisions affecting United States air bases in the United Kingdom will be the subject of full consultations with the United Kingdom Government.

WE177 Bomb

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what expenditure has been incurred to date on the study of procurement options for the possible replacement of the WE177 free-fall bomb.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 28 November at column 572.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of procurement options for the possible replacement of the WE177 free-fall bomb that are currently being studied.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have nothing to add to the reply given to the hon. Member on 17 July at column 71 by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any agreements have been concluded with (a) the United States Government or (b) the French Government regarding the study of procurement options for the possible replacement of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb.

Mr. Alan Clark: Arrangements enabling an exchange of information have been concluded with the United States Government. Negotiations are in hand with the French Government about similar arrangements.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether any money has been paid to (a) British Aerospace or (b) Hunting Engineering in connection with the study of possible procurement options for the replacement of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb;

(2) whether any plans exist to pay money to (a) British Aerospace or (b) Hunting Engineering in connection with the study of possible procurement options for the replacement of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether any of his officials has visited French Government facilities in connection with the study of possible procurement options for the replacement of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb;

(2) whether any of his officials has visited United States Government facilities in connection with the study of possible procurement options for the replacement of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As I have said on several occasions, discussions are taking place with both the United States and French Governments on procurement options for the possible replacement of the WE177 free-fall bomb, which include visits to the appropriate establishments. No decisions have yet been taken.

Military Training

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are taken to confirm the identity of those people who receive military training from British service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Appropriate arrangements are made with the authorities of the foreign Government concerned.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are taken to ensure that the benefits and lessons gained from military training by British service personnel are not transferred from those who receive the training to those who are authorised to receive it.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The control of information released to members of foreign armed forces during training by British service personnel is a matter for the civil and military authorities of the country concerned. The extent and type of any classified information to which foreign nationals are granted access will reflect their need to know and will also be commensurate with Her Majesty's Government's assessment of the recipient country's ability to control the information in an appropriate manner.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision is made for the study of the legal aspect of warfare in the military training provided for foreign nationals by British service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Instruction in legal aspects of warfare is provided to foreign and United Kingdom students where it is appropriate to the subject of the training course concerned.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any British service personnel have been involved in the provision of military training in (a) Zimbabwe and (b) Thailand at any time in the last four years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: British service personnel have provided military training in Zimbabwe to both the Mozambiquan and Zimbabwean armed forces during the last four years. British service personnel have also made several short advisory visits to the Thai armed forces in the same period.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which foreign military forces have been provided with military training by British service personnel over the last four years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since 1 April 1986, personnel from the armed forces or police of the following countries and dependent territories have attended military training courses in the United Kingdom or received training from British service personnel overseas:

Algeria
Australia
Austria
Bahamas
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belgium
Belize
Bermuda
Botswana
Brazil
Brunei
Burma
Cameroon
Canada
Chad
Chile
China
Colombia
Congo
Denmark
Djibouti
Dominica
Ecuador
Egypt
El Salvador
Fiji
Finland
France
Gambia
Germany
Ghana
Greece
Grenada
Guyana
Hong Kong
India
Indonesia
Iraq
Ireland
Israel
Italy
Ivory Coast
Jamaica
Japan
Jordan
Kenya
Kuwait
Lebanon
Lesotho
Luxembourg
Malawi
Malaysia
Maldives
Malta
Mauritius
Mozambique
Nepal
Netherlands
New Zealand
Nigeria
Norway
Oman
Pakistan
Philippines
Portugal
Qatar
Saudi Arabia
Senegal
Sierra Leone
Singapore
Somalia
South Korea

Spain
Sri Lanka
St. Lucia
St. Vincent
Sudan
Swaziland
Sweden
Switzerland
Tanzania
Thailand
Tonga
Trinidad and Tobago
Tunisia
Turkey
Turks and Caicos
Uganda
United Arab Emirates
Uruguay
United States of America
Venezuela
Yemen
Yugoslavia
Zaire
Zambia
Zimbabwe

Thailand

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any British service personnel have visited Thailand in an official capacity at any time in the last four years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes, there have been a number of advisory visits by British service personnel to the Royal Thai armed forces during the last four years. In addition, troops from the Hong Kong garrison regularly exercise in Thailand and, in 1988, RAF Tornado F3 aircraft used training facilities in the country.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any training in military signalling has been provided by British service personnel in Thailand at any time in the last four years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Details of military assistance provided to foreign Governments are normally confidential.

Cambodia

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any British signalling equipment has been supplied to the Khmer People's National Liberation Army or the National Sihanoukist Army at any time in the last four years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department has not supplied any such equipment to either organisation.

Chemical Weapons (USSR)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current estimate of the stocks of chemical weapons held by the Soviet Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government's position regarding Soviet stocks of chemical weapons remains as expressed in paragraphs 219-220 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989 (Cm. 675-I).

Trident

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to date of lobbying in the United States in favour of Trident.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 28 November at column 569.

BAOR

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual cost of maintaining the British Army of the Rhine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to table 2.3 of volume 2 of the 1989 Statement on the Defence Estimates (Cm. 675-II).

Warsaw Pact

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of Warsaw pact armament production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Our latest estimates for Warsaw pact armaments production relate to 1988 and are as follows:

(a) approximately 4,200 tanks, including approximately 3,500 made in the USSR;
(b) approximately 700 fighter aircraft, plus approximately 200 combat trainers;
(c) 11 submarines (including two major conversions) and five major surface ships; and
(d) approximately 375 ballistic missiles.

It is not yet possible to give figures for 1989. However, we believe that there may have been a fall in tank production and that cuts in some other areas, such as fighter aircraft, are being implemented. Any cuts will, of course, be from high historic levels of output.

Helicopters

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive the report on the review of the use of helicopters in the land battle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The balance of investment in weapon systems, including helicopters, is kept continually under review. The results of this work will continue to be taken into account when we reach procurement decisions.

Canadian Base, Suffield

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, in tabular form, each incident at Canadian forces base, Suffield, in which British service men have been injured, giving the date of each incident, the number of soldiers injured and the nature and extent of their injuries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Date of incident and nature/extent of injuries	Number injured
7 June 1984: minor injuries	3
5 September 1985: burns face and forearm	1
19 October 1985: eye injury	2
31 October1985: minor gun shot wound to right forearm	1
31 July 1986: smoke inhalation	1
28 August 1986: eye injury	1
24 September 1986: injuries to leg	1
4 June 1987: fatal	2
17 July 1987: 1 fatality, 2 minor injuries	3

	Number injured
17 August 1987: minor injuries	1
9 May 1988: minor injury to left temple	1
2 August 1988: lacerations to forehead	1
7 August 1988: gun shot wound to left ankle	1
25 August 1988: calf injuries	1
22 September 1988: burns to right arm	1
5 May 1989: gun shot wound to chest/leg	1
16 May 1989: injuries resulting from road traffic accident	1
30 May 1989: burns to hands	1
7 July 1989: serious leg injuries resulting in amputations	3
26 July 1989: wound to left leg	1
29 July 1989: gun shot wounds	2
8 August 1989: compound fracture of two fingers	1
26 August 1989: flash burns to right hand	1

The British Army training unit (BATUS) is located within the Canadian Forces base at Suffield. It provides the British Army with invaluable facilities for tactical live firing and manoeuvre exercises at battle group level. During this five-year period, approximately 45,000 service men have trained there. Safety procedures are given a high priority.

HMS Upholder

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding leaks in the torpedo tubes of HMS Upholder.

Mr. Neubert: During the trials of HMS Upholder in 1988, a design fault was discovered which could, in certain circumstances, allow water to enter the submarine's torpedo tubes. The tubes were locked shut as a precautionary measure while trials continued. A modification to correct the fault has been designed and will be fitted to the submarine when sea trials have been completed.

Invincible Class Carriers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if there have been any problems experienced with the existing aircraft lifts on the Royal Navy's Invincible class aircraft carriers;

(2) if he will make a statement regarding replacement aircraft lifts for the Royal Navy's Invincible class aircraft carriers.

Mr. Neubert: The aircraft lifts in the Royal Navy's Invincible class aircraft carriers have successfully supported the operations of these ships over the past 10 years. However, they have experienced a higher than anticipated incidence of defects and failures, and an associated high maintenance and repair burden. Modifications and improvements carried out to date have increased their reliability, but not to the extent considered adequate to enable them to support the ships' role over the remainder of their projected lives. In consequence, a programme to develop a replacement lift has been initiated, and an invitation to tender for proposals is soon to be issued to industry.

Procurement Establishments

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will calculate the number of jobs in establishments producing the procurement budget for each year since 1979.

Mr. Neubert: Estimates of United Kingdom employment dependent on defence equipment expenditure from 1978-79 to 1986-87 (the latest period for which estimates are available) are given in table 6.8 of Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989, Volume 2.

Defence Spending

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the size of the defence budget in real terms for each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Defence expenditure since 1979-80, after taking account of defence specific inflation, was as follows:

1988-89 prices

	£ million
1979-80	18,015
1980-81	18,564
1981-82	18,736
1982-83	19,894
1983-84	20,230
1984-85	21,126
1985-86	21,030
1986-87	20,270
1987-88	19,936
1988-89	19,073
1989-90	[1]19,106

[1] Estimated outturn.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list total defence spending as a proportion of gross domestic product for each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since 1979-80, defence expenditure has represented the following proportions of GDP:

	per cent.
1979-80	4·4
1980-81	4·7
1981-82	4·8
1982-83	5·1
1983-84	5·0
1984-85	5·2
1985-86	4·9
1986-87	4·7
1987-88	4·4
1988-89	4·0

During the current financial year, it is estimated that defence expenditure will be about 3·9 per cent. of GDP.

Otterburn Training Area

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action his Department plans to take in relation to entry by the Newcastle and District Beagles on to his Department's land at Otterburn training area on 15 September.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On this occasion, the Ministry of Defence has accepted an apology from the master of the Newcastle and District Beagles for crossing the boundary of the Otterburn training area without permission. However, we have given notice that further trespass cannot be tolerated.

Cyprus

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arms Britain is selling to the Greek side of Cyprus.

Mr. Neubert: It has been the consistent policy of successive Administrations not to give details of arms sales to specific countries. In the case of Cyprus, however, our policy precludes the supply of arms to the armed forces of either side, because of our desire to preserve our neutrality and help bring about a peaceful solution.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Privatisation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reduction in civil servant numbers there will be in existing Government departments presently dealing with the water industry, after its privatisation.

Mr. Chris Patten: Following the successful privatisation of the water industry, it is anticipated that as a result there will be a reduction of 47 posts in my Department. Account has been taken of this in setting the manpower baseline for 1990-91.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the ports currently registered for the import of toxic waste, together with the amount of such waste imported, the countries of origin and destinations and the nature of the waste, through each of those ports, for the last three available years.

Mr. Chris Patten: There is no statutory requirement that ports be "registered" to accept waste.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) collects information on imported waste from waste disposal authorities every financial year. For the financial years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 that information indicates that the following ports accepted the amounts of waste indicated. The information collected does not enable HMIP to determine the amounts of waste in relation to the country of origin, destinations or make-up.

Following the implementation of the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations in October 1988 HMIP now collects more detailed information but has not yet compiled data for the current year.

Quantities of waste (tonnes) imported via named ports

Port	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
Avonmouth	1,519	2,737	—
Barking	—	2,276	—
Boston	—	1,283	164
Bristol	1,333	—	—
Briton Ferry	2,300	7,536	12,360
Chatham	1,730	49	88
Dartford	4,122	4,133	52
Devonport	25	—	—
Dover	1,638	3,559	20
Felixstowe	13,038	21,416	12,311
Fishguard	50	—	—
Fleetwood	1,956	2,173	1,440
Garston	203	—	—
Greenwich	—	2,276	—
Grimsby	271	14	—
Harwich	855	1,578	141
Holyhead	124	384	221
Immingham	12,233	293	20,020
Ipswich	543	15	290
Liverpool	80	658	1,405
Manchester	60	—	—
Newhaven	23	48	—
Newport	3,082	—	315
Plymouth	42	—	—
Poole	230	72	—
Portsmouth	70	17	—
Purfleet	100	109	83
Rainham	924	—	—
Ramsgate	25	—	395
Seaforth	127	—	—
Seaham	3,599	—	—
Southampton	13	222	—
Sunderland	—	—	—
Teesport	—	1,650	2,959
Tilbury	2,666	2,910	41

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the proportion of households which will be liable to pay above average community charge which are households with below average incomes.

Mr. Chope: An up-to-date estimate is not available at present.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why he decided not to take account of any quarterly returns giving the numbers of children of claimants of supplementary benefit or income support received between December 1987 and April 1988 in calculating standard spending assessments in respect of poll tax.

Mr. Chope: We were advised by the Department of Social Security that the quarterly inquiry for February 1988 had been cancelled in order to accommodate the changeover from supplementary benefit to income support.

Palace of Westminster

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what basis (a) Ministers of the Crown and (b) other hon. Members are charged for connections into the Palace of Westminster aerial system.

Mr. Chris Patten: Ministers are provided with televisions in their offices at the House when required by their official duties.

Other right hon. and hon. Members are charged the actual cost of connecting their private television sets to the aerial system.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what electrical, mechanical and technical works would be required in order to replace the existing annunciators with live television feed of proceedings in the Chamber or Committees; and if he will give an estimated financial breakdown of the costs of such works.

Mr. Chris Patten: To provide a live television feed would require the provision of a cable network and television sets. The installation of a cable network would be a complex task and I regret that without a full study, it is not possible to estimate the cost.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average cost of providing a connection into the Palace of Westminster aerial system.

Mr. Chris Patten: The cost of providing a connection to the Palace of Westminster aerial system is dependent on the distance from the main trunk runs and on whether sound amplification is needed. The average cost of connections up till now is about £60.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total energy bill at the Palace of Westminster for each of the past five years.

Mr. Chope: Expenditure on energy for the parliamentary estate, including the House of Lords, over the last five years has been as follows:

	£
1984-85	821,951
1985-86	909,957
1986-87	901,051
1987-88	850,655
1988-89	849,569

The figures are at cash prices.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the estimates of the community charge for the city of Nottingham issued by his Department since 1987.

Mr. Chope: The only estimates of the likely level of the community charge which my Department has published were placed in the Library on 6 November 1989. These showed a provisional 1990-91 community charge of £225 in Nottingham. Without any special transitional arrangements the community charge would be £252.

Illustrative figures have also been published for 1987-88 to 1989-90 showing what the level of the community charge might have been based on local authority responsibilities and expenditure levels in those years. The published figures for Nottingham are shown in the table both with and without the transitional arrangements then proposed.

Published illustrative community charge in Nottingham

	Without transitional arrangements	With transitional arrangements
1987-88	207	195
1988-89	251	231
1989-90	242	247

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many householders in the Bolton area will receive safety net payments on the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The impact of the community charge safety net in each area is not yet known. Provisional figures placed in the Library on 6 November suggest that Bolton will benefit from the safety net, and every chargepayer in Bolton will see the same reduction on their bills.

In addition about 6 million people in England are expected to benefit from the proposed transitional relief scheme. Estimates of the number in each local authority area are not available.

Homelessness

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Macedon trust, Nottingham regarding homelessness and hostels.

Mr. Chope: None since February when my Department agreed an additional housing investment programme allocation to Nottingham city council of £150,000 to help provide accommodation for the trust.

Pesticides

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he has any plans to restrict the domestic use of lindane;

(2) whether he has any plans to restrict the domestic use of pentachlorophenol.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The future use of lindane is under review by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, which advises Ministers on the operation of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. Pentachlorophenol is the subject of a European Communities proposal to amend directive 76/769 EEC on the marketing and use of certain dangerous substances and preparations, which is currently under consideration by the Council.

Pollution

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has reached any conclusions on the proposal for a tax to make the polluter pay, contained in the Pearce report; if he will make it his policy to include noise pollution from airports as the basis for such a tax, as recommended in the report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government's policy already reflects the principle of making the polluter pay. Thus he incurs the full cost, without subsidy, of meeting current environmental protection regulations. "Noise taxes" have been proposed as minor policy instruments by Professor Pearce and others, but the Government have no plans to implement such a tax.

High-Density Baling

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has made of the use of refuse for high-density baling for environmental protection.

Mr. Trippier: My Department has been involved in the monitoring of full-scale trials of high-density baling plant for more than a decade.

Our conclusion is that there can be benefits in transport costs between transfer stations and disposal sites, but overall the benefits are marginal.

Housing Capital Investment

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list at 1988-89 prices housing association capital investment (a) on new buildings for rent, (b) on renovation of existing dwellings for rent and (c) on other housing capital programmes in (1) inner London, (2) outer London, (3) metropolitan areas, (4) the south-east outside London, (5) other non-metropolitan areas and (6) England as a whole for (i) 1980-81, (ii) 1982-83, (iii) 1984-85, (iv) 1986-87 and (v) 1988-89.

Mr. Chope: This information is not held by the Department. The distribution of grants and loans for housing association projects is largely for the Housing Corporation to determine within the broad policy framework established annually in discussion with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. I have therefore asked the Housing Corporation to respond to the hon. Member direct. Some support for housing association schemes is also provided by local authorities.

Housing Associations

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of member-led training schemes for housing association staff in Greater London.

Mr. Chope: My Department does not maintain such lists.

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his Department's commitment to training in the housing association sector.

Mr. Chope: The Government support promotional and advisory activities in the housing association sector, including training for housing association staff, through an annual programme funded by grant-in-aid to the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet representatives of London housing associations to discuss the provision of training to assist associations in providing for the homeless and badly housed in London.

Mr. Chope: My ministerial colleagues and I frequently meet representatives of the housing association sector and we discuss a wide range of housing matters. We are quite prepared to listen to views about training in the course of discussions such as those.

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the effects on London housing associations of the closure of London housing associations training scheme; and if he will make a statement about the future funding of the scheme.

Mr. Chope: I am aware that the London housing associations training scheme is held in high regard by those who use its services, so I hope that it will not be closing. By far the greater part of the scheme's income is in fact from the member associations which use the services. Details of public funding for the organisation are primarily a matter for the Housing Corporation, although I understand that the corporation is making available a grant of about £16,000 to the scheme in the current financial year and is hoping to make available a similar amount in 1990-91. But the overall position on resources is that the balancing of its budget is entirely the responsibility of the organisation itself. It is thus for the scheme to discuss with its member associations the level of costs which they are prepared to bear for its services.

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received concerning the proposed closure of London housing associations training scheme.

Mr. Chope: My Department has received letters from six sources about the future of the scheme.

European Environmental Agency

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the cost to industry and the consumer of the work of the European Environmental Agency.

Mr. Trippier: The proposed agency will assemble and analyse information on the environment from a network of national institutions and organisations. There is no intention to place further burdens on industry or to increase costs to the consumer.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report those he consulted in formulating his policy on the establishment of a European Environmental Agency.

Mr. Trippier: The Government's policy on the establishment of the agency has been formulated in the light of the normal round of discussions between the relevant Government Departments.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the nature of the property-owning powers of the European Environmental Agency.

Mr. Trippier: The draft Council regulation contains articles stating that the European Environment Agency shall have a legal personality and that standard EC property rights as laid down in the protocol on the privileges and immunities of the European Communities, annexed to the treaty of Rome, shall apply.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the estimated capital and revenue costs of establishing and running the European Environmental Agency.

Mr. Trippier: The total costs of establishing and running the European Environment Agency in its first year, as estimated by the Commission of the European Communities, is 5·5 million ecu. The division between capital and revenue costs is not available.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what negotiations he has had with his European Community counterparts to establish a system for the voluntary exchange and publishing of information regarding environmental matters.

Mr. Trippier: A number of Community instruments such as the industrial air pollution framework directive allow for information about environmental matters to be exchanged. The Commission also publishes environmental information from member countries in its periodic state of the environment reports. Discussions have also been taking place to establish a comprehensive system for the voluntary exchange and publication of environmental information in the context of the proposed regulation establishing a European Environment Agency.

Oil Slick, Mersey

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any of the chemicals used to disperse the oil slick in the Mersey this summer had a mercury base.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None of the dispersants deployed by the Department of Transport's marine pollution control unit or obtained from their stockpile contained mercury.

Rainham and Aveley Marshes

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the possibility of a theme park and film studio being developed on Rainham and Aveley marshes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend has received four representations objecting on the ground of nature conservation.

Business Rates

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will explain the basis of his estimate of the yield from non-domestic rates in 1990-91, which is to be distributed to local authorities for that year.

Mr. Chope: The figure announced by my right hon. Friend on 6 November—£10,428·5 million—is the total amount which I expect to be paid by way of rates and a contribution in aid of rates in respect of Crown property. This has been derived by estimating the rateable value of all private business and nationalised industry properties, on the basis of the most up-to-date information available about the effects of the 1990 revaluation, and calculating a multiplier—36p—which will produce an amount that is consistent with the Government's commitment that the yield from those sectors should be broadly the same in real terms under the new system as in 1989-90; by applying that multiplier to the estimated new values of properties occupied by local authorities and the Crown; and by making certain allowances for income likely to be forgone, and adjustments to take account of the effect of transitional arrangements. The detailed calculation is set out in the table.

	£ million (1990-91)
1. Income from Local and Central Lists
a) Total Local and central Lists RV × Multiplier (£27,590m × £0·36)	9,932
+b) allowance for net buoyancy in 1990-91 (1·5 per cent.)	+149
−c) charitable reliefs and other allowances	−306
−d) transitional arrangements	−38
−e) allowance for loss of income as a result of lower rating of empty property	−497
−f) allowance for losses on collection (0·3 per cent. of [1]a+b−c−d−e)	−25
−g) allowance for costs of collection	−42·5
Sub Total	9,172·5
2. Income from Local Authorities
+ Local Authority RV × Multiplier (and after transition)	+635
3. Income from Crown Contribution in Aid
+ Crown RV × Multiplier (and after transition)	+653
4. Total	10,465·5
5. −City Offset (at 1990-91 prices)	−37
6. Total NNDR Distributable Amount (at 1990-91 prices)	10,428·5

[1] Excludes Central List.

Notes:

1. Item 1(a): the estimated rateable value total represents the values of private businesses and nationalised industries on local and central rating lists.
2. Item 1(b): "net buoyancy" reflects changes in the rateable value base largely as a result of new buildings, demolitions and alterations to existing buildings. No separate allowance has been made for 1990-91 for appeals against the new rating list, which are likely to be settled in later years.
3. Items 1(c) and (e): these deductions take account of the effect of changes in statutory provision for charitable relief and unoccupied property rating.
4. Item 1(d): the adjustment for transition represents the amount by which it is estimated that the transitional arrangements will not balance in 1990-91, i.e. the amount of rates foregone as a result of protection against increases which will not be recoupled by way of the limitation on reductions.
5. Items 2 and 3: the figures for rates paid on local authority property and the Crown contribution in aid are net of buoyancy and reduced payments for empty property.
6. Item 5: the City offset is a preliminary estimate of the reduction in the amount which the City of London will be required to pay into the non-domestic rating pool on account of the local rate in the City. This is the amount which will be retained by the authority to meet its expenditure.

Environment Council

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 28 November.

Mr. Chris Patten: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting.

Political agreement was reached on a regulation establishing a European Environment Agency responsible for the collection, co-ordination and analysis of environmental information. The agreement met the concerns of Her Majesty's Government and of the Select Committee on the Environment. It is envisaged that the agency will be a small, independent, professional body which will provide an authoritative source of information to underpin Community environmental policy. Care has been taken to avoid possible duplication of work being undertaken in other fora. The question of the eventual participation of non-Community countries remains open. No decision was taken on the location of the agency's headquarters. The United Kingdom has offered to host it in Cambridge.

The Council considered a compromise text, tabled by the French Presidency, of a draft directive for the protection of natural and semi-natural habitats and wild fauna and flora and in particular the proposed procedures for drawing up a list of protected sites. The Council reaffirmed its support for the principle of a directive and congratulated the Presidency on the progress made in breaking the stalemate over the Commission's proposals. The Presidency text was referred for detailed examination. It is hoped that further substantial progress will take place during the Irish Presidency.

The Council took note of a recent Commission task force report on the relationship between the environment and the completion of the internal market. There was also a preliminary exchange of views on the potential role of fiscal instruments in environmental protection.

I emphasised the Government's strong support for the pinciple of the draft directive aimed at ensuring freedom of access to information on the environment held by public authorities and its dissemination throughout the Community. Following a useful discussion, the proposal was referred back for further detailed examination.

The Council agreed conclusions underlining the need for the Community and member states to play an active part in the conservation of tropical forests and calling for further examination of the Commission's communication on the subject.

Ministers reviewed progress on a draft directive on nitrate pollution from diffuse sources in water, in the light of some suggestions by the French Presidency. Discussion of this proposal will continue in the Irish Presidency.

The United Kingdom received warm support in urging the Commission to bring forward early proposals for two directives controlling vehicle emissions: a consolidated directive which would bring emission standards for medium cars into line with those already agreed for large and small cars; and on measures to reduce emissions from diesel heavy goods vehicles. There was also support for our call for an early Commission report on means to reduce CO_2 emissions from vehicles.

At the request of the United Kingdom the Commission undertook to draft Council conclusions on the need for developed industralised countries to become self-sufficient in the disposal of their own waste as far as possible. It is intended that consideration of the draft conclusions should prepare for discussion of the same subject in OECD.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people in (a) Yorkshire and (b) elsewhere in the United Kingdom have had their water supplies disconnected for non-payment of water charges in the past year, to date.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 28 November 1989]: The information on disconnections for non-payment of water charges is collected on a full year basis. Information in respect of the year to date is not available.

County Councils

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in the past 12 months regarding county council policies and green issues.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 29 November 1989]: The principal area of concern in representations during this period has been with county councils' responsibilities for waste disposal, and with our proposals for legislation to strengthen their role and powers to discharge their duties.

Football Identity Cards

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what date the introduction of the identity card scheme for football spectators has been deferred; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The introduction of the national membership scheme has not been deferred.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners he estimates live on the state retirement pension exclusively; how many live on this pension and income support exclusively; and how many have additional income of up to £5, £5 to £10, £10 to £20, £20 to £50, £50 to £100, £100 to £200 and above £200 per week.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The latest available information is for 1986:

	Per cent.
1. Proportion of Pensioner Tax Units[1] in receipt of Retirement Pension/Supplementary Benefit only	4
2. Proportion of Pensioner Tax Units in receipt of Retirement Pension/Supplementary Benefit and Housing Benefit only	13
3. Proportion of Pensioner Tax Units who have income[2] additional to Retirement Pension/ Supplementary Benefit and Housing Benefit, in stated ranges:—
£0·01 to £5 per week	18
£5 to £10 per week	9
£10 to £20 per week	13
£20 to £50 per week	19
£50 to £100 per week	12
£100 to £200 per week	9
£200 plus per week	4

Source: Family Expenditure Survey 1986.
Notes:
[1] A pensioner tax unit is the unit on which tax is assessed; in this context where the head of the tax unit is over pensionable age and the tax unit receives some Retirement Pension.
[2] At 1986 prices.

Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) approximately how many pensioners over 75 years have applied for the new £3·50 per week supplement introduced in the Budget; and how many of these applications have been successful;

(2) approximately how many pensioners over 75 years have applied for the new £3·50 per week supplement introduced earlier in the current year in the Budget; and how many of these applications have been successful.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Around 2·5 million pensioners who were already entitled to income support or housing benefit will have benefited automatically from the premium changes introduced in October. These changes applied to pensioners aged 75 or over and to disabled pensioners aged 60 or over. Single people will have received an increase of up to £2·50 a week and couples an increase of up to £3·50 a week.

Information is not yet available on which to estimate the number of pensioners who newly qualified for benefit from October as a result of the changes. However, over the four months from the start of the publicity campaign in July until the end of October a total of 579,000 claims for income support were received from pensioners, of which 196,000 were successful. This compares with a total of 66,000 successful claims over the previous four months. Information on new claims for housing benefit is not yet available.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will extend the eligibility criteria of mobility allowance to other groups whose mobility problems do not arise from a physical inability to walk.

Mr. Scott: We shall announce proposals to improve the balance and structure of social security provision for people who are disabled within the next few months.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what criteria will be used to determine who is deaf-blind for the purpose of mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: The extension of mobility allowance to people who are deaf-blind will be introduced through regulations which will prescribe the circumstances in which they will be treated as being unable or virtually unable to walk for the purpose of section 37A of the Social Security Act 1975. The detail of the new eligibility criteria is still under consideration.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people benefited from mobility allowance in 1979-80 and in 1988-89; and what are the values of mobility allowance in three years at current prices.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is:

	1979-80	1988-89
Estimated average number of recipients at any one time	140,000	530,000
Value of new rate of mobility allowance introduced during year, at current prices	£23·40	£25·60

Disability (OPCS Survey)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what extra resources are available to fund the fuller and more strategic response he will be making to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys survey on disability.

Mr. Scott: The public expenditure plans announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer include an overall increase in the social security budget by £3 billion next year to a total of £55·6 billion and to over £63 billion by 1992-93. These increases will make possible a variety of real improvements in social security, including benefits for disabled people. Further details of projected expenditure on those benefits will be published early next year in the public expenditure White Paper.

Visual Handicap

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has as to the ways in which people with a visual handicap incur extra cost as a result of their disability.

Mr. Scott: The surveys of disability in Great Britain carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys between 1985 and 1988 provide valuable information about the ways in which people with disabilities, including seeing disabilities, incur extra cost. The surveys were based on a sample of 10,000 adults, 27 per cent. of whom had seeing disabilities. A recent study by the Royal National Institute for the Blind of the additional expenditure incurred by 10 visually impaired people also provides information about extra costs.

Pensions and Benefits

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total estimated spending from public funds on people beyond retirement age in respect of (a) the state retirement pension and (b) all other benefits, including income support and housing benefit, for the latest year for which these figures are available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The estimated expenditure outturn for retirement pension for 1988-89 was £19,281 million. Estimated outturn on all other social security benefits for the elderly in 1988-89 was £4,409 million; this includes income support paid to men aged over 60 but under retirement age.

Homeless People

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details of the effects of the changes in the legislation to persons living in local authority hostels from 9 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There was no change in legislation from 9 April 1989 which affected people living in hostels. From 9 April 1990 the protected sum currently in payment to some hostel dwellers will be divided so that the local office pays that part appropriate to the claimant, and the Department's central unit takes on any compensation due to the hostel.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details of the number of homeless who are in receipt of invalidity benefit or retirement pension.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret the information is not available.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the change in benefit entitlement of a person in a hostel who is in receipt of the protected sum if they temporarily leave for two days to attend a sick relative or to attend a family bereavement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The protected sum ceases if the claimant changes or vacates the hostel.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last visited a hostel for the homeless; and what matters he discussed with the residents and staff.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Since his appointment as the Secretary of State for Social Security, my right hon. Friend has not had the opportunity to visit a hostel.

Lone Parents

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number of lone parents and their dependants in November 1979 and November 1989, or the latest date possible, dependent on receipt of social security benefit or income support and family income or payment; and what was the total number of lone parents and their dependants on the same dates, showing in each case the percentage change since 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is set out in the table. The latest information available is shown but the dates vary and the sets of figures are therefore not strictly comparable. The references to social security benefit and family income have been read as supplementary benefit and family income supplement/family credit respectively.

			Percentage increase
	1979	1988
Supplementary Benefit (now Income Support)[1]
Lone parents	318,000	722,000	127
Dependants	558,00	1,235,000	121
	1979	1989
Family Income Supplement (now Family Credit)[2]
Lone parents	42,000	122,000	190
Dependants	73,000	191,000	162
	1979	1986
Total of Lone Parent Families[3]
Lone Parents	840,000	1,010,000	20
Dependants	1,400,000	1,600,000	14

[1] Annual Statistical Enquiries—November 1979 and May 1988. Figures exclude prisoners' partners.

[2] Ten per cent. sample of Family Income Supplement load and 5 per cent. sample of Family Credit load.

[3] Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys—"Population Trends 45" (Autumn 1986) and "Population Trends 55" (Spring 1989).

Appeals

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of appeals heard by social security appeals tribunals in the Bolton area during 1988 and each of the previous three years; and how many of these appeals were successful for the claimant.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: National administrative statistics for social security appeal tribunals are not available for areas smaller than a social security region.

The table gives the information for north-western region for the years 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Social security appeal tribunals
North Western Region

Period	Appeals heard and decided	Successful appeals for the claimant
1985	19,631	4,592
1986	18,167	4,460
1987	26,361	5,997
1988	32,615	9,307

Stolen Order Books

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to reach a decision on whether or not to provide statistical information by district, throughout the United Kingdom, on the number of stolen Department of Social Security order books; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Central records are maintained clerically about order books reported missing but do not separately identify those stolen. With the use of information technology, tests are being carried out with the aim of refining the present system, the primary purpose of which will be to assist in the early detection and investigation of losses. It is likely to be some time before a decision is taken on the format that best suits the Department's needs in that area.

Social Fund

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding the continued monitoring of the impact of the social fund in Leicestershire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I have received no such representations.

Benefit Records

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of errors was found in benefit records from (a) Ealing and (b) other London offices when these were checked at the Glasgow processing centre.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Two London offices, Ealing and Southall, have so far transferred their income support benefit records to the social security centre in Glasgow. Detailed statistics are not kept of the errors found in those records when preparing them for entry on to the computer. However, it is estimated that around 34 per cent. of Ealing cases and 40 per cent. of Southall cases require correction before they are computerised. A significant proportion of these involve incorrect postcodes or National Insurance numbers; a smaller number involve incorrect payment of benefit. Incorrect payments detected are corrected and arrears paid promptly.

The improved and more accurate service that the Ealing and Southall public now receive fully justifies our decision to move the work to Glasgow.

EMPLOYMENT

Wildcat Strikes

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any proposals to outlaw wildcat strikes.

Mr. Nicholls: Proposals were published for public consultation in the Green Paper "Unofficial Action and the Law" (Cm. 821). Legislation will be announced in due course.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which regions in England have seen a decline in the number employed in manufacturing industries from 1979 to the latest year for which figures are available; and what is the relevant percentage decrease.

Mr. Nicholls: The following table shows the number and change in employees in employment in manufacturing industries between June 1979 and June 1989. All regions have seen a reduction over this period.

Employees in the manufacturing industry
Unadjusted, Thousands

	June 1979	June 1989	1979-1989 change	1979-1989 percentage change
South East (including London)	1,871	1,304	−567	−30·3
East Anglia	206	175	−31	−15·0
South West	439	366	−73	−16·6
West Midlands	985	665	−320	−32·5
East Midlands	606	489	−117	−19·2
Yorkshire and Humberside	708	484	−224	−31·6
North West	971	669	−301	−31·1
North	410	281	−129	−31·4

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total amount of unemployment in the United Kingdom, expressed as a percentage; and what is the comparable total of unemployment in the rest of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Nicholls: In September 1989, the latest comparable date, unemployment in the United Kingdom was 6·3 per cent. compared with an EEC average of 9·1 per cent. The following table shows a full comparison. Over the past two years the unemployment rate in the United Kingdom has fallen faster than in any other major European country.

Unemployment rates for comparison between EEC counries
Seasonally adjusted

	September 1989 Rate
Luxembourg	2·0
West Germany	5·6
Portugal	5·7
United Kingdom	6·3
Denmark	7·4
Greece	[1]7·4
Belgium	9·6
Netherlands	10·0
France	10·1
Italy	11·0
Spain	16·4
Ireland	17·0
EEC average	9·1

[1] April 1987

Skills Training

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the actions Her Majesty's Government are taking to improve the skills of the work force.

Mr. Patrick Nicholls: The Government are currently modernising arrangements for training and enterprise in this country. The introduction of a network of local training and enterprise councils will in particular revolutionise this country's approach to training and enterprise and prepare us for the challenges of the 1990s. The Government are also investing nearly £3 billion this year to improve the skills of the work force and encourage enterprise development.

Business Start-ups

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the change in the number of weekly net business start-ups in the east midlands from 1987-88 to 1988-89.

Mr. Eggar: In 1987, the number of businesses registered for VAT in the east midlands rose by an estimated 3,000, or an average of 58 a week. The estimated increase in 1988 was 4,100, an average of 79 a week.

Members of Parliament

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what rules govern the eligibility for unemployment benefit and the assessment of availability for work of hon. Members.

Mr. Eggar: These conditions for receipt of unemployment benefit are set out in the Social Security Act 1975 and consequential regulations. This legislation does not provide specific variations for claimants holding public offices.

Small Businesses

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list those Government measures of particular help for small businesses since 1979;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report those Government measures of particular help to small businesses which are the subject of current legislation or are planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Since 1979 Government policy has been to create and foster a climate in which small firms can flourish, by minimising the compliance burdens of taxation, regulation and red tape, and by putting in place a complementary range of fiscal, financial and advisory measures.

The principal Government measures of particular help to small businesses include: a range of tax reductions and structural reforms to improve the incentives and rewards for successful small business owners. For example the basic rate of income tax has been reduced from 33 per cent. to 25 per cent., the small companies rate of corporation tax has been reduced from 42 per cent. to 25 per cent., and the nine higher rates of income tax, ranging from 40 per cent. to 83 per cent., have been reduced to one higher rate of 40 per cent.; the loan guarantee scheme, introduced in 1981, which provides a Government guarantee for loans by banks to small businesses; the business expansion scheme, introduced in 1983, which provides tax relief on investments made in shares of unquoted companies of up to £40,000 a year; the enterprise allowance scheme, introduced in 1983, which provides an allowance of £40 per week to previously unemployed people to make up for loss of benefit in their first year of self-employment; a range of training opportunities developed by the Training Agency, now included in business growth training, which take account of the training needs of new and growing small firms; the provision of information and confidential advice and counselling through the small firms service and the rural development commission, and through substantial support for local enterprise agencies and other advisory bodies, including the princes youth business trust; the enterprise initiative, launched by the DTI in January 1988, which offers access to specialised consultancy in key business areas.

These and other measures have been highly successful in creating and maintaining a framework for enterprise and the growth of the small business sector, which continues apace.

The Employment Act 1989 has prepared the ground for the introduction of training and enterprise councils (TECs) by the end of 1990. TECs will be responsible for the delivery and development of training and other support for small businesses.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months and in the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Eggar: The growth of the small business sector itself is the best indicator of the success of the Government's policy towards small business. In 1988-89 the net increase in the number of VAT-registered businesses was 64,000, an average of just over 1,200 a week.

The performance figures for the measures operated by my Department in 1988-89 are as follows:

The small firms service answered over 281,000 inquiries (an increase of 6 per cent. on 1987-88), handled over 30,000 new counselling cases (an increase of 12 per cent. on 1987-88), and conducted over 43,000 counselling sessions (an increase of 10 per cent. on 1987-88);

The usage of the loan guarantee scheme has increased from 1,234 small businesses in 1987-88 to 2,292 in 1988-89. The total loan value increased from £46·23 million to £64·76 million. Improved procedures under the scheme include simplified procedures for loans up to £15,000 and an increase in the maximum loan size from £75,000 to £100,000.

The number of entrants to the Training Agency's enterprise programmes, the business enterprise programme and the enterprise element of employment training, have increased by 22 per cent. from 43,489 in 1987-88 to 53,003 in 1988-89.

The number of entrants to the graduate enterprise programme rose from 155 in 1987-88 to 1,150 in 1988-89.

Commissioner for Trade Union Members

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases the commissioner for the rights of trade union members has dealt with; how many applications she has received; how many of the applications she received fell outside her jurisdiction; and if he will list the unions involved and how many for each.

Mr. Nicholls: I am advised by the commissioner for trade union members that in the period ending 27 November 1989 she had dealt with 245 cases; 30 of these have resulted in formal applications for assistance, of which 18 fell outside her jurisdiction. The numbers of applications per union are listed in the table.

	Number
National and Local Government Officer' Association	5
GMB	4
Transport and General Workers Union	4
Confederation of Health Service Employees	2
National Union of Public Employees	2
National Union of Railwaymen	2
National Union of Seamen	2
Union of Communication Workers	2
Amalgamated Engineering Union	1
Bakers, Food and Allied Workers' Union	1
National Union of Journalists	1
National Union of Mineworkers	1
Society of Graphical and Allied Trades 1982	1
Union of Construction, Allied Trades and Technicians	1
Union of Shop, Distributive and Allied Workers	1

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the estimated running costs of the commissioner for the rights of trade union members in 1988-89.

Mr. Nicholls: The commissioner for trade union members has provided White Paper accounts to the Secretary of State for Employment and the Comptroller and Auditor-General as required by the Employment Act 1988. Copies of the statement of accounts will be laid before each House by the Comptroller and Auditor-General in due course.

Closed Shop

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many complaints he has received each year since 1979 from firms and employees on the pre-entry closed shop.

Mr. Nicholls: Ministers and officials in the Department of Employment continue to receive complaints from a variety of sources which describe difficulties experienced as a result of the operation of closed shop arrangements, involving pre-entry closed shops. However, no record is maintained of the number of such complaints received each year and, in any case, it is not always clear whether a complaint relates to pre-entry or post-entry arrangements. In addition, it would not be possible to establish precisely which complaints were made by firms and employees.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many complaints the commissioner for trade union rights has received (a) from local authority employees, (b) from National Health Service employees and (c) from any employee working in the public sector against their union on the closed shop.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been advised by the commissioner for trade union members that precise figures concerning the number of complaints by type of employer are not available as complaints relate to the trade union not the employer, who is often not involved or identified. Complaints in relation to the closed shop are outside the scope of the commissioner's assistance.

Disabled People

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his response to the interim results of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys report entitled "Disabled Adults: Service, Transport and Employment 1989"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The results set out in the report published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in June 1989 have been taken into account in the review of services for people with disabilities which my Department has been undertaking. However, the report does not provide, with sufficient precision, the information about the nature and consequences of employment difficulties arising from disability which my Department needs to plan its services. My Department has commissioned a further survey to provide such information, and the results of that survey will be available soon.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to strengthen programmes aimed at a change in employers' attitudes towards the employment of disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The adequacy of current programmes aimed at encouraging employers to adopt and implement good policies and practices on the employment of people with disabilities is being considered in the review of services for people with disabilities which my Department has been undertaking. A consultative document covering the conclusions reached in the review will be published as soon as possible.

Hosiery and Textile Industry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, by year and by region since 1979, the figures for job losses in the hosiery and textile industry; and if he will make a statement regarding forecasts of these figures for the coming year.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no figures for job losses and job gains. Net changes in employment can be given, but only for dates when censuses of employment are taken. The available information from censuses taken in September 1981, September 1984 and September 1987 is as follows:

Employees in employment[1] in the Textile industry[2] by region

Thousand

Region	September 1981	September 1984	September 1987	Net change[3] 1981 to 1984	1984 to 1987
South East	13·1	10·2	10·6	−2·9	+0·4
East Anglia	1·4	1·9	1·6	+0·5	−0·3
South West	5·7	5·2	5·2	−0·6	0·0
West Midlands	13·0	12·2	12·6	−0·8	+0·4
East Midlands	80·5	72·4	71·3	−8·1	−1·1
Yorkshire and Humberside	57·4	47·6	45·9	−9·8	−1·7
North West	52·7	40·7	41·7	−12·0	+1·0
North	8·6	8·3	7·1	−0·2	−1·3
Wales	4·0	3·6	3·6	−0·4	−0·0
Scotland	38·6	32·9	31·1	−5·8	−1·7
Great Britain	275·0	234·9	230·7	−40·1	−4·2

[1] The figures exclude the self-employed.
[2] Class 43 of the Standard Industrial Classification 1980 (Textiles including hosiery)
[3] Changes calculated on unrounded employee estimates.

Between census of employment dates, information about employees in employment subdivided by region is available only for those industry headings listed in Table 1.5 of Employment Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library.

Footwear Industry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, by year and by region since 1979, the figures for job losses in the footwear industry; and if he will make a statement regarding forecasts for these figures for the coming year.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no figures for job losses and job gains. Net changes in employment can be given, but only for dates when censuses of employment are taken. The available information from censuses taken in September 1981, September 1984 and September 1987 is as follows:

Employees in employment[1] in the Footwear industry[2] by region

Region	September 1981	September 1984	September 1987	Net change[3] 1981-84	1984-87
South East	4·8	4·4	3·6	−0·5	−0·7
East Anglia	3·2	3·3	2·7	0·0	−0·6
South West	8·1	7·5	7·3	−0·6	−0·2
West Midlands	1·8	3·0	2·2	+1·1	−0·7
East Midlands	22·7	19·4	19·3	−3·3	−0·1
Yorkshire and Humberside	2·3	2·0	2·1	−0·3	+0·1
North West	8·2	8·3	8·0	+0·2	−0·4
North	3·8	3·6	3·5	−0·2	−0·1
Wales	0·8	0·8	1·0	+0·1	+0·2
Scotland	0·9	0·7	0·7	−0·2	0·0
Great Britain	56·6	53·0	50·4	−3·7	−2·5

[1] The figures exclude the self-employed
[2] Group 451 of the Standard Industrial Classification 1980
[3] Changes calculated on unrounded employee estimates
Between census of employment dates, information about employees in employment subdivided by region is available only for those industry headings listed in Table 1.5 of Employment Gazette a copy of which is in the Library.

Redundancy Fund

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans for the redundancy fund.

Mr. Nicholls: Proposals will be included in the 1989 Employment Bill to merge the redundancy fund with the national insurance fund. This will simplify administration and provide a single source of funding for the relevant payments. No change will occur in the statutory entitlements of employees as a result of this merger.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Broadcasting

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to safeguard consumers' rights when the independent television companies are allowed to broadcast home-selling programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mellor: Under our proposals on broadcasting, the Independent Television Commission will be required to draw up a code on advertising and sponsorship, with which its licensees must comply. In drawing up the code, the ITC will need to take account of the relevant provisions of the European Convention on Transfrontier Television. Article 12(3) of the convention states that forms of advertisements such as direct offers to the public for the sale, purchase or rental of products or for the provision of services shall not exceed one hour per day.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority to discuss broadcasting.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend keeps in regular touch with the chairman of the IBA on a wide range of broadcasting matters.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many homes in Britain are receiving multi-channel television via satellite dish aerials on their own premises at the latest available date.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect information on this subject, but I understand that research carried out by Continental Research indicated that in October 1989 352,000 households had direct-to-home satellite dishes.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take to implement the recommendations of the chief inspector of prisons in his report on Wandsworth prison.

Mr. Mellor: A statement by my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) setting out the action being taken was published on 19 October 1989 as his response to the report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons on Wandsworth prison and a copy was placed in the Library.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will reconsider his rejection of the recommendation by the chief inspector of prisons to install integral sanitation at Wandsworth prison in seven years in the light of his announcement of more resources for prison refurbishment.

Mr. Mellor: The speed of refurbishment is determined largely by the need to keep a prison fully operational while the work goes on. The large programme of refurbishment already in hand at Wandsworth, which includes the installation of toilets and washbasins in 300 cells, cannot be increased or accelerated while its full use as a local prison remains so essential to meet current high levels of overcrowding.

Guildford Four

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will give powers to Sir John May's inquiry into the case of the Guildford Four to compel witnesses to attend, to subpoena documents and to provide immunity from prosecution to witnesses.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has no power to confer on Sir John May the power to compel witnesses to attend his inquiry or to subpoena documents. We have no reason to believe that he will not be able to conduct his inquiry satisfactorily in the absence of such powers.

The question of offering immunity from prosecution to any person in respect of criminal offences is a matter for the Director of Public Prosecutions, who will usually consult the Attorney-General. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General to a question from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 6 November 1989 at columns 439-40.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the project licences issued in accordance with the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, either partly or wholly applicable to Huntingdon research centre, Cambridgeshire, have been referred to the Animal Procedures Committee.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is treated as confidential between the applicant, the Home Office and the Animal Procedures Committee. The annual reports of the committee for 1987 and 1988 (HC 36 and 458) show the kinds of applications which are considered by the committee.

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of the project licences permitting regulated scientific procedures in accordance with the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 at

Huntingdon research centre, Cambridgeshire, are classified as being of mild severity, how many of moderate severity and how many of substantial severity; and what is the total number;

(2) how many project licences currently exist authorising regulated scientific procedures in accordance with the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 at Huntingdon research centre, Cambridgeshire;

(3) how many regulated scientific procedures conducted in accordance with the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 at Huntingdon research centre in 1988 involved the use of dogs;

(4) how many regulated scientific procedures were conducted in accordance with the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 at Huntingdon research centre, Cambridgeshire, in 1988;

(5) how many regulated scientific procedures were conducted in accordance with the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 at Huntingdon research centre, Cambridgeshire, in 1988, for the purpose of testing cosmetics and toiletries or their ingredients.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is treated as confidential.

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the regulated scientific procedures at the Huntingdon research centre, Cambridgeshire, were terminated as required by section 10(2)(b) in accordance with the inviolable termination condition.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Details of such terminations are not available centrally. It is the practice for project licences to include specific provisions for end points which have effect before the condition imposed by section 10(2)(b) of the Act is reached.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases the Commission for Racial Equality has dealt with in each region in the last three years.

Mr. John Patten: The available information on cases of racial discrimination referred to the commission is provided in the following table:

Region	Cases handled
	1986	1987	1988
London	252	307	342
South	241	265	389
Midlands and Wales	246	380	391
North and Scotland	277	319	318

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is Government policy concerning funding for the Commission for Racial Equality for the next year.

Mr. John Patten: The commission's statutory duties and strategic priorities are being taken into account in determining its grant-in-aid for next year.

Cable Television

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many homes in Britain are receiving multi-channel television through cable television systems at the latest available date.

Mr. Mellor: I understand from the Cable Authority that on 1 October 1989 a total of 287,219 households in the United Kingdom were connected to cable systems, of which 75,811 were connected to broad band cable systems.

Philippine Immigrants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigrants from the Philippines have been admitted to work as domestic servants in the last three years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The numbers involved cannot be separately identified in the statistics of passenger admissions.

Young Offenders

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many specialised units for young offenders exist in the United Kingdom; and if he will list them.

Mr. Mellor: There are 35 male and female young offender institutions in England and Wales. The position in Scotland and in Northern Ireland is a matter respectively for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland. The list of the young offender institutions in England and Wales is as follows:

Aylesbury
Bullwood Hall[1]
Campsfield House
Castington
Deerbolt
Dover
Drake Hall[1]
East Sutton Park
Eastwood Park
Everthorpe
Feltham
Finnamore Wood
Glen Parva
Grendon
Guys Marsh
Hatfield
Hewell Grange
Hollesley Bay Colony
Huntercombe
Kirklevington Grange
Lowdham Grange
The Mount
New Hall[1]
Northallerton
Onley
Portland
Stoke Heath
Styal[1]
Swinfen Hall
Thorn Cross
Usk
Wellingborough
Werrington
Wetherby
Whatton

[1] Female prisons which are also designed as young offender institutions.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders are presently awaiting trial in local adult prisons.

Mr. Mellor: According to the records held centrally, about 640 males and 60 females aged under 21 were held as untried prisoners in local prisons and in remand centres not exclusively designated for those aged under 21 in England and Wales on 30 September 1989.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if young offenders once sentenced are automatically confined in specialised units.

Mr. Mellor: The great majority of young offenders who receive custodial sentences are sentenced to detention in a young offenders institution. Of these, male juveniles and short sentenced young adults are committed directly from court to a young offender institution; the rest are initially committed to an allocation unit, usually within a local prison or remand centre, for a short period for assessment before being transferred to an appropriate young offender institution.

Young offenders sentenced to detention in a young offender institution may be retained in a prison, at the direction of the Secretary of State, for example for judicial, compassionate or medical reasons, for accumulated visits, or for reallocation.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will initiate legislation to extend the magistrates courts powers to include protecting any children living with the applicant, in addition to the current protecting of only children of the family.

Mr. John Patten: The Law Commission is reviewing the civil law on domestic violence, which is in need of rationalisation; and I do not think it would be sensible to bring forward legislative proposals on a piecemeal basis in advance of consideration of the commission's proposals as a whole.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the inquiry referred to in the replies by the right hon. Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid), Official Report, 26 October, columns 1032-33, will look at material collected by the Devon and Cornwall police in the course of their investigations into the appeal of those found guilty of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The investigation into the work and practices of the serious crime squad concentrates on the period since the beginning of 1986. The conduct of the inquiry is the responsibility of the investigating officer, Mr. Shaw, subject to the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority. I understand that there is no intention at present to look at the material collected by the Devon and Cornwall police, which relates to earlier events.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what extent he will be co-operating with the Legal Affairs Committee of the European Parliament in its inquiry into the convictions of those found guilty of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Waddington: As I said in my reply to a question from the hon. Member on 29 November 1989 at column 268, I understand that the Legal Affairs Committee has not yet decided whether to conduct such an inquiry and, if so, what its terms of reference should be. We believe that it would be inappropriate for the European Parliament to inquire into the convictions of the Birmingham Six, it being a matter wholly outside the Parliament's competence.

Drugs

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to co-operate with the Schengen information system to pool police data in anti-drug operations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Schengen information system does not yet exist. However, we are discussing with our European Community partners, which includes the Schengen countries, a wide range of measures for further strengthening co-operation between law enforcement agencies. The development of an information system serving all European Community countries is one option which is being studied.

Fires

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many outbreaks of fire were recorded in each of the last five years in (a) England and Wales and (b) the Bolton area;

(2) what was the number of incidents of arson in each of the last five years in (a) England and Wales and (b) the Bolton area.

Mr. John Patten: The available figures for 1983 to 1987 are given in the following table. Separate information is not available centrally for the Bolton area as this is part of the area covered by the Greater Manchester fire and civil defence authority. The United Kingdom total for 1988 will be published shortly in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Summary Fire Statistics UK 1988" with separate figures for Greater Manchester being available from spring 1990.

Total fires (fires in occupied buildings, outdoor fires and fires in derelict buildings) and fires in occupied buildings reported by local authority fire brigades

Year	United Kingdom		Greater Manchester
	Total	Occupied buildings	Total	Occupied buildings
1987	353,996	104,079	21,030	6,669
1986	387,298	105,650	23,177	6,913
1985	388,042	104,655	21,838	6,172
1984	446,557	101,545	27,822	6,442
1983	372,405	97,490	20,275	5,804

Fires in occupied buildings reported by local authority fire brigades as deliberate or possibly deliberate

Year	United Kingdom	Greater Manchester
1987	18,774	1,490
1986	19,317	1,683
1985	18,414	1,426
1984	17,756	1,467
1983	15,486	1,013

Source: Fire Statistics United Kingdom 1983-87

Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of (a) men and (b) women who have been sent to prison each month during 1987, 1988 and up till October 1989.

Mr. Mellor: Quarterly information on receptions is published annually in a Home Office statistical bulletin (table 7 of the latest issue 12/89, "The Prison Population in 1988," a copy of which is in the Library). A person received as an untried prisoner will also be recorded as received after sentence if subsequently received to serve a sentence. Reliable monthly data on persons received as convicted unsentenced is not readily available; in 1988, 7,000 persons were received as convicted unsentenced who had not been previously received as an untried prisoner. The readily available monthly information is given in the tables.

Untried prisoners received into Prison Service establishments in England and Wales, 1987-89

Number of prisoners[1]

	Males		Females
	Under 21	21 and over	Under 21	21 and over
1987
January	1,700	3,100	60	160
February	1,700	3,200	50	160
March	1,600	3,000	40	150
April	1,700	3,100	60	140
May	1,700	3,200	60	170
June	1,700	3,100	50	170
July	1,700	3,000	50	150
August	1,800	3,400	50	170
September	1,700	3,200	70	190
October	1,700	3,100	70	200
November	1,800	3,200	80	190
December	1,600	3,100	70	190
1988
January	1,900	3,400	80	200
February	1,700	3,000	70	240
March	1,500	2,900	70	190
April	1,700	3,100	60	200
May	1,600	3,000	70	170
June	1,600	3,000	50	170
July	1,600	3,100	60	160
August	1,500	2,900	30	100
September	1,500	2,800	50	180
October	1,600	3,400	80	200
November	1,700	3,100	60	190
December	1,500	3,400	70	190
1989
January	1,800	3,300	60	230
February	1,600	3,100	80	250
March	1,700	3,300	60	260
April	1,600	3,200	70	160
May	1,600	2,900	50	210
June	1,600	2,900	60	190
July[2]	1,600	3,400	90	240
August[2]	1,300	3,200	80	170

[1] Rounded seasonally adjusted estimates.
[2] Provisional figures.

Prisoners received under sentence[1] into Prison Service establishments in England and Wales, 1987-1989

Number of prisoners[2]

	Males		Females
	Under 21	21 and over	Under 21	21 and over
1987
January	1,800	3,200	40	190
February	2,000	3,400	60	210
March	1,900	3,300	50	190
April	2,100	3,400	70	220
May	2,000	3,600	60	200
June	2,000	3,600	70	210
July	1,800	3,600	60	190
August	1,900	3,500	60	200
September	1,900	3,400	60	180
October	2,000	3,600	50	200
November	2,000	3,500	70	200
December	2,000	3,400	50	190
1988
January	1,900	3,600	60	190
February	2,000	3,300	60	180
March	1,900	3,400	50	190
April	1,800	3,500	50	180
May	1,700	3,500	50	220
June	1,600	3,200	50	180
July	2,000	3,700	50	210
August	1,700	3,400	50	150
September	1,700	3,500	50	220
October	1,700	3,300	50	170
November	1,600	3,400	40	190
December	1,600	3,700	50	160
1989
January	1,500	3,500	60	190
February	1,500	3,400	40	200
March	1,400	3,300	50	180
April	1,600	3,700	40	200
May	1,500	3,300	50	190
June	1,400	3,100	40	150
July[3]	1,300	3,100	40	170
August[3]	1,400	3,400	40	210

[1] Excluding fine defaulters.
[2] Rounded seasonally adjusted estimates.
[3] Provisional figures.

Prisoners received into Prison Service establishments in England and Wales in default of payment of a fine, 1987-1989

Number of prisoners[1]

	Males		Females
	Under 21	21 and over	Under 21	21 and over
1987
January	340	1,260	15	70
February	410	1,220	20	70
March	390	1,290	20	60
April	360	1,110	15	50
May	330	1,000	15	60
June	380	1,210	20	60
July	360	1,180	10	50
August	330	1,090	15	60
September	320	1,080	30	70
October	370	1,160	10	70
November	340	1,180	15	60
December	300	960	20	50
1988
January	350	1,250	10	60
February	370	1,200	15	70
March	390	1,230	30	70
April	260	930	15	70
May	320	1,110	25	70
June	380	1,150	20	80
July	320	990	20	60
August	300	920	10	30
September	240	760	15	50
October	280	900	20	50
November	350	1,010	15	60
December	220	740	15	15
1989
January	360	1,070	15	60
February	260	1,070	10	60
March	350	1,050	15	60
April	300	1,030	25	70
May	320	970	15	40
June	290	1,100	20	60
July[2]	220	960	10	50
August[2]	210	1,020	10	50

[1] Rounded estimates
[2] Provisional figures

Persons received into Prison Service establishments in England and Wales as non-criminal prisoners, 1987-1989

Number of prisoners[1]

	Males		Females
	Under 21	21 and over	Under 21	21 and over 1987
January	25	290	—	5
February	25	320	—	10
March	20	260	—	5
April	10	250	—	5
May	15	220	—	10
June	10	270	—	5
July	10	240	—	5
August	15	220	—	5
September	10	220	—	10
October	10	230	—	5
November	20	260	—	5
December	5	210	—	5
1988
January	10	250	—	5
February	10	220	—	5
March	15	310	—	15
April	10	220	—	5
May	10	240	—	5
June	15	230	—	5
July	15	240	—	10
August	10	180	—	5
September	10	230	—	5
October	15	220	—	5
November	15	230	—	5
December	15	240	—	—
1989
January	10	230	—	10
February	10	240	—	15
March	20	240	—	15
April	15	230	—	20
May	15	270	—	5
June	15	260	—	5
July[2]	5	190	—	10
August[2]	15	180	—	10

[1] rounded estimates
[2] provisional figures

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women being held on remand in police stations cells in England and Wales on 20 November.

Mr. Mellor: Twenty-three men and no women were held in police cells on Monday 20 November 1989. It is likely that most were on remand, and were being held by the police for no more than one night.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest annual cost of reimbursement of National Health Service charges incurred by police officers for drugs, medicines, appliances and dental treatment; and what was the figure 10 years ago.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Violence

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what percentage crimes of violence have increased over the past five years.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is set out in the table. Further information on crimes recorded by the police is pubished in table 2.1 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1988", Cm. 847.

Notifiable offences recorded by the police 1984-88

England and Wales Number

Year	Violence against the person	Sexual offences	Robbery	Total violent crime
1984	114,187	20,222	24,890	159,299
1985	121,731	21,456	27,463	170,650
1986	125,499	22,684	30,020	178,203
1987	141,042	25,154	32,633	198,829
1988	158,248	26,529	31,437	216,214
Percentage increase 1984-88	39	31	26	36

Pet Animals (Protection)

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department with regard to the consultations that he is conducting in respect of the European Convention for protecting pet animals, if he will set out in the Official Report a list of the interested organisations he is consulting, the date of writing to each and the date of each response so far received, together with an indication of when he expects those consultations to be completed or the date he has given for responses to be received.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have consulted more than 20 bodies about the convention and a related report by the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons. Surgical operations is the main area in which the provisions of the convention conflict with current United Kingdom legislation and practice. That part of the consultation process has now been completed. This summer meetings were held with the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, the Kennel Club and the Council for Docked Breeds. We are now involved in interdepartmental consultation and my right hon. and learned Friend hopes to be in a position to reach a decision soon.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give, for each year since 1974 (a) the number of applications submitted under the criminal injuries compensation scheme, (b) the number where an award was made, (c) the number where the applicant died before determination of the application, (d) for rejected applications, the average duration of applications submitted, from date of application to the date of determination and (e) for successful applications, the average duration of applications submitted from date of application to date of receipt of the award.

Mr. John Patten: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, which considers claims for victims of crimes of violence in Great Britain, does not record the number of applicants who die before their claims are decided nor the average time taken to reject or assess a claim. Details of the percentage of cases submitted to a member of the board for decision within certain periods of registration are given in the board's annual reports. This and the other information requested is given in the following tables:

Percentage of cases submitted to single member from date of registration of claim

Year ended 31 March	Within three months	Three to six months	Six to nine months	Nine to twelve months	Over twelve months
1974	32	43	15	6	4
1975	30	44	16	6	4
1976	28	46	16	6	4
1977	19·6	52·8	16·4	6·6	4·6
1978	7·5	40·8	31·5	13	7·2
1979	3·5	29	37·3	17·4	12·8
1980	1·8	22·7	31·6	18·7	25·2
1981	4	30	26·4	15·9	23·7
1982	5·3	31·6	29·9	15·1	18·1
1983	1·6	29·4	27·7	17·6	23·7
1984	4·7	30·1	24·6	15·9	24·7
1985	5	27·3	25·2	17	25·5
1986	2·3	18·3	26·4	22·6	30·4
1987	1·5	5·1	16·4	26·8	50·2
1988	1·5	2·6	6·7	20	69·2
1989	1	2·1	4·8	19	73·1

Year ended 31 March	Applications Received		Number of Final Awards Made
	England and Wales	Scotland	England and Wales	Scotland
1974	9,873	2,343	7,272	1,752
1975	11,561	2,666	8,811	1,897
1976	13,717	2,973	9,501	1,999
1977	16,786	3,614	11,750	2,201
1978	17,019	3,807	11,592	2,460
1979	18,078	3,882	13,901	2,456
1980	18,948	3,853	14,659	2,801
1981	20,613	4,066	17,355	2,783
1982	22,099	4,416	14,820	2,530
1983	24,635	4,805	16,498	3,235
1984	26,828	5,111	17,930	3,203
1985	29,050	5,840	17,123	2,648
1986	33,420	6,277	19,977	2,557
1987	35,957	6,344	18,796	3,129
1988	35,940	7,114	17,906	3,085
1989	36,285	7,100	23,721	4,031

Police Manpower (Wales)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will indicate, in the case of each police authority in Wales, the criteria that weighed with him in reaching his decision on (a) how many additional police posts and (b) how many additional civilian posts he would allow to each authority for 1990-91;

(2) if he will list the figures of additional money he will make available for 1990-91 to each of the police authorities in Wales to pay for the additional establishment of police officers and indicate whether this will cover in full the cost of filling those posts;

(3) if he will list the number of additional police posts he plans to allow for 1990-91 for each police authority in Wales, together with the present police establishment for each authority and the number of additional police posts requested by each of those authorities;

(4) if he will list the number of additional posts for civilians, full-time or full-time equivalent, he plans to allow for 1990-91 for each police authority in Wales, together with the present civilian establishment for each authority and the number of additional civilian posts requested by each of those authorities;

(5) what sum he intends to make available to each police authority in Wales in order to fill additional civilian posts;

(6) whether he will make it his policy to ensure that the finances that he makes available to each police authority in Wales are fully adequate to cover the whole cost of filling the increased number of posts for civilian support staff employed by each authority and filling the increased police posts in the establishment for 1990-91 with the most suitable and experienced candidates available, as well as maintaining other support services as a safe level.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A table showing for each police force in Wales the number of police posts applied for, numbers approved, existing force establishment and civilian establishment, is set out as follows.

	Dyfed Powys	Gwent	North Wales[1]	South Wales
Police posts applied for	—	11	10	67
Police posts approved with effect from 1 April 1990	—	2	21	31
Police officer establishment as at 1 April 1989	935	1,007	1,330	3,137
Number of civilians[2] posts as at 30 September 1989	228	245	423	1,072

[1] Eleven extra posts offered subject to police authority's confirmation that it will meet its share of the cost. (12 of the 21 posts are already held supernumerary to establishment.)
[2] Part-time staff counted on a 2 : 1 basis. Traffic wardens not included.

My right hon. and learned Friend considers applications for increases in police establishments on the basis of the demonstrated needs of forces and in the light of advice from Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary. The general criteria which govern assessment of applications for increases are set out in Home Office circulars 114/1983 and 106/1988, copies of which are available in the Library. One of these criteria is that police authorities should have signified their intention to meet their share of the costs of the posts applied for.

Under the normal police funding arrangements, the Government meet, through police specific grant, 51 per cent. of all police authorities' expenditure for police purposes. An additional contribution is made from central funds through revenue support grant, in the case of Welsh forces from the Welsh Office. It is for police authorities in Wales, as in England, to determine the resources to be made available to their forces.

Police civilian staff attract police specific grant. My right hon. and learned Friend's approval however is not required for their appointment in provincial forces. This is a matter for the police authorities.

Police Conduct (Photographs)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Hampshire on the photographing on Saturday 18 November, between 10.30 am and 11 am, at Brockenhurst hall in the New Forest, of members of the League Against Cruel Sports by a police photographer and how many other occasions similar photographs have been taken.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable of Hampshire that he decided to authorise the photographing of both hunt protestors and huntsmen as one response to an increasing number of breaches of the peace occurring at meets in that county.

Photographs were taken on the last three weekends in November.

New Prisons

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Kirkham remains on his list of definite sites for a new category B prison.

Mr. Mellor: We are considering this matter and I hope to write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Parole

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to eliminate parole delays; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: We have been increasingly concerned with the administrative arrangements which have led to unacceptable parole delays. Earlier this year, action was taken on several fronts to reduce these delays. A significant increase in staffing for the parole unit was approved and regular overtime working authorised. The unit has also been completely reorganised and certain procedures streamlined to enhance productivity. Additional members were appointed to the Parole Board; and it has made a significant contribution to the effort by increasing its sittings and the number of cases dealt with at each one. But the need to train new staff, coupled with the advent of the summer leave season and the impact of transport difficulties, meant that the reduction in delays took some time to come through. However, a marked improvement has now been achieved. Delays are confined to those 30 per cent. of cases which must go to the Parole Board for advice. Owing to the growing number of inmates serving longer sentences whose cases must be referred to the board, our forecasts suggest that on the present basis, parole delays on these cases would continue until mid-1990. This is clearly unacceptable and further action is thus clearly necessary.

We considered assigning yet more staff to the unit, but concluded that with the inevitable training requirement, this would not lead to an early elimination of delays. I have therefore decided to change the administrative arrangements underlying the advice given to me on which I take parole decisions.

Section 35 of the Criminal Justices Act 1972 enables me, having consulted the Parole Board, to define classes of cases for which I may authorise parole on the basis of local review committee advice alone. At present, about two-thirds of all parole cases are decided on the basis of such advice. I have consulted the Parole Baord and decided with its agreement, to extend the section 35 arrangements to include all sentences under four years. Every parole case will, of course, continue to be considered very carefully on its merits in the Home Office; and where I believe that a second opinion would be helpful, I shall still ask the Parole Board to advise on the case.

This action is likely to reduce the board's caseload by about a quarter. It will reduce the workload of the parole unit, freeing staff to deal more rapidly with existing backlogs. As a result, I expect that the present parole delays should generally be eliminated within about three months.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many individuals sought asylum in the United Kingdom in each year from 1980 to the latest available date in 1989;

(2) if he will list the number of individuals who were (a) granted asylum, (b) granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom and (c) removed having applied for asylum in each year from 1980 to 1989 to the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 28 November 1989]: Information on the numbers of applications for refugee status in the United Kingdom, and of grants of refugee status and of exceptional leave, in the years 1980 to 1988, is published in table 5 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin Issue 25/89 "Refugee Statistics United Kingdom 1988". Provisional information for the first three quarters of 1989 has been provided to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. Copies of both documents are in the Library.

Comprehensive information on asylum seekers who were removed in these years is not available.

Sentencing

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of alleged over-lenient sentencing have been referred to the Attorney-General under the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1988; and how many sentences have been revised upwards in consequence.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

Sixty-one cases of alleged unduly lenient sentencing have been referred to me. I have applied for leave to refer the sentencing in nine cases to the Court of Appeal. Leave has been granted in five such cases and sentences have been increased in four of the cases. I have withdrawn two cases in the light of later information and the remaining two cases await consideration by the court.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Satellite Dishes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether Members will be permitted to install television satellite dishes at the House (a) for non-parliamentary programming and (b) to receive live pictures of the Chamber.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The reception of satellite television programmes in the House and its precincts is being considered by the Services Committee. Pending any final decision, the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee has resolved that no Member be allowed to make individual arrangements for reception of this service. I have no doubt that the Select Committee on Televising of Proceedings of the House will want to consider carefully the implications of any proposal to allow Members to receive in their rooms any satellite channel dedicated to continuous coverage of the House's proceedings, especially in the light of the Committee's decision not to accede to requests from Members to receive the clean feed direct from the Chamber.

Welsh Question Time

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will review the time available for oral questions to the Secretary of State for Wales to restore the total available time for these purposes to that prevailing before the establishment of the Department of Social Security.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: As the hon. Member will be aware, the questions roster is a matter for discussion and agreement through the usual channels. I have looked at the matter raised by the hon. Member but I do not believe that it would be appropriate to alter the existing arrangements at the present time. I will, however, keep the matter under review.

SCOTLAND

Community Charge

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to give councils in Scotland discretion about levying the poll tax on dead people if the person has died within a very short time after the start of a new financial year such as the end of April.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have no plans to change the present arrangements under which regional and islands councils collect community charge arrears from the estates of people who have died. I believe that local authorities will want to use their powers sensitively, taking advice as necessary in relation to the circumstances of particular cases.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will take steps to ensure that notices of death are automatically passed from CCRO offices to poll tax administrators in Scotland with an instruction that the final notice of poll tax payment be made no later than one month from the date of notification by the registrar's office or by the family, whichever comes first.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Community charge billing and collection arrangements are a matter for individual levying authorities. I have no plans to change the statutory provisions under which they operate. I believe that authorities will want to use their powers sensitively, especially in relation to people who have recently died.

School Boards

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many schools are involved in by-elections for school boards for (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Lang: The figures are 934 primary schools and 83 secondary schools.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what has been the cost to date of school board elections;

(2) what is the projected cost of by-elections to be held for school boards;

(3) what steps his Department is taking to offset the extra costs of by-elections to school boards.

Mr. Lang: Information on authorities' spending on school board elections and by-elections is not yet available. It is for individual authorities themselves to decide how much they spend on each element of their programmes within the overall resources available to them. Specific account was taken of authorities' estimates of the administrative costs of setting up and running school boards in the revenue support grant settlement for 1989-90.

Teachers

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received the report on teacher shortage completed by the Association of Directors of Education in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The report was requested by the Scottish Education Department as a contribution to the work of the planning group on teacher supply set up by my right hon. and learned Friend earlier this year. The report confirms that at present in Scotland there are no general difficulties in recruiting teaching staff for primary or secondary schools. It indicates, however, that some authorities, notably Strathclyde, expect difficulties in obtaining sufficient absence cover over the winter months. The information in the paper was taken into account in my recent proposals for target intakes to courses of teacher training in colleges of education for session 1990-91.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance the Department has given to education authorities in respect of a pay increase for teachers for 1990.

Mr. Lang: It is the responsibility of the Scottish joint negotiating committee for teaching staff in school education (SJNC) to determine the level of pay increases for teachers in Scotland. In their negotiations on the 1990 settlement, employer representatives will require to take account of the overall level of financial resources available to authorities including central Government grants.

School Staffing Circular

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the new school staffing circular is to be issued.

Mr. Lang: I have nothing at present to add to my reply to the hon. Member on 20 July 1989 at column 306.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each year since 1974 (a) the number of applications submited under the criminal injuries compensation scheme, (b) the number where an award was made, (c) the number where the applicant died before determination of the application, (d) for rejected applications, the average duration of applications submitted, from date of application to the date of determination and (e) for successful applications the average duration of applications submitted from date of application to date of receipt of the award.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since the criminal injuries compensation scheme operates on a Great Britain basis, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her today by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Training Schemes

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number of YTS and employment training trainees that there have been in Grampian region since these schemes were established, in total and broken down by district; and how many trainees were in each instance offered full-time employment on the completion of their course.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of YTS and employment training entrants in Grampian region and in each district of the region since these training schemes were established are set out in the table:

Local Authority District	Employment Training	YTS
Gordon	123	1,027
Banff/Buchan	194	2,565
Moray	318	2,398
Aberdeen	2,111	10,346
Total for Grampian Region	2,751	16,336

Follow-up information on YTS completers in the Grampian region is available from year ended April 1987 onwards, and is set out in the table below:

Percentage of YTS completers in full-time employment

Year ended	per cent.
March 1987	50·0
March 1988	75·1
March 1989	87·1

At present, information of the number of employment training trainees who find full-time employment is not available. A 100 per cent. follow-up survey which will provide information on this is now under way.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that the next annual increases in legal aid remuneration will be effective from 1 April and that thereafter increases will be awarded on an annual basis.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: While it is our objective to avoid protracted negotiations on legal aid fee levels, no specific date can be set for their completion.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will consider extending the period within which criminal legal aid accounts must be submitted to the Scottish Legal Aid Board for payment following conclusion of the case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This matter will be considered in forthcoming discussions between the Scottish Home and Health Department, the Scottish Legal Aid Board and the Law Society of Scotland.

Birds

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the aims and objectives of the Nature Conservancy Council's overview of special protection areas to be designated under the European Council directive on the conservation of wild birds; and when he expects the review to be completed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The NCC was asked by environment departments to produce an overview setting out the requirements for the British series of special protection areas to ensure the conservation, survival and reproduction of species listed in annex 1 of the EC birds directive throughout their natural range in Great Britain; the safeguard of important breeding, moulting, wintering and nesting sites of migratory birds not listed on annex 1; particular attention being paid to wetlands and especially those of international importance.

The draft overview was received at the beginning of November 1989.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sites where consultation with interested parties has been completed and which are awaiting designation under European Council directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. The Scottish Development Department has consultations in hand on 12 possible sites for which the Nature Conservancy Council has submitted a detailed case.

Fisheries

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what figures were given in the supporting documents of the Hague Preference (Council Resolutions) 1976 for the United Kingdom quota for North sea haddock and cod species.

Mr. Lang: The documents associated with the Council Resolution of 3 November 1976 did not identify the appropriate levels of threshold for the Hague preference arrangements. However, subsequent working documents proposed thresholds for the United Kingdom of 60,000 tonnes for haddock, and 43,179 tonnes for cod, both for the North sea.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheepmeat Regime

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the definition of a partnership in relation to the application of the headage limits imposed under the reform of the sheepmeat regime.

Mr. Curry: Under the terms of EC Council regulation 3013/89, the headage limits applying to sheep annual premium will be applied individually to each member farmer of a group, association or other form of co-operation between producers. In the case of partnerships, the headage limits will be applied to each member farmer provided that the partnership involves reciprocal rights and obligations in relation to the keeping of sheep.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current cash value of hill livestock compensatory allowances, the impact of the proposed new European regime and whether he has any plans to introduce a British top-up scheme to protect the cash value to British farmers.

Mr. Curry: Total payments of hill livestock compensatory allowances in the United Kingdom in 1989 are expected to be some £115 to £120 million. The decisions on HLCAs taken by the EC Council of Agriculture Ministers at its meeting on 20 and 21 November 1989 will not affect the 1990 HLCA scheme. The Government have not yet taken decisions on arrangements for subsequent years.

Milk Quotas

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the consequences for dairy farmers in England of the agreement on 21 November of European Community Agriculture Ministers (a) to increase European Community milk quotas by 1 per cent. and (b) to reduce guaranteed prices of butter and skimmed milk.

Mr. Curry: I am currently considering, with the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland, for Scotland and for Wales, how best to distribute the additional 1 per cent. of quota now available for allocation to producers. The reductions in intervention prices may in the long run lead to lower market prices than would otherwise have been the case but much depends on the market management strategy followed by the EC Commission. At present market prices for butter and skimmed milk powder are well above the level of the intervention price.

Environmental Groups

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he considers the political stance of the environmental groups with whom he has discussions before meeting them;

(2) if he will list all the environmental groups with whom he has had discussions since taking office;

(3) what is the normal practice on meeting environmental groups whose philosophy is against the free market;

(4) when he last received representations advocating a free market solution to environmental problems.

Mr. Maclean: I have met representatives from the Nature Conservancy Council, the Green Alliance, Friends of the Earth, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds and the Council for the Protection of Rural England.

I have received a wide range of representations on environmental issues. None has specifically advocated a free market solution, although I am ready to listen to opinions from all quarters.

I have the same approach in considering whether to meet environmental groups as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. In any meeting with environmental groups I look for a constructive exchange of views which can contribute to our understanding of the environmental issues that we face.

ENERGY

Tritium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what safeguards are currently applied to the storage and import of radioactive tritium in the United Kingdom; what is the minimum amount of tritium loss from storage or transport that would trigger an investigation by Euratom, the International Atomic Energy Agency and Her Majesty's Government under the Zangeer trigger list; and what communications he has had with the United States Department of Energy over the loss of tritium in transit from Oak Ridge national laboratories to the United Kingdom earlier in the current year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Tritium is not subject to IAEA or Euratom safeguards and does not feature on the Zangeer committee trigger list.

Users of Tritium are either registered under the Radioactive Substance Act 1960 or, in the case of licensed nuclear installations, licensed under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965; and are regulated by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution or Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate as appropriate. In all cases the Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985, which control the storage of, and provide for accountancy for, all radioactive substances apply.

Exports of nuclear materials, equipment and technology are controlled under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1987, through which we give effect to our international obligations. There is no evidence of any tritium being diverted.

Officials of the United States Department of Energy met recently the United Kingdom Department of Energy and United Kingdom customers for United States Tritium to discuss measurement and auditing procedures.

Grimethorpe

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he intends to assist the establishment of experimental fluidised bed combustion stations additional to that at Grimethorpe;

(2) what research his Department has undertaken or commissioned into the building of pithead power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: On 24 August my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced financial support of up to £8 million to assist development of British Coal's topping cycle concept at the Grimethorpe test facility. This is an experimental fluidised bed combustion plant rather than a power station, and it is hoped that the concepts being developed there will be applied commercially, either at the pit head or elsewhere. Fluidised bed technology is proven and commercially available. The promotion of specific applications is a matter for industry, rather than Government.

Coal Mining

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list by regional area the numbers of mining jobs that have been lost during the last 10 years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Average colliery manpower by British Coal area is shown each year in British Coal's annual report and accounts, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the planned future tonnages of opencast mining over (a) the next five years and (b) the next 10 years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There is no Government target for opencast coal output. The overall level of opencast production will be determined by the market, subject to the need to obtain planning permission.

Acid Rain

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any compensation has been paid by the United Kingdom to other countries for acid rain damage.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to take charge of the management of implementation of the electricity supply industry flue gas desulphurisation programme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. Management of implementation of the flue gas desulphurisation programme is a matter for the industry itself.

Switchgear

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his answer of Monday 27 November to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras, how many disruptive failures of 11KV switchgear occurred in 1979 and each succeeding year.

Mr. Wakeham: It is not readily possible to provide annual statistics of the specific type and nature requested by the hon. Member for a period as long as 10 years. The number of incidents involving the disruptive failure of 11KV switchgear which have been notified to my Department since 1987, for the specific reporting periods indicated, are as follows:

	Number
April 1987 to March 1988	29
April 1988 to March 1989	4
April 1989 to date	25

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many incidents in area electricity boards involving 11KV switchgear which would have given rise to injury, death, fire or explosion occurred in 1979 and each succeeding year.

Mr. Wakeham: It is not readily possible to provide annual statistics of the specific type and nature requested by the hon. Member for a period as long as 10 years. The number of incidents, however, notified to my Department since 1987 involving 11KV switchgear, which could have given rise to injury, death, fire or explosion, for the specific reporting periods indicated, are as follows:

	Number
April 1987 to March 1988	9
April 1988 to March 1989	40
April 1989 to date	34

	1987-88	1988-89	1989 to date
Number of fatalities (public)	0	0	0
Number of fatalities (electricity supply industry)	2	0	n/a
Number of injuries (public)	0	0	2
Number of injuries (electricity supply industry)	2	2	n/a

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what investigations the engineering inspectorate of his Department carried out on 11KV switchgear in 1979 and each succeeding year.

Mr. Wakeham: The engineering inspectorate has carried out an average of eight investigations per annum since 1979 into incidents involving assets of the electricity supply industry and injury or fatality to members of the public. Only one of the investigations in this period has specifically involved 11KV switchgear. Incidents involving employees of the industry or their contractors while at work are investigated by the Health and Safety Executive. The engineering inspectorate, however, carries out periodic inspections of ESI assets, including 11KV switchgear, to ensure compliance with the Electricity Supply Regulations 1988. All the area electricity boards in England and Wales were, for example, visited between March and May this year, and a number of substations and overhead line support structures were inspected. A number of follow-up inspections arising from these visits have also been made.

Electricity Boards (Prosecutions)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many prosecutions of electricity boards were initiated by his engineering inspectorate in 1979 and each succeeding year.

Mr. Wakeham: No prosecutions of the electricity boards were initiated by the engineering inspectorate of the Department of Energy between 1979 and 1988. One prosecution has been initiated so far in 1989.

Redundant Mineworkers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much the Government have paid out under the redundant mineworkers payment scheme in each year since its inception; what is the latest estimate for the current year; and what is his estimate for each year to 1993.

Mr. Wakeham: The total payments under the RMPS between 1968-69 and 1988-89 were £2,309 million. The estimates provision for 1989-90 is for payments of £132·5 million. Payments are projected to fall steadily to reach less than £90 million per year in the early 1990s.

Nuclear Companies

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what account will be taken in setting prices for the new national nuclear companies of (a) market-related factors and (b) cost-related factors.

Mr. Wakeham: Pricing is a matter for negotiation between Nuclear Electric and the area boards, subject to Government approval of the conclusions reached.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the new national nuclear companies will provide base load electricity to the grid.

Mr. Wakeham: Yes. Nuclear Electric plc will provide base load electricity.

British Coal

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the effect of the interest rate increases of the past 18 months on the finances of British Coal.

Mr. Wakeham: This is a matter for British Coal. However, I can say that the increase in British Coal's external finance limit of £423 million which I announced on 23 November 1989 was intended to cover, among other things, the effect of an increase of £35 million in the corporation's annual interest bill caused by higher interest rates.

Research and Development

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment his Department makes of the research and development programmes of each of the energy industries.

Mr. Wakeham: My Advisory Council on Research and Development for Fuel and Power (ACORD) reviews annually the R & D programmes of the electricity supply industry and British Coal. After privatisation, the successor companies will determine their own R & D programmes. However, discussions with the ESI will continue to ensure that, where necessary, the national interest in long-term electricity R & D is protected through Government promotion of specific activities.

My Department also collects and reviews information periodically on the R & D programmes of the oil and gas companies on the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of his Department's research and development budget was devoted to (a) coal-fired generation and (b) nuclear power, in 1979 and each succeeding year.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Proportion of D/Energy R & D expenditure on:
	nuclear Per cent.	coal technology Per cent.
1979-80	84·2	1·0
1980-81	85·1	1·2
1981-82	81·5	1·8
1982-83	85·2	1·2
1983-84	85·7	1·3
1984-85	84·6	0·3
1985-86	85·4	0·3
1986-87	83·0	1·0
1987-88	79·9	0·8
1988-89	81·3	0·7

Source: Annual Review of Government Funded R & D Percentage for nuclear prior to 1986-87 is based on D/Energy grant to the UKAEA for R & D

The difference in the proportions of R & D expenditure allocated to either technology reflects both the difference in scale and expense of the research effort involved, and also the fact that much coal technology R & D was (and is) carried out by British Coal, the electricity supply industry, and the private sector. The Government's policy is to support R & D only where that is necessary to ensure that work in the national interest is done to an appropriate time scale.

Power Station Costs

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's latest estimate of the comparative cost per kilowatt hour of (a) nuclear power stations and (b) modern conventional stations.

Mr. Wakeham: The costs of electricity generation are a matter for the CEGB.

Engineering Inspectorate

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the establishment of professionally qualified staff in the engineering inspectorate of his Department; and how many such staff are in post;

(2) what is the establishment of the engineering inspectorate of his Department; and how many staff are in post.

Mr. Wakeham: The establishment of the engineering inspectorate of the Department of Energy is for five professionally qualified electrical engineers, one administrative officer (full-time) and one administrative officer (part-time). At present there are four professionally qualified staff in post and one administrative officer (full-time).

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the maximum amount of time which can elapse between the occurrence of an incident which could give rise to injury, death, fire or explosion in an electricity board and the incident being reported to his engineering inspectorate.

Mr. Wakeham: Under the requirements of regulation 34(2)(e) of the Electricity Supply Regulations 1988 the reporting of incidents by an electricity board which could give rise to injury, death, fire or explosion must be in writing and sent to the Secretary of State within 15 days of the end of the month in which the event became known to the board.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the total tonnage of polychlorinated biphenyls in transformers owned by the area electricity boards and the Central Electricity Generating Board;

(2) what percentage of transformers owned by (a) the area electricity boards and (b) the Central Electricity Generating Board contain polychlorinated biphenyls.

Mr. Wakeham: This is a matter for the electricity supply industry. I have therefore asked the chairmen of the Electricity Council and the CEGB to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Subsidence

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to introduce legislation to implement the recommendations of the Waddilove committee on subsidence.

Mr. Wakeham: Over half the recommendations of the Waddilove committee have already been implemented wholly or in part by British Coal. (For details, I refer the hon. Member to the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Dr. Woodcock) on 12 January at columns 739-41). The Government's proposals for legislation concerning the remaining recommendations will be implemented as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits.

Electrical Manufacturers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he or his predecessors last met representatives of United Kingdom electrical plant manufacturers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet representatives of the United Kingdom plant manufacturers from time to time, as did my predecessor.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the status of the report that his Department is preparing on possible further United Kingdom greenhouse gas emissions for the intergovernmental panel on climatic change; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I am pleased to tell my hon. Friend that the study entitled "An Evaluation of Energy Related Greenhouse Gas Emissions and Measures to Ameliorate Them" for the energy and industry subgroup of the response strategies working group of the UNEP/WMO intergovernmental panel on climate change (IPCC) is now ready and has been sent to the IPCC. The United Kingdom along with certain other countries volunteered to submit such urgent studies in order to assist the subgroup in its work. The aim of the studies is to illustrate, from the national perspectives of participating countries, the practical technical options and their possible costs, which may be available to curtail emissions of the "greehouse" gases from the many energy-related activities of society.

Of necessity, the study has to consider the size of future emissions of the greenhouse gases and the shape of the then energy system, as background against which the technical measures can be analysed. Such scenarios of future emissions, being very dependent on the input assumptions, are intended to provide only a framework for assessing the options. They are not predictions of the future. Similarly the impact of any one technical option is uncertain; and since each option in the paper has been considered in isolation it would be wrong to draw any conclusion from any combination of them.

It is clear that the United Kingdom is responsible for only a fraction (approximately 3 per cent. of the world's CO_2 emissions) and that this is likely to decline proportionately in the future. Therefore, tackling the problem of climate change needs truly international action, as all recent studies of the subject (including the recent valuable contribution from the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology) have stressed. That is why it is important for all countries to concentrate their efforts on the work of the IPCC. Once its advice is available, it will be for the international community to decide what measures should be taken, and how best individual countries can contribute to the global response.

I have today placed a copy of the study report in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information he has as to the prevalance of the practice of killing unborn babies prior to abortion after 18 weeks by injecting a saline solution into the womb; and whether this is in accordance with best practice as set out in guidance to abortionists by his Department;

(2) what information he has as to the prevalance of the practice of killing unborn babies prior to abortion after 18 weeks by injecting urea into the womb; and whether this is in accordance with best practice as set out in guidance to abortionists by his Department.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The method of termination used in a particular case is a matter for the doctor concerned.

The available information is that in England and Wales in 1988, 2,501 abortions were carried out in which the use of urea was reported and 13 were carried out in which the use of saline was reported in conjunction with prostaglandins.

Speech Therapists

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of whether there are sufficient trained speech therapists to perform their duties within the Leicestershire health authority; what is the total current number on establishment; and how far that establishment is filled.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for health authorities to determine their staffing levels for particular services. Leicestershire health authority has a funded establishment of 45 whole-time equivalent trained speech therapists and there are currently 38 whole-time equivalent trained staff in post.

Hospitals

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that development plans he has approved for Whipps Cross hospital do not include reprovision of any service currently provided by Wanstead hospital; and if he will make it his policy not to approve any decision to close Wanstead hospital.

Mr. Freeman: Phase 1 of the Whipps Cross hospital development was approved by Ministers in February 1988 and is due to open in 1990. This development does not include any plans for alteration in services currently provided by Wanstead hospital. We have received no plans from North East Thames regional health authority proposing any other major changes to services in Waltham Forest district health authority.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the reasons for the most recent declaration of a red alert at Whipps Cross hospital; and if he will consider additional action to get the hospital through the winter without having to declare a further red alert.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest red alert at Whipps Cross is due to higher than normal levels of emergency admissions. Waltham Forest health authority has implemented the red alert to ensure that in-patient services for emergency and urgent admissions are fully maintained whilst causing the least possible disruption to patient services. The health authority will continue to operate a flexible bed allocation policy as has been the practice in previous years.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his responsibility in the case of a health authority that does not commit sufficient resources to a hospital to maintain its fabric and services and to retain staff.

Mr. Freeman: It is for regional and district health authorities to allocate resources to hospitals ensuring that services best meet the needs of the patients they serve.

Blind or Partially Sighted People

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people are registered blind in St. Helens and Knowsley health authority;

(2) what is the total number of people, in percentage and in numerical terms, in the population with a severe sight impairment.

Mr. Freeman: The number of people in England registered with local authorities as blind or partially sighted is published in "Registered Blind and Partially Sighted Persons at 31 March 1988 England", a copy of which is in the Library. This shows that

(a) the number of persons registered as blind within the boundaries of St. Helens and Knowsley health authority at that date is 713; and

(b) the total number of people in England registered as blind or partially sighted at that date is 205,876. This represents 0·4 per cent. of the estimated England population. However, not all blind or partially sighted people register with local authorities and the proportion who do not register is unknown.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ambulance personnel were employed in each of the last 10 years in both (a) actual terms and (b) full-time equivalents.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is given in the table:

NHS ambulance staff in post at 30 September 1979 to 1988
England

Numbers

	Ambulance officers and control assistants	Ambulancemen/ women	Total
1979	3,178	13,997	17,175
1980	3,232	14,580	17,812
1981	3,206	15,059	18,265
1982	3,285	15,135	18,420
1983	3,273	15,245	18,518
1984	3,206	15,059	18,265
1985	3,172	15,220	18,392
1986	3,165	16,227	19,392
1987	3,086	16,592	19,678
1988	3,032	16,357	19,389

Source: Department of Health (SM13) annual census of NHS non-medical manpower.

NHS ambulance staff in post at 30 September 1979 to 1988
England

Whole-time equivalent

	Ambulance officers and control assistants	Ambulancemen/ women	Total
1979	3,156	13,973	17,129
1980	3,214	14,554	17,768
1981	3,293	14,928	18,221
1982	3,265	15,059	18,324
1983	3,249	15,148	18,397
1984	3,174	14,930	18,103
1985	3,139	15,049	18,188
1986	3,124	15,841	18,966
1987	3,037	15,973	19,010
1988	2,980	15,781	18,761

Source: Department of Health (SM13) annual census of NHS non-medical manpower.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place a copy of the document "The London Ambulance Service in the Nineties: Management Proposals" in the Library; how many district health authorities in London will be affected by the proposals contained in the document; and whether similar proposals are being prepared or discussed for any other regions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The document "The London Ambulance Service in the Nineties" is a public document which is available on request from South West Thames RHA. I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library.

South West Thames is currently discussing the proposals it contains with the three other Thames regions. In all, 32 DHAs are served by the London ambulance service.

A number of other regional health authorities are reviewing the management arrangements of their regionally managed ambulance services in line with the Department's circular EL(89)MB/59, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to proceed with the privatisation or contracting out of non-emergency ambulance services.

Mr. Freeman: Health authorities were advised in 1984 that it was open to them to buy-in part of the ambulance service if that was more cost effective and provided that the quality of service was maintained. A number of NHS ambulance authorities are using private contractors, the hospital car service and the voluntary aid societies to transport appropriate NHS patients. The proposals in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill currently before Parliament offer a further opportunity for authorities to re-appraise their non-emergency patient transport services.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been carried out by his Department of the costs benefits and processes of privatising ambulance services; when these studies started and were completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No such studies into the ambulance service have been carried out. However, in 1983, a Rayner scrutiny of the non-emergency ambulance service recommended that budgets for transport should be introduced at unit or clinical level and that it would be for managers at that level to buy in part of the ambulance service of other public agencies or the private sector if that was more cost effective and provided that the quality of service was maintained. Health authorities were advised accordingly in 1984.

A scheme for charging the cost of non-emergency ambulance services to units has been piloted in the West Midlands RHA and a full report of the results is expected shortly.

Nurse Prescribing

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the report of the special advisory groups on nurse prescribing, chaired by Dr. June Gown; and when and in what form he proposes to bring forward the necessary legislative changes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The advisory group's report will be published and distributed for comment within the next few weeks. The Department is considering the implications of the report, including the legislative changes that will be needed if the group's proposals are adopted.

Speech Therapists

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average waiting time for a child to have a first consultation with a trained speech therapist today; and what was the figure five years ago.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally.

Fostering (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children are currently in foster care in the Bolton area; what proportion are in long-term foster care; and how many foster parents are currently going through the process of adoption of such children.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of children in care in the metropolitan district of Bolton who were boarded out with foster parents at 31 March 1988 was 155. Information is not available centrally about what proportion of these children was in long-term foster care or how many foster parents were going through the process of adoption of such children.

Community Health Services

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements he will make to ensure that community health services are provided locally by all district authorities as part of their core services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It will be the responsibility of every district health authority to ensure that its population has access to a comprehensive range of services, including community health services. Many services such as community health services will need to be provided locally either for clinical reasons, because of the nature of the service or for the convenience of patients and their relatives. District health authorities will be expected to arrange a pattern of services which secures local access where this is needed and at the same time gives patients and their GPs the maximum possible choice. DHAs performance in obtaining the most appropriate pattern of services will be monitored through the review processes. The concept of "core services" is not relevant to this process in most circumstances. The term "core service" applies only to services which an NHS trust will, if necessary, be required to provide because local access is essential and there is no appropriate alternative provider available.

Rehabilitation

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what definition of rehabilitation is used by his Department; and how he intends to ensure that it is carried out effectively.

Mr. Freeman: Within the Department rehabilitation is taken to mean the complex of measures and activities aimed at helping disabled and handicapped people achieve the highest level of physical, psychological and social adaption and integration. We intend to ensure it is carried out effectively by continuing to bring about the improvements in health and social services outlined in two recent White Papers "Working for Patients" and "Caring for People" and by liaising with other Government Departments as and when necessary.

General Practitioners' Contract

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what provision has been made in the new general practitioners' contract for the reimbursement of the salary of doctors' wives working in their surgeries;

(2) what provision has been made in the new general practitioners' contract for the direct reimbursement of ancillary staff salaries.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: From 1 April 1990, restrictions on the number and type of staff for whom general practitioners may receive direct reimbursement will be removed. Within their cash allocations, family practitioner committees and health boards will be able to authorise reimbursement for whatever staff they and general practitioners consider best for the provision of care in the area served. These new arrangements which are set out in the statement of fees and allowances payable from 1 April 1990 are the same for doctors' wives who work in the surgery as for other practice staff.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) from whom advice was sought regarding the cost of the help likely to be needed by HIV-infected haemophiliacs and their families before the figure of £20,000 for an individual lump sum payment was decided upon; and what advice was given;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to ensure that the £20,000 lump sum payment to HIV-infected haemophiliacs does not affect the receipt of social security payments and legal aid by them;

(3) what advice was given by the Charity Commissioners regarding the legality of the Macfarlane trust giving equal lump sum payments to all HIV-infected haemophiliacs.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will explain the method to be used for parcelling out the £19 million promised to haemophiliac cases who are HIV positive; whether they will each receive an equivalent capital sum; and how soon he expects the payments to be made;

(2) what discussions took place with the executors of the Mcfarlane trust about using part of the existing fund to top-up the ex gratia capital sums to be given to haemophiliacs who are HIV positive; and whether it is intended to restore that money to meet continuous need for extras including heating and dietary requirements;

(3) whether, as a result of the payment of £20,000 to each of the haemophiliacs who are HIV positive, they will be deemed to possess a capital sum in excess of what is allowed for claiming legal aid; and whether this money will affect their ability to pursue their claim for compensation on legal aid.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are firmly committed both to making equal lump sum payments of £20,000 to each haemophiliac infected with HIV through the use of blood products, or to the family of such a person who has died and to enabling the Macfarlane trust to continue on a more generous scale their help to families in particular need. Together, we believe that these measures are adequate to ensure that the special needs of the infected haemophiliacs and their families are met. Discussions are taking place with representatives of the Macfarlane trust, and with the Charity Commission, on how our objectives can be achieved.

We hope that payments will be made as soon as possible.

The payments will be disregarded for the purpose of social security as have past payments from the Macfarlane trust. Also, such payments should not prejudice the legal aid position of haemophiliacs with HIV who are, or seek to be, involved in the current litigation concerning their HIV infection.

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health last met the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority on 14 November 1989 to discuss matters relating to the management of the NHS.

Basildon and Thurrock District Health Authority

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current net annual rate bill paid by each hospital within Basildon and Thurrock district health authority to the relevant local authority.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that this information is not collected centrally. I suggest that my hon. Friend contacts Basildon and Thurrock health authority direct.

AIDS

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current budget for expenditure on AIDS and the related educational campaign; and whether the budget has changed from the sums made available for the year 1988-89.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has made the following provision for AIDS-related health and personal social services and health education expenditure in England.

(£ millions)

	1988-89	1989-90
Advances to health authorities	58·74	121·90
AIDS support grant allocations to local authorities	nil	7·00
Section 64 grants to voluntary organisations	1·09	1·67
Allocations to the Health Education Authority (including United Kingdom mass media remit)	10·00	12·00
Research (made available)	1·60	2·29

Other Government Departments also spend money in response to HIV-AIDS, for example, the Department of Education and Science provides funds to the Medical Research Council for its directed programme on AIDS.

Edwards-Duromedics Heart Valve

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the class I recall, issued in the United States of America on the Edwards-Duromedics heart valve, reached his Department; what action was taken as a result; and when and what warnings were issued to general practitioners about the hazards of the valve.

Mr. Freeman: The Department became aware on 17 May 1988 that the manufacturer had arranged a voluntary recall in the USA. Urgent arrangements were made for a meeting in this country on 19 May 1988 between the manufacturer and the Department of Health medical and technical staff. This led to agreement to the company issuing a letter on 25 May 1988 to all implanting centres and known United Kingdom purchasers of the specified heart valves with instructions to inform appropriate medical staff of the need to discontinue use for new patients and ensure very careful monitoring of patients currently using them. Guidance was also given on diagnosis and treatment. After further independent evaluation of various types of valve in Sheffield the Department subsequently issued a "Dear Doctor" letter on 19 August 1988 to all consultant cardiothoracic surgeons and cardiologists in the United Kingdom, covering the question of valve failure. Since 1986 the Department has been funding a heart valve registry based at the Hammersmith hospital to monitor usage and failures in use in the United Kingdom.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Drugs

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what special assistance the Government are giving or planning for Colombia, Bolivia and Peru to assist them in their efforts to eliminate illicit drug production and trafficking.

Mr. Sainsbury: As far as assistance to Colombia is concerned, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave on 29 November to the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell). In Bolivia, we are contributing via the United Nations fund for drug abuse control to a £2·2 million alternative development project, and have recently allocated a further £5 million of aid funds. We have also contributed some £250,000 to drugs rehabilitation projects in Bolivia. United Kingdom assistance to Peru has included the provision of an aircraft and communications equipment. Future aid is likely to include training for the Bolivian and Peruvian customs services.

El Salvador

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have received any requests for assistance from the Government of El Salvador in the matter of the recent murder of six Jesuit priests.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes. We shall, of course, do all that we reasonably can to help the Government of El Salvador bring the perpetrators of this terrible crime to justice. We welcome President Cristiani's obvious determination to establish all the facts.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the number of members of the El Salvadorean armed forces who have been prosecuted for involvement in death squads, torture and murder since the beginning of the present conflict.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested is not readily available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's ambassador to El Salvador has made to the El Salvadorean Government on the recent murder of six Jesuit priests.

Mr. Sainsbury: The following statement of our view on the killing of the six Jesuits has been passed to the Salvadorean authorities in London and San Salvador:

"We utterly condemn the cowardly and appalling murders which occurred at the Catholic university in the early hours of 16 November. The rector and his colleagues were men whose reputation for honesty and integrity stood high in the world. Words cannot express our disgust at the simultaneous killing of their cook and one or more of her children. We hope that the perpetrators of this crime will be identified and brought to justice.

In the present tense situation in San Salvador, we urge restraint on all parties. Acts of retribution will lead only to further tragedy and despair. This cannot be the way forward for El Salvador.

We hope that everything will be done to facilitate the task of the Red Cross, in particular to bring the wounded to safety where they can receive treatment.

We renew our call on the FMLN to bring to an end their offensive which has caused such suffering and to return to the negotiating table."

Children

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what position Her Majesty's Government have adopted towards the proposal for a world summit for children as suggested by UNICEF.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs joined other Commonwealth heads of Government in welcoming the proposed summit for children as a means of stimulating national and international action. I understand that preparations for this conference are in train and we await proposals from those concerned.

UN Relief and Working Agency

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the increase of contributions to United Nations Relief and Working Agency announced by Council of Europe member states at the pledging conference of 16 November.

Mr. Sainsbury: At the pledging conference held on 16 November at the United Nations general assembly, donor countries announced contributions to UNRWA for 1990 amounting to US $76 million. Some ten pledges have yet to be quantified. Of the total announced to date, Council of Europe member states have pledged more than US $64 million (a modest increase on 1989).

Britain's contribution for 1989 was £5·25 million. This was increased at the 16 November conference to £5·5 million. In addition, we have provided a grant of £250,000 to fund an UNRWA housing and infrastructure feasibility study being carried out by British consultants. We also contribute substantially through the European Community, both to UNRWA's regular programmes and to its emergency programmes.

Montserrat

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people have been made homeless in the dependent territory of Montserrat as a result of Hurricane Hugo on 17 September; and what is the estimated cost of the damage sustained during the hurricane.

Mr. Sainsbury: A complete survey of the extent of damage to housing from Hurricane Hugo is being conducted by the Montserrat Government. Their preliminary estimates are that, of the 4,000 houses in Montserrat, perhaps as many as 30 per cent. were totally devasted and 60 per cent. rendered temporarily uninhabitable. It will clearly take time to produce an accurate assessment of the cost of the overall damage. The extent to which this figure will be met by insurance policies is also not yet known.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what material and financial help has been given to the Government of Montserrat since the hurricane of 17 September; and whether he will assist financially those people who have been left homeless to rebuild their homes and those people who have lost business and crops.

Mr. Waldegrave: Immediately following Hurricane Hugo, Britain made an initial £1 million available to the area for emergency assistance, such as tents, blankets, roofing, medicaments, and also the services of British armed forces for immediate repairs and the airfreighting of supplies. Most of this assistance was directed to Montserrat. Subsequently, a further £3·2 million has been committed for reconstruction, mainly on Montserrat. A major use has been to finance teams of engineers, linesmen and electricians from British electricity boards to repair the electricity distribution system on Antigua and on Montserrat where over 50 men are currently working. It is also being used to purchase, for the Montserrat public works department, equipment and materials (such as galvanised sheeting, roofing shingles and nails) for public assistance housing, clinics, schools and other Government buildings.

A number of other donor Governments and agencies, including the United States, Canada and the European Community, are also providing emergency assistance.

Losses to private businesses, homes and crops are a matter for the companies and individuals concerned drawing on their private insurance cover. I understand the Montserrat Government is providing help for individuals facing particular difficulties.

British officials, including specialist advisers, from our development division in Barbados and from London, recently completed a report on Montserrat's longer-term needs. They have formulated a rebuilding strategy, which we will now be discussing with the Government of Montserrat and also with the international aid institutions and other donors. The aim will be to prepare an action plan and financing assessment.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the size of the overseas aid budget for each year since 1979;

(2) if he will list the size of the overseas aid budget in real terms for each year since 1979.

Mr. Waldegrave: The figures for net public expenditure on overseas aid at current and at 1979 prices are as follows:

Year	Current prices £ million	1979 prices £ million
1979	864	864
1980	842	704
1981	1,062	798
1982	991	692
1983	1,080	716
1984	1,200	760
1985	1,210	726
1986	1,233	714
1987	1,174	649
1988	1,540	798

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people he anticipates will be compulsorily removed from Hong Kong by 25 December.

Mr. Maude: As of 27 November, a total of 3,629 Vietnamese boat people in Hong Kong had been finally screened out with no alternative but return to Vietnam. Some may volunteer to return. It is therefore not possible to determine in advance how many will need to be repatriated, nor how long it will take to complete the process. But a start will need to be made soon.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial assistance is to be given to each Veitnamese boat person who will be compulsorily removed from Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: The level of reintegration assistance to be paid to the first group of Vietnamese boat people who return involuntarily to Vietnam will be the equivalent to what UNHCR pays under the voluntary repatriation scheme. It will cover such expenses as transport within Vietnam, food, domestic appliances, housing and resettlement in other places, vocational training, job placement and production tools. The level of expenditure will depend on the details of each case.

South Korea

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Korea in order to bring about an end to the inhumane treatment of dogs and cats intended for human consumption in that country; and if he will make it his policy to raise the issue at an intergovernmental level.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Korean Government are well aware of the revulsion felt by the people in the United Kingdom at the cruel treatment of animals. During the recent visit of President Roh, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs once again drew the attention of the Korean Foreign Minister to the strong concern which many people in this country feel about the way in which dogs and cats are reared and slaughtered for food in Korea.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to initiate and co-ordinate action by international environmental and animal welfare organisations to bring pressure on the Government of Korea to end inhumane treatment of dogs and cats intended for human consumption in that country.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Korean Government are well aware of the strong concern in this country and elsewhere about the way in which cats and dogs are reared and slaughtered for human consumption. Non-governmental organisations can best co-ordinate their own activities.

Ethiopia

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his sources of information on famine in Ethiopia; how often this information is updated; and what procedures are in place to consider and respond to developments as they arise.

Mr. Waldegrave: We receive continuing information from a variety of sources: in particular the emergency planning and preparedness system which we have helped the United Nations to establish in Ethiopia, our embassy in Addis Ababa, British non-governmental organisations and international agencies such as the United Nations world food programme. Information is also provided by the Ethiopian Government and the relief organisations of the Eritrean and Tigrean rebel movements.

Regular co-ordination with other donors, both in Addis Ababa and elsewhere, and close liaison with British NGOs help us in our assessments of our data. Within ODA the interdepartmental co-ordinating arrangements are such as to enable us to respond speedily and effectively with both food aid and other emergency relief to the threat of famine.

Sikh Human Rights

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he sought to raise the question of Sikh human rights at the recent Commonwealth conference.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ask for the question of Sikh human rights to be placed on the agenda of the next Commonwealth conference.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Cyprus

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on arms build-up on the Greek side of Cyprus; and what efforts he is making, in the interests of preserving peace, to counter such moves.

Mr. Maude: The Government of Cyprus are pursuing a substantial arms purchasing programme for the Greek Cypriot national guard. We have made clear our view that such measures do nothing to help create the right climate for resuming the intercommunal talks, which have been stalled since last June.

Secure Office Automation

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress there has been on the secure office automation project in the diplomatic wing.

Mr. Sainsbury: A review of the project was conducted following announcements by the contractor, SD-Scicon, of significant delays in the delivery of future stages. The FCO and SD-Scicon have agreed that the project be halted on terms whereby the FCO pays only for what it has received, retaining equipment, documentation and the use of software. SD-Scicon will provide maintenance cover at no charge for a period of two years, refund payments totalling £1·57 million, and acquire full rights to the software developed under the contract. In total, the cost to the FCO of the FOLIOS contract, including staff costs, was £3·4 million. The value to the FCO of the settlement, in equipment, services and returned money, is £3·3 million.

Hong Kong

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will reply to the second report of the Foreign Affairs Committee on Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: We shall publish our observations on the report at noon on 1 December 1989.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Jacques Delors

10. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last had discussions with Mr. Jacques Delors.

Mr. Major: I last met Mr. Delors on 13 November.

38. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last had discussions with Mr. Jacques Delors.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last had discussions with Mr. Jacques Delors.

Mr. Lilley: Mr. Delors attended the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers on 13 November, a report of which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave to the House on 15 November, Official Report, column 315-16.

Inflation

14. Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his forecast for inflation in the fourth quarter of 1989.

57. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his forecast for inflation in the fourth quarter of 1989.

Mr. Ryder: Inflation is expected to average 7½ per cent. in the fourth quarter of 1989, as outlined in the Autumn Statement forecast.

18. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the current inflation rates in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other Group of Seven countries.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the current inflation rates in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other Group of Seven countries.

Mr. Lilley: The underlying inflation rate in the United Kingdom is 6·1 per cent.; the inflation rates in other G7 countries range from 2·6 per cent. in Japan to 6·8 per cent. in Italy.

74. Mr. Moate: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the peak inflation rate for 1989; and what was the peak rate reached between 1974 and 1979.

Mr. Ryder: The all-items RPI inflation rate for 1989 probably peaked in May and June of this year at a rate of 8·3 per cent., far lower than the peak rate of 26·9 per cent. in August 1975 under the last Labour Government.

33. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on current policies to contain inflation.

Mr. Ryder: The Government's tight monetary and fiscal policies are working. Demand is slowing and lower inflation will follow.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to control inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The Government's tight monetary and fiscal policies are working. Demand is slowing and lower inflation will follow.

Interest Rates

16. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters he has received from small businesses about the level of interest rates.

Mr. Ryder: Over the last year we have received a small number each month.

26. Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from the Confederation of British Industry about the level of interest rates; and what reply he has sent.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend has received one, to which he replied on 24 November.

28. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what organisations have made representations to him about the present level of interest rates.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of such representations.

72. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the main guide to interest rate policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: In formulating their monetary policy, the Government will continue to be guided by movements in narrow and broad money (especially the movement of MO in relation to its target range) and the behaviour of other financial indicators, in particular the exchange rate.

76. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

Mr. Ryder: Bank base rates are 15 per cent.

77. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about high interest rates from business groups in Scotland.

78. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about high interest rates from business groups in Scotland.

79. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about high interest rates from business groups in Scotland.

80. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about high interest rates from business groups in Scotland.

Mr. Ryder: None.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the current level of interest rates from the representatives of manufacturing industry.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor and I have received a number of such representations.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's analysis of the effect high interest rates are having on small businesses.

Mr. Ryder: Inflation is the greatest threat to the prosperity of all small businesses. They will therefore benefit from the Government's determination to keep interest rates as high as necessary for as long as necessary as part of their firm anti-inflationary policy.

Short-term Capital

17. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate for the short-term capital flows into the United Kingdom so far in 1989.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is not possible to distinguish between short-term and long-term capital flows.

Investment and Consumption

21. Mr. Thornton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth in total investment and in total consumption over the last seven years.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth in total investment and in total consumption over the last seven years.

36. Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth in total investment and in total consumption over the last seven years.

49. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total growth in investment and in total consumption over the last seven years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Over the last seven years, total investment has grown by over 56 per cent., twice as fast as total consumption.

Bank of England

22. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend meets the Governor of the Bank of England from time to time to discuss a variety of matters.

44. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to change the status of the Bank of England.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Public Spending

23. Mrs. Currie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of gross domestic product was devoted to public spending in the current year and five years ago.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest estimate of the ratio of general Government expenditure (excluding privatisation proceeds) to gross domestic product in 1989-90, as given in the 1989 Autumn Statement, is 38¼ per cent. The corresponding figure for 1984-85 was 46 per cent.

Magazines and Journals

24. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to introduce value added tax on magazines and journals.

35. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to introduce value added tax on magazines and journals.

Mr. Ryder: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Economic and Monetary Union

25. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on his approach to economic and monetary union.

Mr. Lilley: A number of representations have been received.

EC Finance Ministers

27. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Finance Ministers of other European Community countries; and what was discussed.

30. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Finance Ministers of other European Community countries; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friend to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Altrincham and Sale (Sir F. Montgomery) on 15 November at column 315-16.

Wealth

29. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he proposes to take to redress the relative wealth available to the richest and poorest groups in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lilley: The sound economic policies pursued by this Government will continue to benefit all groups in the United Kingdom.

Business Investment

31. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the future level of business investment.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Chancellor of the Exchequer regularly meets representatives of the Confederation of British Industry at which many issues are discussed. In the recent Autumn Statement forecast, business investment was projected to increase by 9½ per cent. in 1989 and by 4½ per cent. in 1990.

National Health Service

32. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide further details of the extra spending on the National Health Service announced in his Autumn Statement; and how much of the extra spending is accounted for by anticipated cost savings, projected income generation and the cost of the National Health Service review.

63. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide further details of the extra spending on the National Health Service announced in his Autumn Statement; and how much of the extra spending is accounted for by anticipated cost savings, projected income generation and the cost of the National Health Service review.

73. Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide further details of the extra spending on the National Health Service review announced in his Autumn Statement; and how much of the extra spending is accounted for by anticipated cost savings, projected income generation and the cost of the National Health Service review.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Provision for the NHS in the United Kingdom will be about £2,400 million higher in 1990-91 than 1989-90. In addition, the Health Service will have available some £200 million extra cash released by a new round of cost improvement programmes and income generation. The expenditure plans for 1990-91 assume that rather over £250 million of the increase will be available for implementation in England of the NHS review proposals. Expenditure on implementation of the NHS review in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland will be decided in due course by the respective Secretaries of State.

Foreign Banks

34. Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has on whether foreign banks would support a voluntary agreement to restrict credit.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend has no evidence to suggest that foreign banks would support any such agreement.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

37. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had on the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Lilley: The United Kingdom will join the exchange rate mechanism during the so-called "stage 1" of economic and monetary union which my right hon. Friend discussed at the meeting of Community Economic and Finance Ministers in Brussels on 13 November.

46. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the United Kingdom to enter the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system; and if he will make a statement.

75. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the conditions for British entry to the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system to be met.

Mr. Lilley: The United Kingdom will enter the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system during the so-called stage 1 of economic and monetary union which begins on 1 July 1990.

66. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will commission a study to assess the influence upon United Kingdom interest rates of the early entry of sterling into the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: As my right hon. Friend has made clear, membership of the exchange rate mechanism does not insulate a country from high interest rates.

Imports

39. Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of imports production and investment goods were in (a) 1974, (b) 1984 and (c) 1988.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Up until 1979 it fell continuously to 74½ per cent., but since 1979 the share has risen to 75½ per cent., in both 1984 and 1988.

Workplace Nurseries

40. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet representatives of the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss the tax on workplace nurseries.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy towards the abolition of tax payments on workplace nursery places.

43. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet representatives of the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss the tax on workplace nurseries.

Mr. Lilley: There is no special tax on workplace nurseries. Any element of subsidy in a workplace nursery place is a benefit in kind and benefits in kind are generally subject to income tax. My right hon. Friend has no plans to discuss this matter with the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Child Poverty Action Group

41. Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives from the Child Poverty Action Group.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Since he became Chancellor, my right hon. Friend has not met representatives from the Child Poverty Action Group.

Child Tax Allowance

42. Mr. Churchill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would today be the value per child of the child tax allowance, abolished in 1978; and if he will consider its reintroduction.

Mr. Peter Lilley: Child tax allowances in 1976-77 (the year before they began to be phased out) were £365 for each dependent child over 16, £335 for each child aged 11 to 16, and £300 for each child under 11. They were never covered by indexation provisions. We have no plans to reintroduce them.

Foreign Exchange Earnings

45. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of Britain's foreign exchange earnings for 1988 are accounted for by (a) visible exports and (b) invisibles.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Britain's visible exports for 1988 totalled £81 billion. It is not possible to give a meaningful figure for gross invisibles credits as some items are measured as net flows.

Personal Equity Plans

47. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest figure he has for the number of personal equity plan investors; and what plans he has to encourage further investment in such schemes.

Mr. Lilley: About 575,000 personal equity plans had been taken out between the scheme's introduction and the end of September 1989. PEPs are now extremely successful and I have no plans at present to change them.

Infrastructure Projects

48. Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make it his policy to increase the funds available for infrastructure projects to compensate for any loss of funds resulting from changes in European Economic Community polices.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Community support frameworks for the structural funds are still under discussion with the Commission. The Government's public expenditure plans already allow for substantial increases in infrastructure spending.

Small Firms

50. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to meet representatives of the small firms sector.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend meets business men involved in the small firms sector from time to time and is always glad to do so.

Tax Yields

51. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his latest forecasts for the yeild in the current year of (a) income tax, (b) corporation tax, (c) value added tax, (d) petrol tax, (e) drink tax and (f) tobacco tax.

Mr. Lilley: Figures consistent with the Autumn Statement forecast are given in the table.

Forecast receipts in 1989-90	£ billion
Income tax	48·4
Corporation tax (including ACT)	23·0
Value-added tax	30·1
Petrol duties	8·8
Alcohol duties	4·7
Tobacco duties	5·2

CBI

52. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Director General of the Confederation of British Industry; and what matters were discussed.

53. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the CBI; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer looks forward to meeting representatives of the CBI from time to time, and to discussing a wide range of subjects with them.

Private Medical Insurance

54. Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much private medical insurance tax relief will cost in a full year.

Mr. Major: About £40 million in 1990-91.

Investment

55. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what efforts he is making to bring investment in British industry to a level comparable with major competitors.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Business investment rose by an average of 7·3 per cent. a year between 1980 and 1988, faster by far than all the other major economies except Japan. This represents a major improvement on our position in 1970-80 when we had one of the lowest rates of investment growth relative to our major competitors.

Expenditure

56. Mr. Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is prepared to allow any expenditure approved for 1990-91 to be incurred in 1989-90.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is primarily for Departments to manage their programmes in a way that maximises value for money. Proposals to add to 1989-90 public expenditure would be considered on their merits.

Income Tax

58. Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the level of income tax collected by the Inland Revenue in 1978-79 to 1988-89 and on the proportion paid by the top 5 per cent. of earners in each case.

Mr. Lilley: Information is given in the table.

Total Income Tax Receipts and Tax Liability of Top 5 per cent. of Taxpayers as Percentage of Total Liability, 1978-79 to 1988-89

Year	Total income tax receipts £ billion	Income tax liability of the top 5 per cent. of taxpayers as a percentage of total liability[1] Percentage
1978-79	18·7	24
1979-80	20·6	23
1980-81	24·3	24
1981-82	28·7	25
1982-83	30·4	25
1983-84	31·1	26
1984-85	32·5	26
1985-86	35·4	27
1986-87	38·5	29
1987-88	41·4	[2]30
1988-89	43·4	[2]29

[1]Liability relates to personal incomes only whereas tax receipts include payments made by other sectors (e.g. income tax deducted from annual payments made by companies).
[2]Provisional, based on projections of 1986-87 Survey of Personal Incomes.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for cutting income tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget statement.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the additional monthly cost to the average household if the standard rate of income tax today were set at the same level as in 1979.

Mr. Lilley: If the basic rate of income tax were raised from its level of 25p in 1989-90 to 33p, the level in 1978-79, a married man on average male earnings would pay £68 per month more income tax. If his wife worked and was paid average female earnings, she would pay £47 more per month. The calculations assume that the couple are entitled to only the married man's allowance and wife's earned income allowance.

Output

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth in output over the last five years for which figures are available in the United Kingdom and other European Economic Community countries.

59. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth in output over the last five years for which figures are available in the United Kingdom and other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Ryder: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucestershire, West (Mr. Marland).

GDP

60. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the percentage of gross domestic product to be taken by general Government expenditure for 1989-90.

Mr. Norman Lamont: General Government expenditure (excluding privatisation proceeds) as a percentage of gross domestic product for 1989-90, as published in the 1989 Autumn Statement, is 38¾ per cent.

65. Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures indicating the share of gross domestic product taken by business investment.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Business investment as a share of GDP at factor cost was estimated to have been 14·7 per cent. in 1988.

Personal Debt

61. Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of personal debt in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ryder: Figures for personal sector debt are given in financial statistics table 14.4. The amount outstanding at end June 1989, as shown in the November issue, was about £378 billion. An analysis of the greater part of this debt using an alternative instrument classification and showing the amount regarded as consumer credit is given in financial statistics table 9.3.

Balance of Payments

62. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the current account of the balance of payments for 1989.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy).

71. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give his latest forecast for the balance of payments deficit for 1989.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy).

VAT

64. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the threshold for value added tax registration.

Mr. Ryder: The level of the VAT registration threshold is subject to regular review and has been increased in line with inflation since 1979. It represents the maximum possible within our obligations under the EC sixth VAT directive, which restricts increases in the threshold to those which maintain its value in real terms.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of gross earnings value added tax takes up for a family on average male earnings with two children in 1978-79 and 1989-90.

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of gross earnings value added tax takes up for a family on average male earnings with two children in 1978-79 and 1989-90.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley (Mr. Michie).

Demographic Change

67. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact on the economy of demographic change.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There will continue to be significant demographic changes in the United Kingdom in the next decade and beyond. In particular there will be an increase in the numbers of the elderly, and especially those aged over 85, while fewer young people will be entering the labour force.

The interactions between the structure of the population and the state of the economy are complex and uncertain, and demographic change is only one of the many factors that affect the economy.

Consumer Credit

68. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any proposals to improve the effectiveness of the Government's policy to control consumer credit.

Mr. Ryder: The only fair and effective way to control consumer credit is, as now, by the use of interest rates.

Eastern Europe

69. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the increased opportunities for the British economy following recent events in eastern Europe.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government very much welcome recent developments in eastern Europe. The dismantling of barriers to trade and investment and the freeing of eastern European economies which is likely to follow should provide opportunities for United Kingdom firms to greatly increase the business they do there.

Productivity

70. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the figures for productivity per man hour in manufacturing industry for the last three years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Output per man hour in United Kingdom manufacturing industry grew by an average of 1·6 per cent. a year over the last three years. The annual figures are 3·4 per cent. in 1986, 6·0 per cent. in 1987 and 4·8 per cent. in 1988.

Manufacturing Output

81. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest available index figures for real output in manufacturing industry together with figures for the time period or periods in 1973 for the United Kingdom with France, Italy and the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Ryder: Following is the information requested.

Manufacturing Output Indices (1985 = 100)

	1973	1988
United Kingdom	110·4	114·0
Germany	90·7	106·8

	1973	1988
France	95·0	107·6
Italy	84·1	112·3

Source: OECD except United Kingdom, CSO.

Pensioners (Free Shares)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will consider giving all retirement pensioners free shares in forthcoming privatisations.

Mr. Lilley: The arrangements for each sale are a matter for the relevant Secretary of State. In past privatisations, it has not been the practice to offer all retirement pensioners free shares. There have, however, been special terms for the past and present employees of the privatised company.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current yield from stamp duty split between the major transactions from which it is derived; and what proportion of total taxation revenues it forms.

Mr. Lilley: The yield from stamp duty, including stamp duty reserve tax, in 1989-90 is forecast to be £2,260 million, about 1·4 per cent. of the latest forecast of total receipts in 1989-90 from taxes on income, expenditure and capital. The stamp duty yield is forecast to be split as follows:

	£ million
Land and property	1,210
Stocks and shares	980
Life insurance policies	60
Other duties	10
TOTAL	2,260

National Savings Schemes

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he has taken to encourage savings in national savings schemes.

Mr. Ryder: The Government wish to attract into national savings funds which investors will leave untouched for several years. They therefore introduced the capital bond last January, offering a taxable guaranteed return of 12 per cent. a year if held to maturity after five years. The Government also aim to provide through national savings a fair return on the savings of non-taxpayers. Interest on national savings income and deposit bonds, and on deposits in the national savings bank investment account, is therefore paid or credited gross of income tax. The Government recently announced that the interest rate on these products would be increased by 1 per cent.

Civil Service Staff

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of Civil Service Staff are currently based outside London and what were the figures five, 10 and 15 years ago.

Mr. Ryder: The servicewide information available on numbers and proportions of civil servants working outside London is given in the table.

Staff numbers (thousands)

	1 April 1989	1 January 1984	1 January 1979
Non-Industrial
London	112·9	119·8	138·6
Outside London	386·9	389·1	427·5
Proportion outside London (per cent.)	77·4	76·5	75·5
Industrial
London	6·1	11·7	10·7
Outside London	63·3	112·1	156·4
Proportion outside London (per cent.)	91·2	90·6	93·6
Total
London	119·0	131·5	149·3
Outside London	450·2	501·1	583·9
Proportion outside London (per cent.)	79·1	79·2	79·6

Figures for non-industrial staff are extracted from a computer system which came into being in 1975. Before that date figures were collected by means of manual returns which gave no separate information about London-based staff numbers.

Current Account Deficit

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the elimination of deficit on current account.

Mr. Ryder: The current account deficit will narrow as the Government's tight monetary and fiscal policies continue to slow domestic demand.

Capital Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the proportion of imports of capital goods bought by manufacturing industry; and what is the ratio of imports to United Kingdom production of capital goods.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No estimates exist giving the proportion of imports of capital goods bought by manufacturing industry, or of the ratio of imports of capital goods to United Kingdom production of capital goods. To derive these estimates would involve disproportionate costs. This is due to the lack of consistency between the definition of capital goods according to the standard industrial trade classification (SITC) used for overseas trade statistics, and the standard industrial classification (SIC) used to define United Kingdom industries and commodity groupings.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of imports were production and investment goods in (a) 1974, (b) 1984 and (c) 1988.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Up until 1979 it fell continuously to 74½ per cent., but since 1979 the share has risen to 75½ per cent., in both 1984 and 1988.

Charities

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions since 1959 Governments have borrowed money from a charitable trust.

Mr. Major: I regret that this information is not available. When the Government borrow they do so mainly through the issue of securities, which may be bought by charitable trusts, either directly or in the market. The extent of such purchases is not known.

PRIME MINISTER

Local Government Finance

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the introduction of the community charge.

The Prime Minister: Following the successful introduction of the community charge in Scotland, I understand that most local authorities in England and Wales are making excellent progress in preparing for the community charge. Many chargepayers will already have received notification that they are on their authority's community charge register. I have every confidence that all authorities will wish to ensure that bills, with any necessary adjustment for transitional relief and rebates, will be issued to chargepayers on time next April.

Engagements

Mr. French: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 30 November.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 30 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 30 November.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 30 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

This evening I shall attend a dinner given by the Royal Green Jackets to mark the retirement of my right hon. and noble Friend Lord Holderness as their honorary colonel.

Official Duties

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether any of her official engagements have been cancelled or postponed in the week up to Wednesday 6 December.

The Prime Minister: Previous official engagements for Monday 4 December have had to be changed to enable me to attend the NATO summit in Brussels on that day. That is the only change to my earlier plans.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister how many hours she devoted or expects to devote to official duties in the weeks 21 to 28 November and 29 November to 5 December.

The Prime Minister: Most of my waking hours.

Hospitality

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what official hospitality will be extended by her to hon. Members in the week up to Tuesday 5 December; and to which parties the hon. Members receiving such hospitality belong.

The Prime Minister: I meet right hon. and hon. Members from time to time from all parties.

South Korea

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has made to the President of South Korea during his visit about the prisoners of conscience detained by his Government for political activities in contravention of article 19 of the universal declaration of human rights.

The Prime Minister: In our talks on 28 November, I congratulated President Roh on his achievements in extending democracy in Korea but did not discuss article 19 of the universal declaration of human rights.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Prime Minister what is the sum above which an answer to a parliamentary question is considered to represent disproportionate cost.

The Prime Minister: Any parliamentary question likely to cost more than £250 is referred to the responsible Minister before significant resources are committed.

Access to Information

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Prime Minister if she has plans to change the current public right of access to official information; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. The policy remains to make as much information available as possible while preserving the confidentiality essential to the effective working of the Government. I continue to think that a statutory general public right of access to official information is inappropriate for our system of Government.

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister whether she discussed the proposal compulsorily to repatriate Vietnamese boat people from Hong Kong at her recent meeting with President Bush; and if she will make a statement on her current policy on this issue.

The Prime Minister: The repatriation of Vietnamese boat people from Hong Kong was discussed with President Bush. I explained that all who arrive are screened. Those who are found to be genuine refugees will not be returned. Those who are not genuine refugees will be regarded as illegal immigrants and repatriated as provided for in the comprehensive plan of action agreed at the international conference on Indo-Chinese refugees last June in Geneva.

Correspondence

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister when she proposes to reply to the letter she has received from B. J. Allen of 72 Salters road, Gosforth, Newcastle upon Tyne.

The Prime Minister: I am unaware of any such correspondence having been received in my office.

Commonwealth Conference

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her visit to Kuala Lumpur for the Commonwealth conference in October, she discussed with any other political leaders the sale of United Kingdom designed fluidised-bed combined cycle coal-fired power plants to Commonwealth nations.

The Prime Minister: No.

Sir Leon Brittan

Q23. Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister when she last met Sir Leon Brittan, the European Economic Community Commissioner; and what subjects were discussed.

The Prime Minister: I last saw Sir Leon Brittan on 1 November. We discussed a range of issues.

Mr. Nelson Mandela

Q53. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has made to the President of the Republic of South Africa regarding the release of Mr. Nelson Mandela immediately and without conditions; and what reply she has received.

The Prime Minister: We have made frequent representations to the South African Government calling on them to release Mr. Mandela immediately and without conditions. We continue to look for a positive response from the South African Government.

National Health Service

Q94. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on proposals in the Gracious Speech relating to the National Health Service.

Q116. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on proposals in the Gracious Speech relating to the National Health Service.

Q189. Mr. Hind: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on the proposals in the Gracious Speech relating to the National Health Service.

The Prime Minister: The National Health Service Bill will implement the reforms that will ensure that the resources and talent devoted to the NHS are used to give patients an even better service and the widest possible choice.

The hospitals that give the best service to the greatest number of patients will receive more resources. General practitioners who believe that they can give better value to patients by holding their own budgets will be able to do so. Together with the improved GP services that we have introduced, the changes should mean that patients will be able to get operations more quickly, hospitals will have a reliable appointment system for outpatients, more children will be vaccinated against disease and there will be more regular check-ups on people's health. The Bill will also implement care which will enable growing numbers of elderly and disabled people to live at home and will direct more resources and assistance to the relatives and friends who help to look after them.

Dunchurch

Q117. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Dunchurch, near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

English History

Q150. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received on the teaching of English history.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations on the teaching of English history. The Government intend that under the national curriculum the teaching of history should have at its core the history of Britain.

Poland

Q178. Mrs. Currie: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Poland.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to visit Poland at present. I very much look forward to meeting Mr. Lech Walesa, chairman of Solidarity, on 2 December.

Strasbourg Summit

Q188. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what subjects she expects to be discussed at the European Community summit meeting in Strasbourg.

The Prime Minister: I expect discussion of a range of issues, including eastern Europe, the single market, economic and monetary union and the social charter.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 1 December 1989

DEFENCE

Laser-guided Bombs

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any information regarding the storage of (i) Paveway II and (ii) Paveway III laser-guided bombs in the United Kingdom by the United States Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I understand that the 48th tactical fighter wing at RAF Lakenheath is currently the only United States formation in the United Kingdom whose aircraft are equipped with laser-guided bombs. It is not our practice to release information concerning the storage of weapons at particular locations.

Air-portable Reinforcement

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to discuss with the United States Secretary for Defence the future deployment into the United Kingdom of United States Air Force air-superiority fighters and long-range air-lifters capable of sustaining an air-portable reinforcement policy, instead of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's current large-scale American ground forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

AWE Aldermaston

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Army unit was used recently to test the security systems at AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Neubert: None.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the calculation of the additional refuse collection charge for mixed hereditaments following the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The introduction of the community charge should have no effect on the calculation of the refuse collection charge for mixed hereditaments. Local authorities will continue to be able to recover a reasonable charge for dealing with such waste, making due allowance for its domestic content.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give estimates on the basis of assumptions on which his draft revenue support grant distribution report (England) is based of (a) the average long-run poll tax, (b) the average poll tax with safety nets and special grants and (c) the average rate bill per adult for 1989-90 plus 4 per cent. for each county and metropolitan area, and for each region, showing outer London, inner London and the rest of the south-east separately.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 28 November 1989]: The information requested has been placed in the Library. The figures are consistent with the exemplifications in the consultation paper which my right hon. Friend issued on 6 November.

Bottle Banks

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any guidelines have been issued to local authorities concerning the establishment of bottle banks.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 28 November 1989]: No formal guidelines have been issued to local authorities concerning the establishment of bottle banks. The Local Authority Recycling Advisory Committee has issued a guide to the provision of bottle banks, and the glass industry, through the main companies involved in glass recycling, and the British Glass Manufacturers' Association offers extensive advice to local authorities.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Loans

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the estimated cost of the loans scheme in the years 2000, 2005 and 2010.

Mr. Jackson: On the assumptions made in the White Paper "Top-up Loans for Students" Cm. 520, the estimated net cost of the scheme is some £13 million in 2000; in 2005 there is estimated to be a net saving of some £37 million rising to some £49 million in 2010. For the estimated cost of the scheme on different assumptions I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) on 2 November 1989 at columns 53-74..

Means-Tested Grants

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the estimated cost of abolishing means-tested grants and the paying of full grant to all students in full-time advanced education.

Mr. Jackson: The cost of abolishing means-testing under the existing mandatory awards system would be approximately £400 million in the current academic year. The cost of extending non-means tested maintenance grant to all full-time higher education students, other than postgraduates, would be of the order of a further £60 to 90 million per annum.

Southwark School, Nottingham

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has made to the letter from the head teacher of Southwark junior school, Old Basford, Nottingham.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend received a letter from Miss E. M. Howse, the head teacher of Southwark junior school, Old Basford on 16 November 1989. A reply will be sent shortly.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what figures he has for how many cases of suspected child abuse were reported by teachers in the years 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Such figures are not centrally available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Workshops

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prison workshops at each London prison that are working and the number of inmates employed in such workshops as at 20 November.

Mr. Mellor: A total of 413 inmates were employed on 20 November as follows:

Workshops	Inmates employed
Holloway
Textiles	12
Pentonville
Tailoring	43
Contract services	35
Wandsworth
Laundry	79
Heavy textiles	60
Brushmaking	30
Contract services	26
Tailoring	25
Textiles	22
Woodwork (joinery)	15
Wormwood Scrubs
Engineering (3 shops)	44
Tailoring	11
Central cutting unit	11

Prisoners (Security)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the governor of Wakefield prison as to why Mr. John Michael Dunn is being held in hospital in conditions of security less stringent than those applied to his imprisonment;

(2) if the implementation of fresh start has resulted in changed procedures or practice relating to the security arrangements for prisoners serving life sentences who are temporarily admitted to hospital;

(3) what guidance he issues to prison governors with regard to the security of prisoners serving life sentences who are temporarily admitted to hospital.

Mr. Waddington: In determining the precise arrangements to be made when a prisoner has to be taken out of prison in order to receive hospital treatment the governor acts within guidance which emphasises the need to have full regard to security requirements in the particular case. "Fresh Start" has not altered this requirement. I understand that in the case to which the hon. Member refers, the governor's decisions while the prisoner was in hospital were based entirely upon consideration of the needs of security and that he has explained the circumstances fully to the hon. Member.

Local Government Act 1966

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the present position of the Government with regard to section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966.

Mr. Waddington: I am presently considering the scrutiny report with a view to ensuring that section 11 grant meets more effectively the needs of the ethnic minorities. I hope to be in a position to announce the results of that consideration in the not too distant future.

TRANSPORT

Road Accidents

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road accidents involving under-age drivers occurred in the Bolton area during each of the past three years; and how many fatalities resulted from such accidents.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is given in the table.

Accidents involving under-age drivers
Bolton district council area
1986 to 1988

Year	Number of accidents	Number of fatalities
1986	28	0
1987	21	1
1988	26	0

Ormskirk Bypass

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will appoint consultants to recommend a route for the proposed Ormskirk bypass on the A59; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I expect to invite competitive bids from consultants for this scheme early next year; and to seek the public's views on possible routes within two years of appointing a consultant.

Hazardous Cargoes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions since May 1979 legislative changes have been introduced in arrangements for the road and rail transport of toxic and inflammable chemicals arising from reviews of the rules in place.

Mr. Atkins: Six for road transport. British Rail produces its own conditions of acceptance which are broadly in line with existing international provisions.

Driving Tests and Licences

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to change regulations governing driving tests and licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: There are a number of issues currently under consideration which will require changes to driver testing and licensing regulations. These are: the first EC directive on driver licensing which was the first stage bringing driver licensing and testing into line and introduced a Community driving licence; the second EC directive which will harmonise driver licensing and testing throughout the Community; and the White Paper "The Road User and the Law" (Cm. 576) which proposed compulsory re-testing of offenders. Copies of these documents, and consultation papers issued about them, have been placed in the Library.

We are about to consult on the detailed regulations needed to meet our obligations under the first directive, and to pave the way for the introduction of the more acceptable provisions in the second directive which is still to be negotiated.

We are also about to consult on the detailed proposals for the introduction of compulsory training for all new riders of motorcycles and mopeds under the Road Traffic (Driver Licensing and Information Systems) Act 1989. This will replace part I of the current two-part motorcycle test.

Buses (Deregulation)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what effect the deregulation has had on the levels of bus patronage.

Mr. Portillo: Between 1985-86 and 1988-89, there was a 10 per cent. fall in the number of passengers carried on local bus services outside London, in line with the long-term historic decline. However, real costs per vehicle mile fell by 30 per cent. over the same period, enabling operators to increase mileage by 18 per cent., reversing the long-term trend of declining service levels.

Road Freight

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to reduce the amount of freight carried by road.

Mr. Atkins: The volume of freight carried by road is a reflection of the lorry's flexibility in terms of goods carried, destinations reached and the timing and planning of journeys. It is for Government to ensure that fair conditions for competition exist between the different modes of transport; but customers must then be free to choose for themselves. Where the transfer of goods from road to rail or inland waterway is shown to provide clear and worthwhile environmental benefits, grants may be paid.

Road Lighting

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many lives have been lost in accidents on unlit stretches of motorway in the last 10 years.

Mr. Atkins: During the last 10 years, a total of 634 people died as a result of road accidents on unlit sections of motorway during the hours of darkness.

In greater detail, the requested information is as follows:

Number of fatalities on unlit sections of motorway

Year	Unlit		Lighting present but unlit during hours of darkness	All other conditions	Total
	Daytime	Darkness
1979	71	60	0	70	201
1980	83	56	1	66	206
1981	100	67	1	55	223
1982	61	62	0	83	206
1983	81	54	0	52	187
1984	72	61	0	78	211
1985	90	70	0	81	241
1986	86	82	1	79	248
1987	122	63	1	97	283
1988	97	59	1	84	241

M25 (Service Stations)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motorway service stations there are on the M25 (a) north of the Thames and (b) south of the Thames; and when he expects more such service stations to be in operation.

Mr. Atkins: There is currently one motorway service area operational on the M25; this is north of the Thames at South Mimms. Three others are proposed. One is under construction at Thurrock just north of the Dartford crossing. It is hoped that it will begin operating next year. Our proposals for services at Clacket lane near Westerham, Kent are well advanced but await the outcome of legal proceedings by one of the landowners affected by the scheme.

I recently announced a new search for a suitable site in the western quadrant of the M25; our original proposals for a service area at Iver have been dropped as they were not compatible with proposed widening of the motorway. I will make a further announcement about this in due course.

Learner Drivers

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many serious injuries or deaths are believed to have resulted in the last 10 years from accidents involving learner drivers under supervision of licence holders with less than 12 months' experience.

Mr. Atkins: The information is not available.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the present regulations governing the supervision of learner drivers; and what are the regulations operating in other member states of the European Community.

Mr. Atkins: The present regulations require supervision by a driver who holds a full licence. A number of member states of the European Community allow only professional instruction. In others, there are varying requirements as to the age and experience of the supervisor.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to review the law governing the supervision of learner drivers.

Mr. Atkins: I am reviewing urgently whether there is a case for making changes in the law governing the supervision of learner drivers.

Oil (Discharges from Ships)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many prosecutions his Department brought for illegal discharges of oil from ships in United Kingdom waters between 1978 and 1988.

Mr. McLoughlin: Figures prior to 1983 are not readily available. Since 1983 no prosecutions have been brought by the Department which until April 1988 had to rely soley on reports by passing ships and aircraft. Because these proved to be insufficient to link slicks positively to particular ships, limited regular air surveillance patrols of United Kingdom waters by a specialist oil detecting aircraft of the Department's marine pollution control unit were then instituted on a trial basis. The development of the conduct of these patrols continues but it is too early to say whether they will lead either to ships being detected in the act of illegal discharge at sea or to successful prosecutions. Evidence of alleged offences in United Kingdom waters by passing non-United Kingdom ships has to be passed to the flag state of the vessel concerned. They cannot be prosecuted by Her Majesty's Government.

Salvage

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many salvage agreements were entered into for the salvage of Government-owned wrecks and cargoes for the last 10 years for which information is available; and what were the names of the wrecks and cargoes covered by these agreements;

(2) how many successful salvage operations were carried out on Government-owned wrecks and cargoes in the last 10 years for which information is available; what were the names of the wrecks and cargoes on which these operations were carried out; and what were the sums accruing to the Government as a result.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 30 November 1989]: Information on the total numbers of salvage agreements entered into in the last 10 years is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Those that resulted in successful operations are as follows. The total sum accruing to the Government from these wrecks is £5,884,880.

Vessels
HMS Edinburgh
SS Glenartney
SS Shirala
SS Camberwell
SS St. Cecilia
SS Ballarat
SS Emaeus
SS Fantee
SS Tarquah
SS Karina
SS Pegu
SS Oronsa
SS Manipur
SS Sheenandoah
SS Kyma
SS Somali
SS Aldershot
SS Colorado
SS Riverdale
SS Alice Marie

PRIME MINISTER

Downing Street Offices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what is her estimate of (a) total costs, and (b) numbers employed in (i) the Prime Minister's Department, (ii) the Prime Minister's press office, (iii) remainder of 10 Downing street establishments in the latest available year and the increase in each since 1979.

The Prime Minister: The total cost of maintaining and running my office in 1988-89 was £6,533,712. However, since 1979 there have been several developments which have affected the way in which the costs are assessed, including:

introduction of charging for aircraft by the Ministry of Defence in 1981-82;
abolition of the CPRS in 1983, and the absorption of some of its staff within the No. 10 policy unit;
introduction of charging for buildings and services by the PSA in 1983-84;
introduction for charging of service personnel at Chequers by the MoD in 1984-85;
changes in the allocation of charges for the Government car service in 1984-85; inclusion of costs of office services from 1986-87;
inclusion of the cost of redecoration of certain State Rooms and of major and security works in 1988-89.

When the effects of these developments are excluded (as far as it is possible to do so) and the result expressed in constant price terms, the cost has decreased by some 4 per cent. between 1979-80 and 1988-89.

The costs of my press office were not recorded separately before 1987-88; in 1988-89 these amounted to £419,326, an increase in constant price terms of 3·4 per cent. over the previous year.

The total number of staff in my office at present is 68, including eight in the press office, compared with 71 in 1979.

Rail Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions she has travelled officially on a British Rail train within the past 12 months.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the Official Report, 27 November 1989, column 92.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Prime Minister what is the average cost of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral parliamentary question.

The Prime Minister [holding reply 30 November 1989]: As many questions have to be transferred, we do not calculate these items specifically here. As a guide, I refer the hon. Member to the Official Report, 14 November 1989, column 172, which sets out average figures for all Government Departments.

HEALTH

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the number of babies born live after undergoing a prostaglandin abortion after 18 weeks.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of food poisoning in the period for which most recent figures are available were caused by fresh cream or egg products.

Mr. Freeman: In the first three quarters of 1989, 32 outbreaks of food poisoning, comprising 426 known cases, associated with eating egg or egg products were reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre by laboratories and local authorities in England and Wales. Thirty of these were due to salmonella infection. No outbreaks associated with eating cream were recorded.

In 1988, 39 outbreaks of food poisoning, comprising 741 known cases, associated with eating egg or egg products were recorded by CDSC. Thirty-five of these were due to salmonella infection. Five outbreaks in the same period comprising 73 known cases, were associated with eating cream, including at least one outbreak associated with eating pasteurised cream. Three of these were due to salmonella infection.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what percentage of pay was overtime in the National Health Service for nurses and midwives in 1960, 1970, 1979, 1983, 1985 and 1989 or the latest date possible;

(2) what was the amount paid to nurses and midwives, as a total and as an average salary for 1960, 1970, 1979, 1984 and 1989 or the latest date possible; and what was the average working week in hours for nurses and midwives, for those years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Such information as is available for nursing and midwifery staff (including unqualified staff) in Great Britain is given in the tables. Pay has increased by some 43 per cent. on average since 1979 and is now at one of its highest-ever levels in real terms. The standard working week (excluding meal times) has been reduced from 44 hours to 42 in 1966, to 40 in 1972, and 37·5 in 1980-81.

Table A

	Gross Paybill[1] £ million	Overtime as percentage of Paybill Percentage
1983-84	3,045·0	0·7
1984-85	3,281·0	0·9
1985-86	3,513·2	1·0
1988-89	5,100·7	1·5

[1] Excluding London additions and Employers' costs. Information is not available for earlier years.
Source: Department of Health.

Table B

	Average gross weekly earnings: full-time staff (£)[1]	Average weekly hours: full-time staff
April 1970	19·0	n/a
April 1979	67·8	n/a
April 1984	123·6	37·6
April 1989	222·0	37·9

[1] Earnings are for employees on adult rates of pay whose pay was not affected by absence. 1970 and 1979 adult rates on the basis of males aged 21 and over and females aged 18 and over; 1984 and 1989 based on all ages on adult rates.
Equivalent data for 1960 is not available.
Source: DE: New Earnings Survey.

Home Treatment

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been undertaken on the treatment of medical disorders in a patient's home as an alternative to hospital; what reduction in costs such treatment would result in for the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The "Hospital at Home" scheme managed by Peterborough health authority has been the subject of independent studies published by the King's fund and the Medical Care Research Unit at the University of Sheffield. The Peterborough initiative does not appear to have resulted in significant cost saving.

1991 Census

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the census return form he intends to use for the 1991 census.

Mr. Freeman: Facsimiles of the 1991 census forms will be included in the Census Regulations to be laid before Parliament when the Census Order has been made. Copies of "Census Newsletter No. 11", which shows how the proposed questions would look on the census forms, have been placed in the Library and will be made available from the Vote Office before the Census Order is debated.

National Health Service Managers

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many general managers at district health authorities are (a) men and (b) women;

(2) how many general managers at regional health authorities are (a) men and (b) women.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Of the 190 district health authorities in England, 180 are managed by men and 10 by women.

Of the 14 regional health authorities in England, 13 are managed by men and one by a woman.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Ministers' Pay

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement about Ministers' pay.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The salaries of Members of Parliament will increase by £2,594 from 1 January 1990 in accordance with the terms of the resolution of 21 July 1987. In the light of this the Government propose that ministerial salaries should be increased by the same cash amount, which will mean an increase in the ministerial pay bill of 6·5 per cent. The details are set out in the following table and I have today laid the draft Ministerial and Other Salaries Order 1989 to implement these changes.

Ministers and other paid office holders

	Current official salary (£)	January 1990 official salary (£)	Percentage increase	Current total salary[2] (£)	Total January 1990 salary[3] (£)	Percentage increase
Prime Minister[1]	46,109	46,750	1·39	64,257	66,851	4·04
Cabinet Minister (C)	34,479	35,120	1·86	52,627	55,221	4·93
Cabinet Minister (L)	41,997	44,591	6·18	—	—	—
Minister of State (C)	24,209	24,850	2·65	42,357	44,951	6·12
Minister of State (L)	37,047	39,641	7·00	—	—	—
Parliamentary Secretary (C)	18,219	18,860	3·52	36,367	38,961	7·13
Parliamentary Secretary (L)	30,647	33,241	8·46	—	—	—
Attorney-General	36,679	37,320	1·75	54,827	57,421	4·73
Solicitor-General	29,959	30,600	2·14	48,107	50,701	5·39
Lord Advocate	42,067	44,661	6·17	—	—	—
Solicitor-General for Scotland	36,515	39,109	7·10	—	—	—
House of Commons
Mr. Speaker[1]	36,209	36,850	1·77	54,357	56,951	4·77
Leader of the Opposition	31,559	32,200	2·03	49,707	52,301	5·22
Chief Whip	28,589	29,230	2·24	46,737	49,331	5·55
Deputy Chief Whip	24,209	24,850	2·65	42,357	44,951	6·12
Opposition Chief Whip	24,209	24,850	2·65	42,357	44,951	6·12
Government Whips + Assistant Government Whips	15,349	15,990	4·18	33,497	36,091	7·74
Assistant Opposition Whip	15,349	15,990	4·18	33,497	36,091	7·74
Chairman of Ways and Means	24,209	24,850	2·65	42,357	44,951	6·12
Deputy Chairman of Ways and Means	21,199	21,840	3·02	39,347	41,941	6·59
House of Lords
Chief Whip	37,047	39,641	7·00	—	—	—
Deputy Chief Whip	30,647	33,241	8·46	—	—	—
Government Whips	27,377	29,971	9·48	—	—	—
Opposition Leader	30,647	33,241	8·46	—	—	—
Opposition Chief Whip	27,377	29,971	9·48	—	—	—
Chairman of Committees	37,047	39,641	7·00	—	—	—
Principal Deputy Chairman of Committees	33,537	36,131	7·73	—	—	—
Members of Parliament	24,107	26,701	10·76	—	—	—

[1] The Prime Minister and Mr. Speaker have elected to receive the same salary as a Cabinet Minister in the House of Commons.
[2] Including reduced Parliamentary Salary of £18,148.
[3] Including reduced Parliamentary Salary of £20,101.

Note:
The Lord Chancellor's salary is governed by the Lord Chancellor's Salary Order 1988 and is not affected by this Order. (He receives £91,500 effective from 18 April 1989).

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the current workload of the serious fraud office.

The Attorney-General: The present caseload of the serious fraud office includes 16 cases where proceedings have been commenced and a further 50 cases are under investigation. Since 1 April 1989 there have been eight trials involving 14 defendants of whom 10 have been convicted on one or more counts. A further seven cases stand listed for trial during the second half of this current year.

In tackling this substantial caseload the serious fraud office continues to develop its working practices by means of an extensive training programme, with the emphasis on the introduction of information technology as an aid to investigation and the presentation of evidence. A high priority is afforded to the development of working relationships with other law enforcement agencies and prosecuting authorities both at home and abroad.

Magistrates (Removal)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General how many magistrates have been removed from the Bench for each year since 1980 for (a) being convicted of a criminal offence and (b) any other reason.

The Attorney-General: Figures are available from 1984 onwards. Before that time the cost of ascertaining the information required would be excessive.

Justices removed by Lord Chancellor

	On conviction	For other reasons
1984	2	11
1985	2	4
1986	2	5
1987	0	4
1988	2	4
1989[1]	3	4

[1] To date.

Water Pollution

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Director of Public Prosecutions has taken over the private case in respect of water pollution at Camelford; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Yes. The proceedings in question were instituted (on behalf of the Bodmin Angling Association) at a time when police inquiries requested by the Director of Public Prosecutions were still in progress.

On 14 October 1989 the Director of Public Prosecutions instituted criminal proceedings for public nuisance and consequently there were in being two separate criminal cases with two different prosecutors but against the same defendant and arising out of the same circumstances. The interests of justice required that the proceedings be amalgamated, and the director used his statutory power accordingly.

Criminal Cases

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General what was the total number of criminal cases heard in (a) magistrates courts, (b) Crown courts and (c) higher courts in 1988.

The Attorney-General: During 1988 the number of defendants proceeded against in magistrates courts was 1,863,000. In the Crown court 104,773 trials, 12,695 cases for sentence and 15,849 appeals from magistrates courts were disposed of. The Court of Appeal Criminal Division dealt with 8,001 applications and appeals.

ENERGY

Energy Policy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his energy policy.

Mr. Wakeham: The Government seek to ensure that the United Kingdom has adequate, diverse and secure supplies of energy in the forms that people want at the lowest realistic prices. They aim to achieve this wherever possible by ensuring that energy prices reflect their true economic costs and by subjecting as much of energy supply as is practicable to the operation of market forces, bearing in mind the state's strategic responsibilities for health and safety, the protection of the environment and the elimination of energy waste.

Gas Flare-off

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the output of gas being flared off by the energy industry for the last year for which he has figures.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department has responsibility for controlling and monitoring gas flared from producing oilfields in the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Details of the amounts of gas flared are published in my Department's annual report to Parliament (the Brown Book).

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to introduce legislation to encourage energy efficiency.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 22 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam), at column 8.

Gas Imports

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consideration he has given to the likely effect on gas imports of further gas-fired generating capacity.

Mr. Wakeham: I welcome the numerous proposals for gas-fired generating capacity which are now being pursued. Known reserves of UKCS gas are, on present assessment, fully capable of meeting competitively the needs of the United Kingdom gas market, including the power generation sector, for the foreseeable future. I look forward to seeing UKCS producers take up the full range of opportunities open to them within an increasingly competitive gas market.

Selby Coalfield

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the capital investment in the Selby coalfield; and if he will outline the amount of capital invested over the years, giving each year separately;

(2) what is the total capital cost for the provision of waste disposal from the Selby coalfield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These are matters for the British Coal Corporation, and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the original estimate of the amount of waste to be produced from the Selby coalfield; what is the total amount of waste up to 31 March; what is the estimated waste to be disposed of in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The production of waste from the Selby coalfield is the responsibility of British Coal and I am asking the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

WALES

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he has received from the Nature Conservancy Council concerning the proposed Cardiff bay barrage.

Mr. Peter Walker: The proposal for a Cardiff bay barrage is primarily for the promoters, Cardiff Bay development corporation and South Glamorgan county council, to which the Nature Conservancy Council has made representations. The council has exercised its right to make its views known direct to Parliament by petitioning against the Bill, and these views will be considered in detail at the Select Committee stage. If Parliament approves the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill the Nature Conservancy Council has confirmed that it will work with the promoters to diminish any detriment to bird life and to develop and conserve flora and fauna in the inland bay and provisions to this end have been included in the Bill.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money was raised in prescription charges in Wales in each year from 1970-80 to 1987-88; and into what fund these receipts are paid.

Mr. Grist: Prescription charges, including receipts from the sale of pre-payment certificates, in the family practitioner service in Wales amounted to:

Year	£ million
1979-80	2·9
1980-81	5·0
1981-82	5·8
1982-83	6·4
1983-84	6·8
1984-85	7·2
1985-86	8·0
1986-87	8·5
1987-88	9·5

The prescription charges collected in the family practitioner service in Wales are credited to class XVII, vote 7.

Sheepmeat Regime

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had from the National Farmers Union in Wales regarding the proposed sheepmeat regime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I received numerous representations from the National Farmers Union in Wales during negotiations on the reform of the sheepmeat regime.

Tenby

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all schemes, together with their cost, suported by the Welsh Office and the Welsh Development Agency in Tenby in each of the past three financial years.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 24 November 1989]: The schemes are shown in the following tables:

1. Regional Assistance

	Value of offers £	Related project cost £
1986-87	100,000	248,000
1987-88	111,000	492,000
198-89	129,000	348,000

Regional assistance includes offers, where made, of regional selective assistance, regional development grant (the revised scheme) and regional enterprise grant.

2. Grants

	Total cost £	Welsh Office grant £
1986-87
Nil	Nil	Nil
1987-88
Paragon and Sluice (Coast protection scheme)	54,824	74,400
1988-89
Housing Enveloping	866,000	866,000

3. Welsh Development Agency

(a) Rural Conversion Grant

	Total cost £	Grant awarded £
1986-87
Nil	Nil	Nil
1987-88
Slate Mill, Saundersfoot	10,260	4,217
Tindle Enterprise, Tenby	34,600	12,246
Fortified Rectory, Tenby	62,649	21,927
1988-89
Tenby Market Hall	100,000	50,000
Tindle Enterprise, Tenby	9,522	3,332
East Tarr Riding Centre, Tenby	12,654	4,428

(b) Investments

Financial year and name of company	Amounts £
1986-87
Harmnston Software Ltd.	7,000
1987-88
Penally Abbey Hotel	34,000
Grayline Reprographics	7,000
Harmnston Software Ltd.	20,000
1988-89
Dutybrook Ltd.	15,000
Murphy and Stenson	100,000
Silent World Aquarium	20,000

(c) Environmental Schemes (MSC Community Programme)

	Total Cost £	Grant £
Tenby Environmental Scheme park benches, renovation of sailing club building and other work at St. Florence and Penally)	93000	8,000

4. Wales Tourist Board Assisted Projects

	Total Cost	Grant/Loan
	1986-87
Lyndale Guest House	4,471	1,000
Myrtle Grove Guest House	558	1,160
1987-88
Faircroft Hotel	86,841	15,000
Croyland Hotel	5,041	1,250
Panorama Hotel	5,649	1,250
1988-89
Dragon Driving Services	8,881	2,000
Penally Abbey Hotel	80,440	16,745
Hallsville Hotel	7,164	1,706

Railways

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the total amount of public service obligation grant paid in 1988 to British Rail spent on the railway network in Wales; and what percentage this is of the total grant paid to British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

Public service obligation grant is paid to British Rail as a total sum for the operation of passenger services which are not commercial. It is not allocated by the Government to particular areas of Great Britain.

Trawsgoed Laboratories

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of the Trawsgoed laboratories.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply. My right hon. Friend, the then Minister, told the House on 21 March 1989 that the MAFF laboratories at Trawsgoed would be reduced in size and that alternative uses for the Trawsgoed analytical chemistry laboratory were being sought. Discussions with interested parties are continuing.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Deaf People

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to release sufficient funds to enable the National Subtitling Library for Deaf People to maximise the benefit of recording, subtitling and distributing broadcast material for the deaf.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if Her Majesty's Government will provide funds to the National Subtitling Library for Deaf People; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 29 November 1989]: The Department of Health may award grants to voluntary organisations in the health and social services field under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968. All applications for Section 64 grants are considered very carefully and awards are made to those which meet the relevant criteria, subject to the funding available in a particular year. It is open to the National Subtitling Library for Deaf People to apply for a grant under these arrangements.

Homelessness

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what statistics are held by his Department on the numbers of homeless who are in receipt of benefit other than income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information is not available.

Single Parents

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single parents claiming benefit he estimates will benefit financially from the increase in earnings disregard from £15 to £25; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We estimate that around 50,000 lone parents on housing benefit and/or community charge benefit will gain financially from the increase in the earnings disregard from October 1990. In addition we estimate that a further 15,000 lone parents will float on to benefit as a result of the increase. This will provide particular help to lone parents who are working and not receiving income support.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has anything to add to his reply of 27 November to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) Official Report, column 428, concerning the date when invalid care allowance was introduced.

Mr. Scott: Invalid care allowance was introduced on 5 July 1976.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Lorrain Osman and Dato Hashim Shamsuddin

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will place in the Library all communications between the then Governor of Hong Kong, the late Sir Edward Youde, and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office which occurred between 30 November 1985 and 1 June 1987 on the subject of the request, from the then Governor of Hong Kong, to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for the extradition of Lorrain Osman and Dato Hashim Shamsuddin;

(2) if he will place in the Library all communications between the then High Commissioner in Malaysia, Mr. D. H. Gilmore CMG, and his Department which occurred between 30 November 1985 and 1 June 1987 on the subject of the request, from the then Governor of Hong Kong, the late Sir Edward Youde, to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for the extradition of Lorrain Osman and Dato Hashim Shamsuddin;

(3) if he will obtain and place in the Library copies of all communications between the then High Commissioner in Malaysia, Mr. D. H. Gilmore CMG, and the then Governor of Hong Kong, the late Sir Edward Youde, which occurred between 30 November 1985 and 1 June 1987 on the subject of the request, from the Governor of Hong Kong, the late Sir Edward Youde, to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for the extradition of Lorrain Osman and Dato Hashim Shamsuddin.

Mr. Maude: No. This matter is currently sub judice.

Refugees, Middle East

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the level of aid at present being directed to refugee camps in the Gaza strip and the Israeli-occupied territories of the West Bank.

Mr. Waldegrave: British assistance for refugees in the Gaza Strip and the occupied territories is channelled through the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA). Details of British and other donors' contributions to UNRWA were provided in the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 30 November at column 417.

Science and Peace

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the position taken by the Government in their vote with the consensus on United Nation General Assembly resolution 43/61 in December 1988 remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our agreement to join consensus adoption of UN General Assembly resolution 43/61 reflects our support for its broad aims, rather than a detailed expression of our policy.

Diplomatic Baggage

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any recent reviews have been undertaken by his Department as to the procedures relating to security clearance of diplomatic baggage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: In consultation with the Department of Transport, we recently reviewed security measures at United Kingdom airports. As a result, all diplomats going airside are now liable to be asked to submit to search. This includes their baggage. Diplomatic bags are not subject to search of any kind.

South Korea

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he raised the issue of human rights in South Korea during his meeting with President Roh Tae Woo.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, in her talks with President Roh on 28 November, encouraged him to continue to make progress with domestic political reform.

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each region the earnings of the highest decile for full-time male manual and non-manual workers in April 1989, together with the percentage increase since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: Information for the years in question is published in part E table 116 of the 1979 and 1989 "New Earnings Survey" reports. Copies of the reports are in the Library.

Labour Statistics

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement about trends in the level of unemployment in Hendon, South during the past six years.

Mr. Nicholls: In October 1989 there were 1,354 unemployed claimants in the parliamentary constituency of Hendon, South. This compares with 2,723 in October 1983, a fall of 1,369 or 50·3 per cent. over six years. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment count in March 1986 to reduce over-recording and by the change in benefit regulations affecting under 18-year-olds in September 1988.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the average unemployment figures for Cleveland for 1988; and what were the average unemployment figures for 1978.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1988 the average monthly number of claimants unemployed in Cleveland was 3,367 compared with the number of registrants which was 4,461 in 1978. The figures are affected by changes in the coverage of the unemployment count.

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the United Kingdom work force, split between men and women, is in employment; and what is the average for the European Community.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1987, the latest date for which comparable information for all European Community countries is available, 87 per cent. of men and 97 per cent. of women in the work force were in employment. This compares with 90 per cent. of men and 87 per cent. of women in the European Community as a whole.

Factory Inspections

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the average number of years between visits by factory inspectors to manufacturing premises in Yorkshire and Humberside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: An average figure would not be meaningful, given the differing purposes for which visits are made, and the wide variety of manufacturing premises. The information is not therefore collected as part of the Health and Safety Executive's monitoring systems.

Factory and Agriculture Inspectors

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factory and agriculture inspectors were in post on the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 November 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, 631 factory inspectors and 170 agricultural inspectors were in post in the Health and Safety Executive.

Working Mothers

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the proportion of mothers with children aged between two years and five years old who work in (a) part-time and (b) full-time work for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: Among women in Great Britain whose youngest dependent child was aged at least two years but under 11 it is estimated, using information from the "Labour Force Survey," that in spring 1988 just over 31 per cent. were in part-time employment and about 12 per cent. were in full-time employment.

Adult Education

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of mothers with children aged five years old to 11 years old is in (a) part-time and (b) full-time education for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: Among women in Great Britain whose youngest dependent child was aged at least five years but under 11 it is estimated, using information from the "Labour Force Survey," that in spring 1988 about 3½ per cent. were undertaking part-time education and just over 1 per cent. were undertaking full-time education.

Official Secrets Act

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what declaration as to their continuing obligations under the Official Secrets Act will have to be signed by the present staff of the Training Agency in the event of that being transferred to the private sector.

Mr. Eggar: All civil servants leaving Government employment are reminded that they remain subject to the provisions of the Official Secrets Act and are asked to sign a declaration to this effect.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what declaration as to their continuing obligations under the Official Secrets Act was signed by those civil servants, formerly employed by his Department, who have transferred, along with functions, to the private sector; what monitoring procedures exist to see that the provisions of that declaration are maintained; and whether those who have transferred are permitted to use the records originally compiled under the rules of confidentiality relating to information held by the Civil Service.

Mr. Eggar: All employees of the Department are required to sign a declaration that they will not disclose official secrets both when they join and on leaving. The declaration summarises the provisions of the Official Secrets Act 1911 as amended by the Official Secrets Act 1920. These provisions apply both during their appointment to a Government Department and after that appointment has ceased.

Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) prosecutions and (b) warnings of possible prosecutions there have been since 1979 of firms failing to comply with legislation on the employment of disabled people.

Mr. Eggar: There have been no prosecutions under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 since 1979. Information relating to warnings of possible prosecutions is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many area managers in the employment service have had experience of working in areas of the service concerned with the employment of disabled people; and what proportion this is of the total.

Mr. Eggar: All area managers in the employment service, a total of 71, have a direct line management responsibility for managing the day-to-day operations of an area office-based disablement advisory service team. As such, they are required to be fully acquainted with all the employment service disablement operations and programmes.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disablement resettlement officers there are in the employment service; and what has been the percentage change since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: In April 1989, 488 members of staff in the employment service were undertaking disablement resettlement officer duties, of whom 333 were doing so full-time. I regret that comparable figures are not available for previous years.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many technical officers work in the employment service giving advice to disablement resettlement officers; and what has been the percentage change since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: In 1979, there were 13 technical officers working in the employment service giving advice to disablement resettlement officers. There is currently a cadre of 17 (an increase of 31 per cent.).

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to raise the status of work for disabled people in the employment service and to give it greater priority.

Mr. Eggar: People with disabilities are already one of the main priority groups for assistance from the Employment Department. A comprehensive network of services is available to help people with disabilities find and retain jobs through advice, assessment, rehabilitation and training; and in the case of people with severe disabilities, support in the form of sheltered employment.

My Department is currently reviewing the full range of services for people with disabilities, and a consultative document covering the conclusions of the review will be published as soon as possible.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that applicants for senior positions in employment service are required to have had some experience of working in areas concerned with the employment of disabled people.

Mr. Eggar: It is not always possible or indeed appropriate to fill all senior positions in the employment service with applicants who have had experience of working with some aspect of disablement services. Many in-service applicants from the employment service field network, or disablement specialists from employment service head office, will have had past experience; it is very unlikely that this would be the case for external candidates.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what central guidance is given regarding the issuing of permits which allow firms to take on able-bodied workers when they are not filling their quota of disabled workers.

Mr. Eggar: Instructions issued to disablement resettlement officers require them to consider the availability of suitable registered disabled people, and the degree of commitment shown by employers towards meeting their obligations under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the annual turnover of disablement resettlement officers.

Mr. Eggar: Details on the annual turnover of disablement resettlement officers are not readily available.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the policy of his Department regarding prosecution of firms who do not comply with legislation on the employment of disabled people.

Mr. Eggar: The policy of this Department, as it has been of successive Governments since the Act was first established, is:

(i) to bring prosecutions only as a last resort; and
(ii) to pursue a policy of education and persuasion designed to secure and improve the policies and practices of all employers in relation to the employment of people with disabilities.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the policy of his Department regarding taking action against firms which do not complete forms related to the employment of disabled people.

Mr. Eggar: Two forms are used to seek information from employers in relation to the quota scheme for employment of people with disabilities. These are (1) DP39—the application form for a permit to recruit a person or people who do not have disabilities and (2) DP74—used for the annual inquiry to employers to establish the numbers of registered disabled people employed. In neither case is there a statutory requirement for employers to complete the forms. Applications for permits are made only by those employers who are expecting to recruit in the near future. If a form is not completed it is assumed that employers have no plans to recruit workers. If the DP74 is not returned staff are instructed to send a reminder and, if there is still no response, to visit the employer.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of jobcentres are without a disablement resettlement officer.

Mr. Eggar: All jobcentres can provide access to disablement resettlement officers (DROs), either at the jobcentre at which the DRO is based, or by arranging a visit by a peripatetic DRO to the individual's local jobcentre, or, where appropriate, by a DRO visit to the individual's home.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of relevant companies completed the returns relating to disability in the last period for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Employment Service

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place a copy of the review of the organisation and staffing of the employment service, report No. 466, in the Library.

Mr. Eggar: The document is a report of an internal review and is not appropriate for deposit in the Library.

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has reached a decision on the future structure of the employment service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: When the Prime Minister announced the Government's "Next Steps" initiative on 18 February 1988 at column 1149, the employment service was included in the first list of candidates for agency status. It is my intention that the employment service should be launched as an executive agency in April 1990.

My decision to launch the employment service as an executive agency will improve significantly its ability to help unemployed people back to work and to administer payment of unemployment benefits. As an agency the employment service will be set clear and challenging targets. It will also be given greater freedom to manage its operations effectively.

In considering how best the employment service can achieve its objectives as an agency I have decided that a new network of offices, bringing together the full range of employment service activities under one roof wherever possible, is the best way for the employment service to deliver its services as an agency. This development will represent a significant improvement on the present system where most people have to visit both a benefit office and a jobcentre as part of claiming benefit and looking for work.

Where appropriate the employment service will remodel existing offices but in other cases it will open new premises. These offices will be named "Employment Service" and will replace jobcentres and benefit offices.

The employment service will now establish a national network of some 1,100 to 1,200 employment service offices. The process will take a number of years, but the aim is to have the bulk of the network of integrated offices in place by 1992.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tax Evasion and Fraud

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many officers were involved in tax evasion and fraud investigation work at the latest date for which figures are available; what the total estimated cost in respect of such investigation amounts to; and what are the total actual amounts of tax evasion and fraud.

Mr. Lilley: In the year to 31 March 1989, some 2,800 Inland Revenue staff working on tax evasion and fraud investigation recovered £577 million at a cost of £73 million.

Computers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether computers are classified as consumer or capital goods in the CSO press release on monthly trade figures; what contribution they made to the volume of imports and exports in the current year; and what were the figures for 1985.

Mr. Lilley: Computers are classified as capital goods in the analysis of finished manufactures by broad economic category in the monthly trade figures press release. The table gives the information requested in value terms; indices of volume are not available at this level of disaggregation.

Trade in computers[1] as a percentage of total trade

	1985	1989[2]
Exports	1·8	4·1
Imports	3·1	3·4

[1] Defined as SITC 752.
[2] January to September.

Incomes

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the part that increases in income of employees has played in the increase in the rate of inflation since 1987; whether he will publish in the Official Report a list of the micro-sectors that have been mainly responsible for income-push inflation; what measures he has taken to ensure that employers in these sectors take the lead in holding incomes down; what success he expects those measures to have in 1990; and what impact he expects them to have on the rest of the economy.

Mr. Ryder: The Government are maintaining a tight monetary stance, backed up by a sound fiscal position, to bear down on inflationary pressures. The Autumn Statement forecast expects inflation to fall to 5¾ per cent. by the fourth quarter of 1990.

Taxes and Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give up-to-date figures on the same bases in his reply to the hon. Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 10 January, Official Report, columns 633-56, including indirect taxation and including data for 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley: [holding answer 24 November 1989]: Figures for 1978-79 to 1988-89 were placed in the Library of the House earlier this year, as noted in the Official Report, 13 April 1989, column 624. Revised estimates for 1988-89, and estimates for 1989-90 are set out in the tables.

Income tax, NICS and indirect tax payments at multiples of average earnings, 1988-89

Multiples of Average Earnings

	0·5	0·75	1	1·5	2	3	4	5	7	10	20
Single
Amounts, £ per week
Income Tax	19·51	35·53	51·55	83·59	129·33	231·85	334·37	436·89	641·93	949·49	1,974·69
NICS	11·53	17·30	23·07	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45
VAT	—	9·52	12·82	19·98	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	15·15	18·96	27·22	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	7·68	9·35	12·99	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	31·04	85·18	115·75	171·23	156·78	259·3	361·82	464·34	669·38	976·94	2,002·14
Percentage of earnings
Income Tax	15·2	18·5	20·1	21·7	25·2	30·2	32·6	34·1	35·8	37·0	38·5
NICS	9·0	9·0	9·0	7·1	5·4	3·6	2·7	2·1	1·5	1·1	0·5
VAT	—	5·0	5·0	5·2	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	7·9	7·4	7·1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	4·0	3·6	3·4	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	24·2	44·4	45·1	44·6	30·6	33·7	35·3	36·2	37·3	38·1	39·1
Married, no children
Amounts, £ per week
Income Tax	12·35	28·37	44·39	76·43	117·87	220·39	322·91	425·43	630·47	938·03	1,963·23
NICS	11·53	17·30	23·07	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45
VAT	—	8·73	12·32	20·12	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	16·82	20·63	28·89	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	7·52	8·73	11·37	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	23·88	78·74	109·14	164·26	145·32	247·84	350·36	452·88	657·92	965·48	1,990·68
Percentage of earnings
Income Tax	9·6	14·8	17·3	19·9	23·0	28·7	31·5	33·2	35·1	36·6	38·3
NICS	9·0	9·0	9·0	7·1	5·4	3·6	2·7	2·1	1·5	1·1	0·5
VAT	—	4·5	4·8	5·2	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	8·8	8·1	7·5	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	3·9	3·4	3·0	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	18·6	41·0	42·6	42·7	28·3	32·2	34·2	35·3	36·7	37·7	38·8
Married, both working
Amounts, £ per week
Income Tax	0	15·84	31·86	63·90	97·83	173·19	260·33	361·18	566·22	873·78	1,898·98
NICS	7·95	15·76	21·02	34·60	45·90	54·90	54·90	54·90	54·90	54·90	54·90
VAT	—	9·87	13·82	21·42	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	19·54	22·99	29·65	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	9·29	9·92	11·14	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	7·95	70·30	99·61	160·71	143·73	228·09	315·23	416·08	621·12	928·68	1,953·88
Percentage of earnings

	0·5	0·75	1	1·5	2	3	4	5	7	10	20
Income Tax	0·0	8·2	12·4	16·6	19·1	22·5	25·4	28·2	31·6	34·1	37·0
NICS	6·2	8·2	8·2	9·0	9·0	7·1	5·4	4·3	3·1	2·1	1·1
VAT	—	5·1	5·4	5·6	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	10·2	9·0	7·7	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	4·8	3·9	2·9	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	6·2	36·5	38·9	41·8	28·0	29·7	30·7	32·5	34·6	36·2	38·1
Married, 2 children
Amounts, £ per week
Income Tax	−2·15	13·87	29·89	61·93	103·37	205·89	308·41	409·93	615·97	923·53	1,948·73
NICS	11·53	17·03	23·07	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45	27·45
VAT	—	8·69	12·76	21·59	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	12·32	14·22	18·36	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	7·42	8·85	11·96	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	9·38	59·60	88·79	141·29	130·82	233·34	335·86	437·38	643·42	950·98	1,976·18
Percentage of earnings
Income Tax	−1·7	7·2	11·7	16·1	20·2	26·8	30·1	32·0	34·3	36·0	38·0
NICS	9·0	9·0	9·0	7·1	5·4	3·6	2·7	2·1	1·5	1·1	0·6
VAT	—	4·5	5·0	5·6	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	6·4	5·5	4·8	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	3·9	3·5	3·1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	7·3	31·0	34·7	36·7	25·5	30·3	32·8	34·1	35·9	37·1	38·6

Income tax, NICS and indirect tax payments at multiples of average earnings, 1988-89

Multiples of Average Earnings

	0·5	0·75	1	1·5	2	3	4	5	7	10	20
Single
Amounts, £ per week
Income Tax	21·61	39·11	56·61	91·61	142·87	254·87	366·87	478·87	702·87	1,038·87	2,158·87
NICS	11·10	17·40	23·70	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74
VAT	—	10·59	14·22	22·16	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	15·96	19·96	28·72	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	8·42	10·25	14·25	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	32·71	91·48	124·74	184·48	170·61	282·61	394·61	506·61	730·61	1,066·61	2,186·61
Amounts 1988-89 prices
Income Tax	20·10	36·38	52·66	85·22	132·90	237·09	341·27	445·46	653·83	966·39	2,008·25
NICS	10·33	16·19	22·05	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80
VAT	—	9·85	13·23	20·61	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	14·85	18·57	26·72	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	7·83	9·53	13·26	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	30·43	85·10	116·04	171·61	158·71	262·89	367·08	471·27	679·64	992·20	2,034·06
Percentage of Earnings
Income Tax	15·4	18·6	20·2	21·8	25·5	30·3	32·8	34·2	35·9	37·1	38·6
NICS	7·9	8·3	8·5	6·6	5·0	3·3	2·5	2·0	1·4	1·0	0·5
VAT	—	5·0	5·1	5·3	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	7·6	7·1	6·8	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	4·0	3·72	3·4	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	23·4	43·6	44·6	43·9	30·5	33·6	35·2	36·2	37·3	38·1	39·0
Married, no children
Amounts, £ per week
Income Tax	13·97	31·47	48·97	83·97	130·63	242·633	354·63	466"63	690·63	1,026·63	2,146·63
NICS	11·10	17·40	23·70	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74
VAT	—	9·73	13·69	22·33	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	17·67	21·68	30·42	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	8·22	9·55	12·45	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	25·07	84·49	117·59	176·91	158·37	270·37	382·37	494·37	718·37	1,054·37	2,174·37
Amounts 1988-89 prices
Income Tax	13·00	29·27	45·55	78·11	121·52	225·70	329·89	434·07	642·45	955·00	1,996·87
NICS	10·33	16·19	22·05	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80
VAT	—	9·05	12·73	20·77	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	16·44	20·17	28·30	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	7·65	8·88	11·58	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	23·32	78·60	109·39	164·57	147·32	251·51	355·69	459·88	668·25	980·81	2,022·67

	0·5	0·75	1	1·5	2	3	4	5	7	10	20
Percentage of earnings
Income Tax	10·0	15·0	17·5	20·0	23·3	28·9	31·7	33·3	35·2	36·7	38·3
NICS	7·9	8·3	8·5	6·6	5·0	3·3	2·5	2·0	1·4	1·0	0·5
VAT	—	4·6	4·9	5·3	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	8·4	7·7	7·2	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	3·9	3·4	3·0	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	17·9	40·2	42·0	42·1	28·3	32·2	34·1	35·3	36·7	37·7	38·8
Married, both working
Amounts, £ per week
Income Tax	0·58	18·08	35·58	70·58	109·21	191·08	286·28	397·73	621·73	957·73	2077·73
NICS	9·59	15·89	22·19	34·79	46·40	55·49	55·49	55·49	55·49	55·49	55·49
VAT	—	10·96	15·25	32·83	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	20·40	24·00	31·19	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	10·10	10·78	12·15	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	10·17	75·43	107·80	172·54	155·61	246·57	341·77	453·22	677·22	1013·22	2133·22
Amounts 1988-89 prices
Income Tax	0·54	16·82	33·10	65·66	101·59	177·75	266·31	369·98	578·35	890·91	1932·77
NICS	8·92	14·78	20·64	32·36	43·16	51·62	51·62	51·62	51·62	51·62	51·62
VAT	—	10·20	14·19	22·17	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	18·98	22·33	29·01	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	9·40	10·03	11·30	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
TOTAL	9·46	70·17	100·28	160·50	144·75	229·37	317·93	421·60	629·97	942·53	1984·39
Per cent. of earnings
Income Tax	0·4	8·6	12·7	16·8	19·5	22·7	25·6	28·4	31·7	34·2	37·1
NICS	6·9	7·6	7·9	8·3	8·3	6·6	5·0	4·0	2·8	2·0	1·0
VAT	—	5·2	5·4	5·7	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	9·7	88·6	7·4	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	4·8	3·9	2·9	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	7·3	35·9	38·5	41·1	27·8	29·4	30·5	32·4	34·6	36·2	38·1
Married, 2 Children
Amounts, £ per week
Income Tax	−0·53	16·97	34·47	69·47	116·13	228·13	340·13	452·13	676·13	1012·13	2132·13
NICS	11·10	17·40	23·70	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74	27·74
VAT	—	9·60	14·08	23·87	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	17·36	20·58	27·64	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	8·08	9·65	13·07	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	10·57	69·41	102·48	161·79	143·87	255·87	367·87	479·87	703·87	1039·87	2159·87
Amounts 1988-89 prices
Income Tax	−0·49	15·79	32·07	64·62	108·03	212·21	316·40	420·59	628·96	941·52	1983·38
NICS	10·33	16·19	22·05	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80	25·80
VAT	—	8·93	13·10	22·20	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	16·15	19·14	25·71	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	7·52	8·98	12·16	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	9·83	64·57	95·33	150·50	133·83	238·02	342·20	446·39	654·76	967·32	2009·18
Per cent. of earnings
Income Tax	−0·4	8·1	12·3	16·5	20·7	27·2	30·4	32·3	34·5	36·1	38·1
NICS	7·9	8·3	8·5	6·6	5·0	3·3	2·5	2·0	1·4	1·0	0·5
VAT	—	4·6	5·0	5·7	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other indirect	—	8·3	7·4	6·6	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Domestic rates	—	3·8	3·4	3·1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	7·6	33·1	33·6	38·5	25·7	30·5	32·8	34·3	35·9	37·1	38·6

Notes:

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances. Earners, including working wives, are assumed to pay class 1 NI contributions at the contracted in rate. The figures for NI contributions are financial year averages.

2. The two earner married couple is assumed to have combined earnings equal to the various multiples of average earnings. In calculating disposable income it is assumed that these earnings are split between husband and wife in the ratio 60:40.

3. For the married couple with two children, child benefit is treated as a negative income tax.

4. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. These were £256.30 per week in 1988-89, and estimated to be £280.00 per week in 1989-90, using the Government Actuary Department's assumption of 9¼ per cent. growth over 1988-89 as published in the 1989 Autumn Statement.

5. The estimates of indirect taxes are derived from the 1985 Family Expenditure Survey, and are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. There are wide variations in spending patterns between households with similar incomes and composition, and estimated payments of VAT, other indirect taxes and rates are therefore approximate, even within the income range for which figures are shown. Outside this range the margin of error is even higher and reliable estimates cannot be made. Because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between the estimates obtained from Family Expenditure Surveys for different years.

6. 1989-90 figures converted into 1988-89 prices by assuming that the RPI is 7½ per cent. higher in 1989-90 than the previous financial year. This is consistent with the forecasts published in the 1989 Autumn Statement.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by what date he intends to return to the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration his draft report on the Barlow Clowes affair so that the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration may report finally to the House.

Mr. Redwood: As soon as possible.

Consumer Council

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent European Economic Community Consumer Council meeting.

Mr. Forth: A resolution identifying priorities for the relaunch of consumer policy was agreed. The draft directives on package travel and product safety were discussed without substantive conclusions and both dossiers were remitted to COREPER. The Commission outlined its plans for improved representation of consumers at Community level and indicated that new Commission proposals for the European home and leisure accident surveillance system would be forwarded to the council soon.

Electronic Data Processing Equipment

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the deficit in electronic data processing equipment with West Germany.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the deficit in electronic data processing equipment with West Germany.

Mr. Forth: Based on data compiled by and available from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, in 1988 the United Kingdom had an estimated net surplus of £299 million, not a deficit, with West Germany in respect of electronic data processing equipment.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the deficit in electronic data processing equipment with European Community countries.

Mr. Forth: Based on data compiled and published by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, in 1988 the United Kingdom has an estimated net surplus of £785 million, not a deficit, with the European Community countries in respect of electronic data processing equipment.

Oil Prices

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to refer the pricing policies of the oil companies to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Redwood: The Director General of Fair Trading asked the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to investigate the supply of petrol in the United Kingdom on 9 November 1988. The deadline for completion of the report is 20 December 1989.

Footwear and Textiles

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance he is proposing to give to prevent the further decline of the footwear and textile industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Sectoral schemes for the textiles and clothing industries have been banned by the European Commission since 1985. However, eligible textile and clothing firms, and firms in the footwear industry, could benefit from a range of DTI schemes which are open to firms in most sectors.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the recent visit of the hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) to Washington.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 29 November 1989]: I met the chairmen of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (Mrs. Wendy Lee Gramm) and of the Securities and Exchange Commission (Mr. Richard Breedon) in Washington on 16 and 17 November. In my talks with Mrs. Gramm and Mr. Breedon, I stressed the importance that the Government attach to co-operation between our respective regulatory authorities, to the mutual recognition of the effectiveness of our regulatory regimes, and to respect of each other's territorial jurisdiction. The CFTC is currently negotiating a compromise with the AFBD over that part of the exemption order governing the sale of United Kingdom futures and options products into the USA which relates to the segregation of customers' and brokers' funds. I hope that my firm representation on extraterritoriality will help the parties to come to a more satisfactory agreement.

The chairman of the SEC and I agreed to progress consideration of international regulatory issues, preferably with Japanese involvement. As global markets develop effective collaboration in standard setting and enforcement becomes more important. I also discussed how the United Kingdom could extend its memorandum of understanding with the USA on the exchange of information in matters relating to securities and futures.

SROs (Allegations)

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will proscribe the issuing of press releases by self-regulatory organisations which name individuals in advance of hearings of the same self-regulatory organisations in which the allegations against those named individuals are to be examined.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 27 November 1989]: A self-regulating organisation is reponsible for ensuring that its own rules and practices are observed. I have to leave the SROs free to exercise their own discipline over the companies or individuals who have agreed to be bound by their rules. Any complaints or suggestions for a change in practice in this matter should be taken up with the SRO.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will consider giving guidance to self-regulatory organisations on the need to avoid prejudicing forthcoming criminal trials.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 27 November 1989]: I do not believe such guidance to be necessary. It is well known in English justice that care must be exercised to avoid prejudging trials, and defendants have rights to a fair trail in criminal law.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list all the research projects he is funding into residues of pesticides in food, including the location and amount spent on each project; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list all the research projects he is funding into the efficient use of pesticides, including the location and amount spent on each project; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list all the research projects he is funding into the environmental effects of pesticides, including the location and amount spent on each project; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will list all the research projects he is funding into alternative methods of pest control other than the use of pesticides, including the location and amount spent on each project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department attaches a high priority to research concerned with pesticides and alternative methods of pest control and will be spending over £18·5 million on this in 1989-90. The following research projects are being carried out by or on behalf of the Department:

(a) Research funded by MAFF concerned with residues of pesticides in food
Amount of funding in 1989-90

Project and location	£'000
1. DDT in brassicas—ADAS (Harpenden)	15
2. Effect of residues of processing fruit and vegetables —University of Reading	12
3. Fate of residues in animal feed from treated wheat —Dalgety Spillers (Cambridge)	7·3
4. Determination of individual dithiocarbamate residues and ethycenethiourea in food—University of Reading	21
5. Dithiocarbamate levels in protected lettuces—ADAS (Harpenden)	28
6. Tolclofus-methyl in protected lettuces—ADAS (Harpenden)	15
7. Iprodione in cabbages—ADAS (Harpenden)	9

(b) Research funded by MAFF concerned with the efficient use of pesticides
Amount of funding in 1989-90

Project and location	£'000
1. Vegetable pests and diseases Control of insect pests of vegetables through minimal usage of insecticides and integration with other control methods. This includes seed film-coating and investigations of site-to-site differences in performance of insecticides; Biology, behaviour and control of insect pests of vegetables underpinning pest forecasting to reduce applications of pesticides; Control of diseases of vegetables using film-coating to reduce pesticide applications; Biology, resistance and control of diseases of field vegetables leading to forecasting to reduce applications of pesticides—Institute of Horticultural Research (IHR) Wellesbourne	480
2. Fruit Pests and Diseases Biology, epidemiology and control of pests and diseases of apples and pears underpinning forecasting to reduce applications of pesticides—IHR, East Malling	50
3. Use of more efficient sprays such as low volume sprays on hops—ADAS Rosemaund EHF	10
4. To minimise chemical use and spray drift through establishing relations between spray parameters, deposition patterns and biological control obtained —Institute of Engineering Research (IER), Silsoe	498
5. To investigate interactions between spray volume, drop size, air volume and air velocity; the resulting deposition patterns and the biological control obtained—Institute of Arable Crops Research (IACR), Long Ashton	78
6. To reduce inputs to vegetable growing systems through the use of information technology—IER, Silsoe	70
7. Evaluation of systems for pesticide application to fruit and hops—ADAS, Kent	11
8. Control of spray droplet and drift—University of Leeds	15
9. The dynamic behaviour of specialised spraying vehicles—University of Leeds	3
10. Factors controlling the dispersal and deposition of spray droplets—IACR Rothamsted	15
11. Factors affecting the performance of Control Droplet Application (CDA) sprays—IACR, Long Ashton	23
12. Deposition, activity and fate of pesticides applied to crops To understand the effects of formulation on pesticide uptake, spreading, persistence and movement in plants. To minimise effect on non-target organisms and develop strategies to retard the evolution of insensitivity in target pathogens—IACL (Long Ashton)	274
13. Biology and control of weeds in arable crops and waterways To assess the potential of herbicides, reduce phytotoxity to non-target flora, improve herbicide performance in relation to weather factors and in relation to the population dynamics of weeds—IACL (Long Ashton)	317

Project and location	£'000
14. Economic and environmentally benign pest and disease control in cereal crops To improve the performance of pesticides and minimise usage by developing forecasting schemes —IACL (Long Ashton)	211
15. Integrated crop management To manipulate interactions between agrochemical and fertiliser inputs, and husbandry factors such as cultivation method and straw disposal in rationing the use of pesticides on cereals—IACL (Long Ashton)	146
16. Diseases of non-cereal crops To rationalise fungicide inputs through an understanding of the epidemiology of tuber diseases of potatoes and diseases of oilseed crops in relation to yield and quality—IACL (Rothamsted)	391
17. Diseases of cereals To rationalise pesticide inputs through an understanding of the epidemiology of cereal leaf, stembase and virus diseases, and to minimise the health risks posed to man and livestock by storage moulds—IACL (Rothamsted)	392
18. Physicochemical factors affecting movement and efficacy of chemical control agents in plants and soil—IACL (Rothamsted)	164
19. Pests of non-cereal crops To rationalise nematicide and insecticide inputs by understanding the ecology, behaviour and control of pests on oilseed rape, potatoes and other arable crops—IACL (Rothamsted)	350
20. To overcome problems of insensitivity to insecticides in target pests—IACL (Rothamsted)	321
21. Management of honey bee colonies to safeguard foraging bees from damage by pesticide applied to crops and by diseases of bees—IACL (Rothamsted)	120
22. To monitor vector aphids and forecast virus infection of crops—IACL (Rothamsted)	32
23. Systems of cereal production To develop environmentally more benign low input systems for cereals from knowledge of the information between fungicides, varieties and husbandry factors—ADAS (N, M & W, E, SE, Wales, Bridget's, Boxworth)	128
24. Damage assessment and forecasting pests To refine action thresholds for the application of insecticides to control cereal pests, to minimise their injudicious use and reduce any adverse effects on the environment. To evaluate whether action thresholds can be used during pest monitoring studies to improve the quality of short-term forecasts—Regional Offices, Area Laboratories and Harpenden Laboratory	148
25. Wheat: leaf and ear diseases To investigate the epidemiology of weat foliar diseases in relation to the timing of fungicide treatment and growth stage/calendar date, to develop forecasting schemes, to refine the Managed Disease Control system, to investigate the control of foliar diseases with different levels of fungicide input and provide early warning of impending fungicide resistance problems—Regional Offices, Area Laboratories, EHFs and Harpenden Laboratory	319

Project and location	£'000
26. Winter wheat: stem base diseases To improve understanding of the actiology and epidemiology of stem-base diseases of wheat, to devise reliable forecasting and prediction schemes for eyespot and information on the importance of Fusarium end to monitor fungicide resistance for stem-base diseases,—Regional Offices, Area Laboratories EHFs	72
27. Winter barley: leaf and stem-base diseases To investigate the epidemiology of winter barley foliar diseases in relation to the timing of fungicide treatment and growth stage/calendar date, to develop forecasting stresses, to refine the Managed Disease control system, to investigate the control of foliar diseases with different levels of fungicide input and provide early warning of fungicide resistance problems, to improve under-standing of the aetiology and epidemiology of stem-base diseases, to devise reliable forecasting and prediction schemes for eyespot and information on the importance of Fusarium and to monitor for fungicide resistance for stem-base diseases— Regional Offices, EHFS	72
28. Spring barley: leaf and ear diseases To evaluate mildew fungicides with different modes of inhibitory action, as seed treatments and as foliar sprays, to refine disease prediction and control methods and to monitor for fungicide resistance in populations of powdery mildew— Regional Offices	30
29. Disease assessment and crop losses To survey diseases of winter wheat and winter barley and to provide information on the level of pesticide usage, significance of diseases for decisions on R & D priorities, and the extent of pesticide resistance problems to develop a system for predicting the economics of alternative spray decisions primarily to minimise unnecessary application of fungicides—Regional Offices, Harpenden Laboratory	213
30. Cereals: virus diseases To develop a forecasting system for Barley yellow Dwarf virus to minimise the unnecessary use of insecticides on cereals in the autumn and allow full exploitation of genetic resistance of new varieties. To understand the epidemiology of seed borne viruses,—Regional Offices, Harpenden Laboratory	388
31. Herbicide use and weed control systems To refine treatment thresholds and strategies for rational weed control in cereals to minimise unnecessary use of herbicides, to monitor the spread of herbicide resistant blackgrass and other weeds and develop strategic methods for research on new control—Regional Offices, EHFs	273
32. Potatoes: pests To refine action thresholds for the application of aphicides to control potato aphid, to reduce prophylactic spray applications, to lessen the role of insecticide resistance and to develop integrated control strategies for potato cyst nematode— Regional Offices, EHFs	243
33. Potatoes: diseases To develop an ELISA technique for testing for virus infection of seed potatoes, to determine the association between Erwinia loading on seed potatoes and blackleg in the subsequent crop under English conditions and to monitor the development of fungicide resistance in potato blight—Regional Offices, EHFs	175
34. Oilseed rape: pests—Regional Offices, EHFs	186

Project and location	£'000
35. Oilseed rape: diseases—Regional Offices, Harpenden Laboratory	123
36. Combining peas (part)—Regional Offices, EHFs	171
37. Field beans (part)—Regional Offices, EHFs	125
38. Practical methods for rodent control and resistance to rodenticides—Regional Offices, Worplesdon Laboratory	1,168
39. Cost effective, humane and environmentally acceptable rabbit management—Regional Offices, EHFs, Worplesdon Laboratory	796
40. Pest damage assessment, forecasting of crop pests, and effects of pesticides on beneficial invertebrates —Regional Offices, Harpenden Laboratory	356
41. Identification and control of alien pests and resistance to pesticides—Harpenden Laboratory	220
42. Disease damage assessment and forecasting of disease to minimise pesticide usage—Harpenden Laboratory	176
43. Studies on insect detection, insect behaviour and factors which influence the performance of residual insecticides—Harpenden Laboratory	296
44. Evaluation of the control of insects and mites in cereals, oilseeds and other commodities—Slough Laboratory	296
45. Control of pests by fumigation—Slough Laboratory	356
46. Studies on the mechanisms, detection, measurement and management of resistance in storage arthropods—Slough Laboratory	392
47. The uptake, translocation and distribution of pesticide residues in stored products—Slough Laboratory	116

(c) Research funded by MAFF concerned with environmental effects of pesticides
Amount of Funding in 1989-90 (£'000)

Project	Location
1. Methods for assessing the effects of pesticides on wildlife—ADAS, Worplesdon and Tolworth	60
2. Indirect effects of pesticides on wildlife—ADAS, Worplesdon and Tolworth	96
3. The economic and ecological effects of pest disease and weed control systems in intensively-produced cereals[1]—ADAS, Boxworth EHF, Worplesdon, Tolworth and Cambridge	244
4. Invertebrate fauna of cereal fields[1]—University of Southampton	32
5. Small mammal studies[1]—University of Cambridge	22
6. Cereal pest/predator interactions[1]—University of Cambridge	25
7. The effect of pesticides used in grassland on non-target organisms—Universities of Leeds and Newcastle, Institute for Grassland and Animal Production (IGAP), Hurley	23
8. Pesticide residues (includes work on pesticide degradation in the soil and pesticide leaching)—ADAS, Cambridge Field Drainage Experimental Unit, Cambridge	166

[1] Part of Boxworth project.

(d) Research funded by MAFF concerned with alternatives to pesticides for pest control

1. Integrated control of pests on outdoor crops
The use of natural enemies, chemical and cultural methods to control aphid pests in cereals.
Location—Institute of Horticultural Research (IHR), Littlehampton.
Funding in 1989-90—£124,000.

2. Biology and ecology of pests, pathogens and beneficial organisms
(a) The development of new methods of insect management using non-polluting chemicals affecting behaviour.
(b) The development of methods using natural predators and pesticides in integrated control systems for pests of arable crops.
(c) To determine the effects of straw incorporation and cultivation techniques on populations of pest aphids and beneficial insects, and to assess the implications for future pesticides usage.
Location—Institute of Arable Crops Research (IACR), Rothamsted.
Funding in 1989-90—£768,000.

3. Control of diseases in cereals
To develop methods, involving biological control, agrochemicals, host resistance and husbandry practices to minimise the harmful effects of takeall.
Location—IACR, Rothamsted.
Funding in 1989-90—£66,000.

4. Development of oats and disease resistant cereals
To evaluate new sources of disease resistance and to incorporate new resistant germplasm into high yielding winter and spring oat varieties.
Location—Institute for Grassland and Animal Production (IGAP), Aberystwyth
Funding in 1989-90—£152,000.

5. Disease and pest management in agro-ecosystems harmonised with the environment
(a) To rationalise the development of resistant varieties by understanding the mechanisms underlying genetic host resistance, its specificity with regard to pathogen variation, its relationship with non-host resistance and the corresponding implications for its durability.
(b) To identify and conserve genetically resistant germplasm of currently important crops and minor alternative crops. Characterisation and determination of the durability of such resistances and their deployment in disease management systems using reduced pesticide inputs.
(c) To develop an holistic approach to the deployment of genetic resistance in the field with special reference to grassland cereal farming and farm forestry in de-intensified systems.
(d) To integrate the use of natural biocides, particularly Bacillus thuringiensis toxin, genetic resistance and systemic pesticides in the management of crop pests and diseases.
Location—IGAP, Aberystwyth
Funding in 1989-90—£153,000

6. The improvement of dry peas
To define an optimum model for composition of storage compounds in a pea seed by understanding genetic variation and storage product accumulation in embryos, to improve the quality of peas for use as food and feed, and to improve disease resistance in the pea crop.

Location—Institute of Plant Science Research (IPSR), Norwich
Funding in 1989-90—£235,000

7. Pests of non-cereal crops
To develop methods for the containment of soil dwelling nematodes by the integrated use of crop rotations, reliable resistant cultivars and efficiently-used, safely-formulated nematicides, thereby delaying selection of virulent nematode pathotypes and minimising cost and risks to operatives and the environment. Particular attention is paid to potato cyst nematodes and to other nematodes of forage and grain legumes. Problems of nematode attack in oilseed rape and other alternative crops such as sunflower and lupin are being investigated. Studies on the nature of host tolerance to nematode attack and the complex interactions between nematode host races and culture resistance are contributing to the development of integrated control measures.
Location—IACR, Rothamsted
Funding in 1989-90—£178,000

8. Bird damage assessment and development of control techniques
Location—ADAS, Worplesdon
Funding in 1989-90—£464,000

9. The biology of storage arthropods and development of physical and biological control strategies
Location—ADAS, Slough
Funding in 1989-90—£308,000

10. Laboratory and field evaluation of novel methods of pest control
Location—ADAS, Slough
Funding in 1989-90—£452,000

11. Control of storage pests using modified atmospheres
Location—ADAS, Slough
Funding in 1989-90—£272,000

12. Cereals: soil-borne fungal diseases
Location—ADAS, EHFs
Funding in 1989-90—£163,000

13. Control of specific weeds and headland weed control
Location—ADAS, Regional Centres
Funding in 1989-90—£12,000

14. Alternative cropping systems. Includes work on milling wheat production under organic farming systems
Location—ADAS, EHFs
Funding in 1989-90—£133,000

15. Novel methods of pest control
Location—IACR, Rothamsted
Funding in 1989-90—£6,000

16. Field Vegetable Breeding
Evaluation of new varieties for resistance to pests and diseases.
Genetic improvement of lettuce. Work to find new sources of genetic resistance to downy mildew, lettuce root aphid and important viral diseases.
Genetics of host resistance to disease and development of resistant breeding material for important fungal and viral diseases.
Location—IHR, Wellesbourne and ADAS, EHSs
Funding in 1989-90—£140,000+£30,000

17. Field Vegetable Pests
Evaluation of biological/integrated control systems.
Resistance of vegetables to insect pests, including biochemical methods of screening plant material for resistance, and pest-host plant interactions.
Location—IHR, Wellesbourne and ADAS, EHSs
Funding in 1989-90—£240,000+£75,000

18. Field Vegetable Diseases
Evaluaion of biological/integrated control systems.
Biology, resistance and control of diseases of composites, crucifers and legumes. Methods of control through resistance, incuding durability of single gene resistance.
Screening for resistanee to cucumber mosaic virus in marrow.
Location—IHR, Wellesbourne and ADAS, EHSs
Funding in 1989-90—£210,000+£75,000

19. Field Vegetable Weeds
Development of novel programmes for weed control in vegetable crops, including cultural and other techniques for controlling weeds with less reliance on herbicides.
Location—IHR, Wellesbourne
Funding in 1989-90—£20,000

20. Top Fruit Breeding
To breed and select apple, pear, cherry, plum scion varieties and rootstocks which, amongst other attributes, are resistant to pests and diseases.
Location—IHR, East Malling
Funding in 1989-90—£65,000

21. Top Fruit Protection
Evaluation of biological/integrated control systems.
In vitro techniques for selection for resistance to fireblight.
In vitro techniques for testing for resistance to bacterial canker in cherry.
Biology, ecology and control of apple and pear pests, including regulation of spider mite in apples by predatory mites, regulation of P. pyncola on pears by predators.
Location—IHR, East Malling and ADAS EHSs
Funding in 1989-90—£290,000 plus £80,000

22. Soft Fruit Breeding
Breeding and selection of strawberries and raspberries which, amongst other attributes, are resistant to pests and diseases.
Location—IHR, East Malling
Funding in 1989-90—£40,000

23. Soft Fruit Protection
To elucidate the biology of wilt disease of stawberries and to improve control through biological means; select and exploit plant resistance for wilt control.
To study the biology, ecology and pest-damage relationships for several pest species, together with the development of control strategies.
Location—IHR, East Malling
Funding in 1989-90—£100,000

24. Hop Production and Protection
Effects of plant spacing on disease incidence in hops.
Evaluation of wilt resistance in breeding material of hops.
Control of damson-hop aphids by introducing or encouraging the migration to hop gardens of natural predators.
Study of factors affecting the sexual activity and migration of damson-hop aphids to identify weak points in its life cycle.
Evaluation of biological agents for controlling the two-spotted spite mite.
Location—IHR, Wye Sub centre and ADAS—Rosemaund EHF
Funding in 1989-90—£13,000 plus £10,000

25. Glasshouse Crop Pests
Evaluation of biological-integrated control systems.
Biological control of major glasshouse pests (whitefly and red spider mite), secondary pests (especially aphids and thrips) and newly-established non-indigenous pests.
Location—IHR, Littlehampton and ADAS—Rosemaund EHF
Funding in 1989-90—£150,000 plus £150,000

26. Glasshouse Crop Diseases
Evaluation of biological-integrated control systems.
Integrated control of bacterial and fungal pathogens, utilising biological agents.
Local—IHR, Littlehampton and ADAS EHSs
Funding in 1989-90—£140,000 plus £100,000

27. Evaluation of biological and other novel methods for pest control in greenhouse crops

Improvement in efficiency of Bacillus thuringiensis for arthropod pest control.

Use of fungi for control of arthropod pests.

Use of insect viruses for control of phytophagous pests.

The diagnosis of pathogens in invertebrate pest populations.

Use of insect parasite nematodes for pest control of glasshouse and mushroom pests.

Location—IHR, Littlehampton.
Funding in 1989-90—£410,000.

28. Mushroom Protection

Novel control methods for mushroom pests, including behaviour-modifying chemicals, antagonists, repellants, and insect-parasite nematodes.

Biological control of bacterial blotch disease.

Location—IHR, Littlehampton.
Funding in 1989-90—£70,000.

29. Hardy Ornamental Nursery Stock—Protection

Control of disease in the propagation of container-grown nursery stock, including biological control.

Location—IHR, Littlehampton.
Funding in 1989-90—£70,000.

30. Bulb Breeding

Use of induced mutations and conventional methods to breed disease resistant Narcissus cultivars.

Location—IHR, Littlehampton.
Funding in 1989-90—£70,000.

31. Bulb Protection

Control of fungal diseases of ornamental bulbs and corms, including screening for genetic resistance and biological control methods.

Location—IHR, Littlehampton and ADAS EHSs.
Funding in 1989-90—£10,000 + £10,000.

32. Development of integrated control methods for Western Flower Thrips

Location—IHR, Littlehampton
Funding in 1989-90—£18,000

33. Control of Narcissus basal rot by antagonists

Location—Exeter University
Funding in 1989-90—£10,000

34. Influence of pests and diseases on grassland agriculture, and their control by biological means

(a) To develop non-polluting methods of controlling pests and diseases in newly-sown grassland with emphasis on legumes.

(b) To determine the magnitude of losses of grassland legumes to pests and diseases and, thereby, the potential for application of biocontrol methods to grassland.

(c) To determine the potential of endophytic fungi in ryegrass as a means of biocontrol of grassland pests.

Location—IGAP, Hurley
Funding in 1989-90—£129,000

35. Diseases and pests of forage grasses and legumes

(a) Host: nematode relationships in forage grasses.

(b) Host: nematode relationships in forage legumes.

(c) Host: fungus relationships in forage grasses.

(d) Host: fungus relationships in forage legumes.

(e) Host: virus relationships in graminaceous and legume species. Mechanisms of host resistance.

(f) Identification of genetically resistant germ plasm in grasses and forage legumes.

(g) Relationships between endophytic fungi and their grass hosts.

Location—IGAP, Aberystwyth
Funding in 1989-90—£147,000

36. Exploit genetic variability in forage grasses

(a) Develop selection criteria and produce new gene combinations in perennial ryegrass.

(b) Enhancement of new germplasm created by hybridising Italian and perennial ryegrass and development of new gene combinations in Italian ryegrass.

(c) Develop and evaluate ryegrass/fescue hybrids with new potentials for coping with climatic change.

Location—IGAP, Aberystwyth
Funding in 1989-90—£322,000

37. Develop techniques and exploit genetic variation to improve legumes

Exploit genetic variation to improve yield, reliability of yield persistency and seed yield in white clover.

Location—IGAP, Aberystwyth
Funding in 1989-90—£114,000

38. Field boundaries: biological components influencing invertebrate predator overwintering

(a) To create overwintering habitats on farmland which favour the development of high numbers of polyphagous predatpors by modifying existing boundaries and by creating new ones.

(b) To monitor the accumulation of predators in autumn and winter in these new habitats together with their dispersal, distribution and predation rate in the crop in spring and summer.

(c) To convert the data into 'packaged' advice which could be made available via Videotex methods with ADAS cooperation.

Location—University of Southampton
Funding in 1989-90—£17,000

39. Exploitation of predatory beetles and parasitic wasps resident in field margins, hedgerows and shelter belts around grassland

To enhance the number and variety of predators and parasitic invertebrates present by increasing the size, stability and diversity of the flora in hedgerows, field margins and shelter belts around grassland and to investigate ways of how this may best be achieved.

Location—IGAP, Hurley
Funding in 1989-90—£30,000

40. Epidemiology and inter-relationships between clover viruses of pasture crops and field boundary ecosystems

To determine the field host range and interactions of the major viruses and their vectors that infect white clover, relating this to the ecology of hosts in field boundaries and in grassland crops. To identify for development resistant genotypes in white clover and related species and genera.

Location—IGAP, Aberystwyth
Funding in 1989-90—£23,000

41. Development of cold-active nematodes for insect pest control

Location—IHR, Littlehampton
Funding in 1989-90—£36,000

Bovine Somatotropin

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when tests being carried out on United Kingdom farms into bovine somatotropin are expected to end.

Mr. Maclean: Three BST products which have already satisfied consumer safety and quality requirements have been authorised to undergo field trials to generate the additional data needed to support product licence applications and the conduct of the trials is a matter for the companies concerned.

Veterinary Profession

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he intends to publish the Page report on the future of the veterinary profession;

(2) when he expects to receive the Page report on the future of the veterinary profession.

Mr. Maclean: I have asked for the report of the committee, chaired by Dr. Ewan Page, on veterinary manpower needs and the demand for veterinary education, to be completed by the end of the year. Decisions on its publication have not yet been taken.

Veterinary Products Committee

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the dates of the meetings of the veterinary products committee since January 1988.

Mr. Maclean: Since 1 January 1988 the veterinary products committee has met on the following dates:

1988

21 January
17 to 18 February
24 March
21 April
23 June
20 to 21 July
21 to 22 September
20 October
17 November
14 December

1989

19 January
15 to 16 February
15 to 16 March
19 to 20 April
17 to 18 May
29 June
3 August
20 to 21 September
18 to 19 October
23 November

Microwave Ovens

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the results of his survey into the effectiveness of microwave ovens.

Mr. Maclean: Yes, in accordance with our declared policy when I initiated the microwave study. I intend to publish the results of the survey once they have been submitted to me.

Contaminated Feed

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to make the results of the tests of lead in milk and meat available to the individual farmers affected by lead-contaminated cattle feed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The results of the tests on milk are now being made available to individual farmers.

I recently announced schemes which will provide for the removal of restrictions on cattle in circumstances where this can be done without risk to public health. The results of tests made pursuant to these schemes will be given to the farmers concerned as soon as possible.

Details of the schemes have already been sent out to the farmers concerned and I shall be sending a copy to the hon. Gentleman for information.

Cumbrian Fishermen

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 27 November to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark), whether fishermen who reside in Cumbria and are residents of the United Kingdom will be permitted to fish within the proposed territorial sea for the Isle of Man being explored for implementation under provisions of the Territorial Sea Act 1987.

Mr. Gummer: Yes. Any arrangement to implement the provision to extend the territorial sea to 12 miles around the Isle of Man in relation to fishing must safeguard the interests and traditional rights of all fishermen of all the nationalities (British, French, Belgian, Irish) who currently have access to the area concerned.

Lead-contaminated Feed

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received, and what measures of relief he is proposing, in the case of milk producers whose dairy cows have not been fed lead-contaminated feed but where orders of blanket coverage have been imposed because the farmer has received a quantity of contaminated feed designed for other animals.

Mr. Maclean: Milk restrictions have been lifted from farms as soon as contaminated feed has been removed and testing of milk has confirmed that lead levels remain consistently below 0·05 mg/l.

Hormone Implants (Cattle)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food where each of the two convictions of farmers following the discovery of cattle with hormone implants were obtained; and on what dates.

Mr. Maclean: The first of the two convictions was obtained at Rugby magistrates court on 5 May 1989 and the second at Wimborne magistrates court on 16 May 1989.

Chernobyl

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriclture, Fisheries and Food what checks or monitoring his Department carries out on radiation levels in food imported from eastern European countries, either direct or via other European Community countries, following the accident at Chernobyl; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Port health checks are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 162

SESSION 1989–90

21st November—1st December 1989

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc. between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot, therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.

A1
26w

A45
164-5w

A59
438w

A487
Porthmadog 201w

A590
181w

A605
Road construction 26w

Abbott, Ms Diane
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 620
Questions
Cambodia, British residents abroad 309-10w
Data processing, Electronic equipment 465w
Defence expenditure 232-3w
Dept of Social Security local offices, Hackney 427
Interest rates 120w
Unemployment benefit offices, Hackney 268w

Aberystwyth harbour
207w

Abortion
217w, 290w, 406-7w
Advisory services 100w, 217w
Age 291-3w
Anaesthetics 217w
Babies 442-3w
Children 290w
Congenital abnormalities 100w
Fertility 216w
Handicapped children 291w
Health service staff 217w
Interpreters 290w
Marital status 292-3w
Medical equipment 217w
Medical records 216w
Mothers 290-1w
Single people 291w
Surgery 217w
USA 37w

ABRC
see Advisory Board for the Research Councils

Access to Personal Files Act 1987
Questions
110w

Accident & emergency departments
Broadgreen Hospital (27:11:89) 556-62

Accidents
Electrical control equipment 402w

Accountability
Government departments 193w

Accountants
90w

Acid rain
Compensation 401w

ACINF
see Advisory Committee on Irradiated & Novel Foods

Adams, Mr Allen
Questions
Business statements 849
Type 23 frigates, Defence procurement 231w

ADAPT 433

Addresses to the Crown
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 7-12, (29:11:89) 693

Adley, Mr Robert
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 122, 127
Standing Order No 20 applications, Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 716-7
Questions
British Rail 194w
EC Finance Council 821
Middle East, Peace negotiations 313-4w
Museums & galleries, Finance 32-3w
Pensions, Social security benefits uprating 141w
Prime Minister, Railway travel 89w
Railway transport, Cost benefit analysis 184w
Transport policy, Railway transport 90w

Administrative costs
Child benefit 46-7w
Community charge 159w
Welsh Water 118w

Administrative delays
Attendance allowance 151w
Criminal injuries compensation 390-2w, 397w
Criminal Injuries Compensation Board 106-7w
Departmental correspondence 432-3w, 436-7w
Factory Inspectorate 19w
Family credit 426
Health & Safety Executive 19w
Parole 393-4w
Social security claims 46w
Speech therapists 410w

Admission charges
National Museum of Wales 115w

Adoption
Babies 302w

Advertising controls
Independent Television Commission 381w

Advisory Board for the Research Councils
352w
Science & technology research 6-7w

Advisory Committee on Business Appointments
Public appointments 17-8w

Advisory Committee on Irradiated & Novel Foods
Public appointments 188-9w

Advisory Committee on Pesticides
364w

Advisory services
Abortion 100w, 217w
Homelessness 80-1w

Africa
Nature conservation 254-5w

African National Congress
322w
Foreign policy 195w

Age
Abortion 291-3w
Child protection registers 223w

Age addition
Retirement pensions 370-1w

Age participation rates
GCE A level 21w

Agricultural & Food Research Council
24-5w

Agricultural Inspectorate
Manpower 454w

Agricultural land
Forestry 136w

Agriculture
Loan guarantee scheme 209w
Water pollution 86w

AIDS
Central Africa 334w
Expenditure 412w
Haemophilia 11-2w, 89w, 101w, 192w, 410-2w
Social Services Select Committee 11w

Aids for handicapped
Blind 300w

Air pollution
Greater London 166-7w
Road traffic 166-7w

Air pollution control
Chlorofluorocarbons 156w
Nitrous oxide 156w

Air pollution monitoring
42w

Air traffic
Belfast Airport 196w
East Midlands Airport 79w
Glasgow Airport 274w
Night flying 274w
Scotland 78-9w

Air traffic control
International cooperation 275w

Air transport
Gibraltar 200w
Treaties 274w

Aircraft
Navy 239-40w

Aircraft engines
232w
EH 101 helicopters 232w

Aircraft noise
Glasgow 274w
Glasgow Airport 273w
Polluter pays principle 364w

Airports
Military exercises 246w

Aitken, Mr Jonathan
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 724, 741-4
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 254, 283-6
Questions
Business statements 232
Dept of Health, Civil service dispersal 98w
European Commission, EC law 318-9w
Food poisoning, Cream 443w
Law officers, Disclosure of information 436
Retirement pensions, Age addition 370-1w

Alcoholic Liquor Duties Act 1979 (Repeal of Section 31) Order 1989
Debates etc.
(27:11:89) 440

Alexander, Mr Richard
Questions
Curriculum, Teacher training 49w
Health Advisory Service, Central Nottinghamshire Health Authority 218-9w

Allason, Mr Rupert
Debates etc.
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 536, 538
Sewage, Torbay (01:12:89) 941-2
Questions
Business statements 850
Ministry of Defence, Disclosure of information 564-5

Allen, Mr Graham
Debates etc.
Public Accounts Committee (30:11:89) 879-80
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 601, 659-61
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 441, 461
Questions
Civil service unions 436-7

Allen, Mr Graham—continued
Community charge, Nottingham 363w
Departmental correspondence, Administrative delays 436-7w
EC Finance Council, War widows' pensions 821
Government departments, Accountability 193w
Homelessness, Nottingham 364w
Interest rates 120w
Members' facilities, Satellite broadcasting 395w
Mentally handicapped, Mental health services 218w
Palace of Westminster, Gun sports 248-9w
Retirement pensions, Average earnings 251w
Social Fund, Nottingham 151w
St Mary's School Bulwell, Departmental correspondence 178w
Steel framed houses 165w
Water pollution, Camelford 447w

Alliance & Leicester Building Society
92w, 283w

Allowance books
Social security benefits 373-4w

Alternative energy
Electricity generation 75w, 176w

Alternative medicine
NHS 99-100w

Alton, Mr David
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 30
Questions
Abortion 217w, 406-7w
Abortion, Advisory services 100w, 217w
Abortion, Anaesthetics 217w
Abortion, Babies 442-3w
Abortion, Congenital abnormalities 100w
Abortion, Fertility 216w
Abortion, Health service staff 217w
Abortion, Interpreters 290w
Abortion, Medical equipment 217w
Abortion, Medical records 216w
Abortion, Surgery 217w
Debts 427w
Delta Te immune support therapy, Imports 289-90w
Delta Te immune support therapy, Research 290w
Delta Te immune support therapy 92w
El Salvador, Armed forces 413-4w
El Salvador, Ministers of religion 413-4w
Pornography, Law enforcement 106w
Pornography, Shops 106w
Vietnamese refugees, Hong Kong 712

Ambulance services
Arbitration schemes 833-4
Armed forces medical services 234-5w
Contracts for services 409w
Finchley 90w
Greater London 37w
Industrial disputes 37w, 99w, 193w, (23:11:89) 243, 833-4, 836
Manpower 408w
Military vehicles 33-4w
Standing Order No 20 applications (23:11:89) 243
Trade unions 37w

Amery, Rt Hon Julian
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 380-2

Amess, Mr David
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 100-3
Questions
Abortion, USA 37w
Convictions, Safety belts 259-64w
Defence industries, Exports 575
Genocide, Treaties 329-31w
Horn of Africa, International cooperation 254w

Amess, Mr David—continued
Investment, Consumption 420w
Israel, Official visits 324w
Namibia 318w
National Council for Vocational Qualifications, Training 268w
Palestine Liberation Organisation, Foreign policy 332w
Palestine Liberation Organisation, World Health Organisation 332w
Prison sentences, Safety belts 263w
Small businesses, Government achievements 377w
Small businesses, Government assistance 376-7w
Towngate Theatre 127w
USSR, Jews 331-2w
Wallenberg, Raoul 332-3w

Ammunition
Military exercises 246w

Amnesty International
India 197w

Amos, Mr Alan
Debates etc.
EC external trade, Japan (29:11:89) 776
Questions
Air pollution control, Chlorofluorocarbons 156w
Air pollution control, Nitrous oxide 156w
Defence expenditure 241w
EC Agriculture Council 190w
Farm & conservation grants scheme, Government grants 306w
Hill livestock allowances 190w
Lead free petrol, Garages & petrol stations 155-6w
Motor vehicle registration, Auctions 5w

AMP (UK)
see Australian Mutual Provident

Anaesthetics
Abortion 217w

ANC
see African National Congress

Anderson, Mr Donald
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 945, 1000-3
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 536, 538
Questions
EC social charter 701
Young people, Vagrancy 578

Anglian Water
Publicity 84w

Animal breeding
Dogs 165w

Animal experiments
Huntingdon Research Centre 382-3w
Licensing 382-3w

Animal feed
Lead 135w, 477-8w

Animal husbandry
Wales 115-6w
Wild animals (27:11:89) 554

Animal Procedures Committee
382w

Animal products
Food industry 134w

Animal welfare
Pets 390w
South Korea 416-7w

Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986
Questions
382-3w

Apartheid
South Africa 322w

APC
see Auditing Practices Committee

Appeals
Court of Appeal 28-31w
Director of Public Prosecutions 28-31w
Local government adjudicator 85-6w

Apprentices
Electricity area boards 75w

Arbitration schemes
Ambulance services 833-4

Arbuthnot, Mr James
Questions
Drug abuse 307-8w
USSR, Compensation 1w

Archaeological sites
Southwark 80w

Archer, Rt Hon Peter
Questions
Human Rights Day 334w

Ards Borough Council
271-2w

Area museum councils
128w

Argentina
Foreign policy 322-3w

Armagh
Southern Health & Social Services Board 346w

Armed conflict
Merchant ships 344w
Occupied territories 96w

Armed forces
Drug crimes 241w
El Salvador 413-4w
Industrial disputes 34w
Thailand 357w

Armed forces casualties
Suffield 358-9w

Armed forces deployment
Helicopters 358w
NATO 571
Security 244w, 568
Security guards 569
Terrorism 568
USA 234w
USSR 570
West Germany 245w, 563-4

Armed forces medical services
Ambulance services 234-5w
West Midlands 33w

Armed forces recruitment
Armed forces strength 239w
Ethnic groups 243w
Navy 242w

Armed forces reserves
National Employer Liaison Committee 246w

Armed forces strength
571
Armed forces recruitment 239w
Europe 570
NATO 243-4w
Navy 238w
Nuclear disarmament 571

Armed forces training
355-7w
Casualties 242-3w
Disclosure of information 355w
Environmental impact assessment 233w
Law 355w
Security 355w
Thailand 355w, 357w
Zimbabwe 355w

Armoured fighting vehicles
USSR 353-4w

Arms control
Chemical weapons 97w
Treaties 325w

Arms control negotiations
326w
Conventional weapons 97w
East Germany 563
Europe 707
International conferences 708
Military aircraft 97w
NATO 706-7, 710, 836-7
Tactical nuclear weapons 97w

Arms exports
237w
Cyprus 361w

Arms trade
Chile 170-1w
Cyprus 420w

Armstrong, Ms Hilary
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 595
Questions
Mothers, Education 455w
War widows' pensions 238-9w
Working mothers 454w

Army in Northern Ireland
(29:11:89) 811-8
Disclosure of information 564

Arnold, Mr Jacques
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 978-80
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 38
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 357
Questions
Arts finance, Inflation 125w
Cambodia, Overseas aid 17w
Civil service unions, Pay 434

Arrests
Railway track 345w

Art works
Insurance 33w
Objects in lieu of tax 336w

Arts
126w, 267w, 336w
European Communities 329w
Handicapped 127w

Arts centres
Handicapped 433
Pay settlements 434

Arts Council
123w, 127w, 433
Government grants 123w, 125w, 431

Arts festivals
Belfast 196w

Arts finance
122-5w, 432
Government grants 432
Handicapped 123w
Inflation 125w, 431-2
Museums & galleries 124w
Per capita costs 127w
Private sector 431
Southern Arts Association 125w

Arts grants
Devon 127w

Arts sponsorship
127w

Arts Support Review Group
124-5w
East Midlands 431
Northern region 432-3
Yorkshire & Humberside 434

Ashby, Mr David
Debates etc.
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 535

Ashdown, Rt Hon Paddy
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 35-43
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 474
Questions
Foreign policy, Vietnam 837-8

Ashley, Rt Hon Jack
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 30-1
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 477-9
War widows' pensions (23:11:89) 334
Questions
Armed forces training, Casualties 242-3w
Business statements 841-2
Carers premium 428
Central government borrowing, Charitable trusts 431w
Community health services 410w
Disabled workers, EC countries 268w
Disabled workers, Employment Service 455-6w
Disabled workers, Prosecutions 455w
Disablement resettlement officers, Employment Service 456w
Disablement resettlement officers, Job centres 457w
Disablement resettlement officers, Manpower 456-7w
Employment Service 457-8w
Haemophilia, AIDS 192w, 410w
Hong Kong, British national (overseas) 308w
Medical rehabilitation 410w
Nuclear weapons tests, Exservicemen 574
Quota of disabled workers 456-7w
Quota of disabled workers, Departmental forms 457w
Quota of disabled workers, Prosecutions 457w
Social Fund, Social security claims 137w

Ashton, Mr Joseph
Debates etc.
Oral questions (22:11:89) 114
Questions
Armed forces recruitment, Ethnic groups 243w
Business statements 236
Czechoslovakia, Journalists 323w

Asset stripping
Life insurance 348w

Assisted places scheme
Standard spending assessments 165w

Association of Directors of Education in Scotland
396w

Association of Independent Electricity Producers
176w

Asthma
Prescription charges exemptions 38w

Astor, Nancy
Women members 838

Atkins, Mr Robert, Under-Secretary of State for Transport*
Debates etc.
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 538-44, 550
Questions
A605, Road construction 26w
Bypasses, Ormskirk 438w
Dalton-in-Furness bypass, Road construction 181w
Driving instruction, EC countries 440w
Driving instruction, Law reform 440w
Driving instruction, Road accidents 440w
Driving tests 438-9w
Freight transport 26w
Goods vehicles, Lighting 181w
London assessment studies 182w
London assessment studies, Consultants 182w
London assessment studies, Costs 182w
London assessment studies, East London 25-6w
M1, Road traffic 184w
M4, Wales 79w
M5, Road works 275-6w
M6, Lorries 273w
M11, Public inquiries 276w

Atkins, Mr Robert—continued*
M25, Motorway service areas 440w
Motor vehicle testing 27w
Motorcycles, Courier services 181w
Motorcycles, Leg protectors 274w
Motorway service areas, M25 15w
Motorways, Lighting 439-40w
Motorways, Road safety 183w
Motorways, Road tolls 80w
Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950, Law reform 15w
Rights of way, Page Street 182w
Road accidents, Bolton 438w
Road construction 27w
Road construction, Avonmouth 275w
Road construction, Common land 182w
Road construction, Land values 182w
Road construction, Recreation spaces 26w
Road construction, Road safety 274w
Road freight transport 439w
Road haulage permits, Fees & charges 4-5w
Road traffic 25w
"Road User & the Law White Paper" 14-5w
Road works, Contracts 183w
Roads 276w
Scarisbrick-Pinfold bypass, Consultants 181w
Transport infrastructure 25w
Transport of hazardous materials, Chemicals 438w
Transport policy, Investment 185-6w

Atkinson, Mr David
Questions
Arts Support Review Group 125w
Christmas bonus 147-8w
Council of Europe, Eastern Europe 709
Gurkhas, Northern Ireland 229w
Refuse, Local government finance 435w
UN Relief & Works Agency, Foreign aid 414w
Uniform business rate 250w
Water charges, Rateable value 164w

Atlantic Ocean
NATO 235-6w

Atomic Weapons Research Establishment
Pollution 42-3w

Attendance allowance
Administrative delays 151w
Medical examinations 151w
Social security appeals 48w

Attendance Allowance Board
48w

Auctions
Motor vehicle registration 5w

Audit Commission for Local Authorities in England & Wales
251w

Auditing Practices Committee
90w

Australian Mutual Provident
94w

Autumn statement
Defence expenditure 573
Wales 338-9w

"Autumn Statement, 1989"
826, 828
Interest rates 826-7

Availability for work
Income support 214w
Pop festivals 426
Social security recipients 208-9w

Aveley
367w

Average earnings
Retirement pensions 251w, 423-4

Avonmouth
Road construction 275w

AWE Aldermaston
Security 435w

AWRE
see Atomic Weapons Research Establishment

Babies
Abortion 442-3w
Adoption 302w

Badgers
Bovine tuberculosis 187w

Balance of payments
427w, 828
Economic policy 430w
Export-import ratios 823
Manufactured imports 823
Oil revenues 829
Overseas investment 828-9
Tax allowances 822-3

Balance of trade
828
Computers 458-9w
East Germany 169w
Iran 170w
Israel 287-8w
Manufactured goods 282w
Middle East 287-8w
OECD countries 122w
Publishing 288-9w
Recording industry 288-9w
West Germany 282w

Baldry, Mr Tony
Debates etc.
Oral questions, Heads of state (29:11:89) 713
Questions
Armed forces reserves, National Employer Liaison Committee 246
Art works, Insurance 33w
Badgers, Bovine tuberculosis 187w
Business statements 852
Community charge, Oxfordshire 163w
Government grants to local authorities, Public sector earnings 163w
Local government expenditure, Oxfordshire County Council 163w
Local government finance, Oxfordshire County Council 163w
Mergers, Shares 39w
Ministers, Pay 444-6w
Nuclear fuel reprocessing, Contracts 385w
Overseas aid 171w
Pensioners, Social security benefits uprating 141w
Satellite communications 168-9w

Baltic Republics of USSR
323-4w

Bank of England
120w, 172w, 420-1w

Bankruptcy
Small businesses 827-8

Banks
Credit 422w

Banks, Mr Tony
Debates etc.
Business questions intervention (30:11:89) 848
EC external trade, Japan (29:11:89) 768, 773, 776
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 722, 754, 762
Oral question time intervention (27:11:89) 427, (29:11:89) 699
Oral question time point of order (29:11:89) 698
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 32, 99-100
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 595-6
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 397
Questions
Africa, Nature conservation 254-5w
African National Congress, Foreign policy 195w

Banks, Mr Tony—continued
Armed forces deployment, West Germany 245w
Arts finance, Per capita costs 127w
Business statements 235, 854
Fisheries, Drift nets 32w
Fishery protection, Drift nets 36w
Fishing vessels, Drift nets 32w
Flexible response 229-30w
Japan, Drift nets 36w
Nicaragua, Elections 698-9
Road construction, Common land 182w
Road construction, Land values 182w

BAOR
Costs 358w
Nuclear artillery shells 114w

Barlow Clowes
285-6w
Company investigations 465w

Barnes, Mr Harry
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 947
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 51
Questions
Business statements 241, 854
Civil service unions 119w
Defence expenditure, USA 238w
Railway electrification, Midland main railway line 274w
Social security reform, Employment 140w
Tibet, China 328w
VAT, Consumer expenditure 823-4

Barnes, Mrs Rosie
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 509-11

Barnes Common
182w

Barron, Mr Kevin
Questions
Coal, Exports 177w
Coal mine closures 252-3w
Coal mining 176w
Coal mining, Manpower 176w
El Salvador, British residents abroad 312w
Elderly, Hypothermia 144w
Oil fired power stations 176w
Power stations, Production 176-7w

Basildon
259-64w

Basildon & Thurrock Health Authority
Rates & rating 412w

Basking sharks
Nature conservation 249-50w
Research 250w

Batiste, Mr Spencer
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 722, 728
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 600, 635-7
Questions
Motorways, Lighting 439-40w
Tourism 210w

Battle, Mr John
Questions
Armed forces training, Environmental impact assessment 233w
Business statements 241-2
Housing associations, Capital investment 364-5w
Midwives, Pay settlements 299w

BBC
696

Beaumont-Dark, Mr Anthony
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 441
Standing Order No 20 applications, Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 715
Questions
Balance of payments, Tax allowances 822-3

Beckett, Mrs Margaret
Questions
Balance of payments, Oil revenues 829
Exchange rates 822

Beggs, Mr Roy
Debates etc.
Holroyd, Fred, Books (29:11:89) 812
Public Accounts Committee (30:11:89) 914
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 141, 188-91

[illegible]ith, Mr A J
Debates etc.
Fisheries, Scotland (21:11:89) 109
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 18
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 598, 606-10, 674
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 183
Questions
Arts Support Review Group, Northern region 433
Ministerial policy advisors, Contracts of employment 32w

Belfast
Arts festivals 196w

Belfast Airport
Air traffic 196w
Government grants 196w

Bell, Mr Stuart
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 24
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 596-7, 604
Trust ports (01:12:89) 1004-8
Questions
Berlin 322w
Export credit guarantees 348w
Interest rates, Unemployment 120w
Social Fund, Community care 149w
Tactical nuclear weapons, Modernisation 235-6w
Unemployment, Cleveland 454w

Bellingham, Mr Henry
Debates etc.
Straw burning (30:11:89) 874
Questions
F111 aircraft 243w
New businesses 120-1w
Nuclear weapons tests, Exservicemen 574
Small businesses 424w

Benbecula Airport
246w

Bendall, Mr Vivian
Questions
NATO, Eastern Europe 836-7

Benn, Rt Hon Tony
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 597, 621, 628-30
Questions
Tactical nuclear weapons 229w

Bennett, Mr Andrew F
Questions
Business statements 234
Dept of Employment, Civil servants' secondment 18w
Football, Safety standards 128w
Health & Safety Executive, Administrative delays 19w
Health & Safety Executive, Building industry safety 19w
Health & Safety Executive, Fire regulations 20w
Health & Safety Executive, Management 18-20w
Health & Safety Executive, Merseyside 269w
Health & Safety Executive, Training 20w
"HSC Plan of Work for 1989-90 & Beyond" 19w

Bennett, Mr Nicholas
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 956, 972, 989
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 291-2
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 134

Bennett, Mr Nicholas—continued
Questions
Bypasses, Pembroke 45w
Criminal proceedings, Magistrates' courts 447w
Environment protection, International cooperation 247w
Government assistance to industry, Manufacturing industries 283w
One parent families, Maintenance 214-5w
Regional aid, Tenby 449-50w
School closures, Primary education 45-6w
Social security benefits, Young people 420

Benzene
Health hazards 162w

Berlin
322w

Bermingham, Mr Gerald
Questions
Columbus space station 287-8w
"Disabled Adults" 379w
Disabled workers 379-80w
Genetics, Medical research 73-4w
Nuclear power, Electricity supply industry 76w
Optical fibres, Telecommunications technology 348w
Research councils, Mergers 352w
Safe integral reactor 76w
Science & technology, Expenditure 352-4w
United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority 76w

Bevan, Mr David Gilroy
Questions
Tourism 210w

Bidwell, Mr Sydney
Questions
VAT, Magazine press 421w

Bilateral aid
Central America 198-200w
Nicaragua 198-200w
Pakistan 324w

Billericay
35w

Billing
Small businesses 128w

Birds
Nature conservation 398w

Birmingham
Bombings 31w, 266w, 385-6w

Birmingham Airport
78w, 343w

BL
see British Library
or Rover Group

Blackpool Wyre & Fylde Health Authority
NHS finance (22:11:89) 218-24

Blair, Mr Tony
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 722-3, 725, 727-34
Questions
Youth training scheme, Industrial accidents 129-32w

Blaker, Rt Hon Sir Peter
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 970-2
NHS finance, Blackpool Wyre & Fylde Health Authority (22:11:89) 219

Blind
407-8w
Aids for handicapped 300w
Cost of living 371-2w
Mobility allowance 371w
St Helen's & Knowsley Health Authority 407-8w

Blood diseases
Screening 218w

Blood sports
Demonstrations 393w

Blood tests
Genetics 106w

Blood transfusion services
NHS hospital trusts 301w
Northern Regional Health Authority 301w

Blunkett, Mr David
Questions
Community charge 435-6w
Landlord & tenant, Rates & rating 167w
Local government adjudicator 85-6w
Local government adjudicator, Appeals 85-6w
Local government adjudicator, Pay 85w
Standard spending assessments, Assisted places scheme 165w

BMA
see British Medical Association

BNFL
see British Nuclear Fuels

Board of Inland Revenue
see Inland Revenue

Boarding schools
Social security benefits rules 430

Boateng, Mr Paul
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 350
Questions
Blood diseases, Screening 218w
Interest rates, "Autumn Statement, 1989" 826-7
Social Fund 137-8w
War widows' pensions 565

Body, Sir Richard
Questions
Caravan sites, Sanitation 248w
Defence expenditure, West Germany 573
Milk, Lead poisoning 303w

Bolton
363w, 373w
Fires 386w
Foster care 410w
Nursery schools 259w
Road accidents 438w

Bombings
Birmingham 31w, 266w, 385-6w
Guildford 382w
West Midlands Police 266w

Books
Holroyd, Fred (29:11:89) 811-8

Boot houses
162w

Boscawen, Mr Robert
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 148-50

Boswell, Mr Tim
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 987-9
Straw burning (30:11:89) 871
Questions
English language 192w
History education, Curriculum 434w
Military aid to civil community, Disaster relief 237w
Social security reform 150w
Spain 320-1w

Boswell houses
162w

Bottle banks
Local authorities 436w

Bottomley, Mr Peter, Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland
Questions
Belfast Airport, Government grants 196w
Farms, Radioactivity 94-5w

Bottomley, Mr Peter—continued
Housing finance, Private sector housing 21w
Level crossings, Coleraine 272w
Radioactive fallout, Compensation 95w
Road finance, Down District Council 269w
Road finance, Newry & Mourne District Council 269w
Roads, Down District Council 270w
Roads, Newry & Mourne District Council 270w
Roads, South Down 270w
Sites of special scientific interest, Strangford Lough 346w

Bottomley, Mrs Virginia, Minister of State, Department of Health
Questions
Abortion 217w, 406-7w
Abortion, Advisory services 100w, 217w
Abortion, Anaesthetics 217w
Abortion, Congenital abnormalities 100w
Abortion, Fertility 216w
Abortion, Health service staff 217w
Abortion, Interpreters 290w
Abortion, Medical equipment 217w
Abortion, Medical records 216w
Abortion, Surgery 217w
Abortion, USA 37w
AIDS, Expenditure 412w
AIDS, Social Services Select Committee 11w
Ambulance services, Contracts for services 409w
Ambulance services, Industrial disputes 99w
Ambulance services, Manpower 408w
Asthma, Prescription charges exemptions 38w
Blood transfusion services, NHS hospital trusts 301w
Blood transfusion services, Northern Regional Health Authority 301w
British Medical Association 221w
Carers, Training 222w
Child abuse, Children in care 265-6w
Child abuse, Publicity 219w
Child protection registers, Age 223w
Community care, Local government functions 101-2w
Community health services 410w
Community hospitals, Costs 220-1w
Community hospitals, NHS internal market 223w
Delta Te immune support therapy, Imports 289-90w
Drugs, Counterfeit manufacturing 217w, 293-4w
Drugs, Licensing 101w
Elderly, Health services 38w
Family doctors, Contracts of employment 220w
Family doctors, Personnel 411w
Foster care, Bolton 410w
Genetic engineering, Medical treatments 225w
Haemophilia, AIDS 101w, 410-2w
Haemophilia, EC countries 295w
Handicapped, Hospital consultants 224w
Handicapped, Sexual offences 222w
Health Advisory Service, Central Nottinghamshire Health Authority 218-9w
Health service staff, Overtime 300-1w
Hospital closures, St Helen's & Knowsley Health Authority 223w
Hospital consultants, Manpower 11w
Hospitals, Family doctors 220w
Leicestershire Health Authority, Public appointments 298-9w
"London Ambulance Service in the Nineties" 408-9w
Maternity services, Hospital length of stay 221w
Midwives, Pay settlements 299w
Midwives, Training 299-300w
Neuroblastoma, Screening 99w
NHS administration, Managers 444w
NHS finance, NHS review 220w
Nurses, Career structure 218w

Bottomley, Mrs Virginia*—*continued
Nurses, Pay 443-4w
Nurses, Prescriptions 409w
Orthopaedics, Hospital waiting lists 101w
Registered homes, Local authority powers 223w
Residential care, Local authorities 222w
Sanitary protection, Health hazards 218w
Self-governing hospitals 295-8w
Speech therapists, Administrative delays 410w
Speech therapists, Leicestershire Health Authority 407w
Whipps Cross Hospital, Red alerts 407w
Yorkshire Regional Health Authority, Ministers' domestic visits 412w
Young offenders, Local authorities 299w

Bovine Offal (Prohibition) Regulations 1989
Debates etc.
(30:11:89) 877

Bovine somatotropin
Testing 476w

Bovine spongiform encephalopathy
305-6w
Cattle 134w, 304-5w
Testing 305w

Bovine tuberculosis
Badgers 187w

Bowden, Mr Andrew
Questions
Economic situation, Population studies 428w
Income support, Residential care 148w

Bowden, Mr Gerald
Questions
Civil service, Training 119w
Museums & galleries, Repairs & maintenance 125w
Pensions, Social security benefits uprating 140w

Bowis, Mr John
Questions
Arts finance 123w
Business statements 239-40
Defence expenditure 241w
GCE A level 179-80w
M25, Motorway service areas 440w
Mergers, EC action 39-40w, 289w
Namibia, Elections 317w
Nicaragua, Military aid 699
Respite care 428
School buildings, Safety 261w

Boyson, Rt Hon Sir Rhodes
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 394-8

BR
see British Rail

Bradford
Railway network 183w
Water charges 175w

Bradford City Council
41w

Bradley, Mr Keith
Questions
Cambodia, United Nations 310w
Type 23 frigates, Defence procurement 231w

Braine, Rt Hon Sir Bernard
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 952, 959-61
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 468-71
Questions
Business statements 238

Brandon-Bravo, Mr Martin M
Questions
Advisory Committee on Business Appointments, Public appointments 17-8w
Handicap benefits, Social security benefits uprating 147w

Brandon-Bravo, Mr Martin M*—*continued
International conferences, Drug abuse 697

Brazier, Mr Julian
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 264-5
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 587-8
Questions
Chemical weapons, USSR 571
Namibia, Elections 317w

Bright, Mr Graham
Questions
EC Environment Council 368-9w

British Aerospace
(30:11:89) 857-67
Defence procurement 354-5w

British Broadcasting Corporation
see BBC

British Coal Corporation
76w, 176-7w, (23:11:89) 246
External financing limits 14w
Interest rates 403w
Wales 206-7w

British Council
325

British embassies
Iraq 36w

British Film Institute Southbank Bill 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

British Gas
405w

British Geological Survey
Finance 6w

British Leyland
see Rover Group

British Library
126w

British Medical Association
221w, 278w, 281w

British national (overseas)
Hong Kong 308w

British Nuclear Fuels
74-5w

British Rail
77-9w, 183-4w, 194w, 340w, 344-5w, 450-1w

British Railways Bill 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

British residents abroad
Cambodia 309-10w
El Salvador 311-2w
Malawi 97w
Pensions 251w

British Telecom
168-9w
Mercury Communications 38w

British Transport Police
345w

Brittan, Leon
European Commission 433w

Brixton Prison
Suicide (24:11:89) 412-8

Broadcasting
Northern Ireland 108-9w
Public appointments 174w

Broadcasting Act 1981
Questions
173w

Broadcasting Complaints Commission
Pay 104w

Broadcasting controls
108w
Queen's speech (23:11:89) 247-333
Sinn Fein 173w

Broadgreen Hospital
Accident & emergency departments (27:11:89) 556-62

Brooke, Rt Hon Peter, Secretary of State for Northern Ireland
Questions
Public expenditure, Northern Ireland 272-3w

Brookings Institution
Trident missiles 570

Brown, Mr Gordon
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 126-35
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 858-9

Brown, Mr Michael
Questions
Community charge, Transitional relief 4w

Brown, Mr Nicholas
Debates etc.
Public Accounts Committee (30:11:89) 915-21, 923
Questions
Balance of payments, Manufactured imports 823

Brown, Mr Ron
Debates etc.
Intelligence services, Meehan, Paddy (28:11:89) 583
Oral question time point of order (29:11:89) 708-9
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 609, 614
Questions
Armed forces strength 571
Business statements 847-8

Browne, Mr John
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 314-7
Questions
Business statements 851
East west relations 564

Bruce, Mr Ian
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 596, 613, 657-8
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 184

Bruce, Mr Malcolm
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 180-2, 214-5
Television programmes, Public petitions (30:11:89) 929
Questions
Benzene, Health hazards 162w
Environment protection 160-1w
Environment protection, Civil service manpower 161w
Environment protection, Competition 161-2w
Foreign exchange, Exports 424w
Pesticides Safety Division 187w
Pollution control, Licensing 160w
Prime Minister, Railway travel 442w
Sustainable development 162w

BT
see British Telecom

Buchan, Mr Norman
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 254
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 526
Questions
Arts finance, Inflation 431-2

Buchan, Mr Norman—continued
Business statements 237
Tactical nuclear weapons 229w

Buck, Sir Antony
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 448
Questions
Armed forces deployment, West Germany 563

Buckinghamshire County Council Bill (HL) 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

Buckley, Mr George J
Questions
Namibia 318w

Bucklow of Carlisle Committee
see Advisory Committee on Business Appointments

Budgen, Mr Nicholas
Questions
Interest rates, Monetary policy 829

Budgeting
Family doctors 220-1w

Building industry safety
Health & Safety Executive 19w

Buildings
Dromara 270w
NHS 339w
Slieve Croob 169-70w, 345-6w

Bulgaria
329w

Burma
Elections 323w

Burns, Mr Simon
Questions
Arms exports 237w
Arts finance 123w
Drug abuse, United Nations 307w
Sentencing 395w
VAT, Inflation 824

Burt, Mr Alistair
Questions
Drug abuse, United Nations 307w
Procurement, Government departments 266-7w

Burundi
Development aid 334w

Bus services
Competition 78w, 439w
Greater London 78w

Bush, George
577-8

Business
National Income 427w

Business Cooperation Network
285w

Business education
Educational finance 258w
Student numbers 258w

Business expansion scheme
376-7w

Business motions
Census Order 1989 (01:12:89) 1003

Business questions
Speaker's rulings & statements (23:11:89) 228, 229, 235, 236, 237, 238-9, 242, (30:11:89) 847, 856

Business sponsorship incentive scheme
126-7w

Business statements
227-42, 839-56

Butcher, Mr John
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 285
Questions
Company investigations, Rights of accused 95w
India, Amnesty International 197w
Self-regulating organisations, Press releases 466w
Self-regulating organisations, Trials 466-7w

Butler, Mr Chris
Questions
Arts Council, Government grants 431
Attendance allowance, Administrative delays 151w
BAOR, Costs 358w
Central Africa, AIDS 334w
Drug crimes, Crime prevention 307w
Drug crimes, International cooperation 386w
EC social charter, Socialism 700
Employment opportunities, Cheshire 208w
Historic Buildings & Monuments Commission for England, Montagu of Beaulieu, Lord 156w
M6, Lorries 273w
Shareholders, Pensioners 429w

Butterfill, Mr John
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 17
Questions
Exchange rates, Free movement of capital 831
Poland, Overseas aid 701-2
Productivity, Manufacturing industries 428w

Bypasses
Nairn 112w
Ormskirk 438w
Pembroke 45w

CAA
see Civil Aviation Authority

Cable television
383-4w

Caborn, Mr Richard
Questions
East west relations, Defence 240w
Imports, Consumer goods 822

Caldey Island
(29:11:89) 718

Caldey Island Bill 1989/90
Debates etc.
1R (29:11:89) 718

Caledonian MacBrayne
Public appointments 111w

Calling of Members
Speaker's rulings & statements (23:11:89) 226, 244, 246, (27:11:89) 430, (29:11:89) 709, (30:11:89) 874, 876

Cambodia
310-1w
British residents abroad 309-10w
Communication engineering 357w
Foreign policy 309w
Khmer Rouge 310-1w
Overseas aid 17w, 254w, 309w
UN resolutions 309w
United Nations 310w

Cambridge
Civil service dispersal 194-5w
Housing construction 164-5w

Camelford
Water pollution 447w

Campbell, Mr Menzies
Debates etc.
Fisheries, Scotland (21:11:89) 106
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 473
Questions
Merchant ships, Armed conflict 344w

Campbell, Mr Menzies—continued
Salvage, Wrecks 441w
War widows' pensions, Free votes 566

Campbell, Mr Ronnie
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 26
Questions
Cambodia, UN resolutions 309w
Family credit, Take-up 142w

Campbell-Savours, Mr D N
Debates etc.
Calling of members (23:11:89) 226, 245-6
Oral question time point of order (27:11:89) 430
Public Accounts Committee (30:11:89) 891, 896-901
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 254
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 606, 672, 674
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 145-6, 204-6
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 450, 459, 461-2, 486
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 866
Questions
Business statements 236
Fishing limits, Isle of Man 478w
Government buildings, Property development 157-8w
Rights of way, Page Street 182w

Canavan, Mr Dennis
Questions
Company accounts, Prosecutions 349-50w
Dept of Employment, Civil servants 455w

Capital goods
430w, 458-9w
Imports 423w, 430w, 822

Capital investment
Coal mining 448w
Corporation tax 825
Hospitals 219w
Housing associations 364-5w
Nuclear fuel reprocessing 75w
Orpington Hospital 302w
St Helen's & Knowsley Health Authority 224w

Capital movements
420w

Capital punishment
Iran 333w
South Africa 322w

Car industry
Foreign investment in UK 834
Productivity 834

Caravan sites
Sanitation 248w

Carbon monoxide
42w, 166-7w

Cardiff
42-3w

Cardiff Bay barrage
Nature Conservancy Council 448w

Cardiff docks
Nuclear submarines 566-7

Career structure
Nurses 218w

Carers
Training 222w

Carers' premium
428
Income support 152w

Carlile, Mr Alex
Debates etc.
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 549
Questions
Baltic Republics of USSR 323-4w

Carlile, Mr Alex—continued
Child benefit 145w
Interest rates, Monetary policy 419w
National Union of Teachers, Pay 353w
Natrealisation, Monien, France 28w
Primary education, Curriculum 351w
Supply teachers, Teacher training 351w
Teachers, Recruitment 353w

Carlisle, Mr John
Questions
South Africa 322w

Carrington, Mr Matthew
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 644-5
Questions
Namibia, Elections 317w
Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950, Law reform 15w

Carttiss, Mr Michael
Questions
Thatcher, Margaret, Meyer, Anthony 576-7

Cartwright, Mr John
Questions
East Germany, NATO 197w, 326w
WE 177 nuclear bomb, Modernisation 231w

Cash, Mr William
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 949
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 735, 745-6
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 44
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 613, 647-8
Questions
Economic growth, EC countries 426w

Casualties
Armed forces training 242-3w

Category B prisoners
393w

Cattle
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy 134w, 304-5w
Hormone treatments 478w

CBI
see Confederation of British Industry

CCTA
see Central Computer & Telecommunications Agency

CEGB
see Central Electricity Generating Board

Cellular phones
Radio reception 168w

Census of population
Departmental forms 444w
Standard spending assessments 248w

Census Order 1989
Debates etc.
Business motions (01:12:89) 1003

Central Africa
AIDS 334w

Central America
Bilateral aid 198-200w
Peace keeping operations 321-2w
USA 707

Central Computer & Telecommunications Agency
266w

Central Electricity Generating Board
76w, 176-7w, 405w

Central government borrowing
Charitable trusts 431w

Central Nottinghamshire Health Authority
Health Advisory Service 218-9w

Central Unit on Purchasing
266-7w

CFE talks
97w, 321w

CFTC
see Commodity Futures Trading Commission

Chalker, Rt Hon Lynda, Minister for Overseas Development
Questions
Africa, Nature conservation 254-5w
Cambodia, Overseas aid 17w, 254w
Cyprus 254w
El Salvador, Overseas aid 27w
Ethiopia, Disaster relief 255w
Horn of Africa, International cooperation 254w
Malawi, Overseas aid 89w
Overseas aid 171w

Challenger tanks
Defence contracts 237w
Vickers Defence Systems 574-5

Chamorro, Violeta de
195w

Chancellor of the Exchequer
see Treasury

Channel tunnel
184w
Railway network 79w, 180w, 340w
Spoil heaps 184-5w
Transport infrastructure 273w
Waterloo Station 180w

Channel Tunnel Act 1987
Questions
340w

Charitable trusts
Central government borrowing 431w

Charity Commission
410w

Chemical & biological warfare
Defence procurement 35w

Chemical weapons
240w
Arms control 97w
USSR 196-7w, 240w, 244w, 357w, 571

Chemicals
Transport of hazardous materials 438w

Chernobyl
94-5w, 478w

Cheshire
Employment opportunities 208w

Child abuse
Children in care 265-6w
Departmental circulars 179w
Disclosure of information 175w
Government departments 191w
Magistrates' courts 385w
Publicity 219w
Teachers 437w

Child benefit
144-5w
Administrative costs 46-7w
Family credit 426, 429
Inflation 429
Prisoners 145w
Social security benefits uprating 429

Child care
Working mothers 579

Child Poverty Action Group
423w

Child protection registers
Age 223w
Standard spending assessments 160w

Child rearing
Costs 429

Childbirth
Unemployment benefits 207w

Children
Abortion 290w
International conferences 414w
Tax allowances 424w

Children in care
Child abuse 265-6w

Chile
325w
Arms trade 170-1w

China
Export controls 328w
Foreign policy 328w
Narcotics 308w
Radar 328w
Tibet 328-9w

Chlorofluorocarbons
Air pollution control 156w
Recycling 206w
Wales 206w

Chope, Mr Christopher, Under-Secretary of State for the Environment
Questions
Community charge, Administrative costs 159w
Community charge, Low incomes 362w
Community charge, Merchant seamen 165w
Community charge, Nottingham 363w
Community charge, Oxfordshire 163w
Community charge, Personal income 81-2w
Community charge, Transitional relief 81w, 363w
Council house sales 158-9w
Defective housing, Liverpool City Council 162w
Government buildings, Energy conservation 82w
Government grants to local authorities, Public sector earnings 163w
Homelessness, Advisory services 80-1w
Homelessness, Government grants to voluntary organisations 81w
Homelessness, Greater London 166w
Homelessness, Nottingham 364w
House renovation grants 251w
Housing associations, Capital investment 364-5w
Housing associations, Training 365w
Housing estates, Tenants' choice 158w
Housing investment programmes, Waltham Forest 87-8w
Housing starts, Economic regions 250w
Local government borrowing, Local government expenditure 156-8w
Local government expenditure, Oxfordshire County Council 163w
Local government finance, Oxfordshire County Council 163w
London housing associations training scheme 365-6w
Norman Shaw buildings, Smoke & chimney gases 165w
Owner occupied housing, Inner city areas 158w
Palace of Westminster, Energy costs 363w
Palace of Westminster, Gun sports 88w, 248-9w
Population, Revenue support grant 160w
Population projection, Local government finance 160w
Standard spending assessments, Census of population 248w
Standard spending assessments, Child protection registers 160w
Standard spending assessments, Pre-school education 159w
Standard spending assessments, Road works 249-50w
Standard spending assessments, Social security recipients 362w
Steel framed houses 165w
Uniform business rate 250w, 367-8w
Uniform business rate, Yorkshire & Humberside 159w

Christianity
Religious broadcasting 108w

Christmas bonus
147-8w
Pensioners 423

Christmas Island
239w

Chromic acid
Wales 43-4w
Water supply 42-4w

Churchill, Mr Winston
Questions
Ministry of Defence, Compensation 242w
Nepal, Trade barriers 320w
Tax allowances, Children 424w
War widows' pensions, Costs 112-3w

City grants
88w

City of London (Spitalfields Market) Bill 1987/88
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

City of London (Various Powers) Bill 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

City technology colleges
School catchment areas 353w

Civil Aviation Authority
78-9w
Public sector borrowing (23:11:89) 246

Civil Aviation Authority (Borrowing Powers) Bill 1989/90
Debates etc.
1R (23:11:89) 246

Civil servants
Dept of Employment 455w
Official secrets 455w
Pay comparability 435

Civil servants' secondment
Dept of Employment 18w

Civil servants' visits abroad
WE 177 nuclear bomb 355w

Civil service
Ethnic minorities 435-6
Ethnic monitoring 435
Training 119w

Civil service agencies
437-8
Dept of Social Security local offices 153-4w
Employment Service 458w
Royal Mint 14w

Civil Service College
119w

Civil service dispersal
Cambridge 194-5w
Dept of Health 98w
East Midlands 436-7
Inland Revenue 1-2w
Leeds 580
Treasury 120w

Civil service manpower
429-30w
10 Downing Street 442w
Disabled workers 335w
Engineers 404-5w
Environment protection 161w
Privatisation 171w
Surveying 346-7w
Tax evasion 458w
Training Agency 278w

Civil service pensions
Index linking 172-4w

Civil service unions
434, 436-7
119w
Pay 434
Training 435

Clark, Mr Alan, Minister of State for Defence Procurement*
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 360
Questions
Aircraft engines 232w
Arms exports 237w
Challenger tanks, Defence contracts 237w
Challenger tanks, Vickers Defence Systems 574-5
Defence contracts, Ferranti 235w
Defence contracts, Small businesses 244-5w
Defence industries, Exports 575
EH 101 helicopters, Aircraft engines 232w
European fighter aircraft, Radar 239w
Helicopters, Armed forces deployment 358w
Nuclear weapons, Defence procurement 572
Nuclear weapons, Tornado aircraft 572
Rescue services, Helicopters 568
Tanker aircraft, Defence procurement 230-1w
Trident 236w
Trident missiles 236w
Trident missiles, Brookings Institution 570
Trident missiles, Lobbying 357-8w, 569-70
Trident missiles, Nuclear weapons deployment 570
WE 177 nuclear bomb 231w
WE 177 nuclear bomb, Defence procurement 354-5w, 572
WE 177 nuclear bomb, France 354w
WE 177 nuclear bomb, Modernisation 231w

Clark, Dr David
Debates etc.
Straw burning (30:11:89) 869
Questions
Animal feed, Lead 477-8w
Animal products, Food industry 134w
Bovine somatotropin, Testing 476w
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy, Cattle 134w
Farms, Compensation 109-10w, 115w, 133-4w
Farms, Radioactivity 94-5w, 109w, 115w, 133w
Fishing limits, Isle of Man 132w
Microwave ovens 477w
Milk, Food contamination 133w
Milk, Listeria monocytogenes 100w, 135w
Pesticides, Licensing 133w
Pesticides, Research 467-76w
Poultry, Salmonella 134-5w
Radioactive fallout, Compensation 95w
State Veterinary Service 134w
Veterinary Manpower & Education Review Committee 476-7w
Veterinary Products Committee 477w

Clark, Sir William
Questions
Car industry, Foreign investment in UK 834

Clarke, Rt Hon Kenneth, Secretary of State for Health*
Debates etc.
National Health Service & Community Care Bill, 1R (22:11:89) 116
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 449-63
Questions
Ambulance services, Trade unions 37w
Haemophilia, AIDS 11-2w

Clarke, Mr Tom
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 467
Questions
Employment protection 269w
Ethiopia, Famine 417w

Clarke, Mr Tom—continued*
Greece 321w

Clay, Mr Bob
Questions
NHS finance 422w
Nuclear weapons tests, Exservicemen 239w

Clelland, Mr David
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 71-6
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 588
Questions
Challenger tanks, Vickers Defence Systems 575

Cleveland
Unemployment 454w

Clifton
193w

Closed shop
Complaints 377-8w
EC social charter 836

Clothier Committee
see Gene Therapy Ethics Committee

Clwyd, Mrs Ann
Debates etc.
Ethiopia, Famine (27:11:89) 439
Standing Order No 20 applications, Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 714, 716
Questions
Chemical weapons 240w
Development aid, Nicaragua 195w
Nicaragua, Overseas aid 199-200w
Southern Africa, Debts 200-2w

Coal
Electricity generation 76w
Exports 177w

Coal consumption
Industrial energy consumption 177w

Coal fired power stations
Research finance 404w

Coal Industry Bill 1989/90
Debates etc.
1R (23:11:89) 246

Coal mine closures
252-3w

Coal mining
176w
Capital investment 448w
Industrial wastes 448w
Manpower 176w
Redundancy 401w
Selby 448w
Subsidence 405w

Coal Mining Subsidence Compensation Independent Review
405w

Coats Viyella
Government assistance to industry 95w

COCOM
see Coordinating Committee on Export Controls

Codes of practice
Lindane 364w

COE
see Council of Europe

Cohen, Mr Harry
Questions
Armed forces casualties, Suffield 358-9w
Arms control negotiations 326w
Capital movements 420w
Defence expenditure, Autumn statement 573
District health authorities, Hospitals 407w
HMS Invincible, Lifts 358-9w

Cohen, Mr Harry—continued
HMS Upholder, Torpedoes 359w
Hospital closures, Wanstead Hospital 407w
Housing investment programmes, Waltham Forest 87-8w
Laser-guided bombs, USA 435w
WE 177 nuclear bomb 231w
Whipps Cross Hospital, Red alerts 407w

Coleman, Mr Donald
Debates etc.
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 542
Questions
Business statements 844

Coleraine
Level crossings 272w

College councils
Further education colleges 185-6w
Scotland 185-6w

Colombia
Drug crimes 307w

Columbus space station
287-8w

Colvin, Mr Michael
Questions
Air transport, Treaties 274w
East Germany, EC external relations 312w
EC social charter 711-2
Helicopters, Armed forces deployment 358w

Commencement orders
Social Security Act 1989 10w

Commission for Racial Equality
383w
Government grants 383w

Commission of the European Communities
see European Commission

Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members
377-8w
Operating costs 378w

Commissioners of Irish Lights
Public appointments 275w

Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food
340w

Commodity Futures Trading Commission
466w

Commodity markets
Investor protection 466w
USA 466w

Common agricultural policy
Costs 194w

Common fisheries policy
Isle of Man 131w

Common land
Nature conservation 87w
Road construction 182w

Common Land Forum
87w

Common sheep meat regime
Wales 449w

Commonwealth
South Africa 322w

Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre
340w

Communication engineering
Cambodia 357w
Thailand 357w

Community care
(22:11:89) 116, 422
Government grants to local authorities 102w

Community care—continued
Local government functions 101-2w
Scotland 214w
Social Fund 149w
Social security benefits 422
Wales 203-4w

Community charge
431w, 435-6w
Administrative costs 159w
Death 395-6w
Elderly 248w
Low incomes 362w
Merchant seamen 165w, 185w
Nottingham 363w
One parent families 248w
Oxfordshire 163w
Personal income 81-2w
Registrar General 36-7w
Sanitation 248w
Scotland 185w, 395-6w
Transitional relief 4w, 81w, 363w

Community charge benefits
146w
West Midlands 87-9w

Community charge exemptions
Wales 205w

Community charge register
Social security claims 213w
Wales 343w

Community health services
410w

Community hospitals
221w, (28:11:89) 685-92
Costs 220-1w
NHS internal market 223w

Community programme
Energy conservation 8w

Company accounts
Prosecutions 349-50w

Company finance
120w

Company investigations
Barlow Clowes 465w
Guinness 285w
James Ferguson Holdings 285-6w
Rights of accused 95w

Company liquidations
Footwear industry 284w
Textile industry 284w

Compensation
Acid rain 401w
Farms 109-10w, 115w, 133-4w, 257w
Haemophilia 295w, 410-2w
Independent Broadcasting Authority 173w
Ministry of Defence 242w
Nuclear weapons tests 573-4
Radioactive fallout 95w
USSR 1w

Competition
Bus services 78w, 439w
Environment protection 161-2w

Complaints
Closed shop 377-8w
Prisoners 175-6w

Comprehensive schools
Student numbers 21-3w

Comptroller & Auditor General
see National Audit Office

Computers
Balance of trade 458-9w
Imports 167w
Social security payments 430

Computers in Government departments
Dept of Social Security 145-6w
Dept of Social Security local offices 430
Foreign & Commonwealth Office 418w

Computers in National Health Service
226-9w

Concessionary fares
Pensions 143w

Confederation of British Industry
25w, 422w, 425w, 832-3
Interest rates 419w

Conference on Security & Cooperation in Europe
see European Security Conference

Conferences
Energy 254w

Conflict of interests
Independent Broadcasting Authority 173-4w

Congenital abnormalities
Abortion 100w

Congenital Disabilities (Civil Liability) Act 1976
Questions
100w

Conservation
Gibraltar 237w

Conservative Party
Party conferences 427
Party leaders 696

Construction
Kirkham Prison 393w

Consultants
Government departments 266w
London assessment studies 182w
Scarisbrick-Pinfold bypass 181w
Student loans 50w

Consumer credit
428w

Consumer expenditure
Taxation 824
VAT 823-4

Consumer goods
Imports 267w, 822

Consumer protection
Food industry 190w
Food poisoning 340w
Telephone services 92-3w, 109w

Consumption
Investment 420w

Contracts
Nuclear fuel reprocessing 385w
Road works 183w

Contracts for services
Ambulance services 409w
NHS 18w

Contracts of employment
Family doctors 220w, 278w, 281w
Ministerial policy advisors 32w

Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988
Questions
20w

Conventional weapons
230w, 233w
Arms control negotiations 97w

Convictions
Safety belts 259-64w
West Midlands Police 385w

Cook, Mr Frank
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 310
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 367, 378-80
Questions
Lance missiles, Nuclear weapons deployment 231w

Cook, Mr Robin
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 442-9, 458
Questions
Military vehicles, Ambulance services 34w

Coombs, Mr Anthony
Questions
Chemical weapons, USSR 244w
Confederation of British Industry 425w
NATO, Armed forces strength 243-4w
Poland 313w
Redundancy Fund 381w
Taxation, Consumer expenditure 824

Coombs, Mr Simon
Debates etc.
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 865
Questions
Cable television 383-4w
Drug abuse, International conferences 308w
Satellite broadcasting 381w

Coordinating Committee on Export Controls
36w

Cope, Rt Hon John, Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office
Questions
Buildings, Slieve Croob 345-6w
Flags, Festivals & special occasions 346w
Kincora Children's Home, Public inquiries 195-6w

Corbett, Mr Robin
Questions
Birmingham Airport 78w
Broadcasting, Public appointments 174w
Broadcasting Complaints Commission, Pay 104w
Cruse, Government grants to voluntary organisations 99w
Independent Broadcasting Authority, Compensation 173w
Independent Broadcasting Authority, Conflict of interests 173-4w
Independent Broadcasting Authority, Pay 103-4w
Official secrets, Public appointments 174w
Radio frequencies, International cooperation 93w
Television channels 105w

Corbyn, Mr Jeremy
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 249-50, 267
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 397
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 472, 474-5
Questions
Ambulance services, Greater London 37w
Ambulance services, Industrial disputes 37w
Ambulance services, Trade unions 37w
Appeals, Director of Public Prosecutions 28-31w
Armed forces, Industrial disputes 34w
Balance of trade, Iran 170w
Bombings, Birmingham 31w
Business statements 242
Central America, Peace keeping operations 321-2w
Chemical & biological warfare, Defence procurement 35w
Coordinating Committee on Export Controls 36w
El Salvador, Overseas aid 27w
Export credit guarantees, Iraq 169-70w
Freight transport 26w
Homelessness, Greater London 166w
Iraq, British embassies 36w
Kurdistan, Iraq 35w
Kurdistan, Turkey 35w
Kurdistan, United Nations 35-6w
Military vehicles, Ambulance services 33w
Ministry of Defence, Disclosure of information 564
NHS finance 422w

Corbyn, Mr Jeremy—continued
Overseas trade, Iraq 93w
Trade promotion, Iraq 288w

Cormack, Mr Patrick
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 954
Questions
Business statements 847

Corporation tax
Capital investment 825
Foreign investment in UK 825-6
OECD countries 824-5
Small businesses 824-5

Cost benefit analysis
Railway transport 184w

Cost effectiveness
Ministry of Defence 235w

Cost of living
Blind 371-2w

Couchman, Mr James
Questions
Arts Council, Government grants 123w, 125w
Royal Mint, Civil service agencies 14w
Spain 321w

Council house sales
158-9w

Council housing
Handicapped 115w

Council of Europe
327w, 414w
Eastern Europe 709
European Convention on Human Rights 709

Council tenants
Rents to mortgages scheme 279w

Councillors' attendance allowances
Rural areas 110w
Scotland 110w

Counterfeit manufacturing
Drugs 217w, 293-4w

Countryside Commission for Scotland
186-7w

Countryside Council for Wales
16-7w

Courier services
Motorcycles 181w

Court of Appeal
31w
Appeals 28-31w

Court orders
385w

Cousins, Mr Jim
Questions
Blood transfusion services, NHS hospital trusts 301w
Blood transfusion services, Northern Regional Health Authority 301w
Business education, Educational finance 258w
Business education, Student numbers 258w
Departmental correspondence, Administrative delays 432-3w
Food vouchers, Newcastle upon Tyne 146w
House renovation grants 251w
Housing starts, Economic regions 250w
Patrol craft 242w
Royal Shakespeare Company, Newcastle upon Tyne 128w
Speech therapy, Research 302w
Standard spending assessments, Road works 249-50w
Tomography, Regional health authorities 301w

Cox, Mr Tom

Cox, Mr Tom—continued
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 265, 294-5
Questions
Business statements 849
Cyprus 192w, 315w
Defence contracts, Small businesses 244-5w
European Commission, Brittan, Leon 433w
London assessment studies 182w
London assessment studies, Consultants 182w
London assessment studies, Costs 182w
Pensioners 141w
Prison employment, Greater London 437w
Prison population, Men 386-9w
Prisoners on remand, Police custody 389w
Trident missiles, Lobbying 357-8w

CPAG
see Child Poverty Action Group

Cran, Mr James
Debates etc.
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 866
Questions
Business statements 849
Ministry of Defence, Electronic surveillance 565
War widows' pensions 136w
War widows' pensions, Social security recipients 211w

CRE
see Commission for Racial Equality

Cream
Food poisoning 443w

Credit
Banks 422w

Crime
Queen's speech (23:11:89) 247-333
Sentencing 103w

Crime prevention
Drug crimes 307w

Crimes of violence
Statistics 389-90w

Criminal injuries compensation
Administrative delays 390-2w, 397w
Scotland 397w

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board
107w, 390-2w, 397w
Administrative delays 106-7w
Finance 107w

Criminal injuries compensation scheme
390-2w, 397w

Criminal Justice Act 1988
Questions
395w

Criminal proceedings
Magistrates' courts 447w

Crisis loans
216w

Critchley, Mr Julian
Questions
Pharmacies, Family practitioner committees 301-2w

Crown Committee
see Nurse Prescribing Working Group

Crown Suppliers
Privatisation (22:11:89) 115-6

Crowther, Mr Stan
Questions
Bottle banks, Local authorities 436w
Iran, Capital punishment 333w
Licensed premises, Landlord & tenant 91-2w

Cruse
Government grants to voluntary organisations 98-9w

Cryer, Mr Bob
Debates etc.
Access to Parliament, Metropolitan Police (21:11:89) 2
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 26
Self-governing hospitals, Public petitions (24:11:89) 344
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 534
Standing Order No 20 applications, Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 714
Questions
Business statements 232-3, 852
Civil service unions 119w
Factory Inspectorate, Yorkshire & Humberside 454w
Interest rates, Manufacturing industries 420w
Railway network, Bradford 183w
Small businesses, Bankruptcy 827-8
Trident 236w
West Yorkshire, Official visits 577

CSCE
see European Security Conference

Cumbria
Fishery agreements 478w

Cummings, Mr John
Questions
Gaza Strip, Overseas aid 452w
Navy, Armed forces strength 238w
Roads 276w

Cunliffe, Mr Lawrence
Questions
NHS finance 422w

Cunningham, Dr John
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 665-70
Standing Order No 20 applications, Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 715-6
Questions
Business statements 227-8, 839-40
Fishing limits, Isle of Man 131-2w
London Underground 78w
Palace of Westminster, Television engineering 362w
Palace of Westminster, Televisions 362-3w
Regional fisheries advisory committees 83w
Rivers advisory committees 83w
Water authorities, Trusts 84w

Curriculum
Education & industry 206w
History education 350w, 434w
Primary education 351w
Special education 203w
Teacher training 49w
Wales 202w

Currie, Mrs Edwina
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 36
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 135-6
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 503-6
Questions
Business statements 234
Corporation tax, Foreign investment in UK 825-6
East Germany 191w
Poland 434w
Public expenditure 421w

Curry, Mr David, Parliamentary Secretary for Agriculture
Questions
Dairy farming, Production quotas 399-400w
EC Agriculture Council 190w
EC Fisheries Council 187w
Eggs, Imports 304w
Farm & conservation grants scheme, Government grants 306w
Fisheries, Drift nets 32w
Fishing limits, Isle of Man 131-2w

Curry, Mr David—continued
Fishing vessels, Drift nets 32w
Food industry, Consumer protection 190w
Hill livestock allowances 190w, 399w
Import quotas, Eastern Europe 303-4w
Milk, Lead poisoning 303w
Sheep premiums, EC law 399w
White fish, Fishing quotas 132-3w

Custodial treatment
Young offenders 385w

Cyprus
192w, 254w, 315w
Arms exports 361w
Arms trade 420w

Czechoslovakia
323w
Journalists 323w

Dairy farming
Production quotas 399-400w

Dairy products
Guaranteed prices 399-400w

Dalai Lama
329w

Dalton-in-Furness bypass
Road construction 181w

Dalyell, Mr Tam
Debates etc.
Holroyd, Fred, Books (29:11:89) 811-4
Oral questions (22:11:89) 113
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 22, 33, 38, 45
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 120, 125, 198-201, 213-4
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 463
Standing Order No 20 applications, Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 717
Questions
Adoption, Babies 302w
Higher civil servants, Disclosure of information 436
Joint European Torus, Research finance 77w
Kincora Children's Home 90w
Kincora Children's Home, Public inquiries 195-6w
Mobility allowance, Social security recipients 371w
Nutrition labelling 31-2w, 136w
Power station closures, Costs 77w

Damages
Discrimination 264-5w
Scottish legal system 277-8w

Darling, Mr Alistair
Questions
Air traffic, Scotland 78-9w
Edinburgh-Glasgow railway, Railway electrification 277w
Genetics, Blood tests 106w
Import penetration, Manufactured goods 282w
Nicaragua, Elections 325w
Political refugees 394w
Universities, Rates & rating 111w

Data processing
Electronic equipment 465w

Davies, Rt Hon Denzil
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 642-3
Questions
Tax allowances, Health insurance 425w

Davies, Mr Quentin
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 749
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 590
Straw burning (30:11:89) 874
Questions
Burma, Elections 323w

Davies, Mr Ron
Questions
Animal feed, Lead 135w
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy 305-6w
Cattle, Hormone treatments 478w
Hill livestock allowances 399w
Local authorities, Trees 82w
Meat, Enzymes 306w
Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries & Food, Government laboratories 451w
Nature Conservancy Council, Cardiff Bay barrage 448w
Nature conservation, Birds 398w
Offal, Research 306w
River pollution, River Rhymney 116-7w
Water pollution, Agriculture 86w
Water pollution, Hazardous materials 116w
WE 177 nuclear bomb, Defence procurement 572

Davies Committee
see National Curriculum Geography Working Group

Davis, Mr David
Debates etc.
Village schools, Humberside (30:11:89) 930-3
Questions
Employment Service, Civil service agencies 458w

Davis, Mr Terry
Debates etc.
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 862
Questions
Chile 325w
Oil pollution, Prosecutions 441w
Social Fund 137-8w

Day, Mr Stephen
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 507-8
Questions
Independent Living Fund, Handicapped 138w

Day nurseries
Taxation 423w

Deaf
Mobility allowance 371w
Public petitions (24:11:89) 343, 344
Television programmes (22:11:89) 217, (24:11:89) 343, 344, (27:11:89) 554, 555, (28:11:89) 684, (29:11:89) 810, (30:11:89) 929

Deal barracks
Marines 569

Death
Community charge 395-6w
Heating allowances 425
Motorways 439-40w
Railway track 344-5w

Debts
427w
Southern Africa 200-2w

Defective housing
Liverpool City Council 162w

Defence
230w, 234w
Diplomatic service 198w
East west relations 240w
Queen's speech (24:11:89) 345-410
USSR 232w

Defence contracts
Challenger tanks 237w
Devonport dockyard 239w
Ferranti 235w
Small businesses 244-5w

Defence equipment
Disclosure of information 114w

Defence expenditure
230w, 232-3w, 241w, 359-60w, 572-3
Autumn statement 573

Defence expenditure—continued
NATO 236w
USA 238w
West Germany 573

Defence industries
Exports 575

Defence land
Otterburn 360w
Trespass 360w

Defence procurement
British Aerospace 354-5w
Chemical & biological warfare 35w
Employment 360w
Nuclear weapons 572
Tanker aircraft 230-1w
Trident submarines 113w
Type 23 frigates 231w
Warsaw Pact 358w
WE 177 nuclear bomb 354-5w, 572

Defence Quality Assurance Directorate
Stockton on Tees 245w

Delatte, Yves
289-90w

Delivery of service in the 90s
Dept of Social Security 153w

Delors, Jacques
418w

Delta Te immune support therapy
Imports 289-90w
Research 290w
Trade descriptions 92w

Democracy
Eastern Europe 316-7w, 572-3, 577-8
Hungary 317w
Nicaragua 698
Overseas broadcasting 696
Poland 317w, 701-2

Demonstrations
Blood sports 393w

Departmental circulars
Child abuse 179w
Headteachers 350-1w
Pharmacies 294w

Departmental coordination
Drug crimes 697

Departmental correspondence
Administrative delays 432-3w, 436-7w
Law officers 436
Primary education 350w
St Mary's School Bulwell 178w

Departmental forms
Census of population 444w
Quota of disabled workers 457w

Departmental publications
Dept of Trade & Industry 92w

Departmental responsibilities
Speaker's rulings & statements (27:11:89) 539

Dept of Employment
252w
Civil servants 455w
Civil servants' secondment 18w

Dept of Health
Civil service dispersal 98w

Dept of Social Security
153-4w, 580
Computers in Government departments 145-6w
Delivery of service in the 90s 153w

Dept of Social Security local offices
Civil service agencies 153-4w
Computers in Government departments 430
Hackney 427
Lost working days 152w

Dept of Social Security special investigators
Social security abuse 211-2w

Dept of the Environment
161w, 361w

Dept of Trade & Industry
Departmental publications 92w

Dept of Trade inquiries
90-1w

Derbyshire
Employment 267w

Derelict land grants
88w

Design initiative
Finance 38w

Destroyers
113w

Detention centres
Young offenders 384w

Development aid
Burundi 334w
Nicaragua 195w

Development Board for Rural Wales
338w
Property transfer 338w
Rents to mortgages scheme 338w

Development plans
East Anglia 164w

Devlin, Mr Tim
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 586
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 134
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 448
Questions
Arts Support Review Group, Northern region 432-3
Business statements 241
Defence Quality Assurance Directorate, Stockton on Tees 245w
Foreign & Commonwealth Office, Computers in government departments 418w
Iran-Iraq war, Peace negotiations 95-6w
Poland, Overseas aid 315-6w
Unemployment, Northern region 267-8w

Devolution
Scotland 577

Devon
Arts grants 127w

Devon & Cornwall Police
385w

Devonport dockyard
Defence contracts 239w

Dewar, Mr Donald
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 672-3
Questions
Hazardous wastes, Imports 186w

Dicks, Mr Terry
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 675

Diplomatic bags
Security 453w

Diplomatic relations
El Salvador 312w

Diplomatic service
Defence 198w
Israel 96w
Kurdistan 35w
Malawi 98w
Thailand 198w

Dir79/409/EEC
398w

Director of Public Prosecutions
Appeals 28-31w

Disability Benefits Consortium
152w

"Disabled Adults"
379w

Disabled child premium
Income support 215w

Disabled workers
379-80w
Civil service manpower 335w
EC countries 268w
Employment 131w
Employment Service 455-6w
Prosecutions 455w

Disablement resettlement officers
Employment Service 456w
Job centres 457w
Manpower 456-7w

Disaster relief
Ethiopia 255w
Military aid to civil community 237w
Montserrat 415w

Disclosure of information
237w
Armed forces training 355w
Army in Northern Ireland 564
Child abuse 175w
Defence equipment 114w
Electricity area boards 405w
Government departments 432w
Higher civil servants 436
Law officers 436
Ministry of Defence 564-5

Discrimination
Damages 264-5w

Dismissal
Magistrates 446w

District health authorities
Hospitals 407w

Dobson, Mr Frank
Questions
British Coal Corporation, Interest rates 403w
Coal mining, Subsidence 405w
Electrical control equipment, Accidents 402w
Electrical control equipment, Safety 75-6w, 402-3w
Electrical technology, Ministers' domestic visits 405w
Electrical technology, Polychlorinated biphenyl 405w
Electricity area boards, Apprentices 75w
Electricity area boards, Disclosure of information 405w
Electricity area boards, Prosecutions 403w
Electricity generation, Coal 76w
Electricity generation, Nuclear Electric 403w
Electricity generation, Nuclear power stations 404w
Electricity generation, Prices 403w
Energy research 403-4w
Engineers, Civil service manpower 404-5w
London Zoo, Salmonella 86w
Natural gas production, Imports 448w
Nuclear power stations, Research finance 404w
Redundant mineworkers' payments scheme 403w

Docklands light railway
Railway network 83w

DOE
see Dept of the Environment

Dogs
Animal breeding 165w

Domestic service
Overseas workers 209w, 384w

Doran, Mr Frank
Questions
Child benefit 144-5w
Nuclear weapons tests, Exservicemen 573-4

Douglas, Mr Dick
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 345, 382-4, 404
Questions
Trident missiles 236w
Trident missiles, Brookings Institution 570

Douglas-Hamilton, Lord James, Under-Secretary of State for Scotland
Questions
Bypasses, Nairn 112w
Caledonian MacBrayne, Public appointments 111w
Community charge, Death 395-6w
Community charge, Merchant seamen 185w
Councillors attendance allowances, Rural areas 110w
Councillors attendance allowances, Scotland 110w
Criminal injuries compensation, Administrative delays 397w
Damages, Scottish legal system 277-8w
Edinburgh-Glasgow railway, Railway electrification 277w
Farms, Compensation 109-10w
Farms, Radioactivity 109w
Forestry, Government grants 111-2w
Legal aid, Fees & charges 398w
Nature conservation, Birds 398w
Personal records, Scotland 110w
Prison population, Scotland 277w
Public sector housing sales, Scottish Homes 280w
Rents to mortgages scheme, Council tenants 279w
Rents to mortgages scheme, Scotland 280w
Rents to mortgages scheme, Television advertising 279w
Scottish Homes, Housing estates 280w
Universities, Rates & rating 111w

Down District Council
Road finance 269w
Roads 270w

DPP
see Director of Public Prosecutions

Drama
West Glamorgan 335w

Drift nets
Fisheries 32w
Fishery protection 36w
Fishing vessels 32w
Japan 36w

Driving instruction
EC countries 440w
Law reform 440w
Road accidents 440w

Driving tests
438-9w

Dromara
Buildings 270w

Drug abuse
307-8w
International conferences 308w, 697
United Nations 307w

Drug crimes
Armed forces 241w
Colombia 307w
Crime prevention 307w
Departmental coordination 697
EC countries 697-8
Extradition 704
International cooperation 386w, 697
South America 413w

Drugs
Counterfeit manufacturing 217w, 293-4w
Licensing 101w

DSS
see Dept of Social Security

DTI
see Dept of Trade & Industry

Duffy, Mr A E P
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 600, 638-40
Questions
Corporation tax, Capital investment 825
Helicopters, 24 Airmobile Brigade 234w
Industrial investment 422w
International conferences, Malta 706

Dunchurch
434w

Dunn, Mr Bob
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 488-9
Questions
Bus services, Competition 78w
Business statements 236, 848
Community care 422

Dunnachie, Mr Jimmy
Questions
Disabled workers, Employment 131w
Handicap benefits, Personal income 147w
National Subtitling Library for Deaf People, Government grants to voluntary organisations 451w

Dunwoody, Mrs Gwyneth
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 251, 262
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 350, 368, 390-1
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 460
Questions
Child abuse, Children in care 265-6w
Child abuse, Departmental circulars 179w
Child abuse, Government departments 191w
Child abuse, Magistrates' courts 385w
Child abuse, Publicity 219w
Child abuse, Teachers 437w
Middle East, Prisoners 314w
Overseas workers, Domestic service 209w, 384w
South Africa, Capital punishment 322w
Young offenders, Custodial treatment 385w
Young offenders, Detention centres 384w
Young offenders, Local authorities 299w
Young offenders, Remand in custody 384-5w

Dyfed
School population 203w

Dykes, Mr Hugh
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 951
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 724-6
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 120
Questions
Business statements 848-9
Child benefit, Family credit 429
China, Foreign policy 328w
Exchange rates, European monetary system 193w
Industrial production, Manufacturing industries 428-9w
Israel, Peace negotiations 705-6
Middle East, Peace negotiations 324w

EAEC
see Euratom

Early retirement
Electricity supply industry 177w

Earnings rules
One parent families 451-2w

East Anglia
Development plans 164w
US bases 354w

East Germany
191w, 312w
Arms control negotiations 563

East Germany—continued
Balance of trade 169w
EC external relations 312w
National Income 172w
NATO 197w, 326w

East London
London assessment studies 25-6w

East Midlands
124w
Arts Support Review Group 431
Civil service dispersal 436-7
Manufacturing industries 121w
New businesses 375-6w
Regional arts associations 431

East Midlands Airport
Air traffic 79w

East Midlands Arts Association
124w

East West relations
564
Defence 240w
Eastern Europe 316w
NATO 577-8

Eastern Europe
317w, 577, (01:12:89) 943-1007
Council of Europe 709
Democracy 316-7w, 572-3, 577-8
East west relations 316w
EC external relations 316-7w
EC immigration 317w
EC integration 707
Food imports 478w
Import quotas 303-4w
NATO 836-7
Overseas trade 283w
Protest movements 710
Socialism 707-8
Treaties 710

Eastham, Mr Ken
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 748-51
Questions
Arts Support Review Group 124w
Central America, Peace keeping operations 321-2w
East west relations, Defence 240w

EC action
Irradiated food 188w
Mergers 39-40w, 289w
Pentachlorophenol 364w
Shipping (29:11:89) 789-809
Tobacco 294-5w

EC Agriculture Council
8-10w, 190w

EC aid
Hungary 91w, 316w
Poland 91w, 316w

EC Budget Council
2-3w

EC Commission
see European Commission

EC Cons Doc 5395/88
(29:11:89) 767-88

EC Cons Doc 8367/89
(29:11:89) 789-809

EC Cons Doc 8368/89
(29:11:89) 789-809

EC Cons Doc 8997/89
(29:11:89) 719-66

EC Consumer Affairs Council
465w

EC countries
Disabled workers 268w
Driving instruction 440w
Drug crimes 697-8
Economic growth 426w, 832

EC countries—continued
Employment level 454w
Extradition 703-4
Haemophilia 295w
Pensions 149w
Unemployment 375w

EC Draft 6552/87
(29:11:89) 767-88

EC Draft 5032/89
(22:11:89) 116

EC Draft 7871/89
(27:11:89) 440

EC Draft 8680/89
(27:11:89) 440

EC Economic & Finance Council
see EC Finance Council

EC Environment Council
368-9w

EC external relations
East Germany 312w
Eastern Europe 316-7w
Nicaragua 698
Poland 197w

EC external trade
Japan (29:11:89) 767-88
Poland 91w

EC Finance Council
421w, 821
War widows' pensions 821

EC Fisheries Council
187w

EC Foreign Affairs Council
91w, 318-20w

EC grants & loans
Railway network 181w

EC immigration
Eastern Europe 317w

EC integration
Eastern Europe 707

EC Internal Market Council
39-40w, 289w

EC internal trade
194w
Financial services 121-2w
Redundancy 208w

EC law
European Commission 318-9w
Extradition 704
Merchant Shipping Act 1988 711
Sheep premiums 399w
Single European Act 710-1
Small businesses 833

EC social charter
194w, 320w, 700-1, 711-2, (29:11:89) 719-66
Closed shop 836
Economic situation 833
European Parliament Members 701
Free movement of labour 700-1
Socialism 700

EC trade
283w

ECAC
see European Civil Aviation Conference

ECGD
see Export Credits Guarantee Department

ECMT
see European Conference of Ministers of Transport

ECOFIN
see EC Finance Council

Economic & monetary union
421w

Economic forecasting
Interest rates 826

Economic growth
428w
EC countries 426w, 832

Economic policy
Balance of payments 430w
Inflation 419w

Economic regions
Employment 20-2w
Housing starts 250w
Regional aid 286-8w

Economic situation
EC social charter 833
Manufacturing industries 832
Overseas trade 828
Population studies 428w
Queen's speech (28:11:89) 584-683
Shorter working week 833

Edinburgh Airport
273w

Edinburgh-Glasgow railway
Railway electrification 277w

Edmonton
193w

Education
Mothers 455w

Education & industry
(30:11:89) 937-40
Curriculum 206w
Teachers 206w
Wales 202-3w, 206w

Education Reform Act 1988
Questions
178-9w

Education Science & Arts Select Committee
(27:11:89) 553

Education (Student Loans) Bill 1989/90
Debates etc.
1R (22:11:89) 116

Education Support Grants (Amendment) Regulations 1989
Debates etc.
(30:11:89) 877

Educational aid
Malawi 73w

Educational finance
49-50w
Business education 258w
Polytechnics & Colleges' Funding Council 351w
Stoke-on-Trent 49w
Student Loans Company 72-3w

Educational visits
Poland 703

Efficiency scrutinies
Government grants to voluntary organisations 103w

EFTA
see European Free Trade Association

Eggar, Mr Tim, Minister of State, Department of Employment*
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 732, 760-3
Questions
Availability for work, Social security recipients 208-9w
Billing, Small businesses 128w
Dept of Employment, Civil servants 455w
Dept of Employment, Civil servants' secondment 18w
Disabled workers, EC countries 268w
Disabled workers, Employment 131w
Disabled workers, Employment Service 455-6w

Eggar, Mr Tim—continued
Disabled workers, Prosecutions 455w
Disablement resettlement officers, Employment Service 456w
Disablement resettlement officers, Job centres 457w
Disablement resettlement officers, Manpower 456-7w
EC internal trade, Redundancy 208w
Employment opportunities, Cheshire 208w
Employment Service 457-8w
Loan guarantee scheme, Agriculture 209w
Local enterprise agencies 268-9w
New businesses, East Midlands 375-6w
Overseas workers, Domestic service 209w
Quota of disabled workers 456-7w
Quota of disabled workers, Departmental forms 457w
Quota of disabled workers, Prosecutions 457w
Small businesses, Government achievements 377w
Small businesses, Government assistance 376-7w
Small Firms Service 207w
Unemployment benefit offices, Hackney 268w
Unemployment benefits, Childbirth 207w
Unemployment benefits, Members 376w

Eggs
Imports 304w

EH 101 helicopters
Aircraft engines 232w

El Salvador
Armed forces 413-4w
British residents abroad 311-2w
Diplomatic relations 312w
Human rights 312w
Military aid 699
Ministers of religion 311w, 413-4w
Overseas aid 27w, 199w
Peace negotiations 311w
USA 311-2w

Elderly
Community charge 248w
Health services 38w
Hypothermia 144w
Social security benefits 372w
Wales 115w

Elections
Burma 323w
Namibia 317w
Nicaragua 325w, 698-700
Occupied territories 315w

Electrical control equipment
Accidents 402w
Safety 75-6w, 402-3w

Electrical technology
Ministers' domestic visits 405w
Polychlorinated biphenyl 405w

Electricity area boards
Apprentices 75w
Disclosure of information 405w
Prosecutions 403w

Electricity at Work Regulations 1989
Questions
20w

Electricity generation
Alternative energy 75w, 176w
Coal 76w
Fossil fuelled power stations 404w
Gas fired power stations 74w
Nuclear Electric 403w
Nuclear power stations 404w
Prices 403w

Electricity supply industry
Early retirement 177w
Government departments 252w
Nuclear power 76w
Privatisation 176w, 252w

Electronic equipment

Electronic equipment—continued
Data processing 465w
UK trade with EC 465w
West Germany 465w

Electronic surveillance
Ministry of Defence 565

Eli Lilley
190w

Emergency calls
99w

Emergency planning
Nuclear submarines 566-7

Emery, Sir Peter
Debates etc.
Procedure Select Committee (22:11:89) 117-8

Emigration
USSR 197w, 328w, 331-2w

Employment
212w, 829-30
Defence procurement 360w
Derbyshire 267w
Disabled workers 131w
Economic regions 20-2w
Film industry 210-2w
Interest rates 830
Publishing 210-2w
Social security reform 140w
Wales 116w, 336w

Employment level
454w
EC countries 454w
Manufacturing industries 374-6w

Employment opportunities
Cheshire 208w
Labour Party 829-30

Employment protection
269w

Employment Service
456-8w
Civil service agencies 458w
Disabled workers 455-6w
Disablement resettlement officers 456w

Employment training
209-10w, 377w
Grampian 397-8w
Scotland 278-9w

Endowment mortgages
94w

Energy
Conferences 254w

Energy conservation
447-8w
Community programme 8w
Government buildings 82w

Energy costs
Palace of Westminster 363w

Energy policy
447w

Energy research
403-4w

Energy Select Committee
(27:11:89) 553

Engineering Council
352w

Engineering education
Polytechnics 351-2w
Polytechnics & Colleges' Funding Council 352w
Staff-student ratios 351-2w

Engineers
Civil service manpower 404-5w

English Heritage
see Historic Buildings & Monuments Commission for England

English language
192w

Enterprise initiative
376-7w

Entry clearances
Pakistan 320w

Environment
Information services 366w
Interest groups 162-3w, 400w
Queen's speech (22:11:89) 119-217

Environment protection
160-1w
Civil service manpower 161w
Competition 161-2w
International cooperation 247w

Environmental impact assessment
Armed forces training 233w

Environmental policy
Local authorities 369w

Enzymes
Meat 306w

EP Committee on Legal Affairs & Citizens' Rights
266w, 385-6w

Equal Opportunities Commission
423w

Equal pay
209w

Estate agents
Training 284-5w

Estate Agents Act 1979
Questions
284-5w

Ethiopia
Disaster relief 255w
Famine 417w
Information 417w

Ethnic groups
Armed forces recruitment 243w

Ethnic minorities
Civil service 435-6
Government grants to local authorities 438w
Higher civil servants 435

Ethnic monitoring
Civil service 435

Euratom
400-1w

Europe
Armed forces strength 570
Arms control negotiations 707

European Assembly
see European Parliament

European Atomic Energy Community
see Euratom

European Civil Aviation Conference
275w

European Commission
131w, 294-5w, 303-4w, 306w, 320w, 418w, (30:11:89) 857-67
Brittan, Leon 433w
EC law 318-9w

European Communities
319-20w
Arts 329w
Hong Kong 308-9w
Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 767

European Communities (Definition of Treaties) (European School) Order 1989
Debates etc.
(27:11:89) 440

European Communities (Privileges of the European School) Order 1989
Debates etc.
(27:11:89) 440

European Conference of Ministers of Transport
343-4w

European Convention on Human Rights
Council of Europe 709

European Council
194w, 319w, 434w

European Environment Agency
366w, 368-9w
Industries 366w
Operating costs 366w
Property rights 366w

European fighter aircraft
Radar 239w

European Free Trade Association
710-1

European Legislation Select Committee
Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 719-20, 741

European monetary system
Exchange rates 171w, 193w, 422-3w, 578, 821-2, 830
Interest rates 423w

European Parliament
710-1

European Parliament Members
EC social charter 701

European Security Conference
(24:11:89) 345-410, (01:12:89) 943-1007

Eurorail
79w

Euros
(29:11:89) 789-809

Eurotunnel
184-5w

Evans, Mr David
Questions
Challenger tanks, Defence contracts 237w
Motorways, Road tolls 80w
Personal equity plans 424w
Social security, Expenditure 138w
South Africa, Commonwealth 322w

Evans, Mr John
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 622-5
Questions
Blind, Aids for handicapped 300w
Blind, St Helen's & Knowsley Health Authority 407-8w
Data processing, Electronic equipment 465w
Handicapped, Hospital consultants 224w
Hospital closures, St Helens & Knowsley Health Authority 223w
Industrial relations law, Trade unions 207w
Interest rates, Small businesses 420w
Lebanon, Prisoners 326w
Mersey Regional Health Authority, Finance 224w
NATO, Defence expenditure 236w
Patients, St Helen's & Knowsley Health Authority 224w
Privatisation, Civil service manpower 171w
Social Fund 138w
St Helen's & Knowsley Health Authority, Capital investment 224w
Trade unions, Industrial relations 702

Evennett, Mr David
Questions
Drug crimes, Crime prevention 307w

Ewing, Mr Harry
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 604, 606

Ewing, Mrs Margaret
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 29, 65-9
Questions
Attendance allowance, Medical examinations 151w
Business statements 231
Criminal injuries compensation, Administrative delays 390-2w, 397w
Damages, Discrimination 264-5w
Damages, Scottish legal system 277-8w
Interest rates, Scotland 420w
Legal aid, Fees & charges 398w
Prison population, Scotland 277w
School boards, Scotland 396w
Taxation, Widows' benefits 173w
Teachers, Manpower 396w
Teachers, Pay 397w
Teachers, Scotland 397w
Trident 236w
Youth training scheme, Grampian 397-8w

Exchange rates
822
European monetary system 171w, 193w, 422-3w, 578, 821-2, 830
Free movement of capital 831
Inflation 828, 831
Mark 831-2

Export controls
China 328w

Export credit guarantees
348w
Iraq 169-70w

Export Credits Guarantee Department
347w

Export Credits Guarantee Department Working Group
348w

Export-import ratios
Balance of payments 823

Exports
Coal 177w
Defence industries 575
Foreign exchange 424w

Exservicemen
Nuclear weapons tests 239w, 241-2w, 573-4

Extensification schemes
Farmers 830-1

External financing limits
British Coal Corporation 14w

Extradition
Drug crimes 704
EC countries 703-4
EC law 704
Harmonisation of legislation 703-4
Hong Kong 452w

F111 aircraft
243w

FAC
see Food Advisory Committee

Factory Inspectorate
269w
Administrative delays 19w
Manpower 454w
Yorkshire & Humberside 454w

Fair Trading Act 1973
Questions
39w

Families
Social security benefits 140w, 442w

Family credit
Administrative delays 426
Child benefit 426, 429
Expenditure 46-7w
Take-up 141-2w, 425-6

Family doctors
Budgeting 220-1w
Contracts of employment 220w, 278w, 281w

Family doctors—continued
Hospitals 220w
Personnel 411w
Scotland 278w, 281w
Vaccination 224-5w

Family income supplements
Take-up 142w

Family practitioner committees
Pharmacies 301-2w

Famine
Ethiopia 417w

Far East
Footwear 94w

Farm & conservation grants scheme
Government grants 306w

Farm & countryside initiative
17w

Farmers
Extensification schemes 830-1
Interest rates 830
Retirement 136w

Farmers' Union of Wales
Interest rates 257w

Farms
Compensation 109-10w, 115w, 133-4w, 257w
Radioactivity 94-5w, 109w, 115w, 133-4w
Wales 257w

Farr, Sir John
Questions
A605, Road construction 26w
Anglian Water, Publicity 84w
Bombings, Birmingham 266w, 385-6w
Common land, Nature conservation 87w
Farmers, Retirement 136w
Forestry, Government grants 111-2w
Forestry, Marketing 287w
Forests, Planning permission 86w
Haemophilia, AIDS 101w
Orthopaedics, Hospital waiting lists 101w
Palace of Westminster, Gun sports 88w
Speech therapists, Administrative delays 410w
Speech therapists, Leicestershire Health Authority 407w
Tax allowances, Forestry 173w

Fatchett, Mr Derek
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 26
Questions
Conventional weapons 233w
Social security benefits, Young people 139w

Faulds, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Business questions intervention (30:11:89) 843
Oral question time intervention (30:11:89) 837
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 604-5
Standing Order No 20 applications, Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 716
Questions
Business statements 843
International conferences, Children 414w
Israel, Human rights 705
Middle East, Peace negotiations 314w

Favell, Mr Tony
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 125-6
Questions
Arts sponsorship 127w
Carers premium 428
Dept of Social Security, Computers in Government departments 145w
Heating allowances, Pensioners 425
Social security benefits, Republic of Ireland 45w

FCO
see Foreign & Commonwealth Office

Fearn, Mr Ronnie
Debates etc.
Shipping, EC action (29:11:89) 804-5
Questions
Bus services, Competition 439w
Cambodia 311w
Driving tests 438-9w
European monetary system, Exchange rates 423w
Handicap benefits 213w
Motorcycles, Courier services 181w
Road freight transport 439w
Tibet 198w
War widows' pensions 136w

Fees & charges
Legal aid 398w
Road haulage permits 4-5w
Visas 333w

Fenner, Dame Peggy
Debates etc.
Private Bills (22:11:89) 117

Ferranti
Defence contracts 235w

Fertility
Abortion 216w

Festivals & special occasions
Flags 346w

FEU
see Further education unit

Field, Mr Barry
Debates etc.
Legislative process, Terminology (23:11:89) 225, 245
Oral questions (22:11:89) 114-5
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 585, 610
Shipping, EC action (29:11:89) 790, 794-5, 798-803
Questions
Armed forces deployment, USA 234w
China, Narcotics 308w
Civil service pensions, Index linking 172-4w
Eastern Europe, EC immigration 317w
Income support, Carers' premium 152w
Social security benefits, Young people 421
Waste disposal 364w

Field, Mr Frank
Questions
Attendance allowance, Social security appeals 48w
Defence expenditure 359-60w
Defence procurement, Employment 360w
Overseas aid, Public expenditure 415-6w
River Mersey, Pollution control 366-7w
Student grants 23w
Student grants, Expenditure 23w

Fielding Committee
see National Curriculum Geography Working Group

Fields, Mr Terry
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 989-94
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 475, 489-92
Questions
Defence expenditure 230w
El Salvador, Diplomatic relations 312w
Industrial investment 425w
War widows' pensions, Liverpool 136w

Film industry
Employment 210-2w

Finance Act 1989
Questions
172w

Financial institutions
Student loans 50w
Student Loans Company 71-3w

Financial Intermediaries' Managers' & Brokers' Association
92w

Financial services
EC internal trade 121-2w

Finchley
Ambulance services 90w

Finsberg, Sir Geoffrey
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 371, 384-6

Fire regulations
Health & Safety Executive 20w

Firearms Act 1968
Questions
175w

Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988
Questions
175w

Fires
Bolton 386w

Fisher, Mr Mark
Questions
Arts 267w
Arts, European Communities 329w
Arts finance 432
Business Cooperation Network 285w
Civil service unions 434
Design initiative, Finance 38w
Employment, Publishing 210-2w
Government departments, Disclosure of information 432w
Parliamentary questions, Costs 432w, 442w
Public libraries, Information services 155w
Recording industry, Balance of trade 288-9w

Fisheries
Drift nets 32w
Scotland (21:11:89) 104-12

Fishery agreements
Cumbria 478w

Fishery protection
Drift nets 36w

Fishing gear
Nuclear submarines 567-8

Fishing limits
Isle of Man 131-2w, 478w

Fishing quotas
Scotland 110-2w
White fish 110-2w, 132-3w, 399w

Fishing vessels
Drift nets 32w
Shipping accidents 276w
Submarines 243w

Flags
Festivals & special occasions 346w

Flannery, Mr Martin
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 752
Questions
El Salvador, British residents abroad 311w
Ministry of Defence, Disclosure of information 564
Museums & galleries 127w
VAT, Magazine press 421w

Flexible response
229-30w

Flowers
165w

Flue gas desulphurisation
401w

Fluidised bed combustion
Research finance 401w
Trade promotion 433w

Flynn, Mr Paul
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 125, 214
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 525
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 543-4
Questions
Asthma, Prescription charges exemptions 38w
Chemical weapons, USSR 357w
Flue gas desulphurisation 401w
Heating allowances, Death 425
Independent Broadcasting Authority 381w
Nuclear fuel reprocessing, Contracts 385w
Romania, Human rights 696
Transport of hazardous materials, Chemicals 438w

Food Advisory Committee
303w

Food colourings
303w

Food contamination
Government laboratories 135w
Milk 133w
Slaughterhouses 188w

Food imports
Eastern Europe 478w
Radioactivity 478w

Food industry
Animal products 134w
Consumer protection 190w

Food poisoning
Consumer protection 340w
Cream 443w
Wales 339-40w

Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (Contamination of Feeding Stuff) (England) (No 3) Amendment Order 1989
Debates etc.
(27:11:89) 440

Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (Contamination of Feeding Stuff) (Wales) (No 3) Amendment Order 1989
Debates etc.
(28:11:89) 583

Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (Contamination of Feeding Stuff) (Wales) (No 3) Order 1989
Debates etc.
(27:11:89) 440

Food vouchers
Newcastle upon Tyne 146w

Fookes, Dame Janet
Questions
Astor, Nancy, Women Members 838

Football
Identity cards 370w
Safety standards 128w

Football grounds
128w

Football national membership scheme
370w

Footwear
Far East 94w
Imports 94w

Footwear industry
Company liquidations 284w
Government assistance 466w
Redundancy 380-1w

Foreign Affairs Select Committee
418w

Foreign aid
UN Relief & Works Agency 414w

Foreign & Commonwealth Office
Computers in Government departments 418w

Foreign Compensation (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) (Distribution) Order 1987
Questions
1w

Foreign exchange
Exports 424w

Foreign investment in UK
121w
Car industry 834
Corporation tax 825-6
Water authorities 85w

Foreign patients
Republic of Ireland 102w

Foreign policy
African National Congress 195w
Argentina 322-3w
Cambodia 309w
China 328w
Israel 324w
Palestine Liberation Organisation 332w
Queen's speech (24:11:89) 345-410
USSR 324w
Vietnam 837-8

Foreign relations
Poland 313w

Foreign trade
South Africa 282w

Forestry
Agricultural land 136w
Government grants 111-2w
Marketing 287w
Scotland 111-2w
Tax allowances 173w

Forestry Commission
111-2w

Forests
Planning permission 86w

Forman, Mr Nigel
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 391-3
Questions
Balance of payments, Export-import ratios 823

Forsyth, Mr Michael, Under-Secretary of State for Scotland*
Questions
Family doctors, Contracts of employment 278w, 281w
NHS, Contracts for services 18w
Prescription charges, Income 280-1w
Self-governing hospitals, Scotland 280w

Forsythe, Mr Clifford
Questions
Belfast Airport, Government grants 196w

Forth, Mr Eric, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs*
Questions
British Telecom, Mercury Communications 38w
Cellular phones, Radio reception 168w
Computers, Imports 167w
Data processing, Electronic equipment 465w
Delta Te immune support therapy 92w
Dept of Trade & Industry, Departmental publications 92w
EC Consumer Affairs Council 465w
Estate agents, Training 284-5w
Government grants 38-9w
National Girobank, Privatisation 92w, 283w
Optical fibres, Telecommunications technology 348w
Pyramid selling, Orders & regulations 348-9w
Radio frequencies, International cooperation 93w

Forth, Mr Eric—continued*
Satellite communications 168-9w
Shops, Misrepresentation 281-2w
Telephone services, Consumer protection 92-3w, 109w

Fossil fuel levy
76w

Fossil fuelled power stations
Electricity generation 404w

Foster care
Bolton 410w

Foulkes, Mr George
Debates etc.
Oral question time point of order (27:11:89) 424
Questions
Bank of England 421w
Nicaragua, Elections 699-700
Retirement pensions, Average earnings 423
Shipping accidents, Stornoway 35w
Submarines, Fishing vessels 243w

Fowler, Rt Hon Norman, Secretary of State for Employment*
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 720-31, 760
Questions
Employment Service, Civil service agencies 458w
Tourism 210w

France
WE 177 nuclear bomb 354w

Franks, Mr Cecil
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 377-8
Questions
Berlin 322w
Dalton-in-Furness bypass, Road construction 181w
Trident 236w

Fraser, Mr John
Questions
Arts finance 122w
Czechoslovakia 323w

Free movement of capital
Exchange rates 831

Free movement of labour
EC social charter 700-1

Free votes
War widows' pensions 566

Freeman, Mr Roger, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Dept of Health*
Debates etc.
Health services, Liverpool (28:11:89) 558-62
NHS finance, Blackpool Wyre & Fylde Health Authority (22:11:89) 221-4
Victoria Hospital Accrington (28:11:89) 689-92
Questions
Abortion 290w
Abortion, Age 291-3w
Abortion, Babies 442-3w
Abortion, Children 290w
Abortion, Handicapped children 291w
Abortion, Marital status 292-3w
Abortion, Mothers 290-1w
Abortion, Single people 291w
Adoption, Babies 302w
Alternative medicine, NHS 99-100w
Ambulance services, Contracts for services 409w
Ambulance services, Greater London 37w
Ambulance services, Industrial disputes 37w
Basildon & Thurrock Health Authority, Rates & rating 442w
Blind, Aids for handicapped 300w
Blind, St Helen's & Knowsley Health Authority 407-8w

Freeman, Mr Roger—continued*
Blood diseases, Screening 218w
Census of population, Departmental forms 444w
Community care, Government grants to local authorities 102w
Cruse, Government grants to voluntary organisations 98-9w
Dept of Health, Civil service dispersal 98w
District health authorities, Hospitals 407w
Family doctors, Vaccination 224-5w
Food poisoning, Cream 443w
Foreign patients, Republic of Ireland 102w
Handicapped 218w
Health hazards, Poultry 99w
Heart diseases, Medical equipment 412-3w
Hertfordshire & Essex Hospital 100w
Hospital closures, Wanstead Hospital 407w
Hospital patients, Republic of Ireland 102w
Hospitals, Capital investment 219w
Hospitals, Kendal 219w
Huntington's chorea, Screening 219-20w
Medical rehabilitation 410w
Medical treatments 444w
Mentally handicapped, Mental health services 218w
Mersey Regional Health Authority, Finance 224w
Milk, Listeria monocytogenes 100w
NHS, Information technology 226-9w
Orpington Hospital, Capital investment 302w
Patients, St Helen's & Knowsley Health Authority 224w
Pharmacies, Family practitioner committees 301-2w
Population projection, Men 100w
Prescription charges, Income 299w
Registrar General, Population 36-7w
Residential care, Inspection units 102w
Salmonella 101w
Speech therapy, Research 302w
St Helen's & Knowsley Health Authority, Capital investment 224w
Tobacco, EC action 294-5w
Tomography, Regional health authorities 301w
United States Tobacco International, Tobacco 294w
Vaccination, Tetanus 224w
Welfare milk 216w

Freight transport
26w

French, Mr Douglas
Questions
Council house sales 158-9w
Development Board for Rural Wales 338w
Development Board for Rural Wales, Property transfer 338w
Housing estates, Tenants' choice 158w
Industrial training, Skill shortages 375w
Motorcycles, Leg protectors 274w
National insurance benefits 151-2w
National savings 429w
Official engagements 431w
Owner occupied housing, Inner city areas 158w
Public sector housing sales, Scottish Homes 280w
Rents to mortgages scheme, Council tenants 279w
Rents to mortgages scheme, Scotland 280w
Rents to mortgages scheme, Television advertising 279w, 338w
Rents to mortgages scheme, Wales 338w
Scottish Homes, Housing estates 280w

Further education colleges
College councils 185-6w

Further education unit
179-80w

FUW
see Farmers' Union of Wales

Fyfe, Mrs Maria
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 70
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 193-5
War widows' pensions (23:11:89) 340
Questions
Child benefit 144-5w
Day nurseries, Taxation 423w

G7
see Group of Seven

Galbraith, Mr Sam
Questions
Air traffic, Glasgow Airport 274w
Aircraft noise, Glasgow 274w
Aircraft noise, Glasgow Airport 273w
Chemical weapons 240w
Family doctors, Contracts of employment 278w
Hospitals, Capital investment 219w
Pollution control, Polluter pays principle 364w
Self-governing hospitals, Scotland 280w

Gale, Mr Roger
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 729, 733, 748
Straw burning (30:11:89) 871
Questions
Business statements 234-5
Economic situation, EC social charter 833
Extradition, Drug crimes 704

Galloway, Mr George
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 323-4
Questions
Navy, Armed forces strength 238w
Pakistan, Bilateral aid 324w
Social Fund 137-8w

Garages & petrol stations
Lead free petrol 155-6w

Gardens
Gibraltar 200w

Garrett, Mr John
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 663-5
Television programmes, Public petitions (28:11:89) 684

Garrett, Mr Ted
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 663

Gas fired power stations
Electricity generation 74w

Gas flaring
Power industry 447w

Gaza Strip
96w
Overseas aid 452w

GCE A level
179-80w
Age participation rates 21w

GCE AS level
179-80w

GEC
328w

Gene Therapy Ethics Committee
225w

Genetic engineering
Medical treatments 225w

Genetics
Blood tests 106w
Medical research 73-4w

Genocide
Treaties 329-31w

George, Mr Bruce
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 996-1000

Gibraltar
Air transport 200w
Conservation 237w
Gardens 200w

Gill, Mr Christopher
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 131
Questions
Corporation tax, OECD countries 824-5
Eastern Europe 577
EC Agriculture Council 8-10w
European Council 319w
Food colourings 303w
Military balance 230w

Glasgow
196w
Aircraft noise 274w

Glasgow Airport
Air traffic 274w
Aircraft noise 273w

Glyn, Dr Alan
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 69-71

Godman, Dr Norman A
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 968-9, 977
Oral question time intervention (29:11:89) 712
Public Accounts Committee (30:11:89) 887, 892-3, 903-8, 915, 922
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 647
Shipping, EC action (29:11:89) 789-90, 792, 797, 802-3
Questions
Computers, Imports 167w
EC law, Merchant Shipping Act 1988 711
El Salvador, Ministers of religion 311w

Goods vehicles
Lighting 181w

Goodson-Wickes, Dr Charles
Questions
Poland, Overseas aid 315-6w

Gorman, Mrs Teresa
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 201-3, 207-8, 210
Questions
Billericay 35w
Environment, Information services 366w
Environment, Interest groups 162-3w, 400w
Environment protection, Competition 161w
European Environment Agency 366w
European Environment Agency, Industries 366w
European Environment Agency, Operating costs 366w
European Environment Agency, Property rights 366w
Financial services, EC internal trade 121-2w
Housing benefits, Greater London 144w
Official engagements 431w
Oil prices 465w

Gould, Mr Bryan
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 206-11
Questions
Hazardous wastes, Imports 361-2w

Government achievements
Small businesses 377w

Government Actuary
251w

Government assistance
Footwear industry 466w
Sheep 115-6w
Small businesses 376-7w
Textile industry 466w

Government assistance to industry
Coats Viyella 95w
Manufacturing industries 283w

Government buildings
Energy conservation 82w
Property development 157-8w

Government departments
Accountability 193w
Child abuse 191w
Consultants 266w
Disclosure of information 432w
Electricity supply industry 252w
Procurement 266-7w
Water supply industry 361w

Government grants
38-9w
Arts Council 123w, 125w, 431
Arts finance 432
Belfast Airport 196w
Commission for Racial Equality 383w
Farm & conservation grants scheme 306w
Forestry 111-2w
Great Britain-East Europe Centre 703
Urban areas 88w

Government grants to local authorities
Community care 102w
Ethnic minorities 438w
Probation & aftercare 265w
Public sector earnings 163w
Teacher training 24w

Government grants to voluntary organisations
Cruse 98-9w
Efficiency scrutinies 103w
Homelessness 81w
National Subtitling Library for Deaf People 451w

Government laboratories
Food contamination 135w
Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries & Food 451w

"Government Purchasing"
266-7w

Government responses
Hong Kong 418w

Government securities
National Loans Fund 172w

Government shareholding
Welsh Water 118w

Gow, Mr Ian
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Addresses to the Crown (21:11:89) 7-9

Grammar schools
Student numbers 21-3w

Grampian
Employment training 397-8w
Youth training scheme 397-8w

Grant, Sir Anthony
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 630-3
Standing Order No 20 applications, Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 714
Questions
Business statements 230
Small businesses, New businesses 827

Grant, Mr Bernie
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 743
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 35
Questions
Child benefit, Social security benefits uprating 429
Defence expenditure, USA 238w
Montserrat, Disaster relief 415w
Montserrat, Homelessness 415w

Great Britain-East Europe Centre
Government grants 703

Great Yarmouth Port Authority Bill (HL) 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (23:11:89) 226, (27:11:89) 419, (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

Greater London
Air pollution 166-7w
Ambulance services 37w
Bus services 78w
Homelessness 166w
Housing associations 365w
Housing benefits 144w
Income support 374w
Prison employment 437w
School buildings 261w
Social Fund 216w

Greater Manchester
Income support 148w

Greater Manchester (Light Rapid Transit System) Bill (HL) 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (23:11:89) 226, (27:11:89) 419, (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

Greater Manchester (Light Rapid Transit System) (No 3) Bill (HL) 1987/88
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

Greece
321w

Green papers
Handicap benefits 215w

Greenhouse effect
International cooperation 405-6w

Greenway, Mr Harry
Questions
Business statements 241
Official engagements 195w, 431w
Treasury, Civil service dispersal 120w

Greenway, Mr John
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 90-3
Questions
Armed forces deployment, Security 568
Arts finance 123w
Social security benefits, Community care 422

Gregory, Mr Conal
Questions
Child benefit, Prisoners 145w
Drug abuse, International conferences 308w
Shops, Misrepresentation 281-2w

* Griffiths, Sir Eldon
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 249-50
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 352
Questions
Civil service dispersal, Cambridge 194-5w
Development plans, East Anglia 164w
Housing construction, Cambridge 164-5w
Military aircraft, USA 435w

Griffiths, Mr Nigel
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 28, 35
Questions
Conventional weapons 233w
Government grants 38-9w

Griffiths, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 751-2

Griffiths, Mr Win
Debates etc.
Community charge, Ministerial statements (30:11:89) 875
EC external trade, Japan (29:11:89) 770, 772, 775, 777
Questions
Balance of trade, OECD countries 122w
Cellular phones, Radio reception 168w
Employment 212w
Employment, Wales 116w

Griffiths, Mr Win—continued
Equal pay 209w
Inflation, OECD countries 122w
Prescription charges, Income 280-1w, 299w
Prescription charges, Wales 449w
Regional aid, Economic regions 286-8w
Unemployment 830

Grimethorpe
401w

Grist, Mr Ian, Under-Secretary of State for Wales*
Questions
Chlorofluorocarbons, Recycling 206w
Community care, Wales 203-4w
Development Board for Rural Wales 338w
Development Board for Rural Wales, Property transfer 338w
Food poisoning, Consumer protection 340w
Food poisoning, Wales 339-40w
Hazardous wastes, Imports 256-7w
Hazardous wastes, Swansea 257w
Homelessness, Wales 337w
Housing, Rural areas 336-7w
Housing associations, Wales 201w
Land acquisition, Land Authority for Wales 337w
NHS, Buildings 339w
Polychlorinated biphenyl, Pollution monitoring 206w
Prescription charges, Wales 449w
Rents to mortgages scheme, Television advertising 338w
Rents to mortgages scheme, Wales 338w
River pollution, Pollution control 258w
Special care baby units, Wales 257w
Water pollution, Hazardous materials 116w
Water supply, Chromic acid 42-4w
Water supply, Lead 44w
Water supply, Nitrates 44w

Grocott, Mr Bruce
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 51
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 248, 263
Questions
City technology colleges, School catchment areas 353w
Defence 230w
Eastern Europe, East west relations 316w
USA, Central America 707
VAT, Tax burden 427w

Group of Seven
Inflation 418-9w

Grylls, Mr Michael
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 619-22
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 455
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 860
Questions
Drugs, Licensing 101w

Guaranteed prices
Dairy products 399-400w

Guildford
Bombings 382w

Guildford Four Inquiry
382w

Guinness
Company investigations 285w

Gummer, Rt Hon John Selwyn, Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food*
Debates etc.
Straw burning, Ministerial statements (30:11:89) 868-74
Questions
Animal feed, Lead 477-8w
Animal products, Food industry 134w
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy, Cattle 134w
EC Agriculture Council 8-10w
Farm & countryside initiative 17w

Gummer, Rt Hon John Selwyn—continued
Farms, Compensation 133-4w
Farms, Radioactivity 133w
Fishing limits, Isle of Man 132w, 478w
Milk, Food contamination 133w
Milk, Listeria monocytogenes 135w
Pesticides, Licensing 133w
Poultry, Salmonella 134-5w
State Veterinary Service 134w

Gun sports
Palace of Westminster 88w, 248-9w

Gurkhas
Northern Ireland 229w

Hackney
Dept of Social Security local offices 427
Unemployment benefit offices 268w

Haemophilia
AIDS 11-2w, 89w, 101w, 192w, 410-2w
Compensation 295w, 410-2w
EC countries 295w

Hague, Mr William
Questions
Business statements 844
Environment protection, International cooperation 247w
Family credit, Take-up 142w

Hamilton, Mr Archie, Minister of State for the Armed Forces*
Debates etc.
Holroyd, Fred, Books (29:11:89) 814-8
War widows' pensions (23:11:89) 338-42
Questions
Armed forces, Drug crimes 241w
Armed forces, Industrial disputes 34w
Armed forces, Thailand 357w
Armed forces casualties, Suffield 358-9w
Armed forces deployment, NATO 571
Armed forces deployment, Security 244w, 568
Armed forces deployment, Security guards 569
Armed forces deployment, USA 234w
Armed forces deployment, West Germany 245w, 563-4
Armed forces medical services, Ambulance services 234-5w
Armed forces recruitment, Ethnic groups 243w
Armed forces reserves, National Employer Liaison Committee 246w
Armed forces strength, Armed forces recruitment 239w
Armed forces strength, Europe 570
Armed forces strength, Nuclear disarmament 571
Armed forces training 355-7w
Armed forces training, Casualties 242-3w
Armed forces training, Disclosure of information 355w
Armed forces training, Environmental impact assessment 233w
Armed forces training, Law 355w
Armed forces training, Security 355w
Armed forces training, Thailand 357w
Armed forces training, Zimbabwe 355w
Armoured fighting vehicles, USSR 353-4w
AWE Aldermaston, Security 435w
BAOR, Costs 358w
BAOR, Nuclear artillery shells 114w
Chemical & biological warfare, Defence procurement 35w
Chemical weapons 240w
Chemical weapons, USSR 240w, 244w, 357w, 571
Communication engineering, Cambodia 357w
Conventional weapons 230w, 233w
Defence 230w, 234w
Defence, USSR 232w
Defence equipment, Disclosure of information 114w
Defence expenditure 230w, 232-3w, 241w, 359-60w
Defence expenditure, Autumn statement 573

Hamilton, Mr Archie—continued
Defence expenditure, USA 238w
Defence expenditure, West Germany 573
Defence land, Trespass 360w
Destroyers 113w
Disclosure of information 237w
East west relations 564
East west relations, Defence 240w
Eastern Europe, Democracy 572-3
F111 aircraft 243w
Flexible response 229-30w
Gibraltar, Conservation 237w
Gurkhas, Northern Ireland 229w
Helicopters, 24 Airmobile Brigade 234w
Identification of criminals, Northern Ireland 565
Lance missiles, Nuclear weapons deployment 231w
Laser-guided bombs, USA 435w
Malawi, Military aid 114-5w
Marines, Deal barracks 569
Military aid to civil community, Disaster relief 237w
Military aircraft 114w
Military aircraft, USA 435w
Military balance 230w
Military exercises, Airports 246w
Military exercises, Ammunition 246w
Military vehicles, Ambulance services 33-4w
Ministry of Defence, Compensation 242w
Ministry of Defence, Cost effectiveness 235w
Ministry of Defence, Disclosure of information 564-5
Ministry of Defence, Electronic surveillance 565
NATO 235-6w
NATO, Armed forces strength 243-4w
NATO, Atlantic Ocean 235-6w
NATO, Defence expenditure 236w
NATO, Military balance 245-6w
Navy, Aircraft 239-40w
Navy, Armed forces recruitment 242w
Navy, Armed forces strength 238w
Nuclear submarines, Emergency planning 566-7
Nuclear submarines, Fishing gear 567-8
Nuclear submarines, Nuclear disarmament 567
Patrol craft 242w
Royal Army Veterinary Corps, Melton Mowbray 244w
Royal Artillery Range Hebrides 246w
Shipping accidents, Stornoway 35w
SS21 missiles 113w
SS21 missiles, Nuclear weapons deployment 113w
Submarines, Fishing vessels 243w
Submarines, Swansea 245w
Tactical nuclear weapons 229w
Tactical nuclear weapons, Modernisation 235-6w
Tactical nuclear weapons, Nuclear weapons deployment 234w
Tactical nuclear weapons, USSR 113w
Tornado aircraft, Theatre nuclear weapons 114w
Trident 236w
Trident submarines, Defence procurement 113w
US bases, East Anglia 354w
War widows' pensions, Costs 112-3w
Warsaw Pact, Defence procurement 358w
WE 177 nuclear bomb, Civil servants' visits abroad 355w

Hamilton, Mr Neil
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 611
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 443
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 867
Questions
Overseas aid, Expenditure 327-8w

Hampson, Dr Keith
Questions
European Conference of Ministers of Transport 343-4w

Handicap benefits
213w, 215w
Expenditure 212-3w
Green papers 215w
Personal income 147w
Social security benefits rules 147w
Social security benefits uprating 147w
Social security finance 371w

Handicapped
218w
Arts 127w
Arts centres 433
Arts finance 123w
Council housing 115w
Hospital consultants 224w
Independent Living Fund 138w
Office of Population Censuses & Surveys 143w
Sexual offences 222w

Handicapped children
Abortion 291w

Hanley, Mr Jeremy
Questions
Billing, Small businesses 128w
British Geological Survey, Finance 6w
Eastern Europe, Democracy 572-3
Eastern Europe, Treaties 710
Employment level 454w
National Curriculum Geography Working Group 5w
Overseas trade, South Africa 282w
Science & Engineering Research Council 5-6w
Science & technology research, Advisory Board for the Research Councils 6-7w
Stamp duties, Tax yields 429w
Student Loans Company, Offices 5w

Hannam, Mr John
Questions
Energy conservation, Community programme 8w
Environment protection, International cooperation 247w
National Health Service & Community Care Bill 1989/90 433-4w
Pensioners, Personal income 138w

Happisburgh Lighthouse Bill (HL) 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (23:11:89) 226, (27:11:89) 419, (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

Hardy, Mr Peter
Questions
Balance of trade 828
Business statements 238
Council of Europe, Eastern Europe 709
Poland, Pollution control 703

Hargreaves, Mr Ken
Debates etc.
Victoria Hospital Accrington (28:11:89) 685-9

Harman, Ms Harriet
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 491
Questions
Child benefit, Administrative costs 46-7w
Child Poverty Action Group 423w
Litter, Prosecutions 107-8w
Magistrates, Litter 108w
NHS administration, Managers 444w
Social security claims, Administrative delays 46w

Harmonisation of legislation
Extradition 703-4

Harris, Mr David
Questions
Fishing vessels, Shipping accidents 276w
Handicap benefits, Expenditure 212-3w
Social security recipients, Pop festivals 426

Haselhurst, Mr Alan
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 298-300
Questions

Haselhurst, Mr Alan—continued
Hertfordshire & Essex Hospital 100w

Hattersley, Rt Hon Roy
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 256-67

Hayes, Mr Jerry
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 446-7
Questions
Arts 126w
Drug abuse 308w

Haynes, Mr Frank
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 766
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 276, 317-21
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 534
Questions
Arts Support Review Group, East Midlands 431
Cambodia, UN resolutions 309w
Tanker aircraft, Defence procurement 230-1w

Hayward, Mr Robert
Debates etc.
Oral questions (22:11:89) 113
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 169-71
Questions
Employment 829-30
Namibia 318w
Road User & the Law White Paper 14-5w
Social security benefits uprating 140w

Hazardous materials
Water pollution 116w

Hazardous wastes
Imports 186w, 256-7w, 361-2w
Scotland 186w
Swansea 257w
Wales 256-7w

HBMC
see Historic Buildings & Monuments Commission for England

Heads of State
Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 713

Headteachers
Departmental circulars 350-1w
Primary education 350w

Healey, Rt Hon Denis
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 347, 370-2

Health Advisory Service
Central Nottinghamshire Health Authority 218-9w

Health & Safety at Work etc Act 1974
Questions
128w

Health & Safety Executive
19w, 128w, 454w
Administrative delays 19w
Building industry safety 19w
Fire regulations 20w
Management 18-20w
Merseyside 269w
Training 20w

Health & Safety (Training for Employment) (Amendment) Regulations 1989
Questions
128w

Health hazards
Benzene 162w
Poultry 99w
Sanitary protection 218w

Health insurance
Tax allowances 425w

Health service staff
Abortion 217w
Overtime 300-1w

Health services
Elderly 38w
Liverpool (27:11:89) 556-62

Heart diseases
Medical equipment 412-3w

Heath, Rt Hon Edward
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 610-6

Heathcoat-Amory, Mr David,
Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of the Environment
Questions
Bottle banks, Local authorities 436w
Lead free petrol, Garages & petrol stations 155-6w
Lindane, Codes of practice 364w
Local authorities, Trees 82w
Local government functions, Privatisation 41w
Local government pensions 251w
Pollution control, Polluter pays principle 364w
Refuse, Local government finance 435w
River Mersey, Pollution control 366-7w
West Wiltshire District Council, Local government staff 41w
West Wiltshire District Council, Privatisation 41-2w
West Wiltshire District Council, West Wiltshire Holdings 41w

Heathrow Express Railway Bill (HL) 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (23:11:89) 226, (27:11:89) 419, (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

Heating allowances
Death 425
Income support 424-5
Pensioners 425

Heffer, Mr Eric S
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 944-5, 976-8
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 24-5
Queen's speech, Addresses to the Crown (21:11:89) 11-2
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 269, 291-2
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 584
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 867
Questions
Business statements 846-7
East west relations, Defence 240w
Economic situation, Manufacturing industries 832
El Salvador, Ministers of religion 311w

Helicopters
Armed forces deployment 358w
Rescue services 568
24 Airmobile Brigade 234w

Henderson, Mr Doug
Questions
Pensions 141w

Hendon
Unemployment 453-4w

Hereford
192w

Hertfordshire & Essex Hospital
100w

Hicks, Mrs Maureen
Debates etc.
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 866
Questions
EC countries, Drug crimes 697-8

Hicks, Mrs Maureen—continued
Military aid to civil community, Disaster relief 237w
Poland, Democracy 317w

Hicks, Mr Robert
Questions
Devonport dockyard, Defence contracts 239w
Middle East, Peace negotiations 313-4w

Higgins, Rt Hon Terence L
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 625-8
Questions
Balance of payments, Overseas investment 828-9

Higher civil servants
Disclosure of information 436
Ethnic minorities 435

Higher pensioner premium
Income support 215w

Hill, Mr James
Debates etc.
Private Bills, House of Lords (22:11:89) 114-5
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 75
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 650
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 152-5

Hill livestock allowances
190w, 399w

Hinchliffe, Mr David
Debates etc.
Deaf, Television programmes (27:11:89) 554
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 514-6
Questions
Arts Support Review Group, Yorkshire & Humberside 434
Income support, Residential care 144w, 422
Nuclear weapons tests, Exservicemen 241-2w
Pakistan, Entry clearances 320w
Prisoners, Hospitals 437-8w
Privatisation, Income 120w

Hind, Mr Kenneth
Questions
Armed forces deployment, USA 234w
Bypasses, Ormskirk 438w
Import quotas, Eastern Europe 303-4w
Income tax, Tax yields 425-6w
Lancashire 254w
National Health Service & Community Care Bill 1989/90 433-4w
Scarisbrick-Pinfold bypass, Consultants 181w

Historic Buildings & Monuments Commission for England
157-8w
Montagu of Beaulieu, Lord 156w

History education
Curriculum 350w, 434w

HM Coastguard
79-80w, 276-7w

HM Factory Inspectorate
see Factory Inspectorate

HM Inspectorate of Pollution
247-8w, 400-1w

HM Inspectorate of Schools
351w

HM Land Registry
see Land Registry Office

HMS Invincible
Lifts 358-9w

HMS Upholder
Torpedoes 359w

Hoey, Miss Kate
Questions
Ambulance services, Industrial disputes 99w
Cambodia, Khmer Rouge 311w
Channel tunnel, Railway network 180w
Channel tunnel, Waterloo Station 180w
Homelessness, Advisory services 80-1w
Homelessness, Government grants to voluntary organisations 81w
Kenya, Missing persons 333w
Occupied territories, School closures 315w
Urban planning, Lambeth Borough Council 180w

Hogg, Mr Douglas, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs
Questions
Columbus space station 287-8w
Design initiative, Finance 38w
Footwear industry, Company liquidations 284w
Government assistance to industry, Manufacturing industries 283w
Inner cities initiative, Leicester 282w
Regional aid, Economic regions 286-8w

Hogg, Mr Norman
Questions
Armed forces medical services, Ambulance services 235w
Hong Kong, Vietnamese refugees 198w

Holroyd, Fred
Books (29:11:89) 811-8

Holt, Mr Richard
Debates etc.
Business questions point of order (23:11:89) 228
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 255, 259
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 128
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 534
Trust ports (01:12:89) 1010
Questions
Business statements 238, 856

Home Office
152w

Homelessness
Advisory services 80-1w
Government grants to voluntary organisations 81w
Greater London 166w
Hostels 372w
Invalidity benefits 372w
Montserrat 415w
Nottingham 364w
Retirement pensions 372w
Social security benefits 147w
Social security benefits rules 146-7w
Social security recipients 451w
Wales 337-8w

Homicide
Worthington, Emma 347w

Hong Kong
308-9w
British national (overseas) 308w
European Communities 308-9w
Extradition 452w
Government responses 418w
Ministers' visits abroad 308w
Vietnamese refugees 198w, 308w, 712

Hood, Mr Jimmy
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 496, 498
Questions
Cambodia, UN resolutions 309w
Homelessness, Invalidity benefits 372w
Homelessness, Social security recipients 451w
Hostels, Homelessness 372w
Hostels, Social security benefits rules 372w
South Korea, State visits 704

Hormone treatments

Hormone treatments—continued
Cattle 478w

Horn of Africa
International cooperation 254w

Horticulture
Loan guarantee scheme 209w

Horton Bank reservoir
Safety 41w

Hospices
Finance 271w
Northern Ireland 271w

Hospital closures
St Helen's & Knowsley Health Authority 223w
Wanstead Hospital 407w

Hospital consultants
Handicapped 224w
Manpower 11w
Mersey Regional Health Authority 224w

Hospital length of stay
Maternity services 221w

Hospital patients
Republic of Ireland 102w

Hospital waiting lists
Leicestershire Health Authority 101w
Orthopaedics 101w

Hospitals
Capital investment 219w
District health authorities 407w
Family doctors 220w
Kendal 219w
Prisoners 437-8w
Wales 339w

Hostels
Homelessness 372w
Social security benefits rules 372w

House of Commons
444-6w

House of Commons annunciator system
362w

House of Commons broadcasting
Members' facilities 362w
Television 395w

House of Commons chamber
Speaker's rulings & statements (22:11:89) 115

House of Commons debates
Speaker's rulings & statements (21:11:89) 7

House of Commons division of time
Private Members' time (22:11:89) 117-8
Speaker's rulings & statements (21:11:89) 7, (29:11:89) 810

House of Commons divisions
Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 766

House of Commons Liaison Committee
(01:12:89) 1003

House of Commons sessional orders
(21:11:89) 1-3
Speaker's rulings & statements (21:11:89) 2

House of Commons standing orders
Speaker's rulings & statements (30:11:89) 877

House of Lords
444-6w

House renovation grants
251w

Housing
Rural areas 336-7w
Wales 336-7w

Housing amenities
Wales 118w

Housing associations
Capital investment 364-5w
Greater London 365w
Training 365w
Wales 201w

Housing benefits
Greater London 144w

Housing completions
Wales 119w

Housing construction
Cambridge 164-5w

Housing Corporation
336-7w, 364-5w

Housing estates
Scottish Homes 280w
Tenants' choice 158w

Housing finance
Housing for Wales 256w
Northern Ireland Housing Executive 21w
Private sector housing 21w

Housing for Wales
336-7w
Housing finance 256w

Housing investment programmes
Waltham Forest 87-8w

Housing starts
Economic regions 250w
Wales 119w

Howard, Mr Michael, Minister for Housing and Planning*
Questions
Anglian Water, Publicity 84w
Caravan sites, Sanitation 248w
Horton Bank reservoir, Safety 41w
Theme parks, Rainham 367w
Water authorities, Foreign investment in UK 85w
Water authorities, Shares 84-5w
Water charges, Rateable value 164w
Water charges, Water supply industry 166w
Water pollution, Agriculture 86w
Water storage, Safety 40-1w
Water supply disconnections, North West Water Authority 40w
Water supply disconnections, Yorkshire & Humberside 369w
Water supply industry, Privatisation 3-4w, 42w
Yorkshire Water, Water charges 166w

Howarth, Mr Alan, Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science*
Debates etc.
Education & industry (30:11:89) 937-40
Village schools, Humberside (30:11:89) 933-6
Questions
Child abuse, Departmental circulars 179w
Child abuse, Teachers 437w
Curriculum, Teacher training 49w
Departmental correspondence, Administrative delays 436-7w
GCE A level, Age participation rates 21w
Grammar schools, Student numbers 21-3w
School buildings, Safety 261w
Schools, Ministers' domestic visits 350w
Secondary education, School closures 258-60w
Supply teachers, Teacher training 351w
Teacher training, Government grants to local authorities 24w
Teachers, Manpower 73w
Teachers, Recruitment 49-50w, 353w

Howarth, Mr George
Questions
Business statements 853
Cambodia, UN resolutions 309w

Howarth, Mr Gerald
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 307-10
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 589

Howe, Rt Hon Sir Geoffrey, Lord President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons*
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 670-7
Questions
Business statements 227-42, 839-56
Legislative drafting 34w
Members' facilities, Satellite broadcasting 395w
Ministers, Pay 444-6w
Oral questions, Welsh Office 395w

Howell, Rt Hon David
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 355, 366-70

Howell, Mr Ralph
Questions
Ambulance services, Manpower 408w
Eggs, Imports 304w
Health service staff, Overtime 300-1w
Nurses, Pay 443-4w
One parent families, Social security recipients 372-3w

Howells, Mr Geraint
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 47-8
Straw burning (30:11:89) 870
Questions
Aberystwyth harbour 207w
Arts Support Review Group 124w
Common sheep meat regime, Wales 449w
Exchange rates, European monetary system 830
Farmers' Union of Wales, Interest rates 257w
Farms, Compensation 257w
Government buildings, Energy conservation 82w
Sheep, Government assistance 115-6w
Sheep premiums, EC law 399w
Sri Lanka, Peace negotiations 329w
Welsh Development Agency 116w
Welsh Development Agency, Pembrokeshire 206w

Howells, Dr Kim
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 481-3
Questions
Alternative energy, Electricity generation 75w
Family credit, Take-up 141-2w
Gas fired power stations, Electricity generation 74w
Namibia 318w
National Museum of Wales, Admission charges 115w
Nuclear fuel reprocessing, Capital investment 75w
Nuclear fuel reprocessing, Sellafield 74w
Pressurised water reactors, Nuclear fuels 74w
Regional aid, Economic regions 286-8w
Tidal power, Severn barrage 75w
Urban areas, Government grants 88w

Hoyle, Mr Doug
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 146-8
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 863-4
Questions
Ambulance services, Contracts for services 409w
Commission for Racial Equality 383w
Commission for Racial Equality, Government grants 383w
Interest rates, Small businesses 826
Life insurance, Asset stripping 348w
"London Ambulance Service in the Nineties" 408-9w

"HSC Plan of Work for 1989-90 & Beyond"
19w

HSE
see Health & Safety Executive

Hughes, Mr John
Questions
European fighter aircraft, Radar 239w

Hughes, Mr Robert
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 161-4
Questions
Multifibre arrangement 284w
South Africa, Apartheid 322w
VAT, Tax burden 427w

Hughes, Mr Robert G
Questions
Economic growth, EC countries 426w
Namibia 318w

Hughes, Mr Roy
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 46-9
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 545-6
Questions
Elderly, Health services 38w
Homelessness, Wales 338w
Housing completions, Wales 119w
National Girobank, Privatisation 283w
Pensions 140-1w
Retirement pensions 46w
Severe weather payments, Pensioners 45w
Slums, Wales 118w

Hughes, Mr Sean
Questions
Estate agents, Training 284-5w
Interest rates, Small businesses 419w

Hughes, Mr Simon
Debates etc.
Members' facilities (22:11:89) 116
Queen's speech, Addresses to the Crown (21:11:89) 8
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 864-5
Questions
Archaeological sites, Southwark 80w
Cambodia 310w
Cambodia, Overseas aid 254w
Child benefit 145w
Income tax 426w

Human Genome Organisation
73-4w

Human rights
El Salvador 312w
Iraq 321w
Israel 705
Malawi 98w
Romania 696
Sikhs 417w
South Korea 453w
Sri Lanka 98w
USSR 327w

Human Rights Day
334w

Humberside
Village schools (30:11:89) 930-6

Humberside Education Authority
(30:11:89) 930-6

Hungary
Democracy 317w
EC aid 91w, 316w
Overseas aid 315-6w
Overseas students 333w

Hunt, Mr David, Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities*
Questions
Community charge 435-6w
Kennet District Council, Partnerships 83w
Landlord & tenant, Rates & rating 167w
Local government adjudicator 85-6w
Local government adjudicator, Appeals 85-6w
Local government adjudicator, Pay 85w
Standard spending assessments, Assisted places scheme 165w

Hunter, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Straw burning (30:11:89) 871
Questions
Romania, Overseas trade 696

Hunting Engineering
354-5w

Huntingdon Research Centre
Animal experiments 382-3w

Huntington's chorea
Screening 219-20w

Hurd, Rt Hon Douglas, Secretary of State for Foreign & Commonwealth Affairs*
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 345-55, 361-2, 364-5
Questions
Arms control negotiations, Europe 707
Arms control negotiations, NATO 706-7
Eastern Europe, Socialism 707-8
EC countries, Drug crimes 697-8
EC integration, Eastern Europe 707
Great Britain-East Europe Centre, Government grants 703
International conferences, Arms control negotiations 708
International conferences, Drug abuse 697
International conferences, Malta 706
International cooperation, Drug crimes 697
Iran-Iraq war, Peace negotiations 95-6w
Poland, Educational visits 703
Poland, Overseas aid 701-2
Poland, Pollution control 703
Tactical nuclear weapons, Modernisation 708
Trade unions, Industrial relations 702
USA, Central America 707
Vietnamese refugees, Hong Kong 712

Hypothermia
Elderly 144w

Hythe Marina Village (Southampton) Wavescreen Bill 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

IAEA
see International Atomic Energy Agency

IBA
see Independent Broadcasting Authority

IBRD
see World Bank

Identification of criminals
Northern Ireland 565

Identity cards
Football 370w

Illsley, Mr Eric
Questions
Social security benefits, Young people 139w

IMF
see International Monetary Fund

Immigrants
Philippines 384w
Travel restrictions 109w

Immigration appeals
347w

Immunity from prosecution
Witnesses 382w

Import penetration
Manufactured goods 282w
Manufacturing industries 267w

Import quotas
Eastern Europe 303-4w

Imports
430w
Capital goods 423w, 430w, 822

Imports—continued
Computers 167w
Consumer goods 267w, 822
Delta Te immune support therapy 289-90w
Eggs 304w
Footwear 94w
Hazardous wastes 186w, 256-7w, 361-2w
Natural gas production 448w
Tritium 247-8w, 400-1w

Income
Prescription charges 280-1w, 299w
Privatisation 120w

Income support
Availability for work 214w
Carers premium 152w
Disabled child premium 215w
Greater London 374w
Greater Manchester 148w
Heating allowances 424-5
Higher pensioner premium 215w
Kurdistan 152w
Pensioners 152w
Personal records 374w
Residential care 144w, 148-9w, 422
Retirement pensions 370w
Severe disability premium 216w
Social security benefits uprating 422
Social security recipients 213-4w
Social security reform 145w
Take-up 142w
Young people 214w

Income tax
426w
Tax yields 425-6w

Independent Broadcasting Authority
381w
Compensation 173w
Conflict of interests 173-4w
Pay 103-4w

Independent Living Fund
Handicapped 138w

Independent Television Commission
Advertising controls 381w

Index linking
Civil service pensions 172-4w

India
194w
Amnesty International 197w

Industrial accidents
Youth training scheme 129-32w

Industrial disputes
Ambulance services 37w, 99w, 193w, (23:11:89) 243, 833-4, 836
Armed forces 34w

Industrial energy consumption
Coal consumption 177w

Industrial health & safety
208w
Young people 128w

Industrial investment
422w, 425w

Industrial production
Manufactured goods 284w
Manufacturing industries 428-9w

Industrial relations
Trade unions 702

Industrial relations law
Trade unions 207w

Industrial training
Skill shortages 375w

Industrial wastes
Coal mining 448w

Industries
European Environment Agency 366w

Industry
Interest rates 832-3
Pay 832-3

Industry—continued
Queen's speech (22:11:89) 119-217

Inflation
418-9w
Arts finance 125w, 431-2
Child benefit 429
Economic policy 419w
Exchange rates 828, 831
Group of Seven 418-9w
Money supply 831
OECD countries 122w
Pay settlements 459-60w
VAT 824

Information
Ethiopia 417w

Information services
Environment 366w
Public libraries 155w

Information technology
NHS 226-9w

Infrastructure
Expenditure 424w

Ingham, Bernard
436

Inland Revenue
194-5w, 436-7, 458w
Civil service dispersal 1-2w

Inner cities initiative
Leicester 282w

Inner city areas
Owner occupied housing 158w

Inspection units
Residential care 102w

Insurance
Art works 33w

Interest groups
Environment 162-3w, 400w

Interest rates
120w, 419-20w
"Autumn Statement, 1989" 826-7
British Coal Corporation 403w
Confederation of British Industry 419w
Economic forecasting 826
Employment 830
European monetary system 423w
Farmers 830
Farmers' Union of Wales 257w
Industry 832-3
Manufacturing industries 420w
Monetary policy 419w, 829
Scotland 420w
Small businesses 419-20w, 826-7
Unemployment 120w

Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change
405-6w

International Atomic Energy Agency
400-1w

International Bank for Reconstruction & Development
see World Bank

International conferences
Arms control negotiations 708
Children 414w
Drug abuse 308w, 697
Malta 706

International cooperation
Air traffic control 275w
Drug crimes 386w, 697
Environment protection 247w
Greenhouse effect 405-6w
Horn of Africa 254w
Radio frequencies 93w

International Monetary Fund
200-2w

Inter-Parliamentary Union
709 Interpreters

Abortion 290w

Invalid care allowances
452w

Invalidity benefits
Homelessness 372w

Investment
Consumption 420w
Railway transport 821
Transport policy 185-6w

Investor protection
Commodity markets 466w

Iran
Balance of trade 170w
Capital punishment 333w

Iran-Iraq war
Peace negotiations 95-6w

Iraq
British embassies 36w
Export credit guarantees 169-70w
Human rights 321w
Kurdistan 35w
Overseas trade 93w
Trade promotion 288w

Irradiated food
188-9w
EC action 188w
Public opinion 189w
Research 188w

Irvine, Mr Michael
Questions
EC aid, Poland 91w
EC external trade, Poland 91w

Isle of Man
Common fisheries policy 131w
Fishing limits 131-2w, 478w

Isle of Wight Bill 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

Israel
Balance of trade 287-8w
Diplomatic service 96w
Foreign policy 324w
Human rights 705
Ministers' visits abroad 349w
Occupied territories 314w
Official visits 324w
Peace negotiations 704-6

Iver
15w

J Sainsbury
190w

Jack, Mr Michael
Debates etc.
NHS finance, Blackpool Wyre & Fylde Health Authority (22:11:89) 218-21, 224
Questions
Community charge 431w
Dept of Social Security, Computers in Government departments 145w
Environment protection, International cooperation 247w
Kirkham Prison, Construction 393w
National Loans Fund, Government securities 172w
Vauxhall Motors, Transport & General Workers' Union 578

Jackson, Mr Robert, Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science*
Questions
Business education, Educational finance 258w
Business education, Student numbers 258w
Delta Te immune support therapy, Research 290w
Engineering education, Polytechnics 351-2w

Jackson, Mr Robert—continued*
Genetics, Medical research 73-4w
Malawi, Educational aid 73w
Polytechnics & Colleges' Funding Council, Educational finance 351w
Polytechnics & Colleges' Funding Council, Engineering education 352w
Research councils, Mergers 352w
Science & technology, Expenditure 352-4w
Student grants 23w, 436w
Student grants, Expenditure 23w
Student loans 50-72w
Student loans, Consultants 50w
Student loans, Costs 50w, 436w
Student loans, Financial institutions 50w
Student Loans Company, Educational finance 72-3w
Student Loans Company, Financial institutions 71-2w
Student Loans Company, Offices 71w
Student Loans Company, Operating costs 71w

James Ferguson Holdings
Company investigations 285-6w

Janman, Mr Tim
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 16
Questions
Basildon & Thurrock Health Authority, Rates & rating 412w
Channel tunnel, Railway network 79w
Overseas aid, Expenditure 327-8w
Theme parks, Rainham 367w

Janner, Mr Greville
Debates etc.
Television programmes, Public petitions (30:11:89) 929
Questions
Business statements 237-8
Civil service, Ethnic monitoring 435
Israel, Foreign policy 324w
M1, Road traffic 184w
Social Fund, Loans 138w

Japan
Drift nets 36w
EC external trade (29:11:89) 767-88

Jessel, Mr Toby
Questions
Arts finance, Government grants 432
Conventional weapons 230w
Office of Arts & Libraries, Expenditure 123w
One parent families, Social security finance 139w
Poland, Foreign relations 313w
Tax yields 424-5w

Jews
USSR 331-2w

Job centres
Disablement resettlement officers 457w

Johnston, Sir Russell
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 967-9
Questions
Bypasses, Nairn 112w
EC social charter, Free movement of labour 700-1
Haemophilia, EC countries 295w

Joint European Torus
Research finance 77w

Jones, Mr Barry
Debates etc.
Community charge, Ministerial statements (30:11:89) 875, 877
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 534-9
Questions
Autumn statement, Wales 338-9w
Channel tunnel, Railway network 340w
Hazardous wastes, Imports 256-7w
Hazardous wastes, Swansea 257w
NHS, Buildings 339w

Jones, Mr Barry—continued*
Regional aid, Economic regions 286-8w
Special care baby units, Wales 257w
Water supply, Lead 44w
Water supply, Nitrates 44w

Jones, Mr Gwilym
Debates etc.
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 546-7
Questions
Community charge register, Wales 343w
Housing for Wales, Housing finance 256w
Local government finance, Wales 255-6w, 341-4w

Jones, Mr Ieuan Wyn
Questions
Fluidised bed combustion, Trade promotion 433w
Residential care, Local authorities 222w
River pollution, Pollution control 258w

Jones, Mr Martyn
Questions
Basking sharks, Nature conservation 249-50w
Basking sharks, Research 250w
Lindane, Codes of practice 364w
Sites of special scientific interest, Prosecutions 249w
Unemployment, Rural areas 337w

Jones, Mr Robert B
Questions
Eastern Europe, EC external relations 316-7w
Gibraltar, Conservation 237w
Interest rates, Industry 832-3
Water supply industry, Privatisation 3-4w

Jopling, Rt Hon Michael
Questions
Business statements 841
Hospitals, Kendal 219w

Journalists
Czechoslovakia 323w

Justices' clerks
Professional qualifications 13w

Kaufman, Rt Hon Gerald
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 351, 356-65
Questions
Tactical nuclear weapons, Modernisation 708

Keighley
193w

Kellett-Bowman, Dame Elaine
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 725, 732-3, 750
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 492-3, 522-3

Kendal
Hospitals 219w

Kennedy, Mr Charles
Questions
Cambodia, Khmer Rouge 310w
European monetary system, Exchange rates 423w
Low flying 245w
Severe weather payments 150w

Kennet District Council
Partnerships 83w

Kenya
Missing persons 333w

Key, Mr Robert
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 272
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 464
Questions
Haemophilia, AIDS 11-2w

Key, Mr Robert—continued*
Investment, Consumption 420w

Khmer Rouge
357w, 837-8
Cambodia 310-1w

Kilfedder, Mr James
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 76-9
Questions
Business statements 236

Kincora Children's Home
90w
Public inquiries 195-6w

King, Mr Roger
Debates etc.
EC external trade, Japan (29:11:89) 767, 774
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 120, 191-3
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 863
Questions
British Telecom, Mercury Communications 38w
Financial Intermediaries Managers & Brokers' Association 92w
Goods vehicles, Lighting 181w
Middle East, Peace negotiations 313-4w
Mortgages, Restrictive trade practices 94w

King, Rt Hon Tom, Secretary of State for Defence*
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 406-10

Kinnock, Rt Hon Neil
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 12-21
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 599
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 453
Questions
Rover Group, Privatisation 576, 834-5

Kirkham Prison
Construction 393w

Kirkhope, Mr Timothy
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 661-3
Questions
Civil service dispersal, Leeds 580
Civil service unions, Training 435
National Health Service & Community Care Bill 1989/90 433-4w
Office of Arts & Libraries, Expenditure 124w
Poland, Overseas aid 316w

Kirklees District Council
159w

Kirkwood, Mr Archy
Debates etc.
Fisheries, Scotland (21:11:89) 104-7
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 183
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 451, 471-4
Questions
Availability for work, Social security recipients 208-9w
Blind, Cost of living 371-2w
Cambodia, Foreign policy 309w
Councillors' attendance allowances, Rural areas 110w
Councillors' attendance allowances, Scotland 110w
Electricity supply industry. Privatisation 252w
Handicap benefits, Social security finance 371w
Mobility allowance, Deaf 371w
Mobility allowance, Social security benefits rules 371w
Pensioners, Income support 152w
Personal records, Scotland 110w
Social security benefits, Young people 421

Kirkwood, Mr Archy—continued*
Water supply industry, Privatisation 361w
Wealth distribution 421w

Knapman, Mr Roger
Debates etc.
EC external trade, Japan (29:11:89) 773
Questions
Arts Council, Government grants 125w
Chemical weapons, USSR 240w
Pensioners, Personal income 423-4
Poland, Overseas aid 316w

Knight, Dame Jill
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 474-7, 498

Knowles, Mr Michael
Debates etc.
Deaf, Public petitions (24:11:89) 343
Questions
Namibia, Elections 317w

Knox, Mr David
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 62-5
Questions
Dept of Social Security local offices, Computers in government departments 430
Interest rates 419-20w

Kurdistan
321w
Diplomatic service 35w
Income support 152w
Iraq 35w
Turkey 35w
United Nations 35-6w

Labour Party
Employment opportunities 829-30

Lambeth Borough Council
Urban planning 180w

Lamond, Mr James
Debates etc.
Private Bills (29:11:89) 717-8
Questions
Ambulance services, Industrial disputes 836
Armed forces deployment, West Germany 563-4
Business statements 232
Tactical nuclear weapons 229w

Lamont, Rt Hon Norman, Chief Secretary to the Treasury*
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 660
Questions
Balance of payments 427w, 828
Balance of payments, Export-import ratios 823
Balance of payments, Manufactured imports 823
Balance of payments, Oil revenues 829
Balance of payments, Overseas investment 828-9
Balance of payments, Tax allowances 822-3
Balance of trade 828
Capital goods, Imports 423w
Capital movements 420w
Child Poverty Action Group 423w
Confederation of British Industry 425w
Economic growth 428w
Economic growth, EC countries 832
Economic situation, Manufacturing industries 832
Economic situation, Population studies 428w
Foreign exchange, Exports 424w
Foreign investment in UK 121w
Imports 430w
Imports, Capital goods 430w
Imports, Consumer goods 822
Industrial investment 422w, 425w
Infrastructure, Expenditure 424w
Interest rates, Monetary policy 829
Investment, Consumption 420w

Lamont, Rt Hon Norman—continued*
Manufacturing industries, East Midlands 121w
National income, Business 427w
National income, Public expenditure 426-7w
New businesses 120-1w
NHS finance 422w
Productivity, Manufacturing industries 428w
Public expenditure 421w, 425w
Small businesses 424w
Treasury, Public expenditure 122w

Lancashire
254w

Lance missiles
Nuclear weapons deployment 231w

Land acquisition
Land Authority for Wales 337w

Land Authority for Wales
Land acquisition 337w

Land Registry Office
Surveying 346-7w

Land values
Road construction 182w

Landlord & tenant
Licensed premises 91-2w
Rates & rating 167w

Landlord & Tenant Act 1954
Questions
91-2w

Landlord & Tenant (Licensed Premises) Bill 1989/90
Debates etc.
1R (01:12:89) 942

Landscape design
82w

Lang, Mr Ian, Minister of State for Scotland*
Debates etc.
Fisheries, Scotland (21:11:89) 107-12
Questions
Employment training, Scotland 278-9w
Further education colleges, College councils 185-6w
School boards, Scotland 396w
Teachers, Manpower 396w
Teachers, Pay 397w
Teachers, Scotland 397w
White fish, Fishing quotas 110-2w, 399w
Youth training scheme, Grampian 397-8w

Laser-guided bombs
USA 435w

Latham, Mr Michael
Questions
Balance of trade, Israel 287-8w
Business statements 846
Community hospitals, Costs 220-1w
Community hospitals, NHS internal market 223w
Confederation of British Industry, Interest rates 419w
Headteachers, Departmental circulars 350-1w
Hospitals, Family doctors 220w
Israel, Diplomatic service 96w
Lebanon, Prisoners 325-6w
Mandela, Nelson, Prisoners' release 433w
Maternity services, Hospital length of stay 221w
Ministers' visits abroad, Israel 349w
Occupied territories, Armed conflict 96w
Primary education, Departmental correspondence 350w
Royal Army Veterinary Corps, Melton Mowbray 244w
Schools, Ministers' domestic visits 350w
USA 191w

Law

Law—continued
Armed forces training 355w

Law enforcement
Pornography 106w

Law officers
Departmental correspondence 436
Disclosure of information 436

Law reform
Driving instruction 440w
Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950 15w
Unofficial strikes 374w

Lawrence, Mr Ivan
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 974-6
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 293
Questions
Business statements 237
Criminal Injuries Compensation Board 107w
Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, Administrative delays 106-7w
Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, Finance 107w
Parole, Administrative delays 393-4w

LDDC
see London Docklands Development Corporation

Lead
Animal feed 135w, 477-8w
Water supply 44w

Lead free petrol
Garages & petrol stations 155-6w

Lead poisoning
Milk 303w

Leadbitter, Mr Ted
Questions
Inflation 418w

League Against Cruel Sports
393w

Lebanon
Peace negotiations 326w
Prisoners 325-6w

Leeds
Civil service dispersal 580

Leg protectors
Motorcycles 274w

Legal aid
Fees & charges 398w
Legal costs 177-8w
Northern Ireland 177-8w
Public expenditure 178w
Religion 178w
Scotland 398w

Legal costs
Legal aid 177-8w

Legislative drafting
34w

Legislative process
Speaker's rulings & statements (23:11:89) 225, 245

Leicester
Inner cities initiative 282w

Leicestershire
Social Fund 374w

Leicestershire Health Authority
Hospital waiting lists 101w
Public appointments 298-9w
Speech therapists 407w

Leigh, Mr Edward
Debates etc.
Calling of Members (23:11:89) 244
Queen's speech, Benn, Tony (28:11:89) 583
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 257-8
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 592

Leigh, Mr Edward—continued
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 364
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 516-7
Straw burning (30:11:89) 873

Leighton, Mr Ron
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 722, 738-41

Lester, Mr Jim
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 991

Lestor, Miss Joan
Questions
Defence expenditure, USA 238w

Level crossings
Coleraine 272w

Liability
Speaker's rulings & statements (28:11:89) 581-2

Liaison Committee
see House of Commons Liaison Committee

Licensed premises
Landlord & tenant 91-2w

Licensing
Animal experiments 382-3w
Drugs 101w
Pesticides 133w
Pollution control 160w

Life insurance
Asset stripping 348w

Lifts
HMS Invincible 358-9w

Light dues
275w

Lighting
Goods vehicles 181w
Motorways 439-40w

Lilley, Mr Peter, Financial Secretary to the Treasury
Debates etc.
Public Accounts Committee (30:11:89) 917, 921-8
Questions
Computers, Balance of trade 458-9w
Corporation tax, Capital investment 825
Corporation tax, Foreign investment in UK 825-6
Corporation tax, OECD countries 824-5
Day nurseries, Taxation 423w
Delors, Jacques 418w
Economic & monetary union 421w
Employment 829-30
Employment, Interest rates 830
European monetary system, Exchange rates 171w, 422-3w
Exchange rates, Mark 831-2
Income tax 426w
Income tax, Tax yields 425-6w
Inflation, Group of Seven 418-9w
Inland Revenue, Civil service dispersal 1-2w
Interest rates, Industry 832-3
Monetary policy 831
Personal equity plans 424w
Personal taxation, Tax burden 460-4w
Privatisation, Income 120w
Retail prices, Statistics 131w
Shareholders, Pensioners 429w
Stamp duties, Tax yields 429w
Tax allowances, Children 424w
Tax allowances, Forestry 173w
Tax evasion, Civil service manpower 458w
Tax yields 424-5w
Taxation, Widows' benefits 173w
Unemployment 830
Wealth distribution 421w

Lincolnshire & Humberside Arts Association
124w

Lindane
Codes of practice 364w

Listeria monocytogenes
188w
Milk 100w, 135w

Litherland, Mr Robert
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 150-2
Questions
Inflation 418w
Turkey 315w

Litter
Magistrates 108w
Prosecutions 107-8w

Litter Act 1983
Questions
108w

Liverpool
Health services (27:11:89) 556-62
War widows' pensions 136w

Liverpool City Council
Defective housing 162w

Livingstone, Mr Ken
Questions
Disclosure of information 237w

Livsey, Mr Richard
Debates etc.
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 547-8
Questions
Baltic republics of USSR 323-4w
Bank of England 420-1w
NATO 235-6w

Lloyd, Sir Ian
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 358

Lloyd, Mr Peter, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Home Office
Questions
Animal experiments, Licensing 382-3w
Blood sports, Demonstrations 393w
Child abuse, Disclosure of information 175w
Drug crimes, International cooperation 386w
Genetics, Blood tests 106w
Immigrants, Travel restrictions 109w
Naturalisation Monien, France 28w
Overseas workers, Domestic service 384w
Pets, Animal welfare 390w
Police, Manpower 391-4w
Police, NHS charges 389w
Political refugees 394w
Shotgun certificates 174-5w
West Midlands Police, Convictions 385w

Lloyd, Mr Tony
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 743-4, 757-60, 762
Questions
El Salvador, USA 311-2w
Income support, Greater Manchester 148w
South Korea, Human rights 453w

Loan guarantee scheme
Agriculture 209w
Horticulture 209w

Loans
Social Fund 138w

Lobbying
Trident missiles 357-8w, 569-70

Local authorities
Bottle banks 436w
Environmental policy 369w
Residential care 222w
Trees 82w
Water supply industry 3-4w
Young offenders 299w

Local authority powers
Registered homes 223w

Local enterprise agencies
268-9w

Local Government Act 1966
Questions
438w

Local government adjudicator
85-6w
Appeals 85-6w
Pay 85w

Local Government & Housing Act 1989
Questions
85-6w

Local government borrowing
Local government expenditure 156-8w

Local government expenditure
Local government borrowing 156-8w
Oxfordshire County Council 163w

Local government finance
Oxfordshire County Council 163w
Population projection 160w
Refuse 435w
Wales 255-6w, 341-4w

Local Government Finance Act 1988
Questions
160w

Local government functions
Community care 101-2w
Privatisation 41w

Local government pensions
251w

Local government social services
Standard spending assessments 249-50w

Local government staff
Political activities 85-6w
West Wiltshire District Council 41w

Lofthouse, Mr Geoffrey
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 57-62
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 453-4
Questions
Tanker aircraft, Defence procurement 231w

London Ambulance Service
99w

"London Ambulance Service in the Nineties"
408-9w

London assessment studies
182w
Consultants 182w
Costs 182w
East London 25-6w

London Docklands Development Corporation
83w

London housing associations training scheme
365-6w

London Local Authorities Bill (HL) 1987/88
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

London Local Authorities (No 2) Bill (HL) 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (23:11:89) 226, (27:11:89) 419, (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

London Regional Transport
78w

London Underground
78w

London Zoo
Salmonella 86w

Lord, Mr Michael
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 272, 321-3
Straw burning (30:11:89) 872

Lorries
M6 273w
Parking 273w

Lost working days
Dept of Social Security local offices 152w

Low flying
245w

Low incomes
Community charge 362w

Low pay
Unemployment benefits 213w

Loyden, Mr Eddie
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 742, 750
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 84
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 185-7
Shipping, EC action (29:11:89) 805-6
Questions
Business statements 850
Navy, Armed forces strength 238w

Luce, Rt Hon Richard, Minister of State, Privy Council Office (Minister for the Arts)
Questions
Art works, Insurance 33w
Art works, Objects in lieu of tax 336w
Arts 126w, 267w, 336w
Arts, European Communities 329w
Arts, Handicapped 127w
Arts Council 433
Arts Council, Government grants 123w, 125w, 431
Arts finance 122-5w, 432
Arts finance, Government grants 432
Arts finance, Handicapped 123w
Arts finance, Inflation 125w, 431-2
Arts finance, Museums & galleries 124w
Arts finance, Per capita costs 127w
Arts finance, Southern Arts Association 125w
Arts grants, Devon 127w
Arts sponsorship 127w
Arts Support Review Group 124-5w
Arts Support Review Group, East Midlands 431
Arts Support Review Group, Northern region 432-3
Arts Support Review Group, Yorkshire & Humberside 434
Civil servants, Pay comparability 435
Civil service, Ethnic minorities 435-6
Civil service, Ethnic monitoring 435
Civil service, Training 119w
Civil service agencies 437-8
Civil service manpower, Disabled workers 335w
Civil service unions 119w, 434, 436-7
Civil service unions, Pay 434
Civil service unions, Training 435
Drama, West Glamorgan 335w
Higher civil servants, Disclosure of information 436
Law officers, Disclosure of information 436
Malawi, Overseas aid 155w
Ministerial policy advisors, Contracts of employment 32w
Museums & galleries 127w
Museums & galleries, Finance 32-3w
Museums & galleries, Purchase grants 126w
Museums & galleries, Repairs & maintenance 125w
Museums & galleries, Rural areas 128w
Office of Arts & Libraries, Expenditure 123-4w
Public libraries, Information services 155w
Royal Shakespeare Company, Newcastle upon Tyne 128w
Theatres, Ministers' domestic visits 335w
Towngate Theatre 127w

Lynx
(27:11:89) 554

M1
26w
Road traffic 184w

M4
255w
Morriston Hospital 205w
Road accidents 204w
Road construction 204-5w
Road traffic 204w
Wales 79w, 204-5w

M5
Road works 275-6w

M6
Lorries 273w

M11
Public inquiries 276w

M25
Motorway service areas 15w, 440w

McAllion, Mr John
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 301-3
Questions
Inflation, Group of Seven 418-9w
Lance missiles, Nuclear weapons deployment 231w
Social security benefits, Young people 139w

McAvoy, Mr Thomas
Questions
Nuclear weapons tests, Exservicemen 239w

McCartney, Mr Ian
Questions
Defence expenditure 233w
Social security benefits, Young people 139w

McCrea, Rev William
Questions
Business statements 233-4

Macdonald, Mr Calum
Questions
Arms control negotiations, Military aircraft 97w
Arms control negotiations, Tactical nuclear weapons 97w
BAOR, Nuclear artillery shells 114w
Central America, Bilateral aid 198-200w
Community charge, Merchant seamen 165w, 185w
Data processing, Electronic equipment 465w
Defence equipment, Disclosure of information 114w
Destroyers 113w
El Salvador, Overseas aid 199w
Family doctors, Personnel 411w
Loan guarantee scheme, Agriculture 209w
Military aircraft 114w
Military exercises, Airports 246w
Military exercises, Ammunition 246w
Nicaragua, Overseas aid 199w
Population projection, Men 100w
Royal Artillery Range Hebrides 246w
SS21 missiles 113w
SS21 missiles, Nuclear weapons deployment 113w
Tactical nuclear weapons, USSR 113w
Tornado aircraft, Theatre nuclear weapons 114w
Trident submarines, Defence procurement 113w

Macedon Trust
364w

McFall, Mr John
Questions
Armed forces deployment, West Germany 563
Cambodia, British residents abroad 310w
Channel tunnel, Transport infrastructure 273w
Dept of Social Security local offices, Lost working days 152w
EC internal trade, Redundancy 208w
European monetary system, Exchange rates 171w

McFall, Mr John—continued
Industrial health & safety, Young people 128w
Inflation, Group of Seven 419w
Official engagements 195w, 431w

Macfarlane Trust
11-2w, 89w, 101w, 410-2w

McGrady, Mr Eddie
Questions
Buildings, Dromara 270w
Buildings, Slieve Croob 169-70w, 345-6w
Road finance, Down District Council 269w
Road finance, Newry & Mourne District Council 269w
Roads, Down District Council 270w
Roads, Newry & Mourne District Council 270w
Roads, South Down 270w

MacGregor, Rt Hon John, Secretary of State for Education & Science
Debates etc.
Education (Student Loans) Bill, 1R (22:11:89) 116
Questions
Agricultural & Food Research Council 24-5w
British Geological Survey, Finance 6w
GCE A level 179-80w
National Curriculum Geography Working Group 5w
Science & Engineering Research Council 5-6w
Science & technology research, Advisory Board for the Research Councils 6-7w
Student Loans Company, Offices 5w

McKay, Mr Allen
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 748
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 79-83
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 139
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 524
Questions
Salmonella 101w
Trident missiles, Lobbying 569-70

MacKay, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Deaf, Public petitions (24:11:89) 344
Questions
East Germany 312w

McKelvey, Mr William
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 526
Questions
EC Foreign Affairs Council 319-20w
Social security benefits, Young people 139w
Tanker aircraft, Defence procurement 231w

Maclean, Mr David, Parliamentary Secretary for Agriculture
Questions
Advisory Committee on Irradiated & Novel Foods, Public appointments 188-9w
Animal feed, Lead 135w, 478w
Badgers, Bovine tuberculosis 187w
Bovine somatotropin, Testing 476w
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy 305-6w
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy cattle 304-5w
Cattle, Hormone treatments 478w
Eli Lilley 190w
Environment, Interest groups 400w
Farmers, Retirement 136w
Food colourings 303w
Food imports, Radioactivity 478w
Irradiated food, EC action 188w
Irradiated food, Public opinion 189w
Irradiated food, Research 188w
Malawi, Overseas aid 135
Meat, Enzymes 306w
Microwave ovens 190w, 477w
Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries & Food, Government laboratories 451w
Nutrition labelling 31-2w, 136w

Maclean, Mr David—continued
Offal, Research 306w
Pesticides, Research 467-76w
Pesticides Safety Division 187w
Slaughterhouses, Food contamination 188w
Veterinary Manpower & Education Review Committee 476-7w
Veterinary Products Committee 477w

McLeish, Mr Henry
Questions
Employment, Economic regions 20-2w

Maclennan, Mr Robert
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 251, 260, 310-4
Questions
Museums & galleries, Purchase grants 126w
Probation & aftercare 265w
Probation & aftercare, Government grants to local authorities 265w

McLoughlin, Mr Patrick, Under-Secretary of State for Transport
Debates etc.
Shipping, EC action (29:11:89) 789-93, 806-8
Trust ports (01:12:89) 1008-10
Questions
Air traffic, East Midlands Airport 79w
Air traffic, Glasgow Airport 274w
Air traffic, Scotland 78-9w
Air traffic control, International cooperation 275w
Air transport, Treaties 274w
Aircraft noise, Glasgow 274w
Aircraft noise, Glasgow Airport 273w
Birmingham Airport 78w, 343w
Commissioners of Irish Lights, Public appointments 275w
Fishing vessels, Shipping accidents 276w
Merchant ships, Armed conflict 344w
Oil pollution, Prosecutions 441w
Salvage, Wrecks 441w
Sea rescue, North Devon 79-80w
Sea rescue, Swansea 276-7w

McNair-Wilson, Sir Michael
Questions
AIDS, Expenditure 412w
Armed forces deployment, Security 244w
AWE Aldermaston, Security 435w
Haemophilia, AIDS 411-2w
Northern Ireland, Political parties 192w

McNair-Wilson, Sir Patrick
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 43-6
Questions
Eastern Europe, Democracy 577-8

McWilliam, Mr John
Debates etc.
War widows' pensions (23:11:89) 338
Questions
Social security benefits, Young people 139w

Madden, Mr Max
Debates etc.
Prime Minister's Questions, Calling of Members (30:11:89) 876
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 248
Standing Order No 20 applications, Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 714
Questions
Business statements 240, 853
Horton Bank reservoir, Safety 41w
Immigration appeals 347w
Pakistan 327w
Prosecutions, Water charges 175w
Water charges, Water supply industry 166w
Water storage, Safety 40-1w
Water supply disconnections, Yorkshire & Humberside 369w
Yorkshire Water, Water charges 166w

MAFF
see Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries & Food

Magazine press
VAT 421w

Magistrates
Dismissal 446w
Litter 108w
Training 108w

Magistrates' courts
Child abuse 385w
Criminal proceedings 447w

Mahon, Mrs Alice
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 305-7
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 459
Wild animals, Animal husbandry (27:11:89) 554
Questions
Business statements 239
Cambodia 310w
Closed shop, Complaints 377-8w
Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members 378w
Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members, Operating costs 378w
Defence expenditure 233w
EC Consumer Affairs Council 465w
GCE A level, Age participation rates 21w
Grammar schools, Student numbers 21-3w
One parent families, Social security benefits 139-40w

Maintenance
One parent families 214-5w

Major, Rt Hon John, Chancellor of the Exchequer
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 594-606
Questions
Central government borrowing, Charitable trusts 431w
Delors, Jacques 418w
EC Finance Council 821
EC Finance Council, War widows' pensions 821
Economic situation, EC social charter 833
Exchange rates 822
Exchange rates, European monetary system 821-2, 830
Exchange rates, Free movement of capital 831
Exchange rates, Inflation 831
Farmers, Extensification schemes 830-1
National Loans Fund, Government securities 172w
Tax allowances, Health insurance 425w

Malawi
British residents abroad 97w
Diplomatic service 98w
Educational aid 73w
Human rights 98w
Military aid 114-5w
Overseas aid 89w, 103w, 135w, 155w

Mallon, Mr Seamus
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 752
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 54
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 140-3
Questions
EC law, Extradition 704
Northern Ireland, Terrorism 835-6

Malta
International conferences 706

Managers
NHS administration 444w

Mandela, Nelson
Prisoners' release 433w

Mans, Mr Keith
Debates etc.
NHS finance, Blackpool Wyre & Fylde Health Authority (22:11:89) 220
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 187-8
Questions
EC Fisheries Council 187w

Mans, Mr Keith—continued
Environment protection, International cooperation 247w
National income, Business 427w
Nature Conservancy Council 16-7w

Manual workers
Pay 453w

Manufactured goods
Balance of trade 282w
Import penetration 282w
Industrial production 284w

Manufactured imports
Balance of payments 823

Manufacturing industries
East Midlands 121w
Economic situation 832
Employment level 374-6w
Government assistance to industry 283w
Import penetration 267w
Industrial production 428-9w
Interest rates 420w
Productivity 428w

Marconi
328w

Marek, Dr John
Questions
Broadcasting controls, Sinn Fein 173w
Civil servants, Pay comparability 435
Electricity supply industry, Early retirement 177w
Gibraltar, Air transport 200w
Gibraltar, Gardens 200w
National income 172w

Marine Accident Investigation Branch
276w

Marine Conservation Society
250w

Marines
Deal barracks 569

Marital status
Abortion 292-3w

Mark
Exchange rates 831-2

Marketing
Forestry 287w

Marks & Spencer
190w

Marland, Mr Paul
Debates etc.
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 536-7, 544, 547-50
Questions
Economic growth, EC countries 832

Marlow, Mr Tony
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 14
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 258-9, 277
Questions
Business statements 235-6
Civil service, Ethnic minorities 435-6
Foreign patients, Republic of Ireland 102w
Hospital patients, Republic of Ireland 102w
Social security benefits, Per capita costs 149-50w

Marshall, Mr Jim
Questions
Armed forces deployment, Security guards 569

Marshall, Mr John
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 128
Questions
Bus services, Greater London 78w
EC Budget Council 2-3w

Marshall, Mr John—continued
Family credit, Take-up 142w
Inland Revenue, Civil service dispersal 1-2w
Road construction 27w
Social Security Act 1989, Commencement orders 10w
Social security recipients, Pop festivals 427
Unemployment, Hendon 453-4w
USSR, Emigration 197w, 328w

Marshall, Mr Michael
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 372-5
Questions
Business statements 842
Council of Europe, Eastern Europe 709

Martin, Mr David
Debates etc.
Deaf, Public petitions (24:11:89) 343
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 164-6
Questions
Arts finance, Southern Arts Association 125w
Economic growth 428w
Environment protection, International cooperation 247w
Navy, Aircraft 239-40w
Nuclear submarines, Nuclear disarmament 567
Official engagements 195w
Portsmouth 191w
Small Firms Service 207w

Martin, Mr Michael J
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 59
Questions
Business statements 846
El Salvador, Ministers of religion 311w

Martlew, Mr Eric
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 506-7
Questions
Defence expenditure 233w
Hong Kong, Ministers' visits abroad 308w
Social security benefits, Young people 139w

Maternity services
Hospital length of stay 221w

Maude, Mr Francis, Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office
Questions
Berlin 322w
China, Export controls 328w
China, Foreign policy 328w
Coordinating Committee on Export Controls 36w
Council of Europe 327w
Cyprus 315w
Cyprus, Arms trade 420w
Dalai Lama 329w
Diplomatic bags, Security 453w
East Germany 312w
Eastern Europe, East west relations 316w
Eastern Europe, EC external relations 316-7w
EC countries, Extradition 703-4
EC Foreign Affairs Council 318-20w
EC law, Extradition 704
EC law, Merchant Shipping Act 1988 711
EC law, Single European Act 710-1
EC social charter 320w, 700-1, 711-2
EC social charter, European Parliament Members 701
EC social charter, Free movement of labour 700-1
EC social charter, Socialism 700
European Commission, EC law 318-9w
European Communities 319-20w
European Council 319w
Extradition, Drug crimes 704
Gibraltar, Air transport 200w
Gibraltar, Gardens 200w
Greece 321w

Maude, Mr Francis—continued
Hong Kong 308-9w
Hong Kong, British national (overseas) 308w
Hong Kong, European Communities 308-9w
Hong Kong, Extradition 452w
Hong Kong, Government responses 418w
Hong Kong, Ministers' visits abroad 308w
Hong Kong, Vietnamese refugees 198w, 308w
Kurdistan, Turkey 35w
Poland, EC aid 316w
Poland, EC external relations 197w
South Korea, Human rights 453w
South Korea, State visits 704
Spain 320-1w
Tibet 198w
Tibet, China 328-9w
Turkey 315w
Vietnamese refugees, Repatriation 416w

Mawhinney, Dr Brian, Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland
Questions
Arts festivals, Belfast 196w

Maxton, Mr John
Questions
Argentina, Foreign policy 322-3w
Pensions 141w

Maxwell-Hyslop, Mr Robin
Questions
Barlow Clowes, Company investigations 465w
Business statements 841

Mayhew, Rt Hon Sir Patrick, Attorney-General
Questions
Company investigations, Rights of accused 95w
Criminal proceedings, Magistrates' courts 447w
Homicide, Worthington, Emma 347w
Immigration appeals 347w
Land Registry Office, Surveying 346-7w
Legal aid, Legal costs 177-8w
Legal aid, Public expenditure 178w
Legal aid, Religion 178w
Magistrates, Dismissal 446w
Magistrates, Litter 108w
Sentencing 395w
Serious Fraud Office 445w
Water pollution, Camelford 447w

Mays Inquiry
see Guildford Four Inquiry

Meacher, Mr Michael
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 517-23
Questions
Child benefit, Inflation 429
Dept of Social Security, Computers in Government departments 146w
Dept of Social Security, Delivery of service in the 90s 153w
Dept of Social Security local offices, Civil service agencies 153-4w
Income support, Social security recipients 213-4w
Pensions, British residents abroad 251w
Pensions, Social security reciprocal agreements 251-2w
Personal pensions 149w
Personal taxation, Tax burden 460-4w
Retirement pensions, Income support 370w
Social Fund 214w
Social security benefits, Expenditure 154w
Social security benefits, Young people 421
Social security benefits rules, Part-time education 150-1w
Unemployment benefits, Low pay 213w
Welfare milk 216w

Meale, Mr Alan

Meale, Mr Alan—continued*
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 61
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 282-3
Questions
Arts Support Review Group 124w
Blood sports, Demonstrations 393w
Defence land, Trespass 360w
Income support, Residential care 149w

Meat
Enzymes 306w

Medical equipment
Abortion 217w
Heart diseases 412-3w

Medical examinations
Attendance allowance 151w

Medical records
Abortion 216w

Medical rehabilitation
410w

Medical research
Genetics 73-4w
Neuroblastoma 99w

Medical treatments
444w
Genetic engineering 225w

Medway Tunnel Bill (HL) 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

Mellor, Mr David, Minister of State, Home Office*
Debates etc.
Suicide, Brixton Prison (24:11:89) 415-8
Questions
Broadcasting, Public appointments 174w
Broadcasting controls, Sinn Fein 173w
Cable television 383-4w
Independent Broadcasting Authority 381w
Independent Broadcasting Authority, Compensation 173w
Independent Broadcasting Authority, Conflict of interests 173-4w
Independent Broadcasting Authority, Pay 103-4w
Independent Television Commission, Advertising controls 381w
Kirkham Prison, Construction 393w
Prison employment, Greater London 437w
Prison population, Men 386-9w
Prison sentences, Safety belts 263w
Prisoners on remand, Police custody 389w
Satellite broadcasting 381w
Wandsworth Prison 381-2w
Wandsworth Prison, Sanitation 382w
Young offenders, Custodial treatment 385w
Young offenders, Detention centres 384w
Young offenders, Remand in custody 384-5w

Melton Mowbray
Royal Army Veterinary Corps 244w

Members
Unemployment benefits 376w

Members' attendance
Speaker's rulings & statements (27:11:89) 492

Members' conduct
Speaker's rulings & statements (21:11:89) 9, 10, 12, 15, (22:11:89) 124, 134, 183-4, (23:11:89) 226, 245, 276, (27:11:89) 534, (28:11:89) 606, 613, 676, (29:11:89) 702, (30:11:89) 837, 865-6, 868

Members' facilities
House of Commons broadcasting 362w
Satellite broadcasting 395w
Speaker's rulings & statements (22:11:89) 116

Members' interventions
Speaker's rulings & statements (21:11:89) 28, 34, 36, 41, 75, (22:11:89) 129, 133, 134, (24:11:89) 345, (27:11:89) 460, 529, 536-7, 539, 542, 548, (28:11:89) 602-4, 609, 611, 614, 673, (29:11:89) 699, 725, 730, 732-3, (01:12:89) 954

Members' speeches
Speaker's rulings & statements (21:11:89) 33, 36, 101, (22:11:89) 119, 164, (23:11:89) 247, 279, 324, (24:11:89) 345, 389, (27:11:89) 441, 450, 463, 477, 450, 483, 498, 535, 538, 541-2, 543, 544, 550, (28:11:89) 584, 604, 622, 625, (29:11:89) 719, 734, 797, (30:11:89) 870, (01:12:89) 943, 967, 1000

Men
Population projection 100w
Prison population 386-9w

Mental health services
Mentally handicapped 218w

Mentally handicapped
Mental health services 218w

Merchant seamen
Community charge 165w, 185w

Merchant Shipping Act 1988
Questions
EC law 711

Merchant ships
Armed conflict 344w

Mercury Communications
British Telecom 38w

Mergers
EC action 39-40w, 289w
Research councils 352w
Shares 39w

Mersey Regional Health Authority
224w
Finance 224w
Hospital consultants 224w

Merseyside
Health & Safety Executive 269w

Metropolitan Police
12-3w, 345w

Meyer, Sir Anthony
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 55-7

Meyer, Anthony
Thatcher, Margaret 576-7

MGC
see Museums & Galleries Commission

Michael, Mr Alun
Debates etc.
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 543
Questions
Arts finance, Handicapped 123w
Business statements 855
Food poisoning, Consumer protection 340w
Food poisoning, Wales 339-40w
Infrastructure, Expenditure 424w
Nuclear submarines, Emergency planning 566-7
Police, Manpower 391-4w
Social security benefits rules, Part-time education 143-4w
Somalia, Peace negotiations 325-6w
South Korea, Animal welfare 416-7w
Telephone services, Consumer protection 92-3w, 109w
Water authorities, Foreign investment in UK 85w
Water authorities, Shares 84-5w
Water supply, Chromic acid 42-4w
Welsh Water, Administrative costs 118w
Welsh Water, Government shareholding 118w

Michael, Mr Alun—continued*
Welsh Water, Shares 116-8w

Michie, Mr Bill
Questions
Tactical nuclear weapons, Nuclear weapons deployment 234w
VAT, Consumer expenditure 823-4

Michie, Mrs Ray
Questions
Caledonian MacBrayne, Public appointments 111w
Community charge, Death 395-6w
Employment training, Scotland 278-9w
European monetary system, Exchange rates 422-3w

Microwave ovens
190w, 477w

Middle East
Balance of trade 287-8w
Peace negotiations 313-4w, 324w
Prisoners 314w

Midland main railway line
Railway electrification 274w

Midwives
Pay settlements 299w
Training 299-300w

Military aid
El Salvador 699
Malawi 114-5w
Nicaragua 699

Military aid to civil community
Disaster relief 237w

Military aircraft
114w
Arms control negotiations 97w
USA 435w

Military balance
230w
NATO 245-6w

Military exercises
Airports 246w
Ammunition 246w

Military vehicles
Ambulance services 33-4w

Milk
Food contamination 133w
Lead poisoning 303w
Listeria monocytogenes 100w, 135w

Miller, Sir Hal
Debates etc.
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 862
Questions
CFE talks 321w

Mills, Mr Iain
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 758

Ministerial policy advisors
Contracts of employment 32w

Ministerial speeches
Speaker's rulings & statements (28:11:89) 605-6, (30:11:89) 828

Ministerial statements
Rover Group (30:11:89) 857-67
Speaker's rulings & statements (30:11:89) 875-7
Straw burning (30:11:89) 868-74

Ministers
Pay 444-6w

Ministers' domestic visits
Electrical technology 405w
Schools 350w
Theatres 335w
Wales 191w
Yorkshire Regional Health Authority 412w

Ministers of religion
El Salvador 311w, 413-4w

Ministers' visits abroad
Hong Kong 308w
Israel 349w

Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries & Food
187w, 194-5w
Government laboratories 451w

Ministry of Defence
194-5w
Compensation 242w
Cost effectiveness 235w
Disclosure of information 564-5
Electronic surveillance 565

Miscampbell, Mr Norman
Debates etc.
NHS finance, Blackpool Wyre & Fylde Health Authority (22:11:89) 222

Misrepresentation
Shops 281-2w

Missing persons
Kenya 333w

Mitchell, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 511-4
Questions
Ministry of Defence, Cost effectiveness 235w
Water supply industry, Shares 3w

Mitchell, Mr Austin
Debates etc.
EC external trade, Japan (29:11:89) 770, 781-3
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 736
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 146, 166-9
Questions
Accountants 90w
Ambulance services, Contracts for services 409w
Arts 336w
Balance of payments, Economic policy 430w
Computers, Balance of trade 458-9w
Dept of Trade & Industry, Departmental publications 92w
Dept of Trade inquiries 90-1w
Heart diseases, Medical equipment 412-3w
Import penetration, Manufacturing industries 267w
Imports, Capital goods 430w
Income support, Personal records 374w
Manual workers, Pay 453w
Manufactured goods, Industrial production 284w
Official engagements 431w
Pay settlements, Inflation 459-60w
Prime Minister, Costs 442w
Prime Minister, Official hospitality 432w
Prime Minister, Working hours 431w
South Korea, Political prisoners 432w

Mitchell, Sir David
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 495-7

MMC
see Monopolies & Mergers Commission

Moate, Mr Roger
Questions
Armed forces strength, Europe 570
European Communities 319w
Inflation 419w

Mobility allowance
Blind 371w
Deaf 371w
Social security benefits rules 371w
Social security recipients 371w

MOD
see Ministry of Defence

Modernisation
Nuclear weapons 572
Tactical nuclear weapons 235-6w, 708

Modernisation—continued
WE 177 nuclear bomb 231w

Molyneaux, Rt Hon James
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 51-5
Questions
Family credit, Take-up 426

Monetary policy
831
Interest rates 419w, 829

Money supply
Inflation 831

Monieu, France
Naturalisation 28w

Monopolies & Mergers Commission
39w, 94w, 465w

Monro, Sir Hector
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 214
Straw burning (30:11:89) 870
Questions
Nature conservation, Scotland 186-7w

Montagu of Beaulieu, Lord
Historic Buildings & Monuments Commission for England 156w

Montgomery, Sir Fergus
Questions
Business statements 229, 843-4

Montserrat
Disaster relief 415w
Homelessness 415w

Moonie, Dr Lewis
Questions
Armed forces medical services, Ambulance services 234w

Morgan, Mr Rhodri
Debates etc.
Community charge, Ministerial statements (30:11:89) 875
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 541, 548, 550
Questions
Lance missiles, Nuclear weapons deployment 231w

Morley, Mr Elliot
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 146, 155
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 546
Questions
Arts Support Review Group 124w

Morris, Rt Hon Alfred
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 463-8
War widows' pensions (23:11:89) 334-7, 339
Questions
Business statements 234
Haemophilia, AIDS 89w, 192w
Invalid care allowances 452w
Neuroblastoma, Screening 99w

Morris, Mr Michael
Debates etc.
Ethiopia, Famine (27:11:89) 439

Morrison, Sir Charles
Questions
Kennet District Council, Partnerships 83w

Morrison, Rt Hon Peter, Minister of State for Energy*
Questions
Alternative energy, Electricity generation 176w
Energy conservation 447-8w
Gas fired power stations, Electricity generation 74w

Morrison, Rt Hon Peter—continued
Gas flaring, Power industry 447w
Tidal power, Severn barrage 75w

Morriston Hospital
M4 205w

Mortgages
Restrictive trade practices 94w

Mothers
Abortion 290-1w
Education 455w

Motor vehicle registration
Auctions 5w

Motor vehicle testing
27w

Motorcycles
Courier services 181w
Leg protectors 274w

Motorway service areas
M25 15w, 440w

Motorways
Death 439-40w
Lighting 439-40w
Road safety 183w
Road tolls 80w

Mowlam, Ms Marjorie
Questions
Defence expenditure, USA 238w
National insurance contributions, Tax evasion 150w
Social security abuse, Dept of Social Security special investigators 211-2w
Tax evasion, Civil service manpower 458w
West Midlands Police, Convictions 385w

Moynihan, Mr Colin, Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Sport)*
Questions
Development plans, East Anglia 164w
Docklands light railway, Railway network 83w
Dogs, Animal breeding 165w
Football, Identity cards 370w
Forests, Planning permission 86w
Government buildings, Property development 157-8w
Housing construction, Cambridge 164-5w
Urban areas, Government grants 88w
Urban planning, Lambeth Borough Council 180w

Mullin, Mr Chris
Questions
Cambodia, United Nations 310w
Malawi, British residents abroad 97w
Malawi, Diplomatic service 98w
Malawi, Educational aid 73w
Malawi, Human rights 98w
Malawi, Military aid 114-5w
Malawi, Overseas aid 89w, 103w, 135w, 155w

Multifibre arrangement
284w

Murphy, Mr Paul
Questions
Council housing, Handicapped 115w
Homelessness, Wales 337w
Housing associations, Wales 201w
Social security benefits, Young people 420

Museums & galleries
127w
Arts finance 124w
Finance 32-3w
Purchase grants 126w
Repairs & maintenance 125w
Rural areas 128w

Museums & Galleries Commission
128w, 433

NAA
see North Atlantic Assembly

NACAB
see National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux

Nairn
Bypasses 112w

Namibia
318w
Elections 317w

NAO
see National Audit Office

Narcotics
China 308w
Treaties 308w

National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux
80-1w, 148w

National Audit Office
(30:11:89) 857-67, 878-928

National Coal Board
see British Coal Corporation

National Council for Vocational Qualifications
179-80w
Training 268w

National Curriculum Council
179-80w

National Curriculum Geography Working Group
5w

National Employer Liaison Committee
Armed forces reserves 246w

National Farmers' Union
449w

National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations
131w

National Finance
see Treasury

National Girobank
Privatisation 92w, 283w

National Health Service & Community Care Bill 1989/90
Debates etc.
1R (22:11:89) 116
Questions
433-4w

National Heritage Memorial Fund
126w
Purchase grants 126w

National income
172w
Business 427w
East Germany 172w
Public expenditure 426-7w

National insurance benefits
151-2w

National insurance contributions
Tax evasion 150w

National Loans Fund
Government securities 172w

National Museum of Wales
Admission charges 115w

National Organisation for the Widowed & their Children see Cruse

National Rivers Authority
42-3w, 116-7w

National savings
429w

National Savings Bank (Investment Deposits) (Limited) (Amendment) Order 1989
Debates etc.
(30:11:89) 877

National Subtitling Library for Deaf People
Government grants to voluntary organisations 451w

National Union of Teachers
Pay 353w

NATO
97w, 113-4w, 230w, 235-6w, 238w, 246w, (24:11:89) 345-410, 570, (01:12:89) 943-1007
Armed forces deployment 571
Armed forces strength 243-4w
Arms control negotiations 706-7, 710, 836-7
Atlantic Ocean 235-6w
Defence expenditure 236w
East Germany 197w, 326w
East west relations 577-8
Eastern Europe 836-7
Military balance 245-6w
USA 706

Natural gas production
Imports 448w

Naturalisation
Monien, France 28w

Nature Conservancy Council
16-7w, (22:11:89) 119-217, 167w, 186-7w, 250w, 398w
Cardiff Bay barrage 448w

Nature Conservancy Council for England
16-7w

Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland
16-7w, 186-7w

Nature conservation
Africa 254-5w
Basking sharks 249-50w
Birds 398w
Common land 87w
Scotland 186-7w

Navy
Aircraft 239-40w
Armed forces recruitment 242w
Armed forces strength 238w

NCB
see British Coal Corporation

NCC
see Nature Conservancy Council

Neale, Mr Gerrard
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 252, 303-5

Needham, Mr Richard, Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland*
Questions
Buildings, Dromara 270w
Buildings, Slieve Croob 169-70w
Coats Viyella, Government assistance to industry 95w
Hospices, Finance 271w
Quarrying, Newtownards 271-2w

Nellist, Mr Dave
Debates etc.
Ambulance services, Standing Order No 20 applications (23:11:89) 243
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 862
Questions
Armed forces medical services, Ambulance services 235w
Business statements 851
Christmas bonus 148w
Community charge benefits, West Midlands 87-9w
Israel, Occupied territories 314w
Military vehicles, Ambulance services 33w
Social security benefits, Young people 139w

Nelson, Mr Anthony
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 57
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 584, 595

Nelson, Mr Anthony—continued*
Straw burning (30:11:89) 873
Questions
War widows' pensions 566

Nepal
Trade barriers 320w

Neubert, Mr Michael, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces*
Questions
Arms exports, Cyprus 361w
Defence procurement, Employment 360w
Defence Quality Assurance Directorate, Stockton on Tees 245w
Devonport dockyard, Defence contracts 239w
HMS Invincible, Lifts 358-9w
HMS Upholder, Torpedoes 359w
Low flying 245w
Nuclear weapons tests, Exservicemen 239w, 241-2w, 573-4
Type 23 frigates, Defence procurement 231w
War widows' pensions 238-9w, 565-6
War widows' pensions, Free votes 566

Neuroblastoma
Medical research 99w
Screening 99w

New businesses
120-1w
East Midlands 375-6w
Small businesses 827

New Forest
393w

New Southgate Cemetery & Crematorium Limited Bill 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

Newcastle upon Tyne
Food vouchers 146w
Royal Shakespeare Company 128w

Newport
118-9w, 338w

Newry & Mourne District Council
Road finance 269w
Roads 270w

Newton, Rt Hon Tony, Secretary of State for Social Security*
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 523-9
Questions
Child benefit, Family credit 429
Child benefit, Inflation 429
Child benefit, Social security benefits uprating 429
Family credit, Administrative delays 426
Family credit, Child benefit 426
Family credit, Take-up 425-6
Pensioners, Christmas bonus 423
Pensioners, Personal income 138w, 423-4
Retirement pensions, Average earnings 423-4
Social security, Expenditure 138w
War widows' pensions, Liverpool 136w

Newtownards
Quarrying 271-2w

Next steps initiative
14w, 437-8

NFFO
see National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations

NFU
see National Farmers' Union

NHS
Alternative medicine 99-100w
Buildings 339w
Contracts for services 18w

NHS—continued
Information technology 226-9w
Public expenditure 575-6
Queen's speech (27:11:89) 441-533

NHS administration
Managers 444w

NHS charges
Police 389w

NHS finance
422w
Blackpool Wyre & Fylde Health Authority (22:11:89) 218-24
NHS review 220w
Scottish health boards 18w
VAT 18w

NHS Health Advisory Service
see Health Advisory Service

NHS hospital trusts
280w, 295-8w
Blood transfusion services 301w

NHS internal market
226-9w
Community hospitals 223w

NHS review
226-9w, 422w, (27:11:89) 441-533
NHS finance 220w

Nicaragua
Bilateral aid 198-200w
Democracy 698
Development aid 195w
EC external relations 698
Elections 325w, 698-700
Military aid 699
Overseas aid 199-200w, 698-9

Nicholls, Mr Patrick, Under-Secretary of State for Employment*
Questions
Closed shop, Complaints 377-8w
Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members 378w
Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members, Operating costs 378w
"Disabled Adults" 379w
Disabled workers 379-80w
Employment 212w
Employment, Derbyshire 267w
Employment, Economic regions 20-2w
Employment, Publishing 210-2w
Employment level 454w
Employment level, Manufacturing industries 374-6w
Employment protection 269w
Employment training 209-10w
Equal pay 209w
Factory Inspectorate, Manpower 454w
Factory Inspectorate, Yorkshire & Humberside 454w
Football, Safety standards 128w
Footwear industry, Redundancy 380-1w
Health & Safety Executive, Administrative delays 19w
Health & Safety Executive, Building industry safety 19w
Health & Safety Executive, Fire regulations 20w
Health & Safety Executive, Management 18-20w
Health & Safety Executive, Merseyside 269w
Health & Safety Executive, Training 20w
"HSC Plan of Work for 1989-90 & Beyond" 19w
Industrial health & safety 208w
Industrial health & safety, Young people 128w
Industrial relations law, Trade unions 207w
Industrial training, Skill shortages 375w
Manual workers, Pay 453w
Mothers, Education 455w
National Council for Vocational Qualifications, Training 268w
Redundancy Fund 381w
Textile industry, Redundancy 380w

Nicholls, Mr Patrick—continued*
Unemployment 375w
Unemployment, Cleveland 454w
Unemployment, Hendon 453-4w
Unemployment, Northern region 267-8w
Unofficial strikes, Law reform 374w
Working mothers 454w
Youth training scheme, Industrial accidents 129-32w

Nicholson, Mr David
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 945, 994-6
Questions
Animal feed, Lead 478w
Dairy farming, Production quotas 399-400w
Drugs, Counterfeit manufacturing 217w, 293-4w
Local government borrowing, Local government expenditure 156-8w
M5, Road works 275-6w
Pensioners, Personal income 423
Retail prices, Statistics 131w
Retirement pensions, Expenditure 372w

Nicholson, Miss Emma
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 96-7
Questions
Arts Council 433
Farmers, Extensification schemes 830-1
National income, Public expenditure 426-7w
Poland, Overseas aid 701-2

Night flying
Air traffic 274w

NII
see Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Nitrates
368-9w
Water supply 44w

Nitrogen oxides
42w, 166-7w

Nitrous oxide
Air pollution control 156w

Noise
Railway transport 80w

Noise at Work Regulations 1989
Questions
20w

Non-governmental organisations
89w, 254w, 334w, 417w

Norman Shaw buildings
Smoke & chimney gases 165w

Norris, Mr Steve
Debates etc.
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 862-3
Questions
Animal experiments, Licensing 382-3w
Business statements 845
Defence expenditure 241w
Secondary education, School closures 258-60w

North Atlantic Assembly
706

North Atlantic Treaty Organisation
see NATO

North Devon
Sea rescue 79-80w

North West Arts
124w

North West region
Pensioners 144w
Social security appeals 373w

North West Water Authority
Water supply disconnections 40w

Northern Arts
432-4

Northern Ireland
Broadcasting 108-9w
Gurkhas 229w
Hospices 271w
Identification of criminals 565
Legal aid 177-8w
Political parties 192w
Public expenditure 272-3w
Radioactive fallout 95w
Radioactivity 94-5w
Terrorism 835-6
Textile industry 95w

Northern Ireland Housing Executive
(30:11:89) 878-928
Housing finance 21w

Northern Ireland Office
Sinn Fein 579-80

Northern region
Arts Support Review Group 432-3
Regional arts associations 432-3
Unemployment 267-8w

Northern Regional Health Authority
Blood transfusion services 301w

Nottingham
353w, 436-7
Community charge 363w
Homelessness 364w
Social Fund 151w

Nottingham Park Estate Bill (HL) 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

NRA
see National Rivers Authority

Nuclear artillery shells
BAOR 114w

Nuclear disarmament
Armed forces strength 571
Nuclear submarines 567

Nuclear Electric
403w
Electricity generation 403w

Nuclear fuel reprocessing
Capital investment 75w
Contracts 385w
Sellafield 74w

Nuclear fuels
Pressurised water reactors 74w

Nuclear fusion
77w

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate
247-8w, 400-1w

Nuclear power
Electricity supply industry 76w
Research finance 34w

Nuclear power stations
Electricity generation 404w
Research finance 404w

Nuclear submarines
Cardiff docks 566-7
Emergency planning 566-7
Fishing gear 567-8
Nuclear disarmament 567

Nuclear weapons
Defence procurement 572
Modernisation 572
Tornado aircraft 572

Nuclear weapons deployment
Lance missiles 231w
SS21 missiles 113w
Tactical nuclear weapons 234w
Trident missiles 570

Nuclear weapons tests
Compensation 573-4
Exservicemen 239w, 241-2w, 573-4

Nuclear weapons tests—continued
Radioactivity 241-2w

Nurse Prescribing Working Group
409w

Nursery schools
Bolton 259w

Nurses
Career structure 218w
Pay 443-4w
Prescriptions 409w

NUT
see National Union of Teachers

Nutrition labelling
31-2w, 136w

Oakes, Rt Hon Gordon
Questions
Family credit, Take-up 141-2w

OAL
see Office of Arts & Libraries

Objects in lieu of tax
Art works 336w

O'Brien, Mr William
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 80, 94-6
Questions
Coal mining, Selby 448w
Heating allowances, Income support 424-5

Occupied territories
96w, 324w, 702, 704-5
Armed conflict 96w
Elections 315w
Israel 314w
School closures 315w

OECD countries
Balance of trade 122w
Corporation tax 824-5
Inflation 122w

Offal
Research 306w

Office of Arts & Libraries
Expenditure 123-4w

Office of Population Censuses & Surveys
339-40w, 379w
Handicapped 143w

Office of Telecommunications
92-3w, 168-9w

Offices
Student Loans Company 5w, 71w

Official engagements
195w, 431w

Official hospitality
Prime Minister 432w

Official publications
Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 767

Official Report
Speaker's rulings & statements (22:11:89) 118

Official secrets
Civil servants 455w
Public appointments 174w

Official Secrets Act 1911
Questions
174w

Official visits
Israel 324w
West Yorkshire 577

Oil fired power stations
176w

Oil pollution
Prosecutions 441w

Oil prices
465w

Oil revenues
Balance of payments 829

One parent families
Community charge 248w
Earnings rules 451-2w
Maintenance 214-5w
Social security benefits 139-40w
Social security finance 139w
Social security recipients 372-3w

O'Neill, Mr Martin
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 402-6
Questions
Armed forces, Thailand 357w
Armed forces strength, Nuclear disarmament 571
Armed forces training 355-7w
Armed forces training, Disclosure of information 355w
Armed forces training, Law 355w
Armed forces training, Security 355w
Armed forces training, Thailand 357w
Armed forces training, Zimbabwe 355w
Communication engineering, Cambodia 357w
Diplomatic service, Defence 198w
Thailand, Diplomatic service 198w
War widows' pensions 566
WE 177 nuclear bomb, Civil servants' visits abroad 355w
WE 177 nuclear bomb, Defence procurement 354-5w
WE 177 nuclear bomb, France 354w

OPCS
see Office of Population Censuses & Surveys

Opencast mining
Productivity 401w
Wales 207w

Operating costs
Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members 378w
European Environment Agency 366w
Student Loans Company 71w

Oppenheim, Mr Phillip
Debates etc.
EC external trade, Japan (29:11:89) 768, 773, 784-7
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 589, 651-4
Questions
Confederation of British Industry 425w
Employment, Derbyshire 267w
Manufacturing industries, East Midlands 121w
Pyramid selling, Orders & regulations 348-9w

Opposition days
Speaker's rulings & statements (28:11:89) 673

Optical fibres
Telecommunications technology 348w

Oral questions
Speaker's rulings & statements (22:11:89) 113-5, (27:11:89) 428, 441, (29:11:89) 698, 713, (30:11:89) 828
Welsh Office 395w

Oral tobacco
294-5w

Orders & regulations
Pyramid selling 348-9w
Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 810

Orme, Rt Hon Stanley
Questions
Ambulance services, Industrial disputes 833-4
National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux 148w

Orme, Rt Hon Stanley—continued
Pensioners, Christmas bonus 423

Ormskirk
Bypasses 438w

Orpington Hospital
Capital investment 302w

Orthopaedics
Hospital waiting lists 101w

Osman, Lorrain Esme
452w

Otterburn
Defence land 360w

Overseas aid
171w
Cambodia 17w, 254w, 309w
El Salvador 27w, 199w
Expenditure 327-8w
Gaza Strip 452w
Hungary 315-6w
Malawi 89w, 103w, 135w, 155w
Nicaragua 199-200w, 698-9
Poland 313w, 315-6w, 701-2
Public expenditure 415-6w
South America 413w

Overseas broadcasting
Democracy 696

Overseas Development
see Foreign & Commonwealth Office

Overseas investment
Balance of payments 828-9

Overseas students
Hungary 333w

Overseas trade
Eastern Europe 283w
Economic situation 828
Iraq 93w
Romania 696
South Africa 282w

"Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom" (27:11:89) 419

Overseas workers
Domestic service 209w, 384w

Overtime
Health service staff 300-1w

Owen, Rt Hon David
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 270-9

Owner occupied housing
Inner city areas 158w

Oxfordshire
Community charge 163w

Oxfordshire County Council
Local government expenditure 163w
Local government finance 163w

PAC
see Public Accounts Committee

Page, Mr Richard
Debates etc.
Education & industry (30:11:89) 937
Public Accounts Committee (30:11:89) 901-4, 924
Questions
EH 101 helicopters, Aircraft engines 232w
Foreign investment in UK 121w
Middle East, Peace negotiations 313-4w
Public expenditure, Northern Ireland 272-3w

Page Committee
see Veterinary Manpower & Education Review Committee

Page Street
Rights of way 182w

Paice, Mr James
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 178-80
Straw burning (30:11:89) 872
Questions
Banks, Credit 422w
British Council 325w
Defence expenditure 241w
Museums & galleries, Rural areas 128w

Paisley, Rev Ian
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 49-51

Pakistan
327w
Bilateral aid 324w
Entry clearances 320w

Palace of Westminster
Energy costs 363w
Gun sports 88w, 248-9w
Television engineering 362w
Televisions 362-3w

Palestine
Peace negotiations 704-5

Palestine Liberation Organisation
96w
Foreign policy 332w
Peace negotiations 705
World Health Organisation 332w

Parking
Lorries 273w

Parkinson, Rt Hon Cecil, Secretary of State for Transport*
Debates etc.
Civil Aviation Authority (Borrowing Powers) Bill, 1R (23:11:89) 246
Questions
Channel tunnel, Spoil heaps 184-5w
Motor vehicle registration, Auctions 5w

Parkland Walk Hornsey
182w

Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration
465w

Parliamentary privilege
Speaker's rulings & statements (21:11:89) 12

Parliamentary questions
Costs 432w, 442w

Parole
Administrative delays 393-4w

Parole Board
393-4w

Parry, Mr Robert
Debates etc.
Standing Order No 20 applications, Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 715
Questions
Business statements 845
Defective housing, Liverpool City Council 162w
East west relations, Defence 240w
Education Reform Act 1988 178-9w
National Girobank, Privatisation 92w
Teachers, Recruitment 49-50w

Partnerships
Kennet District Council 83w

Part-time education
Social security benefits rules 143-4w, 150-1w

Party conferences
Conservative Party 427

Party leaders
Conservative Party 696

Patchett, Mr Terry
Questions
WE 177 nuclear bomb 231w

Patients
St Helen's & Knowsley Health Authority 224w

Patrol craft
242w

Patten, Rt Hon Chris, Secretary of State for the Environment*
Debates etc.
Property Services Agency & Crown Suppliers Bill, 1R (22:11:89) 115-6
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 128, 137, 199-200, 207, 211-7
Questions
Community charge, Transitional relief 4w
EC Environment Council 368-9w
Environment, Interest groups 162-3w
Environment protection, Competition 161w
Environment protection, International cooperation 247w
Environmental policy, Local authorities 369w
Hazardous wastes, Imports 361-2w
Nature Conservancy Council 16-7w
Palace of Westminster, Television engineering 362w
Palace of Westminster, Televisions 362-3w
Regional fisheries advisory committees 83w
Rivers advisory committees 83w
Water authorities, Trusts 84w
Water supply industry, Privatisation 361w
Water supply industry, Shares 3w

Patten, Mr John, Minister of State, Home Office*
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 266, 319, 328-33
Questions
Appeals, Director of Public Prosecutions 28-31w
Bombings, Birmingham 31w
Bombings, Guildford 382w
Child abuse, Magistrates' courts 385w
Commission for Racial Equality 383w
Commission for Racial Equality, Government grants 383w
Convictions, Safety belts 259-64w
Crimes of violence, Statistics 389-90w
Criminal injuries compensation, Administrative delays 390-2w
Criminal Injuries Compensation Board 107w
Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, Administrative delays 106-7w
Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, Finance 107w
Damages, Discrimination 264-5w
Fires, Bolton 386w
Government grants to voluntary organisations, Efficiency scrutinies 103w
Litter, Prosecutions 107-8w
Probation & aftercare 265w
Probation & aftercare, Government grants to local authorities 265w
Sentencing, Crime 103w

Pawsey, Mr James
Questions
Agricultural & Food Research Council 24-5w
Clifton 193w
Cyprus 254w
Dunchurch 434w
Handicapped 218w
Interest rates 419w
"Sport & Young People" 24w
Student grants 436w
Student loans, Costs 436w

Pay
Broadcasting Complaints Commission 104w
Civil service unions 434
Independent Broadcasting Authority 103-4w
Industry 832-3
Local government adjudicator 85w
Manual workers 453w

Pay—continued
Ministers 444-6w
National Union of Teachers 353w
Nurses 443-4w
Teachers 163w, 397w
White-collar workers 453w

Pay comparability
Civil servants 435

Pay settlements
Arts centres 434
Inflation 459-60w
Midwives 299w

PCFC
see Polytechnics & Colleges' Funding Council

Peace keeping operations
Central America 321-2w

Peace negotiations
El Salvador 311w
Iran-Iraq war 95-6w
Israel 704-6
Lebanon 326w
Middle East 313-4w, 324w
Palestine 704-5
Palestine Liberation Organisation 705
Somalia 325-6w
Sri Lanka 329w

Peacock, Mrs Elizabeth
Questions
Yorkshire Regional Health Authority, Ministers' domestic visits 412w

Pearl Group
Takeovers 94w

Pembroke
Bypasses 45w

Pembrokeshire
Welsh Development Agency 206w

Pensioners
141w
Christmas bonus 423
Heating allowances 425
Income support 152w
North West region 144w
Personal income 138w, 423-4
Personal savings 138w
Severe weather payments 45w
Shareholders 429w
Social security benefits uprating 141w
Social security payments 214w
Standing charges 424-5

Pensions
140-1w
British residents abroad 251w
Concessionary fares 143w
EC countries 149w
Social security benefits uprating 140-1w, 251-2w
Social security reciprocal agreements 251-2w

Pentachlorophenol
EC action 364w

Penzance Albert Pier Extension Bill 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (27:11:89) 419, (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

Per capita costs
Arts finance 127w
Social security benefits 149-50w

Performance indicators
224-5w, 377w

Personal equity plans
424w

Personal income
Community charge 81-2w
Handicap benefits 147w
Pensioners 138w, 423-4

Personal pensions
149w

Personal records
Income support 374w
Scotland 110w
Social security benefits 427

Personal savings
Pensioners 138w

Personal taxation
Tax burden 460-4w

Personnel
Family doctors 411w

Pesticides
Licensing 133w
Research 467-76w

Pesticides Safety Division
187w

Pets
Animal welfare 390w

Pharmacies
Departmental circulars 294w
Family practitioner committees 301-2w

Philippines
Immigrants 384w

Photographs
Police 393w

Photography
Speaker's rulings & statements (22:11:89) 115

Pike, Mr Peter L
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 270
Questions
Employment level, Manufacturing industries 374-6w
Imports 430w
Income support, Social security reform 145w
Lance missiles, Nuclear weapons deployment 231w
Namibia 318w
Official engagements 195w

Planning permission
Forests 86w

PLO
see Palestine Liberation Organisation

Points of order
Speaker's rulings & statements (21:11:89) 35, (27:11:89) 439-40, 459, (28:11:89) 583, (29:11:89) 730, 732-3

Poland
313w, 434w
Democracy 317w, 701-2
EC aid 91w, 316w
EC external relations 197w
EC external trade 91w
Educational visits 703
Foreign relations 313w
Overseas aid 313w, 315-6w, 701-2
Pollution control 703

Police
Manpower 12-3w, 391-4w
NHS charges 389w
Photographs 393w
Wales 391-4w

Police civilians
12-3w, 391-4w

Police custody
Prisoners on remand 389w

Police grant
391-4w

Political activities
Local government staff 85-6w

Political parties
Northern Ireland 192w

Political prisoners
South Korea 432w

Political refugees
394w

Polluter pays principle
Aircraft noise 364w
Pollution control 364w

Pollution
Atomic Weapons Research Establishment 42-3w

Pollution control
Licensing 160w
Poland 703
Polluter pays principle 364w
River Mersey 366-7w
River pollution 258w
South Wales 116w

Pollution Inspectorate
see HM Inspectorate of Pollution

Pollution monitoring
Polychlorinated biphenyl 206w

Polychlorinated biphenyl
Electrical technology 405w
Pollution monitoring 206w

Polytechnics
Engineering education 351-2w

Polytechnics & Colleges' Funding Council
258w
Educational finance 351w
Engineering education 352w

Pop festivals
Availability for work 426
Social security recipients 426-7

Population
Registrar General 36-7w
Revenue support grant 160w

Population projection
Local government finance 160w
Men 100w

Population studies
Economic situation 428w

Pornography
Law enforcement 106w
Shops 106w

Porter, Mr Barry
Debates etc.
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 537
Questions
Berlin 322w
Trident 236w

Porter, Mr David
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 143-6
Questions
Income tax 426w
Official engagements 195w
Sentencing, Crime 103w
Sizewell B 74w
Teachers, Manpower 73w
US bases, East Anglia 354w
USSR, Foreign policy 324w

Porthmadog
A487 201w

Portillo, Mr Michael, Minister for Public Transport
Questions
British Rail 183w
Bus services, Competition 78w, 439w
Bus services, Greater London 78w
Channel tunnel 184w
Channel tunnel, Railway network 79w, 180w
Channel tunnel, Transport infrastructure 273w
Channel tunnel, Waterloo Station 180w

Portillo, Mr Michael—continued
European Conference of Ministers of Transport 343-4w
London Underground 78w
Railway accidents 77-8w
Railway electrification, Midland main railway line 274w
Railway network, Bradford 183w
Railway network, EC grants & loans 181w
Railway network, Public service obligation grant 450-1w
Railway track, Arrests 345w
Railway track, Death 344-5w
Railway transport, Cost benefit analysis 184w
Railway transport, Noise 80w

Portsmouth
191w

Post Office
92w, 283w

Poultry
Health hazards 99w
Salmonella 134-5w

Powell, Charles 436

Powell, Mr Ray
Debates etc.
Community charge, Ministerial statements (30:11:89) 876
Official Report (22:11:89) 118
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 321
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 541, 544, 550

Powell, Mr William
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 965-7
Questions
Investment, Consumption 420w

Power industry
Gas flaring 447w

Power station closures
Costs 77w

Power stations
Production 176-7w

Pre-school education
Standard spending assessments 159w

Prescott, Mr John
Debates etc.
Shipping, EC action (29:11:89) 790, 793-8, 800, 804, 806
Questions
Channel tunnel, Spoil heaps 184-5w
Treasury, Public expenditure 122w

Prescription charges
Income 280-1w, 299w
Scotland 280-1w
Wales 449w

Prescription charges exemptions
Asthma 38w

Prescriptions
Nurses 409w

Press releases
Self-regulating organisations 466w

Pressurised water reactors
Nuclear fuels 74w

Prestwick Airport
273w

Price, Sir David
Questions
Nurses, Prescriptions 409w

Price Waterhouse
50w

Prices
Electricity generation 403w

Primarolo, Ms Dawn
Questions
Day nurseries, Taxation 423w
Tactical nuclear weapons, Nuclear weapons deployment 234w

Primary education
Curriculum 351w
Departmental correspondence 350w
Headteachers 350w
School buildings 202w
School closures 45-6w
School population 205-6w

Prime Minister
Costs 442w
Official hospitality 432w
Railway travel 89w, 442w
Working hours 431w

Prime Minister's Questions
Speaker's rulings & statements (30:11:89) 876

Prison employment
Greater London 437w

Prison population
Men 386-9w
Scotland 277w
Women 386-9w

Prison sentences
Safety belts 263w

Prisoners
Child benefit 145w
Complaints 175-6w
Hospitals 437-8w
Lebanon 325-6w
Middle East 314w

Prisoners on remand
Police custody 389w

Prisoners' release
Mandela, Nelson 433w

Private Bills
Speaker's rulings & statements (22:11:89) 114-5, 117, (29:11:89) 717-8

Private Members' motions
(29:11:89) 717

Private Members' time
House of Commons division of time (22:11:89) 117, 117-8

Private sector
Arts finance 431

Private sector housing
Housing finance 21w

Privatisation
Civil service manpower 171w
Crown Suppliers (22:11:89) 115-6
Electricity supply industry 176w, 252w
Income 120w
Local government functions 41w
National Girobank 92w, 283w
Property Services Agency (22:11:89) 115-6
Rover Group 576, 834-5, (30:11:89) 857-67
Shares 429w
Tees & Hartlepool Port Authority (01:12:89) 1004-10
Water supply industry 3-4w, 42w, 84-5w, 361w, 577
West Wiltshire District Council 41-2w

Privy Council
Speaker's rulings & statements (23:11:89) 226, 244, 246

Probation & aftercare
265w
Government grants to local authorities 265w

Procurement
Government departments 266-7w

Production quotas
Dairy farming 399-400w

Productivity
Car industry 834
Manufacturing industries 428w
Opencast mining 401w

Professional qualifications
Justices' clerks 13w

"Promoting Better Health White Paper"
226-9w

Property development
Government buildings 157-8w

Property rights
European Environment Agency 366w

Property Services Agency
157-8w, 194-5w
Privatisation (22:11:89) 115-6

Property Services Agency & Crown Suppliers Bill 1989/90
Debates etc.
1R (22:11:89) 115-6

Property transfer
Development Board for Rural Wales 338w

Prosecutions
Company accounts 349-50w
Disabled workers 455w
Electricity area boards 403w
Litter 107-8w
Oil pollution 441w
Quota of disabled workers 457w
Sites of special scientific interest 249w
Water charges 175w

Protest movements
Eastern Europe 710

Provisional Sinn Fein
see Sinn Fein

PSA
see Property Services Agency

Public Accounts Committee
(30:11:89) 878-928

Public appointments
Advisory Committee on Business Appointments 17-8w
Advisory Committee on Irradiated & Novel Foods 188-9w
Broadcasting 174w
Caledonian MacBrayne 111w
Commissioners of Irish Lights 275w
Leicestershire Health Authority 298-9w
Official secrets 174w

Public expenditure
421w, 425w
Legal aid 178w
National income 426-7w
NHS 575-6
Northern Ireland 272-3w
Overseas aid 415-6w
Treasury 122w

Public Health Laboratory Service
100w

Public houses
Security of tenure (01:12:89) 942

Public inquiries
Kincora Children's Home 195-6w
M11 276w

Public libraries
Information services 155w

Public opinion
Irradiated food 189w

Public petitions
Deaf (24:11:89) 343, 344
Self-governing hospitals (24:11:89) 344
Television programmes (22:11:89) 217, (28:11:89) 684, (29:11:89) 810, (30:11:89) 929, (01:12:89) 942

Public sector borrowing
Public sector borrowing—continued*
Civil Aviation Authority (23:11:89) 246

Public sector earnings
Government grants to local authorities 163w

Public sector housing sales
Scottish Homes 280w

Public service obligation grant
Railway network 450-1w

Public utilities
15w

Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950
Questions
Law reform 15w

Publicity
Anglian Water 84w
Child abuse 219w
Severn Trent 84w

Publishing
Balance of trade 288-9w
Employment 210-2w

Purchase grants
Museums & galleries 126w
National Heritage Memorial Fund 126w

Pyramid selling
Orders & regulations 348-9w

Quarrying
Newtownards 271-2w

Queen's speech
(21:11:89) 12-103
Addresses to the Crown (21:11:89) 7-12, (29:11:89) 693
Broadcasting controls (23:11:89) 247-333
Crime (23:11:89) 247-333
Defence (24:11:89) 345-410
Economic situation (28:11:89) 584-683
Environment (22:11:89) 119-217
Foreign policy (24:11:89) 345-410
Industry (22:11:89) 119-217
NHS (27:11:89) 441-533
Social security (27:11:89) 441-533
Speaker's rulings & statements (21:11:89) 4, (28:11:89) 583, 584-5

Quin, Ms Joyce
Debates etc.
EC external trade, Japan (29:11:89) 772-8, 786
Questions
Chemical weapons 240w

Quota of disabled workers
456-7w
Departmental forms 457w
Prosecutions 457w

Radar
China 328w
European fighter aircraft 239w

Radice, Mr Giles
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 613
Questions
Capital goods, Imports 423w
Exchange rates, European monetary system 578

Radio frequencies
International cooperation 93w

Radio reception
Cellular phones 168w

Radioactive fallout
Compensation 95w
Northern Ireland 95w

Radioactivity
Farms 94-5w, 109w, 115w, 133-4w
Food imports 478w
Northern Ireland 94-5w

Radioactivity—continued
Nuclear weapons tests 241-2w
Scotland 109-10w
Wales 115w

RAF Chivenor
Rescue services 568

Raffan, Mr Keith
Questions
Employment, Wales 336w
Hong Kong 308w

Railway accidents
77-8w

Railway electrification
Edinburgh-Glasgow railway 277w
Midland main railway line 274w

Railway network
Bradford 183w
Channel tunnel 79w, 180w, 340w
Docklands light railway 83w
EC grants & loans 181w
Public service obligation grant 450-1w
Wales 340w, 450-1w

Railway track
Arrests 345w
Death 344-5w

Railway transport
Cost benefit analysis 184w
Investment 821
Noise 80w
Transport policy 90w

Railway travel
Prime Minister 89w, 442w

Rainham
Theme parks 367w

Raison, Rt Hon Timothy
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 730
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 479-81

Randall, Mr Stuart
Questions
Local government functions, Privatisation 41w
West Wiltshire District Council, Local government staff 41w
West Wiltshire District Council, Privatisation 41-2w
West Wiltshire District Council, West Wiltshire Holdings 41w

Rateable value
Water charges 164w

Rates & rating
Basildon & Thurrock Health Authority 412w
Landlord & tenant 167w
Universities 111w

Rathbone, Mr Tim
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 951-2
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 45
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 358
Questions
Armed forces, Drug crimes 241w
Arts, Handicapped 127w
Consultants, Government departments 266w
Council of Europe 327w
Family credit, Take-up 142w
South America, Drug crimes 413w

RAVC
see Royal Army Veterinary Corps

RCVS
see Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons

Rechem International
Wales 206w

Recording industry
Balance of trade 288-9w

Recreation spaces
Road construction 26w

Recruitment
Teachers 49-50w, 353w

Recycling
Chlorofluorocarbons 206w

Red alerts
Whipps Cross Hospital 407w

Redbridge London Borough Council Bill 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

Redmond, Mr Martin
Questions
Acid rain, Compensation 401w
Coal mining, Redundancy 401w
Energy, Conferences 254w
Energy conservation 447-8w
Energy policy 447w
Fluidised bed combustion, Research finance 401w
Gas flaring, Power industry 447w
Manufactured goods, Industrial production 284w
Opencast mining, Productivity 401w

Redundancy
Coal mining 401w
EC internal trade 208w
Footwear industry 380-1w
Textile industry 380w

Redundancy Fund
381w

Redundant mineworkers' payments scheme
403w

Redwood, Mr John, Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs*
Debates etc.
EC external trade, Japan (29:11:89) 767-72, 774, 787-8
Questions
Accountants 90w
Arms trade, Chile 170-1w
Balance of trade, East Germany 169w
Balance of trade, Iran 170w
Balance of trade, Israel 287-8w
Balance of trade, Manufactured goods 282w
Barlow Clowes, Company investigations 465w
Business Cooperation Network 285w
Commodity markets, Investor protection 466w
Company accounts, Prosecutions 349-50w
Dept of Trade inquiries 90-1w
EC aid, Poland 91w
EC external trade, Poland 91w
EC trade 283w
Export credit guarantees 348w
Export credit guarantees, Iraq 169-70w
Export Credits Guarantee Department 347w
Financial Intermediaries Managers & Brokers' Association 92w
Footwear, Imports 94w
Footwear industry, Government assistance 466w
Forestry, Marketing 287w
Guinness, Company investigations 285w
Import penetration, Manufactured goods 282w
James Ferguson Holdings, Company investigations 285-6w
Licensed premises, Landlord & tenant 91-2w
Life insurance, Asset stripping 348w
Mergers, EC action 39-40w, 289w
Multifibre arrangement 284w
Oil prices 465w
Overseas trade, Eastern Europe 283w
Overseas trade, Iraq 93w
Overseas trade, South Africa 282w
Pearl Group, Takeovers 94w

Redwood, Mr John—continued
Recording industry, Balance of trade 288-9w
Self-regulating organisations, Press releases 466w
Self-regulating organisations, Trials 466-7w
Trade promotion, Iraq 288w

Rees, Rt Hon Merlyn
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 675-6
Questions
Family credit, Take-up 142w

Refuse
Local government finance 435w

Reg(EEC)3013/89
399w

Regent's Park
86w

Regional aid
Economic regions 286-8w
Tenby 449-50w

Regional arts associations
124w, 126w
East Midlands 431
Northern region 432-3
Yorkshire & Humberside 434

Regional enterprise grants
286-8w

Regional fisheries advisory committees
83w

Regional health authorities
Tomography 301w

Regional selective assistance
286-8w

Registered homes
Local authority powers 223w

Registered Homes Act 1984
Questions
102w, 223w

Registrar General
Community charge 36-7w
Population 36-7w

Reid, Dr John
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 68, 86-90
Questions
Central America, Peace keeping operations 321-2w
Tactical nuclear weapons 229w

Religion
Legal aid 178w

Religious broadcasting
Christianity 108w

Remand in custody
Young offenders 384-5w

Rents to mortgages scheme
Council tenants 279w
Development Board for Rural Wales 338w
Scotland 279-80w
Television advertising 279w, 338w
Wales 338w

Repairs & maintenance
Museums & galleries 125w

Repatriation
Vietnamese refugees 416w, 432w, 712, 837-8

Republic of Ireland
Foreign patients 102w
Hospital patients 102w
Social security benefits 45w

Rescue services
Helicopters 568
RAF Chivenor 568

Research
Basking sharks 250w
Delta Te immune support therapy 290w
Irradiated food 188w
Offal 306w
Pesticides 467-76w
Speech therapy 302w

Research councils
Mergers 352w

Research finance
Coal fired power stations 404w
Fluidised bed combustion 401w
Joint European Torus 77w
Nuclear power 34w
Nuclear power stations 404w

Residential care
Income support 144w, 148-9w, 422
Inspection units 102w
Local authorities 222w

Resource management initiative
226-9w

Respite care
428

Restrictive trade practices
Mortgages 94w

Retail prices
Statistics 131w

Retirement
Farmers 136w

Retirement pensions
46w
Age addition 370-1w
Average earnings 251w, 423-4
Expenditure 372w
Homelessness 372w
Income support 370w

Revenue support grant
Population 160w

"Review of Status Options for ECGD"
348w

Rhodes James, Mr Robert
Questions
Business statements 231-2

Richardson, Ms Jo
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 324-9

Richmond Committee
see Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food

Riddick, Mr Graham
Questions
Community charge benefits 146w
Uniform business rate, Yorkshire & Humberside 159w

Ridley, Rt Hon Nicholas, Secretary of State for Trade and Industry
Debates etc.
Landlord & Tenant (Licensed Premises) Bill 1R (01:12:89) 942
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 119-26, 128-9, 205-6
Rover Group, Ministerial statements (30:11:89) 857-67
Questions
Mergers, Shares 39w
Ministers' visits abroad, Israel 349w

Ridsdale, Sir Julian
Debates etc.
EC external trade, Japan (29:11:89) 776-7

Rifkind, Rt Hon Malcolm, Secretary of State for Scotland
Debates etc.
Scottish Episcopal Clergy Widows & Orphans' Fund Order Confirmation Bill, 1R (29:11:89) 695

Rifkind, Rt Hon Malcolm—continued
Questions
Hazardous wastes, Imports 186w
Nature conservation, Scotland 186-7w

Rights of accused
Company investigations 95w

Rights of way
Page Street 182w

River Mersey
Pollution control 366-7w

River pollution
Pollution control 258w
River Rhymney 116-7w
Wales 258w

River Rhymney
River pollution 116-7w

River Tees Barrage & Crossing Bill (HL) 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (23:11:89) 226, (27:11:89) 419, (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

River Thames
440w

Rivers advisory committees
83w

Road accidents
Bolton 438w
Driving instruction 440w
M4 204w

Road construction
27w
A605 26w
Avonmouth 275w
Common land 182w
Dalton-in-Furness bypass 181w
Land values 182w
M4 204-5w
Recreation spaces 26w
Road safety 274w

Road finance
Down District Council 269w
Newry & Mourne District Council 269w
Wales 260w

Road freight transport
439w

Road haulage permits
Fees & charges 4-5w

Road safety
Motorways 183w
Road construction 274w

Road tolls
Motorways 80w

Road traffic
25w
Air pollution 166-7w
M1 184w
M4 204w
Waterloo Station 180w

"Road User & the Law White Paper"
14-5w

Road works
Contracts 183w
M5 275-6w
Standard spending assessments 249-50w

Roads
276w
Down District Council 270w
Newry & Mourne District Council 270w
South Down 270w

Roberts, Mr Allan
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 215

Roberts, Mr Wyn, Minister of State for Wales
Debates etc.
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 536

Roberts, Mr Wyn—continued
Questions
A487, Porthmadog 201w
Bypasses, Pembroke 45w
Channel tunnel, Railway network 340w
Education & industry, Curriculum 206w
Education & industry, Teachers 206w
Education & industry, Wales 202-3w
M4 255w
M4, Morriston Hospital 205w
M4, Road accidents 204w
M4, Road construction 204-5w
M4, Road traffic 204w
M4, Wales 205w
Primary education, School buildings 202w
Primary education, School population 205-6w
Road finance, Wales 260w
School closures, Primary education 45-6w
School closures, Wales 201-2w
School population, Dyfed 203w
School population, West Glamorgan 203w
Schools, West Glamorgan 203w
Special education, Curriculum 203w

Robertson, Mr George
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 952-9

Robinson, Mr Geoffrey
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 596
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 865
Questions
Business statements 852

Robinson, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 499-500

Roe, Mrs Marion
Questions
Family credit, Child benefit 426
Social security benefits, Families 142w

Rogers, Mr Allan
Questions
Delors, Jacques 418w
Nuclear weapons, Tornado aircraft 572

Romania
Human rights 696
Overseas trade 696

Rooker, Mr Jeff
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 720-1, 747, 755-7
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 250, 265
Television programmes, Public petitions (22:11:89) 217
Questions
Business statements 230-1
Civil service manpower 429-30w
Community charge, Administrative cosis 159w
Community charge, Low incomes 362w
Community charge, Personal income 81-2w
Community charge, Transitional relief 81w
Cruse, Government grants to voluntary organisations 98w
Delors, Jacques 418w
EC social charter 700
Family credit, Administrative delays 426
Nurses, Career structure 218w
Pensioners, Social security payments 214w
Police, NHS charges 389w
Population, Revenue support grant 160w
Population projection, Local government finance 160w
Registrar General, Population 36-7w
Serious Fraud Office 445w
Social security benefits, Families 140w
Social security claims, Community charge register 213w
Standard spending assessments, Census of population 248w
Standard spending assessments, Child protection registers 160w
Standard spending assessments, Pre-school education 159w

Rooker, Mr Jeff—continued
Standard spending assessments, Social security recipients 362w
Unemployment benefits, Childbirth 207w

Ross, Mr Ernie
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 375-7
Questions
Balance of payments 427w
EC Foreign Affairs Council 318w
European fighter aircraft, Radar 239w
Israel, Human rights 705

Ross, Mr William
Debates etc.
House of Commons Chamber, Photography (22:11:89) 115
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 633-5
Questions
Family doctors, Vaccination 224-5w
Legal aid, Legal costs 177-8w
Legal aid, Public expenditure 178w
Legal aid, Religion 178w
Level crossings, Coleraine 272w
Shotgun certificates 174-5w
Vaccination, Tetanus 224w

Rossi, Sir Hugh
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 135-40
Questions
Legislative drafting 34w

Rost, Mr Peter
Questions
Nuclear power, Research finance 34w
Palace of Westminster, Energy costs 363w

Rover Group
Ministerial statements (30:11:89) 857-67
Privatisation 576, 834-5, (30:11:89) 857-67
Subsidies 835

Rowe, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 445
Questions
Business statements 233
EC social charter, European Parliament members 701

Rowlands, Mr Ted
Debates etc.
Community charge, Ministerial statements (30:11:89) 875, 877
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 605, 654-7
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 527
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 543-4, 550
Questions
Exchange rates, Mark 831-2
Railway network, Public service obligation grant 450-1w

Royal Army Veterinary Corps
Melton Mowbray 244w

Royal Artillery Range Hebrides
246w

Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons
390w

Royal Fine Art Commission
157-8w

Royal Mint
Civil service agencies 14w

Royal Ordnance
(30:11:89) 878-928

Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain
294w

Royal Shakespeare Company
Newcastle upon Tyne 128w

Royal Society for Nature Conservation
87w

Ruddock, Mrs Joan
Questions
Delors, Jacques 418w
Flexible response 230w
M11, Public inquiries 276w
Norman Shaw buildings, Smoke & chimney gases 165w

Rumbold, Mrs Angela, Minister of State for Education and Science
Questions
City technology colleges, School catchment areas 353w
Education Reform Act 1988 178-9w
Educational finance, Stoke-on-Trent 49w
Headteachers, Departmental circulars 350-1w
History education, Curriculum 350w
National Union of Teachers, Pay 353w
Nursery schools, Bolton 259w
Primary education, Curriculum 351w
Primary education, Departmental correspondence 350w
St Mary's School Bulwell, Departmental correspondence 178w
"Sport & Young people" 24w
Teachers, Stoke-on-Trent 49w

Rural areas
Councillors attendance allowances 110w
Housing 336-7w
Museums & galleries 128w
Unemployment 337w

Ryder, Mr Richard, Economic Secretary to the Treasury
Questions
Balance of payments, Economic policy 430w
Balance of trade, OECD countries 122w
Bank of England 420-1w
Banks, Credit 422w
Civil service manpower 429-30w
Civil service pensions, Index linking 172-4w
Company finance 120w
Confederation of British Industry, Interest rates 419w
Consultants, Government departments 266w
Consumer credit 428w
Debts 427w
EC Budget Council 2-3w
EC Finance Council 421w
Economic growth, EC countries 426w
Financial services, EC internal trade 121-2w
Import penetration, Manufacturing industries 267w
Industrial production, Manufacturing industries 428-9w
Inflation 418-9w
Inflation, Economic policy 419w
Inflation, OECD countries 122w
Interest rates 120w, 419-20w
Interest rates, "Autumn Statement, 1989" 826-7
Interest rates, Manufacturing industries 420w
Interest rates, Monetary policy 419w
Interest rates, Scotland 420w
Interest rates, Small businesses 419-20w, 826-7
Interest rates, Unemployment 120w
Mortgages, Restrictive trade practices 94w
National income 172w
National savings 429w
Pay settlements, Inflation 459-60w
Privatisation, Civil service manpower 171w
Procurement, Government departments 266-7w
Royal Mint, Civil service agencies 14w
Small businesses, Bankruptcy 827-8
Small businesses, New businesses 827
Taxation, Consumer expenditure 824
Treasury, Civil service dispersal 120w
VAT, Consumer expenditure 823-4
VAT, Inflation 824
VAT, Magazine press 421w
VAT, Tax burden 427w
VAT, Unemployed 824

Ryder, Mr Richard—continued
VAT threshold, VAT registration 427w

Safe integral reactor
76w

Safety
Electrical control equipment 75-6w, 402-3w
Horton Bank reservoir 41w
School buildings 261w
Water storage 40-1w

Safety belts
Convictions 259-64w
Prison sentences 263w

Safety measures
Tritium 400-1w

Safety standards
Football 128w

Safeway
190w

Sainsbury, Mr Tim, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign & Commonwealth Affairs
Questions
Argentina, Foreign policy 322-3w
British Council 325w
Burma, Elections 323w
Cambodia 310-1w
Cambodia, British residents abroad 309-10w
Cambodia, Khmer Rouge 310-1w
Cambodia, Overseas aid 309w
Cambodia, UN resolutions 309w
Cambodia, United Nations 310w
Central America, Bilateral aid 198-200w
Central America, Peace keeping operations 321-2w
Chile 325w
China, Narcotics 308w
Colombia, Drug crimes 307w
Drug abuse 307-8w
Drug abuse, International conferences 308w
Drug abuse, United Nations 307w
Drug crimes, Crime prevention 307w
Eastern Europe, EC immigration 317w
El Salvador, Armed forces 413-4w
El Salvador, British residents abroad 311-2w
El Salvador, Diplomatic relations 312w
El Salvador, Human rights 312w
El Salvador, Military aid 699
El Salvador, Ministers of religion 311w, 413-4w
El Salvador, Overseas aid 199w
El Salvador, Peace negotiations 311w
El Salvador, USA 311-2w
Fishery protection, Drift nets 36w
Foreign & Commonwealth Office, Computers in government departments 418w
Genocide, Treaties 329-31w
Human Rights Day 334w
Hungary, Overseas students 333w
India, Amnesty International 197w
International conferences, Children 414w
Japan, Drift nets 36w
Kenya, Missing persons 333w
Kurdistan, United Nations 35-6w
Middle East, Prisoners 314w
Montserrat, Homelessness 415w
Nepal, Trade barriers 320w
Nicaragua, EC external relations 698
Nicaragua, Elections 325w, 698-700
Nicaragua, Military aid 699
Nicaragua, Overseas aid 199-200w
Overseas aid, Expenditure 327-8w
Pakistan 327w
Pakistan, Bilateral aid 324w
Pakistan, Entry clearances 320w
Palestine Liberation Organisation, World Health Organisation 332w
Sarawak 325w
Sikhs, Human rights 417w
South America, Drug crimes 413w
South Korea, Animal welfare 416-7w

Sainsbury, Mr Tim—continued
Sri Lanka, Human rights 98w
Sri Lanka, Peace negotiations 329w
Thailand, Diplomatic service 198w
UN Relief & Works Agency, Foreign aid 414w
USSR, Compensation 1w

St George's Hill Weybridge Estate Bill 1987/88
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

St Helen's & Knowsley Health Authority
Blind 407-8w
Capital investment 224w
Hospital closures 223w
Patients 224w

St Margaret's Island
(29:11:89) 718

St Mary's School Bulwell
Departmental correspondence 178w

Salmond, Mr Alex
Debates etc.
Fisheries, Scotland (21:11:89) 110
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 141
Questions
Interest rates, Scotland 420w
Trident 236w
White fish, Fishing quotas 399w

Salmonella
101w
London Zoo 86w
Poultry 134-5w

Salvage
Wrecks 441w

Sanitary protection
Health hazards 218w

Sanitation
Caravan sites 248w
Community charge 248w
Wandsworth Prison 382w

Sarawak
325w

Satellite broadcasting
381w
Members' facilities 395w

Satellite communications
168-9w

Sayeed, Mr Jonathan
Debates etc.
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 540

Scarisbrick-Pinfold bypass
Consultants 181w

SCEALA
see Standing Conference of East Anglian Local Authorities

Schengen Agreement
386w

School boards
Scotland 396w

School buildings
Greater London 261w
Primary education 202w
Safety 261w

School catchment areas
City technology colleges 353w

School closures
Occupied territories 315w
Primary education 45-6w
Secondary education 258-60w
Wales 45-6w, 201-2w

School Examinations & Assessment Council
179-80w

School population
Dyfed 203w
Primary education 205-6w
Wales 205-6w
West Glamorgan 203w

School Sport Forum
24w

Schools
Ministers' domestic visits 350w
West Glamorgan 203w

Science & Engineering Research Council
5-6w

Science & technology
Expenditure 352-4w
UN resolutions 453w

Science & technology research
Advisory Board for the Research Councils 6-7w

Scope of debate
Speaker's rulings & statements (27:11:89) 549

Scotland
Air traffic 78-9w
College councils 185-6w
Community care 214w
Community charge 185w, 395-6w
Councillors attendance allowances 110w
Criminal injuries compensation 397w
Devolution 577
Employment training 278-9w
Family doctors 278w, 281w
Fisheries (21:11:89) 104-12
Fishing quotas 110-2w
Forestry 111-2w
Hazardous wastes 186w
Interest rates 420w
Legal aid 398w
Nature conservation 186-7w
Personal records 110w
Prescription charges 280-1w
Prison population 277w
Radioactivity 109-10w
Rents to mortgages scheme 279-80w
School boards 396w
Self-governing hospitals 280w
Special protection areas 398w
Teachers 396-7w
Universities 111w

ScotRail
277w

Scott, Rt Hon Nicholas, Minister of State, Dept of Social Security
Questions
Attendance allowance, Administrative delays 151w
Attendance allowance, Medical examinations 151w
Blind, Cost of living 371-2w
Carers premium 428
Community care 422
Community care, Scotland 214w
Disability Benefits Consortium 152w
Elderly, Hypothermia 144w
Handicap benefits 213w, 215w
Handicap benefits, Expenditure 212-3w
Handicap benefits, Green papers 215w
Handicap benefits, Personal income 147w
Handicap benefits, Social security benefits rules 147w
Handicap benefits, Social security benefits uprating 147w
Handicap benefits, Social security finance 371w
Handicapped, Office of Population Censuses & Surveys 143w
Heating allowances, Death 425
Heating allowances, Income support 424-5
Heating allowances, Pensioners 425
Income support, Residential care 422
Income support, Social security recipients 213-4w
Income support, Young people 214w
Independent Living Fund, Handicapped 138w

Scott, Rt Hon Nicholas—continued
Invalid care allowances 452w
Mobility allowance, Deaf 371w
Mobility allowance, Social security benefits rules 371w
Mobility allowance, Social security recipients 371w
National Subtitling Library for Deaf People, Government grants to voluntary organisations 451w
Respite care 428
Severe weather payments 150w
Social Fund 137-8w, 214w
Social Fund, Community care 149w
Social Fund, Greater London 216w
Social Fund, Leicestershire 374w
Social Fund, Loans 138w
Social Fund, Nottingham 151w
Social Fund, Social security claims 137w
Social security benefits, Community care 422
Social security benefits, Expenditure 154w
Social security benefits uprating 140w
Social security reform, Employment 140w
War widows' pensions 136w

Scottish Affairs Select Committee
(28:11:89) 584-683
Speaker's rulings & statements (30:11:89) 877

Scottish Episcopal Church
(29:11:89) 695

Scottish Episcopal Clergy Widows' & Orphans' Fund Order Confirmation Bill 1989/90
Debates etc.
1R (29:11:89) 695

Scottish health boards
NHS finance 18w

Scottish Homes
279-80w
Housing estates 280w
Public sector housing sales 280w

Scottish Law Commission
277-8w

Scottish Legal Aid Board
398w

Scottish legal system
Damages 277-8w

Screening
Blood diseases 218w
Huntington's chorea 219-20w
Neuroblastoma 99w

Sea rescue
North Devon 79-80w
Swansea 276-7w

SEAC
see School Examinations & Assessment Council

Secondary education
School closures 258-60w

Securities & Investments Board
287w

Security
Armed forces deployment 244w, 568
Armed forces training 355w
AWE Aldermaston 435w
Diplomatic bags 453w

Security Forces Collusion with Loyalist Terrorists Inquiry
564

Security guards
Armed forces deployment 569

Security of tenure
Public houses (01:12:89) 942

Sedgemore, Mr Brian
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 612, 648-51
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 867

Sedgemore, Mr Brian—continued
Questions
Air pollution, Road traffic 166-7w
Air pollution monitoring 42w
London assessment studies, East London 25-6w
Road construction, Recreation spaces 26w

Selby
Coal mining 448w

Self-governing hospitals
295-8w
Public petitions (24:11:89) 344
Scotland 280w

Self-Governing Schools Etc (Scotland) Bill 1988/89
Questions
185-6w

Self-regulating organisations
Press releases 466w
Trials 466-7w

Sellafield
75w
Nuclear fuel reprocessing 74w

Sentencing
395w
Crime 103w

SERC
see Science & Engineering Research Council

Serious Fraud Office
445w

Severe disability premium
Income support 216w

Severe weather payments
150w, 424-5
Pensioners 45w

Severn barrage
Tidal power 75w

Severn bridge
(27:11:89) 534-53

Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989
Debates etc.
(27:11:89) 534-53

Severn Trent
Publicity 84w

Sewage
Torbay (01:12:89) 941-2

Sexual offences
Handicapped 222w

SF
see Sinn Fein

Shamsuddin, Dato Hashim
452w

Shareholders
Pensioners 429w

Shares
Mergers 39w
Privatisation 429w
Water authorities 84-5w
Water supply industry 3w
Welsh Water 116-8w

Shaw, Mr David
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 730-1
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 263
Questions
Arts finance 125w
Defence, USSR 232w
Eastern Europe, Socialism 707-8
Marines, Deal barracks 569
Personal pensions 149w

Shaw, Sir Giles
Debates etc.
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 864

Shaw, Sir Michael
Debates etc.
Public Accounts Committee (30:11:89) 892-6, 927
Questions
Farm & countryside initiative 17w

Sheep
Government assistance 115-6w

Sheep premiums
EC law 399w

Sheerman, Mr Barry
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 281
Questions
Bombings, Guildford 382w
Railway track, Arrests 345w
Railway track, Death 344-5w
Wandsworth Prison 381-2w
Wandsworth Prison, Sanitation 382w

Sheldon, Rt Hon Robert
Debates etc.
Public Accounts Committee (30:11:89) 878-92
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 595

Shelton, Sir William
Debates etc.
Suicide, Brixton Prison (24:11:89) 412-5

Shephard, Mrs Gillian, Under-Secretary of State for Social Security*
Questions
Attendance allowance, Social security appeals 48w
Child benefit 144-5w
Child benefit, Administrative costs 46-7w
Child benefit, Prisoners 145w
Christmas bonus 147-8w
Community charge benefits 146w
Community charge benefits, West Midlands 87-9w
Dept of Social Security, Computers in Government departments 145-6w
Dept of Social Security, Delivery of service in the 90's 153w
Dept of Social Security local offices, Civil service agencies 153-4w
Dept of Social Security local offices, Computers in government departments 430
Dept of Social Security local offices, Hackney 427
Dept of Social Security local offices, Lost working days 152w
Disabled child premium, Income support 215w
Family credit, Take-up 141-2w
Food vouchers, Newcastle upon Tyne 146w
Higher pensioner premium, Income support 215w
Homelessness, Invalidity benefits 372w
Homelessness, Social security benefits 147w
Homelessness, Social security benefits rules 146-7w
Homelessness, Social security recipients 451w
Hostels, Homelessness 372w
Hostels, Social security benefits rules 372w
Housing benefits, Greater London 144w
Income support, Carers premium 152w
Income support, Greater Manchester 148w
Income support, Kurdistan 152w
Income support, Personal records 374w
Income support, Residential care 144w, 148-9w
Income support, Social security reform 145w
National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux 148w
National insurance benefits 151-2w
National insurance contributions, Tax evasion 150w
One parent families, Earnings rules 451-2w
One parent families, Maintenance 214-5w
One parent families, Social security benefits 139-40w

Shephard, Mrs Gillian—continued
One parent families, Social security finance 139w
One parent families, Social security recipients 372-3w
Pensioners 141w
Pensioners, Income support 152w
Pensioners, North West region 144w
Pensioners, Personal savings 138w
Pensioners, Social security benefits uprating 141w
Pensioners, Social security payments 214w
Pensions 140-1w
Pensions, British residents abroad 251w
Pensions, Concessionary fares 143w
Pensions, EC countries 149w
Pensions, Social security benefits uprating 140-1w
Pensions, Social security reciprocal agreements 251-2w
Personal pensions 149w
Retirement pensions 46w
Retirement pensions, Age addition 370-1w
Retirement pensions, Average earnings 251w
Retirement pensions, Expenditure 372w
Retirement pensions, Income support 370w
Severe disability premium, Income support 216w
Severe weather payments, Pensioners 45w
Social security abuse, Dept of Social Security special investigators 211-2w
Social security appeals, North West region 373w
Social security benefits, Allowance books 373-4w
Social security benefits, Families 140w, 142w
Social security benefits, Per capita costs 149-50w
Social security benefits, Republic of Ireland 45w
Social security benefits, Young people 139w, 420-1
Social security benefits rules, Boarding schools 430
Social security benefits rules, Part-time education 143-4w, 150-1w
Social security claims, Administrative delays 46w
Social security claims, Community charge register 213w
Social security recipients, Pop festivals 426-7
Social security reform 150w
Unemployment benefits, Low pay 213w
War widows' pensions 136-7w
War widows' pensions, Social security recipients 211w

Shepherd, Mr Colin
Questions
EC social charter, Closed shop 836
Hereford 192w
Navy, Armed forces recruitment 242w
Pets, Animal welfare 390w
VAT threshold, VAT registration 427w

Shepherd, Mr Richard
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 255
Questions
CFE talks 321w

Shersby, Mr Michael
Debates etc.
Public Accounts Committee (30:11:89) 880, 900-1, 908-12, 919
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 264, 288-91

Shipping
EC action (29:11:89) 789-809

Shipping accidents
Fishing vessels 276w
Stornoway 35w

Shops
Misrepresentation 281-2w
Pornography 106w

Shore, Rt Hon Peter
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 961-5, 1003

Short, Ms Clare
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 15
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 524-5
Questions
Child benefit 144-5w
Disabled child premium, Income support 215w
Disclosure of information 237w
Employment training 209-10w
Higher pensioner premium, Income support 215w
Income support, Young people 214w
Retirement pensions, Average earnings 424
Severe disability premium, Income support 216w
Social Fund, Greater London 216w

Shorter working week
Economic situation 833

Shotgun certificates
174-5w

SIB
see Securities & Investments Board

Sikhs
Human rights 417w

Sillars, Mr Jim
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 645-6, 673
Questions
Hong Kong 309w
Interest rates, Scotland 420w
Trident 236w

Sims, Mr Roger
Debates etc.
EC external trade, Japan (29:11:89) 780-1
Television programmes, Public petitions (28:11:89) 684
Questions
Genetic engineering, Medical treatments 225w
Hong Kong, Vietnamese refugees 308w

Single European Act
EC law 710-1

Single people
Abortion 291w

Sinn Fein
Broadcasting controls 173w
Northern Ireland Office 579-80

Sir James Barrie School Wandsworth
261w

Sir John Soane Museum
32-3w

Sites of special scientific interest
Prosecutions 249w
Strangford Lough 346w

Sizewell B
74w

Skill shortages
Industrial training 375w

Skinner, Mr Dennis
Debates etc.
Calling of members (23:11:89) 244
Community charge, Ministerial statements (30:11:89) 876
Oral question time intervention (30:11:89) 837
Oral questions (22:11:89) 113
Private Bills (29:11:89) 718
Public Accounts Committee (30:11:89) 878-81
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 75, 81, 83, 86
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 248, 261
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 605, 614-5, 670

Skinner, Mr Dennis—continued
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 409
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 137
Standing Order No 20 applications, Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 713
Questions
Armed forces medical services, Ambulance services 234-5w
Business statements 239
Civil service unions 119w
Company finance 120w
Conservative Party, Party conferences 427
Conservative Party, Party leaders 696
EC trade 283w
Pensions 141w

Slaughterhouses
Food contamination 188w

Slieve Croob
Buildings 169-70w, 345-6w

Slums
Wales 118w

Small businesses
424w
Bankruptcy 827-8
Billing 128w
Corporation tax 824-5
Defence contracts 244-5w
EC law 833
Government achievements 377w
Government assistance 376-7w
Interest rates 419-20w, 826-7
New businesses 827

Small Firms Service
207w, 376-7w

Smith, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 863
Questions
Balance of payments 828
Engineering education, Polytechnics 351-2w
Industrial health & safety 208w
Polytechnics & Colleges' Funding Council, Educational finance 351w
Polytechnics & Colleges' Funding Council, Engineering education 352w
Student loans 50-72w
Student loans, Consultants 50w
Student loans, Costs 50w
Student loans, Financial institutions 50w
Student Loans Company, Educational finance 72-3w
Student Loans Company, Financial institutions 71-2w
Student Loans Company, Offices 71w
Student Loans Company, Operating costs 71w

Smith, Mr Chris
Questions
Exchange rates, Inflation 831
Hong Kong, Extradition 452w

Smith, Sir Dudley
Questions
Arms exports, Cyprus 361w
Birmingham Airport 343w
Cyprus, Arms trade 420w
Sikhs, Human rights 417w

Smith, Rt Hon John
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 585-94

Smith, Mr John P
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 154-5, 171-3
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 539, 542
Questions
Cambodia, United Nations 310w

Smith, Mr Tim
Debates etc.
Public Accounts Committee (30:11:89) 897, 903, 912-5
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 588, 640-2
Questions
Ambulance services, Industrial disputes 193w
Commodity markets, Investor protection 466w
European Council 434w
European monetary system, Exchange rates 423w
Exchange rates, European monetary system 821-2
Guinness, Company investigations 285w
James Ferguson Holdings, Company investigations 285-6w
Lebanon, Peace negotiations 326w
Motorway service areas, M25 15w

Smoke & chimney gases
Norman Shaw buildings 165w

Smyth, Rev Martin
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 332
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 485-8
Questions
Arts festivals, Belfast 196w
Broadcasting, Northern Ireland 108-9w
Broadcasting controls 108w
Business statements 233, 841
China, Export controls 328w
Dalai Lama 329w
Disability Benefits Consortium 152w
Handicap benefits, Social security benefits rules 147w
Handicapped, Office of Population Censuses & Surveys 143w
Hospices, Finance 271w
Income support, Kurdistan 152w
Northern Ireland Office, Sinn Fein 579-80
Religious broadcasting, Christianity 108w
Tibet, China 328-9w
USSR, Human rights 327w

Snape, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 861
Questions
Railway accidents 77-8w

Soames, Mr Nicholas
Questions
Great Britain-East Europe Centre, Government grants 703

Social Fund
137-8w, 214w
Community care 149w
Greater London 216w
Leicestershire 374w
Loans 138w
Nottingham 151w
Social security claims 137w

Social reform
572-3

Social security
Expenditure 138w
Queen's speech (27:11:89) 441-533

Social security abuse
Dept of Social Security special investigators 211-2w

Social Security Act 1989
Questions
Commencement orders 10w

Social security appeals
Attendance allowance 48w
North West region 373w

Social security benefits
Allowance books 373-4w
Community care 422
Elderly 372w
Expenditure 154w

Social security benefits—continued
Families 140w, 142w
Homelessness 147w
One parent families 139-40w
Per capita costs 149-50w
Personal records 427
Republic of Ireland 45w
Young people 139w, 420-1

Social security benefits rules
Boarding schools 430
Handicap benefits 147w
Homelessness 146-7w
Hostels 372w
Mobility allowance 371w
Part-time education 143-4w, 150-1w

Social security benefits uprating
140w
Child benefit 429
Handicap benefits 147w
Income support 422
Pensioners 141w
Pensions 140-1w, 251-2w

Social security claims
Administrative delays 46w
Community charge register 213w
Social Fund 137w

Social security finance
Handicap benefits 371w
One parent families 139w

Social security payments
Computers 430
Pensioners 214w

Social security recipients
Availability for work 208-9w
Homelessness 451w
Income support 213-4w
Mobility allowance 371w
One parent families 372-3w
Pop festivals 426-7
Standard spending assessments 362w
War widows' pensions 211w

Social security reciprocal agreements
Pensions 251-2w

Social security reform
150w
Employment 140w
Income support 145w
Young people 420

Social Security (Unemployment Sickness & Invalidity Benefit) Amendment No 3 Regulations 1989
Debates etc.
(30:11:89) 877

Social Services Select Committee
(27:11:89) 553
AIDS 11w

Socialism
Eastern Europe 707-8
EC social charter 700

Soley, Mr Clive
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 24
Questions
Government grants to voluntary organisations, Efficiency scrutinies 103w

Solihull
353w

Somalia
Peace negotiations 325-6w

South Africa
322w
Apartheid 322w
Capital punishment 322w
Commonwealth 322w
Foreign trade 282w
Overseas trade 282w

South America
Drug crimes 413w
Overseas aid 413w

South Bank
434

South Down
Roads 270w

South Korea
Animal welfare 416-7w
Human rights 453w
Political prisoners 432w
State visits 704

South Pembrokeshire
(29:11:89) 718

South Wales
Pollution control 116w

South West Arts
127w

South West Thames Regional Health Authority
408-9w

South Yorkshire Light Rail Transit Bill (HL) 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

Southampton Rapid Transit Bill (HL) 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (23:11:89) 226, (27:11:89) 419, (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

Southern Africa
Debts 200-2w

Southern African Development Coordination Conference
200-2w

Southern Arts Association
Arts finance 125w

Southern Health & Social Services Board
Armagh 346w

Southwark
Archaeological sites 80w

Spain
320-1w

Speaker and his deputies, For rulings & statements see separate heading
Speaker's rulings & statements
Debates etc.
Disallowed questions (23:11:89) 235-6, (27:11:89) 427, (28:11:89) 571, 577
EC documents motions (27:11:89) 440
Orders & regulations motions (27:11:89) 440, (30:11:89) 879
Procedure (23:11:89) 235, (27:11:89) 430, 577, 578, (28:11:89) 606, (29:11:89) 708, 773, 798, (30:11:89) 829, 863, 865-6
Standing Order No 20 applications, Ambulance services (23:11:89) 244
Standing Order No 20 applications, Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 713-7

Speaker's rulings & statements
Business questions (23:11:89) 228, 229, 235, 236, 237, 238-9, 242, (30:11:89) 847, 856
Calling of members (23:11:89) 226, 244, 246, (27:11:89) 430, (29:11:89) 709, (30:11:89) 874, 876
Departmental responsibilities (27:11:89) 539
European Communities (29:11:89) 767
European Legislation Select Committee (29:11:89) 719-20, 741
House of Commons chamber (22:11:89) 115
House of Commons debates (21:11:89) 7
House of Commons division of time (21:11:89) 7, (29:11:89) 810
House of Commons divisions (29:11:89) 766
House of Commons sessional orders (21:11:89) 2

Speaker's rulings & statements—continued
House of Commons standing orders (30:11:89) 877
Heads of State (29:11:89) 713
Legislative process (23:11:89) 225, 245
Liability (28:11:89) 581-2
Members' attendance (27:11:89) 492
Members' conduct (21:11:89) 9, 10, 12, 15, (22:11:89) 124, 134, 183-4, (23:11:89) 226, 245, 276, (27:11:89) 534, (28:11:89) 606, 613, 676, (29:11:89) 702, (30:11:89) 837, 865-6, 868
Members' facilities (22:11:89) 116
Members' interventions (21:11:89) 28, 34, 36, 41, 75, (22:11:89) 129, 133, 134, (24:11:89) 345, (27:11:89) 460, 529, 536-7, 539, 542, 548, (28:11:89) 602-4, 609, 611, 614, 673, (29:11:89) 699, 725, 730, 732-3, (01:12:89) 954
Members' speeches (21:11:89) 33, 36, 101, (22:11:89) 119, 164, (23:11:89) 247, 279, 324, (24:11:89) 345, 389, (27:11:89) 441, 450, 463, 477, 483, 498, 535, 538, 541-2, 543, 544, 550, (28:11:89) 584, 604, 622, 625, (29:11:89) 719, 734, 797, (30:11:89) 870, (01:12:89) 943, 967, 1000
Ministerial speeches (28:11:89) 605-6, (30:11:89) 828
Ministerial statements (30:11:89) 875-7
Official publications (29:11:89) 767
Official Report (22:11:89) 118
Opposition days (28:11:89) 673
Oral questions (22:11:89) 113-5, (27:11:89) 428, 441, (29:11:89) 698, 713, (30:11:89) 828
Orders & regulations (29:11:89) 810
Parliamentary privilege (21:11:89) 12
Photography (22:11:89) 115
Points of order (21:11:89) 35, (27:11:89) 439-40, 459, (28:11:89) 583, (29:11:89) 730, 732-3
Prime Minister's Questions (30:11:89) 876
Private Bills (22:11:89) 114-5, 117, (29:11:89) 717-8
Privy Council (23:11:89) 226, 244, 246
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 4, (28:11:89) 583, 584-5
Scope of debate (27:11:89) 549
Scottish Affairs Select Committee (30:11:89) 877
Standing Order No 20 applications (29:11:89) 713-7
Statutory Instruments Joint Select Committee (27:11:89) 534
Supplementary questions (27:11:89) 427, 430, 569, 571, 577, (29:11:89) 696
Ten minutes rule (22:11:89) 119, 164, (23:11:89) 247, 279, 324, (24:11:89) 345, 389, (27:11:89) 441, 477, 483, (28:11:89) 584, 622, 625, (01:12:89) 943, 967, 1000
Unparliamentary expressions (22:11:89) 133, (27:11:89) 544, (29:11:89) 699, (30:11:89) 843

Spearing, Mr Nigel
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 719, 741
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 349, 361, 393-4
Questions
Ambulance services, Finchley 90w
Docklands light railway, Railway network 83w
EC social charter 320w
European Communities 320w
Pensions, Concessionary fares 143w
Sanitary protection, Health hazards 218w
Teacher training, Government grants to local authorities 24w

Special care baby units
Wales 257w

Special education
Curriculum 203w
Wales 203w

Special protection areas
Scotland 398w

Speech therapists
Administrative delays 410w
Leicestershire Health Authority 407w

Speech therapy
Research 302w

Speed, Mr Keith
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 279-82

Speller, Mr Tony
Questions
Arts grants, Devon 127w
Homicide, Worthington, Emma 347w
Rescue services, Helicopters 568
Sea rescue, North Devon 79-80w
Sea rescue, Swansea 276-7w

Spicer, Sir Jim
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 954
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 20
Straw burning (30:11:89) 871

Spicer, Mr Michael, Minister for Housing and Planning
Questions
Acid rain, Compensation 401w
Alternative energy, Electricity generation 75w
Coal, Exports 177w
Coal mine closures 252-3w
Coal mining 176w
Coal mining, Manpower 176w
Coal mining, Redundancy 401w
Coal mining, Selby 448w
Electricity supply industry, Early retirement 177w
Electricity supply industry, Privatisation 176w
Flue gas desulphurisation 401w
Fluidised bed combustion, Research finance 401w
Joint European Torus, Research finance 77w
Nuclear fuel reprocessing, Capital investment 75w
Nuclear fuel reprocessing, Sellafield 74w
Nuclear power, Electricity supply industry 76w
Nuclear power, Research finance 34w
Oil fired power stations 176w
Opencast mining, Productivity 401w
Power station closures, Costs 77w
Power stations, Production 176-7w
Pressurised water reactors, Nuclear fuels 74w
Safe integral reactor 76w
Sizewell B 74w
Tritium, Imports 400-1w
United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority 76w

Spoil heaps
Channel tunnel 184-5w

"Sport & Young People"
24w

Springfields
75w

Squire, Mr Robin
Questions
Cyprus 315w
Homelessness, Social security benefits rules 146-7w
Housing associations, Training 365w
London housing associations training scheme 365-6w
NATO, Armed forces strength 243-4w
Public expenditure 425w

Sri Lanka
Human rights 98w
Peace negotiations 329w

SS21 missiles
113w
Nuclear weapons deployment 113w

Staff-student ratios
Engineering education 351-2w

Stamp duties
Tax yields 429w

Stanbrook, Mr Ivor
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 292-4
Questions
EC countries, Extradition 703-4
Orpington Hospital, Capital investment 302w
Working mothers, Child care 579

Standard spending assessments
Assisted places scheme 165w
Census of population 248w
Child protection registers 160w
Local government social services 249-50w
Pre-school education 159w
Road works 249-50w
Social security recipients 362w

Standing charges
Pensioners 424-5

Standing Conference of East Anglian Local Authorities
164-5w

Standing Order No 13
(22:11:89) 117-8

Standing Order No 20 applications
Ambulance services (23:11:89) 243
Speaker's rulings & statements (29:11:89) 713-7

Standing Order No 101
(01:12:89) 1003

Stanley, Rt Hon Sir John
Questions
Burundi, Development aid 334w
Channel tunnel, Railway network 79w
Railway transport, Noise 80w

START talks
Trident missiles 569-70

State Veterinary Service
134w

State visits
South Korea 704

Statutory Instruments Joint Select Committee
Speaker's rulings & statements (27:11:89) 534

Steel, Rt Hon David
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 398-402
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 184
Questions
Arms trade, Chile 170-1w
Community care, Government grants to local authorities 102w
Community care, Local government functions 101-2w
Hungary, Overseas students 333w
Immigrants, Travel restrictions 109w
International conferences, Arms control negotiations 708
National Subtitling Library for Deaf People, Government grants to voluntary organisations 451w
Occupied territories, Elections 315w
Residential care, Inspection units 102w
Sri Lanka, Human rights 98w

Steel framed houses
165w

Steinberg, Mr Gerry
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 493-5
Questions
Sarawak 325w
War widows' pensions 238-9w

Stern, Mr Michael
Questions
Aircraft engines 232w
Bulgaria 329w
Export Credits Guarantee Department 347w

Stern, Mr Michael—continued
Official engagements 195w
Road construction, Avonmouth 275w
Social security benefits rules, Boarding schools 430
Unemployment benefits, Members 376w
Unofficial strikes, Law reform 374w

Stevens, Mr Lewis
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 295-7
Questions
Arms exports 237w
British Council 325w

Stevens Inquiry
see Security Forces Collusion with Loyalist Terrorists Inquiry

Stewart, Mr Allan
Questions
Armed forces deployment, NATO 571
Further education colleges, College councils 185-6w
NHS, Contracts for services 18w

Stewart, Mr Andy
Debates etc.
Straw burning (30:11:89) 873
Questions
Art works, Objects in lieu of tax 336w
British Coal Corporation, External financing limits 14w
Economic situation, EC social charter 833
Pensioners, Personal savings 138w

Stockton on Tees
Defence Quality Assurance Directorate 245w

Stoke-on-Trent
Educational finance 49w
Teachers 49w

Stokes, Sir John
Questions
Business statements 842-3

Stornoway
Shipping accidents 35w

Stornoway Airport
246w

Stott, Mr Roger
Questions
Navy, Armed forces strength 238w

Strang, Mr Gavin
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 121
Questions
Defence contracts, Ferranti 235w
Factory Inspectorate, Manpower 454w
Pensions, EC countries 149w

Strangford Lough
Sites of special scientific interest 346w

Straw, Mr Jack
Debates etc.
Student Loans Company, Government buildings (28:11:89) 581-2

Straw burning
Ministerial statements (30:11:89) 868-74

Student grants
23w, 436w
Expenditure 23w

Student loans
50-72w, (22:11:89) 116
Consultants 50w
Costs 50w, 436w
Financial institutions 50w

Student Loans Company
50w
Educational finance 72-3w
Financial institutions 71-3w
Offices 5w, 71w
Operating costs 71w

Student numbers
Business education 258w
Comprehensive schools 21-3w
Grammar schools 21-3w

Submarines
Fishing vessels 243w
Swansea 245w

Subsidence
Coal mining 405w

Subsidence Compensation Review Committee
see Coal Mining Subsidence Compensation Independent Review

Subsidies
Rover Group 835

Suffield
Armed forces casualties 358-9w

Suicide
Brixton Prison (24:11:89) 412-8

Sumberg, Mr David
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Addresses to the Crown (21:11:89) 9-11
Questions
Driving instruction, EC countries 440w
Driving instruction, Law reform 440w
Driving instruction, Road accidents 440w
Hong Kong, European Communities 308-9w
NATO, Armed forces strength 243-4w
Pensioners, North West region 144w

Summerson, Mr Hugo
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 1000
Questions
AIDS, Social Services Select Committee 11w
Defence, USSR 232w
Eastern Europe, Democracy 317w
Hospital consultants, Manpower 11w

Supplementary questions
Speaker's rulings & statements (27:11:89) 427, 430, 569, 571, 577, (29:11:89) 696

Supply teachers
Teacher training 351w

Surgery
Abortion 217w

Surveying
Civil service manpower 346-7w
Land Registry Office 346-7w

"Sustainable Development" 161-2w

Swansea
Hazardous wastes 257w
Sea rescue 276-7w
Submarines 245w

Tactical nuclear weapons 229w
Arms control negotiations 97w
Modernisation 235-6w, 708
Nuclear weapons deployment 234w
USSR 113w

Tai Cymru
see Housing for Wales

Takeovers
Pearl Group 94w

Tanker aircraft
Defence procurement 230-1w

Tapsell, Sir Peter
Questions
Employment, Interest rates 830

Tax allowances
Balance of payments 822-3
Children 424w
Forestry 173w

Tax allowances—continued
Health insurance 425w

Tax burden
Personal taxation 460-4w
VAT 427w

Tax evasion
Civil service manpower 458w
National insurance contributions 150w

Tax yields 424-5w
Income tax 425-6w
Stamp duties 429w

Taxation
Consumer expenditure 824
Day nurseries 423w
Widows' benefits 173w

Taylor, Mrs Ann
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 154, 213-4
Questions
Water supply disconnections, North West Water Authority 40w
Water supply industry, Privatisation 42w

Taylor, Mr Ian
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 951
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 728, 734-8
Questions
Air traffic control, International cooperation 275w
Arms control negotiations, NATO 706-7
Defence, USSR 232w
Diplomatic bags, Security 453w
Hong Kong, Government responses 418w
Poland, EC aid 316w
Trident missiles, Nuclear weapons deployment 570

Taylor, Rt Hon John David
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 752-3
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 286-8
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 671
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 169
Questions
Commissioners of Irish Lights, Public appointments 275w
Flags, Festivals & special occasions 346w
Identification of criminals, Northern Ireland 565
Poland, Educational visits 703
Quarrying, Newtownards 271-2w
Sites of special scientific interest, Strangford Lough 346w

Taylor, Mr Matthew
Debates etc.
EC external trade, Japan (29:11:89) 778-80, 785
Questions
Advisory Committee on Irradiated & Novel Foods, Public appointments 188-9w
Business statements 242
Coats Viyella, Government assistance to industry 95w
Eli Lilley 190w
Food industry, Consumer protection 190w
Irradiated food, EC action 188w
Irradiated food, Public opinion 189w
Irradiated food, Research 188w
Local government pensions 251w
Microwave ovens 190w
Slaughterhouses, Food contamination 188w

Taylor, Mr Teddy
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 723, 736, 753-5
Holroyd, Fred, Books (29:11:89) 813
Oral question time point of order (29:11:89) 712
Questions
Business statements 231
Channel tunnel 184w

Taylor, Mr Teddy—continued
Christmas bonus 148w
Common agricultural policy, Costs 194w
Crimes of violence, Statistics 389-90w
EC internal trade 194w
EC law, Single European Act 710-1
European Council 194w
Unemployment 375w

TCS
see Crown Suppliers

Teacher training
Curriculum 49w
Government grants to local authorities 24w
Supply teachers 351w

Teachers
Child abuse 437w
Education & industry 206w
Manpower 73w, 396w
Pay 163w, 397w
Recruitment 49-50w, 353w
Scotland 396-7w
Stoke-on-Trent 49w

Tebbit, Rt Hon Norman
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 278
Questions
Rover Group, Subsidies 835

Technical & vocational education initiative 202-3w

Tees & Hartlepool Port Authority
Privatisation (01:12:89) 1004-10

Teesside 353w

Telecommunications technology
Optical fibres 348w

Telephone services
Consumer protection 92-3w, 109w

Television
House of Commons broadcasting 395w

Television advertising
Rents to mortgages scheme 279w, 338w

Television channels 105w

Television engineering
Palace of Westminster 362w

Television programmes
Deaf (22:11:89) 217, (24:11:89) 343, 344, (27:11:89) 554, 555, (28:11:89) 684, (29:11:89) 810, (30:11:89) 929
Public petitions (22:11:89) 217, (28:11:89) 684, (29:11:89) 810, (30:11:89) 929, (01:12:89) 942

Televisions
Palace of Westminster 362-3w

10 Downing Street
Civil service manpower 442w

Ten minutes rule
Speaker's rulings & statements (22:11:89) 119, 164, (23:11:89) 247, 279, 324, (24:11:89) 345, 389, (27:11:89) 441, 477, 483, (28:11:89) 584, 622, 625, (01:12:89) 943, 967, 1000

Tenants' choice
Housing estates 158w

Tenby
Regional aid 449-50w

Terrorism
Armed forces deployment 568
Northern Ireland 835-6

Tertiary education 21w

Tesco 190w

Testing
Bovine somatotropin 476w
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy 305w

Tetanus
224-5w
Vaccination 224w

Textile industry
Company liquidations 284w
Government assistance 466w
Northern Ireland 95w
Redundancy 380w

TGWU
see Transport & General Workers' Union

Thailand
Armed forces 357w
Armed forces training 355w, 357w
Communication engineering 357w
Diplomatic service 198w

Thatcher, Rt Hon Margaret, Prime Minister, First Lord of the Treasury and Minister for the Civil Service
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 21-35
Questions
Advisory Committee on Business Appointments, Public appointments 17-8w
African National Congress, Foreign policy 195w
Ambulance services, Finchley 90w
Ambulance services, Industrial disputes 193w, 833-4, 836
Astor, Nancy, Women members 838
Billericay 35w
British Rail 194w
Car industry, Foreign investment in UK 834
Child abuse, Government departments 191w
Civil service dispersal, Cambridge 194-5w
Civil service dispersal, Leeds 580
Clifton 193w
Common agricultural policy, Costs 194w
Community charge 431w
Cyprus 192w
Departmental correspondence, Administrative delays 432-3w
Development aid, Nicaragua 195w
Dunchurch 434w
East Germany 191w
Eastern Europe, Democracy 577-8
EC internal trade 194w
EC social charter, Closed shop 836
Edmonton 193w
English language 192w
European Commission, Brittan, Leon 433w
European Council 194w, 434w
Exchange rates, European monetary system 193w, 578
Fluidised bed combustion, Trade promotion 433w
Foreign policy, Vietnam 837-8
Government departments, Accountability 193w
Government departments, Disclosure of information 432w
Haemophilia, AIDS 89w, 192w
Hereford 192w
History education, Curriculum 434w
India 194w
Keighley 193w
Kincora Children's Home 90w
Lancashire 254w
Mandela, Nelson, Prisoners' release 433w
Ministers' domestic visits, Wales 191w
National Health Service & Community Care Bill 1989/90 433-4w
NATO, Eastern Europe 836-7
NHS, Public expenditure 575-6
Northern Ireland, Political parties 192w
Northern Ireland, Terrorism 835-6
Northern Ireland Office, Sinn Fein 579-80
Official engagements 195w, 431w
Parliamentary questions, Costs 432w, 442w
Poland 434w
Portsmouth 191w
Prime Minister, Costs 442w

Thatcher, Rt Hon Margaret—continued
Prime Minister, Official hospitality 432w
Prime Minister, Railway travel 89w, 442w
Prime Minister, Working hours 431w
Rover Group, Privatisation 576, 834-5
Rover Group, Subsidies 835
Scotland, Devolution 577
South Korea, Political prisoners 432w
Thatcher, Margaret, Meyer, Anthony 576-7
Transport policy, Railway transport 90w
USA 191w
Vauxhall Motors, Transport & General Workers' Union 578
Vietnamese refugees, Repatriation 432w
Wales 193w
West Yorkshire, Official visits 577
Working mothers, Child care 579
Young people, Vagrancy 578

Thatcher, Margaret
Meyer, Anthony 576-7

Theatre nuclear weapons
Tornado aircraft 114w

Theatres
Ministers' domestic visits 335w

Theme parks
Rainham 367w

Thomas, Dr Dafydd Elis
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 984-7
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 297-8
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 539, 544
Questions
Arms control negotiations, Europe 707
Handicapped, Office of Population Censuses & Surveys 143w
Tritium, Imports 247-8w, 400-1w

Thompson, Mr Donald
Questions
Business statements 239
Interest rates, Small businesses 826

Thompson, Mr Jack
Questions
VAT, Unemployed 824

Thompson, Mr Patrick
Questions
Burma, Elections 323w
Economic & monetary union 421w
Greenhouse effect, International cooperation 405-6w
Military aid to civil community, Disaster Relief 237w
Uniform business rate 367-8w

Thorne, Mr Neil
Debates etc.
War widows' pensions (23:11:89) 337-8

Thornton, Mr Malcolm
Questions
Investment, Consumption 420w
Tobacco, EC action 294-5w
United States Tobacco International, Tobacco 294w

Thurnham, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 447-8
Questions
Community charge, Transitional relief 363w
Eastern Europe 317w
Fires, Bolton 386w
Foster care, Bolton 410w
Independent Television Commission, Advertising controls 381w
Inflation, Economic policy 419w
Medical treatments 444w
Motorways, Road safety 183w
Nursery schools, Bolton 259w
One parent families, Earnings rules 451-2w
Overseas trade, Eastern Europe 283w
Railway network, EC grants & loans 181w

Thurnham, Mr Peter—continued
Road accidents, Bolton 438w
Road traffic 25w
Social security appeals, North West region 373w
Social security benefits, Allowance books 373-4w
Warsaw Pact, Defence procurement 358w

Tibet
198w, 329w
China 328-9w

Tidal power
Severn barrage 75w

Tobacco
EC action 294-5w
United States Tobacco International 294w

Tomography
Regional health authorities 301w

Torbay
Sewage (01:12:89) 941-2

Tornado aircraft
Nuclear weapons 572
Theatre nuclear weapons 114w

Torpedoes
HMS Upholder 359w

Tourism
210w

Tourism Review Committee
210w

Townend, Mr John
Questions
Monetary policy 831

Towngate Theatre
127w

Townsend, Mr Cyril D
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 388-9
Questions
EC integration, Eastern Europe 707
Middle East, Peace negotiations 313-4w
USSR, Chemical weapons 196-7w

Trade barriers
Nepal 320w

Trade descriptions
Delta Te immune support therapy 92w

Trade promotion
Fluidised bed combustion 433w
Iraq 288w

"Trade Routes to the Future"
25w

Trade unions
Ambulance services 37w
Industrial relations 702
Industrial relations law 207w

Training
Carers 222w
Civil service 119w
Civil service unions 435
Estate agents 284-5w
Health & Safety Executive 20w
Housing associations 365w
Magistrates 108w
Midwives 299-300w
National Council for Vocational Qualifications 268w

Training Agency
179-80w, 279w, 455w
Civil service manpower 278w

Training agents
278-9w

Training managers
278-9w

Transitional relief
81-2w
Community charge 4w, 81w, 363w

Transmanche
184-5w

Transport & General Workers' Union
Vauxhall Motors 578

Transport infrastructure
25w
Channel tunnel 273w

Transport of hazardous materials
Chemicals 438w

Transport policy
Investment 185-6w
Railway transport 90w

Travel restrictions
Immigrants 109w

Treasury
Civil service dispersal 120w
Public expenditure 122w

Treaties
Air transport 274w
Arms control 325w
Eastern Europe 710
Genocide 329-31w
Narcotics 308w

Treaty of Rome
710-1

Tredinnick, Mr David
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 130, 133, 183-5
Television programmes, Public petitions (01:12:89) 942
Questions
Business statements 850
Homelessness, Social security benefits 147w
Local enterprise agencies 268-9w
NATO, Military balance 245-6w
New businesses, East Midlands 375-6w
Poland, EC external relations 197w
Poland, Overseas aid 313w
Police, Manpower 12-3w
Road works, Contracts 183w

Trees
Local authorities 82w

Trespass
Defence land 360w

Trials
Self-regulating organisations 466-7w

Trident
236w

Trident missiles
236w
Brookings Institution 570
Lobbying 357-8w, 569-70
Nuclear weapons deployment 570
START talks 569-70

Trident submarines
Defence procurement 113w

Trippier, Mr David, Minister for the Environment and Countryside
Questions
Air pollution, Road traffic 166-7w
Air pollution control, Chlorofluorocarbons 156w
Air pollution control, Nitrous oxide 156w
Air pollution monitoring 42w
Archaeological sites, Southwark 80w
Basking sharks, Nature conservation 249-50w
Basking sharks, Research 250w
Benzene, Health hazards 162w
Common land, Nature conservation 87w
Environment, Information services 366w
Environment protection 160-1w
Environment protection, Civil service manpower 161w
Environment protection, Competition 161-2w

Trippier, Mr David—continued
European Environment Agency 366w
European Environment Agency, Industries 366w
European Environment Agency, Operating costs 366w
European Environment Agency, Property rights 366w
Historic Buildings & Monuments Commission for England, Montagu of Beaulieu, Lord 156w
London Zoo, Salmonella 86w
Nature Conservancy Council 167w
Pollution control, Licensing 160w
Sites of special scientific interest, Prosecutions 249w
Sustainable development 162w
Tritium, Imports 247-8w
Waste disposal 364w

Tritium
Imports 247-8w, 400-1w
Safety measures 400-1w

Trotter, Mr Neville
Debates etc.
Fisheries, Scotland (21:11:89) 105
Questions
Cambodia, Overseas aid 309w
Challenger tanks, Vickers Defence Systems 574-5
White fish, Fishing quotas 110-2w, 132-3w

Trust ports
(01:12:89) 1004-10

Trusthouse Forte
190w

Trusts
Water authorities 84w

Turkey
315w
Kurdistan 35w

Turner, Mr Dennis
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 124
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 452
Questions
Social security benefits, Young people 139w
War widows' pensions 238-9w

21 hour rule
150-1w

24 Airmobile Brigade
Helicopters 234w

Twinn, Dr Ian
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 158-61
Questions
Edmonton 193w

Type 23 frigates
Defence procurement 231w

UFC
see Universities' Funding Council

UK trade with EC
Electronic equipment 465w

UKAEA
see United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority

UN
see United Nations

UN General Assembly
195w

UN High Commissioner for Refugees
416w

UN Relief & Works Agency
Foreign aid 414w

UN resolutions
Cambodia 309w
Science & technology 453w

Unemployed
VAT 824

Unemployment
375w, 830
Cleveland 454w
EC countries 375w
Hendon 453-4w
Interest rates 120w
Northern region 267-8w
Rural areas 337w
Wales 337w

Unemployment benefit offices
Hackney 268w

Unemployment benefits
Childbirth 207w
Low pay 213w
Members 376w

UNESCO
327-8w

UNHCR
see UN High Commissioner for Refugees

UNICEF
414w

Uniform business rate
250w, 367-8w
Yorkshire & Humberside 159w

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority
76-7w

United Medical & Dental Schools Bill (HL) 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

United Nations
195w, 321-2w, 329-31w, 697
Cambodia 310w
Drug abuse 307w
Kurdistan 35-6w

United States Tobacco International
Tobacco 294w

Universities
Rates & rating 111w
Scotland 111w

Universities' Funding Council
258w

"Unofficial Action & the Law Consultation Paper"
207w, 374w

Unofficial strikes
Law reform 374w

Unparliamentary expressions
Speaker's rulings & statements (22:11:89) 133, (27:11:89) 544, (29:11:89) 699, (30:11:89) 843

UNRWA
see UN Relief & Works Agency

Urban areas
Government grants 88w

Urban planning
Lambeth Borough Council 180w

Urban regeneration grants
88w

US bases
East Anglia 354w

US Commodity Futures Trading Commission
see Commodity Futures Trading Commission

US House of Representatives
333w

USA
191w
Abortion 37w

USA—continued
Armed forces deployment 234w
Central America 707
Commodity markets 466w
Defence expenditure 238w
El Salvador 311-2w
Laser-guided bombs 435w
Military aircraft 435w
NATO 706

USSR
Armed forces deployment 570
Armoured fighting vehicles 353-4w
Chemical weapons 196-7w, 240w, 244w, 357w, 571
Compensation 1w
Defence 232w
Emigration 197w, 328w, 331-2w
Foreign policy 324w
Human rights 327w
Jews 331-2w
Tactical nuclear weapons 113w

Vaccination
Family doctors 224-5w
Tetanus 224w

Vagrancy
Young people 578

Vale of Glamorgan (Barry Harbour) Bill (HL) 1988/89
Debates etc.
Order to proceed in present Session (29:11:89) 693-4, (30:11:89) 821-2

VAT
Consumer expenditure 823-4
Inflation 824
Magazine press 421w
NHS finance 18w
Tax burden 427w
Unemployed 824

VAT exempted goods
823-4

VAT registration
VAT threshold 427w

VAT threshold
VAT registration 427w

Vauxhall Motors
Transport & General Workers' Union 578

Vaz, Mr Keith
Debates etc.
Local Government Act (Competition in Sports & Leisure Facilities) Order 1989, House of Commons division of time (29:11:89) 810
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 253
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 601-2
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 121, 160, 176-8
Questions
Air traffic, East Midlands Airport 79w
Arts finance 124w
British Medical Association 221w
Business statements 240, 853
Civil service manpower, Disabled workers 335w
Day nurseries, Taxation 423w
Environmental policy, Local authorities 369w
Ethnic minorities, Government grants to local authorities 438w
Family doctors, Contracts of employment 220w
Football, Identity cards 370w
Footwear, Imports 94w
Footwear industry, Company liquidations 284w
Footwear industry, Government assistance 466w
Footwear industry, Redundancy 380-1w
History education, Curriculum 350w
Huntington's chorea, Screening 219-20w
India 194w
Inner cities initiative, Leicester 282w

Vaz, Mr Keith—continued
International cooperation, Drug crimes 697
Leicestershire Health Authority, Public appointments 298-9w
Magistrates, Dismissal 446w
NHS finance, NHS review 220w
Nuclear weapons tests, Exservicemen 239w
Road construction, Road safety 274w
Self-governing hospitals 295-8w
Social Fund, Leicestershire 374w
Textile industry, Redundancy 380w
Theatres, Ministers' domestic visits 335w
Transport infrastructure 25w
Vietnamese refugees, Repatriation 416w, 432w

Vehicle Inspectorate
27w

Veterinary Manpower & Education Review Committee
476-7w

Veterinary Products Committee
477w

Vickers Defence Systems
Challenger tanks 574-5

Victoria Hospital Accrington
(28:11:89) 685-92

Vietnam
Foreign policy 837-8

Vietnamese refugees
Hong Kong 198w, 308w, 712
Repatriation 416w, 432w, 712, 837-8

Viggers, Mr Peter
Debates etc.
War widows' pensions (23:11:89) 339
Questions
Inflation, Economic policy 419w
NATO, Atlantic Ocean 235-6w
War widows' pensions 136-7w

Village schools
Humberside (30:11:89) 930-6

Visas
Fees & charges 333w

Waddilove Committee
see Coal Mining Subsidence Compensation Independent Review

Waddington, Rt Hon David, Secretary of State for the Home Department
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 247-57
Questions
Bombings, Birmingham 266w, 385-6w
Broadcasting, Northern Ireland 108-9w
Broadcasting Complaints Commission, Pay 104w
Broadcasting controls 108w
Ethnic minorities, Government grants to local authorities 438w
Justices' clerks, Professional qualifications 13w
Malawi, Overseas aid 103w
Official secrets, Public appointments 174w
Parole, Administrative delays 393-4w
Police, Manpower 12-3w
Pornography, Law enforcement 106w
Pornography, Shops 106w
Prisoners, Complaints 175-6w
Prisoners, Hospitals 437-8w
Prosecutions, Water charges 175w
Religious broadcasting, Christianity 108w
Social Security Act 1989, Commencement orders 10w
Television channels 105w

Wakefield
254w

Wakeham, Rt Hon John, Secretary of State for Energy
Debates etc.
Coal Industry Bill, 1R (23:11:89) 246
Questions
British Coal Corporation, External financing limits 14w

Wakeham, Rt Hon John—continued
British Coal Corporation, Interest rates 403w
Coal mining, Subsidence 405w
Electrical control equipment, Accidents 402w
Electrical control equipment, Safety 75-6w, 402-3w
Electrical technology, Ministers' domestic visits 405w
Electrical technology, Polychlorinated biphenyl 405w
Electricity area boards, Apprentices 75w
Electricity area boards, Disclosure of information 405w
Electricity area boards, Prosecutions 403w
Electricity generation, Coal 76w
Electricity generation, Nuclear Electric 403w
Electricity generation, Nuclear power stations 404w
Electricity generation, Prices 403w
Electricity supply industry, Privatisation 252w
Energy, Conferences 254w
Energy conservation, Community programme 8w
Energy policy 447w
Energy research 403-4w
Engineers, Civil service manpower 404-5w
Greenhouse effect, International cooperation 405-6w
Natural gas production, Imports 448w
Nuclear power stations, Research finance 404w
Redundant mineworkers' payments scheme 403w

Waldegrave, Mr William, Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 943-52, 956, 958, 1003-7
Questions
Arms control, Treaties 325w
Arms control negotiations 326w
Arms control negotiations, Military aircraft 97w
Arms control negotiations, Tactical nuclear weapons 97w
Baltic Republics of USSR 323-4w
Bulgaria 329w
Burundi, Development aid 334w
Cambodia, Foreign policy 309w
Central Africa, AIDS 334w
CFE talks 321w
Conservative Party, Party leaders 696
Council of Europe, Eastern Europe 709
Czechoslovakia 323w
Czechoslovakia, Journalists 323w
Diplomatic service, Defence 198w
East Germany, EC external relations 312w
East Germany, NATO 197w, 326w
Eastern Europe 317w
Eastern Europe, Democracy 317w
Eastern Europe, Protest movements 710
Eastern Europe, Treaties 710
Ethiopia, Famine 417w
Gaza Strip, Overseas aid 452w
Iran, Capital punishment 333w
Iraq, British embassies 36w
Iraq, Human rights 321w
Israel, Diplomatic service 96w
Israel, Foreign policy 324w
Israel, Human rights 705
Israel, Occupied territories 314w
Israel, Official visits 324w
Israel, Peace negotiations 705-6
Kurdistan, Iraq 35w
Lebanon, Peace negotiations 326w
Lebanon, Prisoners 325-6w
Malawi, British residents abroad 97w
Malawi, Diplomatic service 98w
Malawi, Human rights 98w
Middle East, Peace negotiations 313-4w, 324w
Montserrat, Disaster relief 415w
Namibia 318w

Waldegrave, Mr William*—*continued
Namibia, Elections 317w
Occupied territories, Armed conflict 96w
Occupied territories, Elections 315w
Occupied territories, School closures 315w
Overseas aid, Public expenditure 415-6w
Palestine, Peace negotiations 704-5
Palestine Liberation Organisation, Foreign policy 332w
Palestine Liberation Organisation, Peace negotiations 705
Poland 313w
Poland, Democracy 317w
Poland, Foreign relations 313w
Poland, Overseas aid 313w, 315-6w
Romania, Human rights 696
Romania, Overseas trade 696
Somalia, Peace negotiations 325-6w
South Africa 322w
South Africa, Apartheid 322w
South Africa, Capital punishment 322w
South Africa, Commonwealth 322w
Southern Africa, Debts 200-2w
UN resolutions, Science & technology 453w
USSR, Chemical weapons 196-7w
USSR, Emigration 197w, 328w
USSR, Foreign policy 324w
USSR, Human rights 327w
USSR, Jews 331-2w
Wallenberg, Raoul 332-3w

Wales
193w
Animal husbandry 115-6w
Autumn statement 338-9w
British Coal Corporation 206-7w
Chlorofluorocarbons 206w
Chromic acid 43-4w
Common sheep meat regime 449w
Community care 203-4w
Community charge exemptions 205w
Community charge register 343w
Curriculum 202w
Education & industry 202-3w, 206w
Elderly 115w
Employment 116w, 336w
Farms 257w
Food poisoning 339-40w
Hazardous wastes 256-7w
Homelessness 337-8w
Hospitals 339w
Housing 336-7w
Housing amenities 118w
Housing associations 201w
Housing completions 119w
Housing starts 119w
Local government finance 255-6w, 341-4w
M4 79w, 204-5w
Ministers' domestic visits 191w
Opencast mining 207w
Police 391-4w
Prescription charges 449w
Radioactivity 115w
Railway network 340w, 450-1w
Rechem International 206w
Rents to mortgages scheme 338w
River pollution 258w
Road finance 260w
School closures 45-6w, 201-2w
School population 205-6w
Slums 118w
Special care baby units 257w
Special education 203w
Unemployment 337w
Water pollution 44w

Wales Tourist Board
449-50w

Walesa, Lech
701-2

Walker, Mr Bill
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 589, 669
Questions
Family doctors, Contracts of employment 281w
Palestine, Peace negotiations 704-5

Walker, Mr A Cecil
Questions
Housing finance, Private sector housing 21w

Walker, Rt Hon Peter, Secretary of State for Wales
Debates etc.
Caldey Island Bill, 1R (29:11:89) 718
Questions
Aberystwyth harbour 207w
Autumn statement, Wales 338-9w
British Coal Corporation, Wales 206-7w
Common sheep meat regime, Wales 449w
Community charge exemptions, Wales 205w
Community charge register, Wales 343w
Council housing, Handicapped 115w
Employment, Wales 116w, 336w
Farmers' Union of Wales, Interest rates 257w
Farms, Compensation 115w, 257w
Farms, Radioactivity 115w
Homelessness, Wales 338w
Housing completions, Wales 119w
Housing for Wales, Housing finance 256w
Local government finance, Wales 255-6w, 341-4w
M4, Wales 204w
National Museum of Wales, Admission charges 115w
Nature Conservancy Council, Cardiff Bay barrage 448w
Opencast mining, Wales 207w
Regional aid, Tenby 449-50w
River pollution, River Rhymney 116-7w
Sheep, Government assistance 115-6w
Slums, Wales 118w
Unemployment, Rural areas 337w
Welsh Development Agency 116w
Welsh Development Agency, Pembrokeshire 206w
Welsh Water, Administrative costs 118w
Welsh Water, Government shareholding 118w
Welsh Water, Shares 116-8w

Wall, Mr Pat
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 976, 980-2
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 324
Questions
Conventional weapons 233w

Wallace, Mr James
Debates etc.
EC labour policy (29:11:89) 730, 745-7
Fisheries, Scotland (21:11:89) 107
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 183-4
Questions
Business statements 229, 842
Defence 234w
EC Finance Council 421w
Scotland, Devolution 577

Wallenberg, Raoul
332-3w

Waller, Mr Gary
Questions
Business statements 240
Keighley 193w

Walley, Ms Joan
Debates etc.
Television programmes, Public petitions (29:11:89) 810
Questions
Armed forces training, Environmental impact assessment 233w
Educational finance, Stoke-on-Trent 49w
Teachers, Stoke-on-Trent 49w

Walters, Sir Dennis
Questions
Middle East, Peace negotiations 313-4w
Palestine Liberation Organisation, Peace negotiations 705

Waltham Forest
Housing investment programmes 87-8w

Waltham Forest Health Authority
407w

Wandsworth Prison
381-2w
Sanitation 382w

Wanstead Hospital
Hospital closures 407w

War widows' pensions
136-7w, 238-9w, (23:11:89) 334-42, 565-6
Costs 112-3w
EC Finance Council 821
Free votes 566
Liverpool 136w
Social security recipients 211w

"War Without Honour"
(29:11:89) 811-8

Wardell, Mr Gareth
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 138
Questions
British Coal Corporation, Wales 206-7w
Census of population, Departmental forms 444w
Chlorofluorocarbons, Recycling 206w
Colombia, Drug crimes 307w
Community charge exemptions, Wales 205w
Drama, West Glamorgan 335w
Education & industry, Curriculum 206w
Education & industry, Teachers 206w
Education & industry, Wales 202-3w
Housing, Rural areas 336-7w
Land acquisition, Land Authority for Wales 337w
Land Registry Office, Surveying 346-7w
M4 255w
M4, Morriston Hospital 205w
M4, Road accidents 204w
M4, Road construction 204-5w
M4, Road traffic 204w
M4, Wales 79w, 204-5w
Official engagements 195w
Opencast mining, Wales 207w
Polychlorinated biphenyl, Pollution monitoring 206w
Primary education, School buildings 202w
Primary education, School population 205-6w
Road finance, Wales 260w
School closures, Wales 201-2w
School population, Dyfed 203w
School population, West Glamorgan 203w
Schools, West Glamorgan 203w
Special education, Curriculum 203w
Submarines, Swansea 245w
Wales 193w

Wardle, Mr Charles
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 173-6

Wareing, Mr Robert N
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 946, 972-4
Health services, Liverpool (28:11:89) 556-8, 559-60
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 27-8
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 354
Questions
Balance of trade, East Germany 169w
Business statements 848
Flexible response 229-30w
Nature Conservancy Council 167w

Warren, Mr Kenneth
Debates etc.
Rover Group, Privatisation (30:11:89) 861
Questions
Business statements 845
NHS, Information technology 226-9w

Warrington & Runcorn Development Corporation
208w

Warsaw Pact
230w, 245-6w, 570, 572-3, (01:12:89) 943-1007

Warsaw Pact—continued
Defence procurement 358w

Waste disposal
364w

Water Act 1989
Questions
44w, 86w, 116w

Water authorities
Foreign investment in UK 85w
Shares 84-5w
Trusts 84w

Water charges
Bradford 175w
Prosecutions 175w
Rateable value 164w
Water supply industry 166w
Yorkshire Water 166w

Water pollution
Agriculture 86w
Camelford 447w
Hazardous materials 116w
Wales 44w

Water storage
Safety 40-1w

Water supply
Chromic acid 42-4w
Lead 44w
Nitrates 44w

Water supply disconnections
North West Water Authority 40w
Yorkshire & Humberside 369w

Water supply industry
Government departments 361w
Local authorities 3-4w
Privatisation 3-4w, 42w, 84-5w, 361w, 577
Shares 3w
Water charges 166w

Waterloo Station
Channel tunnel 180w
Road traffic 180w

Watson, Mr Mike,
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 102
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 156-8
Questions
Balance of trade, Manufactured goods 282w
El Salvador, Human rights 312w
Pensions 141w

Watts, Mr John
Questions
Arts finance 123-4w
Civil service agencies 437-8
Motor vehicle testing 27w

WDA
see Welsh Development Agency

WE 177 nuclear bomb
231w
Civil servants' visits abroad 355w
Defence procurement 354-5w, 572
France 354w
Modernisation 231w

Wealth distribution
421w

Welfare milk
216w

Welsh, Mr Andrew
Debates etc.
Scottish Affairs Select Committee, House of Commons standing orders (30:11:89) 876-7
Questions
Alternative medicine, NHS 99-100w
Business statements 844-5
Food imports, Radioactivity 478w
Health hazards, Poultry 99w
Interest rates, Scotland 420w

Welsh, Mr Andrew—continued
Interest rates, Small businesses 827
Transport policy, Investment 185-6w
Trident 236w

Welsh Development Agency
116w, 449-50w
Pembrokeshire 206w

Welsh Office
449-50w
Oral questions 395w

Welsh Water
Administrative costs 118w
Government shareholding 118w
Shares 116-8w

West Bank
96w, 452w, 702, 704-5

West Germany
Armed forces deployment 245w, 563-4
Balance of trade 282w
Defence expenditure 573
Electronic equipment 465w

West Glamorgan
Drama 335w
School population 203w
Schools 203w

West Midlands
Armed forces medical services 33w
Community charge benefits 87-9w

West Midlands Police
Bombings 266w
Convictions 385w

West Wiltshire District Council
Local government staff 41w
Privatisation 41-2w
West Wiltshire Holdings 41w

West Wiltshire Holdings
West Wiltshire District Council 41w

West Yorkshire
Official visits 577

Westmorland Hospital
219w

Wheeler, Mr John
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Crime (23:11:89) 267-70
Questions
Prisoners, Complaints 175-6w

Whipps Cross Hospital
407w
Red alerts 407w

White fish
Fishing quotas 110-2w, 132-3w, 399w

White-collar workers
Pay 453w

Whitley Councils
833-4

Whitney, Mr Ray
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 483-5, 518

WHO see World Health Organisation

Widdecombe, Miss Ann
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 470, 505
Questions
Armoured fighting vehicles, USSR 353-4w
Arts finance, Museums & galleries 124w
Drug abuse, United Nations 307w
Ethiopia, Disaster relief 255w
NATO, Armed forces strength 243-4w

Widows' benefits
Taxation 173w

Wiggin, Mr Jerry
Debates etc.
Straw burning (30:11:89) 870

Wigley, Mr Dafydd
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 38
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 469, 500-3
Severn Bridge Tolls Order 1989 (27:11:89) 540-1, 550
Questions
A487, Porthmadog 201w
Alternative energy, Electricity generation 176w
Carers, Training 222w
Carers premium 428
Child abuse, Disclosure of information 175w
Child protection registers, Age 223w
Community care, Wales 203-4w
Defence expenditure 230w
Dogs, Animal breeding 165w
Electricity supply industry, Privatisation 176w
Handicap benefits 215w
Handicap benefits, Green papers 215w
Handicapped, Office of Population Censuses & Surveys 143w
Handicapped, Sexual offences 222w
Iraq, Human rights 321w
Ministers' domestic visits, Wales 191w
Nuclear submarines, Fishing gear 567-8
Oral questions, Welsh Office 395w
Pearl Group, Takeovers 94w
Registered homes, Local authority powers 223w
Residential care, Local authorities 222w
UN resolutions, Science & technology 453w

Wild animals
Animal husbandry (27:11:89) 554

Wilding Committee
see Arts Support Review Group

Wildlife & Countryside Act 1981
Questions
249-50w

Wilkinson, Mr John
Debates etc.
Eastern Europe (01:12:89) 982-4
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 124
Questions
Armed forces strength, Armed forces recruitment 239w
Arms control, Treaties 325w
Consumer credit 428w
El Salvador, Military aid 699
Nuclear weapons, Defence procurement 572

Williams, Rt Hon Alan
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 616-8

Williams, Mr Alan W
Questions
Balance of payments 427w
Bovine spongiform encephalopathy, Cattle 304-5w
Social Fund, Social security claims 137w

Wilshire, Mr David
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 585

Wilson, Mr Brian
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 26-7
Questions
Community care, Scotland 214w

Winnick, Mr David
Debates etc.
Members' conduct (23:11:89) 226, 244-5
Oral questions (22:11:89) 114
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 30-1, 52, 82, 98-100
Queen's speech, Economic situation (28:11:89) 585
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 527

Winnick, Mr David—continued
Questions
Eastern Europe, Protest movements 710

Winterton, Mrs Ann
Questions
Abortion 290w
Abortion, Age 291-3w
Abortion, Children 290w
Abortion, Handicapped children 291w
Abortion, Marital status 292-3w
Abortion, Mothers 290-1w
Abortion, Single people 291w
Midwives, Training 299-300w

Winterton, Mr Nicholas
Debates etc.
Queen's speech (21:11:89) 66, 83-6
Questions
War widows' pensions 565-6

Wise, Mrs Audrey
Questions
El Salvador, Peace negotiations 311w

Witnesses
Immunity from prosecution 382w

Women
Prison population 386-9w

Women Members
Astor, Nancy 838

Wood, Mr Timothy
Questions
Chemical weapons, USSR 240w
Justices' clerks, Professional qualifications 13w
Middle East, Peace negotiations 313-4w
Road haulage permits, Fees & charges 4-5w

Woodcock, Dr Mike
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Industry (22:11:89) 146, 195-8

Woodland grant scheme
111-2w

"Working for Patients White Paper"
226-9w

Working hours
Prime Minister 431w

Working mothers
454w
Child care 579

World Bank
200-2w

World Health Organisation
42w, 334w
Palestine Liberation Organisation 332w

Worthingtoa, Emma
Homicide 347w

Wray, Mr Jimmy
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, NHS (27:11:89) 497-9
Questions
Nicaragua, EC external relations 698
Tactical nuclear weapons, Nuclear weapons deployment 234w

Wrecks
Salvage 441w

Yeo, Mr Tim
Questions
British Rail 183w
EC Finance Council 421w
Family credit, Take-up 425
NATO 236w
NHS, Public expenditure 575-6

Yorkshire & Humberside
Arts Support Review Group 434
Factory Inspectorate 454w

Yorkshire & Humberside—continued
Regional arts associations 434
Uniform business rate 159w
Water supply disconnections 369w

Yorkshire Arts Association
432-4

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority
Ministers' domestic visits 412w

Yorkshire Water
41w
Water charges 166w

Young, Mr David
Debates etc.
Queen's speech, Foreign policy (24:11:89) 355, 386-8
Questions
Conventional weapons 233w

Young offenders
Custodial treatment 385w
Detention centres 384w
Local authorities 299w
Remand in custody 384-5w

Young people
Income support 214w
Industrial health & safety 128w
Social security benefits 139w, 420-1
Social security reform 420
Vagrancy 578

Youth training scheme
Grampian 397-8w
Industrial accidents 129-32w

Zimbabwe
Armed forces training 355w